3. Though F completed the work and took the bonds of H for the amount due him, dated July 4th 1867, and on the 10th of January 1868 had the contract recorded in the clerk's office of the county, even if the contract was duly recorded, the effect of said act was not to produce a novation of the contract, or to bring it down to the date of recordation, so as to subject the said contract to the operation of the said act of April 13, 1867, and to give F, under and by virtue of the same, the benefit of a mechanic's lien thereunder. Idem, 447

MERGER.

1. M and D, as his surety, execute a bond to G, upon a settlement of an account for articles furnished by G to M. Though at law the account is merged in the bond, in equity the debt on the account will be held as still subsisting if necessary to do justice between the parties.

MURDER.

1. Upon the evidence the prisoner held to be guilty of murder in the first degree.

Howell's case, 995

2. The jury having found the prisoner guilty of murder in the first degree, and the court of trial having refused to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, the appellate court, even if they had some doubt about the sufficiency of the evidence to convict the prisoner of murder in the first degree, would not reverse the judgment. Idem, 995

3. Murder committed by any of the specific means enumerated in the statute, Code of 1873, ch. 187, § 1, is murder in the first degree, whether there was any actual intent to kill or not. Idem, 995

NORFOLK CITY.

1. The city council of Norfolk has authority under the charter of the city and the constitution of Virginia, to assess the expense, or a part of the expense, of paving a street upon the owners of the property on the street in the ratio of the front foot of their lots facing the street.

PARTIES.

1. On a bill by the administrator of a vendor of land, against the vendee, who has not received a deed, to subject the land to pay the purchase money, the heirs of the vendor should be made parties.

2. An assignor of a bond secured by deed of trust upon land, the assignment being absolute, is not a necessary party in a suit by the assignee against the vendee of the obligor, to subject the land to satisfy the debt.

Omohundro v. Henson & als.,

3. H and B, as his surety, execute a bond to M, executor, for land purchased of him by H, and which H afterwards conveys to O. M recovers judgment upon the bond against H and B, and B pays the debt, and M assigns it to him without recourse. On a bill by B against O and H, to subject the land to satisfy the debt. HELD: Whether B claims as assignee, or as a security who has paid the debt, M is not a necessary party. Idem,

511

4. S conveys land to his wife E, reserving a large personal property, and he is not indebted at the time. Some years afterwards he contracts debts; and by the results of the war loses his property. His subsequent creditors file a bill against S, to subject the land conveyed to E, who is then dead, to the payment of their debts, without noticing the deed from S to E. The children of E present their petition setting out the deed, and asking that they may be made defendants in the suit, and this is done, and they file their answers without objection by the plaintiffs. HELD:

1. If they were not necessary parties, they were certainly proper parties; and having been permitted to appear and set up their claim, the plaintiffs cannot afterwards object that they were made parties.

2. If it would have been more proper to assert their rights by a cross-bill, their petition may be treated as such.

5. G recovers a judgment against R, and upon a suggestion obtains a judgment against S. Upon a bill by G against S's ex'x to have payment out of his estate, R is not a necessary party.

Shands' ex'x v. Grove & als.,

PARTITION.

1. F and R owned one-half of two tracts of land, one in Bath county, called the Bath Alum, and the other in Rockbridge, called the Rockbridge Alum. The other half of these tracts was owned by J, an infant aged 17 years, subject to his mother's dower; and she had married P, who became the guardian of J. F sold the Bath Alum tract, with some furniture, to B, for $30,000 Confederate 8 per cent. bonds, subject to the ratification of the court. F & R then brought their suit in equity to have the sale ratified, alleging that the property could not be conveniently divided, and that it was for the interest of all parties, including the infant, that the property should be sold. P & wife and J answered, concurring in the statements of the bill, and in the prayer that the sale to B should be confirmed. Three witnesses concur in sustaining the statements of the bill, and that the price is a full price for the land. And the court confirms the sale. When J comes of age he files a bill to set aside the sale. HELD:

1. The suit of F & R was a suit for partition; and the proceedings having been regular throughout, the fact that the sale was made for Confederate bonds, which have since become worthless, is no ground for setting aside the sale.

Frazier v. Frazier & als.,

2. The fact that the parties owned another tract of land in another county, and that it did not appear that partition in kind of the two tracts could not be made, is not ground for setting aside the sale; the parties not wishing to sell the other tract, which was productive.

3. The fact that the witnesses spoke of the value of the land, not referring to the furniture, which was not worth more than $2,000 or $2,500 in Confederate money, but estimating the price to be given as a very full price for the land, is not grounds for setting aside the sale; especially as this objection was not made until the court had decreed to dismiss the bill, when it was set up by an amended bill. Idem,

500

2. A guardian of infants may maintain a suit for partition of real estate held jointly by the infants and other adult parties.

3. In a suit for partition, to authorize the sale under the statute, of lands in which infants have an interest, the case must be one in which partition cannot be conveniently made, and it must appear that the interests of the parties will be promoted by a sale of the property. Idem,

517

4. It is not necessary that the facts necessary to warrant a decree for sale should appear from the report of commissioners or by the depositions of witnesses. It is sufficient if the facts appearing in the record reasonably warrant the decree of sale: and this especially when the proceeding is to defeat the title of an innocent purchaser.

1036 *5. M died in 1862, leaving E his widow, and ten children, two infants, the children of E, and eight adults. He left a tract of 789 acres of land, slaves, &c. in March 1863 E filed her bill, in which she asked to have her interests and those of her children (whose guardian she was), in the estate ascertained and laid off: To have her dower in kind or commuted in money; and that the interests of her children might also be ascertained and placed under her control as their guardian, and for a settlement of the rights of all the parties. The administrator and children of M were made defendants, and the case regularly proceeded in. Held:

1. It is a suit for partition, and E might properly bring it. Idem, 517

2. If in the progress of the cause, it appears to be a case under the statute for a sale of part of the land, and a sale was made, which all the adult parties and E, as guardian of her children, approved, and it was confirmed and perfected by payment of the purchase money and a conveyance, it cannot afterwards be questioned by the infants as unauthorized in that suit. Idem, 517

3. Even if it is doubtful whether E could maintain such a suit, yet it having been brought, and the sale having been so made and perfected, the purchaser will not be disturbed in his purchase at the suit of the infants. Idem, 517

6. In suits for partition, whenever the court sells and conveys an infant's inheritance, he is entitled to an opportunity of making a defence at any time within six months after he arrives at full age. Idem, 517

7. See Judicial Sales, No. 3, and Idem, 517

PARTNERS.

1. B and H were partners carrying on business in the state of Missouri; H living there, and attending to the business, and B living in Virginia. In March 1861 they hired of K, several slaves to work in their factory from that time to the end of the year, and they executed their three notes to K for the amount of the hires; and the slaves continued to work during the year in the factory. The war between the U. S. and the C. S. commenced the 17th of April 1861, and continued until 1865. Held:

1. B living in Virginia, a part of the Confederate States, and H living in Missouri, a part of the United States, their partnership was dissolved by the war.

Booker v. Kirkpatrick, 145

2. But both partners are liable to K on their notes for the hire of the slaves, notwithstanding the dissolution of the partnership. Idem, 145

2. A, a partner in the firm of A & Sons, dies, and is largely indebted individually, as well as a partner. His real estate is equally liable for his partnership debt as for his individual debts. See Code of 1849, ch. 144, § 13.

2. W brings debt on a bond against H, and H pleads payment and set-off, on which issue is joined. H files with his plea a statement of the payment, which was the amount of a bond of W and J to L, and that W agreed with H, if H would pay the bond due to L, H should have credit for the amount as a payment on the bond sued on. Held: If the plea is sustained by the evidence, the payment of the bond of L by H is a good payment pro tanto upon his bond to W.

Huffmans v. Walker, 314

3. Payment of a debt is not necessarily a payment in money; but that is payment which the parties contract shall be accepted as payment. Idem, 314

PLEADING—IN EQUITY.

1. J was a partner in a mercantile business with W and A. That partnership was dissolved; and J and A formed a partnership to carry on the same business at the same place; and this partnership was dissolved. Afterwards J filed his bill against W and A, charging that both partnerships are indebted to him, and asking for a settlement of their accounts. W demurs and answers, the demurrer being contained in the answer, and not stating the grounds of the demurrer.

HELD:

1. The bill is multifarious.
Dunn v. Dunn & als., 291
2. The demurrer is sufficient in form.
Idem, 291

2. As to amendments and changes in bill, see Practice in Chancery, No. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and Belton v. Apperson & al., 207

PRACTICE—AT COMMON LAW.

1. In an action of debt, defendant pleads a failure of warranty of the animal for which the note sued on was given, and claims damages to the amount of the note, as a set-off; and succeeds. He then sues upon the warranty to recover further damages, and defendant pleads non-assumpsit, and a special plea of the former judgment, vouching the record; to which plea the plaintiff demurs. The court sustains the demurrer, and the plaintiff not replying further to the special plea, the court may render judgment for the defendant without trying the issue on the plea of non-assumpsit.

2. Though a plaintiff moves the court, before the jury retires to consider of their verdict, to exclude certain evidence which had been given on the trial, which the court refuses to do, if notice of the purpose to except to the ruling of the court is not given until the jury come into the court with the verdict, the exception is too late.

Peery's adm'r v. Peery, 320

3. On a general plea of payment, without stating the nature of the payment, defendant cannot prove an agreement that plaintiff would take in payment a debt due from his intestate, if defendant obtained it.

Idem, 320

4. In an action of debt on a bond against five persons, the plaintiff endorses on the process, "Not to be served on G," who was one of the five; and he is not brought into court. There having been two continuances of the cause, and a verdict and judgment against B, one of the defendants, and he having moved for a new trial, and also in arrest of judgment, without at any time objecting to the failure of the plaintiff to make G a party; and it appearing further from the motion in arrest of judgment, that G had absconded and left the state before the suit was brought, B must be held in the appellate court, to have waived the objection; and it is too late to make it in that court.

Bush v. Campbell, 403

5. In an action of debt upon a bond against five persons, upon one of whom the process is not served by direction of the plaintiff, the four plead usury in the bond, and three of them plead severally non est factum. On the trial the jury find in favor of three of the defendants, on the pleas of non est factum; but they cannot agree on the plea of usury. There is a judgment in favor of the three, and the case is continued as to the fourth. Afterwards there is a verdict against the fourth; and he moves in arrest of judgment.

HELD: Under the statute, Code of 1849, 1038 ch. 177, § 19, there may be judgment in favor of the three at one time, and against the fourth at another time.

6. The act, Code of 1849, ch. 177, § 19, applies to actions on contract against two or more defendants, where the defense of some of the defendants is personal to themselves, though that defense is, that they never were parties to the contract sued on, as non est factum.

7. Though in such action the parties sued live in different counties, and the only parties who live in the county where the suit is brought, have a verdict and judgment in their favor on their plea of non est factum, the plaintiff may still proceed in that suit against the other parties who do not reside in the county.

8. If a plaintiff, in order to give jurisdiction to the court, in a case where the defendants live in another county unites in the action a party who he knows is no party to the contract, the court will on motion dismiss the suit with costs.

9. P, as assignee of L, brought debt upon two notes against E. At the September term 1873 of the court E appeared and filed pleas of payment and nil debit, and three special pleas; on which issues were made up. The case was continued until the next March term of the court; when the defendant tendered another special plea, stating an agreement with L before the assignment, which, if true, constituted a good defence to the action. But the court being satisfied that it was merely intended for delay, rejected it. And the appellate court, concurring with the court below, affirmed the judgment.

Evans v. Pettyjohn, 604

10. In an action on a policy of insurance, under a declaration averring performance by the plaintiffs of all the conditions of the policy, plaintiff may prove a waiver of performance of the conditions by the insurer, and this will be equivalent to proof of performance of such conditions.

West Rockingham Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Sheets & Co., 854

PRACTICE—IN CHANCERY.

1. After a decree for the sale of real estate to satisfy creditors having liens thereon, and an appeal from that decree by the debtor, the court below in which the suit was pending, may appoint a receiver to take possession of the property, and rent it out, and collect the rents, until the further order of the court, &c.

Moran v. Johnston & als., 108

2. If the sergeant of the city in which the property is located, is appointed the receiver, it is not necessary to require him to give security for the faithful performance of his duty, as it is covered by his official bond. Code of 1873, p. 1124, ch. 174, § 5.

3. Bill by the administrator of the vendor of land against the vendee, who had not received a conveyance, to subject the land to pay balance of purchase money. Vendee answers, and insists that the heirs of the vendor should be made parties; but the court below, without requiring this to be done, makes a decree for the sale of the land. Upon appeal the appellate court amends the decree, and directs that the heirs shall be made parties before a sale of the land, and then affirms it with costs to the appellee.

4. The rule in equity in regard to amendments is, that they may be made when the bill is defective in its prayer for relief, or in the omission or mistake of some fact or circumstance connected with the substance of the case, but not forming the substance itself. The plaintiff will not be permitted to abandon the entire case made by his bill, and make a new and different case by way of amendment. But this rule has been much trenched upon, especially in the states and in Virginia.

5. If a plaintiff is not permitted to make a new case, he may by his amendments, so alter the frame and structure of his bill, as to obtain an entirely different relief from that asked for originally. Idem, 207

6. If the lender of money is made a party to a bill filed under the 7th section of the act in relation to money and interest, and answers, he cannot be proceeded against under the 10th section of said act. See Code of 1849, ch. 141. Idem, 207

7. Courts of equity will allow an amendment of the bill by the introduction of new parties, plaintiffs and defendants, when necessary to the ends of justice, or to prevent further litigation. As a general 1039 *rule this is not a matter of course, but discretionary with the court.

8. B in 1868 files bill against C and A to enjoin sale of land under deed of trust to secure debt due by note, on the ground of usury. They answer that they have no interest in the note, but it belongs to S. The case stands till December 1871, when B and his wife and children offer to file an amended and supplemental bill, stating that B had conveyed the land to the wife for life, and to the children in remainder; and they make C, A and S defendants. They charge usury in the note, disclaim discovery, ask for an issue, &c. HELD:

1. Upon the coming in of the answers of C and A, B might have dismissed his bill; and immediately thereupon have filed a new bill against S, under the 10th section of the act, Code of 1849, ch. 141: And he might submit to a dismissal of his bill by the chancellor, and at once file a bill against S.

2. C and A having no interest in the note, the case is virtually ended as to them; and S not having been a party to the original bill, the answers of C and A cannot be read for or against him, either under the original or amended bill; and the amended bill under the 10th section of the act may be filed.

3. As S was not a party to the original bill, and as the plaintiffs may at once file a new bill against him, the delay in tendering the amended bill cannot prejudice his interests. Idem, 207

4. Quære: Whether the original bill in this case was filed under the 7th or under the 10th section of the act. Idem, 207

12. A judgment creditor files a bill to set aside a deed of trust to secure specified creditors for fraud, and for general relief. Though the deed is held to be valid, the plaintiff is entitled to the surplus after paying the debts secured; and the bill should not be dismissed, but under the prayer for general relief he is entitled to an account of the debts secured by the deed, and to have a sale of the property.

Sipe v. Earman & als., 563

13. Under § 2, ch. 179, of the Code of 1860, a judgment creditor, without having sued out execution at law, may sue in equity to impeach a deed of homestead of personal property, and deed conveying said property in trust for grantor's wife and children; said deeds having been since the judgment was recovered.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

1. H and B, as his surety, execute their bond to M, for land purchased of him by H, and gives deed on the land to secure it, and H afterwards conveys the land to O. M recovers judgment on the bond against H and B; and B pays the debt, and M assigns it to him without recourse. On a bill by B against O and H, to subject the land to satisfy the debt. Held:

1. B is entitled to have the land sold to pay his debt without proceeding first against H; especially as O did not ask for such a decree in the court below.

2. O may, if he chooses, make an issue in this case between himself and H, and have the equities between them settled.

PROMISSORY NOTES.

1. To fix liability upon the endorser of a negotiable note, the holder must use due diligence in giving notice of dishonor; and where the holder and endorser reside in different localities, and at the time of the dishonor, and for months before and afterwards, the usual and ordinary intercourse by mail between the two is intercepted by a state of war, the holder does not prove due diligence, by proving simply, that he deposited in his post office, on the day of the dishonor of the note, a notice of dishonor addressed to the endorser at his place of residence.

Farmers Bank of Va. v. Gunnell's adm'r, 131

2. A state of war which intercepts intercourse by the ordinary and usual course of mail between the holder and endorser of a note, excuses the holder from giving notice of dishonor so long as such interruption continues; but diligence on the part of the holder requires that he should forward notice to the endorser as soon as the interruption ceases.

3. That the note was made, endorsed and discounted in the city of Alexandria, and that at that time that city was in the firm occupation of the troops of the United States, and the endorser after endorsing the note and before its maturity returned to his home within the lines held by the forces of the Confederate States, and remained there until May 1862, nine months after the note fell due, does not excuse the holder from giving the endorser notice of protest for non-payment of the note.

4. That at the date of the protest of a note in August 1861, up to the 10th of April 1862, the city and a portion of the county of Alexandria where the note was discounted, was in possession of the forces of the United States, and the endorser was within the lines of the forces of the Confederate States, and that the bank, the holder of the note at Alexandria, on the 10th of April ceased its banking operations by resolutions of its board of directors, and turned all its assets over into the hands, management and custody of three agents; and the bank never afterwards resumed its business, is no excuse for the failure to give notice of protest and non-payment.

5. For other insufficient excuses, see the opinion of the court delivered by Moncure P. in

6. The ordinance of the Virginia convention passed June 24th, 1861, which provides that in cases specified the parties to bills, notes, &c., shall remain bound after the maturity of the notes, etc., without demand, protest or notice, &c., is, as to notes made and discounted before its passage, in violation of the constitution of the United States.

7. During the year 1861 slavery was recognized as existing both by the United States and Missouri, and slaves owed no allegiance to either; and there could be no demand for their services by the United States or the State, which could occasion a failure of consideration of notes given for the hire of slaves.

Booker v. Kirkpatrick, 145

8. A note discounted at the bank in B, was to fall due on the 18th of June 1864. On the 10th, from apprehension that the Union forces would come into B, the valuables of the bank, including this note, were sent away about two miles. The Union forces did enter B on the 12th, and left on the 14th of June. The note was not brought back to the bank until after the 18th, and was not presented and protested for non-payment, nor was notice of non-payment given to the endorser. Held:

1. The facts do not excuse the failure to have the note presented and protested, and to give notice to the endorser.

Tardy, trustee, v. Boyd's adm'r & als., 631

2. But if the bank was not guilty of laches in not having the note presented and protested for non-payment, and notice of dishonor on the day it fell due, to bind the endorser, all this should have been done within a reasonable *time after the hindering cause was removed.

9. A promise to pay, by an endorser of a note, with a full knowledge of all the facts and of the laches of the holder in not protesting the note, may be held in point of law to amount to a waiver of the right to notice. But such a promise to be obligatory, must be deliberately made, in clear and explicit language, and must amount to an admission of the right of the holder, or of a duty and willingness of the endorser to pay. If, therefore, the conduct or acts of the endorser be equivocal or the language used be of a qualified or uncertain nature, the endorser will not be held responsible.

10. B was the endorser of a note made by his brother A, which fell due in June 1864, but there was no protest for or notice of non-payment.. B afterwards, with the knowledge of these facts, proposed to the holder, to pay the notes in Confederate money; which was refused by the holder; the note being for good money. The proposition having been refused, it does not constitute a promise to pay, or a recognition of his liability, which will bind him to pay the debt.

11. A note made in January 1863 is the last renewal of notes given for a debt due before 1861. It is not to be scaled.

12. The act of March 3, 1866, for scaling debts, does not apply to a case where the money loaned was a sound currency, and the note sued upon was a renewal of notes accepted as an accommodation to the debtor, and only as evidence of a pre-existing debt due in good money.

13. M owned a large real estate in Alexandria, and was president of the Bank of the Old Dominion located in that city. In 1861 M endorsed seven notes made in March and on to June by J, which were discounted at the bank. Before any of these notes fell due the Union forces took possession of Alexandria, and held it till the end of the war. A few days after they came M left the city, and joined his family, who had left some time before; he leaving at his dwelling a white servant and having had his place of business at the bank. He remained in Richmond, within the Confederate lines, until the end of the war. Two of the notes had been made and discounted for M's accommodation, and he received the proceeds. All the notes were protested for non-payment as they fell due, and notice of dishonor was left at his house, with the white servant left by M there, except one, which was left at his place of business at the bank: and no other notice was ever given him. Held:

1. The notice was not sufficient to bind M as endorser of the notes.

McVeigh & al. v. The Bank of the Old Dominion, 785

2. On the notes made and discounted for his accommodation, M was liable without notice.

3. Though the declaration is special upon the note, and avers demand and notice to the endorser, the plaintiff may prove on the trial that the note was made and discounted for the accommodation of the endorser, and recover in the action, though no notice, or an insufficient notice, was given to the endorser.

4. The statute directing how notices may be given, does not apply to a notice of the dishonor of negotiable paper. Code of 1860, ch. 167, § 1, of 1873, ch. 163, § 1.

5. The fact that the maker of these notes paid to the branch of the bank at P, in Confederate money, the full amount of the notes, under the act of assembly authorizing it, the branch not having the notes at the time, does not constitute a payment; though after the war the bank took possession of all the assets of said branch, including the funds so paid in.

14. A note made in June 1861, by a person resident within the Confederate lines, and discounted by a bank located within the Union lines, is illegal and void; unless it was given in renewal of a note made before the war, and by an agent acting under an authority conferred before the war.

15. In an action against J & E, partners, as makers, and M as endorser of a negotiable note, the process is served on J and M, but is again and again returned as to E, "not found," or "no inhabitant," and the action is discontinued as to E.—E is not thereby released from liability on the note, and therefore M, the endorser, is not released; and the plaintiff may have judgment against J and M.

1042 *16. J & E, partners, living in the city of Alexandria, made a note dated at Alexandria, and payable at the Bank of the Old Dominion, which is located in said city, which is endorsed by M, the president of the bank, and discounted by said bank. Held: That it is not necessary to state on the face of the note that it is payable in the state of Virginia, to bring the note within the statute; Code of 1860, ch. 144, § 7, of 1873, ch. 141, § 7; but it may be shown by evidence that the place of payment is within the state.

17. An accommodation endorser of a negotiable note paying after protest, has only the right of a surety, to be fully indemnified for his payment on account of his principal: and this indemnity is fully secured by the payment to him by the principal of the value paid by the surety.

RAILROAD COMPANIES.

1. The charter of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad Company does not, in express terms, or by necessary implication, vest in the company the right to propel her engines by steam through the streets of a city, without the consent of the corporate authorities of the city; and the charter of the city of Richmond giving to the council of the city, the authority to prevent the propelling of the cars of a railroad by steam through the streets of the city, provided no contract is thereby violated, the council may prohibit said railroad company from the use of steam in propelling their cars in the streets of the city.

2. It seems a railroad company may, by express contract or notice brought home to the employer, relieve itself from its liability as insurer of freight, or for money, or valuable articles liable to be stolen or damaged, unless apprised of their character or value, or for articles liable to rapid decay, or for live animals liable to get unruly from fright, and to injure themselves in that state, when such articles or animals become injured without the fault or negligence of the company or its agents.

Va. & Tenn. R. R. Co. v. Sayers, 328

3. But a railroad company cannot by express contract, though upon the consideration of a reduced charge upon the freight, relieve itself from its liability, as carrier of the freight, from injury to or loss of the freight, resulting in any degree from the want of care or faithfulness of themselves or their agents. For a case see,

4. The statements of agents of a railroad company, as to the condition of the brakes on the cars, or as to the condition of the road at the place where the accident occurred, said statements having been made some time before and some time after the accident, and at some miles from the place, are not a part of the res gestæ, and are not competent evidence for the plaintiff, in a suit against the company, to prove negligence.

5. For proceedings to assess the compensation to the tenant of the freehold, for the land taken, see Internal Improvement Companies, No. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and

Wash. Cin. & St. Louis R. R. Co. v. Switzer, 661

RENTS.

1. How rents should be estimated against a vendor of land refusing to deliver possession. See Vendor and Purchaser, No. 1, and

Bolling v. Lersner, 36

2. In such a case, though the rents are estimated, it is proper to charge interest upon them.

RICHMOND.

1. The council of the city of Richmond has authority, under the charter of the city, to impose a license tax upon a foreign telegraph company having an agency in the city and doing business therein. And there is nothing in the constitutions and laws of the state or of the United States, which forbids such tax, if it is equal and just in its provisions.

Western Union Telegraph Co. v. City of Richmond, 1

2. Though the ordinance of the city imposing taxes, speaks only of persons or 1043 *firms doing business in the city, yet it imposes a tax in terms, on telegraph companies, and obviously intends to include incorporated companies as well as individuals.

3. The council of the city of Richmond may prohibit the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Company from propelling their cars by steam through the streets of the city. See Railroad Companies, No. 1, and

SAMPLE MERCHANTS.

1. The act approved April 30th, 1874, in relation to sample merchants' licenses, authorizes a party who has obtained a license, to employ an agent to sell for the principal under the license.

Myerdock's case, 908

SCALING CONFEDERATE DEBTS.

1. At what time the scale to be applied. See Agents, No. 4, and

McVeigh v. The Bank of the Old Dominion, 188

See Confederate Contracts, No. 3, and Ashby's adm'r & als. v. Porter & als., 455

2. A note made in January 1863 is the last renewal of notes given for a debt due before 1861. It is not to be scaled.

Tardy, trustee, v. Boyd's adm'or & als., 631

3. The act of March 3, 1866, for scaling debts, does not apply to a case where the money loaned was a sound currency, and the note sued upon was a renewal of notes accepted as an accommodation to the debtor, and only as evidence of a pre-existing debt due in good money.

4. A sale of land by executors in October, 1862, held, upon the time of sale, the surrounding circumstances and the evidence, to have been made with reference to Confederate treasury notes as the standard of value, and therefore that the purchase money was to be scaled as of the date of the sale.

Moore & als. v. Harnsbarger's ex'ors, 667

5. A case in which the value of the land at the time of the sale was held to be the proper measure of recovery.

SEPARATE ESTATE.

1. A conveyance of land by a husband to his wife, vests in her a separate estate; and upon her death, leaving children, it descends to them; and the husband is not entitled to curtesy in it.

Sayers & als. v. Wall & als., 354

2. A married woman, possessed of a separate estate, may charge the same with her debts in like manner and to the same extent as a feme sole.

Darnall & wife v. Smith's adm'r & als., 878

3. The liability of the separate estate of a married woman can only arise out of the supposed intention of the wife. And no pecuniary engagement can be a charge upon the wife's estate which is not connected by agreement, either express or implied, with said estate.

4. If a married woman having separate property enters into a pecuniary engagement, whether by ordering goods or otherwise, which if she were a feme sole would constitute her a debtor, and in entering into such an engagement she purports to contract not for her husband, but for herself, and on the credit of her separate estate, and it was so intended by her, and so understood by the person with whom she is contracting; that constitutes an obligation for which the person with whom she contracts has the right to make her separate estate liable: and the question whether the obligation was contracted in this manner must depend upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case. Idem, 878

5. As the charge is a mere question of intention, the wife may extend it to the whole, or confine it to a part of her separate estate. If no specific part is appointed for the payment of the debt, the fair implication is, that the whole estate was intended to be made liable. If, on the other hand, only a part of the estate, expressly or by fair inference, is designed to be charged, no liability whatever can attach to the residue.

6. A wife is exempt from all personal liability, and from all personal decrees and judgments upon her contracts. Her undertaking, so far as it is recognized by the courts, is not that she will pay the debt, but that her 1044 separate estate shall be answerable *for it. And that is bound so far only as she has agreed it shall be bound.

7. W was insolvent, and E, his wife, owned a separate estate, part of it under her father's will, which was given in trust for her. In August 1860 W and E purchase a crop of tobacco from S, and they execute a paper by which they bind themselves to convey to S a sufficient interest in the Peatross estate to secure him for the tobacco. In October 1860, E directs her agent, J, to give to S an order from her on the Peatross estate for $4,153.22, to be drawn on whoever the court may appoint to distribute the estate. In 1866 S's adm'r files her bill to sell E's separate estate for the payment of this debt, and claims that E's whole separate estate is liable. E and her present husband do not answer, but her trustee does, and denies her estate is liable. And without directing any enquiry as to the Peatross estate, or what had been done with E's interest in it, there is a decree for the sale of E's land for the payment of the debt. HELD:

1. Prima facie E's interest in the Peatross estate is alone liable for the payment of the debt. Idem, 878

2. If plaintiff insists that the other separate estate of E is liable, and that her interest in the Peatross estate was only taken as collateral security, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish the fact.

3. Before the plaintiff can subject the other separate estate of E, she must show that due diligence has been used by S in pursuing the interest of E in the Peatross estate, and that he has failed to make the debt out of that interest. Idem, 878

4. Though a married woman is to be treated as a feme sole, so far as the capacity to charge her estate with her pecuniary engagements is concerned; yet if in a litigation involving that question, the husband does not choose to defend her interests, and the trustee is negligent of his duty, it is incumbent upon the court to direct such enquiries as will prevent the sacrifice of her rights. Idem, 878

5. The plaintiff having failed to furnish the necessary evidence as to S's prosecution of his claim as assignee of E's interest in the Peatross fund, ordinarily the bill should be dismissed. But as it is apparent that the case has not been investigated upon its merits, a result attributable to the conduct of the defendants in a very great measure, the cause will be remanded for further proceedings in conformity to the views expressed by this court.

SHERIFFS AND SERGEANTS.

1. If a sergeant of a city is appointed to rent out property located therein and collect the rents, he need not be required to give security for the faithful performance of the duty, as it is covered by his official bond. Code of 1873, ch. 174, § 5.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. In 1851 J marries and brings his wife to the house of his father E; and he lives there for years, under an understanding or agreement with E that E will leave him the land by his will upon condition that J will support E and his wife during their lives. J lives on the land which he cultivates, and he supports E and his wife until 1863, when he goes into the army, and dies in 1865. After J went into the army his widow and E and wife do not agree, and E and wife leave the place, and are supported by another son of E until the death of E in 1868, when he gives the land to this son, except fifty acres which he had previously given to J's widow and children. HELD:

1. The court will not decree specific execution of the agreement between J and E. Cox & als. v. Cox, 305

2. J having received from the proceeds of the land a full satisfaction for the support of E and his wife and any improvements he had made upon it, is not entitled to further compensation. Idem, 305

2. S and his wife P had no children, and it was agreed between them that the survivor should have all the property during his or her life, and at his or her death it should be equally divided between his and her heirs and next of kin. S made his will by which he gave all his property to his wife absolutely.

He died in her lifetime, and she was so shocked *at his death, that she was immediately paralyzed, and remained unconscious until she died the day after he did. She died without making a will. HOLD:

1. A court of equity will not enforce the agreement at the suit of the heirs and next of kin of S against the heirs and next of kin of P.

Sprinkle & als. v. Hayworth & als., 384

2. In the absence of fraud on the part of a legatee, a court of equity will not enforce a ~~part~~ charge upon his legacy.

3. If it appeared from the evidence in the case, that S intended P should have entire control of the whole property during her life, and use as much of it as she chose to use, and that only what remained at her death was to be divided between his and her heirs and next of kin, the trust would not be enforced even if it had been in writing.

TAXES AND TAXATION.

1. The council of the city of Richmond has authority, under the charter of the city, to impose a license tax upon a foreign telegraph company having an agency in the city and doing business therein. And there is nothing in the constitutions and laws of the state or of the United States, which forbids such tax, if it is equal and just in its provisions.

2. Though the ordinance of the city imposing taxes speaks only of persons or firms doing business in the city, yet it imposes a tax in terms, on telegraph companies, and obviously intends to include incorporated companies as well as individuals.

1046 *3. For a thorough and exhaustive investigation of the power of a state, and its limitations, to tax agencies of the United States government, see opinion of Staples J.

4. Corporations which derive their existence and exercise their franchises under authority of state laws, but are employed by the national government for certain duties and services; whilst Congress may exempt them from any state taxation which will really prevent or impede such services, yet in the absence of such legislation by Congress to indicate that exemption is deemed essential to the performance of governmental services, it cannot be claimed on the mere ground that the corporation is employed as an agency of the government. And the tax may be either upon the property or business of the corporation.

5. The cases recognize a distinction between taxation of the property belonging to a private corporation employed by the government, and taxation of the instrumentalities or means of the government in the possession of such corporations. The state may tax a banking institution; but it cannot tax the currency of the government's bonds belonging to such bank. It may tax the railroad, but not the mail or the munitions or other property of the government. It may tax the contractor with the government, though not the contract. Idem, 1

6. The act approved April 30th, 1874, in relation to sample merchants' licenses, authorizes a party who has obtained a license, to employ an agent to sell for the principal under the license.

TENDER.

1. An offer by a purchaser of land sold by executors in October 1862, for Confederate treasury notes as the standard of value, the offer made a short time after it fell due, to pay the first bond due for the purchase money, he not showing any money, was not a good tender.

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

1. A deed of trust purports to be given to secure a note for $1000 given for the loan of that sum by E. to C. Though the note may not have been delivered by C to E, yet if he owed E a debt for which the note was to be given the deed is a valid security for it.

2. The trustee in a deed of trust executed by C is made a party plaintiff with the cestui qui trust E, in an original bill to enforce the trust, but his name is omitted in an amended and supplemental bill. He is under the statute a competent witness to prove what passed between E, C, who is dead, and himself as to the preparation of the deed and note intended to be secured thereby; he under the circumstances not being liable for costs. Idem, 112

3. The deed provides that the trustee shall receive five per cent. upon the amount of sales. All the property having been disposed of by the court so that the trustee can never sell it, even if his right to commissions on a sale by him would render him an incompetent witness, it cannot affect his competency under the circumstances. Idem, 112

4. By the act of January 16, 1867, amending and re-enacting § 5 of ch. 119 of the Code of 1860, deeds of trust &c. are to be recorded in the clerk's office of the county or corporation court within the jurisdiction of which the real estate conveyed &c. is situated.

Blackford & als., trustees, v. Hurst & als., 203

5. By the charter of the city of Lynchburg jurisdiction is given to the court of Hustings for said city, not only within the limits of the corporation, but also for the space of one mile without and around said city. A deed of trust conveying real estate lying outside the corporation limits, but within one mile without and around said city, is to be recorded in the clerk's office of the corporation court of the city. And being so recorded it is valid, and has priority over subsequent judgments against the grantor in the deed docketed in the clerk's office of the county.

6. A will giving the executor a discretion to sell the whole estate, real and personal, does not create a trust of the estate in the executor.

Mason v. Jones & wife, 271

7. Where a trustee in a deed to secure creditors has received in June 1861 in good money, a part of the trust fund applicable 1047 *to pay a creditor who is ready to receive payment, his investment of the fund in Confederate bonds, under an order of the court made on his motion, in a suit which he had brought for the administration of the trust, is invalid. and he continues liable for the fund; and this whether the creditor was or was not a party to the suit.

Kirby v. Goodykoontz & als., 298

8. In this case the court below, whilst giving a decree in favor of the creditor for his debt, disallowed the interest on the debt during the war. On appeal by the trustee the decree of the court below was affirmed generally. Idem, 298

9. As to what deeds of trust are not fraudulent. See Conveyances—Fraudulent, No, 1, 2, 3, 4, and

Sipe v. Earman & als., 563

10. What relief a judgment creditor plaintiff may have, though the deed be held to be valid. See Practice in Chancery, No. 12, and Idem, 563

11. What deed by wife in trust for husband and children will be set aside. See Husband & Wife, No. 4, 5, 6, 7, and

Switzer v. Switzer, 574

12. See Equitable Jurisdiction and Relief, No. 5; and

Meade v. Grigsby's adm'ors, 612

13. An order by a county court made on the request of the life tenant and with the consent of the trustee for her and her children, removing the trustee and appointing another, is valid, though made without either bill or petition, and the bond given by the new trustee binds his sureties.

Shelton v. Jones' adm'x & als., 891

14. If the children might have objected to the order as not having been parties, yet having acquiesced for a long time, the parties to the bond cannot avoid it on that ground.

15. See Judicial Sales, No. 7, and

Fultz v. Davis, 903

USURY.

1. B, of Harrisonburg in Va. was indebted to M, of Baltimore, Maryland, by various notes and accounts; on some of which notes usurious interest was charged. In February 1868 B and M made a full settlement, by which B transferred to M judgments and debts to the amount of his debt; and it was agreed that M should prosecute these claims, and if any of them proved insolvent, that M might recover from B any deficit that remained: And M then delivered to B all his notes and accounts. Some of the claims transferred to M proved worthless; and in June 1869 B gave to M his note endorsed by C, made payable in Harrisonburg, for the amount of the deficit. Held: The note was founded on a new contract on a new consideration, and the usury in the previous notes given by B to M before their settlement does not affect it.

Coffman & Bruffy v. Miller & Co., 698

2. See Practice in Chancery, No. 8, and

Belton v. Apperson & als., 207

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

1. A vendor of land refused to deliver possession according to the contract, and the vendee who has paid the purchase money, immediately sues for specific performance, and the vendee resists it, and asks for a rescission of the contract; but there is a decree for specific performance, and for an account of rents and profits. In estimating the rents and profits of the land thus held by the vendor, the annual value of the land in the hands of a prudent and discreet tenant, upon a judicious system of husbandry, is the proper rule in the case; to be influenced in some measure by the mode of treatment of the land by the occupant.

2. Though in such case the rents are estimated, it is proper to charge interest upon them. Idem, 36

3. When there has not been a conveyance to the vendee of land, on a bill by the administrator of the vendor to subject the land to the payment of a balance of the purchase money, the heirs of the vendor should be made parties before a decree for the sale.

Mott v. Carter's adm'r, 127

4. K sells to H a tract of land, expressing the belief, which he no doubt entertained, that there were 127 acres in the tract, and H, relying on that belief, purchased, and paid the purchase money. There were in fact but 81 acres. K having sold, and 1048 H having purchased under a mutual mistake, H is entitled to compensation for the deficiency.

Hoback v. Kilgores, 442

5. Although in cases of mere deficiency in quantity within the boundaries of a tract sold, the general rule of compensation is according to the average value of the whole tract, yet where, as in this case, there are valuable improvements upon the land, the value of which bears a very large proportion to the value of the land, the just and true measure of compensation is according to the average value of the land without the improvements, considering both together with the price for which it was sold, estimating the quantity of the land, as the parties did, at 127 acres. Idem, 442

6. A vendor of land, in his own right, is bound to convey it with general warranty, unless it be otherwise agreed between the parties. But a party who had sold to the vendor, and had retained the legal title, or had some interest in the land, is only required to convey with special warranty.

7. A case in which a sale of land was held, upon the written contract and the evidence, to have been a sale by the acre, and not a sale in gross; and the vendor was bound to make good the deficiency in the quantity at the average of the whole tract per acre.

Triplett v. Allen & als., 721

8. The conveyance of land, after giving the number of acres, adds the words "more or less." These words will not relieve the vendor or vendee, as the case may be, from the obligation to make compensation for an excess or deficiency, beyond what may be reasonably attributed to small errors from variation of instruments or otherwise, unless there be evidence to show that a contract of hazard was intended. Idem, 721

9. Ten acres, in a tract of 166 acres, where the land is worth fifty dollars an acre, is not one of these small deficiencies to be covered by the phrase "more or less." Idem, 721

10. In 1857 C, by a verbal contract, sold to N a lot in D, and N took possession of the lot, built a house upon it and improved it, but did not pay the purchase money at the time agreed. C having become the security of N as the guardian of W, and in a debt to K, in April 1861 they entered into a written agreement, whereby, reciting these facts, it was agreed that C should retain the legal and equitable title to the property until the purchase money for the lot and the debts for which C was bound as surety of N were fully paid. This agreement was not recorded. After the war N became a bankrupt; and in 1868 C filed his bill against N and his assignee, to have the property sold and applied to the payment of the purchase money for the lot, and the debts for which C was surety for N; and it was sold, not bringing enough to pay C for his purchase money and what he paid for N to W. Other judgment creditors of N intervene and claim the proceeds of the sale after payment of the purchase money. Held:

1. N had neither the legal nor equitable title to the property until the debts were paid.

Coffman v. Niswander & Co., 73

2. The judgment creditors of N have only the equities of N against C; and as against them, the agreement between C and N is valid, though not recorded. Idem, 73

WARRANTY.

1. A party who in an action of debt against him, files a plea under the statute, Code of 1873, ch. 168, p. 1098-1100, of a breach of warranty in the sale of an animal, and claims to be relieved to the extent of the price paid for the animal—in which he succeeds—cannot maintain another action for other damages and expenses he has incurred on account of the breach of said warranty.

2. A party filing a plea under said statute, may claim and recover all the damages he has sustained by the breach of the warranty, which he could recover in an action for a breach of the warranty. Idem, 283

3. If a party filing such a plea only claims and recovers a part of the damages he has sustained, and then brings an action to recover for other damages, a plea of former judgment is a good plea in bar to the action. Idem, 283

WILLS.

1. A bequest to an attorney who writes the will is not necessarily invalid.

Riddell & als. v. Johnson's ex'or & als., 152

1049 *2. The onus probandi lies in every case, upon the party propounding a will; and he must satisfy the conscience of the court that the instrument so propounded is the last will of a free and capable testator. Idem, 152

3. If a party writes or prepares a will under which he takes a benefit, that is a circumstance which ought generally to excite the suspicion of the court, and calls upon it to be vigilant and jealous in examining the evidence in support of the instrument; in favor of which it ought not to pronounce unless the suspicion is removed, and it is judicially satisfied that the paper propounded does express the true will of the deceased. Idem, 152

4. A case in which a large bequest to the attorney who wrote the will, was held to be valid. Idem, 152

5. It is not necessary to the validity of a will that it should have a testamentary form, or that the decedent should know that he had performed a testamentary act, or that he should intend to perform such act. If the paper contains a disposition of the property to take effect after the death of the testator, though it was not intended to be a will, but an instrument of a different shape, yet if it cannot operate in the character intended, it may operate as a testamentary act. McBride & als. v. McBride & als., 476

6. It is not necessary that the paper should be the identical one intended by the testator for his last will. If the instrument has once received the sanction of the testator as the final disposition of his property, it will so remain until revoked or cancelled in a way prescribed by the statute, though he may have always intended to make another will. Idem, 476

7. It is necessary, however, that the instrument, whatever it may be, whether note, deed, letter, or settlement, should have been designed to operate as a disposition of his property. That identical paper must have been intended to take effect in some form. It must have been written animo testandi. Idem, 476

8. But where the draft or notes of a will embody the provisions actually designed by the testator with reference to his property, and declare the settled purposes of the testator, they will be established as his will, although his purpose may have been to extend the notes or draft into a more regular form. This, however, is only permitted where the testator is prevented by the act of God from completing the instrument in the form in which he designed it. And even in such a case it is essential that the paper shall contain the final determination of the testator with regard to the disposition of his property. Idem, 476

9. In all other cases, the paper offered for probate must have been designed thereby to dispose of his property. He must have looked to the paper as the means by which an object was to be accomplished; and that object the disposition of his estate after his death. Unless he intended this, the paper is not his will, whatever he may have called it. The intention is the controlling principle in such cases. Idem, 476

10. M has a will prepared by his counsel, which he examines and approves, and says he will meet the counsel in B, a village near, and execute it. A few days after this he writes to a brother in Texas, and after giving him a detailed account of his domestic troubles, which he suggests to him to burn, he states that he has made a will, and states the bequests in it, and that he has appointed this brother and his counsel his executors. He says it is not such a will as he expects to make. The letter is signed with the initial of his Christian name J——. Two months after seeing the will prepared for him he is accidentally killed, not having executed the paper. HOLD:

1. The letter is not a testamentary paper, either alone, or as connected with the unexecuted will. Idem, 476

2. Quære: If the signing the paper with the initial of his name is a sufficient signing by a testator. Idem, 476

WITNESSES.

1. As to the competency of a trustee as a witness. See Trusts and Trustees, No. 2, 3, and Eacho v. Cosby, 112

2. W brings debt on a bond against H, and H pleads payment and set-off, on which 1050 there is issue. H files with his *plea a statement of the payment, which was the amount of a bond of W & J to L, and that W agreed with H, if H would pay the bond due to L, H should have credit for the amount as a payment on the bond sued on. HOLD: H is a competent witness to prove what passed between himself and J, in relation to the arrangement between him and J, for the procurement of the bond of L, though J is dead. Huffman v. Walker, 314

3. The fact that a person is the counsel in the cause for one of the parties, does not render him incompetent as a witness for that party. Rea's adm'x v. Totter & Bro., 585

CASES

DECIDED IN THE

Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

Wills—Construction—Executory Devise.—Testator, by his will made in January 1807, lends to his daughter Sallie, who is one of eleven, one female slave named Phœbe, to be possessed by her during her natural life or widowhood of her present or future husband, and at her death, and the death or after marriage of her husband, then to be equally divided among her children; and if she has none, then to be equally divided among all testator's children.

Testator died in 1810, Sallie being then about fourteen years old. She lived until 1857 unmarried and without children, the descendents of Phœbe then numbering twenty-five. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same—Perpetuity.—The executory devise over to testator's children is too remote and void.

2. Same—Same—Same.—If the executory devise is not void, then it includes all the testator's children alive at his death, and Sallie as one of them.

3. Same—Same—Same—Devise Over to Testator's Children.*—An executory devise over to testator's children will always be held to refer to children living at his death, unless there is a clear indication in the will that some other period is intended.

2. *The case is fully stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

Guy and Pettit, for the appellant.

There was no counsel for the appellees.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

The question to be decided in this case is in regard to the construction of the will of Caleb Stone; another question in regard to the construction of the same will having been decided by this court in the case of Moon & wife v. Stone's ex'or, &c., 19 Gratt. 130-330.

The will bears date on the 27th of January 1807, and was admitted to probate in the county court of Fluvanna county on the 23d of April 1810. The testator left a wife and eleven children, who were the only objects of his bounty in his will, and all of whom were such objects. Six of his children were sons, and five of them were daughters. By the first item of his will he loaned to his wife for her better support, and for the support of his younger children during her natural life or widowhood, the tract of land on which he lived, together with fourteen slaves by name. By the second, third, fourth and fifth items, he gave to his sons and their heirs forever sundry tracts of land, except his son, William Taylor, to whom he had already advanced nearly a thousand dollars, and to whom by the fourth item he gave a negro boy. By the sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth items he loaned to each of his five daughters one hundred and forty acres of land therein particularly described, on certain terms and subject to certain limitations, which are set out in the sixth item, and are adopted by reference in the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth items. The sixth item is in these words:

*Wills—Construction—Devise Over to Testator's Children.—An executory devise or bequest over to testator's children or to the survivors of a certain class, refers to those living at the testator's death, unless there be a plain indication in the will that some other period is intended. See Brown v. Brown, 31 Gratt. 502, and note; also, Gish v. Moomaw, 80 Va. 300, 15 S. E. Rep. 808; Jameson v. Jameson, 86 Va. 56; Martin v. Kirby, 11 Gratt. 67; Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 724, 3 S. E. Rep. 887.

3      *"6th. I lend to my daughter, Nancy Perry, 140 acres of land, it being," &c., "to be possessed by her during her natural life or widowhood of her present or future husband, and at her death, and the death or after marriage of her husband, then to be equally divided among her children, if she has any, and if she has none, then to be equally divided among all my children."

The seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth items, loaning the same quantity of land to each of his other daughters are in the same words, mutatis mutandis; the tenth item being in these words:

"10th. I lend to my daughter, Sally, 140 acres of land, it being," &c., "to be possessed by her and any husband she may have, upon the same terms and conditions as Nancy Perry's."

The eleventh item is in these words:

"11th. I lend to my five daughters each one slave and her future increase, to be possessed by them on the same terms and conditions as they will hold their lands: that is to say, to Nancy Perry I lend Hannah; to Fanny I lend Joaney; to Elizabeth I lend Lucy; to Lucy I lend Nelly; and to Sally I lend Phœbe."

By the twelfth and thirteenth items he made certain bequests to his children, which are not material to be stated here. The fourteenth item is in these words:

"14th. All the rest and residue of my estate, of what kind soever, I give and bequeath to my beloved wife for her support and the support of her children during her natural life or widowhood, and at her death or marriage my will and desire is, that the same, together with the slaves lent her, shall be equally divided among all of my children, but they are to possess the slaves upon the same terms and conditions as is before mentioned respecting the lands

4 lent to them." *By the next and only remaining item of the will the testator nominated the executors thereof.

The controversy in the case of Moon & wife v. Stone's ex'or &c., supra, was, and the controversy in this case is, concerning the slave Phoebe and her increase, loaned by the testator, by the eleventh clause of his will, to his daughter Sally, upon the terms and conditions therein referred to.

It seems that the said Sally Stone was, at the date of her father's will, not more than ten or twelve years of age; that she died in 1857, about sixty-one years of age, having had no issue, and never having been married, but having left a will which was duly admitted to probate, whereby she made her niece, Christian Stone, who afterwards intermarried with Schuyler R. Moon, her residuary legatee. She received the land and the slave Phoebe loaned her by her father in his will, and the living descendants of Phoebe numbered twenty-five in 1857, when Sally Stone died. They have since been sold for a very large sum of money.

After the death of Sally Stone, a suit was brought in the county court of Fluvanna by the surviving children of Caleb Stone and the personal representatives of such as were dead; for the purpose of having a sale of the said slaves; and such sale was accordingly decreed to be made. There was also another suit in the same court, brought for the purpose of having a sale of the said land.

Whilst these suits were thus pending, Schuyler R. Moon and Christian, his wife, filed their bill in the circuit court of said county against the executor of Sally Stone and the other parties in said suits, in which they insisted that by the will of Caleb Stone, Sally took an estate tail in the land and an absolute estate in the slave Phoebe; 5 and that by her will, the *land and the slaves passed to the plaintiff, Christian. They referred to the suits which had been brought for the sale of the slaves and the land; expressed themselves willing that the sale of the slaves should stand, and to take the purchase money in their stead; and among other things asked for general relief.

The defendants demurred to the bill and answered, contesting the construction put upon the will of Caleb Stone by the plaintiffs; insisting that Sally Stone took but a life estate in the property; and that upon her death, unmarried and without children, the bequest over to the children of Caleb Stone was valid.

On the 16th of September 1859, the cause came on to be heard, when the court was of opinion that Sally Stone took but a life estate in the slaves under the will of Caleb Stone; and that upon her death, unmarried and without children, they either passed over under the fourteenth clause of the will to the testator's wife and children, or that both the land and slaves given to Sally Stone passed over to the testator's children, by virtue of the sixth, tenth and eleventh clauses of the will; that the words of these clauses created neither an estate tail in the land nor a perpetuity in the slaves; and the limitation over was therefore good; and the court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the bill.

From that decree the appeal in the case of Moon & wife v. Stone's ex'or, &c., supra, was taken. In that case this court held, that under the will of Caleb Stone, his daughter, Sally, was entitled only to a life estate in the land and slave and future increase of the slave loaned to her by the tenth and eleventh clauses of the will; but the court declined to decide who were entitled to the property at her death; consid-

6 ering that the solution of that question belonged to the court in *the suits which, it appeared, were depending for a division of the land and slaves, or the distribution of the proceeds of the sale thereof, among the persons entitled thereto, to which suits the appellants could be made parties if they claimed to be entitled to participate in such division or distribution. And therefore the court affirmed the said decree; but without prejudice to any interest which the said Sally Stone or her representatives might have in the said property or any part thereof, otherwise than under the loan to her as aforesaid.

Accordingly after that decision was made, to wit: in April 1869, John W. Stone, executor of Sally Stone, filed his petition to the said circuit court in the suit for the division of the said slaves, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, which suit had been removed to the said circuit court from the county court of said county, in which petition he claimed that the remainder after the termination of the life estate of the said Sally Stone in said slaves, vested in all the children of the said Caleb Stone who survived him, either under the express limitation contained in these words, "to be equally divided among all my children," contained in the will of Caleb Stone; or, if this remainder was void for remoteness, then by operation of law, and under the statute of distributions; and that all the testator's children who survived him were equally entitled; and that Sally, the life-tenant, being one of them, her representative was entitled to her share; and thereupon the plaintiffs in the suit were summoned to show cause at the next term of the court, if any they could, against the relief sought by said petition.

On the 13th of April 1871 the circuit court decreed "that the persons who are entitled to the funds in controversy being the proceeds of the slaves loaned Sally 7 *Stone, deceased, for life by her father, Caleb Stone, are the children of Caleb Stone, who were living at the time of his death, with the exception of Sally Stone; and in case of the death of any of the other children of the said Caleb Stone, that then the personal representatives of such deceased children take their shares." And the reports of the commissioner were recommitted with certain instructions set forth in the decree.

At the next September term 1871 of said court, to wit: on the 14th of the month, the commissioner having made his report in accordance with said decree, dividing the said fund into ten original shares, and excluding Sally Stone's personal representative from all participation therein, the court decreed the distribution accordingly.

From the said two decrees of the 13th of April and 14th of September 1871, John W. Stone, executor of Sally Stone, applied to a judge of this court for an appeal, which was accordingly allowed.

The first question which seems to arise for consideration and decision in this case is, whether the executory limitation contained in the will of Caleb Stone, to all his children, of the property loaned by said will to his daughter Sally Stone, is a valid limitation, or void for remoteness.

I am of opinion that it is void for remoteness. To make an executory limitation valid, the event on which it is to take effect must of necessity happen, if at all, within the duration of a life or lives in being at the time of the creation of the estate, and twenty-one years and ten months thereafter. It is not enough that it possibly may, or even probably will, happen within that period.

Now let us apply that test to this case. Here the *property was loaned to Sally Stone, to be possessed by her during her natural life and the natural life or widowhood of any husband she might thereafter have; and at her death, and the death or after marriage of such husband, then to be equally divided among her children, if she should have any, and if none, then to be divided equally among all the testator's children.

Sally Stone was very young at her father's death, not more than about fourteen years of age, and it was very possible for her afterwards to have married a man who was not born at her father's death, and who might have survived her more than twenty-one years and ten months, at the expiration of which time the executory limitation to the children of the testator would have to take effect if at all. But that period would be too remote, according to the rule before stated.

Then the question is, the limitation being void, what will become of the estate?

When a specific devise or bequest fails from any cause, the subject of it goes to the residuary devisee or legatee, as the case may be, unless a different intention appears in the will. But when a residuary devise or bequest fails from any cause, the subject of it, to the extent of such failure, goes to the heirs or distributees at law of the testator.

By the residuary clause of the will in this case, the testator gave all the rest and residue of his estate to his wife for her support and the support of her children during her natural life or widowhood, and at her death or marriage his will and desire was that the same, together with the slaves lent her, should be equally divided among all of his children, but they were to possess the slaves upon the same terms and conditions as was in the will before mentioned respecting the lands lent to them; that is, his daughters *respectively were to possess their portions of the said slaves during their natural lives, and during the natural lives or widowhoods of any husbands they had or might have, and at their deaths, and the deaths or after marriages of any such husbands, then to be equally divided among their children, if any, and if none, then to be divided equally among all the testator's children.

Except, therefore, to the extent of an estate given to his wife for her support and that of her children, during her natural life or widowhood, all his children are his residuary devisees and legatees—his daughters in regard to the said slaves upon the terms and conditions aforesaid.

Now it is very obvious that the testator intended this residuary clause to be of very limited operation. He had a large family, consisting of a wife and eleven children, for each of whom he provided generally in separate items of his will, commencing with his wife, and continuing through with all of his children, disposing apparently of all his land and slaves and some of his perishable property, particularly by name and description; and having written the first thirteen items of his will, he had then only to dispose of any residuum there might be of his estate, and nominate his executors, which he did by the last two items of the will. The residuum to be disposed of consisted mainly of the remainder in the slaves, which by the first item he had loaned to his wife for her better support and the support of his younger children during her natural life or widowhood, and consisted further no doubt of some articles of personal property of no great value, which had been omitted or not disposed of in the prior items of his will. By the fourteenth or residuary item he gave "all the rest and residue of his estate, of *what kind soever" (meaning thereby no doubt the articles of personal property aforesaid, and certainly not meaning to embrace in the words describing the subject of the gift, though they were as comprehensive in their natural meaning as possible, the said remainder in the slaves loaned to his wife), "for her support and the support of her children during her natural life or widowhood, and at her death or marriage" his will and desire was, "that the same, together with the slaves lent her," should be equally divided among all of his children, but they were "to possess the slaves upon the same terms and conditions as is before mentioned respecting the lands lent to them."

The interest provided by the testator for his wife, in the residuary item of his will, was limited and temporary only, and ending with her life or widowhood. The record does not inform us at what time it ended. The testator could not have expected it to continue long. If she was the mother of the eleven children provided for by the will, she must have been quite an old woman at its date. We do not even know that she was living at his death, which seems not to have occurred until several years after the will was written. He could not have contemplated to embrace in this residuum, given for this temporary and immediate purpose, a subject which might at a remote day happen to revert to his estate by the unexpected effect of an executory limitation contained in his will. If it appears from the will, construed with reference to the surrounding circumstances, that he did not intend to embrace that subject in the residuum, then he died intestate as to that subject, and it devolved upon his next of kin at his death, who were his eleven children, of whom the testatrix of the appellant was one.

11 But if that subject is embraced in the residuum, *what then? It is directed by the residuary clause to be equally divided among all of his children. Who were all of his children? All of the eleven before mentioned? or only such of them as might happen to be living at the period fixed for division? But when did that period arrive? Before or after the death of the testator? and if after, how long? All this was unknown to the testator when he made his will, and he could not have supposed that it would occur long after his death. He must therefore have used these words: "All of my children," in their plain literal sense, and intended to embrace all who were living at his death, and not to exclude the families of those who might die after the death of the testator and before the period of division, leaving children. The concluding words of the item, "but they are to possess the slaves upon the same terms and conditions," &c., cannot affect the question. If they could have any effect at all, had they been used in reference to the subject aforesaid, they were not so used, but only in reference to the slaves loaned to his wife for life or widowhood by the first item of the will.

But let us suppose that I am wrong in the opinion that the executory limitation aforesaid is void for remoteness. Suppose that it is valid. And now let us enquire who, on that supposition, was entitled, in the event which actually happened, to participate in the division of the said subject, under the words of the will directing it, in that event, "to be divided equally among all my children?" Who are the children here referred to? The children living at the testator's death, or the children that might be living at the uncertain future period of division? And if the former, is Sally Stone to be considered as one of the children, *and is her personal representative entitled to participate in the division?

The court below decided and decreed that the death of the testator is the period to which the said words of his will refer. But that Sally Stone herself is not embraced in these words according to their proper construction in this case, and therefore that her personal representative is not entitled to participate in the division.

I think the court was right in the first branch of its decision, to wit: that the death of the testator is the period to which the said words of his will refer; but erred in the latter branch of it, to wit: that Sally Stone herself is not embraced in those words, and that her personal representative is not entitled to participate in the division.

The testator knew who were his children at the date of his will and at his death. Probably all he ever had were then still alive. He could not know who would be his children at a remote future period, which turned out in regard to the subject in controversy to be forty or fifty years after his death. He could not know how many of his children would then be dead, or what issue, if any, they might leave; and he could hardly have intended to cut off such issue from any participation in the future divisions contingently provided for by his will. When therefore he used the most comprehensive words which the English language would afford in describing the class of persons who were to take, and directed the subject to be divided equally "among all his children," the fair presumption is, that he intended to embrace as many as the words would embrace, and to include all who were alive at his death.

13 *This construction is fortified by the rules of law, by the words of the gift, and by the context of the will, and is not inconsistent with any of the surrounding circumstances of the case so far as appears from the record.

It is a rule of law, that an estate or interest given by a will generally vests as soon as it may, consistently with the words used in giving it. This general rule is subject to an exception when it appears from the context of the will and the surrounding circumstances that the intention of the testator, as expressed by the words of his will was otherwise. The words, we have seen, are as comprehensive as possible. We have no reason to believe they were not used in their literal sense. On the contrary, we have reason, as is already shown, for believing that they were in fact used in such sense. If they had not been intended to be so used, nothing was easier than to have expressed such intention. The words, "then living," added to the sixth item, would have clearly fixed the period of the division, instead of the death of the testator, as that at which the persons who were to constitute the class among which the division was to be made were to be ascertained. The context of the will supports the construction referred to, even in regard to embracing Sally Stone herself, or her personal representative, as one of those among whom the division is directed to be made. We find that there are five clauses in the will in which the same language is used, or adopted by reference, in regard to such a division. The testator gives the same direction in regard to the property loaned to each of his five daughters. He could hardly have intended that the personal representative of each of these daughters might share in the division of the property loaned to each of the others but not in the 14 *division of that loaned to herself—as would be the case according to the construction adopted by the court below.

The principles of law involved in the foregoing views are so well settled, that it is hardly necessary to refer to cases in support of them, many of which were cited in the argument. There is much apparent conflict in the cases, but it will be found on examination to arise mainly from the peculiar circumstances of each case. All agree in this, that the intention of the testator, as shown by his will, must prevail if legal. And the question in each case is, what was such intention?

In 2 Jarm. on Wills, 53 marg., the writer, after stating the general principle that the testator's death is the period for ascertaining the persons belonging to a class of objects of his bounty, thus proceeds: "The same construction prevails, though the tenant for life, at whose death the distribution is to be made, is himself one of the next of kin," to whom the property is limited. "As, where a testator bequeathed £5,000 in trust for his daughter for life, and after her decease for her children, living at her decease, in such shares as she should appoint; and in case she should leave no child, then as to £1,000, part thereof, in trust for the executors, administrators and assigns of the daughter; and as to £4,000, the remainder, in trust for the person or persons who should be his heir or heirs at law. The daughter died without leaving children. She, and two other daughters, were the testator's heirs at law. Sir R. P. Arden, M. R., held the heirs, at the time of the testator's death, to be entitled, from the absence of expression, showing that these words were necessarily confined to another period, which, he said, required something very special."

15 *In 2 Redfield on Wills, edition of 1876, page 92, that writer says: "In the case of Pearce v. Vincent, 2 Mylne & K. 800, the tenant for life was also nearest of kin at the death of the testator, to whom the estate was, in the event of his decease without appointment, directed to go; and the court of exchequer, 1 Crompt. & Mees. 598, to whom the case was first sent for advice, were of opinion there was no inconsistency in supposing the testator might have intended the same person both for tenant for life and in remainder. But the opinion was not satisfactory to the master of the rolls, and the case was sent to the common pleas, 2 Bing. N. C. 328, who concurred in opinion with the court of exchequer; and Lord Langdale, the master of the rolls at the period for the final determination of the case, concurred in opinion with the courts of law, and gave judgment accordingly. 2 Keen 230." In a note to the same page of the same work the writer says: "The case of Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Simons 613, holds the same view. The cases are here extensively reviewed by the vice chancellor, Sir L. Shadwell. And the same rule is adopted by the same learned judge in Nicholson v. Wilson, 14 Simons 549, upon the authority of Masters v. Hooper, 4 Br. C. C. 207, saying: 'The argument for the plaintiff in this case was founded entirely on conjecture; but conjecture does not authorize the court to depart from the plain meaning of the words which are found in the will. And the same rule substantially was applied in the case of Seifforth v. Badham, 9 Beav. R. 370, by Lord Langdale, M. R. And in Baker v. Gibson, 12 Beav. R. 101, the same learned judge considered the rule so fully settled in that decision, that he would not allow the bill to be amended with a view to open it anew.

So that the law in England is now

16 regarded as fully settled.'" *The writer then proceeds to criticise to some extent the course pursued by the English courts.

See also 2 Lomax on Executors, p. 47, and the cases cited in the notes.

Bird v. Luckie is a case which was referred to in the argument, as were most of the cases and books before referred to. It was a decision of Knight Bruce, V. C. (sitting for Wigram, V. C.) and reported in The Jurist, vol. 14, p. 1015. It is an exceedingly interesting case, very pertinent to the one now under consideration, and strongly sustaining the views I have before presented. But I will only repeat here the concluding words of the opinion: "Therefore I must read 'next of kin' as meaning next of kin at the testator's death—a conclusion at which I have arrived not very willingly, its effect being to take the bulk of his property from his family in a manner that it may be fairly conjectured he would himself be disposed to prevent if he could have a voice in the matter; but we are allowed to hear him only through his will and codicil."

Bullock v. Downes is another case which was referred to in the argument, and is more recent and still more important, as it was a decision of the House of Lords, in which the law-lords, or most of them, delivered seriatim opinions, and were unanimous. The case is reported in 9 House of Lords Cases, p. 1, and was decided in 1860. The case was this: A. D., after specific bequests to different members of his family, gave the residue to three persons in trust to pay the dividends to his son for life, and after the son's decease, to pay to any widow of the son (who was not then married) an annuity of £600 for life, and the residue to his son's children, and in case there should not be any child of the son, "then to stand possessed of the same in trust for such person or persons of the blood of me as 17 *would by virtue of the statute of distributions of intestate's effects have become and been then entitled thereto in case I had died intestate." At A. D.'s death he left the son and four daughters him surviving. The son married, enjoyed the dividends of the residue during life, and died without ever having had a child. It was held that the word "then," even if treated as an adverb of time, referred only to the time when the persons entitled would come into possession of what had been bequeathed to them; that the persons entitled were to be ascertained at the death of the testator; that the son was one of those persons, and that his right, as one of the next of kin, was not affected by the previous gift of a life-interest in the whole of the residue, so that on the death of the son without issue the residue became divisible into five shares, of which his personal representative took one, and his sisters the other four. The opinions delivered in the case are very interesting, but I will not prolong this opinion by repeating any portion of them.

Abbott v. Bradstreet &c., 3 Allen 587, also cited by the counsel for the appellant, was decided in 1862, and is an important case to the same effect; but I will not state it more fully here.

Two cases were cited by the same counsel from our own reports, which strongly support the same principle. They are Hansford v. Elliott, 9 Leigh 79; and Martin, adm'r, v. Kirby, adm'r, & als., 11 Gratt. 67.

In Hansford v. Elliott, a testator, after bequeathing the residuum of his estate to his wife during life or widowhood, bequeathed that the whole of his personal estate, at the death of his wife, should be equally divided among his surviving children thereafter named, (naming five), and in case his wife should then be with 18 child, that child should have an equal part of his personal *estate with the rest of his children before named:

Held, that the word surviving refers to the death of the testator, not that of tenant for life, and so children of testator who survived him, but did not survive tenant for life, took vested interests in remainder. Words of survivorship, in such cases, are always to be referred to the period of the testator's death, if no special intent appears to the contrary.

In Martin, adm'r &c. v. Kirby, adm'r &c. & als., it was held that in a devise or bequest over to survivors at the death of a devisee or legatee for life, in the absence of the expression of a particular intent on the part of the testator, the survivorship has relation to the death of the testator.

Upon the whole, I am of opinion that the words, "All my children," in the will of the testator, Caleb Stone, mean "all my children living at my death;" that the said children of the testator, living at his death, including Sally Stone, or the survivors of them, and the personal representatives of such of them as are dead, including the personal representative of the said Sally Stone, are entitled to the funds in controversy, being the proceeds of the slaves loaned to her for life by her said father; that so much of the decrees appealed from, as is in conflict with the foregoing opinion, is erroneous and ought to be reversed and annulled; and that the cause ought to be remanded to the said circuit court, to be further proceeded in to a final decree in conformity with the said opinion.

19 *Grasswitt's Ass'nee, &c. v. Connally & als.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

Partnership—Unrecorded Agreements between Partners.—R, J & G form a partnership for the manufacture of tobacco, and in their article of co-partnership they say, it is understood that G shall contribute for the purposes of the business such an amount of capital as he may be able to command, which, when contributed, is to be placed to his credit on the books of the concern, to be used only in conducting the business, and to bear interest of six per cent. per annum. * * And in order to protect G against any losses that may arise from the business, hereby pledge and assign to him all the present and future interest in the stock, machinery, fixtures and claims of the concern.

G put in $4,200, the others put in nothing. The business proved unprofitable, and the firm failed, and the partnership was dissolved.

About the commencement of the partnership they bought machinery, &c., giving the notes of the firm, and a deed of trust upon the machinery, &c., to secure them, and on their failure the trustee sold, and after satisfying the trust there was a balance left. On a contest between the creditors of the partnership and G—HELD:

1. Same—Same—Possession of Property—Partnership Creditors.—The property never having passed to the separate possession of G, but remaining in the possession of the partnership, the unrecorded executory agreement aforesaid is fraudulent as to creditors of the firm without notice.

2. Same—Negotiable Notes—Dissolution.—About the time the firm failed, to secure G for his advances, they made a note payable to their own order for $4,500, secured by deed of trust on the machinery, &c.; but the note was not endorsed or delivered to G. The note not having been endorsed or delivered to him by the other partners, though he took possession of it after the dissolution, G is not entitled to it. It creates no liability without negotiation, and neither G nor either of his partners could afterwards negotiate it; and consequently the deed made to secure it is a nullity.

20 *By an article of agreement bearing date the 21st of January 1870, J. B. Royster, M. W. Grasswitt and J. J. Royster formed a partnership for the manufacture of tobacco in the city of Richmond, under the name and style of Royster & Grasswitt. This agreement is set out in the opinion of Judge Anderson.

At the time this agreement was entered into, the parties were negotiating with James Gunn, and had agreed with him to purchase his machinery, fixtures, &c., for the manufacture of tobacco, and they executed to him their notes, in the name of the firm, dated February 1st, 1870, to the amount of $6,890, and also a deed of trust to Thomas H. Gunn upon the said fixtures to secure the purchase money.

In February, Grasswitt put $2,100 into the concern, and in March he put in the like sum, making $4,200. The Roysters put in nothing during the continuance of the partnership. And the business proving unprofitable, the partnership was, by mutual consent, dissolved in October 1871. A short time previous to the dissolution however, James B. Royster, who was the financial manager of the business, seems to have suggested to Grasswitt the necessity of the partnership's doing something to secure him the money he had advanced, and, after consulting counsel, a note for $4,500 was made in the name of the partnership, payable to their own order, and the tobacco fixtures were conveyed in trust to secure it, and this conveyance was put upon record. The note, however, does not seem to have been endorsed by the partnership, and was kept by Royster in their own chest until it was taken possession of by Grasswitt, as Royster says without his knowledge or consent. After this note and deed was made, they wrote to their creditors saying they had done nothing which would compromise their interests.

21 *Soon after the partnership stopped business, Thomas H. Gunn, the trustee in the deed to secure James H. Gunn, sold the tobacco fixtures; and, after paying James Gunn the amount due him, there remained of the proceeds of the sale, after paying all expenses, the sum of $1,149.19. This money, or a part of it, was claimed by Zenas B. Stearns, the owner of the building in which the business of the partnership was conducted, for rent, and by Grasswitt; and Thomas H. Gunn filed his bill, making Stearns, Grasswitt and the Roysters defendants, and asking the court to direct him in the disposition of it. In this case Connally & Co., of New York, asked leave to file their petition, in which they claimed to be large creditors of the partnership, and insisted that the fund in court should be applied to satisfy their debt. The cause came on to be heard in February 1872, when the court refused to permit the petition of Connally & Co. to be filed, and made a decree, directing that after the payment of the costs of the suit Stearns should be paid $900 in satisfaction of his claim for rent; and then the balance of the fund should be paid over to Grasswitt, with any other property conveyed in the deed to Gunn which had not been sold; "it appearing from the pleading and evidence in the cause that said Grasswitt, as one of the said partners, is entitled to said surplus (which appears to be a part of the partnership assets): by virtue of the article of co-partnership and an assignment subsequently made by said concern in pursuance of said co-partnership agreement.

Immediately upon the making of this decree, and before the money was paid over, Connally & Co. filed their bill in the chancery court of the city of Richmond in behalf of themselves and all the other creditors 22 of the partnership of Royster & Grasswitt, claiming that the fund in the hands of the trustee, Gunn, was assets of the partnership, and liable to pay the partnership debts; charging that the note for $4,500, and the deed of trust to secure it, were fraudulent, and asking that the said fund might be so applied, and that Gunn might be enjoined from paying it over. The injunction was granted.

Grasswitt answered, denying that the note and deed were fraudulent, and insisting that they were intended by being put upon record to secure to him the benefit of the provision in his favor in the article of agreement in relation to the money he might advance for the partnership.

Pending the cause Grasswitt was adjudged a bankrupt, and his assignee was made a party. And the cause was referred to a commissioner, who was directed to report of what the assets of Royster & Grasswitt then consisted, and take an account of the debts due by them, and their priorities if any, and particularly whether the funds then in the hands of the receiver of the court (to whom by a former decree Gunn was directed to transfer them) were partnership assets or the individual property of Grasswitt; and if the assets of Royster & Grasswitt were insufficient to pay their debts, then to apportion them among the creditors.

The commissioner reported the amount in the hands of the receiver to be $1,775.72, subject to the order of the court in the cause; and this embraced all the available assets of the firm, and was subject to the creditors of the concern, and was not the individual property of Grasswitt. He reported three debts of the firm, amounting to $13,486.83, and apportioned the fund pro rata among them.

This report was recommitted to the 23 commissioner, *with instructions to take such further evidence as might be offered by any of the parties, and report upon the questions referred to him by the former decree. And the commissioner returned his report, in which he adhered to the opinion expressed by him in his first report. And to this report Grasswitt's assignee excepted. Because,

1st. It erroneously reports that the fund and the property from which it was derived was, at the commencement of this suit, partnership property of the late concern of Royster & Grasswitt.

2d. It reports that the assignment or pledge of the partnership property by the other two members of the firm, in the article of partnership, did not create a separate and individual estate in Grasswitt in said property.

3d. It reports that from the evidence in the cause, the claim of Grasswitt, as to the note of $4,500, and the deed of trust securing it, is not sustained.

4th. It fails to report among the debts of Royster & Grasswitt, entitled to share in the distribution of their assets, the claim of Grasswitt for $4,200, advanced to said firm.

The cause came on to be finally heard on the 4th of March 1873, when the court made a decree overruling the exceptions to the report, and confirming it; and it appearing that the fund in court was $1,952.89, it was distributed pro rata among the three creditors of the partnership reported by the commissioner. And thereupon Grasswitt and his assignee applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Cannon & Courtney, for the appellants.

Guy & Gilliam, for the appellees.

24 *Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

Joint creditors as such have no lien upon the partnership property. They have no equity to appropriate it to their debts. If they proceed against the firm to a judgment at law, they may levy an execution upon the partnership effects, or upon the separate property of the partners, and thus acquire a lien upon the partnership property and also the separate property of the copartners. Their remedy is a legal one, and until the statute authorizing creditors in certain cases to sue in equity before they obtain judgment, &c., they must exhaust their remedy at law before they are entitled to invoke the assistance of a court of equity, and can only reach the partnership effects before they have acquired a lien upon them through the equities of the copartners.

Each partner has an equity to have the social effects appropriated as far as necessary to the payment of the joint debts towards the discharge of his individual liability for them. He has consequently an equity to prevent their diversion from that object by his copartner to his separate use. But he may bona fide, and for a valuable consideration, transfer the partnership effects to his copartner. By so doing he relinquishes his aforesaid equity, and cannot afterwards insist that they shall be subjected to the payment of the joint debts. The joint creditors in this case seek to enforce the aforesaid equity of the copartners.

The appellant, Grasswitt, contends that his co-partners, the Roysters, relinquished this equity by a stipulation in the articles of copartnership, whereby his copartners transferred to him the partnership effects to be his property until he was repaid the money he advanced. And his claim is in the articles of co-partnership, upon which this claim is founded, is as follows: "It is understood that the said M. W. Grasswitt shall contribute, for the purposes of the business, such an amount of capital as he may be able to command, which, when contributed, is to be placed to his credit on the books of the concern, to be used only in conducting the business, and to bear interest of six per cent. per annum. Should the said J. B. Royster and J. J. Royster (the other parties to the agreement), or either of them, make any contribution of capital, the same to be placed to their credit on the books of the concern, and to bear a like interest. But until they shall do so (this is the language relied on as making the transfer), and in order to protect the said Grasswitt against any losses that may arise from the business, hereby pledge and assign to him all their present and future interest in the stock, machinery, fixtures and claims of the concern; this assignment to be relieved and abated as the respective interests of the said J. B. Royster and J. J. Royster in the profits of the business will justify."

25 to be repaid the money he *advanced out of the fund in question, which he claims as his separate property. The clause

At the date of this agreement, the 21st of January 1870, the company had no effects. At least it was after that date that the purchase of tobacco fixtures was completed by giving notes and a deed of trust to secure their payment to James Gunn, from whom they were purchased, to wit: on the first of February 1870. But J. B. Royster testifies that the said purchase was contemplated about simultaneously with a verbal agreement to form the partnership. Subsequent to the purchase of the fixtures, &c., to wit: on the 23d of February 1870, Grasswitt 26 contributed or advanced *$2,100, and the same amount on the 5th of March following.

By the articles of co-partnership, the Roysters do not, in terms, undertake to repay or to refund to Grasswitt the money to be advanced by him. That does not seem to have been contemplated. On the contrary, when contributed, it was to be placed "to his credit on the books of the concern," to be used only in the business, and he was to receive six per cent. interest. And a like provision is made with regard to it, should the Roysters, or either of them, make a contribution to the capital. Nor do they pledge or assign the partnership effects then owned or to be acquired to secure the repayment of the same—that we have seen was not contemplated—but for the purpose of protecting said Grasswitt "against any losses that may arise from the business." And this pledge or assignment was to be abated or relieved (which seems, though not clearly expressed, to have been their meaning) accordingly as the Roysters may make contributions. If their contributions were equal to Grasswitt's, they were entitled to be relieved from the pledge or assignment; if not equal, then to an abatement from the pledge, in proportion to their contributions.

The partnership effects, shortly before the dissolution, were sold under the deed of trust to Gunn, and applied to the payment of rents, &c., due from the co-partnary and to the debt due to James Gunn, from whom they were purchased, which left a balance of $1,873.12, which, together with the interest thereon, is the fund in dispute. Grasswitt claims that he is entitled to it under the co-partnership agreement; and the joint creditors contend that it should be applied to the payment of their debts. Has Grasswitt the right to the conversion of this fund, under the agreement aforesaid, 27 *to his separate use? or, is it applicable to the payment of the joint debts?

The court is of opinion, that the unrecorded executory agreement between copartners, such as is hereinbefore described, pledging or assigning all the partnership effects, then owned or which should afterwards be acquired, to indemnify or save harmless one of the partners, who has advanced money to carry on the business, the property never having passed to the separate possession of the pledgee or assignee, but remaining in the uninterrupted possession of the co-partnary, is fraudulent in law as to creditors without notice. In this case the partners themselves seemed to have regarded their agreement as only binding inter se. The property was bought by the copartners, and was held and treated by them as copartnership property after the said agreement was made; and shortly before the dissolution was conveyed by them (including Grasswitt) in trust as partnership property; and in their correspondence with the joint creditors, they (including Grasswitt) gave assurance that they had done nothing which would compromise their interests; and never an intimation made that the partnership effects were held by one of the copartners in pledge, or by assignment for his indemnity; and the court is of opinion, that to give effect to said agreement now, so as to convert the fund in question to the separate use of Grasswitt, and to divert it from the payment of the joint debts, all the partners being insolvent, and there being no other partnership property, would be fraudulent as to the joint creditors. And although the Roysters may have no equity against Grasswitt, to require the application of the partnership effects to the payment of the joint debts, and the joint creditors, therefore,

28 their *equities, yet, under the statute, a court of equity will give aid to a creditor even before he has obtained a judgment or decree for his claim, to avoid an assignment or transfer of, or charge upon, the estate of his debtor, which he might institute after obtaining such judgment or decree. (Code of 1860, chap. 179, § 2, p. 736.) These creditors have, therefore, in this case, though not having obtained judgment, the right to seek relief in a court of equity.

The court is further of opinion that the appellants cannot maintain their claim under the deed of trust to Lottier to secure a note for $4,500, made payable to their own order. Said note was never negotiated. It was never ordered to be paid to Grasswitt, or delivered to him. It came into his possession without the consent of his copartners, and he is not entitled to it. The said note creates no liability without negotiation, and Grasswitt nor either of his copartners could now negotiate it; and consequently the deed made to secure it is a nullity. Upon the whole, the court is of opinion that the assignment of Grasswitt in bankruptcy does not invest his assignee with the fund in question as the separate property of Grasswitt, but that it is liable to the joint debts of the copartnership; and that the decree of the chancellor must be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

*Reynolds v. Zink.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. County Courts—Power to Remove Executors from Office.*—Under the facts of this case, the county court, in which an executor qualified as such, was warranted, in the exercise of the power vested in it by the statute, in removing him from his office. See Code of 1860, ch. 132, § 11; Code of 1873, ch. 123, § 18, p. 949.

2. Same—Discretion—Appellate Interference.—There must, of necessity, be vested in the court a very large discretion; and while it is a legal discretion, to be exercised in a proper case, an appellate court ought not to interfere, except in a case where manifest injustice has been done, or where it is plain that a proper case has not been made for the exercise of the powers which the law has specially conferred on the court from which the fiduciary derives his authority.

The case is stated by Judge Christian in his opinion.

Tutwiler, for the appellant.

Pettit, for the appellee.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The record shows that the appellant, Thomas H. Reynolds, qualified as executor of Garland Reynolds, in the county court of Louisa on the 18th of December 1868. The said Garland Reynolds, by his will, devised his whole estate, after the payment of his debts, to his son, W. T. Reynolds, and his daughter, Catharine Zink, to be held by trustees, for his son and daughter respectively.

30 In the year 1871 the following notice was issued by *Mrs. Zink, one of the beneficiaries under said will, who was entitled to one-half of the estate of the testator after the payment of his debts:

To Truman H. Reynolds, executor of Garland Reynolds, deceased:

Whereas, your brother, as assignee of *County Courts—Discretionary Powers.—For the proposition that a county court is vested by statute with the power to remove a fiduciary from office, in its discretion, where there is a proper case, see Snively v. Harkrader, 29 Gratt. 128; Lance v. McCoy, 34 W. Va. 420, 12 S. E. Rep. 728, both citing the principal case.

your father, has brought suit against you as executor as aforesaid, for large sums for debts alleged to be due from your said testator, and would have recovered judgment therein at the late term of the circuit court of Louisa, without any enquiry or proof, and without any defence by you, but for timely interference on my part and behalf, although you and your counsel had been warned that these debts were believed by me not to be well founded or justly due; and whereas, your relationship to the party or parties preferring these claims, and the character of these claims and of the defence which ought justly to be made against them, and your past conduct aforesaid in respect thereto, make it probable, if not certain, that the estate of your testator will suffer if its defence to those claims be left to you, and make it improper that said estate should remain under your control: Therefore, take notice that I shall move the county court of Louisa, on the first day of its June term, 1871, to make an order revoking and annulling your powers as executor aforesaid.

The notice was served on Reynolds, the executor, and on the 15th of August 1871, the parties having been heard, upon the motion of Mrs. Zink the court revoked the powers of Truman H. Reynolds, as executor of Garland Reynolds, deceased; and he thereupon took an appeal to the circuit court of the county.

On this appeal, taken to the circuit court, the judgment of the county court was affirmed; and to that judgment a writ of error was awarded by one of the judges of this court.

The court is of opinion that there is no error either in the judgment of the county court or of the circuit court.

The statute, Code of 1860, ch. 132, § 11, has wisely deposited with "the court, under the order of which any (such) fiduciary derives his authority," the right and duty to revoke and annul his powers "whenever from any cause it appears proper."

There must, of necessity, be vested in that court a very large discretion; and while it is a legal discretion, to be exercised in a proper case, an appellate court ought not to interfere, except in a case where manifest injustice has been done, or where it is plain that a proper case has not been made for the exercise of the powers which the legislature has specially conferred upon that court, from which the fiduciary derives his authority.

It cannot be said, upon the facts of the case before us, that the discretion of the county court was improperly exercised, or that its authority was unlawfully asserted.

The record shows that two suits had been brought against the estate of the testator by the brother of the executor upon claims purporting to have been due to the father of the executor, and to have been assigned by him to his brother. These claims would, if successfully asserted, have consumed the whole estate of the testator, and his devisees would not have received a dollar.

The executor failed and refused to defend these suits, and but for the persistent efforts of the appellee judgment would have gone by default. The executor, indeed, refused to make any defence until after the order for his removal had been entered by the county court, and an appeal taken to the circuit court. Pending that appeal, he reluctantly, and after persevering efforts on the part of the appellee's counsel, was induced to put in the plea of non est factum in the action of debt, and in that suit a jury found for the defendant on that plea. The peculiar relations of the executor towards the parties, and his whole conduct in the premises, might well warrant the county court in revoking the powers of the executor. At least it cannot be said that the discretion vested by law in the county court has been improperly exercised. That court having before it the parties and the witnesses, and having personal knowledge of their character and standing, made an order revoking and annulling the powers of the executor, and removing him from his office as executor. This judgment of the county court was affirmed by the circuit court on appeal. This court is not disposed to interfere with these two judgments.

The court is therefore of opinion that the judgment of the circuit court affirming the judgment of the county court must be affirmed by this court.

Judgment affirmed.

*Spilman v. Johnson.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Bankruptcy Proceedings—Conclusive Against Party to, Except on Appeal.—A creditor by judgment of a bankrupt, who proves his debt in the bankruptcy proceedings, and takes an active part in these proceedings, cannot afterwards go into a state court to subject property sold by the assignee of the bankrupt, and the proceeds distributed in that proceeding, to satisfy his judgment, on any ground of error which might have been corrected in the bankrupt court, or by appeal from the order or decree of that court.
2. Same—Same—Courses Open to Creditor of Bankrupt.—A creditor of a bankrupt having a lien on his real estate, has two courses open to him, either of which he may adopt. He may decline to appear in the bankrupt court; and he will be unaffected by any proceeding in that court; unless, indeed, the proper steps are taken to sell the estate clear of all incumbrances; or he may elect to proceed in the bankrupt court, prove his debt there, and rely upon his security.

*Bankruptcy—Right of Judgment Creditors of Bankrupt.—The principal case is cited in McAllister v. Bodkin, 76 Va. 814, and in Gibbs v. Logan, 22 W. Va. 212, for the proposition that the judgment creditors of a bankrupt may proceed to enforce their liens in a state court, if proceedings have not already been commenced in the bankrupt court. See also Francisco v. Shelton, 85 Va. 779, 8 S. E. Rep. 789; McCance v. Taylor, 10 Gratt. 580; Tichenor v. Allen et al., 13 Gratt. 15.

3. Same—Same—Same—Election to Proceed in Bankrupt Court.—If the creditor elects to proceed in the bankrupt court, this is a waiver of his right to institute any suit or proceeding at law or in equity, which is in any way inconsistent with his election to obtain satisfaction of his debt under the bankruptcy proceedings.

This was a suit in equity in the circuit court of Henrico county, brought in June 1871, by Luther R. Spilman against Bradley T. Johnson, John Johns and others, to subject certain land called the "Granite Quarry," in the county of Henrico, purchased by Johnson at a public sale made by John Johns, assignee of Henry Exall, a bankrupt, to the lien of two judgments which had been recovered against said Exall, 34 some years before his bankruptcy, one of them *by B. W. Green and the other by Taylor & Son, and which had been assigned to Spilman. This cause came on to be heard on the 18th of June 1872, when the court made a decree dismissing the bill, with costs. And thereupon Spilman applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed. The cause is stated by Judge Staples in his opinion.

Guy & Gilliam, for the appellant.

Staples, J. It is claimed by the appellant that the property known as the "Granite Quarry," in the possession of the appellee, Johnson, was sold under a decree of the circuit court of the United States; that the suit in which that decree was rendered, was brought not for the purpose of procuring a sale, but merely to vacate as fraudulent the lease made to Turner Exall; that he, the appellant, was not a party to that suit; that he had no connection with it; and he received no part of the purchase money.

The exhibits filed fully sustain the appellant in these positions. And if this was the whole case, the lien of his judgments would still be in force, and he might properly invoke the jurisdiction of the state courts to enforce the same against the property in the possession of the appellee. But unfortunately for him this is not the whole case. There are other facts to be considered which conclusively show that the appellant has waived his right to assert this lien by any proceeding or suit in a state court. In order to understand this more clearly, it is proper to inquire into the proceedings in the bankrupt court. In October 1868 the

35 assignee filed his petition in that court, setting forth the real estate *belonging to Exall, the bankrupt, the number and amount of the liens thereon, the parties entitled to the same, and asking for a sale of the property, discharged of all the incumbrances. Several of the judgment creditors united in this petition. Among those so uniting were the creditors, under whom the appellant now claims. A decree of sale was accordingly made. Subsequently the assignee filed his bill in the circuit court of the United States to vacate the lease to

Turner Exall as fraudulent. A decree was entered vacating the lease, and directing a sale of the "Granite Quarry." The property was advertised accordingly; but the sale was enjoined by Armistead & Cary, creditors, claiming to have a lien upon it for money expended or advanced in developing the quarry. This injunction was awarded by the Hon. John C. Underwood, as judge of the district court, to whom the application was addressed. The decree of sale was set aside by him, and a rehearing of the cause directed at an adjourned term of the circuit court of the United States. Afterwards the same judge, sitting in the circuit court however, rendered a decree for the sale of the property, and under that decree the sale was made, at which the appellee became the purchaser. It would thus seem the various orders and decrees were uniformly entered by the same judge, presiding indifferently in the circuit court and in the district court. And although the assignee proposed to sell under a decree of the circuit court, he had at the same time the authority of the district court sitting in bankruptcy, conferred by the decree of the 12th October 1868, already adverted to. His reports of the sales were both returned to and filed in the latter court. These reports distinctly set forth the names of the several purchasers, the amount of the purchase money, the *charges, costs, fees attending the sales, and the balance remaining in the hands of the assignee for distribution among the creditors.

36 It further appears that on motion of John P. Tabb, a preferred creditor, after the reports were so filed, an order was entered in the bankrupt court for an account of the liens upon the estate of the bankrupt and their respective priorities. The special commissioner, O. G. Kean, appointed for that purpose, notified the creditors that he would take the account on the 9th November 1870, and that to enable them to share in the distribution their liens must be asserted in the bankrupt suit. This notice was served on the appellant, and on the day indicated he, as assignee of B. W. Green, proved his debt as a secured creditor, claiming a lien on the real estate and upon the proceeds of sale in the hands of the assignee. The other judgment held by the appellant, as assignee of William Taylor & Sons, had been previously proved by the latter before the assignment was made.

Three months after this, in January 1871, the following order was entered: "It appearing from the report of the assignee in this cause that there is in his hands, after the payment of all expenses incurred by him in this suit, the sum of $1,577.79, one-half of which was derived from the sale of the realty, and the other half from the sale of the personalty, it is ordered that John Johns, said assignee, do distribute said fund to the parties entitled to the same as ascertained by the report of O. G. Kean, special master, filed herein, respect being had to the priorities declared to exist among them by said report; that is to say $788.89 to those holding liens upon the realty, and $788.89 to those holding liens upon the personalty, after deducting the $10 due to the laborers, and the $36 to the United States, as a 37 *joint charge on the two funds and the register's fees." This order is signed by W. W. Forbes, register.

It was asserted in the argument, and it was not controverted, that it is the practice in the bankrupt courts for the register to enter orders for distribution of the assets where there is no controversy. If a party is dissatisfied with the ruling, an appeal is taken to the court for the correction of the errors. It is laid down in the books on Bankruptcy, that while the register is subject to the control and supervision of the court, it is, nevertheless, competent for him to convene the creditors, declare dividends and make distribution of the assets. Bump on Bankruptcy 64. However this may be, the order in question is proved to be in the handwriting of the appellant. The fair inference is that it was signed by the register at his suggestion. The language of the order plainly shows that the appellant was well acquainted with the reports made by the assignee. These reports showed that the granite quarry was sold under a decree of the circuit court, and not of the bankrupt court; that the greater part of the funds in the hands of the assignee was derived from the sale of that property to the appellee, General Johnson. With all this knowledge, the appellant prepares an order for its distribution among the lien creditors according to their priorities, he being an assignee of two of the judgments named in the report of the commissioner.

But this is not all. The papers of the bankrupt court show that the appellant contested the liens of four of the creditors; that he filed exceptions to the report of commissioner Kean; and that on the 24th of January 1871, he objected to the discharge of the assignee for various reasons, which were overruled by the register, and he took no appeal.

38 *It thus appears, that the appellant not only proved his debt and asserted his lien in the bankrupt court, but he actively participated as a party in the proceedings at every step of the adjudication. A creditor having a lien upon the estate of his bankrupt debtor has two courses open to him, either of which he may adopt. He may decline to appear in the bankrupt court, and he will, of course, be unaffected by any proceeding in that court, unless, indeed, the proper steps are taken to sell the estate clear of all encumbrances: or, the creditor may elect to proceed in the bankrupt court, prove his debt there, and rely upon his security. Should he adopt the latter course, it is an election to proceed in the bankrupt court, and a waiver of his right to institute any suit or proceeding at law or in equity which is in any way inconsistent with his election to obtain satisfaction of the debt under the bankruptcy proceedings. This principle is well settled. Bump on Bankruptcy, page —, Wilson v. Capuro, 41 Calif. R. 345; Hoyt v. Freel, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 220; Haxtun v. Corse, 2 Bar. Ch. R. 506.

The only case cited for the appellant, as holding a contrary view is that of "Re Bland," decided by Jackson, J., and published in 3 Nat. Bank. Reg. 324. That was, however, a case arising in a bankrupt court, and the question was as to the mode of administering the assets in that court. Here the question is, whether a creditor having elected to assert his lien in a bankrupt court, having made himself a party to the proceedings in that court, can afterwards resort to a state tribunal to enforce his lien against the same property which was the subject of adjudication in the bankrupt court. According to the Virginia practice, a creditor may go into a court of equity to enforce his lien; other creditors having liens may come in by petition, or,
 39 when *there is a decree for an account, they may prove before a commissioner. In either case they are considered parties to the suit, and are bound by the proceedings. Will it be maintained that a creditor thus coming in, proving his debt, excepting to commissioner's reports, contesting the liens of other creditors, and in every way identifying himself with the case, is at liberty to resort to another court for the assertion of the same lien against the property in the hands of a bona fide purchaser.

This principle applies very strongly to the district court of the United States, which, in matters of bankruptcy, has exclusive jurisdiction in adjudicating the rights of creditors, liquidating liens, settling conflicting claims to priority, and in distributing the assets of the bankrupt. If the creditor fails to realize here what is justly due him, it is not for the want of power in the bankrupt court to afford relief, but because of some error or mismanagement in the conduct of the cause, to be corrected by the court itself or some other tribunal having appellate jurisdiction over that court.

It is no doubt true that the appellant failed to receive any part of the fund. Whether he was rightfully excluded it is impossible for this court to undertake to decide. The report of commissioner Kean, to which appellant excepted, shows there were liens prior to those of the appellant, amounting to fifteen or eighteen hundred dollars, probably more than sufficient to absorb the entire fund. The result would perhaps have been different if appellant's exceptions had been sustained. If any error was committed to the prejudice of the judgment creditors of the bankrupt, it was in the decree sustaining the claim of Armistead & Cary. This claim was strongly contested by the assignee, but was approved by a judge of 40 the district court, and allowed *by a judge of the circuit court. With the lights before us how can we review this decision? By what authority can we pass upon it at all. All that can be said is, if the claim was just and valid, the appellant is not prejudiced, and under no state of circumstances could he ever have realized any part of his judgments. The reason is, that this claim and the prior judgments would have left nothing for the satisfaction of the appellant's judgments. On the other hand, if the claim of Armistead & Cary was not just, if the decrees allowing it are erroneous, the remedy, if any, was by application to the bankrupt court to interfere, or by appeal to the proper appellate court to correct its error. The decision of Chief Justice Wait in Re Taliaferro, cited by the appellant, is authority for this proposition. That was an appeal to the circuit court from erroneous orders and decrees of the bankrupt court, and plainly indicates the course the appellant ought to have pursued in this case.

If the appellant is not bound by the proceedings in the bankrupt court, neither are the other creditors. If he may institute a separate suit, so may each one of them. But this will scarcely be claimed. In any event, all the creditors having liens ought to be before the court, in order that all conflicting claims and questions of priority may be settled in one suit, and the purchaser quieted in his possession and title. If William Sutton & Co., and Armistead & Cary were justly entitled to priority over the appellant, the appellee, whose money paid those debts, ought to have credit for the amount. He is clearly entitled to be subrogated to the rights of those creditors. In effect this court, or the court below, must re-open the proceedings in bankruptcy, revise the decisions of that court, and 41 *proceed to administer the assets of the bankrupt. The statement of the proposition is its own refutation.

There is nothing in the record before us casting the least suspicion of unfairness upon the appellee. He appears to have been a bona fide purchaser at a public sale. He complied with all the terms by paying the several instalments of the purchase money. If the property was sold at a sacrifice, there is nothing to show it. If the proceeds of sale were misapplied, there is nothing to connect the appellee with it. It was said in the argument, although no issue of the kind is made in the pleadings, that the appellee was the attorney of the assignee, and as such he was incapable of purchasing at a sale made by the assignee. If there is anything in the objection, it ought to have been made in the bankrupt court; and not in this collateral way in another court. That question has been effectually settled by repeated adjudications of this court. See Cline v. Catron, 22 Gratt. 378, where the authorities are cited.

Upon the whole, for the reasons stated, I am of opinion the decree of the circuit court is correct, and must be affirmed.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Staples, J.

Decree affirmed.

*Lacy v. Stamper & als.
Crump v. Stamper & als.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

Absent, CHRISTIAN, J.*

1. Personal Representatives — Liability for Negligence.—S, of New Kent county, died in 1856, and H qualified as his executor and received as a part of his estate bonds executed without security to S, the obligors being then solvent. H did not collect the money due on these bonds; and on his death in 1862, they were turned over by his administrator to C, who had qualified as administrator de bonis non of S, the obligors still being solvent. C sued on the bonds, but owing to the state of things in the county during the war judgments could not be recovered upon them, and by the results of the war the obligors became insolvent. Held:

1. Same—Liability of Successive Personal Representatives.—Where there are several successive administrations upon the same estate, and debts due to the estate might have been collected by each of the personal representatives of said estate, by the use of due and reasonable diligence, but was collected by none of them, and was lost by the negligence of each and all of them; whilst all of them are liable for said debts, their relative liability is in the inverse order of their qualifications as such personal representatives.
2. Same—Same—Laches of First.—H might have collected these debts, and his estate and his sureties are responsible for the loss of them.
3. Same — Same—Due Diligence of Second.—C having used due diligence to collect them after they came into his hands, and having failed to collect them owing to the condition of the county, is not responsible for them.
4. Same—When Not Liable.—Though where an estate is to be invested to await a distribution
43 *at a distant day, a bond executed to the testator well secured on real estate, or even secured by undoubted personal security, may be continued as an investment by the personal representative, this cannot be done with a bond without security either real or personal; especially where there is a large amount of interest due upon it at the death of the testator.
5. Same—Same—Liability of Sureties.†—Under the circumstances of this case the legatees of S were not bound to proceed against the heirs of H before they could have a decree against his sureties; and one decree against the administrator of H and his sureties that they should pay the amount found due from H to S's estate, into bank to the credit of the cause is not erroneous.
6. Same—Same—War Interest.‡—Under the circum-

*JUDGE CHRISTIAN had made a decree in the cause in the circuit court, though not the one from which the appeal was taken.

†Personal Representatives—Liability of Sureties.—The principal case is cited in Horton v. Bond, 28 Gratt. 826, and also in Barnes v. Trafton, 80 Va. 534, for the statement that, under certain circumstances, the sureties on the bond of a personal representative, may be sued for the liabilities of their principal, before the remedy against the latter's heirs and personal representatives has been exhausted.

stances interest disallowed from the 17th of April 1861 to April 10th, 1865.

7. Same—Same—Effect of War.—An administrator who qualified as such in New Kent county in 1862, not held liable for failing to sue in that county during the war, in cases in which he knew there would be defences, there having been but one court held in the county during the war, and the enemy either encamping or passing through it constantly.

James Stamper, late of the county of New Kent, died in the year 1856, leaving a widow and four children, three of whom were infants. He left a will, which was admitted to probate in the county court of New Kent at its October term 1856, and Robert Howle qualified as his executor. By his will the testator left to his wife for her life all his property, to be applied to the support of herself and his children; and at her death the property left her was to be divided among his children. There were other provisions which it is not necessary to state.

Robert Howle, the executor, died early in 1862, and in April of that year William P. Richardson qualified as his administrator. And in December 1862 Leonard C. Crump qualified as administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of James Stamper; and he continued in office until 1866, when 44 upon the motion of his sureties *he was removed, and the unadministered estate of Stamper was committed to H. D. Vaiden, the sheriff of the county.

Stamper's estate seems to have consisted of a tract of land on which he lived, personal property on the land, slaves, and a number of bonds upon individuals.

In 1863 Mrs. Stamper, for herself and as next friend of her three infant children, filed her bill in the circuit court of New Kent, against Howle's administrator, Crump, and others to have a settlement of Howle's and Crump's accounts; but New Kent being in the route of the Union armies, all the records of the courts of the county were sent to Richmond for safe-keeping, and they were consumed in the fire which occurred in that city on the 3d of April 1865. In the year 1866 she filed this bill in her own right, and as next friend of her three infant children, against Richardson as the administrator of Howle, Richmond T. Lacy, and five others, as the sureties of Howle in his bond as executor, Vaiden and Crump and his sureties, in which, after setting out the facts, she asked for a settlement of the accounts of Howle, Crump and Vaiden, as representatives of Stamper, and for payment of what should be found due. In the progress of the cause she amended her bill, and made Howle's heirs parties.

Lacy answered the bill. He says he transacted business with Robert Howle, as executor of Stamper, but he had no knowledge or recollection of having executed a citation of principal case in Brent v. Clevinger, 78 Va. 14, and especially, see general note on "Interest," appended to Fred v. Dixon, 27 Gratt. 541.

bond as security of said Howle, as executor of the will of James Stamper, deceased, and calls for strict legal evidence of the fact.

Crump and Richardson also answered, and Crump insisted very earnestly that he faithfully performed his duties as administrator, &c., of Stamper. It is not 45 *necessary, however, to set out the averments of the answers.

The case was referred to commissioner Barham to settle the accounts, and report upon several questions referred to him.

The commissioner returned his report in November 1867; to which the defendants filed fifty-six exceptions.

The cause came on to be heard the 20th of April 1871, when the court passed upon all the exceptions, overruling some of them, sustaining others, and leaving some open for further enquiry; and recommitted the report to the commissioner, with directions to reform the report and make certain enquiries, and among them, whether Richmond T. Lacy was one of the sureties in Howle's executorial bond.

In August 1871 the commissioner returned his report. He made several statements of the indebtedness of Howle to Stamper's estate, and two of the indebtedness of Crump. By that which was adopted by the court, Howle was indebted of principal $6,023.32, and of interest $6,792.27; but Howle had paid to Mrs. Stamper $2,831, which was not credited in that statement, but which was allowed by the decree, leaving $3,961.27 of interest up to December 31st, 1870. The amount so charged to Howle was made up in part of three bonds: one of John D. Christian, of principal $2,307.99, of interest $1,657.03; one of John D. and Bat. D. Christian, of principal $397.04, of interest $62.68; and one of Wm. C. Talley, deducting offsets, $329.90; making together of principal $3,034.93, and of interest $1,719.71. These bonds constituted a part of the estate of Stamper, which went into the hands of Howle upon his qualification as executor, and not having been collected by him, were,
46 with others, delivered to Crump when he qualified as administrator *de bonis non with the will annexed of Stamper. The proof was clear that the parties were entirely solvent when the bonds were received by Howle, and when they were delivered to Crump; but they afterwards failed, and the debts were lost. To this charge the administrator and sureties of Howle excepted. The facts bearing on the question of their liability are stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

In the account of Crump, the whole balance reported against him was made up of the amount of two bonds, which had been in the hands of Howle, and on his death were turned over to Crump. This balance was of principal $630.47, and interest to the 31st of December 1870, $858.76. To the charge of these bonds Crump excepted. The facts in relation to them are also stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

There were some other questions on the accounts noticed in the opinion of the court; but they are mere matters of fact.

The commissioner reported, that the only evidence as to who were the sureties of Robert Howle in his official bond, as executor of Stamper, was furnished by two exhibits, B and H, from which it appears that R. T. Lacy was one of his securities in that bond. For these exhibits see the opinion.

The cause came on to be heard on the 18th of April 1872, when the court decreed that Richardson, administrator of Howle, out of the assets of his intestate in his hands, R. T. Lacy, and the other sureties of Howle, do deposit in the State Bank of Virginia at Richmond, to the credit of this cause, and subject to the order of this court, the sum of $9,984.59, with legal interest on $6,023.32, from the 31st of December 1870, until so deposited. And further decreed that Crump should deposit in like manner in said bank the sum of $1,489.16, with legal interest on $630.40 from the same date. From this decree Lacy and Crump applied separately for appeals; which were allowed.

Courtney, Jones, Crump and Lacy, for the appellants.

Meredith, for the appellees.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

We will first consider the case of Lacy v. Stamper, &c. There are five assignments of error in the petition of appeal in that case, which we will notice in their order.

1. The first assignment of error is: "because the securities of Howle, as the administrator of Stamper, are charged with a liability of more than $6,000, the amount of Christian's and Talley's bonds, although it was shown that those bonds were not lost by Howle's neglect, but were good and available, not only at the death of Howle, but when they were subsequently turned over by his representative to Crump, the administrator de bonis non of Stamper."

As a general rule, it is the duty of a personal representative to collect all debts due to the estate he represents, which can be collected, and to use due and reasonable diligence in making such collection; and if any such debt be lost by not being collected, he and his sureties are liable therefor, if he might have collected it by the use of due and reasonable diligence. This general rule has not been, and cannot be denied, and it is unnecessary to refer to authority to sustain it.

It is not pretended that the estate of Howle, or his sureties, as executor of Stamper, have been charged in this case with a single debt due to the said testator at his death, which was not then perfectly solvent, and which might not have been collected by the executor, Howle, by the use of due and reasonable diligence. If, therefore, the general rule before stated be applicable to the case, it follows that the estate and sureties of Howle are liable for all the debts of said testator so charged to them.

But it is contended in their behalf, that while the debts referred to in the exception were solvent at the death of Stamper, and might have been collected by his executor, Howle, whose estate and sureties are therefore liable for them, yet they were also solvent when L. C. Crump became administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of Stamper, and they came to the hands of said Crump as such administrator, whose duty it was to collect them, and who might have collected them by the use of due and reasonable diligence; that said Crump is therefore also liable for them; and that his liability is prior and paramount to that of the liability of the estate and sureties of Howle.

It is no doubt true, as a legal proposition, that where there are several successive administrations upon the same estate, and debts due to the estate might have been collected by each of the personal representatives of said estate, by the use of due and reasonable diligence, but were collected by none of them, and were lost by the negligence of each and all of them; while all of them are liable for said debts, their relative liability is in the inverse order of their qualifications as such personal representatives.

It would follow, therefore, if the facts were as contended for in behalf of the estate and sureties of Howle; and the debts referred to in the exception might have been collected by the use of due and reasonable diligence by Crump, as administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of Stamper, he and his sureties would be liable for said debts prior to, and in operation of, the estate and sureties of Howle.

The question then is, whether the fact be as thus contended for.

The liability of Howle's estate and sureties for these debts is very clear. If they were good and solvent debts when Crump qualified, they were certainly good and solvent debts when Howle qualified as personal representative of Stamper. And for four or five years after the qualification of Howle, there was profound peace throughout the land; the courts of the county were in full operation; there were no stay-laws in force; and there was no obstruction of any kind to the administration of justice in the state. And yet no action was ever brought by Howle for the recovery of any of these debts.

To relieve Howle's estate and sureties from this clear liability for said debts, by fixing a liability therefor on the subsequent personal representative Crump, the evidence on which the latter liability must depend, ought, certainly, to be very strong.

Crump was very prompt in the institution of suits for the recovery of said debts. He certainly brought them in due time. Did he prosecute them with due diligence?

In ordinary time of peace he might, and no doubt would, have obtained judgments for the said debts much sooner than he did; and probably might, and would, have collected all or most of them. But he instituted the suits in the midst of the war, which was actively prosecuted for more than two years thereafter. During almost the whole of that period, the county of New Kent, in which the suits were brought, was in the hands of the public enemy, or daily liable to hostile *raids; and sessions of courts in the county were prevented. The records of the courts were removed to Richmond for preservation, and were afterwards destroyed there by the great fire of the 3d of April 1865. After the war, there were still many, and great, difficulties attending the prosecution of suits and the recovery of debts, growing out of stay-laws and other obstructions thrown in the way of suitors.

We cannot therefore say, that according to the evidence afforded by the record, the said Crump did not use due and reasonable diligence to collect the said debts; and certainly we cannot say that the said evidence is sufficient to relieve Howle's estate and sureties from the clear liability for said debts, by fixing a liability therefor on Crump.

It seems to be supposed, however, by the counsel for the appellant, that the general rule before stated is not applicable to this case, and that it was not the duty of Howle to collect the said debts, but as the estate was not to be distributed at once among the legatees, but invested and held for the use of the widow and children during her life or widowhood, it was the duty of the executor, instead of collecting the debts and reinvesting the amount, to consider the said debts as investments already made by the testator for the purposes of his will, and to let them stand accordingly.

We do not mean to say that there may not be cases in which an executor, instead of collecting a debt and investing the amount for the purposes of the will, might not very properly let it stand as an investment already made for said purposes. As for example, if in this case a debt had been well secured on real estate, the executor might well have permitted it to stand as an investment already made of so much of the estate.

And even if it had been secured by personal security *only, provided the security was undoubted, he might have been warranted in not collecting the debt by letting it stand as an investment already made.

But the debts due to the testator at the time of his death in this case were certainly none of them, except as will be hereinafter mentioned, such as might properly have been adopted and continued by the executor Howle, as investments already made for the purposes of his said testator's will. They were none of them secured on real estate, and for very few of them was there even any personal security. For the far largest of the debts, that of John D. Christian, the principal of which was $2,307.99, and interest to the 31st of December 1857 was $1,657.03, there was no security whatever, either real or personal. Surely the executor would not have been justifiable in letting that debt stand uncollected, and adopting it as an investment already made of so much of the testator's estate for the permanent purposes of the will. The rest of the debts due to the estate were very numerous, and were comparatively small in amount, and there was no security of any kind for scarcely any of them. Certainly none of them, except as aforesaid, would have been suitable as permanent investments under the will. None of them were regarded as permanent investments by the testator, nor by the executor, nor was the said debt of John D. Christian. Besides the fact that they were unsecured, is the fact that a large amount of interest was permitted to accumulate upon them, both by the testator and by the executor, which facts are inconsistent with the idea that they were intended or considered as permanent investments, either by the testator or the executor.

There was certainly nothing in the state of the currency before the war to make it improper or difficult *to collect the debts, and there was then ample time to collect them, and the money might then have been safely and permanently invested on real and personal security. It was the plain duty of the executor to pursue that course. He was acting not for himself but for the widow and infant children of his testator, who were incapable of acting for themselves. The law empowered and required him to act for them, and instructed him as to his duties. It will not do to say that if he had collected the money he would probably have held it until after the war, when it might have been converted into Confederate money and Confederate bonds, and ultimately have perished. It could have gone through that process only by the default and the breach of trust of the executor, who cannot therefore defend himself on that ground.

We are therefore of opinion, that the estate and sureties of Howle, are properly chargeable with the bonds referred to in the first assignment of error, and that the Circuit court did not err in regard to the matter of that assignment.

2. The next assignment of error is, that the court decreed against the appellant Lacy as one of the sureties of Howle as executor of Stamper, when he denied in his answer, all knowledge of having ever signed the bond as surety for Howle, and called for proof of the fact, and it was not proved.

The record of the courts of New Kent county, including the original bond of Howle as executor of Stamper seem to have been destroyed by fire; and therefore it could not be proved by primary evidence, to wit: the production of the bond, who were the sureties of the executor, and that R. T. Lacy was one of them. But we think that fact is conclusively proved by secondary and circumstantial evidence. Exhibit B

*filed with the bill, is an official copy made December 20th 1869, of an official copy of an order of New Kent County court made November 18th 1856, stating that "Robert Howle, one of the executors named in the last will and testament of James Stamper dec'd, appeared in court, and qualified thereto, and together with John D. Christian, Ira L. Bowles, John G. Crump, R. T. Lacy, Wm. C. Talley and Bat. D. Christian his sureties, who justified as to their sufficiency, entered into and acknowledged a bond in the penalty of $40,000, conditioned according to law, which bond is ordered to be recorded. And liberty is reserved Bat. D. Christian, the other executor, to qualify when he shall think fit."

Exhibit X filed with the answer of Wms. P. Richardson, is an official extract, made September 9th 1871, from the record of the list of fiduciaries in New Kent County court, which shows that R. T. Lacy was one of the sureties of the said executor.

Commissioner Barham having been required to ascertain and report whether the defendant R. T. Lacy was one of the securities of Robert Howle as aforesaid, accordingly reported the two exhibits aforesaid as the only evidence which was before him on the subject, and that it appeared from said evidence that said Lacy was one of the said securities. It does not appear that there was any exception to the said report in that respect.

There is nothing in the record to repel or weaken the effect of the evidence aforesaid; nothing tending to show that the defendant Lacy was not one of the securities; or that there was any other person of the same name in the county, who might have been such security instead of the defendant Lacy.

This litigation has been long pending. 54 and the amplest opportunity, *and the strongest inducement have existed for introducing countervailing testimony, if any had existed; and yet none has ever been offered.

We conclude, therefore, that the Circuit court did not err in regard to the matter of the second assignment of error.

3. The next assignment of error is, that "the decree is, upon its face, palpably erroneous, in that it decreed, in the first instance and uno flatu, against the administrator of Howle, and the securities of Howle, not only without an effort to make the balance appearing to be due from Howle, before resort should be made to the securities but actually refusing at the same time, to direct a sale of Howle's estate to pay the debt, and without ordering any account of Howle's estate by his executor."

Formerly it was determined in several cases, that before an action at law could be maintained against the sureties in the bond of an executor or administrator, there must be, not only a suit against the executor or administrator as such to establish the amount of the debt due from the testator or intestate, but there must be a second action against the executor or administrator personally, suggesting a devastavit, and a verdict and judgment rendered therein for the plaintiff. In consequence of these decisions, an act was passed authorizing a suit to be brought against the executor or administrator and his sureties, or either of them, upon their official bond, upon the return of nulla bona on the judgment against the executor or administrator as such, and without the necessity of any judgment in or action suggesting a devastavit. See 1 Rob. old Pr. pp. 55-57 in which the former law is thus laid down, the said act is set out, and the decisions aforesaid are referred to.

55 *But a suit in equity might always have been, as it now may be, brought by creditors or legatees against the executor or administrator and his sureties, for a discovery and account of assets, and for payment of debts and legacies; in which suit, there might always have been, as there now may be, a decree against the sureties. See 2 Rob. old Pr. pp. 78, and 112. and the cases there cited.

While, however, a court of law, in a proper case for an action in that court, will give a joint judgment against the executor or administrator and his sureties, on which a joint execution will issue, a court of equity will proceed according to its own peculiar principles of administering justice, and generally lay the burden first upon the principal, and subject the sureties only in the event that the decree against the principal is unavailing. In Dabney's adm'r & al. v. Smith's legatees, 5 Leigh 13, Tucker P., in an opinion concurred in by the other judges, Cabell and Carr, who sat with him in the case, said: "Such, I take it, is without question, the practice of the court, where such a measure can be adopted 'without any material delay or injury to the creditor;' 2 Rand. 400. And, if Buller Claiborne and Isham Dabney (the sheriff to whom an estate was committed for administration, and the deputy who actually administered it—the suit being brought by legatees of the decedent) had been alive at the date of the decree, it ought to have been entered against them, in the first instance. However, they being dead, it was entered very properly against their estates in the hands of their personal representatives; and on this decree a fieri facias has been returned, nulla bona testatoris. But it is contended, that the plaintiffs should then have proceeded to have the accounts of the administrators of Claiborne and Dabney *settled, in order to a decree against them personally, if a devastavit should be established. I think not. This would indeed be to impose too onerous terms on the creditor. He ought not to be delayed in his recovery until he has pursued the personal representatives of the principal to the utmost limit of litigation. The surety must be content with his right of subrogation, and take upon himself that pursuit, as the consequence of his having become sponsor for the principal. For a like reason I do not think there was any obligation on the creditor to pursue the heirs of Buller Claiborne," &c.

We think the principle of that case applies to and governs this, and that according to that principle there was no error in the decree which was made for the payment into bank of the balance due by the representatives and sureties of Howle, as executor of Stamper. Howle had long been dead when the suit was brought, and there could therefore be no execution against the assets of the testator in his hands. There could properly be none, and were not in fact any in the hands of his personal representative Richardson after his death, after which the assets of Stamper, left unadministered by Howle at his death, legally vested in Crump as administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of Stamper. The case of Dabney's adm'or v. Smith's legatees, is an express authority to show that before rendering a decree against the sureties of Howle there was no necessity for any further proceedings than were had in the case to establish a devastavit by him of the estate of his testator Stamper, and to fix a liability therefor on any estate of his, for which his administrator, Richardson, may be accountable.

The case of Aylett's ex'or v. King &c., 11 Leigh 486, *is not in conflict with the case of Dabney's adm'or &c. v. Smith's legatees, and certainly was not intended so to be.

In Aylett's ex'or v. King &c., Judge Allen distinguishes that case from Dabney's adm'or &c. v. Smith's legatees, the correctness of which he does not question; and Tucker, P., reaffirms much of what was said by him in that case, and says that upon a review of the case he thinks it was properly decided; and he then proceeds to distinguish the two cases, and concurs in the decision which was made in Aylett's ex'or v. King &c. Roberts v. Colvin, 3 Gratt. 358, was certainly not intended, and cannot have the effect of overruling Dabney's adm'or &c. v. Smith's legatees. It takes no notice of that case, is very brief, and was intended no doubt to rest on its own peculiar circumstances.

In the case now under consideration the testator died in 1856, and his estate has since been in the hands of three successive personal representatives. His principal and residuary legatees being his widow and three infant children, have, it seems, been most, or much of the time since, in extreme want and destitution, and been trying to recover what is due to them under the will, but thus far with little or no success, although it is manifest that a very large amount is due to them. They brought their first suit to recover it some time in 1863, and prosecuted the suit until the papers therein were destroyed by fire at the close of the war in April 1865. They brought this suit as soon as they could do so after the war, and during the next year 1866, and seem to have actively prosecuted it ever since. There have been many decrees for accounts, and many reports made under such decrees, and many exceptions taken to such reports, and many decisions made upon said exceptions, until the decree

*was made in 1872, from which this appeal was obtained. By that decree, the amounts due to the plaintiffs from the different personal representatives of the testator were ascertained, and the said amounts were directed to be paid into bank by parties respectively liable therefor. And it is objected in this court, that before there should have been any such decree against the sureties of Howle as executor of Stamper, there should have been further proceedings and further litigation in the court below, to fix some liability for a devastavit on the personal representatives of Howle, and on the real estate of Howle, as being primarily liable for the said amounts. Surely there could not be a stronger case than this for the application of much of what was said by Tucker, P., in the two cases before referred to. To send these plaintiffs back to the court below, to engage in renewed litigation under the circumstances, "would, indeed, be to impose too onerous terms on" them. They ought not to be delayed in their recovery until they have "pursued the personal representatives of the principal to the utmost limit of litigation. The surety must be content with his right of subrogation, and take upon himself that pursuit as the consequence of his having become sponsor for the principal." It was expressly held in that case that it was not necessary to pursue the heirs of the personal representative in exoneration of his sureties, and that the latter may properly be turned over to their right of subrogation in regard to the said heirs. We do not mean to decide that in no case will a creditor or legatee be compelled to exhaust his remedy against the personal representative and heirs of the executor before resorting to the sureties, or to lay down any general rule on the subject, but merely to say that there are cases in which he will not be so required (as authorities *before cited plainly show), and this is one of them.

But in this case the decree appealed from was not final, but merely interlocutory. The case is still pending in the court below, where perfect justice can yet be done; either at the suit of the plaintiffs, or by subrogation at the suit of the sureties, who may file their cross-bill, if necessary, and obtain, in that or some other way, all the relief to which they are entitled. After what has been done, and the length of time employed, and labor and money expended, in litigation; and after ascertaining what was unquestionably due by the representatives and sureties of Howle as executor of Stamper to the plaintiff, it was meet and right that there should be a decree for that amount, and for its payment into bank, by parties undoubtedly liable therefor; leaving ulterior liabilities over, if any, to be adjusted between the parties inter se, as may be equitable. It was not expected or intended, that each of the parties decreed against would pay into bank the whole amount of the decree. The chief object of the decree was to ascertain and settle the amount due to the plaintiffs. No execution can issue on the decree without further order; certainly there cannot be a joint execution against the said personal representatives and sureties. The decree against the former is de bonis testatoris, that against the latter de bonis propriis. All or any of both classes, or either, have a right to make payment into bank, and thus relieve themselves from liability, and after doing so to assert any liability over to them to which they may be entitled. Beyond all question, the estate of the principal debtor, if any, will be sufficient to pay but a small portion comparatively, of what is due to the plaintiffs. The larger portion of it—perhaps at least four-fifths—will have to be paid by the sureties, ultimately if not directly:

60 *and yet they do not offer to pay a dollar into bank, but appeal from the whole decree. If they had made a reasonable payment into bank, there can be no question but that the plaintiffs would have been willing to wait for the balance until an opportunity was afforded the sureties to proceed against parties supposed to be primarily liable; or the court would, even without such consent, have afforded such opportunity. The sureties, to the extent of any payment they may make in discharge of their liability, will of course be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the plaintiffs, against those who are primarily liable; and even before making such payment, they are entitled, by a proceeding quia timet, to compel those parties to account for and pay any money for which they may be liable, in exoneration of the sureties. In fact, so far as parties and subjects primarily liable for the claim are concerned, the sureties have heretofore, in effect, been coplaintiffs with the legatees in the prosecution of this suit, and will no doubt hereafter continue to be so, until the object of the suit shall have been, as far as possible, fully attained.

We are therefore of opinion that the Circuit court did not err in regard to the matter of the third assignment of error.

4. The next assignment of error is, that the decree is against that party for the whole amount, without any provision that if it be paid by one it shall not be paid by the other.

This has already perhaps been sufficiently answered. All that was necessary to be done to satisfy the decree was the payment of the amount into bank, which could be done by all, or any, or either of the parties directed to make such payment. When that was done by any, or either, it

61 was done as to all, so far as the *plaintiffs were concerned, although the parties or party making such payment might have recourse over against other parties. We think the court did not err in omitting to make such a provision as is referred to in this assignment of error.

5. The next and last assignment of error in the petition is, that no refunding bond is required.

The decree was interlocutory and not final. The money was not decreed to be paid to the legatees but into bank, where it will be still liable to creditors, and more accessible to them than it would be in the hands of the debtors. Such provision as may be proper in regard to refunding bonds may be made by decree in the cause hereafter.

But besides the assignment of error contained in the petition, other objections were made to the decree in the brief and argument of the counsel of the appellant Lacy, which objections will now be noticed:

1. The first of these objections is, that Howle paid $186.97 to Pollard & Frayser for necessities for Mrs. Stamper and her children, and $62.50 for repairs to a mill on her account, which payments ought to have been allowed, but were disallowed by the commissioner as credits to Howle in the settlements of his account as executor of Stamper.

As to the item of $62.50, it appears that it has already in fact been allowed to the said Howle as a credit in his account. It constitutes an item in the account of Howle against Mrs. Stamper, marked F, and referred to in the answer of Wms. P. Richardson; the said item being: "1859, July 19—To cash paid Mr. Wilcox for repairs to mill $62.50;" and it corresponds precisely in amount, date, names, &c., with the receipt referred to in the defendant's thirty-fourth 62 exception to the commissioner's report, on which exception the *said first objection is in part based. The said account of Howle, amounting to $2,139, constitutes a part of the sum of $2,830, allowed to said Howle in the decree appealed from as amount of payments and advances made by him to Mrs. Stamper under the will of her husband, the said James Stamper. As to the said sum of $62.50, therefore, the objection must be overruled.

As to the item of $186.97, it does not appear that it has already been allowed as a credit to Howle, though it may, possibly, have been included in the item of $300 charged in the account of payments and advances aforesaid as "amount paid Martha J. Stamper by Robert Howle, ex'or of James Stamper dec'd, 30th June, 1860." To be sure that date does not correspond with the date of the receipt to Howle for the $186.97, which is September 2d 1859. But it is not probable that so large an item would have been forgotten by the parties in the settlement between them which appears to have been on the 18th June 1860, which is the date of the receipt for the $300. It is possible, however, that the said item of $186.97 may have been overlooked and never allowed as a credit to Howle in the said account of payments and advances, as it ought to have been; and therefore it seems to be proper that there should be an enquiry by a commissioner on the subject, in order that such further action may be had in regard to it as justice may require.

2. The next of these objections is, that "it is not yet ascertained that the bonds, or at least many of them, delivered up by the administrator of the executor of Howle to Stamper's administrator d. b. n. are not good, either in whole or in part. They have not been prosecuted to judgment and execution."

63 These and all other matters connected with the estate of Stamper were long the subjects of enquiry and *settlement before a commissioner, who reported upon the evidence before him which of the bonds and other evidences of debt due to Stamper's estate were solvent and which insolvent, or supposed to be so, when they came to the hands of Crump as administrator d. b. n., or had since become so; and the fullest notice was given by the commissioner of his action in the premises to all parties concerned, and the amplest opportunity afforded them to appear before him and exhibit such evidence as they thought proper; and yet no attempt was made by any of them to show that his action was wrong in regard to the question of the solvency or insolvency of the said debts. The presumption therefore is, that the report of the commissioner on that subject is right, and the decree appealed from was properly rendered accordingly. If, however, any of the said debts are still in fact solvent, they have not been released by the action of the court, but their payment may be enforced at the instance of any party concerned, who will be aided by the court in such enforcement. This objection therefore must be overruled.

3. The next of these objections is, that "the court held that Stamper's executor should not have credit for his payment of the debts due by Stamper, as one of the firm of Stamper & Williams, unless it should appear that Williams the surviving partner was insolvent. And it appearing the latter was not insolvent, the executor was denied credit for his payments—which were large—of the debts of Stamper as one of the firm of Stamper & Williams."

The firm closed their business in September or October 1850, and Stamper, it seems, was to wind up the partnership, and took charge of the bonds and accounts for collection. This matter

64 remained unsettled *at Stamper's death, in 1856, after which Howle, his executor, tendered the bonds and accounts due Stamper & Williams which were in Stamper's hands to Williams as surviving partner; but at Williams' request, and as Stamper's estate was entitled to one-half the amount, Howle agreed to retain and collect them, and was to be paid therefor by the firm. The money received and paid by Howle on account of this partnership, was not introduced into the account of Howle as executor of Stamper, and no account has ever been taken to show whether Howle was a debtor or creditor in regard to that transaction. The commissioner and court below seem to have regarded this transaction as an agency of Howle for the firm of Stamper & Williams, or rather for Williams as surviving partner, and as therefore not properly belonging to the account of Howle as executor of Stamper. This seems to be a correct view of the case, and at all events it is now too late to attempt to adjust this stale transaction of account. The partnership ended in 1850. Stamper might have had a settlement in his lifetime, which ended in 1856. His executor Howle might have had a settlement in his lifetime, which ended in 1862. It is too late now to have a settlement; and it was too late in 1872, when the decree appealed from was rendered. This objection therefore must be overruled.

4. The fourth and last of these objections is, that "if the sum found chargeable to the executor Howle be so chargeable, he is entitled to an abatement of interest on the same from the 17th of April 1861 to the 10th of April 1865. Code of 1873, ch. 173, § 14, page 1120."

The provision of the Code here referred to is as follows: "That in all suits for the recovery of money, founded on contracts, express or implied, or on causes 65 *of action, or on liabilities which were entered into or existed, or where the original consideration accrued prior to the 10th day of April 1865, it shall be lawful for the court or jury by whom the suit may be tried, to remit the interest upon the original debt found to be due or any part thereof, for the period commencing on the 17th day of April 1861, and ending on the 10th day of April 1865, or for any portion of said period," &c.

This question was not raised in the court below; nor even in the petition for an appeal; but for the first time on argument before this court. Still, a majority of the court is of opinion that it was not raised too late; and that, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, there ought to be an abatement of interest during the period aforesaid. The condition of things in the county of New Kent, and the rest of the peninsula during the war, was such as to render it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to make money productive of any interest during that period; and the majority of the court consider that it would be too harsh, to subject a fiduciary residing in that locality during that period, and his sureties, to the payment, not only of the principal, but also of the interest during that period, of a debt not collected by him, but lost by his default in not collecting it. The majority of the court, therefore, without intending to lay down any general rule as to the construction and effect of the act aforesaid, is of opinion that in this case and all others precisely like it, there ought to be an abatement of interest as aforesaid. The objection therefore is sustained.

Having considered and disposed of all the questions arising in the case of Lacy v.

66 Stamper &c., we will now take up the case of Crump v. Stamper &c. *In the petition for an appeal in that case there are two assignments of error, which we will notice in their order.

1. The first assignment of error by this petitioner in the decree complained of (in addition to the errors assigned in the petition of the appellant Lacy, of which this petitioner claims the benefit so far as they may affect his rights) is "that it charges this petitioner with the bond of B. P. Crump and John G. Crump, amounting to $497.80 of principal, and $543.48 of interest, at the date of the commissioner's report—December 31st, 1866; and the bond of J. A. Clayton and John D. Christian, amounting to $369.55 of principal, and $129.47 of interest at same date."

Two very striking facts in regard to this fiduciary are prominently presented on the face of this record: first, his general diligence in endeavoring to collect the debts due to his testator's estate; and, secondly, the extraordinary difficulties with which he had to contend in making the effort to collect. He qualified as executor in the midst of the war—in December 1862. His testator lived and died in the county of New Kent; which was in the hands of the public enemy, or daily liable to be overrun and plundered by them, from the time of his qualification until the end of the war. It does not appear that there was more than one session of any court in that county during that period, and that was a session of the Circuit court.

This fiduciary, directly after qualifying as such, consulted counsel, and acted in accordance with his advice; and accordingly brought suits immediately for the recovery of all debts due to the estate which were considered solvent, and which were believed 67 to have prosecuted these *suits with all the diligence which he could use, consistently with the obstruction which the extraordinary state of the times interposed in his way, during the whole period of his administration. On that subject the testimony of Wms. P. Richardson, cross examined by A. R. Courtney, counsel for L. C. Crump, was as follows:

1st question by A. R. Courtney. Was the state of public business in the county of New Kent, in the year 1862, when the Federal army, under General McClellan, passed through said county, to the end of the war, such as to permit of the transaction of business in the courts?

Answer. I think not. Agitation, excitement and confusion prevailed to such an extent, that no public business could be prudently or discreetly attended to.

2d question by same. Were any regular courts held in this county during the interval aforesaid?

Answer. I think that Judge Gregory undertook to hold court in 1863, but the courts were so irregular and uncertain that no business could be transacted with any satisfaction. During that interval raids were constantly being made by the enemy into this section, and persons did not know whether courts would be held or not.

3d question by same. Would you have brought suit in this county during the period aforesaid upon any claim due to you personally?

Answer. I would not have thought of it.

4th question by same. Do you know anything of the conduct of Dr. L. C. Crump, as administrator of the estate of James Stamper, deceased, in collecting and securing the assets during the period aforesaid?

Answer. I know, of my own knowledge, that Dr. Crump was very prompt in 68 getting me to turn over to *him the papers of James Stamper, deceased. I think he was more diligent than most any other person would have been under the circumstances."

With this strong evidence of extraordinary diligence in the discharge of his fiduciary duties generally, the strong presumption is that he used due diligence in the discharge of all of them; and strong evidence to the contrary ought to be required to counteract this presumption in any particular case.

We have seen that this fiduciary has been charged by the decree of the court below with two debts, each of quite a large amount, both of principal and interest, as having been lost by his neglect, viz: the debts of B. P. Crump and John G. Crump, and of J. A. Clayton and John D. Christian. Were they in fact lost by his neglect? and is he accountable for them? We think not, and now let us enquire as to each of them; and 1st, as to the debt of the Crumps. No action was brought to recover this debt during the war, because the administrator, Crump, knew that it was disputed, was informed and believed that nothing was due upon it, and did not believe that a trial could be obtained during the war of any suit in which there would be a contest. Bat. D. Christian being enquired of as to the indebtedness of the estate of Stamper to John G. and B. P. Crump, answered thus: "I have heard Bev. P. Crump and Robert Howle each say that James Stamper, as the agent of the said B. R. and J. G. Crump, had sold a negro man belonging to the estate of Benedict Crump, deceased, the brother of the said J. G. and B. P. Crump, and that he was indebted to the said J. G. and B. P. Crump on that account. I think that the negro sold by Stamper was worth about $500." L. C. Crump testified that

John G. Crump died in May 1860. And 69 being asked "Did you think, *while acting as administrator of James Stamper, that anything was due on the bond of J. G. and B. P. Crump, and if not what reason had you for so thinking?" answered "I did not, upon the grounds that B. P. Crump stated to me that there was not a cent due from him or them to the estate of James Stamper, but, upon the contrary, that Stamper's estate was indebted to them on account of the sale of a negro, which was sold by Stamper, as the agent for the said John G. and B. P. Crump; and, furthermore, Robert Howle, the first representative of James Stamper, was also the representative of John G. Crump, and I presume that he would have paid the said bond if anything was due. I, however, brought suit against B. P. Crump on these bonds immediately after the war, because advised by my counsel that it was safe to do so; and Bev. P. Crump did not defend the suit, because he had conveyed his property before the trial of the suit; and if I had sued upon the bond during the war I could not have gotten judgment." We think that L. C. Crump is not liable for this debt.

2dly, as to the debt of J. A. Clayton and John D. Christian. This debt was perfectly solvent at the commencement of the war. Each of the debtors had ample estate, real and personal, for its payment. Clayton lived in Surry, and Christian in New Kent counties, on different sides of the James river. Clayton was examined as a witness in the case, and being asked by the counsel for L. C. Crump "Was there any arrangement between you and John D. Christian, your co-obligor in the bond before mentioned, as to which of you should pay it?" answered: "The last time I was in the county I paid to Robert Howle, the executor of James Stamper, $200 in part of said bond, and at that time there was an agreement between 70 *John D. Christian and myself that he was to pay the balance due upon said bond. I apprised Robert Howle of the agreement made by John D. Christian and myself, and he said that it was all right. John D. Christian was largely indebted to me at the time of said arrangement, and at the time of his death." No action was brought upon this bond during the war against both or either of the obligors. There was the same, or nearly the same difficulty in suing, and from the same cause in Surry as in New Kent county, and there was no postal, and little other communication between the two counties during that period. Had Christian been sued upon the bond, judgment would probably not have been recovered, as judgment was not recovered on his other bonds on which he was sued until after he became insolvent, he having set up a claim of set-off to the bonds, which would no doubt have been set up, and with the same effect to the said bond of Clayton and Christian. We think that L. C. Crump is not liable for this debt. He had no apparent motive but to do his duty both in regard to this and the before mentioned debt, and he seems to have acted in regard to both in the most perfect good faith.

2. The 2d and only other assignment of error in the petition of L. C. Crump is, that the decree appealed from "requires him to deposit in bank to the credit of this cause the sum of $1,489.16, amount of the two bonds with which he is charged as hereinbefore stated, the court reserving for future decision the question whether the payments made by him to Martha J. Stamper shall be deducted therefrom on account of her share in the estate of James Stamper dec'd."

Being of opinion that L. C. Crump is not chargeable with the amount of either 71 of the said two bonds, *the foundation of the 2d assignment of error is taken away, and it is therefore unnecessary to consider it.

In regard to the questions discussed in the brief of the counsel for L. C. Crump in addition to those presented by the petition of appeal, they do not now arise, or will be disposed of by the court below, after the case goes back to it.

But L. C. Crump not being chargeable with the amount of the said two bonds of B. P. and John G. Crump, and J. A. Clayton and John D. Christian, a question now arises whether it does not result therefrom that Howle and his sureties as executor of Stamper are chargeable with the said amount?

We are of opinion that they are not, and that the same or nearly the same reasons which exempt L. C. Crump also exempt them from such liability.

In regard to the bond of the Crumps, it appears that there was probably nothing due thereon, and that probably nothing would have been recovered by Howle if he had brought suit thereon. At all events while it might have been safer and better for Howle to have brought such a suit though at the risk of subjecting the estate to the loss of costs, yet we think it would be too harsh under the circumstances to subject him and his sureties to the payment of the debt on the ground of its having been lost by his neglect, especially as he seems to have acted with perfect good faith in the matter.

In regard to the bond of Clayton and Christian it was a perfectly good debt at the death of Stamper and continued to be so until the end of the war, by the disastrous effects of which, Clayton the principal debtor, if not Christian the surety also was totally ruined. This debt was so good and so secure when it came to the hands of Howle as executor that he 72 *would have been justifiable in not calling it in, but letting it stand as an investment already made for the benefit of those who were entitled to the profits of the estate under the will of the testator. We therefore think in this case also that it would be too harsh under the circumstances, to subject Howle and his sureties to the payment of this debt, on the ground of its having been lost by his neglect, especially as he seems to have acted with perfectly good faith in the matter.

It does not appear from the record whether payment has ever been made of the three hundred dollars directed, by decree made in this cause on the 17th day of November 1868 to be paid by Wms. P. Richardson administrator of Robert Howle to Martha J. Stamper, or of the like sum of three hundred dollars directed by decree made in this cause on the 15th day of November 1869, to be paid in like manner. The presumption is that these payments have been made; and if so, credit ought of course to be given therefor, on the debt due by the estate of Howle to the estate of Stamper. At least there ought to be an enquiry on the subject by a commissioner, in order to such further action by the court as may appear to be proper.

The result of the foregoing opinion is, that the decree appealed from must be affirmed in part and reversed in part according as it is consistent, or in conflict, with the said opinion; with costs to the appellants respectively; but to be paid out of the estate of Stamper; and as to the costs of the appellant Lacy, to be credited on, and deducted from, the debt due by Howle and his sureties to the estate of Stamper. And the case ought to be remanded to the court below, in order that an enquiry may 73 be made *by a commissioner of the court in regard to the sum of $186.97, which appears to have been paid by Howle to Pollard and Frayser for necessities for Mrs. Stamper and her children, and for which it is charged no credit has been given to the estate of Howle. Also an account may be taken by said commissioner of the interest which accrued on the debt due by Howle as executor of Stamper during the period commencing on the 17th day of April 1861, and ending on the 10th day of April 1865, in order that there may be an abatement of the amount of said interest according to the foregoing opinion. Also an enquiry may be made by said commissioner in regard to the payment of said two sums of $300 each, under the said decrees of the 17th day of November 1868 and the 15th day of November 1869; and that further proceedings may be had to a final decree, in conformity with the foregoing opinion.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing, and filed with the record, that the sum of one hundred and eighty-six dollars and ninety-seven cents, paid by Robert Howle, executor of James Stamper, deceased, on the 2d day of September 1859, to Pollard and Frayser for necessities bought of them for Mrs. Martha J. Stamper and her children, ought to have been, if it was not, deducted from the interest on the balance due by said Howle, as executor of said Stamper. It may possibly have been included in the sum of two thousand eight hundred and thirty-one dollars deducted, according to the said decree, from the said interest, for payments and advances made by said Howle to Martha J. Stamper. If so, that matter is all right; but, if not so, the said decree is erroneous in that respect.

74 *The court is further of opinion that there ought to have been an abatement of interest on the balance of principal due from the estate of Robert Howle to the estate of James Stamper, for the period commencing on the 11th day of April 1861, and ending on the 10th day of April 1865; and no such abatement having been made by the said decree, it is erroneous in that respect.

It does not appear from the record whether payment has ever been made of the three hundred dollars directed by decree rendered in this cause on the 17th day of November 1868, to be paid by Wms. P. Richardson, administrator of Robert Howle to Martha J. Stamper, or of the like sum of three hundred dollars, directed by decree rendered in this cause on the 15th day of November 1869, to be paid in like manner. The presumption is, that these payments have been made, and if so, credit ought, of course, to be given therefor on the interest of the debt due by the estate of Howle to the estate of Stamper, and there ought to be an enquiry on the subject by a commissioner, in order to such further action of the court as may be proper.

The court is further of opinion that the Circuit court erred in charging Leonard C. Crump, administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed of James Stamper, deceased, with the bond of B. P. Crump and John G. Crump, amounting to $497.89 of principal, and $543.48 of interest, at the date of the commissioner's report, December 31st, 1866, and the bond of J. A. Clayton and John D. Christian, amounting to $369.55 of principal, and $129.47 of interest, at the same date; and in ordering the said L. C. Crump to deposit in the State Bank of Virginia at Richmond, to the credit of this cause and subject to the order of the said 75 court, *the sum of fourteen hundred and eighty-nine dollars, with legal interest on six hundred and thirty dollars and forty cents, from the 31st of December 1870 until so deposited.

The court is further of opinion that so much of the decree appealed from, as is in conflict with the foregoing opinion, is erroneous, and that there is no error in the residue of the said decree. Therefore it is decreed and ordered that so much of the said decree as is above declared to be erroneous, be reversed and annulled, and the residue thereof affirmed; and that the appellees, Martha J. Stamper, and her children, James Stamper, John Stamper, and Catherine N. Stamper, pay to the appellant, Richmond T. Lacy, his costs by him expended in the prosecution of his appeal aforesaid here, for which said costs no execution is to be issued, but the same are to be credited on and deducted from the interest on the debt due by Howle and his sureties to the estate of said Stamper.

And it is further decreed and ordered that this cause be remanded to the said Circuit court in order that an enquiry may be made by a commissioner of the court in regard to the sum of $186.97 as aforesaid: and also that an account may be taken by said commissioner of the interest which accrued on the debt due by Howle, as executor of Stamper, during the period commencing on the 17th day of April 1861, and ending on the 10th day of April 1865; and also that an enquiry may be made by said commissioner in regard to the payment of said two sums of $300 each, under the said decrees of the 17th day of November 1868, and the 15th day of November 1869; and that further proceedings may be had to a final decree in conformity with the foregoing opinion.

No execution can properly be issued 76 upon the decree *appealed from without a further order of court for that purpose; and if it shall appear to the court that in a reasonable time payment of any portion of the balance due by the estate and sureties of Howle to Stamper's estate can be recovered of the estate of Howle in any proceeding which may be instituted and carried on in this suit, by the sureties of Howle or their representatives, or any of them, enforcement, by execution or otherwise, of so much of the said decree as may not exceed the probable amount of such portion, may be delayed by the court for a reasonable time to afford an opportunity for such a recovery.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said Circuit court of New Kent county.

Decree affirmed in part and reversed in part.

77 *Stevenson v. Wallace.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Easements*—Lateral Support—Land.†—Every person has a natural right, ex jure naturæ, to support to his land from the adjacent and subjacent soil.
2. Same—Same—Same.—This natural right to support exists in respect of land only, and not in respect of buildings; but the former right remains though houses are built on the land.
3. Same—Same—Buildings.—But a right to support for buildings may be acquired; and when so acquired it is an easement.
4. Same—Same—Same—Grant.‡—An easement for support of a building is acquired by grant, which may be express, implied or presumed. And when acquired it gives the same right of support in respect of the buildings that there was ex jure naturæ in respect of the land.
5. Same—Same—Same—Same—Prescription—Reservation.§—The grant of such an easement will be presumed from twenty years enjoyment; and will be implied, in the absence of express stipulations, in every case where the owner of adjoining houses or of houses and lands severs the property by sale. Rights of support in such cases are mutually granted and reserved between the original owner and first grantee, and the second grantee succeeds to the owner's reserved rights.

*Easements—Definition.—In Tardy v. Creasy, 81 Va. 556, the court cited the principal case for the following definition: "We may define an easement to be 'a privilege without profit, which the owner of one tenement has a right to enjoy in respect of that tenement in or over the tenement of another person, by reason whereof the latter is obliged to suffer, or refrain from doing something on his own tenement for the advantage of the former.'"

†Same—Lateral Support—Land.—That the right of support for land arises ex jure naturæ, see 3 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 25; Tunstall v. Christian, 80 Va. 3; Salamone v. Kelley, 80 Va. 86; Stearns v. City of Richmond, 88 Va. 992, 14 S. E. Rep. 847.

‡Same—Same—Buildings—Grant—Implied.—The right of lateral support for buildings can only be acquired by grant. 3 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 26; Tunstall v. Christian, 80 Va. 4. That such an easement may arise by implied as well as express grant, see Tunstall v. Christian, 80 Va. 7; Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 299; Scott v. Beutel, 23 Gratt. 1; Hardy v. McCullough, 23 Gratt. 251; Burwell v. Hobson, 12 Gratt. 322.

§Same—Same—Same—Same—Prescription.—The English authorities hold that the right of lateral support for buildings may be acquired by prescription. 3 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 25, citing the principal case. The weight of American authority, however, is that such a right cannot be obtained by prescription. See the opinion of PRESIDENT LEWIS in the important case of Tunstall v. Christian, 80 Va. on page 5, practically overruling the doctrine of the principal case, where, speaking of this prescriptive right to support for

6. Same—Same—Same—Same—Reservation.—M owns two adjoining lots in R. He conveys one with a house on it to R and reserves in the deed the right to join the two end walls of the house free of costs. M retained the right, which passed with the land to those who derive title under him, to join his building to that conveyed to R, by an independent wall along side of it, or to make it a part of his building by joining only the end walls: and the privilege of joining R's building in the mode indicated in the reservation, did not extinguish or impair his implied reservation of support.

7. Same—Same—Same—Loss of Building by Fire—Right of Support Not Extinguished.—If S holding title to the second lot had a building upon it, which was supported by the land and building conveyed to R for twenty years or more with the knowledge of the owner thereof, prior to a fire

78 *which destroyed both buildings, a grant of the easement of support will be presumed: and said easement was not lost or extinguished by the destruction of S's building, but adhered to the building S erected on its ruins; and any right of support which S derived from the reservation in the deed to R, express or implied, was not extinguished by the destruction of the old building, but survived and adhered to the new one.

8. Same—Same—Same—Care in Removing.—The mere fact of contiguity of buildings imposes an obligation upon the owners, to use due care and skill in removing the one building, not to damage the other, even though no right to support has been acquired.

9. Same—Same—Same—Same—Liability.—But if in such case S is entitled to the support of her building by the foundation wall and land of W, claiming under R, W cannot withdraw the support without being liable in damages for the injury which occurs to S thereby.

10. Same—Same—Same.—In such a case S is not bound to protect her building by providing other supports, in place of the supports which W is removing, though she may have had notice that W was removing the supports.

11. Same—Same—Same.—If the house of S was so badly constructed and its foundation and materials were so defective that the fall could not have been arrested by timely precautions when W was excavating upon his lot in order to build upon it, these facts would not constitute a bar to the action of S against W, so as to defeat it; but they would be proper to be considered by the jury upon the question of damages.

12. Same—Same—Same.—Though W contracted with an experienced and competent excavator, of good standing in his business, to make the excavations upon his own lot, and gave notice thereof to S in time to enable her to adopt precautions for the protection of her adjoining building, W is still liable for any damage that may have resulted to S's building in consequence of negligence or unskill-buildings, he said: "It is true that in some of the American cases are to be found dicta of the judges in favor of the doctrine. And in Stevenson v. Wallace, 27 Gratt. supra, there are expressions in the opinion of the court formed on certain English cases to the same effect. But the decision of the question was not necessarily involved, inasmuch as the right asserted in that case was held to be clearly implied from the terms of a deed by a common predecessor in title of the parties."

fulness in the making of said excavation by reason of leaving insufficient support to S's premises.

13. Practice—Instructions—Incorrectness—Saving Exceptions.*—If upon a trial instructions are given to the jury, to which no exception is taken, and after verdict a motion is made for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection as well as that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, it is the duty of the court of trial to consider the correctness of the instructions, and if of opinion that they are not correct, and were calculated to mislead the jury, to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial; and the appellate court will supervise his actions in this respect.

79 *This was an action of trespass on the case in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, brought in April 1872, by L. T. Stevenson against Charles M. Wallace, to recover damages for injury to the plaintiff's house by excavation by the defendant made on his adjoining lot. On the trial the judge gave several instructions to the jury, to which the plaintiff did not except; and there was a verdict and judgment for the defendant.

The instructions are as follows:

"1. The jury are instructed, that the plaintiff was not entitled to demand of the defendant the lateral support of his land for her adjoining building to any extent which deprived him of the right to excavate thereon for the purpose of building, or imposed upon him liability for damages consequent upon the prudent and careful exercise of that right.

"2. But the jury are further instructed, that it was the duty of the defendant before proceeding to make his excavation and endanger the safety of the plaintiff's building, to give her timely notice to enable her to adopt suitable precautions for the protection of her property; and that if he failed to do so, he was guilty of negligence, and is liable to the plaintiff for such damages as were consequent upon the excavation, and which the plaintiff could not after knowledge of the danger avert by prompt and diligent action.

"3. If the jury believe from the evidence, that the building of the plaintiff was so badly constructed, and its foundation and materials so defective, that the fall could not have been averted by timely precautions when the excavation was made by the defendant, or that the plaintiff, or her agents, after they had knowledge of the necessity, could have then, by prompt and provident action, protected the building, and

80 neglected *to do so, or that they prevented the defendant from doing so by refusing to allow him to build a foundation on that part of his wall occupied by the plaintiff, or by retaining illegal possession and occupancy of a part of his rear wall, in either event the plaintiff cannot recover in this action.

"4. The court instructs the jury, that if they believe from the evidence that the defendant contracted with an experienced and competent excavator, of good standing in his business, to make the excavations in the declaration mentioned upon the defendant's own lot, and gave notice thereof to the plaintiff in time to enable her to adopt precautions for the protection of her adjoining building, or if she had such knowledge in such time, the defendant is not liable for any damage which may have resulted to the plaintiff's premises in consequence of negligence or unskillfulness, if any, in the making of said excavation by reason of leaving insufficient support to the plaintiff's premises or otherwise."

*Instructions—Saving Exceptions.—See general note on "Instructions" appended to Womack v. Circle, 29 Gratt. 192; also Danville Bank v. Waddill, 31 Gratt. 469, and note; Peery v. Peery, 26 Gratt. 320, and note.

At the same term the plaintiff moved the court to set aside the judgment and verdict and grant her a new trial, on the grounds that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and that the court had misdirected the jury; and the court set aside the judgment; and not being advised of its judgment to be given on the motion to set aside the verdict, time was taken to consider thereof until the next term.

At the next term of the court, the court overruled the motion for a new trial; and the plaintiff excepted; and the evidence being in some respects contradictory the court declined to certify the facts proved, but certified the evidence.

By deed bearing date the 1st of May 1817, Joseph Marx and wife conveyed to 81 Thomas Richardson a lot *on Thirteenth street, between Main and Cary streets, in the city of Richmond, with a brick tenement thereon; and Marx reserved to himself the right of joining the two end walls of said tenement free of cost. This is the lot owned by the defendant Wallace.

By another deed, bearing date the 8th of July 1817, Joseph Marx and wife conveyed to Mary Stevenson a lot on Thirteenth street, adjoining the lot he had conveyed to Richardson; and further conveyed to her the privilege of joining the end walls of the brick tenement conveyed to Richardson free of cost.

Buildings were standing on both these lots on the 3rd of April 1865, when they were consumed in the great fire of that day. In the year 1866 plaintiff's lot was leased to one Bauman, for the term of five years, who bound himself to erect a building thereon; and Bauman did erect the building, and at the end of his lease he rented the premises for six months; and during this period the plaintiff's building fell. It appeared in evidence, that in building, Bauman had built the main building upon a new foundation close against the foundation wall of the old building on the defendant's lot, which was standing thereon at the time Marx conveyed to Richardson, and had been burnt in 1865, but from the end of the house had occupied the wall of the defendant as a support for a kitchen in the rear.

It was further shown in evidence that the defendant in the fall of 1872, proposing to build upon his lot, contracted with a mechanic in writing as follows: "I propose to clean out the cellar on 13th street, which you spoke to me about to the depth of nine feet, below the offset on the wall adjoining, for one hundred *and forty-four dollars, and clean and hack the bricks for sixty cents per thousand.

W. T. Ford."

to make excavation for the foundation of his building; and introduced testimony tending to show that the mechanic he employed was an experienced and competent excavator of good standing in his business. The excavation was completed some time in the month of January, 1872, to a depth of three feet below the old foundation, which was deeper than the foundation of plaintiff's house; that a margin of a foot at the top and a foot and a half at the bottom was left between plaintiff's building and the excavation. It did not appear that the defendant gave any notice to the plaintiff or her agents of his proposed excavation, and no apprehension of danger seems to have been entertained until February 12th, 1872, when the tenant of plaintiff called attention of her agent to the matter; but it did appear that at a sale of the property on December 14th, 1871, after the excavation was complete to the depth of two and a half feet below the old foundation, the defendant had called attention of plaintiff's counsel, who was then present, to the fact that the kitchen of plaintiff's lot was built upon his wall and interfered with his proposed building; *and that some negotiation was had between them with regard to the removal of the kitchen, but that the plaintiff's counsel did not agree to remove the wall. After the 12th of February, 1872, the plaintiff's counsel communicated with the defendant the apprehensions entertained about the security of her house, and required him to take measures for its security. This he refused to do; and nothing was done until March 16th 1872, when the plaintiff's agents were ordered by the chief of the police of the city of Richmond, to whom the tenant had made complaint, to protect the building. And thereupon the plaintiff's agent employed an experienced bricklayer to proceed to underpin and protect the building, addressing the following letter to the defendant:

"Richmond, Va., March 18, 1872.

Dear Sir:

We separated on Saturday with the understanding that I should inform you what action Mrs. Stevenson's agents should finally determine on in view of your refusal, then made known, to underpin or protect her house by building, except upon conditions with which she could not comply, as to allowing you to take down the old wall in the rear, &c. I write to say that they have directed a builder to underpin the main building, and in accordance with the theory of your liability to protect the house frequently expressed by me, in conversation between us, that she will look to you for reimbursement to the amount of expense thereby necessarily incurred, when the work has been done, which it shall be upon the most reasonable terms attainable. I will let you know the amount, and if you are not willing to admit the claim, will be willing to carry out the spirit of our *conference as to referring the subject to some amicable tribunal for adjustment.

In haste, I am very resp'y and truly,
Jas. N. Dunlop."

C. M. Wallace, Esq., present.

During the progress of the work by the workmen employed by the plaintiff, the building fell. There was conflicting evidence before the jury as to the manner in which the work was performed—some witnesses testifying that it was done in the most prudent and judicious manner, and others testifying to the contrary. There was also testimony tending to prove that the building had been so much damaged by the excavation before the effort to protect it was made, that it was then beyond the hope of successful protection; and there was conflicting evidence as to whether by prompt and provident action, on the 12th of February, 1872, the building could have been saved. There was also evidence tending to show that the building had been originally constructed of very indifferent material, and carelessly and imprudently built upon an insufficient and insecure foundation. There was also evidence tending to prove that, but for the excavation in defendant's lot, the building of plaintiff would have stood an indefinite length of time. There was also conflicting evidence as to the manner in which the excavation had been performed: some witnesses testifying that the excavation had been and others that it had not been skillfully and prudently made. There was evidence tending to show that in December 1871, the defendant had made all necessary arrangements to build upon his premises, and delayed in consequence of the refusal of the plaintiff to remove her kitchen from *his wall. There was evidence in the case that the agent of the plaintiff frequently passed the premises after the excavation had been made, and before the tenant of plaintiff called attention to the danger.

Upon the application of S. T. Stevenson, a writ of error and supersedeas to the judgment was awarded.

James N. Dunlop, for the appellant.

John Howard, for the appellee.

Anderson J. delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an action by the owner of a tenement in the city of Richmond against the owner of an adjoining tenement, to recover damages of the defendant for digging in his lot so near the foundation of the plaintiff's house, and to such a depth, as to cause it to fall. The defendant's lot, together with the brick dwelling-house thereon, was conveyed to Thomas Richardson, defendant's grantor, by Joseph Marx and wife, by deed bearing date on the 1st of May 1817, the grantor reserving the right to join the two end walls of said tenement. And the plaintiff's lot was conveyed to Mary Stevenson, from whom the plaintiff derives title, by the same grantor, by deed bearing date the 8th of July, in the same year, and is described as adjoining the tenement conveyed as aforesaid to defendant, beginning at the northeast corner thereof, and "running thence along the wall of said tenement, north 54 degrees west, 68 feet eight inches to Edward Hallam's line;" also the privilege of joining the end walls of the brick tenement conveyed to Thomas Richardson as aforesaid, free of any cost, together with all and singular the buildings, ways, easements, hereditaments and appurtenances, &c. There seems to have *been no building on the parcel of land reserved by the grantor, and which he soon afterwards conveyed to Mary Stevenson. But the language of his deed to the defendant clearly implies the reservation of a right to build on it, and to join the end walls of the building which he conveyed to the defendant. And the right so by him reserved, he conveyed by his deed to Mary Stevenson; and it is implied that the land was sold and conveyed to her for the purpose of building thereon. A building was erected thereon, but when or by whom it does not appear, which, together with the defendant's building, was destroyed by the memorable fire which occurred on the 3d of April 1865. The plaintiff afterwards, in 1866, caused another building to be erected on the same site, laying the foundation wall of her main building jam against the old foundation wall of the defendant's building, and building one of the walls of her kitchen in the rear of her main building, on the old foundation wall of the defendant's building.

In the latter part of the year 1871, the defendant intending to rebuild, caused the old foundation wall of his building, contiguous to which the foundation wall of the plaintiff's main building was laid, to be removed, and the excavation of his cellar to be a depth of three feet below his old foundation, which was lower than the foundation of the plaintiff's building, which the plaintiff alleges caused her main building to fall, and for which she seeks to recover damages of him.

Every person has a natural right, ex jure naturæ, to support to his land from the adjacent and subjacent soil. This natural right is incident to land, and the owner is as much entitled to it as he is to the land itself, without any grant by the servient owner, or any act of acquisition on his own part. It is a right therefore cient support for his ground from the subjacent and adjacent soil. The right to subjacent support, it is said, was first determined in Humphries v. Brogden, 12 Q. B. 739, 64 Eng. Com. Law R. 739, upon the ground that there were the same reasons for it that there were to maintain the right to lateral support which had been previously determined. Both rest upon the same foundation.

But this natural right to support exists in respect of land only, and not in respect of buildings; but the former right remains, though houses are built. Brown v. Robins, 4 Hurl. & Nor. R. 186, 28 L. J. Exch. 250; Stroyan v. Knowles, 6 Hurl. & Nor. R. 454, 30 L. J. Exch. 102. But a right to support for buildings may be acquired; and when so acquired it is an easement—which is defined to be "a privilege without profit, which the owner of one tenement has a right to enjoy in respect of that tenement in or over the tenement of another person; by reason whereof the latter is obliged to suffer, or refrain from doing something on his own tenement for the advantage of the former." Goddard on Easements, page 2.

An easement for support may be acquired in different modes, but all are reducible to one by grant; which may be express, implied or presumed. When the owner of land acquires the easement of support, it would seem that his natural right of support in respect of the soil is enlarged, so as to embrace the buildings which he may erect on his land, and invests him with the same right of support in respect of his buildings that he has ex jure naturæ in respect of the soil.

If the plaintiff has enjoyed the support of the land or buildings of the defendant for twenty years, to keep up his house, and both parties knew of that support, 88 *the plaintiff had a right to it as an easement, and the defendant could not withdraw the support without being liable in damages for any injury that accrues to the plaintiff thereby. Hide v. Thornborough, 61 Eng. Com. L. R. 250, 255, Parke B.; Goddard on Easements and cases cited, p. 31; Humphries v. Brogden, 64 Eng. Com. L. R., page 739. In such case the grant is presumed.

The grant is implied, in the absence of express stipulations, in every case where the owner of adjoining houses, or of houses and land, severs the property by sale; for, in every such case, rights to support are granted by implication by the vendors and purchasers respectively, for the preservation of the buildings belonging to each other. Goddard on Easements, p. 154, and cases cited. Rights of support in such cases are mutually granted and reserved between original owner and first grantee; and the second grantee succeeds to owner's reserved rights. Richards v. Rose, 9 Welsb., Hurl. & Gor. 218; Gayford v. Nicholls, Idem 702.

In the case under judgment, the court is of opinion, that the defendant's grantor, Joseph Marx, when he conveyed a part and parcel of his land to the defendant, with the brick building thereon, reserved the right to build on the parcel which he retained; and the reservation of his right to support to such building when erected, by the land and building which he conveyed to the defendant, must be implied as an easement. And that said right of support, or easement, passed from him by his deed of conveyance to Mary Stevenson, and from her, with the title to the tenement, to its present owner in fee.

The court is also of opinion, that the original grantor, by his reservation in 89 his deed to the defendant, *of the right to join the end walls of the building he conveyed to him, retained the right, which passed with the land to those who derived title from him, to join his building to the defendant's by an independent wall alongside the defendant's building, or to make it a part of his building by joining only his end walls; and that the privilege of joining his building in the mode indicated by the reservation, did not extinguish or impair his implied reservation of support.

The court is also of opinion, that if it be shown that the plaintiff had a building on her lot which was supported by the land and the building of the defendant for twenty years or more, with the knowledge of the defendant, prior to the fire of April 3d, 1865, which destroyed both buildings, a grant of the easement of support will be presumed: and that said easement was not lost or extinguished by the destruction of her building, but adhered to the building which she caused to be erected on its ruins: and that any right of support which she may have derived from the reservation of the deed of conveyance of her grantor to the defendant, express or implied, was not extinguished by the destruction of the old building, but survived and adhered to the new.

With regard to the instructions given by the court to the jury, the court is of opinion, that the mere fact of the contiguity of buildings imposed an obligation on the owners, to use due care and skill in removing the one building, not to damage the other, even though no right of support has been acquired. Goddard on Easements, p. 33, citing Dodd v. Holme, 1 A. & E. 493. But if the plaintiff was entitled to the support of her building, by the foundation wall and land of the defendant, the defendant could not withdraw the support without 90 being liable in damages for the *injury which accrued to the plaintiff thereby. This doctrine has already been announced, and cases cited in support of it. The first instruction therefore should have been given with the foregoing qualification.

With regard to the second instruction, so far as it implies that though the plaintiff was entitled to the easement of support to her building, it devolved upon her to protect her building, by providing herself other supports, and that the defendant was not liable if the plaintiff had knowledge of the danger, and could have averted it by prompt action, the court is of opinion it is erroneous.

With regard to the third instruction, it does not seem to have been settled, whether the defective construction of the plaintiff's building with defective materials, upon a defective foundation, which would increase its liability to fall, should affect the plaintiff's right of recovery, or relieve the defendant from liability in damages. It is argued on the one hand, that the plaintiff's building, although defective in its construction, would not have fallen or been impaired, but might have stood a great while, but for the act of the defendant in removing its supports. On the other hand it is contended, that it would be unreasonable and unjust to allow the dominant tenant to deprive the servient of the privilege of improving his own property, and enjoying the benefit of it, by erecting a building upon her lot, so defective in its construction, or in materials, or in its foundation, that the servient tenant cannot with all due care and proper precaution improve his own property without incurring the liability of paying for his neighbor's. Respectable courts and able judges have decided the question differently. One side must have erred, and neither perhaps have placed 91 it upon the true ground. The *court is of opinion, that whilst the facts supposed should not constitute a bar to the plaintiff's recovery, so as to defeat her action, they would be proper to be considered by the jury upon the question of damages; and that so far as the instruction gives them an effect to defeat the plaintiff's right of recovery, it is erroneous. The court is of opinion, that the remainder of the instruction is erroneous, the first clause of it because inconsistent with principles already enunciated; and the last clause, because if the plaintiff wrongfully erected her kitchen wall, upon the defendant's wall, in relation to which the court does not intend to indicate an opinion, it would be virtually to set off the defendant's aggression by the plaintiff's trespass.

With regard to the fourth and last instruction given by the court:

The material part of this instruction is, that if the defendant contracted with an experienced and competent excavator, of good standing in his business, to do the work, he is not liable in damages for any injury which the plaintiff sustained by his negligent and unskillful execution of it. The instruction is evidently designed to rest upon the distinction between execution of work by an independent contractor, and an agent or servant. Without attempting to draw the line of distinction, which is not always well defined, between the two descriptions of contract, it is sufficient to say, that the instruction is objectionable, in so far as it decides for the jury, that the contract was of the former description. Whether the work was done by an independent and responsible contractor, or by an agent or servant, in either case it would be by contract.

The instruction must be considered in connection with the evidence which was 92 before the *jury, and which is certified by the court. That evidence tends to show that the work was not undertaken by a contractor, as contradistinguished from an agent, or servant, or laborer.

There is a class of men whose business it is, to undertake the erection of buildings, or other works for reward. They do not generally propose to do the work in person. They are not always competent. They may be neither bricklayers, masons, nor carpenters, plumbers, nor painters, nor slaters; but they are contractors, and they employ bricklayers, carpenters, &c., to do the work. Or one may be contractor for the brick work, and another for the carpenters' work, &c., all of whom expect to employ agents and laborers to execute the work. They who undertake to have the work done are contractors, and they who do the work are their servants or agents. Perhaps there the distinction lies, between those who do the work and those who contract to have it done. The defendant might have let out the whole building, excavation, foundation, and superstructure, to a contractor, or he might have let the whole work of building, and reserved to himself the work of excavation and preparation for the foundation; and in that case it would have been just as necessary that he should have an experienced laborer to do the work of excavation as if he had let it to contract. It was no part of the main work which the defendant had in contemplation, the erection of a building on his premises: it was only a preparation for it. And as it was necessary to be done with caution and prudence, as it might endanger his neighbor's property—and as it was a small job—the work to be done was inconsiderable and inexpensive, but the defendant was interested in having it done with great care, and would be therefore 93 inclined to have it done *under' his own supervision; and we find him contracting directly with the laborer who did the work, and not with one who undertook it as a responsible contractor, to have it done under his own supervision, by his agents or servants. The jury might well be warranted in coming to the conclusion, that the defendant had employed the man who did the work, as his agent or servant to do it for a specified price, and not as a responsible contractor, to have it done through his agents or servants, under his direction and supervision. The fault of the instruction is that it excludes that conclusion, though the jury might think the evidence warrants it.

But another objection fatal to the instruction is, that it ignores the plaintiff's easement of support, and holds that the defendant would not be liable in damages for any injury to the plaintiff's building, which was caused by the negligence or unskillfulness of the excavator in removing the supports; which involves the absurdity, that though the defendant was responsible for injury to the plaintiff's building by removing the supports (she being entitled to them), though every care and precaution were used to prevent injury, he would not be liable for the injury if the supports were negligently removed by the excavator whom he employed to remove them. The court is of opinion that this instruction is also erroneous.

It cannot be doubted that it would have been competent for the Circuit court, if in reviewing the instructions which in general are given without much time for reflection or investigation pending the jury trial, it should have been satisfied that he had mistaken the law and misdirected the jury in matters which had a material and important bearing upon the issue, and had most 94 probably influenced its verdict, *upon that ground to have set aside the verdict and awarded a new trial, and that it would have been his duty so to have ruled. But if upon that review the court below should adhere to its first ruling, and hold that the instruction was rightly given, and refuse to set aside the verdict upon that ground, and the rulings of that court should by a bill of exceptions thereto be brought under the review of the appellate tribunal, if the appellate tribunal should be of opinion that the jury had been misdirected, and that its verdict had been probably influenced by the erroneous instruction to the prejudice of the exceptor, and that the court of trial had erred upon that ground in overruling the motion for a new trial, surely it would be competent for the appellate court to reverse the judgment for that cause, and to make such order as ought to have been made by the court below. This conclusion is fortified by the opinion of this court in Bull's case, 14 Gratt. 613.

The court is therefore of opinion to reverse the judgment of the Circuit court with costs, and to remand the cause for further proceedings to be had therein in conformity with this opinion.

The court has expressed no opinion as to the demurrer to the declaration, nor is it necessary to do so now, as the general principles governing the case have been laid down.

There is one defect running through all the counts, that whilst they allege that the common grantor in the conveyance he made to Mary Stevenson of the piece or parcel of his land which he did not convey to the defendant, conveyed the right to join the ends of the defendant's building, neither of them allege that he reserved to himself the said right or the right of support in his deed of conveyance to the defendant. There are also other defects in the declaration

 95 of a *more formal character, which the court will not decide are fatal to it upon demurrer; but as the cause will be remanded for further proceedings, the plaintiff may have leave to amend her declaration if she desires it.

Staples, J. concurred in the opinion of Judge Anderson, with the exception of that portion which holds that the owner of a building defectively constructed, with defective materials, and upon an insufficient foundation, is entitled to damages, resulting from an excavation upon the adjoining lot made in a skillful and proper manner. He was inclined to think that in such case the owner of the building was not entitled to any damage for an injury resulting from the excavation.

Judgment reversed.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Wills—Evidence—Testamentary Capacity—Experts.***

—In controversies touching testamentary capacity, as a general rule the evidence of witnesses, unless founded on fact, except in the case of experts, is entitled to but little weight.

2. Same—Same—Same—Attesting Witnesses.†

—The evidence of the attesting witnesses is an exception to this rule. But if an attesting witness to a will attempts to impeach its validity, though his evidence will not be positively rejected, it is to be received with the most scrupulous jealousy.

3. Same—Same—Same—As Evidenced by Provisions of Will.‡

—In all questions of testamentary capacity, particularly where the evidence is conflicting, the courts are much inclined to consider the dispositions contained in it. If these be in themselves consistent with the situation of the testator—in conformity with his affections and previous declarations—if they be such as might justly have been expected, this is said to be of itself persuasive evidence of testamentary capacity.

4. Same—Same—Same—Province of Jury.

—The jury are the proper judges of the weight and credit due to the testimony of the witnesses, and their verdict, when sanctioned, as in this case, by the county and circuit judges who heard the evidence, is entitled to the highest respect in the appellate court. In such a case the deviation from the proof must be very plain and palpable to warrant the interference of the appellate court.

recollection on their part, the court will often presume (the will being in other respects regular that the requirements of the statute have been complied with in the formal execution of the instrument.

At a County court held for the county of Dinwiddie, in September 1874, a paper writing purporting to be the will of Mary H. Young, deceased, was offered for probate, when the court, on its own motion, ordered that a jury be summoned, to try at the bar of the court, and to ascertain whether any and if any how much of what was offered, was or was not the will of the testatrix. A jury having been empanelled and having heard the evidence of witnesses, rendered the following verdict, viz: "We of the jury find this the will of Mary H. Young:" And the court affirmed the judgment. Whereupon the said will was proved by the oaths of the subscribing witnesses thereto, and ordered to be recorded as the true last will of Mary H. Young deceased: And thereupon Wm. F. Barner, the father and heir at law of the testatrix, in open court prayed an appeal as of right, from said decision, to the Circuit court of the county of Dinwiddie; which was granted.

The will is as follows:

In the name of God Amen. I Mary H. Young being of sound mind but infirm body, do make this my last will and testament. I wish my executor hereafter named, to pay all my just debts in the first place.

I loan to my nephew Drury Young, my adopted child, my land and its proceeds during his natural life, my said executor to manage the same until he obtains his majority. Should he die before coming of age or after, I give and bequeath my land to my brothers.

The residue of my estate I lend to my mother so long as she lives, and at her death I give it to my sisters.

I appoint my father, Wm. F. Barner, to be my executor and administrator of my estate, and request the court not to exact him to give any security for the same.

98 *Given under my hand and seal this 13th day of June eighteen hundred and seventy-four.

M. H. Young Seal.

In presence of Caroline Hamilton,
Tempe Boisseau,
C. G. Zehmur.

The case came on to be heard in the Circuit court in November 1874, when six witnesses were examined, and their testimony was taken down as it was given by a person appointed by the court. From this testimony it appears that two questions were involved in the case. The first was, whether Mrs. Young was capable of making a will when she signed the paper; and second, whether the witnesses attested in the presence of the testatrix.

The will was prepared by Dr. C. G. Zehmur, her attending physician, and was signed by Mrs. Young a very short time before her death. She was a widow without children, had adopted the boy to whom she gives her land for his life, and was much attached to him, and she left a father, mother, and eight brothers and sisters.

It appears that some person present suggested to Mrs. Young to make a will, and that Dr. Zehmur suggested that a nuncupative will was not legal. It was then proposed to send for Mr. Epes to get him to write her will; but after the messenger left, the Dr. thinking that she would not live long enough for Mr. Epes to get there, proposed to write it. There were several persons present who made suggestions to her as to how she should dispose of her property; though these suggestions were not made by any person to whom anything was given by the will. Dr. Zehmur says—I gathered more from what she said to her friends how she wanted the will written than from any express statement from her. Had no suggestions been made to her she was competent.

Having understood, as he supposed, what were her wishes, Dr. Zehmur went into the dining room, and there prepared the paper. Whilst he was absent she spoke of having paid two servants some money which she had not set down; and that another servant had got some corn.

On the question of the capacity of the testatrix at the time of her signing the paper, Dr. Zehmur says—"I carried it to her after writing it, and read it to her; found she was sinking fast. After reading it to her, from her dullness I suspected that she did not understand what I read, and presented it to her, and told her to read it for herself. She took and glanced at it, and without reading it commenced signing it, and I saw her making marks down, and thinking she intended signing her initials, told her that would not do. She only made three straight marks for the letter M. My impression is I gave her the pen. I told her where to sign her name. When the paper was handed to her I do not think she had an intelligent understanding of the contents of the paper, but she knew it was a will."

Miss Boisseau was present when the will was read by Dr. Zehmur to Mrs. Young: did not hear her say a word; did not see her notice it at all.

Mrs. Hamilton says—When I was requested by Dr. Zehmur to sign the will I did so reluctantly, because it was so different from what I had heard her say in health how she would dispose of what little she had. When the witnesses signed the paper I think she was very nearly gone. She said she could not see us all. She spoke in monosyllables, but she recognized me. When Dr. Zehmur read the will and handed it to her, she neither by word or gesture signified her assent to it.

Upon the question whether the witnesses attested in the presence of the testatrix, there was no doubt that Mrs. Hamilton attested in the porch out of sight of the testatrix; Miss Boisseau attested it in the door between the porch and the chamber in which the testatrix was lying, and might have been seen by her. The doubt was as to where Dr. Zehmur attested it. He says—Before she signed the will I requested all to leave the room except the witnesses. Her mother, I think, held her up in bed, and a book was handed her to sign the will upon. After signing it I took the will and presented it to the witnesses with the book. The subscribing witnesses were present when she signed the will. * * I cannot tell where I signed it. I thought I signed it at the side-table; that was more convenient than anything else I saw in the room. Until I came here I thought I signed first of the witnesses, but I find I signed last. From the manner in which my name is signed it most have been on something firm. I could not have signed as I did unless I had something firm to write on. I cannot say whether I was in or out of the room when I signed the will; my impression is I was in the room. I knew it was necessary that the testatrix should sign in the presence of the witnesses, but I did not know that the witnesses should sign in the presence of the testatrix. * * The witnesses signed it a very few seconds after she signed it. I have no recollection of when I signed the will. I do not remember whether or not I asked the witnesses to step into the porch.

Miss Boisseau had no idea where Dr. Zehmur signed the will. Mrs. Hamilton says—I was in the piazza when I signed it. I think Dr. Zehmur signed it either in the porch or in the dining room. I could almost declare positively that Dr. Zehmur did not sign it in the parlor, the room in which Mrs. Young was. * * There was not a table in the room sufficiently large for him to sign upon; I mean with sufficient room upon it. The table in the room was filled with vials, glasses, lamp, &c. After signing it, Dr. Zehmur brought the paper in the room and offered it to Mrs. Barner, and told her she was the proper person to keep it. Where he did sign it I am not prepared to say. He might have signed it near the door, where she, Mrs. Young, could have seen him, but I do not think she could. Dr. Zehmur did not sign it in the sick-room.

Mrs. J. W. Young says—I was present when the testatrix signed the will. When Dr. Zehmur requested all but the witnesses to leave, I remained. * * I saw Miss Tempe Boisseau sign her name in the door; saw Dr. Zehmur standing at the side-table in the room, with paper, pen and ink in his hands; do not know whether he signed it or not. The table was a small table, and there was a lamp on it.

The evidence having been introduced, and the cause fully argued, the court was of opinion, that it was not necessary to decide upon the testamentary capacity of the said Mrs. Mary H. Young; but if it was, and this was the only question in the cause, then upon the evidence, and drawing the proper legal presumptions in such cases, the court was inclined to think the paper writing aforesaid ought to be admitted to probate as her will. But being of opinion that though the evidence clearly shows that Mrs. Young signed the will in the presence of all three of the subscribing witnesses, 102 *and that all of them were present together at said signing by Mrs. Young; yet the evidence does not show that more than one witness, viz: Miss Tempe Boisseau, signed the will as a witness in the presence of the testatrix, and there was no evidence that either this witness or any of the others were requested by the deceased to attest said paper as her will. And though the court does not base its judgment upon this last fact, yet it is a pregnant circumstance in the case: and for these reasons the court, reversing the judgment of the County court, refused to admit to probate the paper writing aforesaid. To which opinion of the court, the appellant Drury F. Young, by his next friend, excepted; and applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

Bernard and Gregory, for the appellant.

Collier, Budd and Eppes, for the appellee.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a controversy as to the probate of a will. It involves two questions, one of testamentary capacity, and the other relating to the formal execution of the instrument. A jury was empanelled in the County court, and a verdict rendered in favor of the will; which was approved by the presiding judge. An appeal was taken to the Circuit court. The judge of that court, after hearing the evidence, was inclined to think that the testatrix was possessed of sufficient testamentary capacity: he however held that the writing was not executed in accordance with the requirements of the statute; and for that reason refused to admit the will to probate. From that decision an appeal was taken to this court.

The case has been argued here, both 103 *upon the question of testamentary capacity, and that of the formal execution of the instrument. It must therefore be considered by us in both aspects.

In controversies touching testamentary capacity, the evidence being a mere matter of opinion, is generally of a conflicting character.

As a general rule such evidence unless founded on facts, except in the case of experts, has but little weight with the courts and juries. An exception to this rule is allowed as to the subscribing witnesses, who are regarded in the law as placed around the testator to guard against fraud, and to ascertain and to judge of his capacity.

But it is also held upon good authority, that a person who signs his name as a witness to a will, by his act of attestation solemnly testifies to the sanity of the testator. If he afterwards attempts to impeach the validity of the will his evidence is not to be positively rejected; but it is to be received with the most scrupulous jealousy.

In all questions of testamentary capacity, particularly where the evidence is conflicting, the courts are inclined much to consider the dispositions contained in the will. If such dispositions be in themselves consistent with the situation of the testator, in conformity with his affections and previous declarations—if they be such as might justly have been expected—this is itself said to be persuasive evidence of testamentary capacity. The rationality of the act goes to show the reason of the person. This rule has been repeatedly applied in the English courts in cases of doubtful capacity from age or sickness. 1 Jarman, page 82, note.

In the case before us, the testatrix 104 had no children *of her own, but she had an adopted son, a nephew, to whom she was greatly attached. To him she gave her real estate for life, and at his death it was to pass in fee to her brothers. The residue of her property she gave to her mother for life, and then in fee to the sisters of the testatrix. One of the witnesses states that these provisions are different from what he heard the testatrix say in health she intended to make. What that disposition was we are not told. But to whom could she have given her estate more deserving her just regard and bounty than these devisees, her adopted son, mother, brothers and sisters. It is true her father was also living at the time, but he, of course, receives the benefit of the bequest made to the mother. A will containing provisions so just in themselves, so thoughtful, is very persuasive evidence of a disposing mind and memory. It is very true, as counsel have insisted, that suggestions were made at the time by persons in the room to the testatrix as to the objects of her bounty; but it is equally true that no suggestions were made by any one who is provided for in the will, and that all the provisions are in conformity with the directions given by the testatrix herself. Her declarations, her recollection of money she had paid two of her servants, and of grain gotten by another, occurring whilst the will was being prepared, show that she was of disposing mind and memory, down to within a few moments of the execution of the will. When the various provisions were read over to her, she was raised in her bed and signed her name without hesitation or serious difficulty. There is nothing, certainly nothing positive or reliable, to show that at that time, or at the time of the attestation of the witnesses, she was not fully conscious of all that was being done by herself and them.

105 *It is unnecessary however to enter into a minute discussion of the evidence. Upon well settled principles the jury were the proper judges of the weight and credit due to the testimony of the witnesses, and their verdict when sanctioned by the two judges who heard the evidence, is entitled to the highest respect in this court. In such case the deviation from the proof must be very plain and palpable to warrant the interference of an appellate court. Jessee v. Parker's adm'rs, 6 Gratt. 57; Greer v. Greer's adm'r, 9 Gratt. 330; Dudleys v. Dudley's adm'r, 3 Leigh 471, 484.

The next point for consideration is the question of the due execution of the instrument. Upon this point, as upon that of the testamentary capacity, the decision of the lower court is of course entitled to the greatest respect; but the force of that consideration is much diminished by the fact that the verdict and judgment in the County court were reversed by the circuit judge upon the question of the formal execution of the will. The matter is therefore before us in a great measure unaffected by the weight generally due to the opinion of the trying court.

Our statute prescribes that the witnesses shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator; but no form of attestation shall be necessary. The cases do not very accurately define what is meant by the phrase "in the presence of the testator." Upon this subject the judges of this court have held very conflicting opinions. Neil et als. v. Neil, 1 Leigh 6; Moore v. Moore's ex'or, 8 Gratt. 307; Sturdivant v. Birchett, 10 Gratt. 67; Nock v. Nock's ex'ors, 10 Gratt. 106.

But whatever may have been the conflict of opinion upon other points, it is well settled that though the attestation of the witnesses is in a different room, and even in a different house, it is good as being 106 in the *presence of the testator, if within the range of his vision, so that he might have seen it. It is not necessary that he should actually have seen the attestation. It is sufficient that he might have seen it if he chose to do so. Casson v. Dade, 1 Bro. C. C. 69.

Another rule is equally well settled; and that is when the attestation is in the same room with the testator, it is presumed to have been made in his presence until it appears that he could not have seen it. If the witnesses to the will are dead, or if there is failure of recollection on their part, the court will often presume (the will being in other respects regular) that the requirements of the statute have been complied with in the formal execution of the instrument. Such presumptions are absolutely essential to the protection of property and the security of titles. Were it otherwise the most important and solemn instruments would often fail to take effect by the death, or from the mere failure of attesting witnesses—real or assumed—to recall each and every formality presented for the execution of testamentary papers.

Bearing these principles in mind, we may easily determine whether the paper offered as a will is sufficiently proved to justify its admission to probate. There are three subscribing witnesses. It is certain that one of them did sign, and another did not sign, in the presence of the testatrix. The real difficulty is in respect to the third witness. This witness is Dr. Zehmur, the attending physician, and the draftsman of the will. He went out of the room in which the testatrix was lying into a porch, and from the porch into the dining room, where there was a table, upon which he wrote the will. He then returned to the sick room with the pen and ink and paper in his hand. The testatrix having signed in the presence of the witnesses, *one of those 107 then went into the porch out of the range of the testatrix's vision, and subscribed her name; the second signed while standing in the doorway, with the paper resting upon the door-facing. Where then did Dr. Zehmur make his attestation? His statement is, "I cannot tell where I signed the will. I thought I signed it at the side-table; that was more convenient than anything I saw in the room. Until I came here I thought I signed first of the witnesses; but I find that I signed last." Again he says: "I can't say whether I was in or out of the room when I signed the will. My impression is, that I was in the room." It is impossible to read the testimony of this witness without feeling that the witness had originally a very strong conviction upon his mind that he had subscribed the will in the same room with the testatrix. This conviction, it is obvious, was not in any degree lessened by his own reflections, but by the statements of others; conversations and discussions doubtless occurring in his presence before the trial in the Circuit court. The evidence of Mrs. Hamilton, it is highly probable, had much to do in creating the doubt at the time of the trial upon the mind of the witness in respect to his locality. She says: "I think Dr. Zehmur signed either in the porch or in the dining room." But she gives no satisfactory reason for this opinion. It is at best a mere conjecture. Again she says: "I could almost declare positively that he did not sign in the parlor." One of the reasons assigned for this opinion is, that she and Miss Boisseau did not see him sign, as they would, had he been in the room at the time of his attestation. It is however much more probable that their whole attention was engrossed with the dying friend before them, than the act (unimportant to them) of 108 subscribing a paper by a witness. *They might, or might not, have seen the signing; it is impossible to say. The other reason given by Mrs. Hamilton for her opinion is, that there was no convenient place in the room for writing; as the only table in it was covered with vials and bottles."

But Dr. Zehmur does not concur with Mrs. Hamilton as to the side-table. He says, "I thought I signed it at the side-table; that was more convenient than anything else I saw in the room." It is apparent throughout that Dr. Zehmur, though much impressed with the somewhat positive declarations of Mrs. Hamilton, still adhered to his original convictions, that he attested the will in the room in which the testatrix was lying. And his recollection is to some extent confirmed by Mrs. Young, another witness, who says: "I saw Miss Tempe Boisseau sign her name in the door; I saw Dr. Zehmur standing at the side-table in the room with pen and ink and paper in his hands." The most just and reasonable inference from all the evidence is, that Mrs. Hamilton having signed the will in the porch, handed it to Miss Boisseau, who signed while standing in the door-way, and then delivered it to Dr. Zehmur, who signed in the room where all the parties were then present.

Be this as it may, we have here the strong impression of the subscribing witness one way, the negative testimony of another witness another way. We have the opinion of the circuit judge giving the greatest weight to the negative testimony, the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the county judge maintaining the subscribing witness, when the events were fresher in the recollection of all the witnesses. How ought an appellate court to decide under such circumstances? Surely every reasonable presumption ought to be made in 109 favor of the proper execution of the will; a will just and beneficent in all its provisions, and as to which there is not a suggestion or even a hint of fraud, undue influence, or unfair dealing.

For these reasons the judgment of the Circuit court must be reversed, and that of the County court affirmed.

Anderson, J., was in great doubt as to the sanity of the testatrix when she signed the will, and whether the witness Zehmur signed in her presence; but he yielded to the views of the court.

Judgment of the Circuit court reversed; and judgment of the County court affirmed.

3. Same—Same—Same—Charitable Institutions.*

Though the statute exempts from taxation the property of orphan asylums and other charitable institutions, this exemption does not include a tax on a devise or bequest of property to such institutions.

Samuel Miller, of the county of Campbell, died in March 1869. He left a very large estate, and by his will, among other bequests, he gave to the Lynchburg Female Orphan Asylum, a large amount of public bonds and a tract of land; and the residue of his estate, not before disposed of, he gave to the county of Albemarle, for the purpose of establishing a school for the education of poor orphan white children.

William Barrett, of the city of Richmond, died in January 1871; and he also left a large estate. By his will, after a great many legacies to individuals, he gave the residuum of his estate to be equally shared, by the Richmond Male Orphan Asylum, The Female Humane Association of Richmond, and The St. Paul's Church Home. All of these were incorporated institutions.

111 *The question whether these bequests were subject to the tax on collateral inheritances having been made, it was agreed by the parties that it should be submitted to the decision of the courts; and accordingly motions were made in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, by the Attorney General, against the executor of Miller and the administrators with the will annexed of Barrett, for the amount of the tax on these legacies. The motions came on to be heard on the 3d and 7th of April 1875, when the court rendered judgment in favor of the Commonwealth in both cases. And thereupon the defendants applied for writs of supersedeas; which were awarded.

The cases were argued by Stiles, Gen'l Early, Craighill, Meredith, Wm. J. Robertson, and Grattan, for the appellants, and the Attorney General, for the Commonwealth.

Christian, J. These two cases were heard together. They involve precisely the same, and a single question, to wit: whether certain legacies which were bequeathed by the testators, Wm. Barrett and Samuel Miller, are subject to the tax imposed by law upon what is known as collateral inheritances.

In the first named case the legatees are three orphan asylums located in the city of Richmond. In the other, the legacies bequeathed by the will of Samuel Miller are, one to the Lynchburg Female Orphan Asylum, and the other to the Board of the Literary Fund, "to establish a school in the county of Albemarle for the education of as many poor orphan children and other white children, residents of the county, as the profits and income of the fund so devised will admit of or compass."

*Same—Taxation—Collateral Inheritances—Charitable Institutions.—That such succession tax is not a "tax on property," and hence does not fall within the statute exempting charitable institutions from taxation, see Schofield v. City of Lynchburg, 78 Va. 371; Peters v. City of Lynchburg, 76 Va. 600, in both of which cases the principal case is cited. It is also approved by the supreme court of the United States in Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829.

112 *It is conceded that in both cases the legacies are bequeathed to corporations, and in both cases these corporations are charitable institutions.

The proceeding in the Circuit court was, by motion of the Attorney General, without any formal pleadings; and that court gave judgment for the commonwealth for the amount of the tax imposed by law. To which judgment a writ of error was awarded by this court.

These judgments are assailed here upon two grounds: 1st. That the legatees being corporations are not within the terms of the section of the act imposing a tax upon collateral inheritances; and 2d, if within the terms of the act, these legatees are exempted under that provision of the statute which exempts from taxation "all personal property belonging to orphan asylums or other charitable institutions."

Upon the first proposition that corporations are not, but only natural persons are, included within the terms of the act imposing a tax upon collateral inheritances, it becomes necessary to trace somewhat in detail the legislation on this subject.

The first act on the subject was passed on the 6th February 1844, and provided as follows: "All estate real, personal and mixed, of ever kind whatsoever, passing from every person who may die seized or possessed of such estate, being within this commonwealth either by will or under the intestate laws thereof, to any person or persons or to bodies politic and corporate in trust or otherwise, other than to or for the use of a father, mother, husband, wife, brother, sister, children or lineal descendants born in lawful wedlock, shall be and they are hereby made subject to a tax or duty imposed by law, on every hundred dollars of the clear value thereof, and at and after the same rate for any less amount, to be paid to the use of the commonwealth." Sess. Acts 1843-'44, p. 9 Sec. 1.

Until the Code of 1849 this phraseology was used: "to any person or persons or to bodies politic or corporate, in trust or otherwise, other than to or for the use of a father &c. &c." In that Code the words "bodies politic or corporate" were omitted, and the law taxing collateral inheritances was enacted in the following form: ch. 39, § 6, Code 1849: "When any estate within this commonwealth, of any decedent shall pass under his will or the laws regulating descents and distributions, to any other person or to any other use, than to or for the use of the father, mother, husband, wife, brother, sister or lineal descendant of such decedent, the estate so passing, if of greater value than two hundred and fifty dollars, shall be subject to a tax of a certain per cent." The act continued in this form until the session of 1855-'6, when this tax upon collateral inheritances was omitted from the tax law; which omission was declared by this court in Fox's adm'r v. Commonwealth, 16 Gratt. 1, to operate as a repeal of the statute imposing such tax.

The law creating this tax was again enacted in 1863. The act of March 28th, 1863, § 15, provides as follows:

"§ 15. On the estate of a decedent, which passes under his will, or by descent to any other person, or for any other use than to or for the use of the father, mother, husband, wife, brother, sister, nephew, niece, or lineal descendant of such decedent, there shall be a tax of three per centum of such estate."

This tax was again omitted from the general tax law until 1867, when it was provided by the 3d section of ch. 64, Sess. Acts 1866-'7, as follows:

114 *"§ 3. Upon any estate of a decedent which shall pass by his will, or upon his intestacy to any person other than his lineal descendants, or his father, mother, husband, wife, brother, sister, nephew or niece, five per centum upon the value of the amount thereof." This last is the provision of the statute under which the tax in these cases has been imposed.

It is insisted by the learned counsel for the appellants, that, the legatees under both of these wills being corporations are not within the term or scope of the act, and it was argued with much force and ingenuity, that inasmuch as the words "bodies corporate and politic," and the words "to any other use than to or for the use of the father, &c." have been left out of the present act, this omission indicates the intention of the legislature to exempt corporations from the operation of the statute, and confine it to natural persons. I do not think that this is a sound construction. That the word person in a statute may embrace, and does often embrace a corporation, an artificial as well as natural person, must be conceded. Indeed the general rule would seem to be, that corporations are included in the word person unless it appears from the words of the act, or from the very nature of the act itself, that corporations are excluded from its operation. The statutory rules of construction embodied in the Code of 1849, and continued in every codification of the laws since that time to the present, declare plainly and emphatically the general principle above stated. The 17th section of chap. 16, Code of 1849, lays down fourteen rules of construction, and declares that "in the construction of all statutes the following rules shall be observed, unless such construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intention of the legislature."

115 In the rules following this declaration of the statute law, the thirteenth rule provides that "the word 'person' may extend and be applied to bodies politic and corporate as well as individuals."

The adoption of this rule of construction in 1849, accounts for the omission of the words "bodies politic and corporate," in subsequent acts, which, up to that time, had been used in acts imposing a tax upon collateral inheritances.

We all know that one great object of the revisors was to simplify the statute law, and relieve it from unnecessary verbiage, which ofttime obscured its meaning. The omission therefore of the words, "bodies politic and corporate," and of the words, "to any other use than to or for the use of the father," &c., cannot be taken as an indication of an intention of the legislature to exempt corporations from this tax. If the word "person" in the act embraces corporations, then these words were useless and unnecessary, and were properly omitted. That word "person," does certainly include corporations, unless the intention of the legislature is manifest that corporations were intended to be excluded. How is such intention manifested in this case? Certainly not by the terms of the act. Corporations are not in terms excluded from its operation. The omission of the word corporation does not exclude them, for the act uses a word, to wit, person, which may include them, and which must include them, unless it was the manifest intention of the legislature to exclude them from the operation of the act. Nor is there anything in the nature of the act which excludes corporations from its operation.

I admit there are statutes which, from their very nature, exclude corporations from the meaning of the word "person."

116 Such, for instance, are all statutes *declaring a person committing certain acts guilty of a felony, or other criminal offence, and affixing certain punishment for the offence. In such cases, and others that might be named, corporations, from the very nature of the act itself, are not included in the word "person," for very obvious reasons. But there certainly is nothing in the nature of the law we are considering which excludes corporations from its operation. It is a law imposing a tax. Corporations are very common, and I may add, favorite subjects of taxation; and in a statute imposing taxes, the word person must be taken as embracing corporations, unless they are excluded by express terms or by the clearest implication.

It may be well to remark, that the argument of the learned counsel for the appellants would exclude not only orphan asylums and other charitable institutions from this tax, but all other corporations, so that if these views be correct, an estate which is devised to a railroad company, or a cotton factory, or to the city of Richmond, or to any other corporation, would be exempt from this tax, simply because the legatee was a corporation; because, according to the argument, only natural persons are included in the terms of the act. I cannot give my assent to such a construction.

But it is insisted as the second ground of error in the judgment of the Circuit court of Richmond, that the appellants ought not to have this tax imposed on them, because the law exempts from taxation "all personal property of orphan asylums and other charitable institutions."

In respect to this assignment of error, it is sufficient to say that the tax imposed in these cases is not a tax on property.

The case of Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 117 422, is decisive *of the question, and must govern this case. Judge Lee, delivering the opinion of the majority of the court in that case, speaking of the tax upon collateral inheritances (which is the tax imposed upon the legatees in this case) says, page 428: "It cannot be regarded in a proper legal sense as a tax upon property. * * * The intention of the legislature was plainly to tax the transmission of property, by devise or descent, to collateral kindred; to require that a party thus taking the benefit of a civil right, secured to him under the law, should pay a certain premium for its enjoyment. * * * That the general assembly of Virginia, in the absence of a constitutional prohibition, does possess the power to tax a civil right or privilege like this, is beyond all question. This is fully embraced within its general and comprehensive power of taxation. But it may be deduced from the very nature of the subject itself. The right to take property by devise or descent is the creature of the law, and protected by its authority."

Having plenary powers, only restricted by the constitution, over the subject of taxation, it certainly has the power to appropriate a modicum of the estate, call it a tax or what you will, as a condition upon which those who take the estate shall be permitted to enjoy it. The legislature might, if it saw fit, prohibit bequests to all charitable institutions, and declare all such devises absolutely void. Surely it may prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such institutions may receive legacies. It may say to such institutions you may accept legacies bequeathed to you, provided you pay for the privilege a certain per centum of the value of the property so bequeathed; and this property shall be held forever free from taxation, when it comes to your hands; but this premium you must pay for its enjoyment. It is illogical and unrea-

118 sonable to *conclude, that because the property of such institutions, after it is acquired, is exempted from taxation, that therefore they would be relieved from paying a premium or tax on the civil right or privilege of acquiring property by devise. It must, of course, be presumed that the legislature, at the time it passed the act relied on, exempting from taxation the personal property of orphan asylums and other charitable institutions, was aware that this court had held, that the tax here sought to be imposed was not a tax on property. Knowing, as they must have known, the law on this subject, the legislature exempt such institutions from taxation on personal property, and confine that exemption to tax on property. This certainly does not embrace an exemption from a tax for the privilege or civil right of taking an estate by devise or descent.

I am for affirming the judgment of the Circuit Court of the city of Richmond.

Judgment affirmed.

119 *Silliman & als. v. Fredericksburg, Or. & Charl. R. R. Co.*

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Corporations—Charter Provisions—Conditions—Construction.—By statute the charter of a railroad company is extended to enable it to complete its road; and it is authorized to issue its bonds, registered or coupon, for $1,200,000, and sell them at less than par, and secure them by mortgage or deed of trust upon all the property and franchises of the company. And by the same act it is provided, that unless the road is completed to a certain point by a certain day, the company shall forfeit to the state their corporate franchises and rights, together with their road track and road bed, and all works and materials thereon, to other property; the state to hold the same as trustee for certain parties named. The company accepted the charter, issued $480,000 of bonds, and executed a deed of trust upon its property and franchises to secure them. The company failed to complete the road to the point fixed by the time prescribed, or, as it would seem, to expend any money in its construction; and the state proceeded to declare the charter forfeited, and to take possession of the road and the other property and franchises of the company, and to turn it all over to the cestui que trust, who organized another company. Persons, one of whom was the president of the road, and all were the principals in the road when the said act was passed, or were connected with them, claimed that they were the holders of $323,500 of the bonds issued, and filed their bill to enforce the deed of trust. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same—Same—Forfeiture.—Under the provision for the forfeiture of the charter, the state took the property and franchises of the company free from the trust.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same—Same.—Upon the failure of the company to complete the road to the point fixed by the day prescribed, the forfeiture became absolute and complete; and the state having entered and elected to hold under the forfeiture, no inquisition or judicial proceedings, *or inquest or finding of any kind, was required to consummate the forfeiture.

120 3. Same—Same—Notice of Terms.—From the relations of these plaintiffs to the company and to each other, they must be held to have had notice of the terms of the act, which authorized the execution of the deed of trust under which they claim; and as no money was expended on the road, or as they claim paid for interest, the strong presumption is, that the company received no money for the said bonds. The plaintiffs are not, therefore, innocent purchasers for value, and holders of said bonds without notice of the provisions of said act.

4. Same—Same—Same.*—Persons dealing with corporations must take notice of what is contained in the law of their organization; and they must be presumed to be informed as to the restrictions annexed to the grant of power, by the law by which the corporation is authorized to act.

5. Negotiable Instruments—Agents—Authority.—In all cases, even in cases of negotiable instruments, a party contracting with an agent must enquire into his authority: and either a state or a corporation is bound only when its agents keep within the limit of their authority.

In March 1853 a company styled the Fredericksburg and Gordonsville Railroad Company, was incorporated and organized to build a railroad from Fredericksburg to Gordonsville. This company was authorized to borrow money, and give a mortgage on its franchises and property to pay it. The company did act under this power, and having failed to pay, the property and franchise was sold under the mortgage, and was purchased by Thomas G. Walker, Z. P. Boyer and others; and they proceeded at once to organize a joint stock company, under the name and style of the Fredericksburg, Orange and Charlottesville Railroad Company, for the purpose of completing the railroad to Gordonsville and extending it to Charlottesville. By an act of the General Assembly, passed February 21st 1872, the charter of this company was extended for a period of five years, from the 1st of 121 March 1872; and the *company was authorized to borrow a sum not exceeding twelve hundred thousand dollars, upon a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum; and to issue either coupon or registered bonds for the sums borrowed; and to secure the same, principal and interest, by a lien on all the property, rights and franchises of the company, and to sell the bonds at less than par.

Section 4 of the act provided, that an amount of the bonds so issued, not exceeding $30,000, should be applied to pay to citizens of Virginia debts due from the former company, for work done and materials furnished in and about the construction of that part of the road then constructed; and these bonds should be a preferred debt.

Section 5 provided, that if the said company failed to complete the said railroad from Fredericksburg as far as Orange Courthouse, in the style and manner prescribed in the act, by the 1st of May 1873, *Corporations—Charter Provisions.—Notice of Terms.—In the case of Bock v. Ally, C. & I. Co., 82 Va. 919, 1 S. E. Rep. 325, the court said: "This court, per HINTON, J., in Bockover v. Life Association of America, 77 Va. 91, quoting from the supreme court of the United States, in Rolfe v. Rurdle, 13 Otto 222, said: 'Every person dealing with a corporation is bound to take notice of its constitution, by-laws and way of doing business.' And to the same effect is the opinion of FAUNTLEROY, J., speaking for the court in Haden v. Mechanics Fire Association, 80 Va. 691." See the still later case of Whitehurst v. Whitehurst, 83 Va. 155, 1 S. E. Rep. 801; also Smith v. Cornelius, 41 W. Va. 74, 23 S. E. Rep. 603, citing the principal case.

the company should forfeit to the state of Virginia their corporate franchises, together with their railroad track, road bed, and all work and materials thereon, and all other property of said company; and the state of Virginia should thereupon have the right to enter upon and take possession of said railroad track, &c., and hold the same as trustee, for the benefit of herself, the corporation of Fredericksburg, and the other private stockholders of the original Fredericksburg and Gordonsville Railroad Company, according to the respective amounts of stock in that company originally subscribed and held by them.

In pursuance of this act the company directed the issue of $700,000 of the bonds of the company; and by deed of the 1st of November 1872, conveyed to the National Trust Company, of the city of New York, *all its franchises and property of every description in the state of Virginia, in trust to secure the bonds so issued, with power to sell upon the failure for ninety days to pay the interest on the bonds, or upon the failure to pay the bonds when they fell due.

In March 1875 Edward S. Silliman, Zaccus P. Boyer, and the Miners Trust Company Bank, all of Pennsylvania, who sued for themselves and all other lien creditors of the Fredericksburg, Gordonsville and Charlottesville Railroad Company, filed their bill in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond, against the National Trust Company of the city of New York, as trustee, the Fredericksburg and Gordonsville Railroad Company, the Fredericksburg, Gordonsville and Charlottesville Railroad Company, and the Board of Public Works of the state of Virginia, in which, having set out the foregoing facts, they stated that only about $480,000 of bonds were issued; and that the plaintiffs became the purchasers, and were then the owners of said bonds so issued, amounting to $323,500, nearly three-fourths in value of the said bonds so issued. And they file a list of their bonds, and offer to produce them if required. They charge that a large amount of interest is due upon their bonds; that they have demanded payment, and have failed for more than ninety days to receive it; and that the railroad company have made no provision for its payment.

The bill further states that the Board of Public Works of Virginia claiming to act under the several acts relating to said Fredericksburg, Gordonsville and Charlottesville Railroad Company, did on the 2d day of December 1873, or thereabout, declare a forfeiture of the charter of said company, and proceed to take possession of the said railroad track &c., professing to hold the same in trust for the state of Virginia, the *corporation of Fredericksburg and the original stockholders of the original Fredericksburg and Gordonsville Railroad Company. That after such forfeiture this company, claiming that their powers, rights and franchises had been revived thereby, re-organized and received from the said Board of Public Works all the property, real and personal, which said board had taken in pursuance of said forfeiture, and so hold and use the same, and claim to exercise all the rights and franchises of the Fredericksburg, Gordonsville and Charlottesville Railroad Company.

The prayer of the bill was, that the railroad company might be compelled to pay the plaintiffs the money due them respectively, with interest; that the deed of trust might be enforced, and a sale of the property thereby conveyed might be made by a special commissioner, and for general relief.

The Fredericksburg, Gordonsville and Charlottesville Railroad Co., and the Board of Public Works of the state of Virginia, filed their pleas in the cause. They set out the act of 21st of February 1872; and aver that the railroad company referred to in that act, had not built the road as provided in said act—setting out what was to be done as it is set out in the act—and that said company had up to this time wholly failed to comply with any of said requirements of the statute touching the completion of said railroad; and said railroad was still wholly incomplete in all of the above particulars. That in consequence of this failure the said company had incurred the forfeiture to the state of Virginia declared by said act, of their corporate franchises &c., and all other property embraced in said deed of trust; and that the legal effect of said forfeiture is to extinguish said deed of trust, and to release all the said property embraced therein, from *any lien, by reason of said deed of trust, and from all liability for the payment of the bonds issued thereunder, or any of them; and that said deed of trust is utterly void, and cannot be enforced.

The plaintiffs demurred to these pleas. And the cause came on to be heard on the 2d day of July 1875, when the court overruled the demurrers; and the plaintiffs declining to reply to the pleas, it was decreed that the bill be dismissed as to these defendants. The plaintiffs thereupon applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Hundley and Farquhar for the appellants.

Marye & Fitzhugh, Wm. A. Little, Jno. T. Goolrick, and the Attorney General, for the appellees.

By section 1, of the act of assembly of the 21st of February 1872 (Sess. Acts of 1871-'72, ch. 114, p. 91) the charter of the Fredericksburg, Orange and Charlottesville Railroad Company is extended for a period of five years from the first day of March 1872, for the purpose of enabling the company to complete the railroad, and to extend the same.

For that purpose, and to pay certain debts, the said company, by section 2, is authorized and empowered to borrow a sum of money, not exceeding twelve hundred thousand dollars, and at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum; and to secure the money so borrowed, to issue coupon or registered bonds, in such sums as the directors may deem best; and the president and directors are authorized and empowered "to execute a lien on all the property, rights and franchises of said company, existing at the time of the execution of such lien, 125 and which may *thereafter be acquired by said company," to secure the payment of moneys so borrowed and the interest accruing thereon: and said company may sell said bonds at less than par.

By section 5, it is provided, that if the said company shall fail to complete the said railroad from the town of Fredericksburg, as far as Orange Courthouse, with a single track, of the quality and capacity therein described, and the depots therein mentioned, on or before the 1st day of May 1873, "the company shall forfeit to the State of Virginia, their corporate franchises and rights, together with their railroad track, road bed and all work and materials thereon, and other property, to hold the same as a trustee for the benefit of herself, the corporation of Fredericksburg and other private stockholders of the original Fredericksburg Railroad Company, according to the respective amounts of the stock in that company originally subscribed and held by them."

Section 6 limits the power of the company in the issue of bonds, until after the road is fully completed to Orange Courthouse, to $600,000.

Section 7 provides that this act shall not be in force until the said company shall file in the office of the board of public works their acceptance of the same and its conditions, signed by the president and secretary of the company, with the common seal of the company affixed thereto. This condition, it is admitted by the pleadings, was complied with by the company.

On the first day of November 1872, the said company executed a mortgage or deed of trust, conveying all its property, real and personal, rights and franchises, to secure the payment of principal and interest of its bonds for $700,000, which the 126 company determined *to issue. And for default in payment of interest, or principal, for ninety days after demand, the trustee, upon the written request of the holders of not less than twenty-five per cent. of the bonds then outstanding, is required to sell. The bill alleges that bonds of the aggregate par value of only $480,000 were issued; and that of them the plaintiffs became the purchasers, and the owners, of $323,000, secured by the mortgage.

The material question we are to consider is: Is the mortgage subject to the conditions of forfeiture prescribed by the said 5th section of the act of assembly?

The court is of opinion, that the railroad company, upon accepting the amendment and extension of its charter upon the terms of the said act of assembly, became immediately invested with authority to execute its bonds, and a deed of trust or mortgage upon its franchises and corporate rights, and upon the railroad track and road bed, and upon all its property, real and personal, to secure the payment of said bonds, principal and interest; but subject to its liability to the forfeiture of its said franchises and corporate rights, and its entire property, if the railroad was not completed from Fredericksburg to Orange Courthouse on or before the 1st of May 1873, as prescribed by the 5th section of the act. Though the authority to execute the bonds and the mortgage, in favor of the company, and the condition of forfeiture in favor of the state, are contained in different sections, they are both parts of the same act, and in fact constitute one contract; and must be taken and construed together as parts of a whole, so that, if possible, effect be given to the whole and to every part.

If the act should be construed as investing the company with the right to a lien or 127 mortgage all its franchises, *rights and property, free from the right of the state to a forfeiture of the same, if the road was not completed within the prescribed time, the 5th section would be wholly inoperative. It gives no security to the state that the money authorized to be borrowed would be faithfully applied to the completion of the road, or that the road would be completed within the time limited, which seems to have been the cardinal object of the legislature in confirming the charter of this company and in extending and enlarging its franchises. What assurance could it give? The very property which is to be forfeited to the state, by the company on its failure to comply with the condition, becomes vested in others by the mortgage, and leaves nothing for the state. For it is very evident that the foreclosure of the mortgage by sale would leave nothing for the equity of redemption upon which the forfeiture could operate. But the idea that only the equity of redemption was to be subject to forfeiture is repugnant to the very terms of the act, which require the forfeiture, not of the equity of redemption, but of the identical subject which the 2nd section authorized to be conveyed in trust or mortgage. Such an idea is also incompatible with the last clause of the section, which provides that upon such forfeiture the State of Virginia shall have right to enter upon and take possession of said railroad track, road bed, &c., and hold the same as a trustee for the benefit of herself, the corporation of Fredericksburg, and the other private stockholders; which she could not do if the forfeiture was subject to the mortgage, and the railroad track, road bed, and all the property had been conveyed to others, and were liable any hour to be sold toward satisfying the mortgage. Taking both sections together, they must be construed 128 to give *to the company the right to mortgage the property, subject to the state's right of forfeiture, in case the road is not completed by the time specified. It is evident that the company so understood it. No further evidence is needed, that it was so understood by both the company and the legislature, than the terms of the act of assembly of 26 March 1873, extending the time for the completion of the road, and the acceptance of that act by the company.

This construction gives effect to both sections; not to 2nd section as fully and effectually as it would by the omission of the 5th section. But that was not intended. The legislature did not intend to grant the privilege, except with this restriction. If the company did not regard it as beneficial they were under no constraint to take it. They must have regarded it as conferring a benefit, or they would not have accepted it. It is true the restriction if it were known (and the company was bound in common honesty to make it known) would embarrass the sale of the bonds. They could not be sold at all perhaps if thrown upon the market. No one could be induced to purchase who could not repose a personal confidence in the company that every dollar so raised would be strictly applied to the completion of the railroad in compliance with the terms of the charter, and thus save the forfeiture. If the bonds could be sold, and the money faithfully and honestly so applied, the security would be greatly strengthened, and the property and franchises saved from forfeiture, and the loan would be amply secure. A loan upon such security could only be effected through the personal confidence reposed in the company by the lender, or the purchaser of the bonds, that the money would be faithfully and honestly applied. And it may be that 129 the *company in accepting the act, calculated that they would be able to raise the money from those who knew them, and who would confide in them, that they would honestly apply the money so raised as required by the law which authorized them to make the loan, and in a way that would give ample security to the holder of the bonds. They could not have expected to raise the money by throwing the bonds upon the general market.

It would seem that they have not done so. The bill alleges that bonds to the amount of about $480,000 were issued, of which they the plaintiffs are the owners and purchasers of $323,000. No claim is asserted to the residue. They do not say that they are purchasers for value. It does not appear that they were. If they were, what has become of the money. It does not appear that any part of it was expended upon the work on the railroad. The bill alleges that even the interest, although demanded, has not been paid, not a dollar of it, to save the road and all the corporate property of the company and its franchises from sale under the mortgage. Could that be if there had been a bona fide sale of those bonds, for value—for money? Mr. Silliman, who claims to be the owner and purchaser individually of $139,000 of these bonds, is the president of the railroad company. And he and Z. P. Boyer, who is one of the parties to whom the act of 21st of February 1872 was granted, claim to be the joint-owners of $23,000 more. The Miners Trust Company Bank and said Boyer claim to own together $93,500, and the Miners & Trust Company Bank claim to own, the appellees counsel say, $68,000. The amount does not clearly appear from the exhibit filed with the bill. But according to the statement of the bill it would be less. They are the plaintiffs in this 130 *suit, and from their relations to this company and to each other, are chargeable with notice of the terms of the act of assembly which authorized the execution of the mortgage or deed of trust, under which they claim. They are the holders of all the bonds to which any claim has been asserted in this suit. And if any money was received upon the sale of those bonds, the company being bound in all fidelity to apply it to the construction of the railroad and to the payment of the accruing interest on their debt, and it not appearing that one dollar from such source has been applied for the benefit of the railroad or the payment of interest, it raises a strong presumption, when we consider the relation of those who claim to be the owners and purchasers of the bonds to the railroad company and to one another, that the company has not received any money for said bonds.

The court is therefore of opinion that the appellants are not innocent purchasers for value, and holders of said bonds without notice of the provisions of the act of assembly by which the said company derived their authority to execute a mortgage to secure their payment, which was subject to forfeiture, if they failed to complete the road as far as Orange Courthouse, &c., by the time specified in the act. They may be presumed to have had actual notice of said restriction on the power of executing a mortgage. If they had not such notice it was their own fault. Persons dealing with corporations must take notice of whatever is contained in the law of their organization, and they must be presumed to be informed as to the restrictions or conditions annexed to the grant of power, by the law by which the corporation is authorized to act. Pearce v. Madison & Ind. R. R. Co., 2 How. U. S. R. 441; Zabriskie v. Cleveland R. R. Co., 23 How. U. S. R. 381.

131 In *every instance (Mr. Justice Miller said, in delivering the opinion in which a majority of the court concurred, in the Floyd Acceptances case, 7 Wall. U. S. R. 680), a person making a contract with the government, through its officers or agents, must look to the statute under authority of which the agent or officer professes to act, and see for himself that his contract comes within the terms of the law. The same rule would apply, a fortiori, to persons making contracts with the agents or officers of bodies corporate. Mr. J. Miller further holds, in the above case, that the contract by bill of exchange stands on no different footing, with reference to the authority of the officer to bind the government. And again, "one who takes a negotiable note or bill of exchange purporting to be made by an agent, is bound to inquire as to the power of the agent." (See also 31 Illinois R. 192; 42 Id. 273; 23 Barb. 10). In Clark v. City of Des Moines, 19 Iowa R. 209, the corporation is bound only when its agents keep within the limit of their authority. And again, "Negotiability will not validate obligations which are not binding for want of power to issue them. 23 N. Y. 464, 452; 1 A. L. Reg. (N. S.), 290.

Coupon bonds are put upon the footing of negotiable instruments, and are not liable, in the hands of an innocent holder, to the equities which attach to ordinary bonds. But their negotiability cannot enable the holder to subject property conveyed by deed of trust or mortgage for their security, which the grantor had no right to convey, or where he had a right to convey under restrictions, or conditions, no further than the restrictions or conditions will allow. Every purchaser of railroad bonds should look to the charter or statute, under authority of which they were issued and the mortgage was given to secure their payment.

The court is also of opinion, that the company having failed to complete the railroad from Fredericksburg to Orange Court-house, in the manner prescribed by the act of February 21st 1872, by the 1st of July 1873 (the extension of time allowed by the act of March 26, 1873), the forfeiture on that day became absolute and complete. And the state having entered and elected to hold to the forfeiture, "no inquisition, or judicial proceedings, or inquest, or finding of any kind, was required to consummate such forfeiture." Staats v. Board, 10 Gratt. 400; Wild's lessee v. Serpell, Id. 405; Hale v. Branscum, Id. 418.

Upon the whole, the court is of opinion, that there is no error in the decree of the Circuit court of Richmond, of the 2d day of July 1875, and that the same be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

I. IN GENERAL.

a. Kinds of Agencies—General and Special Agencies Defined.—Agencies are commonly divided into two sorts—(1) a general agency; (2) special agency. A general agency properly exists where there is a delegation of authority to do all acts connected with a particular trade, business or employment. On the other hand, a special agency exists where the authority delegated is to do a single act. Thus, a person, who is authorized by his principal to execute all deeds, sign all contracts, or purchase all goods required in a particular trade, business or employment, is a general agent in that trade, business or employment. But a person, who is authorized by his principal to execute a particular deed, or to sign a particular contract, or to purchase a particular parcel of merchandise, is a special agent. Davis v. Gordon, 87 Va. 562, 18 S. E. Rep. 85.

b. Liabilities of Principal in Each Kind Compared.—In the case of a general agency, the principal will be bound by the acts of his agent within the scope of the general authority conferred on him, although he violates by those acts his private instructions and directions, which are given to him by the principal, limiting, qualifying, suspending, or prohibiting the exercise of such authority under particular circumstances. But, on the contrary, in the case of a special agency, if the agent exceeds the special and limited authority conferred on him, the principal is not bound by his acts, but they become mere nullities, so far as he is concerned; unless, indeed, he has held him out as possessing a more enlarged authority. Davis v. Gordon, 87 Va. 564, 18 S. E. Rep. 85.

c. Ground of the Distinction.—"The ground of this distinction, says Story, is the public policy of preventing frauds upon innocent persons, and the encouragement of confidence in dealing with agents. If a person is held out to third persons, or to the public at large, by the principal, as having a general authority to act for and to bind him in a particular business or employment, it would be the height of injustice, and lead to the grossest frauds, to allow him to set up his own secret and private instructions to the agent, limiting that authority; and thus to defeat his acts and transactions under the agency, when the party dealing with him had, and could have, no notice of such instructions. In such cases, good faith requires that the principal should be bound by the acts of the agent, within the scope of his general authority; for he has held him out to the public as competent to do his acts, and to bind him thereby. The maxim of natural justice here applies with its full force, that he who, without intentional fraud, has enabled any person to do an act, which must be injurious to himself, or to another innocent party, shall himself suffer the injury rather than the innocent party, who has placed confidence in him. The maxim is founded in the soundest ethics, and is enforced to a large extent by courts of equity. Of course, the maxim falls in its application, when the party dealing with the agent has a full knowledge of the private instructions of the agent, or that

d. Reason of the Rule.—"A different rule would not only deter men from ever delegating power to others, and so put a stop to factors and agencies in commerce, but also vest a most dangerous discretion in courts of justice to vary the agreements of parties." The court in Stovall v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 246, 4 S. E. Rep. 379.

e. How Created.—An agency may be created by express words or acts of the principal, or it may be implied from his conduct and acquiescence. The nature and extent of an agency may be implied and inferred from circumstances. A common mode of appointment of an agent is by a written request or by implication from the recognition of the principal, or from his acquiescence. Ruffner, Donnally & Co. v. Hewitt, Kercheval & Co., 7 W. Va. 585.

f. The Term "Agent" Defined.—"Any one who undertakes to transact some business, or to manage some affair for another, by authority and on account of the latter, and to render an account of it, is denominated an agent." N. & W. R. Co. v. Cottrell, 83 Va. 517, 3 S. E. Rep. 123.

g. Whom It Includes.—"The term agent is of very wide application, and includes a great many classes of persons to which distinctive appellations are given—as factors, brokers, attorneys, cashiers of banks, clerks, consignees, etc." N. & W. R. Co. v. Cottrell, 83 Va. 517, 3 S. E. Rep. 123.

h. Delegation of Authority.—"An agent who has a bare power or authority must execute it himself and cannot delegate his authority to another." Smith v. Lowther, 35 W. Va. 300, 18 S. E. Rep. 999. In this case the court held that a trustee in a deed of trust, when he sells must be present, and cannot delegate such authority to sell to another.

i. City Councils Cannot Delegate Their Authority.—Public powers or trusts devolved by law or charter upon the council or governing body of a municipal corporation, to be exercised by it when and in such manner as it shall deem best, cannot be delegated to a committee or others. McCrowell v. City of Bristol, 89 Va. 652, 16 S. E. Rep. 867, cited and followed in Beal v. City of Roanoke, 90 Va. 77, 17 S. E. Rep. 728.

2. Attorneys at Law Cannot.—Counsel or attorneys to the record have now large powers in conducting the suits, and often concluding the interests of their clients. They are selected by parties for what are regarded as their ability, learning, integrity and fidelity, which are qualities of a personal character, and their duties and powers are not of a nature to be delegated to others by the attorneys who are first entrusted therewith. Others may, indeed, be requested or appointed by them to act in their place, but such appointment must first be authorized, or subsequently ratified, by the client, to give it validity. Ellis v. Heptinstall, 8 W. Va. 391.

1. Burden of Proof upon Party Affirming the Relation.—Where the maker of a note pays one not possessing the note, the burden of proving that such payee had authority to collect the money is on the debtor. Wooding v. Bradley, 76 Va. 614.

It is settled that in a case where plaintiff sues for specific execution of a purchase of land alleged to have been made by him from the agent of the owner, he must show, by evidence which is clear, competent, direct, and satisfactory, both the terms of the contract and the authority of the agent, or a ratification by the principal. Blair v. Sheridan, 86 Va. 527, 10 S. E. Rep. 414; Simmons v. Kramer, 88 Va. 411, 13 S. E. Rep. 902.

J. Where Governments of the Parties Are at War.—No agency can be created, where the governments of the respective parties are engaged in hostilities with each other. Small v. Lumpkin, 28 Gratt. 832. Yet where agencies existed prior to the hostilities, and are for a lawful purpose, and can be and are exercised without any intercourse or communication between the parties—such as agencies to collect and preserve, but not to transmit money or property—war between the respective governments of the parties will not affect the agency. Small v. Lumpkin, 28 Gratt. 832, citing and following Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Warwick, 20 Gratt. 614. See also, King v. Hanson, 4 Call 250; Hale v. Wall, 22 Gratt. 424.

II. NATURE AND EXTENT OF AUTHORITY.

a. Party Dealing with Agent Must Ascertain His Authority.—In all cases a party contracting with an agent must enquire into his authority: and either a state or corporation is bound only when its agents keep within the limits of their authority. Silliman v. F. O. & C. R. R. Co., 27 Gratt. 119.

"Where a person deals with an agent, it is his duty to ascertain the extent of the agency; he deals with him at his own risk; the law presumes him to know the limit of the agent's power; and if the agent exceeds his authority the contract will not bind the principal, but the agent." Curry v. Hale, 15 W. Va. 875.

One dealing with an agent acting under written power is taken to deal with the power spread out before him, and must inspect it to see whether the agent's act is authorized by the power. And where the agent is authorized to sell land, he cannot receive the purchase money, or sell on credit, unless specially authorized to do so. Dyer v. Duffy, 39 W. Va. 148, 19 S. E. Rep. 540.

"It is equally well settled that a party dealing with an agent acting under a written authority, must take notice of the extent and limits of that authority. He is to be regarded as dealing with the power before him; and he must at his peril, observe that the act done by the agent is legally identical with the act authorized by the power." The court in Stainback v. Read & Co., 11 Gratt. 286.

b. Presidents of Corporations—How Far Agents Ex Officio.—The president of a corporation is not ex officio the agent of the corporation to sell property which it may direct to be sold; and unless appointed the agent to sell, his representations are not binding on the corporation. Crump v. U. S. Mining Co., 7 Gratt. 352.

The president of a bank has very little inherent power. But usage may confer upon him special functions. Hodge v. First Nat. Bank, 22 Gratt. 51.

The president of a bank has no authority, virtute officii, to make any admissions which will release the maker of a note to the bank from his legal responsibility created by such note. Hodge v. First Nat. Bank, 22 Gratt. 51.

A president of a bank may be authorized by the directors to do any act which they are authorized by their charter to do and such authority may be inferred from circumstances; such as that he was in the habit of doing acts of the same general character. The directors may ratify any unauthorized act of the president provided they could have by their charter authorized him to do it. The acceptance of the benefits of an unauthorized contract is such a ratification. First Nat. Bank v. Kimberlands, 16 W. Va. 555.

Presidents and cashiers of banks have only such powers as may be incident to their offices respectively, in their very nature, in the absence of anything in the charter to the contrary, and all other powers needful to the management of the concerns and business of the bank reside alone in the directory. Hodge's Ex'or v. First Nat. Bank, 22 Gratt. 51, cited and approved in First Nat. Bank v. Kimberlands, 16 W. Va. 578.

c. How Far Authority Goes.—Says the court in Stainback v. Read & Co., 11 Gratt. 286, "It may be laid down as a rule of law, sanctioned alike by reason and authority, that a power of attorney given to an agent, to act in the name and on behalf of his principal, in the absence of anything to show a different intention, must be construed as giving authority to act only in the separate, individual business of the principal."

d. Holding out One as Agent.—If in consequence of a notorious agency, the agent is in the habit of drawing bills, which the principal has regularly paid, this is such an affirmance of his power to draw, that the principal will be bound to pay other bills, though the agent should misapply the money raised by such bills. Hoe v. Oxley, 1 Wash. 20.

Where an insurance company furnishes one with all needful papers and blanks, responds to his acts, approves permits of removal by him, and pays his rent, they thereby hold him out to the public as their agent, and are responsible for his acts. Hardin v. Alexandria Ins. Co., 90 Va. 418, 18 S. E. Rep. 911. See also, Deitz v. Prov. Wash. Ins. Co., 31 W. Va. 851, 8 S. E. Rep. 616; Wytheville Ins. & Banking Co. v. Teiger, 90 Va. 277, 18 S. E. Rep. 195.

e. Certain Powers Incident to Authority.—Certain powers are necessarily incident to the authority of an agent, as an authority to sell land implies an authority to do every thing necessary to complete the sale and make it binding; as the signing of a contract for sale. Smith v. Tate, 82 Va. 665, citing and following Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh 390. Also a power of attorney by the owner of land appointing the attorney, "to protect all his interests in and title to the land," is sufficient authority for the attorney to redeem the land for the owner from the purchaser thereof at a sale for delinquent taxes. Townshend v. Shaffer, 30 W. Va. 176, 8 S. E. Rep. 586. But an agent appointed to rent property or sell it at a stipulated price has no authority to divide the land or to rearrange the boundaries thereto. Fore v. Campbell, 82 Va. 808, 1 S. E. Rep. 180.

Sale of Personal Property—Implied Authority.—A general agent to sell personal property is presumed to have power to make such warranties with reference to the property as are usual and customary in like sales in that locality. It is competent for the party relying upon such warranty to prove as a usage of trade, what warranties are usually demanded by the buyer and given by the agents of the seller in effecting sales of similar articles in that locality. A restriction upon the power of the agent to make the usual warranties in effecting like sales, of which the buyer has no notice or knowledge, is not binding on him. If there be evidence tending to prove what warranties are usually given by agents in effecting like sale, it is for the jury to determine whether, in the particular case, the agent was clothed with the requisite authority. Reese v. Bates, 94 Va. 321, 26 S. E. Rep. 865.

A general agent to sell is authorized to do whatever is usual in the market to carry out the object of his agency. But it is for the jury to determine upon the evidence what is usual. It is not necessary for the principal to have notice of the course of business. If such agent, in accordance with the usage of trade of the place of sale, gives a warranty of the quality of the goods sold, which is not in itself unjust to his principal, the latter will be bound by it, although ignorant of such usage. Reese v. Bates, 94 Va. 321, 26 S. E. Rep. 865.

Sale of Land—Authority to Receive Purchase Money.—When the owner of land authorizes another to sell the same, the authority of the agent to receive so much of the purchase money as is to be paid in hand, is a necessary incident to the power to sell. Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh 387. This case is severely criticised by GREEN, J., in Mann v. Robinson, 19 W. Va. 56, 42 Am. Rep. 771, which holds that where the owner of land authorizes an agent to make a contract for the sale thereof, and it is done by the agent, he has no authority as an incident to the authority conferred upon him to collect any portion of the purchase-money, which by the terms of the contract are to be paid at a future time. Mann's Ex'rs v. Robinson, 19 W. Va. 49, but says GREEN, J., in the same case, "If the property be personal, the authority to sell for cash would carry with it generally the power and authority to receive the purchase money."

Authority to Confess Judgment.—An agent authorized to confess judgment, may confess judgment with a stay of execution. Calwells v. Shelds, 2 Rob. 305. He may also do so before the action is brought. Ins. Co. v. Barley, 16 Gratt. 363. It is not necessary that such agent or attorney in fact, be an attorney at law. Ins. Co. v. Barley, 16 Gratt. 363.

f. Instances of Lack of Authority.—Under a power of attorney, authorizing the attorney to act in every species of business wherein the principal may be concerned or interested in the United States, held, notwithstanding the broad terms of the power, the attorney is not authorized to pledge the property of his principal, to secure the individual debt of the attorney. Hewes v. Doddridge, etc., 1 Rob. 143.

A power of attorney to draw, endorse and accept bills, in the name of the principal, does not authorize the attorney to draw a bill in the joint names of himself and his principal. Stainback v. Read, 11 Gratt. 281. And also where authority is given to endorse for several jointly, the agent cannot bind the principals by endorsing severally. U. S. Bank v. Beirne, 1 Gratt. 234.

g. Powers, etc., of Real Estate Agents.—A real estate broker or agent is one who negotiates the sale of real estate. His business generally is to find a purchaser who is willing to buy on the terms fixed by the owner. He has no implied authority to bind his principal by signing a contract of sale. Nor has he such authority to fix terms of sale, time of possession, nor the covenants to be contained in the deed. Nor can he materially change terms of sale fixed by the principal without his consent. He is a special agent, and must pursue his instructions and act within the scope of his limited power; and those who deal with him, if he exceeds his authority, do so at their peril. Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 581, 24 S. E. Rep. 258.

h. Authority Necessary Generally—Sealed Instruments.—The authority of the agent must be commensurate with the act he performs. So if the act of the agent is the execution of an instrument under seal, his authority to do so must be under seal. Preston v. Hull, 23 Gratt. 604; Penn v. Hamlett, 27

Gratt. 337. But he may do any thing else that the principal could do for himself under a parol authority. Piercy v. Hedrick, 2 W. Va. 458.

Making Insertions in Bond.—If an agent make insertions in a deed or bond, his authority must be under seal, to bind the principal. Preston v. Hull, 23 Gratt. 600.

III. MANNER OF EXECUTING AUTHORITY.

a. Agent Must Follow Instructions of Principal.—It is a well established rule of law that the agent must follow the principal's instructions, so where the principal appoints an agent to buy grain, and the agent buys tobacco, the seller of the tobacco cannot recover of the principal. Hopkins v. Blane, 1 Call 362.

S gives G power of attorney to execute any bond, to the amount of $25,000.00, which the county court may require S to give for the faithful discharge of his duties as treasurer of said county. The court requires bond of $40,000.00 which G executes. Held, this is not the bond of S. Stovall v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 246, 4 S. E. Rep. 379.

Agent Must Follow Principal's Instructions—Exception.—There are exceptions to the rule of law that the agent must follow the principal's instructions or else be liable to the principal for any damages that the principal may incur by such disobedience. "With regard to instructions, there are two qualifications which are naturally and necessarily implied in every case of mercantile agency. The one is that they are applicable only to the ordinary course of things. And the agent will be justified in cases of unforeseen emergency, in deviating from them." ANDERSON, J., in Bernard v. Maury, 20 Gratt. 434.

b. Joint Power to Be Exercised Jointly.—A joint power to several persons must be jointly exercised. Union Bank v. Beirne, 1 Gratt. 236.

c. Manner of Entering into Contract—When Both Principal and Agent Liable.—"When a contract is made by an agent, the question whether the principal or agent, or both, are liable, is, generally, a question of intention. The principal alone is liable if the facts are all known, and there is no special reason for holding the agent liable, or an intention to make him liable is not plainly indicated by the form of the contract or otherwise. The contract is made for the principal's benefit, is in fact the principal's contract, by the procuration of the agent, and it is just and right that the principal, and not the agent, should bear the burthen directly as he must ultimately, unless there be some good reason for the contrary. The agent is never liable unless it appear to have been intended by the parties to the contract that he should be liable: always presuming of course that the agent has strictly pursued his authority; for if he has not, he is personally liable. When the contract is by parol, an intention to make the agent liable must appear from the facts and circumstances of the case, as they are shown in evidence. When the contract is in writing, an intention to make the agent liable, must appear on the face of the writing, or from the language therein used; and if such intention so appear, parol evidence to show the contrary is inadmissible; upon the familiar principle that parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or contradict a written contract." MONCURE, J., in Walker v. Christian, 21 Gratt. 293.

Government Agents.—A public officer, contracting on the part of government, is not personally liable. Syme v. Butler, 1 Call 105, approved and followed in Tutt v. Lewis, 3 Call 233. See also, Walker v. Christian, 21 Gratt. 293.

"A very different rule, in general, prevails in regard to public agents; for in the ordinary course of things, an agent, contracting in behalf of the government, or of the public, is not personally bound by such a contract, even though he would be by the terms of the contract, if it were an agency of a private nature. The reason of the distinction is that it is not to be presumed, either that the public agent means to bind himself personally in acting as a functionary of the government, or, that the party dealing with him in his public character means to rely on his individual responsibility. On the contrary, the natural presumption in such cases is, that the contract was made on the credit and responsibility of the government itself, as possessing an entire ability to fulfil all its just contracts far beyond that of any private man; and that it is ready in good faith to fulfil them with punctilious promptitude, and in a spirit of liberal courtesy. Great public inconveniences would result from a different doctrine, considering the various public functionaries, which the government must employ, in order to transact its ordinary business and operations; and many persons would be deterred from accepting of many offices of trust under the government if they were held personally liable upon all their official contracts." The court by MONCURE, J., in Walker v. Christian, 21 Gratt. 297.

1. Instances.—In Early v. Wilkinson, 9 Gratt. 68, a note signed

"Robert H. Early,
[For Sam'l H. Early.]"

was held to be the note of Robert H. Early.

In Exchange Bank v. Lewis County, 28 W. Va. 273, the court held that a note signed "James Bennett, Agent for Lewis County," to be the individual note of James Bennett. The court going further says, "The best mode for an agent to sign a note for his principal, so that it may clearly appear he is the mere scribe of the principal, is as follows: 'A. B. by his attorney or agent C. D.,' or 'A. B. by C. D.'"

A deed for the conveyance of land, purporting to be made by A. attorney in fact for B. witnesses "that the said attorney in fact, A. for and in consideration etc., doth release and quitclaim etc.," and concludes "in testimony whereof the said B. hath hereunto set his hand and seal," but is signed with the name of A. (not styled attorney) a scroll being annexed to the signature.

CABELL, J., in holding that such deed was not the deed of B. says: "The legal title to land cannot pass from him who has it, but by his deed. Such deed may be executed by his attorney duly authorized for the purpose. But it must be so executed as to be the deed of the principal. It is not sufficient, therefore, that it shall be executed by the person who was authorized to make it; but it must be done by him as attorney. For this purpose it is necessary that the attorney shall either sign the name of the principal, with a seal annexed, stating it to be done by him as attorney for the principal; or he may sign his own name, with a seal annexed, stating it to be for the principal. In either of these forms, the deed becomes the deed of the principal; and if every thing else be correct, it conveys the title of the principal. But if the deed be signed and sealed by the attorney, neither in the name of the principal, nor in his own name as attorney for the principal, it is not the deed of the principal."

In Rand & Minsker v. Hale, 8 W. Va. 495, Hale was sued on a draft, drawn by Chas. F. Hale, Pres't, as president of the Forest Hill Mining & Manf.

Co. in payment of grain, etc., delivered to said company by the plaintiffs. BROWN, P., in holding Hale personally liable on the draft said: "The learned counsel for the defendant has argued with force and ingenuity to show that upon the case made, the Forest Hill Mining and Manufacturing Company was liable. However that may be, it is not necessary to the determination of this case, nor is it the inquiry we are called on to investigate. The true question is, whether or not the defendant is liable. And after a careful consideration of the subject and a review of the authorities cited in the argument, I am led to the conclusion, without hesitation or doubt, that the defendant was liable personally on the bill of exchange, which as between him and the holder is his own individual contract and undertaking; in other words, it purports on its face to be the order of the defendant and the addition of the word 'Pres't' to his signature does not shift the responsibilities from him to the company of which he was the president, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned."

M gives to J a power of attorney to sell her lands in the county of R, with power to J to appoint other agents or attorneys. J executes a power to C to sell the lands, but the power only authorizes C to act in the name of J, and it is signed by J in his own name, without any reference to his principal. This power does not authorize C to convey the land as attorney of M. Stinchcomb v. Marsh, 15 Gratt. 202.

While the courts should generally refuse to allow a recovery against one person on a negotiable instrument made by another, on proof that the latter was acting as his agent, yet a person may make the signature of another his own by using, or allowing it to be used as such in the course of his business, and that he will and should, under such circumstances when clearly proved, be as much bound as if his own name was affixed to the bill or other negotiable instrument in question. Devendorf v. West Virginia Oil and Oil Land Company, 17 W. Va. 135.

"A person owning land may by parol authorize another to make a contract for the sale thereof; and if a contract be made under such authority, the owner of the land may be charged by virtue of the contract, provided there be a memorandum thereof in writing signed by the person authorized to make it. The signing by the agent of his own name is sufficient. The statute does not make it indispensable, that he should sign the name of the party to be charged therewith." The court in Conaway v. Sweeney, 24 W. Va. 649, citing Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh 387.

"It is a sufficient execution of a deed by an attorney in fact for his principal, if he signs the name of the principal with a seal annexed, stating it to be done by him as attorney for the principal; or if he signs his own name with a seal annexed, stating it to be for the principal." The court in Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. 110, 119.

The signing by the agent in his own name is sufficient. Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh 387.

IV. THE RELATION AS BETWEEN PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

a. Fiduciary Character of the Relation.—The relations of principal and agent, attorney and client, come under the equitable doctrine that any person who occupies a fiduciary relation to another, is bound not to exercise to the benefit of himself and to the prejudice of the party, to whom he stands in such relation, any of the powers or rights, or any knowledge or advantage of any description which he derives from such confidential position. Newcomb et al. v. Brooks et al., 16 W. Va. 58, citing Carter, etc., v. Harris, 4 Rand. 204; Buckles v. Lafferty, 2 Rob. 292; Segar v. Edwards, 11 Leigh 213.

b. Equity Will Compel an Account between.—Where the agency is of a fiduciary character, a bill in equity will lie on behalf of the principal to compel the agent to give an account. Zetelle v. Myers, 19 Gratt. 62, cited and followed in Merchants' Bank v. Jeffries, 21 W. Va. 504. See also, Berkshire v. Evans, 4 Leigh 223; Coffman v. Sangston, 21 Gratt. 263.

c. Personal Representative of Principal May Have an Account of Agency in Equity.—A bill in equity will lie, by an administrator of a principal, against the general agent of his intestate for a discovery and an account of the transactions of the latter with his principal. Simmons v. Simmons, 83 Gratt. 451, cited and followed in Huff v. Thrash, 75 Va. 546; Vilwig v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 79 Va. 449.

d. Attorney Cannot Purchase Client's Property at Sale.—"If a client's property real or personal is sold in the process of a suit, his attorney cannot be permitted to purchase it without the express consent of the client." GREEN, J., in Newcomb et al. v. Brooks et al., 16 W. Va. 69.

And if he does so, such purchase will be properly set aside even if it is made at an auction sale, for full value, and by perfectly fair means. Newcomb v. Brooks (supra).

An agent employed to look after and rent the land of another, who is a non-resident, cannot allow the property to be returned delinquent for taxes, and then buy the property himself at the tax sale. Morris v. Joseph, 1 W. Va. 256.

e. Instances That Show the Fiduciary Character of the Relation.—The following instances show how zealously the courts protect the interests of the principal, how they view the whole transaction, and set it aside, at the merest suspicion that the agent is using the agency for his own interests and not in furtherance of those of his principals.

Loyalty to his trust is the most important duty which an agent owes to his principal. The dealings of an agent with his principal are closely scrutinized, and the voidable acts of the agent will not be deemed to have been confirmed by the principal except after the fullest disclosure by the agent. Confirmation must be a solemn and deliberate act of the principal, after full disclosure by the agent. If the principal's right to impeach a transaction be concealed from him, or a free disclosure be not made to him of every circumstance which is material for him to know, or if confirmation takes place under pressure or constraint, or by the exercise of undue influence, or under the delusion that the original transaction is binding on him, or if it be merely a continuation of the original transaction, the confirmation amounts to nothing. Francis v. Cline, 96 Va. 201, 31 S. E. Rep. 10.

An agent to buy or sell, or to act in any other business, will not be permitted to make profits for himself out of the transaction. All profits or advantages made, or contracted for by him in the business, beyond the ordinary compensation to be paid by his principal, enure to the benefit of his principal. And this rule applies equally to promoters of a corporation who, like agents, occupy a fiduciary relation to the new corporation. Central Land Co. v. Obenchain, 92 Va. 130, 22 S. E. Rep. 876.

An agent to sell cannot become a purchaser, except after the fullest disclosure to his principal of all facts which may affect his interest. The relation between the parties is one of trust and confidence, and the utmost good faith is exacted of the agent. He cannot sign a contract for the sale of the principal's land when he is himself interested as purchaser. If such contract be made by the agent the principal will not be held to a ratification thereof, except after full knowledge of all the material facts. If these be either suppressed or unknown, the ratification will be treated as invalid, because founded on fraud or mistake. Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 361, 24 S. E. Rep. 258.

An agent employed to buy cannot himself become the seller. See Colbert et al. v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 411, 16 S. E. Rep. 246.

An agent employed to sell cannot himself become the purchaser. Colbert et al. v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 411, 16 S. E. Rep. 246, citing Lamar v. Hale, 79 Va. 151, Statham et als. v. Ferguson's Adm'r et als., 5 Gratt. 40.

In Moseley's Heirs v. Buck et al., 3 Munf. 232, a sale to agents was rescinded where it was proven that the agents assured their principal, the vendor, that the land would not bring more than a certain price per acre, when in fact the principal had been offered more, through his agents, who concealed such offer from him.

B was an agent for the sale of a tract of land, and concealed from his principal the knowledge which he had acquired as such agent respecting the price at which the land could be sold, and taking undue advantage of his position as agent purchased the land from the principal, who was then ignorant of material matters affecting the value thereof at that time, and sold it for a much larger sum. Held, that it was the duty of B to have disclosed to the principal his knowledge thus acquired before he made such purchase, and that he must account to the principal for the sum he received for the land over and above the amount paid by him to the principal. Bell v. Bell, 3 W. Va. 183.

Where an attorney or agent undertakes the collection of a claim for his client or principal and, while such relation exists, buys the claim from his principal, whether false representations were made or not to induce the principal to sell his claim, or even if the claim was sold for an adequate price, the sale is voidable at the option of the principal. Lane v. Black, 21 W. Va. 618.

An agent authorized to purchase land for his principals, purchases in his own name, and takes a conveyance to himself. He is bound to convey the land to his principals, upon their complying with the terms of his contract of purchase, in the same right and condition in which the same was conveyed to him. If the agent has disposed of a part of the land purchased, so that the principals cannot obtain that part, the agent will be held to account for the same at its true value at the time when it should have been conveyed to his principals. Wellford et als. v. Chancellor, 5 Gratt. 89.

An agent may deal directly with his principal, and sell to him property he was employed to buy for him, provided he makes fair and full disclosure to his principal of all the facts and circumstances within his knowledge in any way calculated to enable his principal to judge of the propriety of the transaction, and there is no deception or concealment on the part of the agent; and, in a controversy between a principal and his agent over the validity of such an agreement, the burden of proof is on the agent to show such disclosure, and the perfect fairness of the transaction. Jackson v. Pleasonton, 95 Va. 654, 29 S. E. Rep. 680.

The general rule is that an agent may not act for both parties. Neither can he be both buyer and seller. See Segar v. Edwards, 11 Leigh 213.

A man cannot be the agent of both the buyer and the seller in the same transaction, without the intelligent consent of both parties; nor can an agent act for himself and his principal, nor for two principals on opposite sides in the same transaction, without like consent. All such transactions are voidable, and may be repudiated by the principal without proof or injury on his part. Nothing will defeat this right of the principal except his own confirmation after full knowledge of all the facts. The object of this principle is to remove all possible temptation from the agent. Ferguson v. Gooch, 94 Va. 1, 26 S. E. Rep. 397.

f. Compromises between Principal and Agent.—It is competent for a principal and agent to compromise a controversy between them; and such compromise, if fairly made with a full knowledge of all the facts, and where no undue influence is exerted, or improper advantage of the situation of the principal is taken, is binding on the principal, though he may by such compromise, yield a portion of his rights. But if the agent misrepresents a material fact, the compromise will be vacated; and this especially, where advantage is taken of the circumstances of the principal. Wellford et als. v. Chancellor, 5 Gratt. 80.

g. Agent Liable to Principal for Damages Where He is Disobedient.—If an agent having sold goods belonging to his principal, be ordered by him while they are yet in transitu, not to deliver them to the buyer, whose solvency he doubts, and the agent nevertheless delivers the goods, without demanding indemnity, he is liable to the principal for any loss that the principal may incur by reason of such delivery. Howatt v. Davis, 5 Munf. 84; Ruffner, etc., Co. v. Hewitt, etc., Co., 7 W. Va. 585.

If the agent unnecessarily exceeds his commission, or risks the property of his principal, he thereby renders himself responsible to his principal for all losses and damage which are the natural consequences of his act. Ruffner, Donnally & Co. v. Hewitt, Kercheval & Co., 7 W. Va. 586.

h. Conversion by Agent of Principal's Goods.—In McVeigh v. Bank, etc., 26 Gratt. 188, the president of a bank, which had suspended operations owing to the war, collects money owing the bank, tries to lend it out for the bank, but fails, invests it with some of his own in tobacco, which speculation turns out bad. Held, he is regarded as a borrower of the amount, and must make it good, although as the court says, "We see no reason to impute any blame to the defendant. He seems to have acted throughout with a conscientious regard for what he considered the best interest of the bank. But his motives, however conscientious, cannot exonerate him from liability for the collection and appropriations of money belonging to the plaintiff."

i. Care Required by Agent without Reward.—An agent without reward will not be required to use more diligence than would be used by a prudent man in the management of his own affairs. Pate v. McClure, 4 Rand. 164.

j. What Agent to Receive Payment of Debt Due Principal in.—An agent authorized to collect a debt can receive payment thereof in money only, and he has no right to accept anything else in satisfaction without express authority from his principal, and if he does, it will be no payment, unless ratified or assented to by the principal. Mann's Ex'rs v. Robinson, 19 W. Va. 49, citing and following Wilkinson v. Holloway, 7 Leigh 284; Wiley v. Mahood, 10 W. Va. 221.

Confederate States treasury notes were not such money as an attorney could receive in payment of his client's note, the principal being a citizen of the United States at the time. Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 539.

It may be conclusively inferred from facts and circumstances shown in evidence, that an attorney during the late civil war, was authorized by his client, to receive payment on a claim in his hands, in Confederate money, all the parties being and residing at the time within the Confederate lines. Ellis v. Heptinstall, 8 W. Va. 338.

A was attorney for C, in West Virginia, before the late war. At the beginning of the war A joined the Confederate army. Held, the relation of agency ceased. Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 539.

An attorney at law employed to collect a debt may receive payment in money, but has no right to accept anything else in satisfaction, without express authority. Wilkinson & Co. v. Holloway, 7 Leigh 277; Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 639; Smith's Adm'r v. Lamberts, 7 Gratt. 138; Harper, Adm'r, v. Harvey et al., 4 W. Va. 539; Wiley v. Mahood et al., 10 W. Va. 221; Spence v. Rose, 28 W. Va. 333.

An agent, with authority to collect a note of his principal which is payable in money, has no authority to receive in payment of such note anything but money. If in such case the agent receives from the debtor notes or claims on a third party in payment of such note, that will not constitute a payment unless the claims so received are actually collected by the agent. Spence v. Rose, 28 W. Va. 333.

k. Principal Liable to Agent for Damages and Expenses Incurred in the Agency.—If an agent has, without his own default, incurred losses or damages in the course of transacting the business of his agency, or in following the instructions of his principal, he will be entitled to full compensation. Ruffner, Donnally & Co. v. Hewitt, Kercheval & Co., 7 W. Va. 586.

Generally, it is the right of an agent to be reimbursed for all his advances, expenses, and disbursements, made in the course of his agency, on account of or for the benefit of his principal, when the advances, expenses and disbursements have been properly incurred and reasonably and in good faith paid, without any default on the part of the agent. Ruffner, Donnally & Co. v. Hewitt, Kercheval & Co., 7 W. Va. 585.

l. Agent Has Lien on Property of Principal in His Possession for Advances, Labor, Expenses, etc.—An agent with unrestricted management of a mercantile farming and general trading business, carried on in his name, with the right to buy, sell, and exchange, has a lien on all the property accumulated in such business, and in his possession, for all advancements made, expenses and liabilities incurred, proper, necessary, or incident to such business, which is superior in right to any lien which may be created on such property by the reputed owner thereof; and while he may not, without the consent of those interested, transfer or assign such lien to another, yet he has the right to sell a sufficient amount of such property to satisfy such liabilities, or may transfer the possession thereof to a trustee, to be held by him until such liabilities are fully discharged, and the lien thereby extinguished.

The possession of the trustee under such circumstances is the possession of the agent, and the lien is not released or waived.

Such trustee, with the consent of the interested parties, may sell the property and extinguish the lien. Dewing et al. v. Hutton et al., 21 S. E. Rep. 780, 40 W. Va. 521.

m. Agent Not Responsible Where Goods Are Lost Not through His Fault.—Money received by an executor during the war, belonging to a citizen of Indiana, was confiscated by the Confederate government. Held, the Confederate government in the exercise of her belligerent rights, had authority to confiscate the property of alien enemies, and the executor is not responsible for the money confiscated. Newton's Ex'or v. Bushong et al., 22 Gratt. 628, 12 Am. Rep. 558.

If the person with whom bonds are left for collection puts them into the hands of a lawyer to collect, he is not further responsible, except for moneys received from the lawyer. Hawkins v. Minor, 5 Call 118.

n. Where Agent Is Unjustly Dismissed.—As to the remedies of a servant or agent unjustly dismissed, see 1 Minor's Inst. (4th Ed.) 212 et seq., but this subject comes more properly under the law of master and servant. W contracts with T to hire his services for a year for a fixed sum. In the course of the year W dismisses T from his employment without sufficient cause for the dismissal. It is error to hold that T, if entitled to recover at all upon the contract, is entitled to recover the hire or wages for the whole year. His right of recovery, in case of a discharge without cause, should be limited to the amount of damages actually sustained by such illegal discharge. Willoughby v. Thomas, 24 Gratt. 521, cited and approved in Crescent Horse-Shoe Co. v. Eynon, 95 Va. 160, 27 S. E. Rep. 935.

In estimating the damages incurred by the servant, by reason of his wrongful discharge, it is error to take into consideration other elements of damage than those which were caused by his dismissal. Crescent Horse-Shoe Co. v. Eynon, 95 Va. 151, 27 S. E. Rep. 935.

In order to recover special damages the agent must allege them; he cannot recover special damages under a general count or ad damnum claim of damages. Lee v. Hill, 84 Va. 919, 6 S. E. Rep. 478.

That the servant does not do his work in a reasonably skillful manner is sufficient cause for dismissal. But reasonable skill is all that is required, unless the servant holds himself out as having a higher degree of skill. Crescent Horse-Shoe Co. v. Eynon, 95 Va. 151, 27 S. E. Rep. 935.

o. Agent Should Keep and Render Account of the Agency.—It is, ordinarily, the duty of an agent where the business in which he is employed admits of it, or requires it, to keep an account of all his transactions on behalf of his principal, not only of his payments and disbursements, but also of his receipts; and render such accounts to his principal, at all reasonable times, without any suppression, concealment or overcharge. Ruffner, Donnally & Co. v. Hewitt, Kercheval & Co., 7 W. Va. 586.

p. Agent Loses Right to Compensation by Neglecting the Agency.—Says the court in Segar v. Parrish, 20 Gratt. 681, "However solvent agents and trustees may be, or however honest may be their intentions, if they deliberately retain trust funds in their own hands, appropriate them to their own private use, and refuse or fail for years to render any account to their principals, they should be held to forfeit all claim for compensation. Any other rule is a premium for negligence and an encouragement to persons occupying relations of trust and confidence, to retain money not their own."

V. RIGHT AND LIABILITIES BETWEEN THE PRINCIPAL AND THIRD PARTIES.

a. Special Agencies.—The principal is not generally responsible if the agent goes beyond his power in a special agency. Stovall v. Com., 84 Va. 246, 4 S. E. Rep. 879; Hopkins v. Blane, 1 Call 362; Davis v. Gordon, 87 Va. 559, 13 S. E. Rep. 35; Fore v. Campbell, 2 Va. 808, 1 S. E. Rep. 180.

b. Principal Liable for Agent's Contracts within the Scope of His Authority.—The general rule is that the principal is liable for the contracts of the agent made within the scope of his authority. Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh 387; Hopkins v. Blane, 1 Call 362; Spence v. Rose, 28 W. Va. 333.

c. Principal Liable for Negligence of Agent—When.—Where an agent acts negligently in the regular course of his employment, the law is well settled that the principal must bear the consequences of his agent's negligence, as between himself and an innocent third person, even though the act or omission of the agent, which constitutes the negligence, was wholly unauthorized by the principal or even positively forbidden by him. De Voss et als. v. City of Richmond, 18 Gratt. 338, 350.

Never Liable Criminally.—The principal will not generally be liable criminally for the negligence or acts of the agent. Lewis v. Commonwealth, 4 Leigh 664. In which case it was held that a sheriff was not criminally responsible for the act of his deputy in allowing a prisoner to escape.

Public Officers Not Liable for Subordinate's Default.—A public officer is not responsible to third persons for the negligence or default of his official subordinates. Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Gratt. 230. It is otherwise if such subordinate is not an official, but a private agent. Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Gratt. 230.

Insurance Companies.—An insurance company establishing a local agency, must be held responsible to the parties with whom they transact business, for the acts and declarations of the agent, within the scope of his employment, as if they proceeded from the principal. Cont. Ins. Co. v. Kasey, 25 Gratt. 323.

Instance.—If A give a power of attorney, in due form, to B, authorizing him "to draw checks, indorse notes, and generally to do all and every act and deed, towards the execution of his business at a certain bank;" and deposit the said power in the bank, to be inspected, when called for, by any person interested in matters relating thereto; he is bound to make good, to a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration, any indorsement of a note negotiable at the said bank, which B may make in his name as his attorney; notwithstanding the real object of the said power, verbally declared at the time of its execution, was to authorize B to renew certain accommodation paper then in bank, and not to indorse any other paper. Mann v. King, 6 Munf. 423.

d. Principal's Goods Not Liable for Agent's Debt—May Trace His Property in Agent's Hands.—A party whose entire business consists in selling agricultural implements, wagons, etc., as agent for the manufacturer thereof, receiving a commission for his services in disposing of the same, cannot be regarded either as a trader or a commission merchant; and although his name, with the addition of the words "M'f'r's Agent," be on a sign nailed on the outside of the building in which he does business, in a conspicuous place, farming implements which he has on sale as an agent for the manufacturer are not liable to execution and sale as his property, under the provisions of section 13 of chapter 100 of the Code of West Virginia. Brown Manuf'g Co. v. William Deering & Co., 13 S. E. Rep. 383, 35 W. Va. 255.

Says the court in Overseers of the Poor v. Bank of Va. et als., 2 Gratt. 548, "The well-settled principles of law entitle a principal, in all cases where he can trace his property, whether it be in the hands of the agent, or of his representatives, or assignees, to reclaim it, unless it has been transferred bona fide to a purchaser of it, or assignee for value, without notice. In such cases, it is wholly immaterial whether the property be in its original state, or has been converted into money, securities, negotiable instruments or other property; if it be distinguishable, and separable from the other property or assets; and has an earmark, or other appropriate identity. The product, or substitute of the original thing, has the nature of the original thing itself imparted to it, as long as it can be ascertained to be such product, or substitute; and the right of the principal thereto ceases only when the means of ascertainment fail; and this is the case when the subject is turned into money, and is mixed and confounded in a general mass of the same description, and becomes incapable of being distinguished from the mass of the moneys of the agent."

a. Principal Not Responsible Where Credit is Given to Agent.—C, president of a railroad company, and A, agent of the company, borrow money from H, and give their own bond for it. The money is borrowed for the use of the company, which is itself without credit, and it is immediately turned over to the company. C and A become insolvent. Held, the money having been loaned to C and A individually, with the knowledge that it was for the use of the company, and H having chosen to take the responsibility of C and A, cannot afterwards make the company his debtor. Strider v. Winch. & Pot. R. R. Co., 21 Gratt. 440.

f. Notice to Agent Notice to Principal—When.—It may be stated as a general rule that notice to the agent while acting in the scope of his authority is notice to the principal. Hart et al. v. Sandy et al., 39 W. Va. 644, 20 S. E. Rep. 665, citing French v. Loyal Co., 5 Leigh 680, 715; Newlin v. Beard et al., 6 W. Va. 111, and Fidelity Ins., etc., Co. v. Shenandoah Val. R. Co., 32 W. Va. 244, 9 S. E. Rep. 180; Simmons v. Ins. Co., 8 W. Va. 474.

But such notice must have reference to that business of the principal, in which the agent is engaged. Hart v. Sandy, 39 W. Va. 644, 20 S. E. Rep. 665.

g. Agents Dismissing Suit without Authority Does Not Affect Principal's Right against Debtor.—A special agent who is authorized to dismiss the suit of his principal only on special terms designated in writing transgresses his authority in dismissing the suit on any other terms, without the knowledge of his principal, and the right of the principal to prosecute a new suit for the same debt, and to recover judgment therefor against principal and surety is unaffected by such dismissal. Winfree v. First Nat. Bk. of Lexington, 97 Va. 83, 33 S. E. Rep. 375.

h. Admissions and Declarations of Agent Bind Principal—When.—The admissions of an agent bind the principal only while the transaction is going on. They must be made dum fervet opus, if made afterwards they are mere hearsay. Lake v. Tyree, 90 Va. 719, 19 S. E. Rep. 787.

Must Be within Scope of His Authority.—An insurer is responsible not only for the acts and declarations of its general agents, within the scope of their authority, but also for the acts and declarations of the clerks and employees of such agents, to whom the latter delegate authority to discharge their functions, within the scope of the agent's authority, and while engaged about the business of the principal. Goode v. Georgia Home Ins. Co., 92 Va. 392, 23 S. E. Rep. 744.

i. Enforcing Contract Made by Agent Where Third Person is Party to Agent's Fraud.—A purchaser from an agent empowered to sell real property, cannot insist on the validity of such sale, if he had knowledge of any fraud or breach of trust in the agent. Morris v. Terrell, 2 Rand. 6.

VI. RIGHT AND LIABILITIES BETWEEN AGENT AND THIRD PARTIES.

a. Agent Not Generally Liable for Contracts Made on Principal's Behalf.—An agent who fully discloses his agency and the name of the principal, and contracts only as the agent of his principal, incurs no personal responsibility. While he may bind himself personally, the presumption is otherwise, and the burden of proof is on him who undertakes to establish the agent's personal liability. In the case at bar, it is clear that the agent contracted for a disclosed principal, and that credit was extended to the principal. The benefits of the contract were accepted by the principal, and there is no personal liability on the agent. The mere fact that the plaintiff instituted a suit on the contract against the agent, which suit has never been prosecuted, cannot relieve the principal from liability on the contract. In this case there were not "two concurrent debtors for the same debt." Richmond, etc., Ry. Co. v. N. Y., etc., Ry. Co., 95 Va. 386, 28 S. E. Rep. 573.

b. Agent Liable Personally for Torts Committed at Principal's Command—When.—"The command of the principal will not justify the agent in committing a trespass, nor even an apparent wrong; in such a case, both the principal and agent are liable to the party injured. But where the conduct of the agent is within the limits of the authority confided to him, is fair, and unattended by circumstances sufficient to apprise him that he is acting wrongfully in relation to others; or, in other words, where he does not commit an apparent wrong, the principal and not the agent is responsible for the act." CABELL, J., in Travis v. Claiborne, 5 Munf. 438.

The agent may recover of the principal any damages he may incur, by reason of the commission of a tortious act, by the principal's direction, provided that the agent acted in good faith and the honest belief that it was lawful for him to do such act. See cases gathered in Lile's Notes to 1 Minor's Inst. (4th Ed.) p. 81.

In Travis v. Claiborne, 4 Munf. 435, the agent was not responsible to the trustee for the conversion of a slave, held by his principal under a deed of trust, where the agent had no notice of such deed.

c. Agent Cannot Maintain Suit in His Own Name.—An agent or attorney in fact cannot maintain a suit in his own name, not even in a court of equity. Jones v. Hart, 1 H. & M. 471.

VII. WHERE THE PRINCIPAL IS NOT DISCLOSED BY AGENT.

Generally.—"When one contracts as agent, without naming a principal, his acts enure to the benefit of the party, although at the time uncertain and unknown, for whom it shall turn out that he intended to act, provided the party thus entitled to be principal ratify the contract. And where the credit is given solely to the servant, if it be in ignorance of who the principal is, although with knowledge that the servant is acting on behalf of another, and much more if without such knowledge, the principal, when discovered, is liable. And parol evidence is admissible to show who is the principal when he is undisclosed by the contract in order to have the benefit thereof or to be charged therewith; and in such case the principal is bound in addition to the agent, for the agent is bound also by the terms of the contract." The court in Waddill v. Sebree, 88 Va. 1015, 14 S. E. Rep. 849.

Party May Abandon Right against Agent and Look to Principal.—Where a person dealing with another, finds out that such party is not dealing for himself, but merely as agent for another, he may abandon his right against the agent and look to the principal. Poole & Co. v. Rice, 9 W. Va. 73.

Agent Always Responsible.—"It is well settled that a person contracting as agent will be personally responsible, where, if at the time of making the contract, he does not disclose the fact of his agency." GREEN, J., in Poole & Co. v. Rice, 9 W. Va. 73. In such a case the principal is also liable.

Contract Not under Seal—Both Principal or Agent May Sue on It.—Where a contract, not under seal, is made by an agent in his own name, for an undisclosed principal, either the agent or the principal may sue upon it, and parol evidence is admissible to enable the principal to show that he is the real contracting party. Deitz v. Prov. Wash. Ins. Co., 31 W. Va. 851, 8 S. E. Rep. 616, cited and approved in Murdock v. Franklin Ins. Co., 33 W. Va. 407, 10 S. E. Rep. 778.

Evidence Always Admissible to Disclose Principal.—In cases of undisclosed principals, parol evidence is always admissible to show who is the principal, that he may either take the benefits or the responsibilities of the agent's act. Waddill v. Sebree, 88 Va. 1012, 14 S. E. Rep. 849; Deitz v. Prov. Ins. Co., 31 W. Va. 851, 8 S. E. Rep. 616; Murdock v. Franklin Ins. Co., 33 W. Va. 407, 10 S. E. Rep. 778.

VIII. RATIFICATION.

Generally.—When the agent exceeds his authority, the act may be ratified by the principal; and it is not necessary that there should be any positive or direct confirmation. Where, with a knowledge of the facts, the principal acquiesces in the acts of the agent, under such circumstances as would make it his duty to repudiate such acts if he would avoid them, such acquiescence is a confirmation of the acts of the agent. It is not necessary that such knowledge shall be shown by positive evidence; it may be deduced, or inferred from the circumstances and facts of the case. Curry v. Hale et al., 15 W. Va. 897. See also, Richmond, etc., Ry. Co. v. N. Y., etc., Ry. Co., 95 Va. 386, 28 S. E. Rep. 573; Owens v. Boyd Land Co., 95 Va. 560, 28 S. E. Rep. 950; Ruffner, etc., Co. v. Hewitt, etc., Co., 7 W. Va. 585.

Instances.—A. by letter of attorney authorizes B. to put his name to or upon any negotiable note, as maker or indorser, for the purpose of getting the same discounted at one or other of certain specified banks, to the amount of $3,000 and then for renewal of such note at bank, from time to time, so as the amount shall at no one time exceed $3,000; B. makes a note for $3,000 accordingly, which is discounted at bank, and renewed from time to time.

but at length reduced to $1,000; and then, B. purchases groceries of C. and for the price thereof, gives him a note made by A. by B. his attorney, negotiable at one of the specified banks, which the bank refuses to discount. Held, this note for the prices of the groceries, is not within the authority conferred on B. by A.'s letter of attorney, and is not binding on A. A. being informed of the making of the note by B. and of all the circumstances, makes no complaint, and afterwards procures indemnity from a third person against loss by reason of the note. Held, this does not amount to confirmation of B.'s unauthorized act in making the note. Horton & Hutton v. W. & E. Townes, 6 Leigh 47.

Must Ratify in Whole—Cannot Ratify Part Only of Agent's Act.—Where an agent buys a claim for his principal, and in order to induce the seller to part with it makes false and fraudulent misrepresentations in reference thereto, and the principal accepts the purchase and takes the benefit thereof, he cannot while claiming the benefit of the purchase and retaining the claim repudiate said representations of his agent, on the ground that they were not authorized by him and were not within the scope of his authority. Lane v. Black, 21 W. Va. 617. See also, Day v. Building Assoc., 96 Va. 484, 31 S. E. Rep. 902; Ruffner, etc., Co. v. Hewitt, etc., Co., 7 W. Va. 585.

Principal Must Disaffirm.—When informed by his agent of what he had done, if the principal did not choose to affirm the act, it was his duty to give immediate information of his repudiation. He cannot, by holding his peace and apparent acquiescence, have the benefit of the contract if it should turn out to be profitable, and retain a right to repudiate it if otherwise. The principal must, therefore, when informed, reject within a reasonable time, or be deemed to adopt by acquiescence. Johnson v. Gibbons, 27 Gratt. 636; Coffman v. Bruffy, 26 Gratt. 608; Higginbotham v. May et al., 90 Va. 239, 17 S. E. Rep. 941, and having once affirmed he is bound by the agent's act or contract. Anderson v. Creston Land Co., 96 Va. 257, 31 S. E. Rep. 82. See also, Ruffner, etc., Co. v. Hewitt, etc., Co., 7 W. Va. 585.

The conduct and acts of the principal, tending to imply a ratification of the agent's unauthorized acts, are construed liberally in favor of the agent. Ruffner, etc., Co. v. Hewitt, etc., Co., 7 W. Va. 585.

Effect of Ratification.—Ratification has a complete retroactive efficiency, relating back to the very inception of the contract or act. Ruffner, etc., Co. v. Hewitt, etc., Co., 7 W. Va. 585.

Applies to Torts.—Ratification applies as well to a tort as to a contract. The rule is well expressed by BURKS, J., in Forbes & Allers v. Hagman and Graviller, 75 Va. 168, "This was a virtual ratification and adoption of what had been done by the agent on the principle omnis ratihabito retrotrahitur et mandati priori equiparatur, which applies as well to a tort when done to the use or for the benefit of him who subsequently adopts it, as to a matter of contract." The learned judge has gathered all the authorities on this subject in his elaborate opinion.

IX. QUESTIONS OF EVIDENCE.

Where it does not distinctly appear from the terms of the paper, whether credit was given to the agent or the principal, parol evidence is admissible to remove the doubt. Early v. Wilkinson, 9 Gratt. 68; R. F. & P. R. Co. v. Snead, 19 Gratt. 354; Walker v. Christian, 21 Gratt. 293.

Where the record does not show whether the defendant confessed judgment by an attorney at law or an attorney in fact, evidence aliunde is admissible to show that such attorney was an attorney in fact, and to show the authority under which he acted. Calwells v. Shelds, 2 Rob. 305.

An agent is a competent witness to prove his own parol authority. Piercy v. Hedrick, 2 W. Va. 458.

Declarations or acts of an alleged agent cannot be accepted to prove his agency. That fact must be proved by other evidence, and must be first established before his declarations or acts are admissible as evidence. But declarations and acts tending to establish the agency, said or done by the alleged agent in the presence of the principal, and not repudiated by him, are admissible in evidence as tending to prove the agency. Hoge v. Turner, 96 Va. 624, 32 S. E. Rep. 291.

An alleged agency which is denied cannot be established by proof of the admissions or statements of the alleged agent, but the fact must be proved by other evidence. If it is desired to establish it by the alleged agent himself he must be called as a witness. Fisher v. White, 94 Va. 236, 26 S. E. Rep. 573.

To prove the authority of an agent, the parol directions of the principal to him may be given in evidence. Lunsford v. Smith, 12 Gratt. 554.

X. TERMINATION OF THE RELATION.

The death of either party terminates the agency, and after the death of the principal no act of the agent can bind the estate of the principal. Huston v. Cantril, 11 Leigh 136.

The agency can also be terminated by either party at any time, but where the principal revokes the agent's authority, he must give third persons, who have dealt with the agent, as his agent, notice, else he will be liable for any loss they may incur, though not having received such notice. Spencer v. Wilson, 4 Munf. 130.

133 *McDougal v. Guigon, Judge.

a. County and Corporation Courts—Authority to Remove Judges of Election.*—The County and Corporation courts have authority to remove a judge of elections for malfeasance in office or gross neglect of duty, though he has not been convicted by the verdict of a jury of any offence.

In December 1875 the judge of the Hustings court of the city of Richmond made a rule on James McDougal, John Marxhausen and E. J. Vaiden, judges of election of the first precinct of Jefferson ward of said city, to show cause why they should not be removed from their said offices as judges of election for the said precinct. The rule was made returnable to the first day of the next term.

In January 1876 James McDougal presented his petition to the Supreme Court of Appeals, in which he states that on the 20th of October 1875 he was appointed by the judge of the Hustings court of the city of Richmond, a judge of election for the first precinct of Jefferson ward in said city; and he insists that this appointment vested in him the right, and made it his duty, to hold said office for the space of one year, and placed it beyond the power of any tribunal to remove him from his said office, except upon conviction by the verdict of a jury of willful neglect of his duty as judge of election, or of some corrupt conduct in the exercise of the same.

The petitioner further says he was 134 tried in the *Hustings court of the city in the month of December 1875, upon two indictments: one charging that he had fraudulently put ballots in the ballot box at the election held in the city of Richmond on the 2d of November 1875; the other charging in one count that he was guilty of willful neglect of duty as said judge at said election, by knowingly allowing ballots to be put into said box, which should not have been put there; and in another count in allowing ballots to be taken from it, which ought not to have been taken from it; and he was found "not guilty" on both indictments. And referring to the rule which had been made upon him, he prays for a writ of prohibition to the said judge, prohibiting and restraining him from proceeding further upon said rule.

Judge Guigon appeared, and waiving the service of a rule upon him, and all technical or formal objections to the petition or the proceedings thereunder, for answer thereto says: That evidence has been adduced before him tending to show that the petitioner, whilst acting as judge of election, under his said appointment, had been guilty of malfeasance in office, and gross neglect of duty. That, upon said evidence, respondent had made the rule upon the petitioner. And he submits to the court whether in this he is warranted by the law of the land.

Royall, Stiles and Ould, for the petitioner.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an application for a writ of prohibition. The object is to restrain the judge of the Hustings court of the city of Richmond from removing the petitioner from the office to which he was appointed on the 20th October 1875, as a judge of elections for 135 *the first precinct of Jefferson ward in said city. The petitioner avers, that the appointment vested in him the right, and made it his duty under the law, to hold said office for the space of one year; and placed it beyond the power of any tribunal to remove him therefrom, except upon conviction by a jury, of willful neglect of his duty, or of some corrupt conduct in the execution of his office.

It is as to the correctness of this view, we are now to speak.

Under one of the provisions of the general law in regard to elections, it is made the duty of the County and Corporation courts, annually at the April terms, to appoint three competent male citizens for each voting district in their respective counties or corporations, for each voting place therein, who shall constitute judges of elections, for all elections to be held in their respective districts, for the period of one year dating from their appointment. Each person so appointed, before entering upon the duties of his office, is to take an oath that he will perform the duties of judge of election, according to law, and to the best of his ability; and that he will studiously endeavor to prevent fraud, deceit and abuse in conducting the election. Section 8, chap. 8, Code of 1873, page 155.

This is the only provision found in our laws, relating to the qualification and appointment of judges of election, as they are termed. No provision is anywhere made for their removal, except that which is contained in the 43d section of chap. 8, Code of 1873. That section declares, that if any officer, or other person on whom an election duty is cast, shall be guilty of any willful neglect of such duty, or of any corrupt conduct in the execution of the same, he shall upon conviction, be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, 136 *shall be punished by fine and imprisonment, and be removed from office.

The council for the petitioner, in constructing these statutes, have argued that the tenure of a judge of election being fixed by law for one year, and no provision being made for his removal, except in cases of conviction, as provided in the 43d section, he cannot be removed from office except in the mode and upon the terms prescribed by that section.

We do not propose to enter into a discussion of the much controverted proposition, that the power of removal, as a general rule, is a mere incident to the power of appointment. That question has, at various periods of our history, given rise to the most animated discussions. It has by terms engaged the attention of the executive, legislature and judicial departments of the government. It is discussed in the Federalist; in the celebrated case of Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch's R. 137; in Ex parte Hennin, 13 Peters' R. 230; and in many of the appellate courts of the United States. Lehman v. Sutherland, 3 Serg. & Rawle 145; Hoke v. Henderson, 4 Dev. R. 1; People v. Hill, Cal. R. 97.

The question was also most carefully considered and discussed in Ex parte Bouldin, 6 Leigh 639. In that case Mr. Louis C. Bouldin was removed by the judge of the Circuit court from his office of commonwealth's attorney without notice or any legal proceeding against him. Upon an application to the General court for a mandamus, that court unanimously held that the Circuit court having the power of appointing the commonwealth's attorneys, had, as incident thereto, the power of removing them. It is proper to say, however, that the decision of the General court was based mainly upon the ground, that as the law then stood, the commonwealth's attorneys did not hold their 137 offices *for life, or even for years, but during the pleasure of the Circuit courts; and they might be removed by those courts without restriction or limitation.

Conceding for the present that this rule does not apply where the tenure of the office is fixed by law; that, in such case, the power of removal from office is not an incident to that of appointment, we think that the County and Corporation courts are clothed with the power of removing the judges of election with or without conviction, whenever they may deem such removal demanded by the public interests. We think that it was the purpose of the legislature to invest them with such power. Although that purpose is not expressed in so many words, yet it is manifest from a careful survey of the various statutes, past and present, relating to the subject of elections.

The statute already cited declares that the persons selected shall constitute judges of election for all elections to be held in their respective districts for the period of one year. Now it is very obvious, that if they can be removed from office only upon conviction of the offences mentioned in the 43rd section of chapter 8, Code of 1873, in a large majority of cases, the term of office will have expired long before such conviction can be had. The incumbent may be notoriously guilty of one or both the offences in that section mentioned; he may have been tried and convicted by the verdict of a jury, and yet judgment and execution of sentence may be delayed by courts of error and appeal, until the term of office is ended, and a removal therefrom has ceased to be of any practical interest. During all this time of the pendency of the prosecution against him, the incumbent may insist upon exercising the functions of his office, and there is no authority that can arrest or interfere with him.

138 *It will be seen that the 43d section refers only to cases of willful neglect and corruption in office. It makes no provision for cases of gross negligence, of incapacity arising from mental or physical causes. Now if the view of the counsel be correct, however incompetent the incumbent may be, however degraded in his conduct and habits, the government is powerless to disturb him. Even if he is guilty of the gravest criminal offences, there is no mode of closing his official career, except through the tedious instrumentalities of information or indictment, trial, conviction by a jury, and judgment of a motion from office. It is difficult to believe, that the legislature ever anticipated or designed such a state of things in regard to an official whose term of office is so brief, and yet where good conduct, competency, and integrity, are so essential to the freedom and purity of elections.

The provision authorizing the County and Corporation courts to appoint judges of election, was adopted 11th May 1870. At the same time, and as a part of the same general law, the 60th section was also adopted. That section confers upon the same courts the power to remove from office all county, city and township officers elected under that act, in their counties and corporations respectively, for malfeasance, misfeasance, or gross neglect of official duty. The proceedings to be by order of, or on motion before, the proper court, upon reasonable notice to the party to be affected thereby. See Acts of 1869 and 1870, page 78, sec. 24, and sec. 60.

This would of course include sheriffs, attorneys for the commonwealth, county treasurers, and superintendents of the poor, clerks of the County and Hustings courts, supervisors, assessors, collectors, commissioners of roads, justices of the peace and constables—officers *whose terms run from one to four years; who are elected by the people, and whose tenure is in some instances fixed by express constitutional provision.

Each and all of these officials, it is agreed, may be removed upon notice and motion; but a judge of election can only be reached by indictment, trial, and conviction by a jury. The legislature, we are told, has invested the County and Corporation courts with full control of all the county and township officers elected by the people; but has denied the same tribunals the power of removing one of their own appointees, although such removal may be imperatively required by the public interests. It is impossible to believe that a distinction so absurd, so opposed to sound policy, could ever have been intended by the legislature.

It may be asked then, why was no provision made for the removal of the judges of election, as was done with reference to the county officers. The omission to do so was certainly not accidental. As already stated, the section authorizing the appointment of judges of election, and the section authorizing the removal of county officers elected by the people, were parts of the same act; no doubt considered together and adopted at the same time. It is therefore manifest that the failure to provide, in express terms, for the removal of the judges of election, was intentional. The most reasonable inference is that no such provision was regarded as necessary. The legislature, no doubt, considered that from the character of the office and the nature of the appointment, the County or Corporation courts would respectively have the power of removing these incumbents, whenever it appeared their longer continuance was incompatible with the public interests.

These judges of election, as they are termed, are substantially *the same as the commissioners of election under the former constitution and laws. The latter were also appointed by the County and Corporation courts. Before entering upon the discharge of their duties, they were required to take the same oath as the judges of election now take; and they performed nearly the same duties, with certain modifications and alterations adapted to the new system of voting by ballot.

Was it ever supposed that the County and Corporation courts could not, at their pleasure, remove all or any one of these commissioners, and substitute others in their place. It is very true that the present appointees constitute judges for all elections to be held during the year; whereas the commissioners were appointed merely for the general election day and the subsequent examination and certification of the results. But by the very terms of the appointment the commissioners had as valid a claim to hold on to that appointment till the general election day, and afterwards, till the result was certified, as the present judges have for all the elections during the year. The difference between the two is simply in the duration of the tenure or time of holding, and not in the duties to be performed, or the right to discharge them. No law was ever passed for the removal of these commissioners; none was ever considered necessary. Like jurors, surveyors of highways and the like, they were regarded as most unfortunate, upon whom a public burden was cast, which any citizen might be required at any time to bear, as the price of his security and tranquility, under the government to which he belongs. Such appointments confer no special privileges: they do not invest the individual with the title to an office in the usual acceptance of that term.

141 *The legislature in passing a system of laws, adapted to the provisions of the present constitution, deemed it more convenient that these commissioners of election, now styled judges, instead of being appointed biennially for each general election, should be appointed annually for all elections to be held during the year. And as no provision for the removal of the commissioners was considered necessary, it is fair to infer that none was deemed necessary for those substituted in their place.

It will be observed that the judges of election do not take any general oath of office; but at each election, before entering upon their duties, they take the oath prescribed. If one of them fails to attend the place of voting, the others may associate with them a citizen. If none of them attend, a justice of the peace or mayor may select three citizens possessed of the requisite qualifications, and the persons thus selected have all the powers, and perform the duties of judges of election. These provisions give strength to the idea, that in the view of the legislature these judges were not officers in the ordinary acceptance of the term; but mere appointees required to perform certain duties as the occasion arose for their performance, subject to removal by the power which appointed them whenever the public interests require it.

It was argued here, that this is a dangerous power to rest in a County court; a power which may be wielded by a partisan judge for evil purposes, on the eve of an important election. The argument proves too much. It goes to show that these tribunals ought not, in the first instance, to have been clothed with the power of appointing judges of election. There is manifestly more danger

142 of the gratification of personal *and political preferences in the appointment of all the judges of a large election district, than in the occasional removal of one of them. The occasions will be very rare upon which a County or Corporation judge will incur the hazards of public observation and censure by the removal of a competent and faithful officer, upon mere personal or political grounds. Surely a tribunal fit to be clothed with the power of removing at will any county officer elected by the people, can be safely trusted with that of removing its own appointee, the incumbent of a suboreinate position. And lastly, if there is any weight in the argument, it should be addressed to the legislature, and not to the courts.

The learned counsel in this case have relied much upon the ground that the incumbent is to be removed for an alleged offence, of which he has been tried and acquitted by the verdict of a jury. According to the statement made in the petition, this acquittal was upon an indictment or indictments, charging petitioner first with fraudulently putting ballots into the ballot box; second, with willful neglect of duty, by knowingly allowing ballots to be put in the box, which should not have been put there, and with allowing others to be taken out, which ought not to have been taken out.

Now the petitioner may be guiltless of each of the offences charged, and yet, as alleged by the Hustings judge, he may have been guilty of gross neglect in regard to those very ballots.

The evidence adduced on the trial may have been legally insufficient to establish the offences averred in the indictment, and yet it may have satisfied the honorable judge of the Hustings court that the petitioner is not a fit and proper person to be invested with 143 the important *powers and privileges appertaining to such a position.

We know nothing of the merits of the case. We are not to be understood as expressing any opinion in regard to the conduct of the petitioner—that is a subject exclusively for the consideration of the Hustings court. That court being clothed with the power of removal, its decision is not the subject of review in this court.

For these reasons we think the rule of prohibition should be refused.

Prohibition refused.

144 *Bunting v. Willis, Judge.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

I. Officer.*—Quære: Whether a person holding an office of profit &c. under the United States government, is eligible to an office of profit &c. under the state government.

II. Same—Sheriff—Holding Another Office.—The office of sheriff commences on the 1st of July. If a person holding an office of profit under the government of the United States, is elected to the office of sheriff, which is an office of profit under the state government, and holds his office under the former government until any time during the 1st of July, he thereby vacates his election as sheriff and is not entitled to qualify as such.

III. Same—Same—Same.—In May 1875 B, a deputy collector of customs at Fortress Monroe, was elected sheriff of E county. On the 19th of June he sent in his resignation of his office of deputy collector to his principal at Norfolk, to take effect on the 30th of June. It does not appear that his resignation was accepted, or that any official action was taken upon it until the 2d of July, when he was relieved by another officer of customs from Norfolk. On the 28th of June the papers of the American brig K were placed in B's hands for clearance; and nearly all the papers were completed on the 29th, and on the morning of the 1st of July, he completed the said clearing, before he attempted to do any act as sheriff. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same—Resignation.—B had the absolute right to resign his office of deputy collector. After such resignation becomes complete it cannot be withdrawn even with the consent of the government; though he may receive a new appointment, which may, perhaps, be given to him in the form of withdrawal by consent of his resignation of the office.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same—Acceptance of.*—But a prospective resignation may be withdrawn at any time before it is accepted; and after it is accepted, it may be withdrawn by the consent of the authority accepting, where no new rights have intervened.

145 *3. Same—Same—Same—Same—Withdrawal of.—The act of B in clearing the brig K on the 1st of July, could only have been done by withdrawing his resignation so long as it was necessary for that purpose; and he in fact was not relieved until July 2d. He was therefore disqualified from holding the office of sheriff under his election in the month of May.

IV. Same—Same—Orders of Court—Amendments during Term.†—On the 25th of June B qualified as sheriff of E, by taking the oaths of office and entering into bond with sureties, before the County court. At the same term of the court, T claiming to be sheriff of E, moved the court to set aside the order qualifying B as sheriff; and B appearing, after hearing, the court set aside the order and the bond of B, and admitted T, who was sheriff the previous year, to qualify as sheriff. B thereupon applied to the judge of the Circuit court for a mandamus to the judge of the County court to restore him to the office. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same—Same.—It was competent for the County court of E, at the same term, to set aside the order admitting B to qualify as sheriff and his bond.

2. Same—Same—Holding One Office Disqualifies for Another.—It was competent for the County court to refuse to admit B to qualify as sheriff when he held a lucrative office under the government of the United States.

3. Same—Same—Same—Restoration.—If B is not, and was not when he obtained the rule for a *Same—Resignation.—That the resignation of an officer does not become complete until it is accepted. see Coleman v. Sands, 87 Va. 689, 13 S. E. Rep. 148. In this case PRESIDENT LEWIS commenting on the principal case in regard to the dictum—"he had a right to resign his federal office, and that such right does not depend upon the consent or acceptance of the government,"—said: "It is observable, moreover, that notwithstanding this broad language, the decision of the case, if we correctly understand it, proceeded on the ground that not until acceptance did the resignation become complete." writ of mandamus, entitled to the office of sheriff, he cannot be admitted or restored to it on such writ, even though the County court had no authority to annul the order admitting him to qualify as sheriff, or to have refused originally to admit him.

This was an application to the judge of the circuit court of Elizabeth City county, by R. Paul Bunting, for a mandamus to W. R. Willis, judge of the County court of said county, to compel him to restore the said Bunting to the office of sheriff. The Circuit court refused the application; and Bunting applied to this court for a writ of error; which was awarded. The case is fully stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

Godwin & Crocker, for the appellant.

Peek, for the appellee.

This is a writ of error to a judgment of the Circuit court of the county of Elizabeth City, discharging a rule in the nature of a mandamus nisi, which had been awarded by said court on the petition of the plaintiff in error, R. P. Bunting, against the Hon. W. R. Willis, judge of the County court of said county, and Jerome Titlow, defendants in error, to show cause why a peremptory mandamus should not be awarded to the said plaintiff, commanding the said judge to admit or restore said plaintiff to his office of sheriff of said county, then held by the defendant Titlow.

Bunting having received the highest number of votes at the general election held May 27th, 1875, was elected sheriff of the county of Elizabeth city. On the 25th day of June 1875 he qualified as such before the said County court by taking the necessary oath, and giving bond, with approved security, as required by law, and on the 1st day of July 1875 he entered upon the duties of the office.

Afterwards, and during the same term of the said County court, to wit: on the 3d day of July 1875 the said Titlow, claiming to be sheriff of said county, moved the said court to set aside the order qualifying the said Bunting as such sheriff, entered into on the second day of the said term, and to declare the same null and void, together with the bond entered into by the said Bunting and his sureties, upon his qualifications as said sheriff, upon the ground that he was at the time of said qualification, and was then incapable of holding the said office under the second section of chapter 11 of the Code of 1873. And the said Bunting appearing, and the said motion having been continued from time to time, afterwards during the same term,

147 to *wit: on the 8th day of July 1875 the said County court, on full consideration of the case, being of opinion that the said order entered on the second day of the said term, was erroneously entered, and that the said Bunting was improperly and illegally admitted to qualify as sheriff of said county as aforesaid, and was not capable of holding said office of sheriff by reason of his holding an office of trust and emolument under the United States government, ordered that the order entered on the second day of the term as aforesaid should be set aside and annulled. And the said County court being further of opinion that said Jerome Titlow, as sheriff of the county, held over until his successor should legally qualify, ordered that the said Titlow should be recognized as such sheriff until his successor should qualify as aforesaid. To which ruling of the court the said Bunting excepted, and asked leave to file his bill of exceptions, which leave the court refused, upon the ground that his proper remedy was not by writ of error, but by mandamus or quo warranto.

Accordingly, the said Bunting applied to the judge of the Circuit court of said county for a rule in the nature of a mandamus nisi, which was awarded as aforesaid, and executed upon the defendants. After which, to wit: on the 30th of July 1875, the defendants filed the answer of Judge Willis to the said rule, to which answer the plaintiff, Bunting, filed a demurrer, and entered a plea, in which demurrer the defendants thereupon joined. The plea was, that the "part of the return to the mandamus nisi that alleges that the plaintiff held a United States office, to wit: the office of Deputy Inspector of Customs at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, an office of profit, trust and emolument, on the 2nd day of July 1875, or after he, the said plaintiff, 148 *had entered upon the discharge of the duties of sheriff of Elizabeth City county, is not true."

Afterwards, to wit: on the 4th day of August 1875, the said Circuit court having fully considered the matters of law arising upon the plaintiff's demurrer, was of opinion that said answer was sufficient, and overruled the demurrer thereto; and the plaintiff admitting the allegations of said answer not traversed by his said plea, issue was thereupon joined on said plea; and neither party requiring a jury, but submitting the matters of law and fact arising from the evidence and argument of counsel to the court, judgment was thereupon rendered against the plaintiff, discharging the said rule, and for the defendant's costs; to which judgment the plaintiff excepted.

On motion of the plaintiff, and by consent of parties, a rehearing of the cause was granted; after which, to wit: on the 21st day of August 1875, the cause having in the meantime been further heard, and the court having taken time to consider, the court, on full reconsideration of the matters of law and fact arising in the case, and the arguments of counsel, confirmed the judgment entered in the cause on the 4th day of the same month.

In the bill of exceptions which was taken in the case by the plaintiff, the facts, or evidence proved on the trial, were certified.

The respondents (Judge W. R. Willis and Jerome Titlow), to maintain the issue on their parts, proved the following facts, to wit: "That on the 25th day of June 1875, and for some time prior thereto, R. Paul Bunting held the office of Deputy Collector and Inspector of Customs at Fortress Monroe, Virginia; that the said office was and is an office of profit, trust and emolument, under the government of the United States, paying to the incumbent thereof an income of four dollars per day as a salary; that on the 19th day of June 1875, the said Bunting sent in his resignation of said office, to take effect on the 30th of June 1875; that the said resignation was not accepted, or any official action indicating its acceptance taken, until the 2nd day of July 1875; that on the 2nd day of July 1875, about five o'clock in the afternoon of that day, William Webb, an employee of the United States Custom House at Norfolk, Virginia, under instructions of Luther Lee, Jr., Collector of Customs, relieved the said Bunting as United States Deputy Inspector and Collector of Customs at Fortress Monroe; that on the first day of July 1875, about 9 o'clock in the morning, the said Bunting, in the discharge of the said duties of the said office of deputy inspector and collector, cleared the American brig 'Katahdin,' and issued to her clearance papers over his signature and in the capacity of deputy inspector and collector of customs as aforesaid, having two days before commenced the papers of the clearance of said vessel."

And the said R. P. Bunting, to maintain the issue on his part, proved the following facts by both oral and record testimony, to-wit: "That on the 27th day of May 1875, he was duly elected sheriff of the county of Elizabeth City, and state of Virginia:" and here is inserted the certificate of said election. "That on the 25th day of June 1875, he duly qualified as sheriff of said county, before the County court of said county, then in session, presided over by Judge W. R. Willis, the judge of said court, by taking the necessary oath, and giving the bond with approved security:" and here follows the order of qualification. "That on the 1st day of July 1875, about the hour of 12 o'clock

A. M., he took formal possession of the said office of *sheriff, and continued in the said office, performing the duties thereof, until the 8th day of July 1875; that on that day one Jerome Titlow moved the said judge of the said court, through his counsel, to revoke the order of the 25th day of June 1875, qualifying the said R. P. Bunting as sheriff aforesaid; that upon argument and consideration the said judge of said court did revoke said order of qualification, and did dispossess him the said Bunting of the said office of sheriff:" and here follows the order of revocation. "That prior to, and at the time of his qualification as sheriff aforesaid, to-wit, on the 25th day of June 1875, he held the office of deputy inspector and collector of customs at Fortress Monroe, Virginia; that after his election to-wit, on the 19th day of June 1875, he resigned the office of United States deputy inspector and collector, to take effect on the 30th day of June 1875:" and here follows the letter of resignation in these words:

"Custom House, Fort Monroe, Va.,
Collector's Office, June 19th, 1875.
Hon. Luther Lee, Jr.,
Collector of Customs, Norfolk, Va.:

My Dear Sir:—After five years of continued service as an inspector of the customs for the port of Norfolk, and under your personal supervision, I beg leave to hand my resignation, to take effect June 30th 1875.

Being one of the first to receive an appointment at your hands, on your assuming the position of the collectorship of the port above stated, it gives me pleasure to say, that the past five years have been as pleasantly and agreeably spent as any of my past life, and I assure you it is with much regret that I am *forced to hand you my resignation; but business of a private nature demands my immediate and personal attention, and I therefore beg you will be pleased to accept it in the same good feeling in which it was written.

You will be pleased to permit me to extend to you and the officers under you my sincere and hearty thanks for the many courtesies extended to me since my connection with you, both officially and socially.

With best wishes for your future prosperity, I beg leave to remain your sincere friend and ob't servant,

R. Paul Bunting."

Under which letter is a certificate, under the hand and official seal of the collector, dated July 5th 1875, that said letter is a true copy of the original on file in his office.

"That on the 28th or 29th day of June 1875, the papers of the American brig 'Katahdin' were placed in his the said Bunting's hands for clearance. That all the necessary papers, except the hospital returns and his signature as deputy collector, were made out and completed on the said 28th or 29th day of June 1875; that on the first day of July 1875, having two or three days previously commenced the clearing of the said brig 'Katahdin,' he completed the said clearing; that this was about 9 o'clock A. M., and before he had done any act in the office of sheriff aforesaid; that on the 2nd day of July 1875, W. T. Webb took charge of the said office of United States deputy collector and inspector of customs, and continued to act as said officer until the 8th day of July 1875, when the said office was filled by H. Libby, duly appointed, and who holds the said office to this date." And the said Bunting in his evidence states, "that from and *after nine o'clock A. M. of the 1st day of July 1875, he ceased entirely to have anything to do with the said office of deputy inspector and collector of customs at Fort Monroe, and that his damages, including his attorney's fee in this case, amount to about $300."

Whereupon the court, being of opinion that the said Bunting was not entitled to recover the said office, gave judgment for the respondents; to which opinion the said Bunting excepted.

The Code, chapter 11, section 2, page 174, declares that "no person shall be capable of holding any" post of profit, trust or emolument, civil or military, legislative, executive or judicial, under the government of this commonwealth, "who holds any post of profit, trust or emolument, civil or military, legislative, executive or judicial, under the government of the United States, or who receives in any way from the United States any emolument whatever."

It is not denied, and there can be no question, but that, first, the office of sheriff is a post of profit, trust and emolument, under the government of this commonwealth; and, secondly, the office of deputy inspector and collector of customs at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, which was held by the plaintiff Bunting at the time of his election as sheriff of the county of Elizabeth City on the 27th day of May 1875, was a post of profit, trust and emolument, under the government of the United States; within the true intent and meaning, and indeed the express terms, of the said provision of the Code.

There is also a provision of the constitution of the State (article 7, section 6, Code p. 92), which declares that "sheriffs shall hold no other office." This provision is no further material to this case, than to show the intent of the framers, as well of 153 the constitution *as of the law of the state, that a sheriff shall hold no other lucrative office, whether under the state or federal government. We will therefore not notice any further the constitutional provision aforesaid.

When the plaintiff was a candidate for the office of sheriff under the state government he certainly held the office of deputy inspector and collector of customs under the federal government; and it does not appear that he had then any idea of resigning the latter office, at least unless he should be elected to the state office; in which event he may have intended to tender his resignation of his federal office, to take effect when he would have to enter on the duties of the state office. A question might well be raised, whether a person who holds a lucrative office under the federal government, is eligible to the office of sheriff under the state law. To be sure that law does not expressly declare that he shall not be eligible to, but only that he shall not be capable of holding, any such post, &c. We can see some reason for using the latter rather than the former language, as it may have been intended to have the effect of preventing, not only a federal officer from being elected to a state office, but also a state officer from receiving a federal office without ipso facto vacating his state office. It may seem strange, that a person should be eligible to a state office, which he is incapable of holding after being elected. The law says nothing about his resigning before entering on the duties of his state office, any federal office which he may hold at the time of his election. It is at least optional with him, whether he will resign his federal office or not; and whether his election to the state office would be effectual or not, would depend on the continuation of his future *resignation in time to enter on the duties of the state office.

The federal office might be held by fraud contemporaneously with the state office. We do not mean to say that such was the case here; but there is danger in such a case. And the best way to guard against it would seem to be that the federal officer should not be eligible to the state office, until he has clearly and entirely rid himself of the federal office. Otherwise there will be a painful uncertainty after the election who the state officer is, until some unmistakable act of resignation shall have been executed. There is a manifest difference between offices held under the same government, and offices held under a different government, as under the state and federal. In the former case, the whole matter is under the control of one and the same government, and the acceptance of one office is ipso facto a vacation of another, incompatible therewith, and previously received. But, in the latter case, an acceptance of a state office does not vacate a previously received federal office, however incompatible they may be. In the cases referred to in the argument, in which it has been held that a person holding one office may, while he holds it, be elected to another and incompatible one, seem to be all cases in which the offices were held under the same government.

But without expressing any opinion upon that question, and conceding, at least for the purposes of this case, that the plaintiff was eligible to the office of sheriff, though at the time of the election, and for some time thereafter, he held the federal office, then the question arises, whether he was completely divested of the federal office before he was invested with the state office; in other words, whether he held both offices at one and the same time, however 155 short may have been the time *of such holding. The law prescribes no limitation as to the time of holding. "No person shall be capable of holding" for an instant any more than for a year. The instant he holds a federal office he must cease to hold his state office.

The office of sheriff commenced on the first day of July 1875. Did the federal office cease before that day? Did he perform any duty of the latter office after or on that day? This is the question we now have to consider and decide.

The plaintiff was elected to the office of sheriff on the 27th of May, and he tendered his resignation on the 19th of June thereafter. But it was not to take effect immediately. It was to take effect on the 30th of June 1875, the day before the term of the office of sheriff legally commenced. But did it then take effect? or was it held longer? If it was held any longer, no matter how short the period, he was incapable of holding the office of sheriff.

That he had a right to resign his federal office, and that such right does not depend upon the consent or acceptance of the government or its agents, seems to be very well settled. That after such a resignation becomes complete it cannot be withdrawn by the officer, even with the consent of the government, seems also to be settled, though he may receive a new appointment, which may perhaps be given to him in the form of a withdrawal by consent of his resignation of his former office.

But a prospective resignation may be withdrawn at any time before it is accepted: and after it is accepted it may be withdrawn by the consent of the authority accepting, where no new rights have intervened. This was held by the Supreme court of Indiana, in Biddle v. Willard, 10 Ind. R. 62, 156 and seems to be a reasonable *principle. We have seen no case to the contrary, while there are other cases which tend to sustain it. 43 Id. 105, The State v. Hauss; 6 Cal. R. 26, The People v. Porter; 56 Missouri R. 17, State v. Boecker.

The resignation of the office of deputy inspector and collector in this case was prospective; to take effect June 30th, 1875. It was not accepted by the collector until after that time. There can be no doubt but that until that time it was competent for the plaintiff, at least with the consent of the collector, to withdraw his resignation, either entirely or for a limited period. From the terms of the letter of resignation, it is plain that the plaintiff would have consented to withdraw his resignation for a limited period or purpose, if the exigencies of the public service required it, especially if he supposed that he would not thereby lose his office of sheriff.

It clearly appears in this case that the plaintiff acted as deputy inspector and collector after the 30th of June, to wit: on the 1st of July 1875; and so acted with the consent of the collector. It is certified as a fact proved in the cause, "that on the first day of July 1875, about 9 o'clock in the morning the said Bunting, in the discharge of the said duties of the said office of deputy inspector and collector, cleared the American brig 'Katahdin,' and issued to her clearance papers over his signature, and in the capacity of deputy inspector and collector of customs as aforesaid, having two days before commenced the papers of the clearance of said vessel." This act could only have been done by withdrawing the resignation so long as was necessary for the purpose. In fact, the plaintiff did not go out of office before the 2d day of July 1875, it being certified as a fact proved on the trial, that "about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, William Webb, 157 *an employee in the United States custom-house at Norfolk, Virginia, under instructions of Luther Lee, Jr., collector of customs, relieved the said Bunting as United States deputy inspector and collector of customs at Fortress Monroe."

Thus it appears that Bunting went out, and Webb came into this office about 5 o'clock, P. M., on the 2d of July 1875, after the term of the sheriffalty for which Bunting had been elected commenced. It seems to be supposed that the facts certified, as proved by Bunting, are more favorable to him than those proved on the other side. But there is not any conflict between them, and if there were we would have to prefer that view of the facts which tends to sustain the judgment to that which tends to the contrary.

When was Bunting's letter of resignation of the 19th of June 1875 received by Lee? Was any answer made to it? And if so, what was the answer? On none of these subjects does the record give any information. If Lee had answered the letter of Bunting, accepting the resignation as it was tendered, or containing anything else at all favorable to Bunting, it would have been produced by him. We may infer, therefore, from the non-production of such an answer, that it was not written or was not favorable. It does not appear that the letter of resignation was filed or received by Lee until the 5th of July 1875, the date of his certificate, which was after the controversy in the County court for the office of sheriff between these parties had commenced, which was on the 3d of July. It is not stated by Bunting when his letter of resignation was actually written; and even the date of his resignation is stated under a scilicet, as on the 19th of June 1875. If Bunting received no answer from Lee stating that his letter of resignation was 158 received and *filed, he could not have considered his resignation as accepted and complete. It does not appear that he received any such answer until after the 2d of July, on which day, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, Bunting was relieved by Webb. Continuity of the office seems to be required by public necessity. Even the short period of six days between the 2d and the 8th of July was filled up by the temporary appointment of Webb, an employee in the custom-house, and on the 8th the office was permanently filled by the appointment of Libby.

In this case, the most we can say for Bunting, even if we can say that, is that the case is a doubtful one upon the merits. So considering it, we would have to affirm the judgment, in conformity with the opinion of the County court and of the Circuit court, both of which courts saw and heard the witnesses, and the latter of which stood in the place of a jury by agreement of the parties, and after giving judgment for the respondents, on full argument and consideration, granted a rehearing, and then upon reargument and reconsideration affirmed the former judgment.

Upon every principle therefore, we must affirm the judgment of the Circuit court upon the merits.

But there are a few other questions, besides the merits, yet to be noticed, but little need be said of them—as,

1st. Was it competent for the County court, after Bunting had qualified and given bond as sheriff, during the same term, to set aside and annul his qualification and bond?

We think that it was. "The rule at common law is that during the term, whenever any judicial act is done, the record remains in the breast of the judges of the court and in their remembrance, and therefore 159 the *roll is alterable during that term, as the judges shall direct; but when the term is past, then the record is in the roll, and admits of no alteration, averment or proof to the contrary." 3 Tho. Co. Lit. 323.

Thus the rule on this subject, as taken from Coke, is laid down in 1 Rob. Pr. old ed. p. 638. In Cawoods case, 2 Va. Ca. 527, 545, the rule is more broadly laid down thus: "During the term, the records are in the breast of the court, and amendments may be made in the proceedings of the court; but after the term has passed, no amendments can be made, except of mere clerical misprisions." The question we are now considering is governed by this rule.

2d. Was it competent for the County court to refuse to admit Bunting to qualify as sheriff when he held a lucrative office under the government of the United States?

We think that it was, at least before he resigned his office under the United States; if indeed he was eligible while he held that office to the office of sheriff under the state government—a question which it is unnecessary now to decide. Certainly, after the court had been informed and satisfied that Bunting, having been elected as sheriff while he held a lucrative federal office, was actually engaged in performing its duties after the term of the sheriffalty had commenced, the court was well warranted in setting aside the order made at the same term of the court, admitting him to qualify as sheriff, and would then, at least, have been warranted in refusing to permit him to qualify. Surely the court has power and ought to refuse to permit a person to qualify therein to an office which he is incapable of holding. This is expressly recognized by a recent act of assembly approved March 29, 1875, Session Acts 1874-'5, ch. 269, 160 *section 5, p. 342, which declares that if any person shall be elected to two or more of the offices enumerated in the section (one of which is that of sheriff), "his qualification in one shall be a bar to his qualification in any other, and they shall be filled as other vacancies." Having qualified to one, of course the court in which the qualification would have to be made would refuse to permit him to qualify in the other. But, without considering this question any further, it is sufficient to say that the solution of the next seems to render it immaterial.

3. Whether the County court could properly have refused, or not, to permit Bunting to qualify as sheriff; or, having permitted him so to qualify, could, afterwards, during the same term, properly set aside the qualification or not; it is very well settled, that if Bunting is not now, and was not when he obtained a rule for a writ of mandamus, entitled to the office of sheriff, he cannot be admitted or restored to it on such writ.

In Chew v. The Justices of Spotsylvania, 2 Va. Cas. 208, it was held that the removal of a justice of the peace with all his family from his county to another, and remaining there for several years (although he afterwards returned), is either an abandonment, virtual resignation, or forfeiture of his office; and whether void, or only voidable by a judicial proceeding eventuating in a judgment of a motion, no mandamus ought to issue, to invest the applicant with an office not belonging to him, if void, or which might be taken from him, if voidable.

In Amory v. The Justices of Gloucester, Id. 523, it was held that the offices of deputy clerk of a County court and of a justice of the peace of the same county are incompatible offices, so that they cannot 161 both be *held at the same time; and whether the acceptance of the office of deputy clerk vacates the office of a justice of the peace, or not, the Superior court will not grant a mandamus to compel the County court to admit the applicant to an office not belonging to him, if void, or which might be taken from him, if voidable.

In Poulson v. The Justices of Accomac, 2 Leigh 743, it was held that a justice of the peace of the county of Accomac, who left this state with intent to establish his residence in another, and remained there nine months, but did not establish his permanent residence there, and then returned and resumed his former residence in Accomac, had no right to resume the exercise of his office of justice of the peace of Accomac. Upshur, J., delivered the resolution of the court, that the case was not distinguishable in principle from the case of Chew v. The Justices of Spotsylvania, supra, and upon the authority of that case, the court was unanimously of opinion that the mandamus ought not to be awarded.

4. The remedy by mandamus seems to be a proper remedy in cases of this kind, and has been the one usually pursued, no doubt because, if not the only specific legal remedy, it was, at least, the most convenient and complete, in which cases the court exercises a sound discretion in granting or refusing the writ.

We think, therefore, the Circuit court did not err in discharging the rule for a writ of mandamus and refusing to award the said writ.

But one more observation occurs to us as proper to be made in this case; and that is, that Bunting having become incapable of holding the office of sheriff, at least by acting in his federal office after the term of his sheriffalty had commenced, he thenceforward at least ceased to be sheriff, and no

162 act of his afterwards in throwing off the federal office, could restore him to *the state office, nothing could do so but a reelection and requalification to the latter. If it be necessary to cite authority in support of that principle, it may be found in the Commonwealth v. Sherrard, 4 Leigh 643; though it is no doubt sustained by many cases, if it be not a self-evident proposition.

Upon the whole, we think there is no error in the judgment, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Christian, J., dissented.

Judgment affirmed.

163 *Eastern Lunatic Asylum v. Garrett.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

I. Public Corporations—Liability for Taking Private Property without Compensation.—The Eastern Lunatic Asylum is a corporation having charge of the asylum at Williamsburg. During the late war the United States forces took possession of Williamsburg, and held it until the end of the war. Upon their approach to the city the directors and principal officers of the asylum left it, and did not return. In January 1865 Colonel W. who was in command there, sent out a party some miles into the country, and took by force from the farm of G, who had left his home, corn and bacon, which was sent to the asylum, and used for the support of the inmates. After the war G brought trover against the corporation to recover the value of the articles so taken and used. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Without Compensation.—By the laws of war such property could not be taken without compensation, for the purpose of feeding the inmates of the asylum.
2. Same—Same—Same—Liability.—The property having been taken without lawful authority, G's title to it was not divested, and it having been applied to the use of the asylum, he may recover its value from that corporation.
3. Same—Same—Same—Same—Trover.—Trover is a proper remedy in the case.

This was an action of trover in the Circuit court of James City county and the city of Williamsburg, brought in April 1873

*Public Corporations—Liability for Taxing Private Property without Compensation.—The principal case is cited in Dinwiddie County v. Stuart, 28 Gratt. 555, and also, in Maia v. Eastern Hospital, 97 Va. 516, 34 S. E. Rep. 617, where it is fully discussed and distinguished.

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

Trover—Definition.—Trover is defined to be "a form of action which lies to recover damages against one who has, without right, converted to his own use goods or personal chattels in which the plaintiff has a general or special property." Bouvier's Law Dict. 1142.

Conversion.—"A conversion is any unauthorized dealing with the goods of another by one in possession, whereby the nature or quality of the goods is essentially altered, or by which one having the right of possession is deprived of all substantial use of the goods, permanently or temporarily." 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law 714.

Foundation for Action.—To maintain trover the plaintiff must show a conversion of personal property by the defendant, and that he had at the time of the conversion a general or special right of property in the thing converted, and also the possession by George W. Garrett against the Eastern Lunatic Asylum, to recover the value of certain corn and bacon, which had been taken in 1865 by the military commander of the Federal forces, and applied to the support of the inmates of the Lunatic Asylum.

When the cause came on for trial, the parties submitted the case, both on the law and the facts, to the decision of the court. And the court having heard the evidence, rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $363, with interest from the 1st of May 1865. The defendant thereupon moved the court for a new trial, but the motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted. The court certified the evidence as follows:

That in the year 1864 the plaintiff lived on the farm known as "Warhill," about six miles from Williamsburg. That in December of that year the plaintiff was arrested by the military forces of the United States, and was carried off by them and placed in confinement. That at the time plaintiff was so taken from his home he left there thirty-three barrels of corn, which he had measured up to itself, and which was worth then at least five dollars per barrel, and also some other corn which had not been measured up. That he also left three nine hundred pounds of salted pork, which was then worth twenty-two cents per pound, and he also left a lot of hogs. That the plaintiff did not return to his home until the last of April 1865. That during the late war the United States military forces occupied the or a right to the immediate possession thereof Haines v. Cochran, 26 W. Va. 719.

Declaration—Statement of Price of Thing Converted.—In an action of trover and conversion, the declaration need not state the price of the thing converted. It is not the price which the plaintiff sues for, but damages for the conversion; and even where the price is laid, he may recover more or less, provided the damages do not exceed those laid in the declaration. Pearpoint v. Henry, 2 Wash. 192.

Joinder of Counts.—In Spencer v. Pilcher, 8 Leigh 565, the declaration contained three counts, the first a common count in trover. Upon demurrer to such declaration it was held that the second and third counts were in *tor*t, and are consequently well joined with the count in trover.

Proof of Conversion.—In an action of trover a conversion may be proved in three ways: first, by a tortious taking; second, by any use or appropriation to the use of the defendant indicating a claim of right in opposition of that of the plaintiff or owner; and third, by a refusal to deliver possession to the owner on demand. Haines v. Cochran, 26 W. Va. 719; Arnold v. Kelly, 4 W. Va. 642.

When Proof of Demand and Refusal Excused.—It was held in Newsom v. Newsom, 1 Leigh 80, 19 Am. Dec. 739, that proof of demand and refusal is never necessary in trover, where there is proof of an actual conversion.

When Title in Neither Party.—In an action of trover when neither the plaintiff nor defendant have title to the property, if it is competent for the defendant to show title in a third party under whom he does not claim, to defeat the plaintiff's action. Smoot v. Cook, 3 W. Va. 172.

city of Williamsburg, and extended their picket lines about one mile beyond said city. That, in 1863, one Dr. Crittett F. Watson came to the asylum as its superintendent, having been sent there by the Pierpoint government. That on his arrival he submitted the oath of allegiance to the United States government, to the officers then in charge of the asylum. That they refused to take said oath. That there was no board of directors for the asylum after the Federal forces took charge of Williamsburg. That the members of the board had left, and were scattered over the country. That said salted pork, it requiring ten large four-horse wagons to haul the same, one of which wagons and team belonged to the Eastern Lunatic Asylum. That the corn and pork was carried first to Fort Magruder, a military post near Williamsburg, and from there was sent by said Colonel West directly, and without unloading the wagons, to the asylum for its use, and that the said corn and pork was delivered to the asylum. That the plaintiff did not institute his suit at an earlier day because he did not know, until a short time before its institution, what had become of his corn and pork.

165 Watson left the *asylum before the end of the year 1863. That from April 1863, to the end of the war, the military authorities stationed at Williamsburg controlled the asylum; the officer in command exercised the chief control. That many of the subordinate officers of the institution, who were in office prior to April 1863, remained in office while Watson and the military had control, and this state of things continued until the close of the war. That while the military authorities had control they furnished the institution with supplies, but very often they sent parties out in the country and took supplies for the asylum from the citizens. That in January 1865 one Colonel West was in command at Williamsburg, and a party was sent out in the country under command of Captain Holmes. That this party went to "Warhill," the residence of the plaintiff, and by force took from there all of his corn and

Upon the application of the Eastern Lunatic Asylum a writ of error and supersedeas was awarded by one of the judges of this court.

C. Branch, for the appellant.

R. H. Armistead, for the appellee.

166 *Staples, J. This is an action of trover, brought by George W. Garrett against the Eastern Lunatic Asylum, in the Circuit court of James City county. Upon the trial at the April term 1874, the parties waiving a jury, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was overruled. Thereupon the defendant excepted and the court certified the evidence.

This evidence, so far as it is material to the present purpose, shows that from the beginning of the year 1863 to the close of the war, the federal troops stationed at

Parties.—In Lowry v. Mountjoy, 6 Call 55, it was held that the wife need not be joined with the husband in an action of trover for a slave belonging to her.

Against Two Jointly and One Released.—In an action of trover and conversion against two, where defendants appear and file a joint plea of not guilty and issue is thereon joined, it is competent for the jury to acquit one of the defendants and find the other guilty and assess damages against him. Tracy v. Cloyd, 10 W. Va. 19.

Against Bailee.—The accidental loss of a hired slave, occurring in an employment of the slave which the bailee has no right to make, amounts to such a wrongful conversion by the bailee, as will sustain an action of trover by the owner. Spencer v. Pilcher, 8 Leigh 567; Harvey v. Epes, 12 Gratt. 153.

Against Vendor.—The assignee of a vendee of standing trees, having chosen and marked the trees, may maintain trover against the vendor for felling and converting them, although the vendor had no notice of the election. McCoy v. Herbert, 9 Leigh 548.

By Tenant in Common against Co-Tenant.—Trover lies by one tenant in common of a personal chattel, against his co-tenant, for the appropriation of the chattel to his exclusive use, where the chattel is of such a nature as to be necessarily destroyed by the use thereof. Lowe v. Miller, 3 Gratt. 205, 46 Am. Dec. 188.

By Trustee.—A naked trustee of a chattel is entitled to recover, in trover, not only nominal damages, but the full value. Newsum v. Newsum, 1 Leigh 86, 19 Am. Dec. 739.

By Buyer against Seller.—In Haines v. Cochran,

26 W. Va. 720, it was held that the buyer of goods who has paid the full price could maintain an action of trover against the seller where the latter has failed to make delivery; but such action will not lie unless the buyer proves that he has paid the full price before the action is commenced.

When Not Maintainable by Ward.—Where timber-trees, growing on the inheritance of a ward, are thrown down by a tempest, or otherwise, they become personal property, and the guardian has a legal right to sell them as being perishable and of no value except as a subject of sale; in such case the infant cannot bring trover for them. Truss v. Old, 6 Rand. 556.

Plaintiff Not Having Right to Possession.—K, the owner of a slave for life, sells him to M, by whom he is then sold to J, who gave him to his daughter, by whom he is taken out of the state. Upon the death of K, the owners of the remainder in the slave bring trover against M to recover the value of the slave. Held, the plaintiff not having had the right to the possession of the slave at the time M sold him, cannot maintain this action against M. Philips v. Martiney, 10 Gratt. 333.

Against Personal Representative.—It was held in Ferrill v. Brewis, 25 Gratt. 765, that trover may be sustained against a personal representative as such, though the goods never came into his hands.

If an administrator sell a chattel, whereof his intestate died possessed, but which in truth belonged of right to another, and apply the proceeds to payment of his intestate's debts in due course of administration, without any notice of the right or claim of the true owner, he is personally liable to the true owner for the value in trover brought by the owner

Williamsburg controlled the asylum there, the officer in command exercising chief command.

Previous to this time, a superintendent appointed by the Pierpoint government had the management for a brief period. There was no board of directors, the members having left the community, and were scattered over the country. Many of the subordinate officers, however, remained at the asylum in discharge of their duties. During the time the military had the control, they furnished the institution with supplies, often sending parties into the country and taking provisions from the citizens. In January 1865, a party of Federal soldiers was sent out under the command of a captain, upon an expedition of the kind. They went to the residence of the plaintiff, who was absent, and by force took all his corn and salted pork, sufficient to fill ten large four-horse wagons, one of which belonged to the asylum. The wagons were first driven to Fort Magruder, a military post near Williamsburg, and from that place, without being unloaded, were sent by the commanding officer directly to the asylum, where the provisions were left for the use of the inmates.

Upon this state of facts we are called 167 upon to determine *whether the asylum can be held liable for the value of the plaintiff's property. No right-thinking man will question the equity of the claim asserted. The plaintiff ought to be paid, unless there is some very positive, direct, legal impediment in the way of his recovery.

The ground taken by the defendant is, that the Federal commander had by the laws of war the right to take the plaintiff's property; and the mere fact that the property was subsequently appropriated to the use of the asylum, instead of the Federal troops, cannot impose any legal liability against him. Newsom v. Newsom, 1 Leigh 86, 19 Am. Dec. 739.

By Owner of Lost Certificate against Bona Fide Purchaser.—In Wilson v. Rucker, 1 Call 500, a non-negotiable certificate of indebtedness was lost, and afterwards sold to a bona fide purchaser, without notice. Held, the original owner may maintain trover for it against the innocent vendee.

Liability of Principal for Conversion by Agent.—In East. Lun. Asylum v. Garrett, 27 Gratt. 174, it was held that in all cases a destruction of the chattel is an act of conversion; that when there has been an act of conversion by an agent and the principal ratifies such act, the latter is estopped to deny the authority of the agent; and that for such conversion trover is the proper remedy.

Judgment in Action of Trover Bar to Action of Trespass.—In Hite v. Long, 6 Rand. 457, the plaintiff brought an action of trover for the conversion of his horse, and there was a judgment in favor of the defendant. Held, such judgment is a bar to an action of trespass by the plaintiff for the taking of the same horse.

Evidence.—In an action of trover by R. against B., for goods which had been lent by B. to the wife of C., and afterwards conveyed by C. to R., the wife of C. is a competent witness. Baring v. Reeder, 1 Hen. & M. 154.

upon the asylum to account for its value. In other words, the goods became, by the capture, the property of the United States government, and the plaintiff had no longer any claim to them as against any person whatever.

In considering this argument, it is proper to enquire very briefly, what is the usage of nations engaged in war with regard to the capture of movable property on land. The general rule, well settled by the humanity and policy of modern times, is to abstain from taking such property without making compensation, unless in special cases declared by the necessary operations of war. The exceptions are, first, seizure by way of penalty for military offences; second, property taken on the field of battle, or in storming a fortress or town, which is usually termed booty; and, third, forced contributions or levies for the support of the invading army, or as an indemnity for the expense of maintaining order and affording protection to the inhabitants.

Another exception to the rule is said to be found in the peculiar nature of the property which is the subject of capture. If the hostile power has an interest in the property which is available to him for the 168 purposes *of war, that fact makes it prima facie liable to capture. 1 Kent Com. 112; Dana's Wheat, 256, note 171; Halleck 457.

In the late war between the northern and southern sections cotton was regarded as a subject of foreign and domestic commerce, and as one of the main sources of war relied upon by the Confederate authorities for the purchase of arms and the preservation and extension of the public credit. It was therefore held in the federal courts to be a lawful subject of capture. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Mrs. Alexander's cotton, 2 Wall.

Proof of Title—Possession as Evidence.—Possession of personal property is prima facie evidence of title, and therefore if the defendant in an action of trover had possession of personal property after the plaintiff had possession thereof, such possession is sufficient evidence of title to sustain his defense until the plaintiff should prove title. Smoot v. Cook, 3 W. Va. 172; Haines v. Cochran, 26 W. Va. 719.

Measure of Damages.—The measure of damages in an action of trover for the conversion of personal property, is the fair value of the property at the time of the conversion, and is a question for the jury. Arnold v. Kelly, 4 W. Va. 642.

Effect of Judgment for Plaintiff.—A judgment against the defendant, for the full value of the property converted, vests the title to it in him, unless the property has been returned uninjured and unimpaired in value, in which event the plaintiff can only recover damages for its detention. Arnold v. Kelly, 4 W. Va. 642.

Where Property Taken and Returned.—The action of trover may be maintained in the case of an unlawful taking or intermeddling with personal property, against the wishes of the owner, although the property may have been returned to him before the institution of his suit. Arnold v. Kelly, 4 W. Va. 642.

U. S. R. 401, was placed avowedly upon this ground and this alone. See also Coolidge v. Guthrie, decided by Mr. Justice Swayne in the United States Circuit Court for the northern district of Ohio, 8 Amer. Law Reg. N. S. page 22.

In this last case the cotton had been taken from the farm of General Pillow and sold by General Curtis of the United States army. In an action against the purchaser, the defence was placed wholly upon the ground that cotton was lawful prize of war: It was not asserted by any one, that it was competent for a federal officer to seize and confiscate any and every species of movable property belonging to Southern citizens, and by such seizure divest the title of the true owner.

In 1780 an officer under the command of Lord Cornwallis, or Lord Raudon, took from a farmer in South Carolina negroes, horses, cattle and hogs, and under military orders had them taken to the British garrison at Camden. He was sued by the owner in 1784; and he pleaded the orders of his superiors, and further, that no part of the property was appropriated to his own 169 use: but the court held that both his superior officers and himself were equally guilty as trespassers.

In the case of Clark v. Dick, decided in the Circuit court of the United States for the district of Missouri, reported in 9 Amer. Law Reg. N. S. 739, the defendant pleaded that at the time of the alleged trespass a state of civil war existed, and martial law duly declared; that the alleged trespasses were compulsory assessments made by order of the commanding general of the army of the department of Missouri. It was held that these facts brought the case within the influence of the provision of the Missouri constitution exempting persons from all liability civil and criminal, for acts done during the war under the authority of the United States government and its officers. It was not pretended in that case, that the defendant was exempt by the laws of war from all liability. The sole reliance of the defence was the constitutional provision referred to. See also Lucas v. Bruce, 4 Amer. Law Reg. N. S. 95; Cummings v. Diggs' adm'or, 1 Heiskill N. 67.

These cases were not decided by courts of the last resort; they are, therefore not cited as controlling authority. Nor do I mean to affirm that the doctrines they announce are in entire harmony with the laws of war as laid down by learned publicists and commentators. They, however, show the general repugnance of the courts to give any extension to this doctrine of military supremacy over the lives and property of citizens even in the time of actual hostilities.

Be this as it may, the laws of nations already stated, exempt property on land from seizure and confiscation, except it be such as is available to the enemy for purposes of war, or such as may become booty in special cases, when taken from the actual operation of the invading army, and is taken by way of military contributions levied upon the inhabitants of the hostile territory.

170 enemies in the field or in besieged towns, or such as may be necessary to

In the present case, the seizure of the plaintiff's property cannot be justified upon either of the grounds mentioned. The only one of these which furnishes any semblance of warrant for the act, is that the goods were taken by way of military requisition or assessment. It will be observed, however, that they were not taken for the use of the army, or for the benefit of the United States government. It was not the intention of the officer to appropriate the property to either of these objects; nor was it taken by way of indemnity to the conqueror for expenses incurred in supporting the inhabitants. It is one thing to exercise a right of capture for the government, another, and a very different thing, to seize the property of one citizen merely for the purpose of transfer to another.

There is no doubt but that the federal commander at Williamsburg was influenced by motives of humanity, and to a great extent by actual necessity, in taking charge of the asylum, and in furnishing the inmates with the means of subsistence. The institution was left by the calamities of war without a board of directors, without a superintendent, and without the means of subsistence. In this condition of things the strongest considerations of humanity required the federal authorities to see that the unfortunate inmates were not left to starve, nor turned loose upon the country, to add to the horrors of the struggle. But whatever may have been the necessities of the asylum, the military authorities were not authorized to relieve them by exactions and forced contributions levied upon the 171 plaintiff. With equal propriety it might be claimed that the federal commander finding a citizen in want of a horse to cultivate his farm could seize the plaintiff's, and appropriate it to that purpose, and thus divest the title.

In the case of Moran v. Smell, 5 West Va. R. 26, it appeared that a party of Confederate soldiers had gone into the county of Taylor and taken a number of horses belonging to citizens of that county; thereupon a federal officer commanding a military post for the department of West Virginia, ordered an equal number of horses to be taken from citizens who sympathized with the Confederate cause, and turned over to the persons whose horses had been taken by the Confederate soldiers. The plaintiff was one of those whose horse was seized by the order of the federal commander, and after the war he brought his action of trover against the party having the horse in possession under authority of the federal officer.

The Supreme court of West Virginia, a tribunal then certainly having but little sympathy with the Confederate cause, unanimously held that the act of the federal officer was illegal, and conferred no title upon the defendant. And yet it is easy to understand that the decision would probably have been very different if the officer had seized the horse for the use of the army, in the exercise of the right of capture. The plaintiff's title being divested by the capture for lawful purposes in war, he could not have recovered against the defendant, no matter how the latter might have acquired possession.

In the present case it may be that the federal commander seized the plaintiff's property by virtue of his authority and power as an officer; but it is perfectly clear that he was not exercising, or attempting to exercise, the right of capturing an 172 enemy's property for *purposes of war.

That power he could exercise only for the benefit of his army or his government. In undertaking to seize and transfer the plaintiff's property to the defendant, he transcended his authority and violated the laws and usages of war.

The most just and reasonable inference is, that he did not intend to determine anything affecting the right of property; that having taken the plaintiff's goods by sheer physical power for the use of the asylum, his purpose was that the rights of the parties should be finally settled by the laws of that government to which they belonged. The fact that the provisions were taken to the asylum without unloading—if it indicates anything at all—plainly shows that the purpose was that these supplies must be understood as being designed exclusively for the asylum, and not for the benefit of the Federal government, its officers or agents.

We should hesitate long before we gave our sanction to an act which, if it was not robbery, was an arbitrary seizure of the plaintiff's property without the shadow of a justification, either as an act of war or of peace. We should be still more cautious how we sanction the doctrine that any officer of an invading army may, at his good will and pleasure, divest and establish the transfer of titles from one citizen to another, upon vague and general notions of belligerent rights and powers.

There is another point of view in which this question deserves some consideration. At the time of this seizure, the Federal authorities were in the undisputed occupation of the city of Williamsburg, and had been for more than two years. Their dominion was absolute and unquestioned. Now in Mrs. Alexander's cotton, 2 Wall. U. S. R.

15, it was insisted by her counsel,
173 *that her cotton was not liable to capture because the territory was not enemy territory. The Supreme court of the United States did not controvert the proposition of law; but they said the military occupation by the Federal troops was too limited, too incomplete, too brief and too precarious, to change the enemy relation created for the country and its inhabitants by three years of continuing rebellion, interrupted at least, for a few weeks only, but immediately renewed and ever since maintained.

In the case before us, whatever may have been the effect of the long continued occupation of the region around Williamsburg by the federal forces—whether that territory did or did not cease to be enemy's territory, according to the strict terms of war—still, the plaintiff not being under the jurisdiction and control of the Confederate government, and the property being also at the time of seizure free from that control, and having so continued for years, was not in the predicament which made it the subject of capture. Both by its laws and proclamations the federal government had promised protection of persons and property to Southern citizens submitting to its control. If the officer had taken the plaintiff's property assuredly for the use of his army without compensation, he would have violated his duties and no doubt his instructions. Much more did he transcend his authority in plundering the plaintiff for the benefit of the asylum, in taking a citizen's goods to feed the state paupers. The language of the Supreme Court of the United States in Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. U. S. R. 115, is very applicable to such a case: And that is, that a military officer cannot impress the private property of a citizen into the public service without compensation, except under the most urgent necessity, such as will *admit of no delay, 174 and where the action of the civil authorities would be too late in providing the means which the occasion calls for. It is the emergency that gives the right; and the emergency must be shown to exist before the taking can be justified.

The only remaining question is whether an action of trover is the proper remedy in this case. The asylum is a corporation and as such may sue or be sued in trespass or trover. Yarborough v. Bank of England, 16 East's R. 5. If a corporation obtains property which does not belong to it, its duty is to restore it, or if used to render an equivalent to the owner. It was the duty of the corporate authorities to supply the inmates with the means of subsistence. If they failed or were unable to do so, and the plaintiff's property was taken for that purpose by one assuming to act for the asylum, and as its agent, and the goods have been actually used by the asylum, it is responsible for the value; and is estopped to deny the authority of the agent in the act of conversion. In all cases a destruction of the chattel is an act of conversion, for its effect is to deprive the owner entirely of his property.

It has been held in many cases, that where the law imposes an obligation on a corporation which it refuses or fails to discharge, it may be held liable civilly at the suit of a party who sustains damages in consequence of its refusal. And where the law makes paupers or lunatics a charge upon a corporation, it is bound to provide them a comfortable support. And it has been held in a number of cases that if the corporation will not discharge this duty, individuals may furnish the necessaries and look to the corporation for remuneration.

Trustees of Cincinnati township &c. v. Ogden, 5 Ham. R. 23; Shreve v. Budd, 2 Halst. R. 431; *Seagraves v. City of Alton, 13 Illi. R. 366; Tomlinson v. Bentall, 5 Barn. and Cress, 738. See also Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. R. 255, 282. And see case in 2 Rob. Prac. (New E.) 443-'4. Here the case is much stronger. If the asylum did not intend to adopt the act of the officer acting as superintendent and agent it ought to have restored the goods, or if that was impossible it was bound to render an equivalent in value.

Christian, J. I cannot give my assent to the judgment of the court in this case.

In my opinion, upon plain principles of law, no legal liability can be fixed upon the corporation known as the "Eastern Lunatic Asylum," for the value of the provisions taken by the military commander, and appropriated by him to the use of the lunatics in that asylum.

The action brought by the appellee (Garrett) is an action of trover and conversion. To maintain such an action two things are essential: First, The title to the property must be in the plaintiff; Second, The conversion by the defendant must be wrongful, or at least voluntary. In this case both of these essential elements are wanting.

First: As to the title. Garrett was divested of his title, by the regular impressment made by the order of the military officer in command at Williamsburg.

The record shows that when the Confederate army retired from the Peninsula, the city of Williamsburg was occupied by the Federal army, and the Eastern Lunatic Asylum, located in that city, was from that time under the exclusive control and protection of the Federal commander assigned to that military post by the Federal government. Both the superintendent 176 *and directors of that institution had fled with the Confederate army. Indeed, all the officers of the institution, except perhaps the nurses and other subordinate employees of the asylum, left upon the evacuation of the city of Williamsburg by the Confederate forces. It became a matter of stern necessity, as well as the highest duty of humanity, that the military commander should take possession of that institution and provide for its unhappy and defenceless inmates, who could make no provision for themselves.

That this military commander had the right, under the laws of war, to make impressments, and compel forced contributions from the people residing within the military district of which he had command, for the support of the unfortunate lunatics whom the fortunes of war had placed under his protection, seems to me too plain a proposition for serious debate or question.

Upon the evacuation of the city of Williamsburg, and its occupation by the Federal army, Colonel West, the officer in command, found this asylum, with its hundreds of unhappy and dependent inmates, deserted by its officers, without provisions, and helpless to provide them. Must they be turned loose? Must they be left within the walls of the asylum as prisoners to starve? What did the enlightened public law and the laws of civilized warfare demand at his hands? Plainly to protect them and provide them with food. Must this food be furnished out of his own commissariat? Had he not the right to make forced contributions upon the people for that purpose? Must these poor unfortunates starve because he could not furnish them out of his own commissary stores, and because he had no authority to impress provisions for that purpose? If these provisions (the corn and pork of Garrett)

177 had *been taken by impressment, by order of Colonel West for the support of his own army, the title (it is conceded) would have passed out of Garrett at the moment of the impressment. Did not the title also pass to the federal commander, and out of Garrett, the moment they were impressed for the legitimate and more humane use of these poor starving lunatics?

It must be borne in mind that these provisions (corn and pork) taken from the defendant in error (Garrett) were not seized by a band of marauders and robbers without authority, but by a military officer acting under authority of Colonel West, an officer in command of the military district, and in command of the army of occupation.

That such property as that taken from the plaintiff was a proper subject of capture under the laws of war cannot be denied.

The principles of public law, recognized by all civilized nations, and asserted by all enlightened publicists, declare the right of capture of such property by the army of occupation; and when taken, not by marauders, but by regular impressment, authorized by the officer in command, is lawful. Halleck's In. Nat. Law 458, § 15, and cases there cited.

The title to property thus taken in war must, upon general principles, be considered as immediately divested from the original owner, and transferred to the captor. As to personal property or movables, the title is in general lost to the former proprietors, as soon as the enemy has acquired a firm possession. The property becomes absolutely the property of the captor, and the original owner is absolutely divested of his title thereto. Wheaton on International Law, § 359; 1 Kent's Com. 110 (marg.); 178 also see Secretary Marcy's *Instructions to General Taylor in note to 1st Kent 92 (marg.).

Now it is conceded in the opinion of the court, that if Garrett's corn and pork had been taken for the support of the army of occupation, the capture would have been lawful, and the original owner divested of his title. But it is said that as they were not taken for that purpose, but for the use of the lunatics, the title of the owner was not divested, and that he may recover their value from the Eastern Lunatic Asylum. I cannot see the force of this view. If the property taken was subject to capture under the laws of war; if it was made by regular impressment by an officer having authority to make it, the title was at once transferred to the captors, and was no longer in the original owner. It matters not (the property itself being under the laws of war a proper subject of capture), what disposition the captor made of it, whether he fed it away to his own soldiers, or distributed it among the poor, or gave it away to prisoners he had captured, or fed it away to starving and helpless lunatics, whom the fortunes of war had placed under his protection and control, the question of title cannot be affected by the use he made of the provisions. They were a proper subject of capture to an army of occupation in the enemy's country, and when captured by regular impressment the title passed to the captor, and cannot be affected by the use the captor made of them, whether used to feed the army of occupation, or as a benefaction to the helpless inmates of a lunatic asylum.

I deny that the military commander had the right to make capture of provisions only for the support and maintenance of his army. I insist that upon principle and express authority of the most learned writers on international law, he had the same 179 right to make *forced contributions from the people within his military lines, for the support of these unhappy lunatics whom the fortunes of war had temporarily placed under his protection, as, it is conceded, he had to make forced contributions for the support of his own soldiers. He could do this with or without compensation if the necessity arose; and of that necessity he was the sole judge.

Mr. Halleck, in his admirable work on the Laws of War, p. 457, says: "The modern usage is not to take private property on land without making compensation, except in certain specified cases. These exceptions may be stated under three general heads: 1st, Confiscation or seizure by way of penalty for military offences. 2nd, Forced contributions for the support of invading armies, or as an indemnity for the expenses of maintaining order and affording protection to the conquered inhabitants. And, 3d, Property taken on the field of battle or in storming a fortress or town. All enlightened publicists and writers on international law, Kent, Vattel, Grotius Polson, Martens and Hefflite, lay down the same doctrine. One of the exceptions to the general rule (that private property on land ought not to be taken without compensation) is that it may be done "for the purpose of affording protection to the conquered inhabitants;" and these writers all agree that when so taken the title of the original owner is divested.

If private property may be taken for the purpose of affording protection to the conquered inhabitants, surely a multi fortiori it may be done also for the protection and maintenance of that part of the conquered inhabitants who are helpless and hopeless lunatics. It is clear, therefore, that the corn and pork taken from Garrett being property which under the laws of war 180 *was subject to capture, and being taken by regular impressment by the commanding officer of the army of occupation, the legal title of Garrett in this property was divested from him and vested in the captor. It follows, therefore, that Garrett having no title, cannot maintain the action of trover.

So much for the plaintiff. How is it with the defendant? Did the defendant make a conversion of this property? Who is the defendant? The Eastern Lunatic Asylum, a corporation created by statute, and composed of the president and board of directors. How did this corporation make the conversion complained of by the plaintiff? At the time of the transaction, out of which this suit grew, the board of directors was scattered, the superintendent was gone. There was no corporate body at Williamsburg. The building was there, and the unhappy inmates were there; but the board of directors, and every officer except certain subordinates, such as nurses, &c., were all gone. The corporation was not there. It could make no contract—it could commit no trespass—it could make no conversion.

Here then we have a case in which, in an action of trover, a plaintiff who has no title, recovers against a defendant, who not only did not, but could not, make a conversion.

But it is said that the inmates of the Eastern Lunatic Asylum got the benefit of, had the use of Garrett's corn and pork, and therefore the corporation ought to pay for them. Is this a sound view? Now waiving the insuperable objections as to the form of the action, is this true? Let us see if, upon the most equitable and liberal principles, treating the action of trover as an equitable action, this is true?

Suppose that Colonel West (as he did do in fact) had arrested as prisoners a number of citizens of Williamsburg.
181 *and had fed them during their imprisonment with the provisions taken from Garrett: is it possible that after the close of the war those gentlemen could have been sued by Garrett, and a recovery had upon the ground that they had the use of the provisions thus taken, and that too in an action of trover and conversion? Or suppose (as he did do) Colonel West had distributed to the poor of Williamsburg certain provisions, and these were such as he had captured from Mr. Garrett: is it possible that after the war Garrett could have recovered of the returned Confederate soldier the value of these provisions, consumed by his family, given to them by the Federal commander, upon the ground that those families used them, and that too in an action of trover. The negative to these questions is no stronger than the negative to the proposition which this court asserts against the Eastern Lunatic Asylum. To maintain such an action is to reverse all the rules of law, and to declare that in an action of trover a plaintiff without title can recover against a defendant who did not and could not make a conversion.

If the appellee has any claim it is one that ought to be addressed to the generosity and sense of justice of the legislature, but cannot be maintained in a court of law. I am for reversing the judgment of the Circuit court, and remitting the appellee for redress to the legislature.

182 *Cabell & als. v. Cox.

a. Investment by Executor under Decree of Court—Pleading—Demurrer to Declaration.*—C executes a bond to H, executor of E, and commissioner under a decree of the Circuit court of H, in the case of H and R, with conditions reciting that C has borrowed of H, executor and commissioner as aforesaid, the sum of, &c., of the money of his testator's estate, which, by the decree aforesaid, he is authorized to put out at interest, &c. In an action on this bond by H against C, not averring any order of the court authorizing H to collect the money, upon demurrer held the declaration is sufficient.

a. Same—Suit to Collect without Order of Court.—The decree under which H loaned the money to C, authorized H to lend any money of his testator's estate in his hands upon security on real estate, and to take bonds in his own name as executor, the interest to be paid semi-annually, and the principal when he may so require, and hold and account therefor as executor as aforesaid. H may sue upon the bond without any further order of the court directing him to collect the money.

a. Same—Confederate Contracts.—In November 1857 H lent the money to G, secured on real estate. In 1861 G wished to pay it to H, who declined to receive it, saying it was well secured, and it was not needed. But in December 1861, being urged by G, he agreed that if G would find any person who would take it he might do so. In January 1862 G proposed to C to take it, and in February C did take it, and gave his bond to H for the amount secured by deed of trust. The whole arrangement was made through G, C not having seen H, and G paid C in Confederate money. It is not a Confederate contract, liable to be scaled.

The case is stated by Judge Christian in his opinion.

Wm. Green and John Howard, for the appellants.

Steger and Guy & Gilliam, for the appellee.

183 *Christian J. delivered the opinion of the court.

This case is before us on a writ of error to a judgment of the Circuit court of the city of Richmond.

The following are the material facts disclosed by the record.

Henry Cox was the executor of Edward Cox. He held in his hand as such executor a considerable amount. He could not, it seems, distribute this amount among the legatees entitled, in consequence of pending litigation. Whereupon he filed his bill in the Circuit court of Henrico, asking the advice of the court as to a proper disposition of the fund. That court on the 17th of May 1854, entered its decree by which it was declared "that the plaintiff (Henry Cox) be authorized to invest any money of his testator's now in his hands, or which may hereafter come into his hands, on six per cent. loan of the state of Virginia, or bonds guaranteed by the state, or in loans to individuals secured on real estate, and on such additional security as he may think proper, taking bonds and certificates in his own name as executor, the interest thereon to be paid semi-annually and the principal when he may so require, and hold and account therefor as executor aforesaid."

The record further shows that acting under this decree, the executor Henry Cox, in November 1857, loaned to Goddin and Apperson the sum of $14,082.52, for which they executed their bond, and secured the payment thereof by a deed of trust upon real property. That sometime in the fall of 1861, Goddin and Apperson desiring to pay off this bond, requested Cox to receive payment; but he expressed his unwillingness to receive it, saying the money was not needed, and as it was well invested 184 he was unwilling to receive it. *The defendant Goddin had several interviews with the plaintiff, who always expressed an unwillingness to receive the money. Finally about the month of December 1861, the defendant Goddin again saw the plaintiff and asked him if he (Goddin) could find a party who would borrow the money upon the same terms that they (Goddin and Apperson) held it, if he (the plaintiff) would be willing to take such party and release them. To this proposition the plaintiff assented. Shortly thereafter, in January '62, Goddin saw the defendant Cabell, and informed him if he wanted money he could effect a considerable loan for him, which he thought he could keep for a long time, as the money belonged to an estate, and was held in a fiduciary character, and would not be wanted for a considerable time. Cabell said he would think of the matter; and shortly thereafter told Goddin he would take the loan. This happened in the month of January 1862, but was not consummated until the 4th of February, 1862, when Cabell, with Goddin and Apperson as his sureties, executed the bond sued, and secured the payment of the same, by deed of trust on certain real property in and near the city of Richmond. Thereupon Cox delivered up to Goddin and Apperson their bond and a release of the deed executed by them.

The bond executed by Cabell, with Goddin and Apperson as sureties, and which is the subject of controversy in this suit, is in the following words:

"Know all men by these presents, that we, Henry C. Cabell, Wellington Goddin, and James L. Apperson, are held and firmly bound unto Henry Cox, executor of Edward Cox deceased, and commissioner under a decree of the Circuit court of Henrico 185 in the case of *Cox v. Read and others, in the just and full sum of twenty-eight thousand one hundred and sixty-five dollars and four cents; for the payment whereof we bind ourselves jointly and severally by these presents, sealed with our seals and dated the 1st day of January 1862.

The condition of the above obligation is such, that whereas the above bound Henry C. Cabell has borrowed of the said Henry Cox, executor and commissioner as aforesaid, the principal sum of fourteen thousand eighty-two dollars and fifty-two cents of the money of his testator's estate, which by the decree aforesaid he is authorized to put out at interest. Now therefore, if the above bound Henry C. Cabell shall, whenever required by the said Henry Cox, or by an order of the court in said cause, pay the said sum of fourteen thousand and eighty-two dollars and fifty-two cents, with all interest in arrear thereon, and meanwhile pay the interest as it shall accrue semi-annually on the 1st day of July and 1st day of January in each year, then the above obligation is to be void, otherwise to remain in full force."

(Signed by Henry C. Cabell, W. Goddin, and J. L. Apperson.)

Upon this bond an action of debt was brought in the Circuit court of the city of Richmond. The defendants demurred to the declaration, pleaded payment, and tendered two special pleas in writing. The Circuit court overruled the demurrer, rejected the special pleas, and issue being joined on the plea of payment, and a jury being waived, the court gave judgment for the penalty of the aforesaid bond to be discharged by the payment of fourteen thousand and eighty-two dollars and fifty-two cents, with interest from 1st January 1862, 186 subject to a credit of sixteen *hundred and eighty-eight dollars paid 27th February 1864.

It was from this judgment that a writ of error was allowed by this court.

The court is of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the Circuit court. First. The demurrer was properly overruled. There was no substantial variance between the bond of whichoyer is craved, and the bond set out in the declaration. The bond sued on was due not to his testator, but to Henry Cox, the executor. The legal title was in him, and he had the right to demand and sue for the same. The words in the bond, "executor of Edward Cox, deceased, and commissioner of the Circuit court of Henrico, in the case of Cox v. Read and others," may be regarded as mere descriptio personæ. Henry Cox being the executor, and the debt being payable to him and not to his testator, he may bring the suit in his own name.

Second. There was no error in the judgment of the Circuit court in rejecting the two special pleas offered by the defendants. The first plea alleges that the action could not be maintained against the defendants, "because they say that no order has ever been made by the court in the said suit of Cox v. Read, requiring of these defendants, or either of them, to pay the said sum of $14,082.52, with interest as demanded, or any part thereof."

The 2nd plea alleges that the action cannot be maintained, because the plaintiff has never been authorized or required by an order or decree of the court in said suit of Cox v. Read, or otherwise, to collect the said sum of $14,082.52, or any part thereof, and that he hath no lawful authority to collect the same by suit or otherwise."

The decree of the Circuit court of 187 Henrico in the *suit of Cox v. Read &c., was before the Circuit court of Richmond, and is a part of the record in this case. Looking to that decree, we find that Cox was directed to loan out the fund in his hands, or which might come into his hands on certain security specified, and to take "bonds and certificates in his own name as executor, the interest thereon to be paid semi-annually, and the principal, when he may so require, and hold and account therefor as executor aforesaid." It is plain under this decree, that Cox had plenary authority to collect and call in the fund loaned out at any time he saw fit, and no further order of the Circuit court was necessary either to require the parties, who had borrowed the money, to pay it into court, or to the executor, or to authorize the executor to collect it. He was already invested with that power by the decree under which he acted, and there was no occasion or necessity for any further order. The court was therefore not in error in rejecting the two special pleas.

Third. The said Circuit court did not err in giving judgment for the whole amount of the bond upon the issue made up on the plea of payment.

The only question between the parties upon that issue was, whether the debt was subject to be scaled under the act of the 3rd March 1866. It is clear, upon the facts of this case, that under numerous decisions of the court it must be held that the bond sued upon is not such a contract as comes within the terms or spirit of the adjustment act above referred to.

The scale of depreciation is applied, only in a case where it appears that according to the true understanding and agreement of the parties (that is, of both parties), the contract was to be fulfilled or performed in Confederate States treasury notes, or was entered into with reference to said 188 notes as a standard of value. *No such "agreement or understanding" "appears" either from the facts proved in the case or from any possible reasonable implication from those facts. But the very contrary appears. Cox, as executor under the decree above referred to, had loaned the money ($14,080.52) to Goddin and Apperson in the year 1857. He was unwilling to receive it, as it was safely invested and he did not need it for the use of the estate he represented. He only yielded, after repeated interviews, to the solicitations of Goddin, who conducted the negotiations, upon condition that he would find a party who would borrow the money upon the same terms that they, Goddin and Apperson, held it. Cox had no personal interview with Cabell, and no dealings with him in reference to the negotiation. Cabell's bond and Cabell's deed of trust were simply accepted by Cox in the place of the bond and deed of Goddin and Apperson; and Cabell in effect assumed to pay the debt of Goddin and Apperson, upon the latter paying over to Cabell the money due to Cox. This was certainly Cox's understanding of the matter. He certainly did not agree to receive a depreciated currency for a gold debt due to him as executor already amply secured. He was unwilling to change the investment already made, and did it, at last, for the accommodation of the defendants. It never could have entered into his mind for a moment, that when he accepted Cabell's bond and Cabell's deed of trust, he was thereby agreeing to receive a less amount than that for which Goddin and Apperson were bound to him.

As to what was the understanding of Cabell, the record is silent. It is argued here that he received Confederate money of Goddin, and ought to be required 189 *to pay only the value of Confederate money in gold at the time he received it.

True, he received Confederate money; but at that time (February 1862) this currency was but little depreciated, and though according to the gold scale $1.20 was worth only $1.00, its purchasing value was but little, if any, less than gold, and it was universally received in payment of ante bellum debts at that time dollar for dollar. Colonel Cabell might have paid debts or purchased property with the $14,000 he received, without suffering any loss from its depreciation. Whether he did or not, the contract which he made with Cox is not one to which, under the decisions of this court, the scale of depreciation can be applied. See Walker, personal representative, v. Pierce, 21 Gratt. 722; Bowman v. Miller & Co., 25 Gratt. 331; Tams v. Brannaman, 23 Gratt. 809; Shiflett v. Long's adm'x, 23 Gratt. 718.

The judgment of the Circuit court of Richmond must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

190 *Morrison v. Morrison & als.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

Deeds—Of Deaf and Dumb and Uneducated Person.—

The deed of an uneducated deaf and dumb man acknowledged before a justice and recorded, sustained upon the proof that the deed was explained to him, and that he was believed to understand it; and there being no evidence of any fraud on the part of the grantee.

This was a suit in equity in the Circuit court of Henry county, brought in November 1870 by Horace Morrison, and on his death revived in the name of his administrator and heirs, against Thomas J. Morrison, to set aside a deed executed by said Horace to said Thomas J. Morrison, on the ground that it had been procured by fraudulent means.

Horace Morrison was a deaf mute, without any education; though he was a man of good sense, and could make himself understood by signs by persons well acquainted with him, and such persons could make themselves understood by him. At the time the deed was made he was about fifty years old, unmarried, and his habits were not good. He owned a small farm of about twenty acres, on which there was a good house in which he lived, and also some horses and stock and farming implements.

The deed bears date the 10th of April 1867, and purports to be "in consideration of the natural love and affection which the said Horace Morrison has for his nephew, the said Thomas J. Morrison; and for 191 the *further consideration that the said Thomas J. Morrison has, since last September, lived with, and shall continue to live with, and support, the said Horace Morrison during the remainder of his life, the said Horace Morrison hath given, granted, &c., conveying the land and the personal property; and it concludes as follows: It being the intention of the said Horace Morrison to convey, and he does hereby convey, all of his property of every sort to the said Thomas J. Morrison, in consideration of the premises, and the said Thomas J. Morrison, on his part, in consideration of the said conveyance, agrees to live with and support comfortably the said Horace Morrison during the remainder of his life.

This deed was retained in the hands of Horace Morrison from its date until September 28th, 1869, when it was executed by both the parties to it, and their acknowledgment of it was taken by John Miller, a justice of the county of Henry; and it was then recorded.

The bill after stating plaintiff's condition, states that he agreed that his nephew, Thomas J. Morrison, and his wife, should come to his house, reside with him, and assist in the management of his farm and domestic operations; and that in pursuance of said agreement his said nephew and wife did come to his house, and resided with him during parts of the year 1866 and 1867. But instead of being content with the share of the farm products, as he agreed to do, the said Thomas and his wife began soon to control and manage his farm as if it belonged to them. That plaintiff, in consequence of his condition and declining health, was willing to enter into an agreement with his said nephew, to the effect that he, the said Thomas J. and wife would aid him in the management of his affairs 192 *during his lifetime, and be kind and affectionate to him, that plaintiff would by will or deed convey to them his premises aforesaid, to take effect at his death, and communicated to them his willingness to do so in the best manner he could.

He further states that Thomas J. Morrison procured a deed to be written, and represented to the plaintiff that it was strictly in accordance with the aforesaid agreement, and desired plaintiff to sign it; but plaintiff did not then do so. That in consequence of a disagreement between him and his said nephew and wife, they left his house, and his wife never returned again; and the said Thomas J. came only occasionally, not to aid the plaintiff, but to control his property. That thus matters remained between them until the fall of 1869, when the said Thomas J. insisted upon plaintiff consummating the said proposition, by acknowledging said deed before a magistrate, in order that it might be recorded; and again represented to the plaintiff that the deed, which he had had prepared, only conveyed the said lands to him at plaintiff's death; and did not in any way affect his title and dominion of the same during his life. He declares that he was wholly ignorant of the contents of the deed when he signed it; that Thomas J. Morrison wilfully and knowingly misrepresented the contents of the deed to the plaintiff, for the purpose of cheating and defrauding him out of his home and property. And he prays that the deed may be annulled and set aside as fraudulent and void; that said Thomas J. may be inhibited from selling or controlling the property, and may be required to account for all that he has disposed of; and for general relief.

Thomas J. Morrison answered the bill.

He denies positively every insinuation or allegation of fraud.
 193 *He says he had lived, before his marriage, on the most friendly terms with the plaintiff, who was his uncle; and after his marriage, the said Horace, without any importuning by the respondent, proposed that respondent and his wife should make his house their home as long as he should live, and promised and agreed that if respondent would comply with his wishes in this respect, he would execute a deed in fee simple to the respondent of all his property, both real and personal, with the condition, of course, that respondent and his wife would treat him kindly. That respondent accepted the proposition. That in view of respondent's approaching marriage, the deed was prepared; and, after respondent's marriage, he and his wife lived with plaintiff for six months, when his wife wished to return to her father's at a distance of about two miles and a half, to which the said Horace kindly agreed, upon the condition that respondent should still attend to his business; and respondent visited the said Horace every day or so to enquire into his condition and provide for his wants.

Respondent further says, that at the time he and his wife left the house of the said Horace, the deed, though written, was in his possession and not executed. After it was executed and acknowledged, the said Horace insisted that respondent and his wife should take up their regular abode at his house, he having of his own accord and unsolicited delivered the said deed to the respondent; and they did return, and they remained there about six or eight months, and during that time did everything in their power to please the said Horace and promote his comfort. But very soon after their return, his habits became, from drunkenness, very disagreeable, so that respondent could not in justice to his family remain longer in the house; and in 194 the *spring of 1870 he left the house for the reason herein stated. But after he left, the said Horace often called on respondent to transact business for him, in the most friendly way, when he was sober. And respondent, whenever called on, without hesitation, supplied him with whatever money he wanted, kept him well supplied with provisions of all kinds up to the period of his death, which occurred in May 1871.

A number of witnesses were examined by both plaintiffs and defendants. This evidence is referred to by Judge Anderson in his opinion. There is certainly no evidence of improper persuasion by Thomas J. Morrison, to induce Horace Morrison to execute the deed; and Miller, the justice who took the acknowledgment of the deed, and who was called by the plaintiff as a witness, states that the explanations of the deed were made to Horace Morrison by Thomas J. Morrison, Skelton Coleman, and G. J. Gray; that he seemed to acquiesce in the explanation very willingly, and willingly signed the deed. Witness was not at that time familiar with the sign language of said Horace Morrison; but he would not have certified to the acknowledgment of the deed unless he had believed he understood the nature of the instrument and willingly executed it. His belief was based upon the representations of his willingness to sign the deed, and upon the representations of the witnesses and bystanders as to his knowledge of its contents. Indeed, there is no evidence of his unwillingness to execute the deed; though there is some that he intended it to take effect at his death.

The cause came on to be heard on the 8th of May 1872, when the court set aside the deed, and directed the defendant Thomas J. Morrison to surrender the land and other property. And thereupon Thomas J.
 195 *Morrison applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

James Alfred Jones, for the appellant.

There was no counsel for the appellees.

Anderson J. delivered the opinion of the court.

Horace Morrison and Thomas J. Morrison on the 28th day of September 1869 executed and acknowledged a deed before John Miller, a justice of the peace, to annul and set aside which, for fraud, the bill in this case was filed by the former. The answer positively denies any and every intimation and allegation of fraud. The decree of the Circuit court, in which the cause was pending, set aside and annulled the deed as fraudulent and void; from which decree the defendant appealed to this court.

I do not think that the charge of fraud is supported by the proofs. It is true that the plaintiff was both deaf and dumb, and was born so. But it appears from the testimony of both the plaintiff's and the defendants' witnesses, that he was capable of making known his thoughts and wishes by signs to those who were well acquainted with him, and of understanding their communications to himself with a most remarkable certainty. He was not educated, but the weight of testimony shows that he was a man of intelligence, and was remarkably cautious in his business transactions, and understood well his own interests. It is proved that an application was made at one time to the court of his county to appoint an agent to attend to his business, but the court refused, upon the ground that he was 196 fully competent to attend to his matters *himself. The plaintiff's witness,

Silas Minter, says "if he was not drinking, I don't think he would be apt to sign any paper without understanding fully the purport and meaning of the paper;" and it is not pretended that he was drinking at the time this deed was prepared or executed. It was written more than two years before he executed it, and remained in his possession, affording him opportunity of having it explained to him by his acquaintances, of which it is probable he availed himself. He sent for men to witness it, who undoubtedly explained it to him. Mr. Miller, the justice before whom it was acknowledged, testifies that Skelton Coleman and G. J. Gray were witnesses to the deed, though their names do not appear to be subscribed to the copy in the record. And he says that both of them in his presence explained it to him before he executed it, and acknowledged it before him. He certified his acknowledgment, and swears that he would not have certified it if he had not believed that he fully understood the nature of it. This witness was introduced by the plaintiff, and certainly had no leaning to the defendant. Mr. Coleman says he was present when the deed was made, and had no doubt that his mind was as good as it ever was, and that "he perfectly understood what he was doing."

There is evidence too that before he made the deed he had determined to give all his property to this nephew, and not to have it divided amongst his kin. One of the witnesses, William Watson, testifies that sometime before he made this deed, he told him that he intended to give all his property to Thomas J. Morrison, and proposed to him to go with him to Henry Courthouse, to get Mr. George D. Gravely to write the deed, which he declined to do, as it did not concern him. Andrew Morrison testifies, that he sent him after *the men to witness the deed, and told him a number of times that he intended to make the deed. At least eight or nine witnesses testified to the deed, and that they knew that it was his intention to give all his property to Thomas J. Morrison, his nephew. Indeed he does not himself deny that such was his purpose, or that he signed the deed in question. But he is made to say in his bill that he signed it under the misrepresentation of his said nephew, that it was not to take effect until after his death. How can we know that he alleged the facts or statements of the bill, or the foregoing charge against his nephew? If he could make himself understood as to those matters, he could have made known his wishes as to the disposal or conveyance of his property. And if he could understand the allegations made in the bill, so as to give them his sanction and to make it his bill, why could he not understand the explanations made to him by Coleman and Gray, and others, as to the purport and meaning of the deed, which he kept for two years, and then executed? or if he could be made to understand its contents after it was executed, why not before? The deposition of Coleman was taken, and he testifies that he fully understood what he was doing. The grantor approved of it upon his explanation and Gray's, and Thomas Morrison, and willingly signed it and acknowledged it before the magistrate, who being satisfied that he understood it, certified his acknowledgment. But his bill charges that Thomas J. Morrison misrepresented to him the purport and meaning of the deed. There is no proof in the record to support the allegation. The contrary is established by the evidence, as far as a negative can be proved. It is proved that Coleman and Gray both explained the deed to him, and the presumption is that they explained it to him 198 *truthfully, and it is the fair inference, that Thomas Morrison explained it to him in the same way they did. Indeed the charge of misrepresenting the purport and meaning of the deed to him by Thomas Morrison cannot be maintained without convicting Coleman and Gray, who appear to be disinterested and unimpeached witnesses, of a false representation of its purport and meaning. I think the testimony proves that he was satisfied with the deed as it was represented to him by Coleman and Gray, and willingly signed it; and it negatives the charge of a false and fraudulent representation to him by his nephew. There is no testimony in the cause of either party in conflict with this view of the case, but much that has not been commented on to support it.

It seems that Thomas Morrison was not living with his uncle when the deed was executed, but two or three months after went to live with him, agreeably to his promise, and he and his wife remained with him some six or eight months. The unfortunate old man's habits had become very bad, and he was frequently drunk, or under the influence of liquor, and treated his nephew's wife badly, so that her husband could not, with any propriety, require her to remain there, and they moved away, as they were required to do by the plaintiff, and with his consent. But the proof is, that whilst they remained on the premises their treatment of the old man was uniformly kind and respectful, and that they clothed him and fed him well. And after they moved from the place he was visited by his nephew, and his wants inquired into and supplied by him, as far as he would allow him.

It is not pretended by Horace Morrison, or by those who may have been anxious to defeat the transfer of his little property to his nephew, that they might get 199 *it themselves, that it was not his intention to give the whole of his property to the appellant. That seems to be conceded on all hands, and he objects to the deed only upon the ground that as represented to him, it in effect takes the property from him during his life and transfers it to his nephew. It is not clear that it may not be differently construed. It does not seem to contemplate any removal of property, or transfer of possession during the life of the grantor. It is true the deed passes the title to the grantee in præsentî; but it can only be enjoyed by the grantee during the life of the grantor by his living with him. The grantor's right to his home is recognized by the clause which requires the grantee to live with him during his life. Under the provisions of this deed I do not think it would have been in the power of the grantee to have ousted the grantor of his possession during his life. And I think he could only have enjoyed the use of the personal property during his life, whilst he lived with him. It seems to me that is implied in the grantee's covenants. And to make it more effectual the deed is signed and sealed and acknowledged by him as well as by the grantor. Whether the deed will bear this construction in law or not, it might have been so understood by the parties, and such, as I understand the record, has been its practical working. When the grantee was forced to leave, by the conduct of the grantor in the maltreatment of his wife, he did not seek to disturb the grantor in his possession whilst he lived.

If the foregoing construction was given to the deed, as we have seen might have been fairly given to it, it is not really different in effect from what the plaintiff below alleged he understood it to be. And according to his understanding of the deed 200 he enjoyed his property *in the main during his life; and there is nothing shown by this record to warrant a court of justice to divest the appellant of the title to the property after the death of the grantor, which, by his deed in his lifetime, which he deliberately, understandingly and willingly executed, he vested in the appellant.

I am of opinion therefore to reverse the decrees of the Circuit court, and to dismiss the plaintiff's bill with costs.

Decree reversed.

201 *Adams & al. v. Logan & als.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

I. Principal and Surety—Deeds of Trust—Extension of Time.—A and B are sureties of W in a bond to L for $3,000, executed in 1858. In May 1862 L lent to W $7,500 of Confederate money, and took his bond payable in two years with interest; and W executed a deed, by which he conveyed to S real and personal estate in trust to secure both debts; and it provided that upon the prompt payment annually, of the interest upon the two bonds, W should keep quiet possession of the property for two years. W did not pay the interest. Held:

1. Same—Same—Same—Effect of Such Agreement.—W not having paid the interest, the parties were left in the same situation, and with the same rights and obligations, as if the agreement to extend the time had not been made.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same.—The agreement only operated to postpone a sale of the property under the deed of trust. It did not tie up the hands of L from pursuing his debtor W at law.

3. Same—Same—Same—Same.—If L had sued W at law and recovered judgment and levied an execution on the personal property embraced in the deed, he might thereby have forfeited the benefit of that security, or subjected himself to an action for damages; but a court of equity would not interfere to prevent a sale of the property under the execution, upon the mere contract to pay interest on the debt.

4. Same—Same—Same—Same—"Stay Law."—But if the agreement operated as an extension of the time of payment of the debt, as the act of the 30th of March 1862, known as the stay law, forbade the issue of execution upon a judgment, and L was under no obligation to the sureties to raise the question of its constitutionality, the agreement did not have the slightest effect upon the rights and remedies or obligations of any of the parties.

5. Same—Same—Same—When a Discharge of Surety.*—The principle upon which an agree-

202 ment for an extension of *time discharges a surety is, that the creditor thereby deprives the surety of the means of relieving himself, by paying the debt and proceeding immediately against the principal; or by his filing his bill quis timet to compel the debtor to pay the debt; or by notice to the creditor under the statute. The sureties cannot be discharged by an act which in no manner affected their rights, or impaired the remedies of the creditor.

II. Same—Same—Compromise—Confederate Money—Scaling.—W having been declared a bankrupt in *Principal and Surety—When Agreement for Extension of Time Discharges Surety.—The principal case is cited and the doctrine in the fifth headnote followed in Bank v. Parsons, 45 W. Va. 699, 32 S. E. Rep. 275. See also, Shannon v. McMullin, 25 Gratt. 229; Harrison v. Price, 25 Gratt. 553; Wells v. Hughes, 89 Va. 543, 16 S. E. Rep. 689; *Norris v. the United States court. L. and the assignees of W. by compromise agreed that the debt of L for $7,500 should be scaled to $3,500, with interest from date, and L should retain the benefit of the deed of trust; and that L should not object to the exemption in favor of W, or to the allowance of 200 acres of land to his wife, in commutation of her contingent right of dower; and this agreement was confirmed by the Bankrupt court. S sold the balance of the trust fund, and apportioned the net proceeds between the two debts of W to L. Held:

1. ~~Same—Same—Same—Same—Same.~~—A and B cannot complain of the scale applied to the debt of $7,500, which seems reasonable in itself, and was agreed to by L and the assignees of W, and approved and confirmed by the court.

2. ~~Same—Same—Same—Acts of Bankrupt Court.*~~—If there was error in the decree of the Bankrupt court in allowing W the exemption claimed by him, or in assigning to his wife the 200 acres of land, they are acts of a court of competent jurisdiction, and cannot be questioned elsewhere.

3. ~~Same—Judgment against Principal.~~—A judgment having been rendered in favor of L against W for two years' interest on the bond for $3,000, upon an insufficient notice, and execution levied on his property, W gives L notice that he will move to have it set aside; and L being aware of the insufficiency of the notice, releases the property. The sureties are not entitled to a credit for the amount of the judgment.

This was a suit in equity in the Circuit court of Pittsylvania, brought in January 1871, by James M. Adams and David Barber, to enjoin a judgment recovered against them and A. B. Womack, by William Logan, for $3,000, with interest from the 2d of August 1858, subject to credits endorsed thereon.

It appears that A. B. Womack, the principal, and the *plaintiffs and J.

C. Thompson, since deceased, as his sureties, executed a bond for $3,000, to William Logan, payable one year after date. That in 1862 Barber becoming uneasy on the subject of his securityship for Womack, gave notice to Logan to sue upon the bond; but he was induced to withdraw the notice for the time, and shortly afterwards, viz: on the 23d of May 1862, Logan lent to Womack, in Confederate money, $7,500, for which he took Womack's bond payable two years after date, with interest from the date, in lawful money of Virginia; and Womack at the same time, executed a deed by which he conveyed to Richard Logan and Beverly Sydnor, two tracts of land, twenty-three slaves, and their future increase, all his stock of horses, cattle, hogs, his plantation tools and his household and kitchen furniture, in trust to secure the said two bonds; and it was provided that upon the prompt payment annually of the interest accruing upon the said bonds at the rate of six per cent. per annum, Womack should keep quiet possession of the property for the term of two years, unless he should determine otherwise.

*Acts of Bankrupt Courts.—For the proposition that the act of a bankrupt court cannot be elsewhere questioned, see Brengle v. Richardson, 78 Va. 410, where the principal case is cited and quoted from.

It appears further that in 1867 Logan gave a notice to Womack that he would move for a judgment against him for one year's interest due upon the debt for $7,500; that a judgment was rendered on this notice for $450, and execution was issued and levied on the property of Womack; and proceedings were stopped for a time by order of the plaintiff. The explanation of this given by Logan in his answer, in response to the charge in the bill, is, that at the court to which the notice was given his counsel ascertained that the notice was not served on Womack twenty days before, as the law required, and therefore declined to apply for a judgment thereon; that 204 after said counsel had *left the court, some friend of his happened to see the notice, and supposing it to have been overlooked applied for a judgment, which was entered in the absence of any defence to the motion; that the execution was issued and levied, and that Womack through his counsel gave Logan notice that he would move to set aside said judgment on the ground that it was improperly granted, and requested that proceedings on said execution should be stayed for a short time; which Logan acceded to, he being satisfied that the judgment should not have been entered, and that Womack was entitled to the stay. Very shortly afterward, and before said motion could be heard, Womack filed his petition, and was adjudged a bankrupt.

Soon after Womack became a bankrupt, Sydnor the surviving trustee, was about to sell the property of Womack to satisfy the two debts mentioned therein, when he was stopped by an injunction from the judge of the United States District court; and in that court the assignees of Womack claimed that the debt of $7,500 should be scaled as of May 1864. This question was argued before the District judge, who postponed the decision of it until he could consult Judge Chase; and whilst it was pending, viz: in January 1869, the assignees and Logan entered into an agreement of compromise, by which the debt of $7,500 was to be settled at $3,500 with interest from that date, and Logan was to have the benefit of the deed of trust. This agreement was to be subject to the future ratification of the District court; and in the event of its ratification, Logan agreed to make no opposition to the exemption set apart to said Womack, by said assignees, nor to the assignment of two hundred acres of land made by said assignees and the trustee to the wife of 205 Womack in commutation of *dower.

This agreement seems to have been confirmed by the District court. And upon the sale of Womack's property embraced in the deed of trust, the debt of $3,000 for which the plaintiffs were bound, was credited by $1,677.95 as its proportionate part of the net proceeds of the property.

The cause came on to be heard on the 1st of June 1872, when the court made a decree dissolving the injunction which had been granted, with costs. And thereupon Adams and Barber applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Jones & Bouldin, for the appellants.

Ould & Carrington and Logan, for the appellees.

Staples J. delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion that the deed of trust executed by Womack, the principal debtor, on the 29th May 1862, did not discharge the appellants from their liability as sureties upon the bond due the appellee Logan. By the terms of the deed Womack was permitted to retain possession of the property for two years, upon condition of paying the interest annually upon the debts secured. The effect of this arrangement was, that upon performance of the condition, no sale of the property could be made under the deed until after the expiration of two years. The debtor having failed to pay the interest, the parties were left in the same situation and with the same rights and obligations, as if the agreement to extend the time had never been made. Norris v. Crummy, 2 Rand. 234.

It was argued, however, that although the debtor failed to comply with the terms upon which indulgence was granted, he was nevertheless entitled to one whole year to make the first payment of interest; and as he was in no default till the end of the year, the appellee Logan during the intervening period was prevented from enforcing the collection of his debt. It will be observed, however, that the agreement operated only to postpone a sale of the property under the deed of trust—the deed being a mere collateral security for the debt. It did not tie up the hands of the creditor for a single moment from pursuing the debtor at law. The appellee might have sued and recovered judgment notwithstanding the deed. If the appellee had sued out and levied an execution upon the property embraced in the deed, he might thereby have forfeited the benefit of that security or subjected himself to an action for damages; but a court of equity would not interfere to prevent a sale of personal property under an execution, upon a mere contract to pay interest, as stipulated in the deed; more especially if the effect of such interference would be to release the sureties from all liability.

But if it be conceded that the agreement operated as an extension of the time of payment of the debt, still it did not have the slightest effect upon the rights and remedies or obligations of any of the parties. Under the provisions of the act of 29th March 1862, generally known as the stay law, no writ of elegit, feri facias or venditioni exponas could be issued while that act remained in force. Whatever may now be said in respect to the constitutionality of this law, the creditor was under no obligation to the sureties to raise that question. Had they notified him to institute suit against the principal, and prosecute it with due diligence to judgment and by execution, the appellee might have recovered judgment; but no one can doubt what would have been the result of an effort to enforce the collection of the debt by execution. The appellee was therefore as effectually precluded by the statute from making his money by legal process as he would have been had the courts been closed during the existence of the war. The principle upon which an agreement for an extension of time discharges the surety is, that the creditor thereby deprives the surety of the means of relieving himself by paying the debt and proceeding immediately against the principal, or by filing his bill quia timet to compel the debtor to pay the debt, or by notice to the creditor under the statute. Neither of these remedies would have been available, even though the deed of trust had never been executed. It would be a grievous injustice to hold the sureties discharged by an act which in no manner affected their rights or impaired the remedies of the creditor. If authority on this point is necessary, it may be found in the case of Price v. Edmunds, 10 Barn. & Cress. 578; Harnsberger's ex'or v. Geiger's adm'r, 3 Gratt. 144.

The court is further of opinion that the appellants, whose liability as sureties is confined to the three thousand dollar bond, have no just cause of complaint with the scale of depreciation applied to the seven thousand and five hundred dollar bond, for which they are not bound. The adjustment seems to have been just and fair in itself: it received the sanction of the debtor and the assignees in bankruptcy, and was approved and confirmed by the District court of the United States.

The appellee, in receiving the amount thus ascertained to be due, has not lost, or in any manner impaired, his remedies upon the bond for which the appellants are bound as sureties.

The court is further of opinion, that the appellee cannot be held liable for any error, if such there be, in the decree of the Bankrupt court, allowing Womack the exemption claimed by him, or assigning to his wife two hundred acres of land by way of compensation for her contingent right of dower. These were acts of a court of competent jurisdiction, having cognizance of the parties and the subject-matter. It must be presumed, at least until the contrary appears, that the decrees and orders were fairly made with due regard for the interests of all parties. The extent of the appellee's participation in the arrangement, allowing the exemption and assignment, was the withdrawal of his opposition to the decree of the court sanctioning the same. If any injustice has been done the appellants, or others interested in the estate of Womack, the remedy is not in the state courts.

The court is further of opinion, that the appellees are not entitled to any abatement or deduction by reason of anything done by the appellee in respect to the supposed judgment for three hundred dollars. All that appears in the record in regard to that judgment, beyond the averments of the bill, is what is found in the answer of the appellee. It is there stated that a judgment was recovered against Womack for two years' interest on the three thousand dollar bond; but no execution was ever levied on his property, he having previously gone into bankruptcy: the amount of the judgment was however paid by the appellants, and credit given accordingly. This statement being responsive to the bill must be taken as true.

It seems, however, that a judgment
209 was recovered *against Womack for four hundred and fifty dollars, interest upon the seven thousand and five hundred dollar bond, execution issued and levied upon his property. This property was released by order of the appellee. The reason he assigns, and it is sustained by the evidence, is that the judgment was rendered upon an insufficient notice, and the defendant was taking steps to vacate the judgment and quash the execution. The appellee being satisfied that such would be the result, released the lien of the execution. This he had the right to do. He was under no obligation to persist in a hopeless controversy, because the effect of the release might ultimately be to withdraw a part of the trust fund pledged to the security debt. If the appellants have sustained any loss from this cause, the appellee cannot be made liable for it.

Upon the whole there is no error in the decree, and it must be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

210 *City of Richmond, for &c., v. Duesberry & als.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

I. Landlord and Tenant—Deed of Trust—Distress—Priority.*—N leased of D a house for one year commencing January 1st and ending December 31st 1871. In March, M, without the assent of D, took N's lease, and purchased his furniture on the leased premises, and having borrowed the money to pay for it from C, conveyed it in trust to secure his debt to C. M paid the rent to D, and at the end of the year held over, and in March 1872 he, without D's assent, turned over the house and furniture to P, who paid the rent to D until July or August. In the latter part of the year P failed to pay the rent; whereupon D sued out a warrant of distress which *Landlord and Tenant—Distress—Deed of Trust—Priority.—The provisions of the statute, cited in the head-note, were similarly construed in Upper Appomattox Co. v. Hamilton, 83 Va. 322, 2 S. E. Rep. 195, where the principal case was cited by the court, and also, in Wades v. Figgatt, 75 Va. 575. In West Virginia the principal case is cited and quoted from in Anderson v. Henry, 45 W. Va. 323, 31 S. E. Rep. 1000; and also, in Bartlett v. Loundes, 34 W. Va. 498, 12 S. E. Rep. 764. Both turn on the interpretation of the West Virginia statute, which contains the same provisions as the one construed in the principal case.

This was an action of debt in the circuit court of the city of Richmond, brought in April 1873, in the name of the city of Richmond, at the relation of Manfred Call, against A. B. Duesberry, high constable of the city of Richmond, and his sureties in his official bond, to recover the value of certain property which Duesberry had levied on and sold under a distress and attachment for rent. The court below rendered a judgment in favor of the defendants; and the plaintiff thereupon applied to this court for a supersedeas, which was awarded.

Guy & Gilliam, for the appellant.

Nash and Gordon, for the appellees.

211 *Christain, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This case is before us upon a writ of error and supersedeas to a judgment of the circuit court of the city of Richmond.

The question arising in this case is between a landlord on the one hand and a beneficiary under a deed of trust on the other.

Each claims a superior right to subject the same property to the payment of a debt, the one for rent by virtue of his landlord's lien, the other for a loan of money, whose payment was secured by a deed of trust conveying the property in question.

The facts disclosed by the record are as follows: In the latter part of the year 1870, one Norvel Cobb leased of Drewry & Price a certain house in the city of Richmond, known as the Arlington house, to be used as a boarding-house, for the year 1871, the term of the lease being one year, from the 1st January 1871 to 31st December 1871: That in February or March 1871, Daniel W. Mosely purchased of said Cobb his household and kitchen furniture, which was upon the leased premises at the Arlington house; and paid for the same with $1,500, loaned him (Mosely) by Manfred Call; who, in order to secure the payment of said loan, took a note, payable at twelve months, and dated February 24th 1871, of said Mosely, secured by deed of trust, which was duly recorded in the office of the chancery court of the city of Richmond on the tenth March 1871. Mosely arranged with Cobb to take his lease for the year 1871; and this change was made on the 15th March 1871, without consulting the landlords (Drewry & Price); who were informed of it thereafter, and made no objection, but received the rent from Mosely for the year 1871. At the 212 expiration of *the year (1871) Mosely continued to occupy the premises without any special contract with the landlords. Some time in March 1872 Mosely made an arrangement with a certain B. M. Pratt to give up the Arlington house and furniture to him; and he (Pratt) took charge of said house without consulting the landlords, who, when informed of it, made no objection thereto, and thereafter received the rent from Pratt until July or August 1872. In the latter part of the year 1872, Pratt failed to pay said rent for the Arlington house; whereupon the landlords sued out a distress warrant for rent due and an attachment for rent to become due.

The distress warrant and attachment were levied on the household and kitchen furniture, which had been conveyed by Mosely to secure his debt to Manfred Call, and the same was sold under said distress warrant by A. B. Duesberry, high constable of the city of Richmond, and the proceeds paid over to B. H. Nash, Esq., attorney for Drewry & Price, the landlords.

The suit is brought in the name of the city of Richmond, for the benefit of Manfred Call, against the high constable on his official bond, the object being to recover of him the amount of the proceeds of sale of said furniture.

A jury being waived, and the case being submitted to the court upon the law and facts, the court rendered a judgment for the defendant. From this judgment a writ of error was awarded by this court.

The effect of the decision of the said Circuit court was to declare that the furniture conveyed by Mosely by his deed, put on record on the 10th March 1871, was liable to the distress warrant in favor of the landlords, Drewry & Price, for rent due 213 from Pratt in the latter *part of 1872; and this is the question we now have to consider.

The solution of this question depends upon the true construction to be given to the 11th and 12th sections of ch. 138, Code 1860.

At common law, all goods found on the leased premises were subject to the landlord's lien for rent, no matter to whom they belonged.

By our statute the goods of the lessee, or his assignee, or under-tenant, found on the premises, or which may have been removed therefrom not more than thirty days, are liable to distress. If such goods, when carried on the premises, are subject to a lien, which is valid against his creditors, his interest only in such goods shall be liable to distress. If any lien be created thereon while they are on the leased premises, they shall be liable to distress, but only for one year's rent, whether it shall have accrued before or after the creation of the lien.

If after the commencement of any tenancy a lien be obtained or created by deed of trust, mortgage or otherwise, upon the interest or property in goods on premises leased or rented of any person liable for the rent, the party having such lien may remove said goods from the premises, upon condition that he pay rent that may be in arrear, and securing so much as is to become due, not being more altogether than one year's rent. See Code 1860, ch. 138, §§ 11, 12.

From these sections, it is plain that the intention of the legislature was to secure one year's rent to a landlord against all liens created by the tenant after the lease has commenced.

The landlord is protected by the statute against all deeds of trust, mortgages, and other liens, where the lien has been created 214 after the commencement of *the tenancy, upon goods on the leased premises which belong to a person liable for rent, and where there is an existing liability for rent in arrear, or to become due at the time the lien is created.

Now in the case before us, the contract of lease between the landlords (Drewry & Price) and their tenant Cobb, was for one year from January 1st, to December 31st, 1871. In March, Mosely with the assent of the landlords, took Cobb's lease. I say with the assent of the landlords, because they made no objection to it, and collected the rents from him, acknowledging him as their tenant. This lease expired on the 31st December, 1871; but Mosely held over for the year 1872 until March, there being no new contract between the parties. In March 1872, Pratt, without objection on the part of the landlords, took the Arlington house and furniture from Mosely; and the landlords collected rent from him till July or August. In the latter part of the year 1872, Pratt failed to pay the rent, and then the distress warrant was issued and levied.

Now Cobb having leased for one year, and Mosely, who took his lease, having held over after the expiration of the lease without any further contract, the tenancy must be regarded as a tenancy from year to year. Archbold on Land. and Tenant, 65-'6 and 68 (marg.); Sherwood v. Phillips, 13 Wend. R. 479, and cases cited in the opinion of the court.

It follows, therefore, that the lease of Cobb of which Mosely was the assignee terminated on the 1st day of January 1872. On that day a new term commenced. The rent for the whole year 1871 had been paid. The deed of trust to Call was executed and recorded on the 10th March 1871. At the commencement of the new tenancy, to wit, on the 1st January 1872, not a dollar of rent was due, nor was any due in arrear 215 until *the latter part of 1872. The lien on the furniture was therefore created before the commencement of the tenancy. That furniture was on the leased premises, subject to a lien created before the tenancy for the year 1872 commenced, and not after—and in contemplation of the statute, construing both sections together, must be held subject to the same conditions as if when carried on the leased premises it was subject to a lien valid against the creditors of Mosely.

The liability for the rent in this case came long after the lien was created; and the tenancy during which the lien was created had expired and every dollar due under that lease had been paid. A new tenancy had commenced with an existing lien upon the furniture created and recorded long before it began.

I am therefore of opinion, that the deed of trust to secure Manfred Call must take precedence to the landlord's lien, and that the judgment of the Circuit court should be reversed.

216 *Continental Ins. Co. v. Kasey.

1. Foreign Insurance Companies—Domicile—Venue.*—

In an action upon a policy of insurance by a citizen of the state of Virginia against a foreign insurance company doing business in this state, the foreign corporation is quoad hoc domiciled in the state by virtue of the statutes authorizing the company to do business here, and is not entitled under the act of congress of 1867 to have the cause removed to the United States court on the ground that the corporation is a resident of another state.

2. Same—Same—Same—Removal of Causes from State to Federal Court.†—

After a trial of an action at law, and a new trial directed by the appellate court, a party is not entitled under the act of congress of 1867, to have the cause removed to the United States court upon the ground that he is a non-resident of the state.

3. Same—Same—Same—Same—Time of Application for.—

If a party in an action at law would have the cause removed from the state court to the United States court, on the ground that he is a non-resident of the state, he must present his application for it before there has been a trial of the cause.

This case was argued at the term of this court held at Wytheville in 1875, and was decided at this term of the court in Richmond. It was an action at law in the Circuit court of the county of Roanoke, brought by Thomas A. Kasey against the Continental Insurance Company, a corporation chartered by the state of New York, upon a policy of insurance issued by the defendant in favor of the plaintiff. The case was once before in this court, upon an appeal by the company, and the judgment of the court below was reversed, and the cause sent back to the Circuit court for a new trial. See 25 Grattan, 268.

217 *The cause came on again to be tried at the November term 1874 of the Circuit court, when the defendant presented his petition, accompanied with his affidavit, asking that the cause might be removed to the circuit court of the United States for that judicial district; but the court overruled the motion; and the defendant excepted. The petition and affidavit are set out in the opinion of Judge Christian.

On the trial there was a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $4,950.50, with interest at six per cent. per annum from the 26th of June 1872 till paid; and a motion for a new trial, which was overruled. And the record states that the defendant excepted; but the bill of exception is not in the record. Upon the application of the company, this court allowed a supersedeas to the judgment.

Griffin, for the appellant.

J. F. Johnson, for the appellee.

Christian, J. The record in this case presents for our consideration a single question; and that is whether, under the acts of congress relating to the removal of causes from state courts to the circuit courts of the United States, the appellant had the right to remove its case from the circuit court of Roanoke to the circuit court of the United States, in the judicial district in which the county of Roanoke was situate.

The appellant, the Continental Insurance Company of the city of New York, having its home office in said city of New York, but doing business in the state of Virginia, under the conditions and requirements of the statute law of this state, was defendant in a certain action at law, brought by 218 Thomas A. Kasey, upon an *insurance policy issued by said company, insuring against fire a certain building belonging to said Kasey.

Kasey, at the April term of the circuit court of Roanoke 1873, recovered a judgment against said company. To that judgment a writ of error was awarded by one of the judges of this court.

Upon this writ of error the case was heard at Wytheville in July 1874, and this court reversed the judgment of the circuit court, and remanded the case for a new trial to be had in said circuit court of Roanoke. This reversal was in favor of the Continental Insurance Company. But when the case came on again to be heard in the Circuit court of Roanoke, upon the new trial awarded by this court, the company by its counsel filed the following petition.

To the honorable the judge of the circuit court of Roanoke county:

The petition of the Continental Insurance Company of the city of New York, respectfully represents, that it is a foreign corporation, created and having its place of business in the state of New York, and in legal contemplation is a citizen of that state; that it is sued in your honor's court by one Thomas A. Kasey, a citizen of the state of Virginia, upon a contract of insurance; that the matter in dispute in said suit exceeds the sum of five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, and that there has not been a final trial of said cause. Your petitioner is advised, that under the laws of congress, in such cases made and provided, it has the right to have said cause removed into the circuit court of the United States for this judicial district; and it hereby offers good and sufficient surety for its entering copies of the papers in that court on or before the first day *of the next term thereof, and it prays your honor that a removal of said cause may be directed.

The Continental Insurance Company,
Of the city of New York,

By counsel.

This petition was accompanied by the following affidavit:

State of Virginia—

Roanoke county, to wit:

I, P. H. Gibson, agent and attorney of the Continental Insurance Company of the city of New York, do solemnly swear that I have reason to, and do believe, that from prejudice or local influence, the said Continental Insurance Company of the city of New York will not be able to obtain justice in the circuit court of Roanoke county, in the suit now pending in said court, in which Thomas A. Kasey is plaintiff, and the said Continental Insurance Company of the city of New York is defendant.

P. H. Gibson.

Subscribed and sworn to by P. H. Gibson before me, F. Johnston, a notary public for the state of Virginia.

Given under my hand this 11th day of November, 1874.

F. Johnston, N. P.

The circuit court of Roanoke denied the prayer of the petition, and refused to order the removal of the case to the circuit court of the United States. To this ruling of the court the company excepted, and obtained a writ of error, which brings up the question to this court.

220 *There was a judgment in the court below against the company for the sum of $4,950.50; but against this judgment no other error is assigned; and the whole case here turns upon the single question, whether the circuit court erred in refusing to remove the cause, upon the petition of the company and the affidavit of its agent to the circuit court of the United States.

The solution of this question depends, 1st, upon the true construction to be given to the acts of congress relating to the removal of causes from the state courts to the United States courts; and, 2nd, upon the effect of the statute law of this state imposing certain conditions and requirements upon foreign insurance companies doing business in this state. First, as to the true construction to be given to acts of congress in reference to the removal of causes.

This motion is made under the provision of the act of congress approved March 2, 1867, which declares that in a controversy between a citizen of a state, in which suit is brought, and a citizen of another state, when a party shall make and file an affidavit stating that he has reason to, and does believe, that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such state court, may at any time before final hearing or trial of the suit file a petition for removal of the suit into the next circuit court of the United States for the district in which his suit is pending. And then declares, that upon giving certain security the state court shall proceed no further in the suit. See 14 U. S. Stat. at Large 558-9.

It would seem sufficient to say, that this court has already by its unanimous judgment, construed this act of congress against the pretensions of the appellant in this case.

In Beery v. Irick, 22 Gratt. 489, this 221 *court construing this same act says:

“The question we have to consider is, was the application (for removal of the case) made before the ‘final hearing or trial,’ within the meaning and intent of the statute? The word ‘final’ in the act applies to and qualifies the word ‘hearing,’ and not the word ‘trial.’ In the act of 1866 the language is before ‘trial or final hearing.’ The transportation of the words in the act of 1867 so as to read, ‘before final hearing or trial’ was probably accidental and not affecting nor designed to affect any change in the meaning. The words ‘final hearing’ are ordinarily applied to cases in equity, while the word ‘trial’ is applied to actions at law. The obvious and unmistakable intention of the statute was to require a party desiring a removal of his case, to make his application before a ‘trial’ in actions at law, and before a final hearing in suits in equity.” * * * “It certainly never was the object of the act of congress to provide for a review of the decisions of a state court, but simply for the exercise of an election by a party to a suit in a state court, to transfer it to another court of original jurisdiction for trial. The design manifestly was to give him an election between two tribunals, not to give him a chance at both. Any other construction would be to confer upon the federal courts, whose jurisdiction is carefully limited by the constitution of the United States, an extraordinary and incongruous appellate jurisdiction, by which the judgment or decree of a state court solemnly pronounced in a case where it had the undoubted jurisdiction, could be reviewed, reversed and annulled by a federal court. * * *

Such unprecedented and dangerous jurisdiction in the federal courts will never be recognized by this court, unless the very letter of the law imperatively requires it; 222 and unless such law, *if enacted by congress, shall be declared by the supreme court of the United States to be consonant with the constitution which expressly limits the jurisdiction of the federal courts.”

This was the construction of the act of 1867, and these the views expressed by this court in 1873, in my opinion in Beery v. Irick and Newton v. Bushong. 22 Gratt. 484.

I might be content to rest this case upon that opinion, but that the able counsel for the appellant, in an argument of much learning, has called upon us to review our opinion in that case; and relies especially upon a recent decision of the supreme court of the United States; Insurance Company v. Morse, 20 Wall. U. S. R. 445; which is certainly adverse to our construction of the act of 1867.

That decision, adopting as its rule of construction the literal interpretation of the words of the act, declares that a party may at any time before a final trial remove his case upon proper affidavit and security. He may take his chances before a state court; may go up to the supreme court of the state, and take his chances there; and then, after years of litigation in the state courts, which have the unquestioned jurisdiction of his case, and to whose jurisdiction he has voluntarily submitted, may, any time before his case is finally tried, remove it to a circuit court of the United States. Now, while I have great respect for the decisions of the supreme court of the United States, and the decisions of that august tribunal are always recognized as very high authority in this court, I cannot follow that court in the construction which it has given to the act of congress under consideration. Especially since the decisions of every state in the Union where the question has come up, except the state of Rhode Island, 223 has given a different construction to the act. Certainly the supreme courts of the states of Massachusetts, Ohio, Wisconsin, Maryland and Virginia have united in declaring that the application for removal of a case to the circuit court of the United States must be made before trial; and that after trial is had in a state court, the case cannot be removed. See Galpin v. Critchlow, 112 Mass. R. 339; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 20 Ohio State R. 175; Akerly v. Vilas, 24 Wisc. R. 165; Adams Express Co. v. Frego, 35 Mayr. R. 47; Beery v. Irick, 22 Gratt. 484.

In ascertaining the true interpretation of the words "before final hearing or trial" in this act, we may properly refer to the earlier acts of congress on the subject of removing causes from the state courts to the circuit courts of the United States, as constituting parts of one judicial system. Under the first judiciary act of the United States, where the removal is claimed upon the ground that the defendant is an alien or citizen of another state, the right can only be exercised "at the time of entering his appearance," and not "afterwards," even with the assent of the state court. 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 79; Gibson v. Johnson, Pet. C. C. 44.

So under act of congress passed during the war of 1812, as to officers civil or military, when sued in a state court for acts done by virtue of such office, he might remove the case to the United States court "at the time of entering his appearance," 3 U. S. Stat. at Large 198, 200, 396; 14 Mass. R. 412.

So also the right of removing an action pending in a state court between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states, must be exercised by either party "before the trial." 1 U. S. Stat. at Large 80.

224 *So also in suits against revenue officers brought in state courts, for acts done by virtue of their office, the case could be removed "at any time before trial." 4 U. S. Stat. at Large 633.

So also by the act of congress of 1863, ch. 81, § 5, in a suit against any military or civil officer for acts done as such, he might, "at the time of entering his appearance," remove a case from a state court to a circuit court of the United States. 12 U. S. Stat. at Large 756.

So also by act of 1865, it was declared that the right of removing such cases should be exercised "before a jury is empanelled to try the same."

The act of 1866 provides that, under its provisions, a cause may be removed "at any time before trial or final hearing."

Now the review of the previous legislation on the subject shows that up to 1867, certainly, there was no authority for removing from a state court to a federal court, any case whatever in which a trial on the merits had commenced.

Now the question is, does the act of 1867, by simply transposing the word "final," placing it before the word trial, as well as hearing, so as to make it read "final hearing or trial," instead of "trial and final hearing," reverse the whole policy of the law as plainly declared in all the acts of congress on the subject from 1789 to 1866 inclusive? and by this slight transposition (accidental no doubt) of a single word, confer upon the federal courts the extensive, all-pervading and dangerous jurisdiction, which would constitute the federal courts appellate tribunals to the state courts. I cannot arrive at this conclusion, even if I have to disregard a decision of the supreme court of the United States. I prefer 225 to follow the decisions of the state courts (and adhering to my former opinion in Newton v. Bushong, supra) aid them in checking the modern spirit now so often manifested, in which the United States courts are stretching out their hands to grasp the jurisdiction which under the constitution, and under our ancient system of jurisprudence, belongs exclusively to the state courts.

It is worthy of note, in considering this question of construction of the act of 1867, that since the decision of the supreme court of the United States in the case of Home Insurance Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, there has been a significant legislative construction by congress of this very act. In 1874 there was a codification and revision of the acts of congress—directed to be published, when completed, under the direction of the secretary of state—and when promulgated by him to be accepted as the Revised Statutes of the United States. Accordingly on the 2nd of February 1875, the Hon. Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State, issued his proclamation, certifying the "Revised Statutes of the United States enacted by congress on the 22d day of June 1874, were prepared, printed and published according to the provisions of the act of June 20th, 1874;" and these Revised Statutes are now accepted and recognized as the Code of Revised Statutes of the United States.

In these Revised Statutes, p. 113, congress has adopted the act of 1866, and not the act of 1867, containing the transposition of the word "final" before the words "trial and hearing," so that the provision of the act reads as follows: "Third. When the suit is between a citizen of the state in which it is brought, and the citizen of another state, it may be so removed on the petition of the latter, whether he be plaintiff or 226 *defendant, filed at any time 'before the trial or final hearing' of the suit; if before, or at the time of filing said petition, he makes and files in said state court an affidavit stating that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such state court."

It will thus be seen that the revisors of the statutes concur in opinion with this court and the other supreme courts of the states, where the question has been considered, that the transposition of the word "final" in the act of 1867, was merely accidental; and that the true construction to be given to the act, consonant with all the statute law theretofore enacted, and with the spirit of our system of jurisprudence is, that the application for removal of a case from a state court to a federal court must be made before the trial of an action at law, and before the final hearing of a case in equity.

These views lead me confidently to the conclusion, that the application for removal in this case came too late, and that the circuit court of Roanoke was not in error in overruling the plaintiff's motion.

But there is another view of this question, which, though not raised in the argument of this case here, is well worthy of consideration.

The question is this: Is the plaintiff (the Continental Insurance Company) a citizen of another state in the meaning of the act of congress?

I am aware that it has been held by the supreme court of the United States that corporations of other states come within the purview of the act. That is the general principle from which I express no dissent. But here is a New York corporation doing business in the state of Virginia under the conditions and limitations prescribed by our statute. One of these conditions

227 *is, that every such company, before they issue policies in the state, shall deposit with the treasurer of the state a certain fund, which is to remain intact to meet the losses of citizens insured in such companies. There is another most important condition imposed on all such companies, to wit: § 20, ch. 36, Code 1873, p. 366: "Every such insurance company shall, by a written power of attorney, appoint some citizen of this commonwealth, resident therein, its agent or attorney, who shall accept service of all lawful process against such company in this commonwealth, and cause an appearance to be entered in every action in like manner, as if such corporation had existed and been duly served under process in this state."

The plain object of that provision of our statute is to give to our citizens the privilege of suing these foreign corporations in the courts of this state.

This would be, in the last degree, a futile and incongruous provision of the law if the privilege to sue in the state courts is to be at once defeated, if the corporation as soon as suit is brought may remove the cause to another and foreign jurisdiction. This would defeat the very object of the statute.

My own view is that these corporations are placed by our statute on precisely the same footing quoad hoc as the home corporations, and that when they come into this state and accept the provisions of our statute law, they become domiciled here; and as to all contracts and obligations made and assumed under the provisions of our laws, they are no longer citizens of another state, but are subject to the laws, to sue and be sued as citizens of this state.

The Continental Insurance Company, though chartered by the state of New York, when it commences business in this state, and complies with the terms of 228 *the statute of Virginia by making the necessary deposit and appointing an agent to accept process, becomes, as to all contracts with citizens of Virginia, domiciled here; and in contentions with our citizens growing out of policies of insurance, must sue and be sued in our state courts; and do not come within the terms or spirit of the act of congress relating to the removal of cases from a state court to a federal.

Upon the whole I am for affirming the judgment of the circuit court of Roanoke.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Christian J.

Judgment affirmed.

2. Same—Same—Decree for Account under.—Under such a prayer a decree for a general account may be made; all the creditors permitted to come in and prove their debts, and an order entered staying all other suits, and all the assets administered in the one suit.

3. Same—Under Whose Control.—Although a bill is in behalf of all creditors, it is yet under the control of the party bringing the suit, at least until there is a decree for an account. And if his claim is proved or admitted, and the executor confesses assets, the plaintiff may at the hearing have a decree for payment, and he is not compelled to take a decree for an account.

4. Negotiable Paper—Law Applicable.—In relation to negotiable paper, the rights and obligations of the parties are governed by the law as it was when the contract was made, and not by the law as it was when the paper becomes payable.

5. Same—Statutory Excuse, during War, of Demand, Protest and Notice.—The ordinance of the Virginia Convention of the 24th of June 1861, dispensed with demand, protest and notice upon all checks, bills and notes payable at a bank located in any city or town, if, at the time of the maturity of such instruments, the town or city was occupied, invested, or access thereto interrupted, by the public enemy. By an act of the legislature, passed on the 10th of May 1862, this ordinance was amended so as to require notice of the dishonor of the bill or note to be given within ten days after the removal of the obstruction created by the presence of the enemy.

A note was made and endorsed on the 11th of December 1861, payable, &c., at a bank in 230 *Fredericksburg in six months. When it fell due the town of Fredericksburg was in possession of the United States forces; but they left in a few months afterwards; but no notice of non-payment was given at any time to the endorsers. The rights and obligations of the parties are governed by the ordinance which was in operation when the note was made and endorsed; and notice of non-payment was not necessary to bind the endorsers.

6. Same—Holder for Value—Presumptions.*—A holder of a note endorsed for the accommodation of the maker, which fell due in June 1862, gives no notice that he holds it to one of the endorsers who died in 1863, or to his representative until 1870, makes no effort to collect it from the maker, though down to 1868 he was able to pay it, and died insolvent in 1870; and waits until the other endorser is dead insolvent. Under these circumstances the presumption that the holder of a note is a holder for value fails, and he must show that he gave value for it.

7. Same—Suit on—Parties.—In such a case, in a suit by the holder of a note to subject the estate of a deceased endorser to satisfy it, the representatives of the deceased maker and of another endorser should be made parties.

In January 1871, John T. Alsop instituted a suit in equity in the circuit court of Spotsylvania county, against John C. Cammack, administrator of Robert C. Duerson, deceased, and the heirs at law of said Duerson, to subject his real estate to the payment of a debt which the plaintiff claimed to be due to him. In his bill he states, that on the 11th of December 1861, at the town of Fredericksburg, a certain John James Chew made his note by which he promised to pay six months after date, to the order of George F. Chew and Robert C. Duerson, the sum of nineteen hundred dollars, payable and negotiable at the office of discount and deposit of the Bank of Virginia at Fredericksburg; and that afterwards the said George F. Chew and Robert Duerson endorsed the said note to the plaintiff. That the said note was not paid when it fell due, and that the town of Fredericksburg was then in the possession and 231 occupation of the troops of *the United States, by reason whereof, under the ordinance of the convention of Virginia passed on the 24th of June 1861, demand, protest and notice of non-payment were dispensed with, and the endorsers remained bound, as if protest and notice of non-payment had been given. That both plaintiff and Duerson resided outside of the town of Fredericksburg when the note fell due, and all access to the town was cut off by the federal troops.

The plaintiff further charges, that there is not personal property belonging to Duerson's estate in the hands of his administrator or under his control, sufficient to satisfy the principal and interest of said note, no part of which has been paid to the plaintiff; and therefore he is compelled to seek the aid of a court of equity, to subject the real estate of said Duerson to the payment of said note.

The prayer of the bill is that the administration account may be settled; that an account of all debts and liabilities of said estate may be taken and the priorities fixed; that the amount and value of the real estate may be ascertained; and that all other accounts and orders which are proper in the cause may be taken and made, that the real estate of which Duerson was possessed at his death may be sold, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to satisfy the debt due the plaintiff; and for general relief.

The plaintiff filed the note as an exhibit with his bill. It is in the usual form, signed by John James Chew endorsed by George F. Chew and Robert C. Duerson, and at the foot is Cr. Dr. G. F. C. R. C. D.

Cammack, the administrator of Duerson, demurred to the bill for want of equity, and also answered. He says Duerson died in 1863, and his widow qualified as his administratrix in August of that year, and 232 proceeded *to administer the assets of his estate until her death in 1865; and in October of that year respondent qualified as administrator de bonis non of said estate. That though plaintiff lived near Fredericksburg, and went to that town nearly every week of his life, he never made any claim against Duerson in his lifetime, or against his estate during the lifetime of his administratrix. That though he is well acquainted with plaintiff, respondent never heard of this claim until the latter part of December 1870, when he received a letter from plaintiff's attorneys informing him that they had been retained to bring a suit upon the note. He knows nothing of the facts, and calls for proof: Insists it was the duty of the plaintiff to give notice of the non-payment of the note directly the United States troops ceased to occupy the town, which occurred in August 1862, very soon after the note fell due, and there was no obstacle thereafter to free communication by mail or otherwise to and from said bank, and between all the parties to said note; yet the plaintiff did not then or afterwards make demand of payment of said note at said office of discount and deposit of said bank, nor give notice of non-payment to said endorsers or their personal representatives. He insists that the ordinance of the Virginia convention, dispensing with demand and notice of non-payment in the cases specified, was unconstitutional; that after the evacuation of the town of Fredericksburg, demand of payment should have been made, and notice of protest for non-payment given; that the permanent residence of Duerson was in the town, and his family remained there, so that notice through the post office was neither necessary nor proper, but should have been left at his residence; and that long before the note fell due, viz.:

on the 16th of May, 1862, an act was 233 passed by the general assembly *of Virginia amending and re-enacting the said ordinance, by virtue of which Duerson could not be held bound as endorser of said note, unless notice of dishonor had been given within ten days after the evacuation of the town of Fredericksburg by the United States forces.

The respondent denied that there was no personal estate of Duerson sufficient to satisfy all legal and just claims against said estate. It was true these assets consisted mainly of choses in action; but upon these judgments had been recovered; and most of them were regarded as perfectly solvent; and these solvent assets, when realized, as to which there was no reasonable doubt, were more than sufficient to satisfy every demand against the estate, so far as respondent knew or believed.

The defendant further relied on the great delay of the plaintiff in setting up his claim, and his neglect in either attempting to obtain payment of the note from the maker John James Chew, who was possessed of a considerable property during and for some time after the war and who lived until 1870, or to give to the endorsers or their representatives, any notice of the claim. And then after Duerson had been dead for years, and both the Chews were dead and their estates insolvent, after the death of all the parties to the note, and when there was no one living except the plaintiff to explain his strange delay he asserts this stale demand against the estate of respondent's intestate.

The parties agreed certain facts which were admitted as evidence. It appears that the maker and both the endorsers of the note lived in Fredericksburg when it was made; and that the plaintiff Alsop lived about eight miles from the town, and 234 has resided *at the same place ever since. The note was an accommodation note endorsed for the benefit of the maker, and was never deposited in bank; and no demand of payment or notice of non-payment was given at its maturity. That the town of Fredericksburg was occupied by the federal troops on the 18th of April 1862, and was evacuated on the 30th of August 1862. That the maker John J. Chew, and George F. Chew, one of the endorsers, remained in the town during said occupation: Duerson, who was sheriff of the county of Spotsylvania, left his residence on the approach of said troops, but remained in said county and Louisa during said occupancy, and shortly after said evacuation returned to his residence in Fredericksburg, where his family had remained all the time. Both Duerson and Alsop were within the Confederate lines during said occupation. Duerson died in 1863: his widow qualified as his administratrix on the 13th of August of 1863; and she died in 1865; and Cammack qualified on the 12th of October 1865. He then resided, and still resides, in the county of Louisa. That Alsop lived in the county of Spotsylvania, and that the military lines lay between his house and the town.

It further appeared that John J. Chew, the maker of the note, owned real estate and slaves, and that he paid in 1866 and 1868 debts amounting to upwards of $5,000; he died in January 1870, and his estate was insolvent. And there was no proof that Duerson or his representatives had ever heard that the note was unpaid; and it was admitted that Cammack never heard of the note until the receipt of the letter of the plaintiff's counsel.

The cause came on to be heard upon the 12th of June 1871, when the court 235 overruled the demurrer to *the bill, and decreed that Cammack out of the assets, &c., should pay to the plaintiff the sum of $1,900, with interest thereon from the 14th of June 1862, and his costs. And liberty was reserved to the plaintiff to proceed against the real estate in the bill mentioned, if this should become necessary. From this decree Duerson's adm'or applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Wm. Green and F. V. Winston, for the appellant.

Marye & Fitzhugh, for the appellee.

Staples J. Before considering the main question arising in this case, it is proper to notice a preliminary objection to the jurisdiction of the court. It is insisted, that this is a single creditor's bill, brought to enforce a legal demand, as to which there is no obstacle in the way of a recovery and relief in a court of law.

The bill alleges there is not personal property belonging to Duerson's estate, in the hands of his administrator or under his control, sufficient to satisfy the debt claimed by the appellee, and it asks for a decree subjecting the real estate in the possession of the heirs to sale for that purpose. It further asks, that the administration account may be settled; that an account of all the debts and liabilities of the estate may be taken, and their priorities fixed; and that all other accounts and orders which are proper in the cause may be taken and made.

Under this prayer a decree for a general account may be entered, all the creditors permitted to come in and prove their debts, an order entered staying all other suits, and all the assets administered in the 236 one *suit. The bill is therefore substantially a creditors' bill, although it does not profess to be filed in behalf of all the creditors of the decedent.

Whatever doubt there may be as to the right of a single creditor at large to bring a suit in a court of equity for an account of assets and the payment of his debt, there is no difficulty as to the jurisdiction where the bill is filed in behalf of the complainant and all other creditors who may come in and prove their claims. Poindexter's ex'ors v. Green's ex'ors, 6 Leigh 504; Wilkins v. Finch, adm'r, Philips Eq. 355. Upon such a bill a general account of the assets is ordered, the priority of debts and liens ascertained and settled, multiplicity of suits avoided, and final and complete relief administered.

Although the bill in such case is in behalf of all the creditors, it is yet under the control of the party bringing it, at least until there is a decree for an account. If his claim is proved or admitted, and the executor confesses assets, the plaintiff may at the hearing have a decree for payment, and he is not compelled to take a decree for an account. Daniel Ch. Prac. 236; Adams Equity 257, 258.

In this case the administrator admits assets under his control sufficient to pay all the liabilities of the estate. They consist, however, almost entirely of choses in action upon which judgments have been recovered. If the appellee had sued at law a recovery there would not have availed him, as no execution could have been levied upon such choses in action.

At the time of filing the bill, the appellee could not know the precise condition of the estate, the nature and extent of its liabilities. He had therefore a right to file his bill asking a discovery of assets and an account. The administrator having 237 confessed assets sufficient *when collected to satisfy the appellee's demand, it was the privilege of the latter to waive the account, and take a decree for payment out of these assets, with a right to apply to the court for any additional relief which might become necessary. In all this the proceeding was in conformity with the practice and the established doctrine of the equity courts.

The main question in this case is, whether the rights and obligations of the parties are governed by the ordinance of the Virginia convention adopted on the 24th of June 1861, or by an act of the legislature passed on the 16th of May 1862, amendatory of the provisions of the ordinance.

The effect of the ordinance was to dispense entirely with demand, protest and notice upon all checks, bills and notes payable at a bank located in any city or town, if at the time of the maturity of such instruments the town or city was occupied, invested, or access thereto interrupted by the public enemy.

The effect of the act of the legislature, on the other hand, was to require notice of dishonor of the bill or note to be given within ten days after the removal of the obstruction created by the presence of the enemy.

The note, which is the subject of controversy, was made on the 10th of December 1861, whilst the ordinance was in force. It fell due on the 10th June 1862, after the ordinance had ceased to operate, and whilst the act of May 1862 was in full force. At the time of the maturity of the note the town of Fredericksburg was in possession of the federal forces, and consequently no demand was ever made, or notice given of the dishonor of the note. Under this state of facts, if the ordinance of the convention controls the rights of the parties, the holder of the note is entitled to recover, notwithstanding the failure to make demand 238 and give *notice of non-payment. If the act of May 1862 governs, the indorsers are discharged by reason of the failure of the holder to comply with the provisions of that act.

This question is to be solved by determining whether demand and notice are regulated by the laws in force when the endorsement is made, or by those in force at the time of the maturity of the note. The learned counsel for the appellant maintains that the proceedings to be taken upon the dishonor of a negotiable note, with a view to fix with liability the indorsers, is the law of the place, and the time when and where such dishonor takes place. In support of this proposition much reliance is placed upon two cases. One of these is Barlow v. Gregory, reported in 31 Conn. R. 261. It was there held, that a statute es-establishing a legal holiday was applicable to antecedent transactions, and did not impair the obligation of the contract, although the effect might be to exclude one of the days of grace to which the maker of a negotiable note was entitled. This decision was placed mainly upon the ground, that laws establishing legal holidays are in the nature of police regulations, and may be sustained upon the score of public health and morality; that days of grace constitute no part of the original contract, but are mere matters of indulgence granted the debtor, in regard to which the parties have made no stipulation; and further, that in looking forward to the time of payment, the parties are required to have respect to the general holidays which may then be established, and they are presumed to contract with reference to the custom of observing such holidays.

Now what is said by the learned court with respect to the allowance of days 239 of grace, as a mere matter of *favor to the debtor, is undoubtedly correct; but when it is asserted that the parties have made no stipulation with reference to days of grace, the proposition is not sustained by the authorities. On the contrary, nothing is better settled than that the usage in regard to the allowance of days of grace, prevailing at the place of payment, is a part of the contract. Jones v. Fales, 4 Mass. R. 245; Planters Bank v. Markham, 9 How. Miss. 405; Mills v. Bank of the United States, 11 Wheat. 431; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. R. 213, 342; Story on Prom. Notes, sec. 215, note.

Be this as it may, the Connecticut court having reached the conclusion that the allowance of days of grace is no part of the original contract, it could of course have no difficulty in arriving at the further conclusion, that one of these days might be excluded from the computation by the occurrence of a legal holiday, established even after the execution of the note.

But the court does not say, that demand and notice, and the circumstances under which they may be required or dispensed with, are not incidents of the original contract, or that they are governed by the laws in force when the notes become payable, or that the parties are presumed to contract with reference to such laws. The decision is confined to the narrow ground, that as the observance of holidays tends to the preservation of public health and morals, the parties in making their contract are required to have respect to such as may from time to time be established by law. Thus restricted, there is perhaps no particular objection to the dictum laid down by the supreme court of Connecticut.

The other case cited by the learned counsel is that of Rouquette v. Overman, decided by the court of queen's bench, and found in the Law Reports 1875, 10 Queen's 240 *Bench L. R. 525. The action was upon a foreign bill of exchange, drawn and endorsed in England, upon a house in Paris, and accepted there. The national assembly of France having by various decrees or orders extended the time of payment upon bills of exchange in consequence of the existence of the German war, the bill in controversy was not protested, nor was notice given of its dishonor until the expiration of the time fixed by the legislative decree. The question before the court was, whether the indorser, residing in England, was bound by the law of France made after the date of his indorsement, or must be discharged by the failure to make protest and give notice at the maturity of the note. It was held that the indorser was not discharged. Chief Justice Cockburn, in delivering the opinion of the court, sets out with the concession, that although time of payment is the essence of the contract, it was competent for the sovereign power of France to change or extend it at its pleasure, so far, at least, as subjects of that country were concerned. He then proceeds to show, that as the holder of the bill could not be required to present it to the acceptor for payment until it became legally payable according to the law of the place where payable, so he could not be required to give notice of dishonor until payment had been legally demanded of the acceptor and refused. And *as the acceptor resided in France, and as according to the law of that country payment could not be legally demanded of him until the day fixed by the legislative decree, there could of course be no protest and no notice given the indorser until then.

Now it is very clear, that no such case as this could have arisen in Virginia since the adoption of the federal constitution; for the obvious reason that a law 241 *changing the time of payment fixed by the parties would be treated as a law impairing the obligation of the contract. And yet the acknowledged power in the government of France to pass such a law was the basis upon which the entire argument of the learned judge was founded. He did not maintain that the indorser had contracted with reference to some new law which might be in operation when the bill matured. The decision is based upon the idea, chiefly, that as the liability of the indorser is to be measured by that of the acceptor whose surety he is, it followed that an indorser residing in England might be reached by a law of France through the medium of the acceptor who resided in France.

It will be seen from this simple statement, I am not called on to controvert the decision of the queen's bench or the reasoning upon which it is based.

It is worthy of observation, however, that the decision is in direct conflict with that of the supreme court of the United States in the case of Musson v. Lake, 4 How. U. S. R. 262.

The great question in that case was whether the contract between the holder and indorser was to be governed by the law of Louisiana, where the bill was payable, or by the law of Mississippi, where it was drawn and indorsed. The supreme court of the United States, after stating the proposition, that due presentment of a foreign bill of exchange to the drawee, protest and notice are conditions entering into and making a part of the contract between the parties, and that the law imposes the performance of them upon the holder as conditions precedent to the liability of the indorser—say, “The acceptors resided at New Orleans: they became parties to the bill by accepting it there. So far, therefore, 242 as their liabilities *were concerned, they were governed by the law of Louisiana. But the drawer and indorsers resided in Mississippi: the bill was drawn and indorsed there, and their liabilities, if any, occurred there. The undertaking of the defendant was, that the drawee should pay the bill; that if the holder after due diligence failed to obtain payment from them, he would pay it, with interest and damages. This part of the contract was, by the agreement of the parties, to be performed in Mississippi, where the suit was brought. The construction of the contract, and the diligence necessary to be used by the plaintiffs, to entitle them to a recovery, must therefore be governed by the laws of the latter state. The laws of Louisiana could not affect the contract of the parties residing in Mississippi.” In support of this view numerous cases are cited by the learned judge delivering the opinion.

The questions arising in the two cases just cited have been the prolific source of controversy among judges and writers on commercial law in every country where that law is recognized. That controversy does not, however, turn upon the question whether the rights and liabilities of the parties are governed by laws in force when the indorsement is made, or by those in force when the bill matures. The real point of contention is, whether the contract of the indorser is to be considered as made with reference to the law of the place where the indorsement takes place, or with reference to the law of the place where the note or bill is to be paid. But whichever it may be, whether the law of the place of indorsement or the law of the place of payment is to govern, the rights and obligations are to be determined by existing laws, the laws in force when the contract is made. It is with reference to these the 243 parties are presumed to contract, *and not with reference to some future laws of which they can know nothing.

Wherever the law merchant prevails, demand and notice are incidents of the contract of indorsement; they are conditions precedent to a right of recovery on the bill or note. This position is sustained by abundant authority.

In Rothschild v. Currie, 41 Eng. Com. Law R. 43, a case much relied on in the argument, Lord Denman, chief justice, said: “Is then notice of the dishonor parcel of the contract? The manner in which by the 165th section it is connected with the citation in judgment would at first raise an impression that it was not, but only a step in the remedy at law; but, upon consideration, we think it is parcel of the contract. The indorser contracts to pay the bill, not primarily or absolutely, but on two conditions: one, the dishonor by the drawee or acceptor; the other, the due notification to him of such dishonor.” This, it will be conceded, is very high authority. The authority of the case has been questioned in other respects, but the soundness of the view just stated has not been expressly denied by any case I have seen. See also Berry v. Robinson, 9 John. R. 121; Aymar v. Sheldon, 12 Wend. R. 439; Story's Conflict of Laws, sec. 360; 1 Rob. Prac. 79; Williams v. Wade, 1 Metc. R. 82; Short & Co. v. Trabue & Co., 4 Metc. R. 299.

In Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. R. 213, 341, Chief Justice Marshall, speaking with reference to the drawer of a bill of exchange—and the remark is equally applicable to the indorser—said, he ought to have notice that his bill is dishonored, because this notice enables him to take measures for his own security. It is reasonable that he should stipulate for this notice and the law presumes that he did stipulate for it.”

244 *But if the argument made here in behalf of the appellant be sound, while the indorser stipulates for notice as a measure essential to his security, he at the same time agrees that he will dispense with it provided the legislature (as has been done in one of the states) abolishes the law merchant before the maturity of the bill or note. And so the holder agrees that he will make demand of payment and give due notice of the dishonor; but it is said he at the same time impliedly agrees to do some other act if the legislature should, in the meantime, require it: what it is of course is wholly unknown to him. What confidence can be placed in negotiable instruments clogged with conditions of this character? The great value of these securities is, that they are governed by well established rules of law recognized throughout the commercial world, and well understood by the parties at the time of assuming their respective liabilities.

It is no answer to this view to say, that such changes will be rarely made in the law, so as to affect antecedent contracts. The mere recognition of such a doctrine will be mischievous in the extreme. Experience attests that laws materially affecting vested rights are not unfrequently passed through legislative bodies without discussion or even suspicion of their nature and effect. In cases of negotiable securities, the inducements to such legislation would be peculiarly great. Under the operation of a statute imposing new duties in regard to demand and notice, of which parties in distant states can know nothing, securities to the amount of millions may be rendered absolutely worthless. In all other transactions mankind are presumed to contract with reference to existing laws. In the language of a distinguished writer,

"These are necessarily referred to in all contracts, and forming a *part of them as the measure of the obligation to perform, by one party, and the rights acquired by the other." Cooley on Con. Limitation 284; Sherrill v. Hopkins, 1 Cow. R. 103, 107; Don v. Lippmann, 5 Clark & Fin. R. 1-13; Homestead cases, 22 Gratt. 266.

There is no valid reason why a different rule should be accepted with respect to negotiable instruments. On the contrary, every consideration of sound policy requires that the principle should be applied in its utmost rigor to these securities.

The case in hand strongly exemplifies these views. The ordinance of the convention, already mentioned, provides, that where any city or town, in which a bank is located, shall be occupied by the public enemy, the parties to negotiable paper payable in such town or city shall remain bound after the maturity of the paper, without demand, notice or protest, as if they had been regularly made or given. Parties making or indorsing notes or bills, after this ordinance went into operation, are presumed to know of its existence. They are supposed to contract with direct reference to its provisions. It entered into and became an essential element of the contract. It is as if the indorser had agreed in writing with the holder, that in the contingency mentioned he would waive demand, protest and notice. Suppose he had in fact done so, in the absence of an ordinance, will it be maintained that it was competent for the legislature by a subsequent enactment to require that notice should be given as a condition precedent to a right of recovery? And yet the waiver in the present case is as positive and unmistakable in its terms as though it had been written at large on the paper containing the promise to pay. The bank might well say, it would not have discounted the note, the holder might say he would not have purchased *it in those unsettled times, but for the security afforded by the ordinance. Both might well say, that they rested with absolute confidence upon this security, and failed to give notice of the dishonor; that they never knew of the existence of the act of May 1862 in sufficient time to conform to its requirements; or, if they did, they were under no obligation to regard it; for, if the act was to be construed as applying to antecedent transactions, it was an effort of the legislature to impose conditions not expressed in the original contract.

It is to be observed that the act in question is not simply a repeal of the ordinance, not the restoration of the law merchant. It is the adoption of a new rule different from the law merchant, different from the ordinance. Under that act it was not sufficient to give notice of the dishonor of the note within a reasonable time after the removal of the impediment, but a peremptory limit of ten days was prescribed, applicable alike to each and every case, without regard to the circumstances which might surround the holder or the state of the country.

It is difficult to believe that the legislature could ever have designed that this law should apply to bills and notes executed previous to its enactment. If such was the purpose, the effect was to impair the obligation of the contract, and to violate the constitution.

Since the foregoing was written I have examined the decision of this court in the case of Farmers Bank of Va. v. Gunnell's adm'or, made at the March term 1875, and not yet reported. That decision will be found to sustain the views already presented in regard to the ordinance of the convention, and upon the question of the steps to be taken upon the dishonor of a negotiable note.

*The learned counsel for the appellant, both in the petition for an appeal and in his oral argument, has maintained that the convention of 1861, having no legislative power, could not pass a "valid ordinance of the character at present under consideration.

The act of the Virginia legislature calling a convention was ratified by the people. That act, among other things, provided that the members of that body after assembling in Richmond "shall proceed to adopt such measures as they may deem expedient for the welfare of the commonwealth." These are very comprehensive terms: they show that the design was not to confine the convention merely to the consideration and adoption of such measures as affected the relations of the state with the federal government, but to confer upon it important powers affecting the internal affairs, the domestic economy of the commonwealth. The measures to be adopted from time to time by the convention must, of necessity, have included many matters of ordinary legislation. It was necessarily, to a very great extent, the judge, and the exclusive judge, of what was essential and proper to be done under all the circumstances surrounding the state. The courts would hesitate long before undertaking to declare that a body thus constituted had transcended the just limits of its authority. It could only be done where the act was a palpable invasion of the reserved rights of the people.

Large and numerous classes of the people were interested in the banks. The state was vitally concerned in their just and wise administration. These institutions were important agencies in the fiscal affairs of the commonwealth, in supplying both people and government with a sound currency. In the then existing condition of affairs, with invading armies *occupying many of the towns and cities of the state, and threatening others with incessant raids, some such provision as that adopted by the convention might justly have been regarded as expedient both for the commonwealth and the banks. At the time of the adoption of the ordinance the legislature was not in session, and the convention was necessarily required to adopt many measures more appropriate perhaps to an ordinary legislature. Without therefore entering into a discussion of the question of the powers of a convention to exercise the functions of a legislative body, under ordinary circumstances, it is sufficient to say that the convention of 1861 did not exceed its powers in adopting the ordinance now under consideration.

The next and only question to be considered, is as to the right of the appellee to recover without proof that he has paid value for the note. As a general rule the possession of a negotiable instrument is prima facie evidence of a good title. And although it may be an accommodation note, the holder is presumed to have given value for it. On the other hand, circumstances may be shown to exist which will remove this presumption, and cast upon the holder the onus of proving that he is a holder for value.

In Mills v. Barber, 1 Mees. & Wels. R. 425, it was held that if the instrument be connected with some fraud, and a suspicion of fraud be raised from its being shown something has been done with it of an illegal nature, as that it has been clandestinely taken, or has been lost or stolen, in such case the holder must show that he has paid consideration for it.

And in another case where the drawer of the bill proved that he indorsed it in blank, and delivered it to W to get it discounted for him; which W promised to do, and bring him the money on the following Monday; but never returned with the bill or the money, and the drawer heard no more of it until called upon by H to pay it; it was held that H must prove that he gave consideration for the bill. Hall v. Featherstone, 3 Hurl. & Nor. 284; Story on Bills Sec. 193, note.

In the nature of things it is impossible to lay down any fixed unvarying rule, as to the circumstances which will be deemed sufficient to throw upon the holder the burden of showing that he has given value for the note. The courts must determine in each case, whether the transaction is of such a character as to rebut the presumption usually arising from the possession of the instrument.

The note which is the subject of the present controversy matured in June 1862. When or how the appellee obtained possession of it, does not appear. He does not state what consideration he paid for it, or indeed that he paid any consideration at all; although his long delay rendered some explanation of the kind peculiarly proper and even necessary. The only statement bearing upon this point contained in the bill is, that John J. Chew made the note on the 11th December 1861, payable to the order of George F. Chew and Robert C. Duerson; and that afterwards the said Chew and Duerson indorsed the same to the appellee. It is not very clear from this, whether the appellee obtained the note from the indorsers or from the maker. The fair implication is, that it was the former, and yet it is manifest from the face of the note itself, it was accommodation paper for the benefit of the maker. The note, although payable at the bank in Fredericksburg, was never placed in that bank; and, so far as this record discloses, has never been 250 *seen by any one, or even heard of, since the date of its execution, until very shortly before this suit was brought, in December 1870. Duerson, one of the indorsers, against whose estate this claim is asserted, died in 1863. George F. Chew, it seems, is also dead: when his death occurred does not appear; it was certainly before the institution of the suit. John J. Chew, the maker, it would seem, even after the close of the war, was possessed of sufficient property to pay the note. He died in the year 1870, utterly insolvent. Notwithstanding all the parties lived in or near Fredericksburg, notwithstanding the death of maker and indorsers, and the failure or threatened distribution of their estates, the appellee, from 1862 to 1870 inclusive, so far as the record informs us, never disclosed to any one that he was the owner of this large debt. It was not until the death of every person who could throw any light upon the transaction, that he brings forward the note, and claims to recover against one of the indorsers. Very curious to say, these circumstances seem to have attracted but little attention in the court below. They are alluded to in the answer of Duerson's administrator, not so much to throw discredit upon the title of the appellee, as to fix upon him the imputation of gross laches in the assertion of his demand to the manifest prejudice of the indorsers. The appellee having brought his suit within the time allowed by the several statutes passed since the war, I do not perceive how he can be barred upon the ground of any supposed laches. But his long delay in connection with the other circumstances, already alluded to, removes the presumption arising from the mere possession of the note, and makes it incumbent upon him to show that he paid consideration for it, or at least facts and circumstances, from which it may be inferred that he has paid such consideration.

251 *I do not think the bill ought to be dismissed by this court, because it must be admitted that the pleadings and issues in the court below do not appear to have distinctly presented this point. It was for the first time raised by the learned counsel for the appellants in his argument here. The appellee should therefore have an opportunity of showing, if he can, that he has paid consideration for the note. With that view the decree of the circuit court is reversed, and the cause remanded for an issue, to be tried by a jury, or for an inquiry before a commissioner as to that court may seem best under all the circumstances.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Staples, J.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the circuit court erred in decreeing in favor of the appellee, without requiring him to show that he is a holder for value of the note in controversy, and without also requiring the appellee to make the representatives of John J. Chew and of George F. Chew parties to the suit.

It is therefore decreed that for the said errors the decree of the said circuit court be reversed and annulled, and that the appellee pay, &c.

It is further decreed, that the cause be remanded to the said circuit court, in order that the proper parties may be made, and the appellee may have an opportunity of establishing by proper proof that he is such holder for value. And to that end the said circuit court may direct an inquiry before one of its commissioners, or an issue to be tried before a jury, as it may deem most advisable.

Decree reversed.

252 *Muse & als. v. Farmers Bank of Virginia.

1. Practice—Discontinuance—Judgment by Default.*—

B brings an action of debt against F & M, as late partners and makers of a negotiable note, and C and G as endorsers. The case stands on the office judgment docket at the next term of the court, when F files his plea of nil debet, which is sworn to; and on the motion of B by his counsel, the cause is discontinued as to F. The other parties not appearing, there is a judgment by default against them. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same—Statute.—The judgment is a valid judgment against M, C and G. See Code of 1860, ch. 177, s. 19.

2. Same—Same—Retraxit.—The discontinuance as to F is not a retraxit. A retraxit can only be entered by the plaintiff in person, and in open court.

This was an action of debt in the circuit court of Pittsylvania county, brought in March 1866, by the Farmers Bank of Virginia against Wm. A. J. Finney and Henry L. Muse, late partners under the style of Finney & Muse, as makers, and George Craft, John H. Gill and another as endorsers, of a negotiable note for four thousand dollars. The note bore date January 14th, 1861; was payable in four months at the office of the Farmers Bank at Danville; was signed in the name of Finney & Muse, as makers; was endorsed by Craft and two others for the accommodation of the makers, and discounted at the bank in Danville, and protested for non-payment.

The process was served on Finney, Muse, Craft and Gill, and stood on the office judgment docket of the court at the June term for 1866. At this term of the plea of nil debet, which was sworn to. And at the same term of the court, on the plaintiff's motion, by counsel, the cause was discontinued as to the defendant Finney; and none of the other parties appearing, there was judgment by default against them.

Nothing seems to have been done in the case until June 1871, when Muse, upon notice, moved the judge in vacation to set aside the judgment, which motion was overruled; and in August 1871 Craft's executor made a similar motion; which was overruled in October of that year. Muse and Craft's executor applied to a judge of this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed.

Ould & Carrington, for the appellants.

Jones & Bouldin, for the appellee.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This case comes before us upon a writ of error and supersedeas to a judgment of the circuit court of Pittsylvania county. The Farmers Bank of Virginia at Danville brought an action of debt in that court against Finney & Muse, as makers, and three others, as indorsers of a negotiable note payable at that bank. The defendant, Finney, alone appeared, and filed a plea of nil debet, which was verified by his affidavit; and thereupon, on motion of the plaintiff by his attorney, it was ordered that the cause be discontinued as to him. The other defendants not appearing, judgment by default was rendered against them for the debt claimed in the declaration.

This judgment has been assailed by 254 the learned *counsel for the plaintiff in error upon various grounds. In respect to the principal ground of objection, it is sufficient to say, it is the same urged before this court in the case of Bush v. Campbell, decided at the last term of this court, and not yet reported. There the action was upon a bond purporting to have been executed by several persons. Three of the defendants filed separate pleas of non est factum; and upon that issue verdict and judgment were rendered in their favor. The defendant, Bush, filed a plea of usury, which was tried at a subsequent term, and a verdict found against him. The question was, whether judgment could be given against him on the verdict. This court held it could be so given under the provisions of the 19th section of chapter 177, Code of 1860, which provides, that in an action founded on contract against two or more defendants, although the plaintiff may be barred as to one or more of them, yet he may have judgment against any other or others of the defendants, against whom he would have been entitled to recover if he had sued them only. According to the view taken by this court, this statute changed essentially the rule of the common law requiring in actions on joint or joint and several contracts one final judgment for or against all the defendants. The effect of that change is to relieve a plaintiff, who proves a good cause of action against part of the defendants, but not against the others, from being put to the expense and delay of a new action against those who are bound. If, therefore, the plea of one of the defendants is of such a character that the plaintiff might have recovered against the others, had he sued them only, he is entitled to judgment in the pending action against those who are liable. This is the construction given by the New York courts to 255 a statute from which ours *was probably taken, and is very similar in its provisions. Blodgett v. Morris, 14 New York R. 482, 487.

The learned counsel for the defendants insists that the present case is distinguishable in several particulars from that of Bush v. Campbell. For example, it is said that all the defendants were in that case parties, apparently at least, to the contract. Their names were signed to the bond, and the plaintiff could not know they were not really so until the trial of the issues upon the pleas of non est factum. Whereas, in the present action, the plaintiff has sued the wrong person, one having no connection with the instrument declared on, real or apparent. And it is argued, that the statute giving joint actions upon negotiable notes against makers and indorsers, authorizes one, all, or any intermediate number, to be sued, but it does not permit a defendant to be included who is neither maker nor indorser.

The learned counsel is unquestionably correct in saying that the statute he refers to does not authorize the joinder of a person who is neither maker nor indorser. That proposition does not admit of discussion. And if that statute stood alone the argument would be unanswerable. But it must be read in connection with the provisions of the section already cited, which provide that although the plaintiff may be barred as to one or more of the defendants, he may nevertheless have judgment against the others. These provisions apply as well to joint actions upon negotiable instruments, as upon instruments not negotiable. In either case the object and effect of the statute is to avoid the expense, delay and trouble of a new suit against parties who are liable. There is no good reason why it should not apply in the one case as in the other. No one, of course, should be 256 joined in the *suit as defendant who does not appear expressly, or by proper averment, to have made or indorsed the note. A misdescription of the writing in a material matter, whether as to parties or otherwise, is fatal on demurrer for the variance, or on objection to its admission as evidence. But if the parties are properly described in the declaration as they appear by the instrument sued on, the plaintiff is not to be turned around to a new suit merely because one or more of the defendants is shown never to have been a party to the contract.

In the present case the declaration is against William A. J. Finney and Henry L. Muse, late partners trading under the style of Finney & Muse. The record states that the said William A. J. Finney comes by his attorney and says he does not owe the sum of money in the declaration mentioned. It may be that there were two persons of the same name, and that process was served upon the wrong person. As nothing of the kind appears by the record we cannot presume that such was the fact. One thing is very clear, that the defendant named in the declaration and writ bears the same name as the person upon whom process was served, and by whom the plea of nil debet was filed. That plea verified by affidavit, put the entire declaration in issue. Under it any fact may be relied upon which shows that the party pleading does not owe the debt. The plaintiff may have been satisfied that the defendant Finney did not sign the note, nor authorize any one else to sign it for him; or that the partnership had been dissolved before the note was executed by Muse. Either of these matters was sufficient for the discharge of Finney without affecting the liability of the other defendants. This court will presume rather that Finney did not owe the debt, as 257 *the issue purports, than that the other defendants did not owe it. It will not take it for granted for purposes of reversal, that the matters relied on by him affected the liability of the others, and precluded a judgment against them also; but that these matters went to his personal discharge, and did not concern the other defendants. Such presumptions are often made in appellate courts, upon principles of necessity and convenience, based upon the maxim that acts of courts of competent jurisdiction are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done until the contrary is made to appear. Powell on Appellate Proceedings, and cases there cited, 127, 241.

The learned counsel for the defendants, varying his ground of attack upon the judgment, insists that the conduct of the plaintiff in discontinuing the suit against the defendant Finney, amounts to a retraxit; the effect of which is to preclude the other defendants from recourse upon Finney for contribution or indemnity.

But clearly the order in question was not a retraxit; as that can only be entered by the plaintiff in person in open court.

The term "discontinuance" is not applied in pleading merely to those cases in which the plaintiff leaves a chasm in the proceedings of his cause. The word is also frequently used to indicate that the "plaintiff discontinues his action." The judgment in such case is no more than an agreement not to proceed farther in that suit against that particular defendant. Such judgment is not a bar to any future action against the same party. And this is precisely the effect of the order of discontinuance entered in the present case. Coffman & Richardson v. Russell, 4 Munf. 207, is a direct authority upon this point.

258 *If, therefore, the defendant Finney is released from all liability, it is not by reason of the discontinuance as to him, but because either he was never a party to the contract, or because he has discharged by matter subsequent, personal to him. We must presume it is one or the other. Whether it is one or the other the effect is the same. In either case the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the others.

Upon the whole, we think there is no error in the judgment of the circuit court, and that the same must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

259 *Warren v. Saunders.*

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Plea in Abatement—Sufficiency.—W sues S in assumpsit in the county of J, and sends the process to the city of R, where S resides, and it is served upon S by the sheriff of R. S files a plea in abatement stating these facts, but does not say where the cause of action arose. Held: The plea is sufficient in this case, though it does not give the plaintiff a better writ.

2. Practice—Motion to Dismiss Suit—Process.†—W having demurred to the plea, and the court having sustained the demurrer, when the cause is called for trial S moves to dismiss the cause from the docket. Held: The motion should have been sustained and the suit dismissed; the statute expressly providing that when the suit is brought where the cause of action arose, process shall not be directed to an officer of any other county or corporation than that wherein the action is brought.

This is a supersedeas to a judgment of the late district court of appeals for the third judicial circuit, reversing a judgment of the circuit court for the city of Williamsburg and county of James City, rendered in a certain matter of controversy therein depending, wherein the plaintiff in error, James R. Warren, was plaintiff, and the defendant in error, Edmund A. Saunders, was defendant. The following is a statement of the case.

On the 16th day of February 1869, a summons was issued by the clerk of the said circuit court, directed to the sheriff of the city of Richmond, commanding him to summon the said Saunders to appear at the clerk's office of the said circuit court at the rules to be holden for the said court on the first Monday in March 1869, to answer the said Warren of a plea of 260 *trespass on the case, assumpsit, &c.

This summons was executed by a deputy of the sheriff of the city of Richmond, and was returned with a return thereon endorsed and signed by the said deputy, stating that it was "executed, March 1st 1869, on E. A. Saunders, by delivering to him a copy of the within."

At March rules 1869 the plaintiff filed his declaration in the case, which contained two counts, one a special count for a lot of wood, estimated to contain two hundred and seventy cords, lying at "Perry's landing" on the Chickahominy river, and bargained and sold by the plaintiff to the defendant on the terms in the said special count mentioned; and the other a general count for one hundred and ten cords of pine wood, sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant.

Whereupon the defendant appeared and filed his plea in abatement, to which the plaintiff demurred, and the defendant joined in demurrer.

By the said plea the defendant appeared in proper person and cravedoyer of the writ, which was read to him, and, with the return endorsed thereon, inserted in the plea. The defendant then in his said plea "prays judgment of the writ aforesaid, and says that this court ought not to have or take further cognizance of said action, because he says that it appears by said writ that he the said defendant is not sued with any person residing in the city of Williamsburg or the county of James city, and that the said writ is issued against the said defendant alone, and that the said writ is directed to the sheriff of the city of Richmond, and that the endorsement on said writ shows that the said writ was served upon said defendant by the sheriff of the city of Richmond by deputy. And the said 261 defendant in fact says, that at the time of the *issuing of said writ, and at the time of the service thereof upon him, he was, and ever since has been, and is now a resident of the city of Richmond, and that the said writ was served upon him in the city of Richmond, and that he is not sued with any person residing in the city of Williamsburg or the county of James City; and this the said Saunders is ready to verify: wherefore he prays judgment of the said writ, and that the same may be quashed," &c.

There is an affidavit of the truth of the plea annexed thereto, which bears date on the 1st day of March 1869, the very day on which the summons was executed on the defendant.

At May term 1869 of the said circuit court the said demurrer was argued and sustained, and the defendant was ordered to answer further to the declaration; and the cause was continued until the next term.

At which term, to wit: on the 27th day of November 1869 the defendant moved the court to dismiss the cause from the docket; which motion was overruled, and the de-defendant excepted. He then plead non assumpsit, on which issue was joined, and there was a trial by jury and a verdict for the plaintiff, whose damages were assessed at $500: whereupon the defendant moved the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence; but the court overruled the motion, and rendered judgment according to the verdict.

During the progress of the trial, at the instance of the defendant three bills of exceptions were signed and sealed by the court and made a part of the record. No. 1 was to the action of the court, in overruling his motion to dismiss the case; No. 2 was 262 to the action of the court in overruling a motion for a continuance; and No. 3 was to the action of the court in overruling his motion for a new trial; in which last bill the facts proved on the trial were certified. But it will be unnecessary here to notice further any of these bills except No. 1.

That bill states, that at the calling of the cause, at the November term of the court the defendant moved the court to inspect the writ, which was accordingly done by the court, and to dismiss the case from the docket, upon the ground that it appears by said writ that the defendant is the sole defendant in this action, and is a resident of the city of Richmond, and was at the time of the suing out said writ, and the said writ was issued by the clerk of the circuit court for the city of Williamsburg and the county of James City, and directed to the sheriff of the city of Richmond, and was served upon the defendant in the city of Richmond by the deputy sheriff of said city; which motion the court overruled, and refused to dismiss the case from the docket; and the defendant excepted.

To the said judgment of the circuit court the defendant applied to a judge of the said district court for a supersedeas, which was accordingly awarded; the errors in said judgment as assigned in the petition for a supersedeas being, 1st, in sustaining the demurrer to the plea in abatement, and in refusing to quash the writ, and in compelling the defendant to answer further; 2d, in overruling the defendant's motion to dismiss the case from the docket; and 3d, in overruling the defendant's motion for a new trial.

On the 4th day of January 1870 the case came on to be heard in the said district court upon the supersedeas, when it seemed to the court that there was error in the judgment of the circuit court in this, 263 *that the defendant's plea in abatement to the writ was good and sufficient in law, and that the court below erred in sustaining the plaintiff's demurrer to the said plea in abatement. Therefore the judgment of the circuit court was reversed, the said demurrer was overruled, the said plea was adjudged to be good and sufficient in law; and the cause was remanded to the circuit court, with instructions to direct that the plaintiff join issue in fact on said plea; and the defendant recovered his costs in the district court.

To the said judgment of the district court the plaintiff applied to a judge of this court for a supersedeas; which was accordingly awarded.

Jones & Bouldin, for the appellant.

Cannon & Courtney, for the appellee.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

After stating the case he proceeded:

There can be no doubt but that the summons by which the action was commenced in this case was illegal and void, and ought to have been quashed, if the facts appeared and the question was properly presented to the circuit court. The action was brought in the circuit court of the city of Williamsburg and the county of James City, and was commenced by the issuing of a summons which bore date on the 16th day of February 1869, before the declaration was filed. There was but one defendant in the action, Edmund A. Saunders, who resided in the city of Richmond. The supposed cause of action, it seems, arose in the county of James City. The summons was directed to the sheriff of the city of Richmond, to whom it was sent, and by whose 264 deputy it was executed and returned, *with an endorsement thereon showing the time and manner of its execution. It was without any authority of law that this summons was directed to the sheriff of the city of Richmond.

The Code, chapter 165, section 1, provides, that "any action at law or suit in equity, except where it is otherwise specially provided, may be brought in any county or corporation: First, wherein any of the defendants may reside." Neither the exception referred to in the said first section, nor the subsequent enumerations appended thereto, apply to this case. Section 2 provides, that "an action may be brought in any county or corporation wherein the cause of action or any part thereof arose, although none of the defendants reside therein." Chapter 166, section 2, provides, that "process from any court, whether original, mesne, or final, may be directed to the sheriff of any county or sergeant of any corporation, except that process against a defendant (unless a railroad, canal, turnpike, or telegraph company be defendant), to answer to any action brought under the second section of chapter 165, shall not be directed to an officer of any other county or corporation than that wherein the action is brought."

Now these are all the provisions of law which apply to this question. This action might have been brought, under section 1 of chapter 165, in the city of Richmond, where the only defendant in the action resided, or, under section 2 of the same chapter, in the city of Williamsburg and county of James City, wherein the cause of action arose. It was brought in the latter, wherein the cause of action arose. In that case, however, as we have seen, chapter 166, section 2, expressly required that the process should not be directed to an officer of any other county or corporation 265 than that *wherein the action was brought. And yet, in plain violation of that law, the summons in this case was issued and directed to the sheriff of the city of Richmond. It was palpably void for illegality; and the only question is, whether the defendant used the proper means to avail himself of such illegality.

He was certainly very prompt in making his defence. On the very day on which the summons was executed upon him, to-wit, the 1st day of March 1869, he made affidavit to a plea in abatement setting out the facts and grounds of his defence, which plea he filed immediately on the filing of the plaintiff's declaration in the case, which was at March rules 1869. The plea was, therefore, filed in due time. Was it sufficient in form and substance? It stated that the defendant appeared "in his own proper person," and cravedoyer of the writ, which was read to him, and was set out in haec verba in the plea. It then proceeded: "which being read and heard, he," &c., as already set out in the statement of the case.

The details of this plea are very minute, and seem to embrace all the facts necessary to be stated in such a plea under the circumstances. The only objection made to it by the plaintiff is, that it does not aver where the cause of action arose, and therefore does not do what it is contended such a plea must always do, that is, give to the plaintiff a better writ. It does give to the plaintiff a better writ, by showing that the action might have been brought in the city of Richmond. But it is said the action might also have been brought in any county or corporation wherein the cause of action or any part thereof arose, although none of the defendants reside therein, and therefore the plea should show in what county or corporation the cause of action in this 266 case arose. The answer to *this is, that the plaintiff knew where the cause of action arose, and his declaration shows that it arose in the county of James City, wherein the action was actually brought. Surely it could not be necessary to aver that the court in which the action was brought had jurisdiction thereof. The objection was, not that the action was brought in a court not having jurisdiction of it, but that the summons was illegally issued and sent to another county or corporation than that in which the action was brought, and therefore the summons was illegal and void. The plea shows that the plaintiff sued the only defendant in the action in a county in which that defendant did not reside, and had the summons issued and sent for execution to the county or corporation in which he did reside. Now that was an unlawful act, which it was only necessary for the defendant to show in order to be entitled to have the writ quashed. The doctrine about giving the plaintiff a better writ does not apply to such a case. He brought his suit in James City, and instead of suing out his writ to the sheriff of that county, he sued it out to the sheriff of the city of Richmond, without any authority whatever for so doing. If he had, by mistake, brought his action in the wrong county, supposing that the defendant resided there, or that the cause of action arose there, and had sued out his summons to the sheriff of that county, it might have been reasonable and proper to require the defendant in his plea to the jurisdiction to give the plaintiff a better writ by showing not only where the defendant resided, but also where the cause of action arose—and such seems to be the effect of the two cases so much relied upon by the learned counsel who prepared the petition of the plaintiff to the district court for a supersedeas in 267 this case. Those two cases *are Middleton v. Pinnell, 2 Gratt. 202; and Raine v. Rice &c., 2 Pat. & Heath 529. In neither of those actions was any opinion delivered by the appellate court, but in each of them the judgment of the court below was simply affirmed. We cannot therefore know precisely the ground of the court's decision in either of them. The supposed ground is, that the plea to the jurisdiction was fatally defective in not showing where the cause of action arose. Admitting that to have been the true ground, as it may have been, and probably was, there was this material difference between those cases and this, that in each of them the writ was issued to the sheriff of the county in which the action was brought, which was certainly proper if the court had jurisdiction of the case, whereas, in this case, it was issued to the sheriff of a corporation in which the action was not brought, which was certainly not proper, whether the court in which the action was brought had jurisdiction of it or not.

But the rule that "pleas in abatement must give the plaintiff a better writ," is by no means a rule of universal extent and application. As to the nature of it, see what is said in 5 Rob. Prac., p. 104-5, and the cases there cited. In Massachusetts, Wilde, J., observed that the rule is of limited application, and is binding only in cases where misnomer is pleaded, or the defect relied on depends on some fact presumed to be within the peculiar knowledge of the defendant. Guild v. Richardson, 6 Pick. R. 369, 370. Dewey, J., says: "There are many cases where a plea in abatement need not furnish the plaintiff with a better writ; as a plea that no such person exists as the plaintiff, or plea of non-tenure. 268 or plea of disclaimer and the *like." Wilson v. Nevers, 20 Pick. R. 23. See 5 Rob. Prac., supra.

But without pursuing this subject any further, we are of opinion that the circuit court erred in sustaining the plaintiff's demurrer to the defendant's plea in abatement, and that the district court did not err in reversing the judgment of the circuit court on that ground.

We are also of opinion that the circuit court erred in overruling the motion of the defendant to dismiss the case from the docket, upon the grounds set out in bill of exceptions No. 1, the purport of which is already set forth in the preliminary statement of the case; the said grounds being also embraced in the plea in abatement aforesaid. We think there are cases of this kind, and that this is one of them, in which a plea in abatement is not necessary, but the court may ex officio, and a fortiori upon motion, abate the writ or the suit. See 1 Rob. Prac., old ed., p. 162, and cases there referred to, especially Garrard &c. v. Henry &c., 6 Rand. 112, 117; Mantz v. Hendley, 2 Hen. & Mun. 308. In 5 Rob. Prac. 95, it is said "the general rule is, that if the defendant would object to the plaintiff's writ he must do it by pleading in abatement. Cooke v. Gibbs, 3 Mass. R. 195. It is indeed sometimes said that if the writ be bad and insufficient on its face, the court may ex officio quash it. S. C. 196; Mantz v. Hendley, 2 Hen. & Mun. 308." It does not appear that the provision in the Code of 1849, ch. 171, § 18, referred to in 5 Rob. Prac. 101, was intended to prevent a court from quashing a writ in any case whatever without a plea in abatement. After providing in § 17 that "no plea in abatement for a misnomer shall be allowed in any action," § 18 provides that, "in other cases, a defendant, on whom the process summoning him to answer appears to have been served, shall not take advantage of any defect in the writ or return, or any variance in the writ from the declaration, unless the same be pleaded in abatement." This section does not seem to cover a case like this, in which the writ is not merely defective, but absolutely void, and in which therefore it may be quashed, not only on plea in abatement, but also on mere motion, or by the court ex officio. But in this case the question seems not to be material, as the objection was taken not only by motion, but also by plea in abatement.

The court is therefore of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the district court, except that instead of remanding the cause to the said circuit court of the city of Williamsburg and county of James City, with instructions to direct that the said plaintiff join issue in fact on said plea, the said district court ought to have quashed the plaintiff's writ. But the said judgment may be amended in that respect, and as amended affirmed.

The judgment of the district court is therefore amended and affirmed accordingly, and it is considered that the defendant recover against the plaintiff his costs by him about his defence in this court expended.

Judgment amended and affirmed.

a. Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court.—A plea to the jurisdiction is one by which the defendant denies the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the action, and occurs when a party is sued in one county or corporation when the action should have been brought in another. 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 674.

Plea to the Jurisdiction Must Show Where Defendants Reside.—A plea in abatement of the court, on the ground that the defendants do not reside in the county where the action was brought, nor did the cause of action arise there, must not only show where the defendants do reside, but where the cause of action arose. Raine v. Rice, 2 Pat. & Heath 529. For form of a plea to the jurisdiction, see 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 675.

A plea in abatement to the jurisdiction of the court, on the ground that the defendant did not reside in the county in which the action was brought, nor did the cause of action arise there, must state where the defendant does reside; and where the cause of action did arise. Middleton v. Pinnell, 2 Gratt. 202.

A plea to the jurisdiction ought to show where the suit ought to be brought. Barton's Law Prac. (2d Ed.) 289.

When Too Late.—It is too late, after issue joined, to object to the court's jurisdiction, on the ground of non-residence of the defendant. Monroe v. Redman, 2 Munf. 240.

Same—West Virginia.—A plea in abatement to the jurisdiction of the court cannot be filed after a conditional judgment or decree nisi. Simpson v. Edmiston, 23 W. Va. 675, citing and following Carey v. Burruss, 20 W. Va. 571; Delaplain v. Armstrong, 21 W. Va. 211.

b. Another Suit Pending.—That another suit is pending for the same matter between the same parties, and in a court of the same state, is ground for a plea in abatement; such a defence can only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement. Barton's Law Prac. (2d Ed.) 290.

Necessary Averment.—A plea in abatement of a former action must aver the pendency of the action at the time of filing the plea. Archer v. Ward, 9 Gratt. 622.

c. Plea in Suspension of the Action.—This plea is in the nature of a plea in abatement. Mr. Minor says that the only instance of such a plea in Virginia today, is where the plaintiff, since the contract, has become an alien enemy. This fact disables him from suing during the pendency of hostilities, and is therefore a proper subject for the plea for a suspension of the action. 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 675.

d. Plea in Abatement for Disability of the Person to Sue or Be Sued.—In Virginia coverture alone is ground for such a plea. For form of plea, see 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 677.

e. Plea in Abatement for Matter Apparent on the Face of the Writ and Declaration.—Mr. Minor gives, "Repugnancy, want of sufficient time, or too great time between the teste of the writ and the return day thereof; as for instance, that the writ is not returnable within ninety days from its date" as instances when such a plea is proper. 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 678.

f. Plea in Abatement for Non-Joinder of Co-Contractors.—Every plea in abatement, for non-joinder of a co-defendant must state that such other defendant resides in the state, and must state his place of residence with convenient certainty. Code, § 8261. See generally, 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 679; for form, Id. 682.

If one of several joint contractors be omitted as defendant, advantage of the omission can be taken only by plea in abatement. Prunty v. Mitchell & Cobbs, 76 Va. 169.

In assumpsit against one defendant, the plea being non-assumpsit, and it appearing during trial, that with him as partner, another was interested in the contract sued on, and that plaintiff knew it before suit, the jury were instructed that if from the evidence they believed those facts, they must find for defendant. Held, error, as non-joinder in assumpsit, as well as in debt and covenant, can only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement, save when it appears on the face of the declaration. Prunty v. Mitchell, 76 Va. 169.

g. Plea in Abatement for Misnomer of Plaintiff or Defendant.—In Virginia, now, by statute no plea in abatement for this cause is allowed in any action; but instead of it, the declaration on defendant's motion, and on affidavit of the proper name, is amended by asserting the right name. Code, § 3258.

h. Variance between the Writ and Declaration.—For form, see 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 677. By statute in Virginia the only means of taking advantage of such a variance is by plea in abatement. Code, § 3259.

If the plaintiff be permitted to amend his declaration, by consent of parties, after issue joined on a plea to the action, the defendant ought not to be permitted to plead in abatement any variance between the amended declaration and the writ, which equally existed between the writ and the original declaration. Moss v. Stipp, 8 Munf. 159.

After the court of appeals has passed upon a case, and remanded the cause for a new trial upon the general issue, a demurrer to the declaration or a plea in abatement upon the grounds that the christian names of the respective parties are not mentioned therein, ought not to be received. Lanier v. Cocke, 6 Munf. 580.

When Defendant Waives Defects in Writ.—By appearing and pleading to the action, or by taking or consenting to a continuance, the defendant waives all defects in the process and the service thereof. Harvey v. Skipwith, 16 Gratt. 410, cited and followed in A. & D. R. R. Co. v. Peake, 87 Va. 180, 140, 12 S. E. Rep. 348.

Ejectment.—A plea in abatement is admissible in an action of ejectment. James River, etc., Co. v. Robinson, 16 Gratt. 434. A defendant may waive his plea in abatement and plead in bar. James River, etc., Co. v. Robinson, 16 Gratt. 434.

III. TIME OF FILING PLEA.

General Rule.—The general rule is that all pleas in abatement must be filed before an office judgment. A plea to the jurisdiction must be filed at the same rules the declaration is filed. 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 678.

After Issue Joined.—After issue joined on a plea to the action, it is too late to move the court to dismiss the suit on the ground of a defect in the writ, or for leave to file a plea in abatement. Payne v. Grim, 2 Munf. 297.

Cannot Set Aside Office Judgment—Pais Darrein Continuance.—A plea in abatement ought not to be received to set aside an office judgment, unless it be a matter which arose pais darrein continuance. Bradley v. Welch, 1 Munf. 284; Hunt v. Wilkinson, 2 Call 49.

Must Be Put in before Defendant's Plea in Bar.—A plea in abatement to the jurisdiction of the court must be put in before the defendant's plea in bar. Washington, etc., Co. v. Hobson, 15 Gratt. 122.

IV. FORM OF THE PLEA.

"Plea No. 1 was a plea to the jurisdiction of the court. The plea is bad, and was properly stricken out by the court. It has not the proper conclusion of a dilatory plea, in that it omits the prayer for judgment. 1 Chit. Pl. 451; 4 Min. Inst. 626, 1022; and 5 Rob. Prac. 2. It fails to state that the cause of action did not arise in Lynchburg; nor does it state where it did arise. 5 Rob. Prac. 23; Middleton v. Pinnell, 2 Gratt. 32; and Raine v. Rice, 2 P. & H. 529. It fails to give the plaintiff a better writ by showing what court of the state has jurisdiction of the cause of action. 5 Rob. Prac. 23; and Hortons v. Townes, 6 Leigh 58." Guarantee Co. v. National Bank, 95 Va. 486, 28 S. E. Rep. 900.

Not Regarded with Favour.—"Dilatory pleas are not regarded with favour, and in order to discourage their use, are required to be drawn with the greatest accuracy and precision." The court in Guarantee Co. v. National Bank, 95 Va. 486, 28 S. E. Rep. 900, citing 1 Chit. on Plead. 445; 4 Min. Inst. 1036; Hortons v. Townes, 6 Leigh 58.

Strictness Required of Plea.—The utmost strictness is required in pleas in abatement; and a general demurrer to such a plea has all the effect of a special one. Plea in abatement to jurisdiction held naught: (1) because pleaded by attorney, not in person (2) because concluded with prayer quod bills cesset, instead of si curia cognoscere velit and (3) because it did not give plaintiffs a better writ. Hortons v. Townes, 6 Leigh 47.

"The rule that 'pleas in abatement must give the plaintiff a better writ,' is by no means a rule of universal extent and application." The court in Warren v. Saunders, 27 Gratt. 259, 267.

Instance.—W sues S in assumpsit in the county of J, and sends the process to the city of R, where S resides, and it is served upon S by the sheriff of R. S files a plea in abatement stating these facts, but does not say where the cause of action arose. Held, the plea is sufficient in this case, though it does not give the plaintiff a better writ. Warren v. Saunders, 27 Gratt. 259.

Must Be Verified by Affidavit.—All pleas in abatement must be verified by affidavit. Va. Code, § 323. But it is sufficient if the affiant swears that he believes the plea to be true. Barton's Law Prac (2d Ed.) 289.

How Plea Ought to Conclude.—A plea in abatement to an attachment ought not to conclude with praying judgment if the plaintiff ought to have and maintain his attachment and action, but only that the attachment be quashed. The plea that the defendant never absconded, is a plea in abatement. Mantz v. Hendley, 2 H. & M. 308.

Should Not Be Guilty of Duplicity.—A plea in abatement that sets out two distinct and sufficient defenses either of which if true, would have necessitated a finding on the issue in favour of the defendant, is bad, for duplicity. Guarantee Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 95 Va. 480.

Instances.—Administratrix, with the will annexed, must be sued in that character; and, if sued as administratrix only, without the addition of the words, with the will annexed, she may plead in abatement. Hunt v. Wilkinson, 2 Call 50.

A scire facias against the heir upon a judgment recovered against the ancestor, need not aver proceedings against the personal representative, without effect. But if no such proceedings have been had against the personal representative, the heir must set up such defense by plea, in the nature of a plea in abatement. Rogers v. Denham's Heirs, 2 Gratt. 200.

A joint plea in abatement by two defendants, which is bad as to one, is necessarily bad as to the other. Simpson v. Edmiston, 23 W. Va. 675.

V. PLEAS IN ABATEMENT IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Prisoner Should Plead in Person.—A prisoner indicted for felony should be present in court, and should plead in person, and the record should show that fact. State v. Allen, 45 W. Va. 65, 30 S. E. Rep. 209.

How Issue Joined on Plea Should Be Tried.—Upon an indictment for a felony, the prisoner pleads in abatement that one of the grand jurors who found the indictment against him, was at the time a surveyor of a highway; and the attorney for the commonwealth takes issue upon the plea. The issue should be tried by a jury. Day v. Commonwealth, 2 Gratt. 502.

Time of Filing Plea.—After a prisoner has been tried by an examining court and remanded for further trial before the circuit court, and an indictment has been found against him, it is too late to plead in abatement that, or move to quash the indictment because, there were irregularities in his examination before the committing magistrate. Clore's Case, 8 Gratt. 606.

After a verdict against a prisoner, he cannot move in arrest of judgment, that he was not examined for the felony, of which he was indicted. The objection comes too late. Angel v. Commonwealth, 2 Va. Cas. 281.

After a verdict convicting a prisoner of a felony, a plea in arrest of judgment, that he has not been examined for the offense by a court of competent jurisdiction (alleging that the corporation court, by which he was examined, has no criminal jurisdiction), ought to be overruled; because the said plea suggests matter making no part of the record, but matter which, if true, is proper for a plea in abatement, or for a motion to quash the indictment. Commonwealth v. Cohen, 2 Va. Cas. 158.

In a suit for freedom there is a special verdict which finds that the defendant took possession of the plaintiff in the county of Prince Georges, Maryland, and has since retained her in his possession down to the institution of this suit; but it does not state that the plaintiff was detained as a slave in the county where the suit was brought. Though detention of the plaintiff where the suit is brought is necessary to give the court jurisdiction, yet as the court has general jurisdiction over the subject-matter of controversy, the objection to the exercise of jurisdiction in the particular case, for this cause, is matter in abatement of the proceeding, and should be pleaded, or brought to the notice of the court by rule or motion before the jury is sworn in the cause. Hunter v. Humphreys, 14 Gratt. 287.

The refusal of the examining court to grant the prisoner a continuance of the case, is no ground for arresting judgment in the circuit court; but, if available there at all, it should be taken advantage of by plea in abatement or motion to quash the indictment. Morris v. Commonwealth, 9 Leigh 636.

Prosecutor's Name Need Not Appear in Felony Case.—Code 1887, § 3991, does not require name of prosecutor to be written at foot of indictment for felony, but only for misdemeanor. Thompson v. Commonwealth, 88 Va. 45.

Same—Misdemeanor.—In an indictment for a trespass or misdemeanor, it is not necessary to insert the name or surname of a prosecutor at the foot of the indictment, if it appears that the indictment was found true on the evidence of a witness sent to the grand jury, either at their own request, or by direction of the court, and this whether there was a previous presentment or not. Wortham v. Commonwealth, 5 Rand. 669.

The omission to write the title or profession of the prosecutor at the foot of an information or indictment, is no ground of exception, either by motion to quash or plea in abatement. Commonwealth v. Dever, 10 Leigh 685.

Names of Witnesses Need Not Appear on Indictment.—The omission by the grand jury to write the name of the witness on whose testimony an indictment is found, at the foot thereof, is no ground for quashing the indictment. Commonwealth v. Williams, 5 Gratt. 702.

Two Pleas Admissible to Same Indictment.—A plea in abatement, that one of the grand jury is the owner of a mill, is good. Two pleas in abatement to the same presentment are admissible. Commonwealth v. Long, 2 Va. Cas. 318.

Autrefois—What Plea Must Show.—A plea of autrefois acquit, which does not set forth the court, nor the time, nor other circumstances of the trial or acquittal, nor vouch the record, nor show it, if of another court, should be rejected on motion. The attorney ought not to be required, either to plead or demur to it. Wortham v. Commonwealth, 5 Rand. 669. See monographic note, "Autrefois, Acquit and Convict." 26 Gratt. 951.

Should Be Verified by Oath.—Pleas in abatement, offered in prosecution for misdemeanor, ought to be verified by oath or affirmation. Commonwealth v. Sayers, 8 Leigh 722.

Plea in Abatement Waived by Pleading General Issue.—"By pleading the general issue alone, a defendant has always been understood to waive the right to interpose afterwards a plea in abatement. The settled doctrine, however, is that the judge may permit a pleading to be withdrawn, and another one to be substituted, whenever by so doing he does not violate any positive rule of law or of established practice. But such a discretion will rarely, if ever, be exercised in aid of an attempt to rely upon a merely dilatory or formal defense. 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. (2d Ed.) sec. 124." The court in Early v. Commonwealth, 86 Va. 924.

Plea to the Jurisdiction Should Always Be Considered.

—On the 24th of June 1867 P. was committed by a justice of the peace for examination, upon a charge of murder. The examining court commenced on the 2nd of July, and sent him on for trial before the circuit court of the county. At the October term 1867 of the circuit court, he was indicted for murder, and when he was arraigned he tendered a plea to the jurisdiction of the circuit court. The court had jurisdiction to try the prisoner. Though the plea rendered by the prisoner was informal and properly rejected by the court, yet the objection to the jurisdiction being a mere question of law, however made whether by suggestion or motion ore tenus, should be considered and decided by the court. Phillips v. Commonwealth, 19 Gratt. 485.

Instance.—A plea in abatement of an indictment for a trespass, or misdemeanor, alleging that the prosecutor is not a labourer, but a husbandman, is bad on demurrer. Haught v. Commonwealth, 2 Va. Cas. 3.

Upon a presentment for gaming, defendant pleads in abatement, that the clerk de facto, who administered the oath to the grand jury that made the presentment, was not clerk de jure, at the time. Held, the plea is naught. Hord v. Commonwealth, 4 Leigh 674.

Plea in abatement will not lie to an indictment, for that the court, if a sufficient number of jurors summoned are not in attendance, causes the required number to be returned from the county at large. Nor for that two or more of the grand jury which found the indictment, had served on another grand jury at the same term. How they voted on the indictment as members of the first grand jury, could not properly be inquired into. Nor for that the sheriff or his deputy were in the grand jury's room, when they were deliberating and examining witnesses, upon whose testimony the indictment was found. Richardson v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 1007.

A plea in abatement to an indictment which avers that the prosecuting attorney, of his own motion, without authority of law, went into the room where the grand jury were sitting, and, in the presence of the grand jury, examined certain named witnesses, upon whose testimony the indictment was found, and talked in the presence of the grand jury about the said testimony of said witnesses, and thus unlawfully conspired against the defendant to have and procure the grand jury to find the indictment, does not present cause for abating the indictment, and was properly rejected. State v. Baker, 33 W. Va. 319, 10 S. E. Rep. 639.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Executor—Receiving Confederate Money.—R dies in 1860, and by his will directs his executor to sell his land in three parcels, at public auction, upon such terms as he deems best for the interest of testator's legatees. These legatees are infants. In November 1860 the executor sells the lands on a credit of six and twelve months, taking bonds of the purchasers and retaining the title. The executor being in the army during the war, the purchasers paid the purchase money to his agent, during the years 1863 and 1864, in confederate currency. Held: The executor was guilty of a devastavit in receiving the purchase money in the then depreciated currency, and the purchasers were parties to the devastavit; and they will be required to take the lands at their value at the time of the decree, or the lands will be again sold.

2. Improvements—Rents and Profits.—Though the decree makes no allowance for improvements which the purchasers allege they have made upon the lands, yet, as the rents and profits of the lands, or the interest on the purchase money, with neither of which they are charged, would amount to more than these improvements which they claim, there is no error in the decree.

This was a suit in equity in the circuit court of Pittsylvania, instituted in December 1867, by Christopher C. Robertson and three others, who were infants, against Crispin Dickenson, the executor of Henry Robertson deceased, to have a settlement of his executorial accounts, &c. The bill was afterwards amended, and the purchasers of the land of the testator from the executor were made parties defendants. On the 11th of November 1871 there was a decree against the purchasers of the land; and they 271 thereupon applied *to this court for an appeal; which was allowed. The case is stated in the opinion.

Grattan, for the appellants.

Jones & Bouldin, for the appellees.

Christian J. delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Pittsylvania. The material facts disclosed by the record are as follows: Henry Robertson by his will, admitted to probate and record in the county court of Pittsylvania on the 15th October 1860, made the following devise: "It is also my will and desire, that my executors hereafter named shall, as soon as convenient to them after my death, divide my landed estate into three different tracts as follows: the mill tract, as per the survey from C. W. Ward; the home tract and the William Fowler tract to compose one lot; and the gold mine tract, as purchased by my brother E. O. Robertson, the other lot; and sell the said three tracts of land at public auction, upon such terms as they may deem best for the interest of my legatees." These legatees were his children, who were all infants, and who were to share equally in the proceeds of said sale. John D. Glenn and Crispin Dickenson were appointed his executors. The former declining to qualify, Dickenson alone undertook the execution of the will. He sold the land in different lots, as directed by the testator. The sale was made on the 12th November 1860, on a credit of six and twelve months; so that the bonds became due respectively on the 12th May 1861 and November 12, 1861. The aggregate amount of these land sales 272 was $5,240.61: the sale of *personal property, amounting to nearly $2,000, was made on the same day, upon a credit of six months, except for sums under five dollars.

The executor settled no account of his administration of his testator's estate until after the close of the war; and everything which he did in that direction before this suit was brought was to return an inventory and account of sales of his testator's estate, real and personal.

The debts of the testator seemed to be inconsiderable, and were all paid in 1860, 1861 and 1862. But not a dollar was ever paid over by the executor to the legatees.

In December 1867 these legatees, three of them still being infants, filed their bill in the circuit court of Pittsylvania, calling upon the executor for a settlement of his transactions as executor, and the payment of them of whatever remained of their father's estate after payment of his debts. This bill after setting out the will of the testator, the sale by the executor of the real and personal estate in 1860, and the debts due to the testator, charged that "when the executor was called on to settle his account with complainants and their proper guardians, he refused to do so, alleging that the purchase money for the real and personal estate, as well as the evidences of debt mentioned aforesaid, were not collected by him until late in the year 1864, and were collected by him until late in the year 1864, and were collected in confederate treasury notes, which became by the issue of the late war entirely worthless; and that the executor has settled before a commissioner of the county court of Pittsylvania an ex parte account since the close of the war, accounting for the proceeds of this large estate of his testator, which was sold when the currency was gold, or its equivalent, in confederate currency, which, scaled to its 273 *gold value, reduces said estate to a mere trifle." The bill further charges, "that if the executor chose to indulge the purchasers at the sales made by him, or chose to collect the same in 1864 in confederate money, he did it at his peril, and should be held accountable to them for it. They insist that being then infants, unable to maintain and demand their rights and watch their own interests, it was imperatively the duty of the executor to use his utmost diligence in securing and protecting their rights; that if he failed to collect the debts, when there was a standard currency in specie or its equivalent, he had no right to receive any other; but that it was his duty to secure said debts either by good personal security or by judgment liens, for the attainment of which the courts were all the time open and available. To this bill the executor and his sureties were made parties defendants, and the prayer of the bill was, that the executor might be compelled to settle his account before a commissioner of the court, and be required to account for the proceeds of the sales made by him in such currency as said sales were made by him.

The executor answered this bill. He admitted the sales of real and personal estate, as set forth in the bill; and then says, in justification of his course in not collecting the bonds when due, and in receiving confederate currency when so greatly depreciated:—this respondent used every effort to collect said purchase money soon after the commencement of the war as long as he remained at home, and after going into the service, he appointed an agent to collect it for him, who in 1863, and to the first of 1864, collected a portion of the same, all of which, as his said agent informs him, he has in hand now—the identical notes he collected.

This respondent was in the service 274 from *the time he entered it (in February 1862) until the surrender at Appomattox, so that he could not give the matter his personal attention; but he appointed a discreet, prudent agent to attend to it for him, and he never used for his own purposes, either for speculation or otherwise, one dollar of the money. The said agent informed this respondent that he made repeated efforts to have said money distributed among the legatees; but such was the state of things, and the courts were so occupied with matters relative to the war, that he (as he informs this respondent) never could have it done. This respondent, finding that he could not possibly attend to his duties as executor while in the service of the country, wrote to his agent to have someone appointed in his stead, and two or three times (as he informed him) it was attempted to be done, but, from the same causes it was not effected; and after the confederate authorities passed a law compelling all creditors, under heavy penalties, to take confederate money, and not until then, did this respondent agree that his agent should collect said debts in confederate money; and this respondent collected his own debts, due to him, individually, before the war in the same currency, and, so far as he is informed, the people generally did the same, and he is advised that a fiduciary is not an insurer of the currency of the country at any time, and, least of all, in times such as we have fallen on within the last few years, and that he will not be held liable if he acts in good faith and manages the affairs of the estate committed to his care in the same way that he and other prudent people manage their own private affairs. All the bonds, notes, &c., belonging to the estate, and not collected, are now in the hands of this respondent, and he is ready to make such disposition of them as the court may 275 direct, and *to settle his account in such manner as to the court may seem right. He further states, that no deeds have been made to the purchasers of said lands; and this respondent submits that, under the circumstances, he should not be held responsible for the money, and be required at the same time to convey the lands to the purchasers; and if the sales are to be set aside as to anything, that they should be set aside out and out, and a re-sale directed. One of the purchasers of the land proposed to pay this respondent for the same in confederate money when he was at home on a furlough in 1863, and on being informed that this respondent had not the papers with him, threatened to compel him to take the money under the penalties of the law, and, under the advice of counsel, it was paid to the agent aforesaid.

Upon the coming in of this answer, the court entered a decree directing one of the commissioners to take and report an account of the value of confederate money at the time the bonds for the payment of the lands sold by the executor, Crispin Dickenson, in the proceedings mentioned, respectively became due, and also the value of the currency at the time payments were made by the purchasers of said lands to the executor or his agent for said lands, and also the value of said lands in good currency at this time. The court doth further adjudge, order and decree, that said executor is properly chargeable with the bonds and other evidences of debt which came into his hands or were taken by him as executor of Henry Robertson, deceased, and filed with and referred to in commissioner Banks' report, and that said executor proceed at once to collect the same. The court being further of the opinion that the parties who purchased the lands, sold by said executor, should be 276 made parties to this suit, *doth order that the plaintiffs amend their bill and make such persons parties thereto.

Under this decree the plaintiff filed an amended bill, making the purchasers of the real estate parties defendant.

The purchasers answer the bill, admit that they paid the purchase money in confederate currency, part in 1863 and part in 1864; but claim that having fully paid the purchase money to the executor who was authorized to receive it, they are entitled to have the lands conveyed to them. Two of them claim that they have put valuable improvements upon the lands so purchased, and "claim the benefit of the improvements so made."

The report of the commissioner returned under the above decree directing him to ascertain the value of the currency at the time the payments were made, shows that the larger portion of the purchase money (all of which was due in a sound currency and before confederate currency came into circulation), was paid in the year 1864, when the rate of depreciation was $27.00 for $1.00; showing that the purchaser Tosh paid his debt of $2,685.50 due in gold, with a currency worth only $319.50, and that the purchaser Crider paid his debt of $2,404.50, due in gold, in a currency worth only $144.98, and that the purchaser Jacobs paid his debt of $512.47, in a currency worth only $18.31; or in other words, showing that the debts arising from the sale of lands of the testator devised to be sold and to be divided among his infant children, amounting to $5,602.47, were discharged by the payment of $482.79.

The commissioner also returned a report showing the present value of the three tracts of land sold by the executor. Upon the return of these reports of its commissioner, the circuit court at the November term *1871, entered its decree declaring "that the interests of the legatees of Henry Robertson under his will, all of whom were infants during the time, were improperly and grossly prejudiced and sacrificed by the executor through his agent, in receiving a currency so greatly depreciated when no necessity existed to justify the same, and also by the purchasers in paying in a greatly depreciated currency the purchase money on said lands, for which bonds were executed when there was no depreciation in the currency of the country, and before confederate currency was issued." The court then decreed that unless the purchasers should elect within sixty days, to take the land purchased by them respectively in 1860, at the then present value reported by the commissioner, the same should be sold by a commissioner appointed for that purpose; and that if they should elect to take the same at such value they should be credited by the gold value of the payments they made to the executor at the time such payments were made. It is from this decree that an appeal was allowed by this court.

The court is of opinion that there is no error in this decree, so far as it holds the purchasers as well as the executor liable to the devisees of Henry Robertson for the purchase money of the lands sold by the executor. The conduct of the executor in receiving debts contracted to be paid in gold or its equivalent, in a currency depreciated to such an extent that debts amounting to $5,602.47, well secured, were discharged by the payment of $482.79, was so grossly negligent, and such a reckless sacrifice of the interests of these infants whom his testator had committed to his care and protection both as executor and trustee, as to constitute a fraud in law, and cannot be tolerated for a moment in a court of 278 equity. His answer, upon the *most liberal interpretation of his motives and conduct, furnishes no justification or excuse. The fact that war was flagrant and business suspended, and the courts closed, may furnish an excuse for not bringing suit upon the bonds he held; but can furnish none for his receiving gold debts well secured, in confederate money almost worthless—for instance in giving up a debt of upwards of 500 dollars for 18 dollars.

It is not true, as asserted in his answer, that there was any "law compelling all creditors, under heavy penalties, to take confederate money." No such law existed. The statute in respect to a tender of confederate money applied only to a case where the contract of the parties was to be fulfilled or performed in confederate treasury notes. It had no reference, and could have none, to debts contracted for gold or its equivalent, and before the existence of confederate currency. There is and can be no justification or excuse for an executor guilty of such gross negligence and palpable fraud in law as is shown in this case.

And now the question is, did the purchasers, in failing to pay these debts when they became due in May and November 1861, and in insisting on paying them in 1863 and 1864 in an almost worthless currency, participate in the devastavit of the executor and the breach of trust committed by him, so as to make them liable to the infants, whose lands they got, but never paid for? We think they did. We do not mean to say, that in every case where an executor may be held liable, as committing a devastavit, for collecting a good debt, well secured and payable in gold, in a depreciated currency, that the party who pays the debt is necessarily liable as participating in such default or fraud of the executor. On the contrary, there may be cases where the collection of a debt in 279 a depreciated currency *would be a devastavit in the executor, and yet no liability is fixed upon the party who pays the debt. He, the debtor, does not know, and is not, generally, bound to inquire, what may be the necessities of the estate represented by the executor. For aught he knows, the debt which he pays may pay a debt due from the estate, or pay a legacy which a legatee may be willing to receive in a depreciated currency. But this is not the case before us. Here is not the case simply of the collection of a debt due to the testator and collected by the executor, but the dealing is directly between the executor and these defendants as seller and purchaser, vendor and vendee.

These defendants are in default in not paying the bonds when they became due in the currency which they agreed to pay, and in paying to the agent of the executor a worthless currency for the land of these infants, for which they agreed to pay gold. In other words, they hold the lands of these infants, for which they have not paid one-tenth of their value. They have taken in and cancelled their bonds, amounting to upwards of $5,000, by paying to the executor something over $400. Suppose the executor had sold these bonds—for instance, suppose he had sold Jacobs' bond of $500 for $18, would not both seller and buyer have been held liable for so gross and palpable a fraud? Pinchard v. Woods, 8 Gratt. 140; Jones' ex'or v. Clarke, 25 Gratt. 642. Practically this was just what was done. Jacobs paid but $18 for his obligation of $500; and both he and the executor must be held liable for the gross fraud upon the rights of these infants, in which both participated.

We are therefore of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court directing a sale of the land, unless the 280 purchasers elect to pay for the *same the value of the same ascertained by the commissioner; this court being of opinion that the facts proved are such as clearly to charge the executor with a devastavit and breach of trust, and the purchasers with participation in and responsibility for the same.

The court is further of opinion that there is no error in the decree of said circuit court, as assigned in the petition of appeal, that the court failed to allow the purchasers for the improvements put on the land.

Certainly there is no error to the prejudice of the appellants. No interest is charged against the appellants in these debts due since November 1861, and they are not required to account for rents and profits. These (interest and rents) would more than overbalance all the claims asserted for improvements by the appellants.

It is manifest that upon a settlement of accounts charging the purchasers with the interest or the rents and profits since November 1861, and crediting them with all the improvements they claim, they would be indebted to the appellees in a much larger amount than that decreed against them. If they elect to hold as purchasers, then they would be charged with interest. If they give up the purchase, they should be chargeable with rents and profits, which, in either case, would overbalance the improvements claimed.

Upon the whole case we are of opinion to affirm the decree of the circuit court.

Decree affirmed.

281 *Erwin & Wife v. Nichols & al.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

Wills—Construction.—A testator having in term provided for an equal division of his personal estate among his three children, held, upon a consideration of the whole will, that he did not intend that certain land he gives to one of the children should be charged to him in the division of the personal estate.

Abel B. Nichols, of the county of Bedford, died in February 1868. He was a widower, and left three children, James L., George A. and Sally E., then married to Holmes Erwin. He left a will, wholly written by himself, which was duly admitted to probate in the county court of Bedford. So much of the paper as bears upon the only question in this case is as follows:

* * * * * Desiring to make some certain disposal of property which I own, not that I desire to discriminate among my children, but to equalize previous advancements, and perhaps make some donations that without a will would not be made. But owing to the late war and the present distracted state of the country cash donations cannot be made with much certainty, especially with the present inflated state of the currency. Now in setting forth the advancements made my children heretofore I shall not confine myself to any bill of items, for a great deal of money and property of various kinds have not been charges at all on my books. So I shall endeavor to state an account approximating as 282 near as I think *right and proper in all cases; and I trust the plan will be satisfactory to all parties interested; and as my decision will be final and not in any case to be altered, I shall require a new set of books to be opened, for at all times for all persons interested to examine the same. * * * * *

Now, in the first place, I shall designate the several amounts to be charged to the several legatees, viz: Item 1st. To charge my oldest son, James L. Nichols, for various sums advanced him, as also several thousand dollars advanced to his different firms or partnerships, to-wit: Nichols, Moulton & Co., the partner was George Johnston, formerly in or near Alexandria, Va., the other firm of Nichols & Moulton, now or recently of Baltimore, Md., together with various land warrants—in all, I have estimated at twenty thousand dollars ($20,000), which sum is much under the actual amounts, exclusive of interest. I charge my second —, Geo. A. Nichols, with the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000), which will include all advances up to the date of my demise, such as stock, household and kitchen furniture, given him at his removal to the Harriss place, but no real estate has been given off, and no compensation for services will be allowed him at my death, except such as I shall annually devise for his services, &c. So my intention is, that there shall be no old back accounts to adjust after my demise. I also charge my daughter, Sally E. Nichols, with the sum of five thousand dollars for advances made to her and her husband, Holmes Erwin, since their marriage. I further desire my daughter Sally Erwin to have the benefit and rents of my property in Lynchburg—say one-half of the two stores on Main street, one of which is at present occupied by Geo. M. Rucker, and the other by 283 Pain & Brother, as a book store, also the house occupied by Button as a printing and binding office, the stable, yard, &c. My wish is that this property shall belong to my daughter Sally during her life, and then to the heirs of her body, to wit: her daughter Mary, and any other heir or heirs of her body, the one-half of this property I estimate at fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000), which is designed to make her portion equal to her brother's, James L. Nichols. I desire my eldest son, James L. Nichols, to have the benefit and entire profits of my Harriss plantation, as also two parcels of land adjoining, bought of Johnson & Terry, and adjoining the main road from Little Otter to Liberty, as also a piece of twenty-seven acres or thereabout, bought of Webb, all in wood, and adjoining John F. Sales' and Thos. Leftwitch's land. Should my said son James L. Nichols, die without legal issue, then at his death, the land aforesaid is to revert back, and the profits from the date of his death, to the other children of Geo. A. Nichols and Sally E. Nichols. I design, however, a new line to be run, cutting off a small portion of the Harriss and other lands and adding the same to the home or Webb tract—to commence &c. * * It is my wish that this land so cut off, shall forever belong to the home or Webb tract. I also give and bequeath to my second son, George A.

Nichols, the use, profits and benefit of the home or Webb tract of land, as also the small piece, near Otter, on the east side of the main road. Also a small piece, bought of Watson, and a small piece of wood land, bought from William A. Hardy, to have and to hold, and take the benefit and profits of the same during his life, and then to the heirs of his body forever. My object and intention is, that no landed property shall be put in market and sold during the 284 life of my *children, but they are not restricted in regard to the personal effects of my estate, which are to be equally divided between the three legatees afore specified. I think the personal effects, good bonds, &c. will amount to perhaps over fifty thousand dollars, but great doubt exists in regard to their collection, as the stay law, bankrupt law, and the apparent general disposition to repudiate debts, all have a tendency to lessen the chances of realizing. I desire the horse power, mill, cutting box, cider mill, drill, reaper and mower, together with the thresher, not to be sold, or any inventory taken of them, but they are to be considered as a part of the freehold, and as belonging to my son George A. Nichols' tract. The real estate devised, or the profits, to George and Sally, I think will equalize their portions with James L. Nichols' previous advancements. I regard James L. Nichols' transfer of the lands heretofore mentioned, rather in excess of his proper portion; still I am unwilling to hamper him with debt. But I shall especially enjoin it on him that no wood is to be sold off from the estate, or timber of any kind; and I also enjoin it on George not to cut off from the Webb tract any wood or timber, except what the place absolutely requires.

The beneficiaries under the will having differed as to its proper construction, Erwin and wife instituted their suit in the circuit court of Bedford county against James L. and George A. Nichols, to have the construction settled. The sole question was, whether the real estate devised to the different children was to be estimated in making the division among them: or whether the equal division contemplated by the will had reference solely to the personal estate.

The cause came on to be heard on the 7th of February 1872, when the court made 285 the following decree: *It is the opinion of the court that one of the leading intents of the testator, Abel B. Nichols, in making the will in the bill mentioned, was to define the amounts of the advancements theretofore made by him to each of his children, and to adjust the inequalities in the amounts of the same by bequests or devises in his will, so as to make them all equal, or to "approximate equality as near as he thought right and proper," so that after his death there should be no accounts of advancements, or of any other kind (to use his own language 'no old book accounts'), to be charged to or to be settled and adjusted between his legatees. And the court is further of opinion, and doth decide, that by the devise to Mrs. Erwin of a life estate in the property in Lynchburg (mentioned in said will), and to George A. Nichols of a life estate in the 'Home or Webb' tract of land, likewise mentioned in said will, with remainder in fee to their issue respectively, the said testator intended to make them equal with the said James L. Nichols in respect to the advancements previously made by him to his children, or to make them approximate equality as near as he thought right and proper, and by the said devise in his estimation did make them all equal, or as nearly equal, as he thought right and proper, and chose to do; and that although he thought the devise to the said James L. Nichols of a life estate in the 'Harris' tract of land, with a contingent remainder over to the issue of Mrs. Erwin and George A. Nichols, was somewhat in excess of his share of his estate, he did not intend that the said James L. should account for that excess; and that, according to the true construction of the said will (whether actual equality among his children has been attained or not), by this 'plan' or scheme of the testator, 286 yet that such was his will and *final disposition, and all who claim under his will must abide by it; and therefore there is to be no account taken of the advancements by the testator in his lifetime to his children, and the whole of his personal estate, after paying the debts of the testator and costs of administration, and satisfying the specific legacies given by the said will, is to be equally divided between the female plaintiff and the defendants. And the court doth further adjudge, order and decree, that the said executors do administer and distribute the estate of their testator in conformity with this decree upon the principles above declared. And, thereupon, Erwin and wife applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Kean and Thurman, for the appellants.

Jones & Bouldin and Burks, for the appellees.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The testator, A. B. Nichols, left three children, James L., George A., and Sally E., who had intermarried with Holmes Erwin, to whom he had made unequal advancements, which he ascertains and determines by his will. The advancements to James he puts at $20,000; to George, at $10,000; and to Sally, at $5,000. And then devises to Sally Erwin real estate in Lynchburg for life, remainder in fee to her daughter Mary and to any other heirs of her body, which he values at $15,000. This devise he declares "is designed to make her portion equal to her brother's, James L. Nichols." He then gives to his eldest son, James, the benefit and entire profits of his Harris plantation and other lands mentioned; and provides, that should he die without legal issue (he was then thirty-eight years of age, and unmarried), the lands given to him

287 should *go to the children of George and Sally. He then gives to his son

George the use, profits and benefit of the home or Webb tract of land, and other lands mentioned, "to have and to hold, and take the benefit of the profits of the same during his life, and then to the heirs of his body forever." He says his object and intention is, that no landed property shall be put in market and sold during the life of his children; but they are not restricted in regard to the personal effects of his estate, which he says are to be equally divided between his three legatees. After putting his estimate upon the personal effects, good bonds, &c., which he says perhaps may amount to over fifty thousand dollars, but about which he thinks there is great doubt, from causes which he assigns; and after designating certain articles of property which are to be considered as part of the freehold and as belonging to his son George's tract, he says: "The real estate devised, or the profits, to George and Sally, I think will equalize their portions with James L. Nichols' previous advancements." And then immediately adds: "I regard James L. Nichols' transfer of the lands heretofore mentioned rather in excess of his proper proportion; still I am unwilling to hamper him with debt."

Upon the case thus made by the record, we have to determine whether an account of the advancements, and of the bequests and devises hereinbefore recited, shall be brought into the distribution of the personal estate. And that is the only question.

By the express terms of the will, the devise to Sally Erwin was designed to make her portion equal to her brother's, James L. Nichols. And the testator also declares that the devises he made to George and

Sally he thinks will equalize their 288 portions with James L. *Nichols' previous advancements. The equalization of the advancements was therefore effected by the testator himself in the disposition he made of the real estate, and they were not left open, to be equalized out of the personal estate, or to be charged to account.

It only remains therefore to inquire: Is James L. Nichols chargeable, in the distribution of the personal estate, with the real estate devised to him for life, with contingent remainder in fee to the children of George Nichols and Sally Erwin, as an offset against his distributive share of the personal estate? Was such the intention of the testator? He says expressly, that the personal estate shall be equally divided between his three legatees. His language is peculiar. He says "the personal effects of my estate, which are to be equally divided between the three legatees afore specified." Did he mean to say that there should be an equal division of the personal effects of his estate between his three legatees, by adding thereto the value of the interest in his real estate which he had given to his son James, and charging him therewith? If he had so intended, he could easily have said it. But he did not. If he had, what account was to be taken of the valuable interest in the same real estate which he had contingently devised to the children of George and Sally? Was no account to be taken of that? He does not expressly embrace the said real estate in the division of the personal estate, but directs an equal division of the latter, without any qualifying words. Nor can his intention to embrace it be implied by what is expressed, but rather the contrary, for, in the same paragraph, he acknowledges the inequality, but declines to change it. He says: "I regard James L. Nichols transfer of the lands, heretofore mentioned, rather in excess of his proper (equal) portion (he will *not change it), "still I am unwilling (he says) to hamper him with debt." He directs an equal division of his personal estate between his three legatees, with the fact present to his mind, that the disposition he had made of his real estate in favor of his son James was rather in excess of an equal share to him, but adheres to an equal division of the personal estate notwithstanding, and assigns as a reason, that he is not willing "to hamper him with debt." So far from an implication arising from the language of the will, that whilst the testator directs his personal estate shall be equally divided between his three legatees, he did not mean that, but meant that James should not get an equal share of the personal estate, but should be charged with the value of the interest given to him in the real estate, and that his division of the personal estate should be less than an equal share by the value of his interest, or excess of equality in the real estate, we think the contrary is clearly implied.

The testator no where applies the same language of equality to the division of his estate generally, that he applies to the division of his personal estate. It does not seem to have been his aim to conform to exact equality in the division of his estate. In regard to the charges for advancements to his children, to which he seems to have special but not exclusive reference, he says I shall endeavor to approximate (not equality, but) as near as I think right and proper in all cases, and I trust it will be satisfactory to all parties interested, as my decision is final, and cannot be altered." James was his eldest child, and had been unfortunate in business. He doubtless considered his losses, and that he would get much less of his estate at his death than his brother and sister; and that he had given to him only a right to the rents and profits of the land *during his life, and that it would then go, in the event of his dying without issue, which he may have thought to be probable, to George and Sallie's children, and that after all the inequality would be inconsiderable. And it was one of his objects in making a will, that he might make some donations, which he could not make without a will. We regard the declaration made in a previous clause of the will to the effect, that no moneys shall be required to be paid over to legatees until their claims are equalized, relied upon by appellant's counsel, as having reference to the equalization of the purchases which they might make at the sales, and consequently not at all militating against the foregoing construction given to other clauses of the will. We think there is no error in the decree, and are of opinion to affirm it with costs.

Decree affirmed.

291 *Sands v. Lynham, Escheator.

[21 Am. Rep. 348]

I. Allens — Real Estate of — Escheat.—H. of foreign birth, died in 1807, seized and possessed of real estate in R. intestate and without any known heirs. The real estate of which he died seized vested in possession in the state without office found or other proceedings at law.

II. Same — Personal Representative of — Judgment against.—After the death of H. G sued his curator S for a large debt, alleged to be due from H. and there was a judgment by default. G then sued S, the curator, in equity, to subject the real estate of which H died seized for the payment of the judgment. There was a decree for a sale, and a sale in pursuance of the decree, when J became the purchaser of a part of the property. Held:

1. Same—Same—Same—Decree for Sale—Partial.

The state not having been a party to the suit, the decree and sale are a nullity as to her, and gave J no title to the property purchased by him.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same—Rights of Bona Fide Purchaser.

If J was a bona fide purchaser, he is entitled to be substituted to the rights of the creditor G; and upon showing that the claim of G is just, to have the real estate subjected to its payment.

III. Same—Real Estate of — Escheat—Injunction.—After the death of H, an inquisition of escheat was executed in 1808; and the jury, after finding the death of H without known heirs seized of the real estate, stated that certain parties were in possession, claiming under said sale. The escheator returned the inquisition in June 1809, when the property was advertised as escheated. J then filed his petition in the proper court, stating he held the property under his purchase, and asking for an injunction. The escheator and register were made parties; but before the escheator answered, the court made a decree perpetuating the injunction. The escheator then filed a bill to review the decree. Held:

1. Same—Same—Same—Same—Error.—It was error to make a decree passing upon the rights of the purchaser of the property, and perpetuating the injunction, *without the answer of the escheator. Code of 1860, ch. 113, § 8.

292 2. Same—Same—Same—Same—Proceedings by Escheator.

As the title of the state does not depend upon the inquisition, it cannot be affected by any errors or irregularities in the proceedings of the escheator.

3. Same—Same—Same—Same.*—The decree of the *Bill of Review—Petition for a Rehearing.—The principal case is cited in Kendrick v. Whitney, 28 Gratt. 655; Sturm v. Fleming, 22 W. Va. 413. See also, Laidley v. Merrifield, 7 Leigh 346; Mettert v. Hagan, 8 Gratt. 231; 3 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 592.

court was a decree by default; and the bill of review by the escheator, may be treated as a petition for a rehearing of the decree.

4. ~~Same—Same—Same—Same—Bill of Review.~~—But it was a proper case for a bill of review.

Solomon Haunstein, of foreign birth, died seized of an estate of inheritance in six houses and lots in the city of Richmond. He was unmarried and died intestate; and his estate was committed to Richard D. Sanxay, as curator. In March 1867 Wm. Gleason, as assignee of John W. Thompson, recovered a judgment by default against Sanxay as curator of Haunstein's estate, for $7,000, with interest from April 1st, 1861; and in April in a suit brought by Gleason against Sanxay as curator, in the circuit court of Henrico, in which the bill and answer were presented at the same time, and the cause docketed by consent, the court made a decree appointing Sanxay a commissioner to sell the real estate of Haunstein, to receive the purchase money, and convey the property to the purchaser; and out of the proceeds of the sale pay off the judgment recovered by Gleason. A copy of the decree and of the judgment are the only parts of the record in that case which have been filed in this; but there are two deeds, one from Sanxay as commissioner, to Johnson H. Sands, as the purchaser of two of the lots of Haunstein, and the other from Mary J. Wilkinson, who had been a purchaser at the sale by Sanxay, to Sands of the lot so purchased by her.

In May 1868 an inquisition of escheat was held by Samuel M. Page, escheator of the city of Richmond, *when the jury found Haunstein did die seized of an estate of inheritance in the said six lots; that he died intestate and without heirs, and that there was no person known to the jury to be entitled to said lots; but that they had been by a decree of the circuit court of the county of Henrico, sold to satisfy an office judgment obtained against the estate of Haunstein since his death; and that there were then at the time of the said inquisition certain parties in possession of said lots claiming them under said sale.

Page did not return his certificate of said inquisition to the register of the land office until June 1869; and the register then advertised the property as escheated.

On the 10th of July 1869, Johnson H. Sands filed his petition in the circuit court of the city of Richmond, in which he set up his claim to the three of the Haunstein lots which he had purchased as before stated; he pointed to certain irregularities in the proceedings to escheat the property, and he insisted that the jury having found the sale of the property under a decree of the court, and the actual possession by the purchasers at that sale, the inquisition was not in favor of the right of the commonwealth to the said lots. And he prayed that Page might be made a party defendant to his petition and required to answer the same; and that the register of the land office might be made a party and enjoined from advertising the property as escheated; that the court would declare the land not

ESCHEAT.

I. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO.

In General.—Where the property of a British subject was sold during the Revolutionary War, by his attorneys in this country, without deed, before the act of October 1779, relative to escheats of British property, the sale was valid, notwithstanding the purchase money was not paid, and an escheat had been taken after the sale, but before the passing of the act. King v. Hanson, 4 Call 259.

A testator devised his real estate in Virginia to his executors to be sold by them, and gave the rents and profits of said lands, which might accrue before the sale, to his alien sisters, subject to the payment of his just debts and of certain legacies to his executors. Held, that the title of the alien sisters was good against the commonwealth claiming the money for which the lands were sold; the testator having died without any lawful heirs, and his personal estate being sufficient to pay his debts. Commonwealth v. Martin, 5 Munf. 117.

Trust Estates.—Land was purchased by an alien, but the conveyance was made to a citizen, upon an express trust that he should hold the same for the benefit of the alien and his heirs. Held, that the interest in such trust estate belongs to the commonwealth. Hubbard v. Goodwin, 3 Leigh 492.

Where an agent for a company of British merchants, in the year 1771, purchased, on their behalf, a tract of land in Virginia, for a sum payable on demand, and received possession thereof for their use, and a credit for the money was entered in their books, the equitable title to, and possession of such land was thereby completely vested in the company, and escheated to the commonwealth, under the act of escheats of 1779, subject, however, to the payment of so much only of the purchase money remaining unpaid as did not exceed the sum for which the land was sold by the escheator, the British company being still liable for the balance of said purchase money. Day v. Murdoch, 1 Munf. 460.

II. ENFORCEMENT.

Parties.—An amicus curiæ cannot move to quash an inquisition of escheat, unless he has an interest himself, or represents somebody who has. Dunlop v. Commonwealth, 2 Call 284.

Where an alien possessed of real estate died intestate without any known heirs, a sale of such real estate, to satisfy a debt against the alien, in a suit to which the state was not made a party, cannot affect the title of the state. Sands v. Lynham, 27 Gratt. 291, 21 Am. Rep. 348.

Irregularities.—As the title of the state does not depend upon the inquisition, it cannot be affected by any errors or irregularities of the escheator. Sands v. Lynham, 27 Gratt. 291, 21 Am. Rep. 348.

Number of Jury.—Upon an inquest of office respecting property escheated, prior to the Act of 1794, the jury might have been composed of twelve jurors or of a greater or smaller number. See Va. Code 1887, § 2376; Bennet v. Commonwealth, 2 Wash. 154.

Profits before Escheat.—Where land, which an alien had purchased and conveyed to a citizen to hold in trust for himself and his heirs, escheats to the commonwealth, equity will not give the commonwealth the profits thereof, which accrued before the escheated to the commonwealth, and for general relief. The injunction was granted.

A copy of the order of injunction having been served on Page and the register, and Page not having appeared or made any defense, on the 17th of July, the court took up the case, and being of opinion that 294 *the verdict of the jury of inquisition shows upon its face, that the real estate mentioned therein was not liable to be escheated, and that the proceedings of the defendants under said verdict were wholly irregular and illegal, made a decree perpetuating the injunction.

In January 1870, Page, the escheator, by leave of the court, filed his bill to review the decree of the 17th of July 1869. He stated his excuse for not having filed his answer in the short time before the decree was made. He insists that the proceedings on the inquisition were regular, that the petitioner had no title to the property, and it was error to proceed to decree upon the petition until the escheator had filed his answer; as was expressly provided by the statute. Code ch. 113, § 8.

Sands demurred to the bill, and also answered; but the court overruled the demurrer, and set aside the decree of July 17th, 1869, on the last ground stated in the bill of review. And John A. Lynham having succeeded Page as escheator, he was substituted as defendant and directed to file his answer.

Lynham in his answer insisted that the matters stated in the petition were insufficient in law and equity to entitle the plaintiff to the relief he sought, or any other relief in the premises against the commonwealth or her officer or agents: that the finding of the jury as to the sale of the lots was wholly irrelevant to the proper finding in said inquisition, &c., &c.

The cause came on to be heard on the 16th of June 1874, when the court made a decree dissolving the injunction and dismissing the petition with costs. And thereupon Sands applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

295 *Young and Meredith, for the appellant.

The Attorney General, for the appellee.

Staples J. delivered the opinion of the court.

The inquisition finds that Solomon Haunstein died seized of an estate of inheritance in the lots in controversy; that he died intestate and without heirs, and that there is no person known to the jurors to be entitled to the same; but that said lots have been sold by a decree of the circuit court of Henrico county to satisfy an office judgment obtained against the estate of Solomon Haunstein since his death, and that there are now certain parties in possession of said lots claiming under said decree.

It is proper further to state, though it is not part of the inquisition, that the decree referred to, was rendered on the 29th April 1867, in a suit brought, or purporting to have been brought, by William Gleason, assignee of John W. Thompson, against decree executing the deed of trust for the benefit of the state. Hubbard v. Goodwin, 8 Leigh 492.

III. EVIDENCE.

In escheat proceedings between the heirs of the alien and the commonwealth, where both parties claim under the same person, and the inquisition refers to a deed to the alien for the land, recorded in a certain county, a copy of said deed is evidence, although it was not recorded upon proper proof. Flott v. Commonwealth, 12 Gratt. 564.

Presumption.—Where alienage has once been established, it is presumed to continue. Hosenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483.

IV. EFFECT OF ESCHEAT PROCEEDINGS—WHEN TITLE OF STATE VESTS.

General Rule.—Where an intestate of foreign birth dies seized and possessed of real estate and without heirs, the property vests eo instante in the state, and a judgment for debt and sale thereunder to which the state was not a party is a nullity, and the purchaser acquires no title. Sands v. Lynham, 27 Gratt. 291, 21 Am. Rep. 348.

Where Parties Are in Possession.—Inquisition of escheat for want of heirs vests possession in the commonwealth immediately, if the possession be vacant, but not otherwise; for if any one have adversary possession of the escheated land at the time of the office found, entry or seizure by the officers of the commonwealth is necessary to give it possession. And even when the possession is vacant at the time of the office found, the inquisition, in order to have the effect per se of vesting the possession in the commonwealth, must be duly returned to the proper courts, according to the statute. 1 Rev. Code, ch. 82, § 2. See Va. Code 1887, § 2968; Commonwealth v. Hite, 6 Leigh 588, 29 Am. Dec. 226.

Prior Sale.—The finding of an inquest of escheat in favor of the commonwealth will not take away the title of a purchaser claiming by a deed of bargain and sale, legally executed and recorded before the inquest was sealed, though without the knowledge of the bargainee till afterwards. Commonwealth v. Selden, 5 Munf. 160. See also, King v. Hanson, 4 Call 269.

V. DISPOSITION OF ESCHEATED PROPERTY.

Recovery by Heirs.—The monstrant must show good title in himself in order to entitle him to a judgment of amoveas manus against the commonwealth. French v. Commonwealth, 5 Leigh 512, 27 Am. Dec. 613.

In a monstrans de droit to an inquisition of escheat prosecuted under 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 82, § 7, the monstrant is plaintiff. French v. Commonwealth, 5 Leigh 512, 27 Am. Dec. 613.

Rights of Creditors.—Upon a petition under 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 82, § 14, by the creditor of a person whose lands have been escheated, where judgment has been rendered for the whole amount of the demand, when the whole is not proved to be due, and it is uncertain to what part the proof extends, an appellate court will reverse the judgment and dismiss the petition. Watson v. Lyle, 4 Leigh 236.

Upon such petition, the escheator, who is defendant, has the same right to plead the statute of limitations in bar of the petition, that a representative

Richard D. Sanxay, curator of the estate of Solomon Haunstein. No copy of the bill, or of any exhibit in the record of that suit is filed in this. It does not appear that any order of publication was ever made in the cause, or that there was any party defendant other than Sanxay the curator. It would seem that the bill and answer were filed on the same day, and on that day the cause was brought on for a hearing by consent, and a decree rendered for a sale of the lots now in controversy.

Upon this state of facts we are to determine what are the rights of the purchasers under that decree. In order to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion upon that point, it becomes necessary to inquire what was the precise status of the real estate of Sol-

296 omon Haunstein *upon his dying intestate and without heirs. Was the title thereto immediately vested in the commonwealth, or was an inquest necessary to effect that object.

It is well settled that an alien may take lands by grant. But while he has capacity to take, he has none to hold, and the lands may at once be seized to the use of the state. But until they are so seized, the alien has complete dominion over them, and his title cannot be divested except upon office found.

And so if lands are devised to an alien, he acquires a complete though a defeasible title by virtue of the devise; and this title can only be taken away by an inquest of office, which must be perfected by entry or seizure where the possession is not vacant.

In these cases, and there may be others, it seems that the inquisition is necessary, to vest a complete and perfect title in the state.

An alien cannot, however, take by descent, because the law will never cast the freehold upon one who is incapable of holding, and as the freehold can never be kept in abeyance for an instant, in such cases it vests immediately in the state without inquest of office.

For the same reason, if an alien dies intestate, or a citizen dies without inheritable blood, his lands belong to the state. They rest immediately without office found. They sink back into their original condition of common property for the general benefit. The rule on this subject is thus laid down by Chancellor Kent in 4 Vol. Com., page 423: "It is a general principle in the American law, and which I presume is everywhere declared and asserted, that when the title to land fails from a defect of heirs, it necessarily reverts to the people, as forming the common stock to which the whole community is entitled. Whenever 297 *the owner dies intestate, without leaving any inheritable blood, or if the relatives he leaves are aliens, there is a failure of competent heirs, and the land vests immediately in the state by operation of law. No inquest of office is necessary in such case.

In Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 New Hamp. R. 475, a well considered case, the following propositions are laid down.

"If an alien purchase lands and die, the lands instantly vest by escheat in the state, without any inquest of office. But while the alien lives, the lands cannot vest in the state without office found.

"In this state (New Hampshire) the lands of which a citizen dies seized, without heirs, revert in all cases to the state; provided he dies intestate. Upon principle, it would seem that lands must in such a case vest immediately in the state without any inquest of office, as they do in England in the crown when the king's tenant dies without heirs.

"There might be cases in which an inquest of office might be expedient, as where one person is found in possession, claiming as heir or otherwise; but an inquest of office is in no such case essential to vest the title in the state."

In support of these positions numerous other authorities might be quoted; but a simple reference to the cases is all that is necessary. Mooers v. White, 6 John. Ch. R. 360; Jackson v. Beach, 1 John. Cases 399; Stevenson and wife v. Dunlap's heirs, 7 Monr. R. 134; Fry v. Tucker, 2 Dana R. 38; Johnson v. Hart, 3 John. Cases 322; Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Sid. R. 193; Stokes v. Dawes, 4 Mason R. 268; Fairfax's devisee v. Hunter's lessee, 7 Cranch R. 663; O'Hanlin v. Den, 1 Spencer's R. 31; White v. White, 2 Metc. (Ken.) R. 185; Hinkle's lessee v. Shadden, 2 Swan's R. 46.

298 *The case of Commonwealth v. Hite, 6 Leigh 588, is not in conflict of the debtor would have to plead the statute in bar of an action. Watson v. Lyle, 4 Leigh 286.

Grant of Escheated Lands by Commonwealth.—The commonwealth, under the existing laws, cannot grant escheated lands, without a previous inquest of office, and then not upon entries and surveys, as in the case of waste and unappropriated lands, but upon sales by the escheator. Alexander v. Greenup, 1 Munf. 134, 4 Am. Dec. 541.

VI. STATUTORY AND TREATY PROVISIONS.

Construction.—The statute, 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 86, § 40, declaring entries or locations of lands that have been settled for thirty years prior to the entry or location, etc., invalid, and releasing any title which the commonwealth may be supposed to have thereto, has no application to escheated lands. (It is otherwise by the present statute. See Va. Code 1887, § 2374.) French v. Commonwealth, 5 Leigh 512, 27 Am. Dec. 618.

Where a citizen of Switzerland, who had removed thence to Virginia without denationalizing himself, leaves real estate in Virginia, his heirs, citizens of Switzerland, have by the treaty between the United States and the Swiss Confederation of the 25th of November 1850, the absolute right to sell said property, and to withdraw and export the proceeds thereof within such time as the laws of Virginia permit. Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, reversing Hauensteins v. Lynham, 28 Gratt. 62.

What Law Governs.—The law which was in force at the time of the descent governs with reference to the capacity to take and hold real property. Hauensteins v. Lynham, 28 Gratt. 62.

with these authorities. That was an information for intrusion on land of the commonwealth. Being in the nature of an action of trespass quare clausam fregit, it will not be maintained except in the case of actual possession. And the chief, if not the only question, was, whether the effect of an inquisition of office was to vest the possession in the state. It was held by this court, that when the possession of escheated lands is vacant at the time of office found, the effect of that proceeding is at once to vest the state with possession. If the possession is not vacant, it does not become so vested, and an entry or seizure by the state is essential in order to maintain an information for intrusion. This was the sole point decided by the court. It is very true that some expressions fell from Judge Tucker to the effect that the crown can only take by matter of record. All of which is strictly accurate as applied to an alien claiming by grant or by devise. He is in by title, having the freehold, which can only be divested by some act in the nature of a judicial proceeding: Because the king may not enter upon or seize any man's possession upon bare surmises, without the intervention of a jury.

But as, according to the common law, lands cannot be in abeyance or without an owner even for a single minute, it follows necessarily that upon the death of the person last seized, without heirs capable of inheriting, the title must immediately vest in the state without office found.

The doctrine of escheat is originally derived from the old feudal law. An inquisition does not constitute an escheat. It is simply the means by which the state furnishes authentic record evidence of her title.

The word escheat is derived from the French, and properly *signifies the falling of the lands by accident to the lord of whom they are holden, in which case the fee is said to be escheated. It is a species of reversion by which, upon the death of the tenant without heirs, the lord becomes entitled to the estate. While at common law a writ of escheat was necessary to vest the estate in the lord, when the king became entitled upon the death of the tenant without heirs capable of inheriting, no office was necessary; but he might enter and seize without judicial proceeding, because in such cases the freehold was cast upon him by law in actual possession.

In this country the doctrine of escheat rests upon the broad principle, that when the title to land fails from defect of heirs, or when from any cause there ceases to be an individual proprietor of the land, it reverts back to the community. 1 Lomax's Digest 774, 777; 3 Green's Cruise on Real and Per. Property 213. In such cases, the title being in the state upon the death of the owner, no inquest of office is necessary.

If the possession be vacant at the death of the owner, both title and possession are at once transferred to the state. If, on the contrary, the land be held by adversary possession, the state must enter by her officers. Such an entry may perhaps be necessary to enable the state to make a valid grant of the land, or to maintain an information for intrusion; but it is not essential to the title, any farther than possession is to be considered an element of title.

The state, of course, takes the lands subject to any liens created by the owner, and also to any valid debts contracted by him. But so does the heir, if there is one. This title is none the less complete, because perchance the land may be taken to satisfy the claims of creditors.

300 *In the case before us, upon the death of Solomon Haunstein intestate, without heirs, his real estate became vested eo instanti in the state; the possession being vacant, was also transferred along with the title. Whoever entered into the possession, did so in subordination to her title. When therefore the jury of inquest found that certain persons were in possession of the lots at the time of the inquisition, which was more than two years after the death of the owner, they found an immaterial fact, which did not affect the title previously acquired by the state.

It seems, however, that the appellant was one of the persons in possession, claiming title to the property under the decree of the circuit court of Henrico county. And it is insisted that this decree, having been rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, is conclusive of every question decided by it until reversed by some proper proceeding instituted in the court which pronounced it.

No one will maintain that the decision of a court, having jurisdiction of the subject matter in a case before it, can be collaterally drawn in question for any errors therein, or in the proceedings which led thereto. But it is equally beyond controversy, that a decree, however regular in its forms, only binds parties and privies: It can not affect the title of a person not before the court. The exceptions to this rule are very few, and have nothing to do with the matter in controversy. It may be that a purchaser at a judicial sale is not affected by errors in the proceedings which led to the decree. He certainly is affected by a want of proper parties before the court. In this state he takes all the risks of the title. He is bound at his peril to see to it that the persons having title to the property are parties to the suit. Without this, no

301 act of the *court can give him a valid title. The curator of Solomon Haunstein's estate was the only party defendant to the suit in which the decree of sale was rendered. He had nothing to do with the real estate; not the shadow of a title to, or interest in it. If the appellant acquired title by his purchase, whose title did he acquire? Certainly not Solomon Haunstein's, as all his interest terminated with his death; not that of any heirs, as there were none in existence. The title of the state? It is not pretended. Her rights could not be affected by any orders or decrees in a suit to which she was not a party. If authority were needed to sustain so plain a proposition, it may be found in the case of Hudgin v. Hudgin's ex'or et als., 6 Gratt. 320. The decision of this court in that case is conclusive upon this branch of the present case.

It is very questionable, to say the least, whether the general statutes, making real estate assets for the payment of debts, and authorizing suits in equity for the sale and administration of the same, apply to escheated lands. The design of those statutes was to give to creditors a remedy against heirs and devisees in the event of a deficiency of personal estate; and all the provisions have reference to lands which have been devised by will, or have descended upon heirs in cases of intestacy.

In cases of escheated lands, the 27th section of chapter 113, Code of 1860, prescribes the mode by which the creditor may enforce his demand against the realty, where there is no personalty. It is very true that this section only provides for those cases in which there has been an actual inquest of office. It has been argued, that the creditor may be delayed for years, if he is compelled to await an inquisition before upon an examination of the various provisions in regard to escheats, that but little difficulty is likely to occur in this respect. Each commissioner of the revenue is required annually to furnish a list of lands in his district of which any person shall have died seized of an estate of inheritance, intestate and without any known heir. On receiving such list, or upon information from any person in writing and under oath, the escheator is required at once to hold inquest to determine whether the lands have escheated to the commonwealth. Code of 1860, chap. 113, sections 3 and 4. These provisions afford to the creditor the fullest means of enforcing prompt action on the part of the state in the assertion of his claim; while the 27th section gives to him adequate remedies for the recovery of his demand. Any small delay that may occur by this course bears no sort of comparison to the mischiefs which will result from the establishment of a contrary doctrine. To hold that upon the death of a person without known heirs, any one claiming to be a creditor may file a bill in equity, with a personal representative perhaps in the interest of the plaintiff as the only defendant, and obtain a decree for the sale of the real estate, and thus divest the title of the commonwealth, is to open the door to the perpetration of the grossest frauds and injustice. The claim may be wholly fictitious. The sale of the lands may be altogether unnecessary. And even if necessary, they may be sold at the most ruinous sacrifice. Who is to protect the interests of the state against abuses and frauds of this description? It is impossible to foresee the mischiefs that will ensue if this court shall establish a rule of this sort.

This identical question has been the subject of adjudication in other states.

303 In every case I have seen *it has been held, that upon the death of the owner of lands, intestate, without heirs capable of inheriting, the title, eo instanti and before office found, vests in the state; and the title could not be divested by a sale made under the decree of any court, unless the state in some form is a party to the proceeding. Hinkle's lessee v. Shadden, 2 Swan's R. 46; O'Hanlin v. Den, 1 Spenc. R. 31-43; 1 Zabriskie R. 582.

If these views be correct, the appellant acquired no title by his purchase valid as against the state. As the title of the latter does not depend upon the inquisition, the alleged errors and irregularities in the proceedings of the escheator are not of the slightest consequence. The rights of the state are not affected by them. The appellant can derive no advantage from them.

The decree of the circuit court of the city of Richmond entered on the 17th day of June 1869, injoining the sale of the lots in controversy, was therefore manifestly erroneous upon its face. It was erroneous not only for the reasons stated, but for the further reason, that it was rendered without an answer for the escheator. The provisions of the 8th section are positive, that the escheator shall file an answer stating the objection to the claim; and the cause shall be heard without any unnecessary delay, upon the petition, answer, and the evidence. It was the duty of the court to require such an answer before adjudicating the rights of the state. The decree of the circuit court was a decree by default; and the bill of review subsequently filed by the escheator may be treated as a petition for a rehearing. Such an application is required in all cases of decrees by default before an appeal is taken. But even if it be treated as a bill of review, it was a proper case for such a bill for the reasons already stated.

304 *The decree of the 16th June 1874 is, however, erroneous in one respect. If the appellant was a purchaser in good faith, he had the right to be substituted to all the rights and remedies of the creditor whose debt was paid by the proceeds of sale of the lots in controversy. This was the course pursued by this court in the case of Hudgin v. Hudgin's ex'or, 6 Gratt. 320, already referred to. This court having decided in that case, that the devisees were not bound by the decree for the sale of their lands in their absence, was of opinion that the purchaser having bought in good faith, and the claim of the creditor being a just one, the former was entitled upon a disaffirmance of the sale, to be substituted to the rights of the creditor, and to charge the land with the amount of the debt paid by him.

This, of course, involves an inquiry into the validity of the claim asserted by William Gleason, as assignee of John W. Thompson. It may be, as is alleged, that this claim was utterly fraudulent. This record does not furnish any reliable or satisfactory information on that subject. This court cannot undertake to affirm positively that it is a fictitious claim. If such be its character, neither the state nor the lands of which Haunstein died possessed can be made chargeable with it. It will devolve upon the appellant to show that the debt is a just one; and that must be done by evidence other than the judgment in question. This evidence he may be able to furnish. At all events, he should have an opportunity of doing so, if desired by him. The decree is therefore affirmed dissolving the injunction, but the same to be retained in the circuit court for the inquiry, if desired by the appellant.

305 *The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court dissolving the appellant's injunction. It is therefore adjudged, ordered and decreed that said decree be affirmed, and that the appellant pay to the appellee his costs by him expended in the prosecution of his appeal here.

The court is further of opinion, that the appellant upon showing that he was a bona fide purchaser of the lots in controversy, and the claim asserted by William Gleason, assignee of John W. Thompson, is a valid debt, justly chargeable upon the estate of Solomon Haunstein, deceased, would be justly entitled to be substituted to all the rights and remedies of said Gleason against said estate. The cause is therefore remanded to the said circuit court, with instructions to retain the same a reasonable time in that court, to afford the appellant an opportunity, if desired by him, of establishing the facts upon which his right of substitution depends.

Decree amended and affirmed.

306 *Turnbull, for &c., v. Thompson & als.

Absent, MONCURE P.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Practice—Process—Judgment by Default.—A summons in debt is served on a defendant on the 3rd of February, and the judgment by default becomes final on the 3rd of March. Under the statute the day of the service of the process may be counted, and thirty days had elapsed between the service of process and the judgment, and it is a valid judgment.

2. Same—Same—Same.—In debt against four obligors, one of whom is the high sheriff, the process goes into the hands of his deputy, who serves it upon him as well as the other three, to which he makes no objection; and there is a judgment by default against all of them. The process is properly served and the judgment is valid.

3. Same—Same—Same—In Military Service.*—There is a judgment in debt, by default, against four defendants in March 1862. In August 1872 one of the defendants moves the court to set it aside, on the ground that at the time of the judgment he was in the military service of the country. It appears, however, that at the time of the service of the process, and at the time the judgment became final he was at home on furlough. The exemption of the defendant was a personal privilege of which the court could not ex officio take notice; and the objection should have been taken during the pendency of the proceedings.

*Process against Defendant in Military Service.—The principal case is probably the only adjudication on the subject of the exemption of persons in the military service. But the same doctrine was followed in the analogous case of Neale v. Utz, 75 Va. 486, where the principal case was cited. See also, Prentiss v. Com., 5 Rand. 697; M'Pherson v. Nesmith, 3 Gratt. 237.

On the 25th of January 1862 Lewis H. Turnbull, who sued for Randolph Dickinson, sued out of the county court of Franklin county a summons in debt against Giles M. Thompson, William P. Thompson and two others, the said writ being made returnable on the first Monday of the next February. This writ went into the hands of J. J. Lavinder, deputy of Wm. P.

307 Thompson, who was then the sheriff of Franklin county, and it was served upon said Thompson on the 3d day of February, it having been previously served upon the other parties. None of the defendants appeared and pleaded; and at the next term of the court, viz. on the 3d day of March, there was a judgment by default against them for the amount of the bond declared on.

In August 1872 Wm. P. Thompson gave notice to Dickinson, that he would move the county court of Franklin to reverse the aforesaid judgment, on the grounds:

1st. Because the process was served on him on the 3d of February 1862, and the judgment made final on the 3d of March 1862; it thus becoming final within one month after the service of the original process.

2d. Because the process was served upon him by his deputy.

3d. Because the judgment was rendered against him whilst he was in the military service of the state of Virginia.

Upon this last ground it was proved on the hearing of the motion, that at the time of the service of the summons and the rendition of the judgment, Thompson was in the service of the country in the army of the Confederate States; that he had volunteered in the service of Virginia in the month of May 1861, and was ordered and transferred into the confederate service in the late war; that at or about the time the summons was executed and the judgment rendered, he was temporarily at home on furlough.

The motion to reverse the judgment came on to be heard in September 1872; when it was overruled by the county court. Thompson thereupon excepted, and took the case to the circuit court of Franklin county; and 308 the case came on in that court on the 19th of October 1872, when the judgment of the county court of September 1872 was reversed; and the judgment of March 1862 was reversed and annulled. Turnbull thereupon applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

Jones & Bouldin, for the appellant.

Barksdale, for the appellees.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The judgment of the county court against the defendant, Thompson, is objected to by him on various grounds. They will be severally considered in the order in which they are presented in the record.

The first objection is, that the original process commencing the suit was served on the defendant the 3d February 1862, and the judgment became final on the 3d March 1862, in violation of the statute, which declares that no judgment by default on scire facias or summons shall be valid if it becomes final within one month after the service of such process. The month indicated by the statute is of course a calendar month, and if the 3d day of February, the day of the service of process is to be included in computing the time, then the judgment did not become final within a month after the service of process.

Without undertaking now to discuss the doctrines of the common law in respect to the days to be included or excluded in the computation of time under statutes, it is sufficient to say that every difficulty in regard to that question has been removed by the provisions of the 8th clause of section 16, chapter 16, page 115, Code of 1860.

309 *That section declares, that "where a statute requires a notice to be given, or any other act to be done a certain time before any motion or proceeding, there must be that time, exclusive of the day, for such motion or proceeding; but the day on which such notice is given, or such act is done, may be counted as part of the time."

The second objection is, that the process was served on the defendant by his deputy, the defendant himself being then the sheriff of the county. This objection doubtless is founded upon the 20th section, chapter 49, Code of 1860, which declares that "when for any cause it is unfit for a sheriff or sergeant to serve any process, such process shall be directed to and served by a coroner of the county or corporation."

One of the objects of this statute was of course to prevent the execution of process by officers interested in the subject matter of the suit; and the plaintiff might well object that the defendant is not a proper person to execute the process. But if the plaintiff is willing that the process shall go into the hands of the defendant, and the defendant is willing to receive it and accept service, the latter cannot afterwards be heard to make any objection on the ground of irregularity. And so if the defendants' deputy receive the process and serve it upon the principal, and the latter does not make the objection in limine, he should not be permitted afterwards to say that his deputy had done an illegal act.

The third and main ground of objection is, that the judgment was taken against the defendant while he was in the military service. It appears that the defendant first enlisted as a volunteer in the service of the state as early as May 1861, and that he was subsequently transferred to the confederate army; but at the time the process was executed upon him, and at the time the judgment became final, he was at home on furlough. The objection now made was suggested for the first time on the 7th of August 1872, more than ten years after the judgment was rendered. Conceding that the objection was good if it had been made in time, the question is, whether it has not been waived by the failure of the defendant to insist upon it either before the judgment was entered, or within a reasonable period thereafter.

In Prentis v. Commonwealth, 5 Rand. 697, the defendant was presented for unlawful gaming, process served upon him, and a judgment by default entered. He applied for a writ of error coram vobis, upon the ground that he was exempt from arrest or process as a member of the general assembly; and by operation of law all proceedings against him stood suspended during the continuance of his privilege.

The general court after a very careful examination of the authorities bearing upon the question, was of opinion, that the exemption claimed was in the nature of a personal privilege; that from its character it was such that the courts could not ex officio take notice of it, and that it ought to be claimed whenever relied on.

The court was further of opinion, that the privilege was not an incapacity like infancy and coverture, where consent cannot give jurisdiction; and there was not an example of the allowance of the privilege, but upon plea, or motion tendered or made at the proper period, to the court where proceedings are sought to be abated or suspended; and therefore the failure of the defendant to claim the exception until after judgment, was a waiver of his privilege.

Much of this reasoning applies to 311 persons in the military service. The exemption in their favor is necessarily a mere personal privilege. The court cannot ex officio take notice of it. It cannot know unless the matter is brought to its attention, that the defendant is in such service, or that he may not prefer to waive his exemption. The rule applying in other cases of personal privilege must therefore apply to him. The objection must be taken during the pending of the proceedings, otherwise it will be considered as waived. If the defendant is in actual service, if he is so situated that he cannot assert his privilege, the rule would not apply. Under such circumstances it would be unreasonable and unjust to require the objection to be made while the disability exists. But when the disability is removed, certainly within a reasonable time thereafter the defendant ought to claim his privilege.

In the case before us the defendant was at home on furlough, both when the summons was received by him, and when the judgment became final. It would have been very easy for him to claim his exemption. It was not necessary he should attend the court, or even employ counsel to do so. His own deputy served the process upon him: a simple notification to him, or an endorsement on the writ at the time, would no doubt have affected the object. A letter to the clerk, or to the court, at any time before the judgment became final, would have been sufficient. The defendant knew that the other obligors were joined in the suit with him. It may have been a matter of vital importance to the plaintiff to obtain judgment against them. In doing so, he was bound to include the defendant also in the suit. If the defendant had claimed his exemption, the action would have proceeded against the others, as it does not appear they were sureties; *and judgment would have been recovered against them. Thirty days after the expiration of his term of service the defendant's exemption would have ceased, and then judgment might have been obtained against him also. The reversal of the judgment now as to the defendant carries with it the reversal of the judgment as to all the defendants: and so the circuit judge has held. The result, therefore, is, that the defendant, by failing to insist upon his privilege, obtains an exemption, not only for himself, but for his co-obligors, for more than seven years after his term of service has expired. It is unnecessary to consider the effect of the several statutes of limitation in respect to a motion to reverse a judgment upon the ground relied on in this case. The failure of the defendant under the circumstances to claim his exemption, or to make any objection whatever before the judgment was rendered, followed by the long delay that has since occurred, must be considered as conclusive evidence of his intention to waive his exemption.

For these reasons the judgment of the circuit court must be reversed, with costs; and that of the county court affirmed.

Judgment reversed.

The case is stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

M. Dulany Ball, for the appellant.

Thomas & Wells, for the appellees.

Moncure P. delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Fairfax county, declaring a certain paper writing therein mentioned, admitted to probate as the last will and testament of Edmund Conly deceased, to be his true last will and testament.

In the county court of Fairfax county, September court 1868, the said paper writing was presented to *the court; and the same being proved to be wholly in the handwriting of the said Conly, and the signature thereto his genuine signature, by the oath of Samuel Farnsworth sworn in open court, was admitted to probate and ordered to be recorded.

The said paper writing was in these words:

“Lewinsville, August 19, 1862

Dear wife:

I am going away; I may never return. I leave my property to Gaines and Dan; dispose of it as you think fit; don't forget sister Mary and Bridget. Pay William McCauley twenty dollars; Patrick Sullivan, twenty-five dollars.

Edmund C. Conly.”

Witness: Samuel Farnsworth.

In September 1869, Mary Cody, a sister of the alleged testator, brought her suit in the circuit court of said county, to invalidate the said probate. In her bill she alleged, in substance, and among other things, 1st, that said Edmund C. Conly, late of the county aforesaid, died in said county in the year 1868, leaving a considerable real estate and personal estate in said county; leaving handwriting of another, see Chahoon v. Com. 3 Gratt. 788; Pepper v. Barnett, 22 Gratt. 405; Barton v. Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 605; Flowers v. Fletcher, 40 W. Va. 117, 20 S. E. Rep. 871; Hanriot v. Sherwood, 82 Va. 14.

also a widow, Margaret Conly, with no children; and as his heirs at law, the complainant, his sister; James Conly and Rose Conly, children of John Conly, a deceased brother; James Conly, a brother; and Joanna Powers, a sister, who had married Pierce Powers; and that the estate of said Edmund C. Conly had been committed to the hands of Walker R. Millan, late sheriff of said county, for administration. 2dly, That the said Edmund C. Conly, in the year 1862, a resident of said county, and possessed of some lands and personal estate, in view of the civil war then raging, contemplated leaving his residence 315 *and going abroad, and wrote a letter, as is alleged, to his wife, the said Margaret Conly, which letter is the paper writing aforesaid. 3dly, That the said Edmund Conly never left his home, but continued to reside in Fairfax county until his death in 1868; that during his life he purchased a farm in said county, near Lewinsville, and placed the complainant, Mary, his sister, in possession of the same, for the use and benefit of herself and family, free of rent, and of which property she was still in possession. 4thly, That after the death of said Edmund C. Conly, the letter aforesaid was admitted to probate in the county court of said county, as the last will and testament of said Edmund C. Conly, on the oath of said Saumel Farnsworth, who testified that said paper was wholly in the handwriting of said Edmund C. Conly, and his signature thereto was his genuine signature. Full proof was required of the genuineness of the letter; and even if genuine, complainant denied that it was the last will and testament of said Edmund C. Conly, or that he ever intended it to operate as such. Moreover, even if said paper might be regarded as testamentary, complainant contended that it would be void for vagueness and uncertainty; and that the probate was also void, the said paper having been proved only by one witness. She therefore prayed that the said widow, and other parties concerned, who were enumerated by name, might be made defendants to the bill; that an issue might be ordered to ascertain whether the said paper, &c., was the will of said Edmund C. Conly; that the said will and probate thereof might be cancelled and declared void; that the estate of said Edmund C. Conly might be distributed among the parties entitled thereto according to law; and that general relief might be decreed in the premises.

316 *The bill was taken for confessed as to all the defendants except the infants James Donovan and Daniel Donovan who answered by a guardian ad litem assigned by the court; and except also the widow Margaret Conly, who filed her answer, in which, among other things she stated the following facts in substance: That her said husband died in February 1868, leaving a small personal estate, worth some five or six hundred dollars, and two small tracts of land containing sixty-three and one hundred acres, which latter he purchased four or five years before his death and rented to the complainant for one third of the crop, and she has never had any other possession of it than as tenant; that he died without children; and that his heirs at law might be correctly named in the bill. She averred, however, that the paper referred to in the bill as having been admitted to probate, did contain the disposition of his property as he had frequently expressed to her. The two boys named therein, James and Dan, were the children of her brother John Donovan, whose wife at her death left two small children, the boys above named, and at the instance and request of respondent's said husband, these two children were taken by her to their house, where they have remained ever since, a period of upwards of sixteen years. The said boys were then (in October 1869) nineteen and seventeen years of age. She further averred that she had frequently heard her husband say, both before and after the date of his will, that the two boys should have whatever he had to leave; that having been raised by him, they felt like his children and should stand in the place of children to him; that in reference to the paper admitted to probate as aforesaid, he informed her, in a conversation held with her a short time previous to his 317 death, *that his will was among his papers, that he had written it when he expected to be taken prisoner by the soldiers, who, about that time, were infesting the neighborhood, but that it was all that was necessary, &c., &c.

In November 1869, the cause coming on to be heard in the said circuit court a decree was made that there should be a new trial by a jury on the common law side of the court, to ascertain whether any, and if any, how much, of the said paper writing in the bill and proceedings mentioned, offered in the county court of Fairfax and there admitted to probate, as the will of Edmund C. Conly dec'd, was the will of the decedent; and that on the trial of the issue, the bill, answer, and exhibit might be read.

In November 1871, the issue was accordingly tried by a jury, which found a special verdict in these words: "We the jury, sworn to speak the truth, upon our oaths say that the paper writing headed 1862, Lewinsville, August 19, and which was admitted to probate in Fairfax county court September, 1868, as the last will and testament of Edmund C. Conly is in the hand-writing of Edmund C. Conly; and we find that at that time, that portion of the county of Fairfax in which Edmund C. Conly resided, was alternately in the possession of the federal and confederate forces, and that said Edmund C. Conly expressed fears of being taken away by the federal forces; that Edmund C. Conly resided at Lewinsville during the war, and never abandoned his home, but continued to reside there up to the time of his death, and that the citizens of that portion of the country were generally apprehended and carried away as prisoners, with the exception of the said Conly and James Magarity. But whether or not, upon the whole matter aforesaid, the said paper writing herein set forth be the said

 318 last will and testament of the said Edmund C. Conly, the jury do not know. Therefore they pray the advice of the court. And if upon the whole matter, it shall seem to the court that the said paper writing is the last will and testament, in whole or in part, of the said Edmund C. Conly, then the jury find that the said paper writing is the last will and testament of the said Edmund C. Conly; but if, upon the whole matter aforesaid, it shall seem to the court that the said paper writing is not, in whole or in part, the last will and testament of the said Edmund C. Conly, then we find that it is not the last will and testament of the said Edmund C. Conly."

The case being heard and considered by the court upon the special verdict, and it seeming to the court that, upon the facts therein, the paper writing therein referred to is the last will and testament of Edmund C. Conly it was afterwards, to wit: on the 6th day of December 1871, decreed by the said court accordingly. Three bills of exceptions were taken by the parties respectively, to rulings of the court on the trial of the issue, which, or such of them as are material, will be noticed hereafter.

From the decree aforesaid, declaring the said paper writing to be the last will and testament of the said Edmund C. Conly, the complainant Mary Cody applied to this court for an appeal; which was accordingly allowed.

The appellant, in her petition for an appeal, assigns three errors in the several rulings of the court below in the case. We will consider these assignments of error in the order in which they are made. The first and principal one is:

1. "The said paper is not to be regarded as the last will and testament of the 319 said Edmund C. Conly, the *same being a devise (if so to be construed at all) contingent upon the happening of an event which never occurred, whereby the whole disposition intended by said writing becomes inoperative and ineffectual."

That the said paper is in the form of a letter from the supposed testator to his wife, and not in the usual form of a will, does not prevent it from being a will, if so intended by the author. A will, intended and duly executed as such, may be in any form which the testator may choose to adopt. Indeed, this is not denied by the counsel for the appellant; who contends, however, that the intention of the author, as declared on the face of the paper, was that it should be his will only on a certain contingency, which never happened; and therefore that it is not his will, and ought not to have been admitted to probate as such.

If it were true that the paper was not intended to be a will, except upon a contingency which never happened, the conclusion drawn therefrom by the counsel would be inevitable.

But is it true?

The supposed contingency is contained only in these words, at the beginning of the will: "I am going away; I may never return." Do these words make the will conditional, to take effect only in the event that the testator should, in fact, go away and never return? Or do they merely indicate the motive which induced the testator to make his will at the time he did, which will he intended to operate as such unless afterwards duly cancelled or revoked, without reference to the contingency of his going away and never returning?

We must construe these words by the light of the surrounding circumstances, as found in the special verdict; which are: "that at that time (to-wit, the date of 320 *the will) that portion of the county of Fairfax in which Edmund C. Conly resided was alternately in the possession of the federal and confederate forces; and that said Edmund C. Conly expressed fears of being taken away by the federal forces; that Edmund C. Conly resided at Lewinsville during the war, and never abandoned his home, but continued to reside there up to the time of his death, and that the citizens of that portion of the county were generally apprehended and carried away as prisoners, with the exception of the said Conly and James Magarity." And also the facts stated in the bill and answer, that the testator never had any children, that his heirs at law were numerous collateral relations, and that the chief objects of his bounty, besides his wife, were two nephews of his wife described in the will as "Gaines and Dan," whom he had adopted as his children, and who had long lived with him. His estate was comparatively of little value, consisting of two small tracts of land, and of some personal property. He certainly could not have intended to die intestate, and he never made any other will than the one in question. The presumption, therefore, is, that he intended the one in question to be his absolute and unconditional will. There is not a word in the will which is inconsistent with this construction. Not a word in it, which is not perfectly consistent with the idea, that the words, "I am going away; I may never return," were used only to indicate his reason for then making his will, and not to express or imply a condition on which it should have effect.

The cases on this subject show, that while a person may, certainly, make a conditional will, his intention to do so must appear very clearly on the face of the will; and if such an intention do not so appear.
 321 the *will must be regarded as unconditional. Indeed, in some of the cases, the form of expression used in the will was conditional, and yet the construction of the will was otherwise.

The cases referred to by the counsel for the appellant were cases, in which the court deciding them, considered that the intention to make conditional wills plainly appeared. Without noticing all of them, such was the case in Parsons v. Lanoe, 1 Ves. Sen. 189, decided by Lord Hardwicke in 1748, which is a leading case on this subject, and which is mainly relied on by the counsel for the appellant as being almost identical with this case, in regard to the words of the paper in controversy. The important difference between the two cases is, that there, the form of expression is contingent and conditional: "If I die before my return from Ireland" &c. Whereas here, the form is otherwise: "I am going away; I may never return." There the surrounding circumstances corroborated the apparent import of the words, that the will was intended to be conditional. Here they show the contrary.

The doctrine on this subject is laid down in Redfield on the Law of Wills, part 1, §§ 178 and seq., where the cases, or most of them, are referred to in the notes. Among those cases is that of Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. R. 174, in regard to which the author says: "Where the testator stated, that, 'being about to take a long journey, and knowing the uncertainty of life, he deemed it advisable to make a will,' it was held, that this was not a conditional will. The instrument taking effect as a will, is not made to depend upon the event of the return, or not, of the testator from his journey; there is, therefore, no reason for annulling the will on the ground that it was conditional."

The learned author, after referring 322 to some of the *cases, proceeds to state the law thus: "As questions of a very embarrassing nature often arise in regard to the proper testamentary character of papers left in the form of a will, but expressed in terms more or less contingent, it must be borne in mind, that in that class of instruments the question must turn upon the point whether the contingency is referred to as the occasion of making the will, or as the condition on which the instrument is to become operative. Ordinarily where the instrument is executed with all the requisite formalities, it will be presumed to have been done animo testandi, notwithstanding that it may be expressed to have been made to avoid the contingency of dying intestate, in case the testator should not return from a contemplated journey. In such a case, in order to render the instrument contingent in its operation, it should clearly appear by its language that it was not intended to remain as an operative will, except in the event of the failure to return."

In Skipwith &c. v. Cabell's ex'or &c., 19 Gratt. 758, 782, this subject was considered by this court in an opinion delivered by Judge Joynes, and the law on the subject was laid down to the same effect as before stated. In that case, the words of the devise were conditional in form: "In case of a sudden and unexpected death," &c.; and yet it was held to be unconditional in effect. Two important recent English cases are there referred to, which are very strong to the same effect. They are, Porter's case, Law Rep. 2 P. & D. 22; and Dobson's case, Law Rep. 1 P. & D. 88. But it is unnecessary to state these cases, as they are stated in the opinion of Judge Joynes. We will state, however, that, in Dobson's case, the language of the will was this: "In case of any fatal accident happening to me, being about to travel by railway, I hereby 323 leave *all my property," &c. It was held that the will was not conditional, and it was admitted to probate, although the testator returned unhurt from the travel by railway alluded to in the will.

We are therefore of opinion, that the said paper, admitted to probate as aforesaid, is not inoperative and ineffectual upon the ground that it was contingent upon the happening of an event which never occurred, as insisted in the first assignment of error; and that there is no error in the decree in that respect.

2. The second assignment of error is, that "the testimony of one who had never seen the alleged author of the paper write, and whose impressions were drawn from recollections of orders seen by him casually in the way of business thirteen years before, should not have been allowed."

This assignment of error is based upon a bill of exceptions taken by the appellant to the ruling of the court, in admitting before the jury, on the trial of the issue, the evidence of H. W. Thomas, who testified "that Edmund Conly dug a well about 1858 for witness; he gave several orders on me for money, and from my recollection of his hand-writing, I think the paper shown is his. I never saw him write. I paid the orders, and they were recognized by Conly in our settlement."

We think this evidence was clearly admissible (its weight being a subject for the consideration of the jury), as is shown by the authorities referred to by the counsel for the appellees. We therefore think the court did not err in admitting it.

3. The third and last assignment of error is, that "the after discovered evidence was such as might have entirely changed the verdict of the jury, and should have been allowed."

324 *We are, clearly, of opinion, that the court did not err in overruling the motion of the appellant to set aside the verdict on the ground of after discovered evidence; which, to say the most of it, was merely cumulative and corroborative, and was certainly not such as ought to produce on another trial an opposite result on the merits. See the cases on this subject referred to by the counsel for the appellees; Read's case, 22 Gratt. 924, 946; and Adams v. Hubbard, 25 Id. 129, 135.

Upon the whole we are of opinion that there is no error in the decree appealed from, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

325 *Ball & als. v. Ball & als.

March Term, 1876. Richmond.

Descents.—B dies intestate, leaving as her heirs five children of her deceased son S, six children of her deceased son W, and a grandchild of W, the only child of a deceased daughter of W. B's real estate is to be divided into twelve equal parts, of which the five children of her son S, the six children of her son W, and the grandchild of W, representing her deceased mother, are each to take one part.

Martha C. Ball died intestate in March 1865. Her heirs were the children and a grandchild of her two deceased sons. Her son, S. M. Ball, left five children, and her son, W. W. Ball, left six children and a grandchild, the only child of a daughter who was dead.

The five children of S. M. Ball filed their petition in the circuit court of Fairfax county for a division of the estate of Martha C. Ball, to which the other heirs were made parties; and the only question before this court was, whether the estate should be divided into two equal parts, of which the children of S. M. Ball should have one part, and the children and grandchild of W. W. Ball should have the other, or whether they should all take per capita. The court below held that the estate was to be divided per capita among all the children and the grandchild. And thereupon the children of S. M. Ball applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

M. D. Ball, for the appellants.

326 *J. D. Ball, for the appellees.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

The question which this case presents to us for our decision is, how the estate of Mrs. Martha C. Ball should be divided among her heirs at law; that is, in what shares and proportions.

She died intestate in the county of Fairfax, seized of real estate, and leaving as her only heirs at law, five children of a deceased son, six children of another deceased son, and a grandchild of the latter son. The question is whether her estate should be divided into twelve equal parts, and one of said parts be allotted to each of the said eleven living children, and the remaining part to the said grandchild as representing or standing in the place of its deceased parent; or should be first divided into two equal parts, and one of said parts be allotted to the said five children of one of the sons, equally to be divided among them; and the other of said two equal parts be allotted to the said six children and said grandchild of the other son equally to be divided among them.

The court below decided that the former is the true legal mode of apportionment in this case; that is an equal division among all the said eleven children and the said grandchild, allotting to each, one equal twelfth part of the inheritance.

The appellants, who are the said five children of the said first named deceased son, complain of the said decree as being prejudicial to their rights, and insist that the other mode of division and allotment before mentioned ought to have been pursued.

The court is of opinion that there is no error in the said decree of the court 327 below, and that the mode of *division and allotment adopted by that court is the true and legal mode, and accords with the true intent and meaning, if not the literal terms, of the law of descents. If one of the said two sons of the intestate had been living at her death, and the other dead, then the mode of division and allotment contended for by the appellants would have been the true mode. But as both were then dead and their respective children then living were all in the same degree of kindred to the intestate, the said children were entitled in their own right to equal shares of the estate; and the other child being then dead, its only child was entitled to an equal share, per stirpes, to wit: to the share which the deceased parent if living would have taken.

The intestate having left descendants, her estate descended to them by the express provision of the first clause of the first section of the statute of descents, Code, p. 916, ch. 119, § 1; and the third section of the same statute, p. 917, prescribes when the division and allotment shall be per capita and when per stirpes. Whenever those entitled to partition are in the same degree of kindred to the intestate, they shall take per capita or by persons; and where a part of them being dead and a part living, the issue of those dead shall take per stirpes. And the same rule applies to the living descendants however remote may be their degree of kindred to the intestate. While the statute does not expressly enumerate all the degrees of kindred of the remote descendants, it expressly includes all and plainly provides a rule for all.

There is nothing in the decision of the case of Davis v. Rowe, 6 Rand. 355, which is at all in conflict with the foregoing opinion. On the contrary the principles of that decision seem fully to accord with 328 *what has been said in this case.

But it is deemed unnecessary to make any further comments upon that case or refer to any other.

We think the decree of the court below ought to be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

329 *Supervisors of Bedford v. Wingfield, Judge.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Writs of Prohibition.*—For the purposes for which and the principles upon which writs of prohibition will be awarded, see the opinion of CHRISTIAN J.
2. Circuit Judges—Control of Court-House.—A judge of a circuit court has authority to control the court-house in which he administers justice, to the ex-

*Writs of Prohibition.—For instances when this extraordinary remedy was held not applicable, see Hogan v. Gulgon, 29 Gratt. 712, and note; also McConiha v. Guthrie, 21 W. Va. 140, where the principal case was approved.

In the following cases prohibition was held to be tent, at least, of preventing any interference with the discharge of the public business, and of having necessary jury rooms and other conveniences for that purpose.

3. Same—Same—Erroneous Exercise of—Remedy.—

Where there is any such interference by the board of supervisors of a county, or any one else, the judge certainly has the right to enquire into it. If in doing so he violates the law or infringes upon the rights of others, his action may be corrected by a writ of error. But it is not a case in which prohibition will lie.

4. Same—Same—Same—Same.—The board of supervisors of a county order that one of the jury rooms attached to the court-house shall be prepared to be used as a part of the clerk's office of the county court, and this order is approved by the county court. The judge of the circuit court thereupon makes a rule upon the board of supervisors to show cause why they shall not be restrained from making the changes in the room. This court will not restrain him by prohibition from proceeding under the rule; but the board should make their defense in the circuit court; and any error of the judge in that proceeding may be corrected by writ of error to this court.

This was a rule upon the Honorable G. A. Wingfield, judge of the circuit court of Bedford county, made on the motion of the board of supervisors of that county, to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not be issued, forbidding him to interfere with the board in making certain alterations in the court-house building for the enlargement of the accommodations for the clerk's office of the county. The case is stated by Judge Christian in his opinion.

Sale and Thurman, for the petitioners.

Christian J. delivered the opinion of the court.

Application is made to this court by the board of supervisors of Bedford county, invoking its original jurisdiction by way of prohibition, to restrain and prohibit the Hon. G. A. Wingfield, judge of the circuit court of Bedford county, from awarding a writ of prohibition, or otherwise interfering with the board of supervisors of said county, so as to prevent said board from making certain contemplated changes in the court-house of said county.

In the petition filed by said board it is alleged, in substance, that upon application to the board at its meeting in June 1875, by the clerk of the county court, requesting that additional room be provided for the records of the county, the board made an order requiring that a room adjoining the county court clerk's office, which had been used as a lawyer's office, should be fitted up as a part of said county court clerk's office; and that a doorway be cut in the partition wall between said room and the clerk's office, for the more convenient use of said room as a part of said clerk's office. The petition further alleges, that the county court, by its order entered on 3d June 1875, declared that "the court doth approve, ratify and confirm said order of the board of supervisors," and "that the same be done in accordance with the order of the board of supervisors."

The petition then exhibits the following order of the circuit court of Bedford, entered on the 4th September *1875, to wit: "It being suggested to the court that the supervisors of this county are about to proceed to cut the walls of the court-house, for the purpose of making an entrance into it from the county court clerk's office, and to connect a part of the court-house with the clerk's office, and have authorized one Robert S. Quarles to cut the same and connect it with the clerk's office; and this court deeming it improper so to mutilate the court-house, and change it into a clerk's office, doth therefore order that the said supervisors and the said Robert S. Quarles be summoned to appear here on the first day of the next term, to shew cause, if any they can, why a writ of prohibition should not be issued against them, to prevent them from so mutilating and changing the court-house of said county."

Setting out these facts, and presenting certain considerations why the circuit court had no jurisdiction in the case, the petition closes with the prayer that this court will award the commonwealth's writ of prohibition against the said circuit judge of the county of Bedford, prohibiting him "from the exercise of unlawful jurisdiction" in the premises, and from further proceedings against said board, "and from in any manner hindering or interfering with the said board in the exercise of their jurisdiction in the matter aforesaid."

Upon the presentation of the petition this court awarded a rule nisi upon the Hon. G. A. Wingfield, to shew cause why the writ of prohibition should not be awarded by this court.

To this rule Judge Wingfield filed his answer, in which he alleged that the room proposed to be converted into a clerk's office of the county court, by order of the board of supervisors, was one of the jury rooms of the circuit court, and that while it had been used by permission of the court as a lawyer's office, such use had always been subject to the right of the court to use it as a jury room. "That in the large county of Bedford, with a population of 30,000 or more, when the courts are in session with grand juries, venires in criminal cases, and juries in civil cases, of necessity the case must often arise, when the use of all the jury rooms will be required for the convenient dispatch of the public business, and that if the circuit court is to be deprived of the use of this room (which the board of supervisors propose to convert into a clerk's office), the administration of public justice will be greatly impeded and obstructed." He further alleges that by the proposed change the danger of destruction of the court-house by fire will be greatly increased.

He further submits, that by virtue of the statute law he, as judge of the circuit court, had control, to a certain extent, of the court-house building, and that he might, under his authority and duty as circuit judge ex officio, have made a peremptory order preventing this change, if, in his opinion, such change interfered with the discharge of his public duties as judge of said circuit court, or in any way obstructed the administration of public justice in his said court; but he preferred, instead of issuing such peremptory order, as he had the right to do, to award a rule against the board of supervisors, in order that it might be seen upon the return of the rule whether the room could be used both for the purpose of a jury room as heretofore, and at the same time for the purposes as designed of additional room for the records of the county court.

The case was heard by this court upon the petition, and the return made by 333 Judge Wingfield, and the *arguments of counsel for the petitioners; and the question we now have to decide is whether, upon the case made by the petition and return, this court should award the writ of prohibition against Judge Wingfield.

This question is to be determined by certain general principles of law governing writs of prohibition, which it is necessary to refer to in order to determine this question.

1. The power of this court to award writs of prohibition is conferred by the constitution, and will always be exercised in a proper case; and when the proper case is made by the pleadings and evidence, the power to award the writ is unquestioned.

2. But, like all other extraordinary remedies, prohibition is to be resorted to only in cases where the usual and ordinary forms of remedy are insufficient to afford redress. And it issues only in cases of extreme necessity; and, before it can be granted, it must appear that the party aggrieved has no remedy in the inferior tribunals. The jurisdiction is exercised by appellate or superior courts, to restrain inferior courts from acting without authority of law where damage or injustice are likely to follow from such action.

3. It is not a writ of right granted ex debito justitiæ, but rather one of sound judicial discretion, to be granted or withheld according to the circumstances of each particular case. And being a prerogative writ, it is to be used like all other prerogative writs, with great caution and forbearance, for the furtherance of justice, and to secure order and regularity in judicial proceedings, where none of the ordinary remedies provided by law are applicable.

4. It is a principle of universal application, and one which lies at the very founation of the law of prohibition. 334 *that the jurisdiction is strictly confined to cases where no other remedy exists; and it is always a sufficient reason for withholding the writ, that the party aggrieved has another and complete remedy at law.

5. Another fundamental principle, and one which is to be constantly borne in mind in determining whether an appropriate case is presented for the exercise of this extraordinary jurisdiction is, that the writ is never allowed to usurp the functions of a writ of error, and can never be employed as a process for the correction of errors of inferior tribunals. High on Ex. Remedies 551, 556, and cases there cited.

Let us now apply these general principles to the case before us.

It will be conceded that the circuit court of Bedford, as all circuit courts, is invested by law with jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition. Whatever irregularities may have been committed by said court in the exercise of its general jurisdiction, in this particular case, was a subject of defence in answer to the rule. For instance, if, as is urged here, there was no relator, at whose instance the rule was made by Judge Wingfield; or if, as was insisted in argument, the county court having concurrent jurisdiction of the subject matter had already control of it, and had passed upon it, these are matters of defence upon an answer to the rule, and ought to have been made in the circuit court, and are not proper grounds for a writ of prohibition from this court.

The process awarded by Judge Wingfield, while called in the proceedings a writ of prohibition, was a mere rule awarded by him, ex mero motu, upon the board of supervisors, making inquiry of them why they proposed to convert one of the jury 335 rooms of the *circuit court into a clerk's office of the county court, and to show cause why they should not be prohibited from so doing. We think, as judge of the circuit court, he had a right to make this inquiry. The statute law confers upon the circuit judge control of the court-house in which he administers justice, to the extent, at least, of preventing any interference with the discharge of the public business, and of having necessary jury rooms and other conveniences for the purpose.

When there is any such interference by the board of supervisors, or any one else, he certainly has the right to enquire into it. If in that enquiry he violates the law, or infringes upon the rights of others, his action is subject to be corrected upon a writ of error. But it is not a case in which prohibition will lie. All the objections made here to the action of Judge Wingfield, and urged as grounds of prohibition, could properly be made, and ought to be made, upon the return of the rule made by him.

This court will certainly not interfere, by the extraordinary remedy of prohibition, to prevent him from making an enquiry, which he has a right to make, especially when all the grounds of objection urged to his action may be made as matters of defence in answer to the rule, and the whole question more properly adjudicated in the circuit court. We say more properly in the court below, because the whole case can be there fully heard upon the facts; and the orders made by the board of supervisors, and the county court, if ex parte, as they may be, can be reviewed and fully considered.

To grant the writ of prohibition in this case, would be to establish a new practice, and to lend the aid of this high prerogative writ, which is always issued with 336 *caution, and when there is no adequate remedy, in a case where the parties have ample remedy in the court below, and by writ of error to this court. This court will always discourage and put its seal of disapprobation upon every attempt to use the writ of prohibition to usurp the functions of a writ of error, and to employ it as a process to correct the error of inferior tribunals, instead of the regular modes by appeals and writs of error. The rule awarded against the respondent, Hon. G. A. Wingfield, judge of circuit court of Bedford, is discharged.

Rule discharged.

337 *Penn, Assignee, v. Hamlett & als.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Bonds.—A blank paper is signed and sealed by a principal and three others who intend to be his sureties, and it is left with the principal to be filled up and delivered by him. He does fill it up and deliver it to the obligee named therein. It is not the bond of the three, and does not bind them. But the principal having filled it up, and delivered it when thus complete, it is his bond, and binds him.

This was an action of debt in the circuit court of Henry county, brought by Susan S. Penn, assignee of H. C. France, against John T. Hamlett, Wm. S. Reed, George S. Hairston and M. F. Gravely. On the trial there was a judgment in favor of the defendants; and the plaintiff applied to this court for a writ of error and supersedeas; which was awarded. The case is stated by Judge Christian in his opinion.

Ould & Carrington and J. E. Penn, for the appellant.

Jones & Bouldin and Cabell & P., for the appellees.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This case is before us upon a writ of error to a judgment of the circuit court of Henry county.

The action was a debt upon a bond signed, or purporting to be signed, by four obligors. The bond was payable to H. C. France, who assigned it to Mrs. Susan S. Penn, the appellant here.

338 *The bond is in the following form:

On or before the 10th day of October, 1867, with interest from date, we promise to pay H. C. France the just and full sum of seven hundred dollars, for value received.

Witness the following signatures and seals, this the 23d day of November, 1866.

Jno. T. Hamlett, [Seal.]

Wm. S. Reed, [Seal.]

Geo. S. Hairston, [Seal.]

M. F. Gravely, [Seal.]

To the action on this bond, two of the defendants, Geo. S. Hairston and M. F. Gravely, pleaded non est factum.

Upon the trial of the issue made on this plea, the jury found a special verdict in the following words:

We, the jury, do find the following facts proved, viz: That the defendant, John T. Hamlett, in a negotiation with France, the obligee, for the purchase of several mules at a price which was not agreed on, said Hamlett was required by said France to give a bond with good security for whatever might be agreed upon as the price; which Hamlett promised to procure and deliver to him. That the said Hamlett sometime afterwards applied to the defendants, George S. Hairston and William S. Reed, to become securities on such bond; and at a meeting of said Hamlett, Reed and Hairston, all present, Hamlett stating that he wished to show to France that he could give as good a bond as any man in Henry, that the prices of the mules had not been agreed on, but would not exceed seven hundred and fifty dollars, and he thought might

339 *be seven hundred dollars; and assuring said Hairston and Reed that if they would become sureties, he would procure Mrs. Matilda Gravely, Benjamin Gravely, C. Y. Thomas, and D. W. Reamy, to join as sureties on the bond, the said Reed and Hairston did then, on the — day of —, sign their names with said Hamlett on a blank piece of paper, with only the names of Hamlett, Reed and Hairston, with seals to each name, with the express agreement and assurance of said Hamlett that he would fill out or write the body of the bond for an amount not exceeding $750, and would procure the names of B. F. Gravely, C. Y. Thomas, and D. W. Reamy, and that the paper with the said three names and seals was delivered to the said Hamlett, to be delivered as their bond only when said names were added; that said defendant, Matilda Gravely, afterwards signed said blank with a seal to her name, with the understanding and upon condition that the said Hamlett add the names of C. Y. Thomas and B. F. Gravely, which he promised to do; but said Hamlett took said paper and saw said France, made a satisfactory arrangement with said France, and then wrote the body of said paper over the names and seals of said Hamlett, Reed and Matilda Gravely, and delivered it to said France. That after the bond had been filled out and delivered to France, Hamlett voluntarily and without the knowledge of the defendants executed a deed of trust to indemnify the defendants, under which nothing could be realized for the purposes of the deed. But whether or not, upon the matter aforesaid, the issue joined be for the plaintiff or for the defendants, the jury do not know, and therefore they pray the advice of the court; and if upon the whole matter it should seem to the court that the issue is for the plaintiff, then the jury find for the *plaintiff upon said issue the debt in the declaration mentioned, with interest from the 23d of November, 1866. But if upon the whole matter aforesaid it seems to the court that the issue is for the defendants, then the jury find for the defendants upon the said issue.

Upon this special verdict the circuit court held that the matters of law arising thereon was for the defendants Hairston and Gravely, and accordingly gave judgment for these defendants upon the plea of non est factum.

It is to this judgment that a writ of error was awarded by this court.

The court is of opinion that there is no error in this judgment of the circuit court.

The appellees, Hairston and Gravely, with the other two obligors, not only signed their names upon condition that three others should sign with them, but it appears by the special verdict that when they signed their names and affixed their seals, it was upon a blank piece of paper, with no obligation or writing of any kind above their signatures. Such a paper was not the deed of the parties. It was a mere nullity. In Shepherd's Touch-stone, page 54, the ancient rule of the common law is thus declared: "Every deed well made must be written; i. e., the agreement must be all written before the sealing and delivery of it; for if a man seal and deliver an empty piece of paper or parchment, albeit he do thereinwithal give commandment that an obligation or other matter shall be written in it, and this be done accordingly, yet this is no good deed." See also 4 Comy. Digest 157; Plowd. 308; Coke Lit. 171. We know of no decision by which this ancient doctrine of the common law has been overruled.

341 *On the contrary, this rule of the common law has been often reaffirmed by this court as well as by the supreme courts of other states of the Union. Asberry v. Callaway, 1 Wash. 72; Harrison v. Tiersans, 4 Rand. 177; Rhea v. Gibson's ex'or, 10 Gratt. 215; Ayres v. Hayne, 1 Ohio R. 368; Gilbert v. Anthony, 1 Yerger's R. 69 Tenn.; Byers v. McClanahan, 6 Gill. & John. 250 Maryland. See also 2 Rob. Prac., new ed. 17, and cases there cited; Preston v. Hull, 23 Gratt. 600. These decisions (and there are none to the contrary) follow the ancient rule of the common law, and are founded on the following principles: Deeds are of a higher nature than parol contracts, and there are great and important distinctions between the operations and effect of these different species of contracts. The reason of which is, that the first are supposed to be made upon greater deliberation and with greater solemnity: they are first to be written, by which they are exempted from that uncertainty arising from the imperfection of memory, to which unwritten contracts must always be exposed; they are then to be sealed by the party bound; and, lastly, to be delivered, which is the consummation of his resolution. None of this deliberation and little of this solemnity is to be found in the signing and sealing of a blank piece of paper on which anything may afterwards be written, and whether with or without the consent of the party who signed it, must depend entirely on oral testimony, subject not only to the uncertainty arising from the imperfection of human memory, but exempted from those checks on perjury which would exist in a deed regularly executed, and which could only be altered by erasure or interlineation.

One of the essential requisites constituting a deed is, that it should be written, as well as signed, sealed *and delivered.

The appellees in this case having (according to the special verdict) signed and sealed a blank piece of paper, were not bound, and the plea of non est factum was a good plea. What was written over these signatures and seals did not bind them, unless it could be shown that the authority to execute the writing and deliver the paper was given to another under seal. Nothing of this sort is pretended. The signing and sealing of a blank was not their deed, but was a mere nullity, which could not bind them.

This view of the case makes it unnecessary to consider the argument or the authorities relied on by the learned counsel for the appellants. The cases of Ward v. Churn, 18 Gratt., and Nash v. Fugate, 24 Gratt., and other cases referred to by him, were decided on very different principles, which have no application to the case before us. We have here the simple case of a blank piece of paper signed and sealed by the appellees, and written over by another, and delivered by another without authority under seal to make such writing and delivery. —such a paper is no deed; and the circuit court did not err in so declaring.

In the recent case of Preston v. Hull, cited supra, Judge Staples, in an elaborate opinion, in which he reviews many of the English and American cases, conclusively shows that the law is well settled, that a paper not complete on its face, to the extent of having a blank which is essential to be filled in order to make it a perfect deed, is not the deed of the parties; and that authority by parol to an agent to fill such blank does not make the instrument a valid deed. Such authority must itself be under seal.

This case is decisive of the one under consideration. If, as was held by this court in Preston v. Hull, a bond in which the name of the obligee was blank when 343 *it was signed by the parties, was not their deed, and that no authority by parol to fill the blank could make it valid, certainly a signature and seal on a blank piece of paper, afterwards written over without authority, or by parol authority, is not a good deed.

But the court is further of opinion, that the said circuit court erred in entering a judgment in favor of the defendant Hamlett. As to him the bond was a valid instrument,—it having been written, signed, sealed and delivered by him. He is therefore bound by it though the other defendants cannot be held liable.

Judgment reversed as to Hamlett, affirmed as to the other defendants.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Railroad Companies—What Property Taxable.—The state has not, either by statute or contract, relinquished her right to tax that portion of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad which lies between the city of Richmond and the town of Covington, and all the property of the company, real and personal, belonging to that part of the road, and a fair proportion of its rolling stock, and of the earnings of the company, to be ascertained and apportioned in such mode as may be prescribed by law. But she has relinquished the right to tax the property of the company lying west of Covington.

2. Same—Same—Bonds.—A state cannot tax the bonds of a railroad company held by persons living out of the state.

These were motions by the commonwealth, in the circuit court of the city of Richmond, against the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company, for fines upon the company for their failure to comply with the laws of the state in relation to the taxation of such corporations. The company appeared and defended the motions, on the grounds that, under their contract with the state, their property could not be taxed until their profits amounted to ten per centum per annum on their capital; and it was agreed that the profits of the company had not at any time amounted to ten per cent. a year on its capital.

The parties agreed a case, and, dispensing with a jury, submitted the whole matter of law and fact to the judgment of the court: and the court held that there was no liability on the part of the defendant, and dismissed the motions. And thereupon 345 the Attorney *General applied to this court for a supersedeas; which was allowed. The cases are sufficiently stated by Judge Anderson in his opinion.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

H. Wickham and Wm. J. Robertson, for the appellees.

Anderson J. delivered the opinion of the court.

The important question in each of these causes is as to the right of the commonwealth to impose a tax upon property of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company when the profits of the company have not amounted to ten per centum a year upon its capital. There is no question that corporations are in general like natural persons, liable to taxation. Their capital stock or their property, both real and personal, is taxable to the corporation itself. But this company claims an exemption by contract with the state from taxation.

The question as to the power of a state legislature to grant to a corporation the immunity of an exemption from taxation has been much debated, and decisions have been conflicting. In Thorpe v. The Rutland and Burlington Railway (27 Vt. R. 140) a doubt is expressed as to the entire soundness of the principle of legislative exemptions of corporations from taxation. The power of taxation is an important and essential prerogative of sovereignty, and it has been questioned how far the legislature can divest itself of the right and power to exercise so important a function of sovereignty, or how one legislature can abridge the general power of every sovereignty to impose taxes for the support of gov-

346 ernment. *Brewster v. *Hough*, 10 New Hamp. R. 138; Mechanics and Traders Bank v. Debolt, 1 Ohio St. 591; Toledo Bank v. Bond, Id. 622.

Numerous cases might be cited which maintain the want of power in the legislature to exempt corporations or property perpetually from taxation. Mr. Redfield seems to think that there is ground to question the right of a legislature by one act to extinguish this essential right of sovereignty. And in a note on page 385-6, of his valuable work on the Law of Railways, he says: "We should not be surprised hereafter to find this whole subject of the right of a state legislature to exempt corporations by their charter from taxation brought in question. But" he adds, "the law at present is probably otherwise." And in this opinion Mr. Cooley concurs, and is more decided. He says: "So far as the power of taxation is concerned, it has been so often decided by the supreme court of the United States, though not without remonstrance on the part of the state courts, that an agreement by a state for a consideration received, or supposed to be received, that certain property rights or franchises shall be exempt from taxation, or taxed only at a certain agreed rate, is a contract protected by the constitution, that the question can no longer be considered an open one." He adds: "In any case, however, there must be a consideration, so that the state can be supposed to have received a beneficial equivalent; for it is considered on all sides that if the exemption is made as a privilege only, it may be revoked at any time." Cooley's Const. Lim., p. 280-1, and cases cited.

Supposing the question of law to be settled, as thus indicated by Mr. Cooley, we will proceed to inquire: Has the state of Virginia by contract relinquished her right of taxation to any extent as involved and Ohio Railroad Company is invested, which it derived from the Virginia Central Railroad Company, and also which it acquired by purchase from the state since its incorporation, which she contends has not been relinquished by any act of the legislature, or by contract.

The Virginia Central railroad was a company chartered by the state of Virginia, and it constructed the railroad between Richmond and Covington, with the exception of that portion which is known as the Blue Ridge railroad, extending from the eastern to the western base of the Blue Ridge, a fraction over sixteen miles, which was constructed by the state of Virginia, and the said company was operating the whole line of road between Richmond and Covington when it entered into the contract referred to. The states of Virginia and West Virginia, as authorized by acts of their several legislatures, contracted with the said Virginia Central to construct and operate a railroad from Covington to the Ohio river, which would be a continuation or extension of the Central railroad, and authorize the said company to change its name from the "Central" to the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company. And the said company claims that all its property is now exempt from taxation under the following clause of the contract, viz: "And the said Virginia Central Railroad Company having undertaken and contracted to construct the said railroad on the terms and conditions aforesaid, it is hereby declared and certified that the said company shall hereafter be known as "The Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company," and is entitled to all the benefits of the charter of the Covington and

Ohio railroad, and to all the rights,
348 interests *and privileges which, by the statutes aforesaid, are conferred upon the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company when organized."

To divest a state of such an essential attribute of sovereignty, of such an important function of government, the terms of relinquishment should be clear and unequivocal. In Richmond Railway Co. v. The Louisa Railway Co., Mr. Justice Grier refers to former decisions of the court with approbation, "that public grants are to be construed strictly; that any ambiguity in the terms of the grant must operate against the corporation and in favor of the public, and the corporation can claim nothing but what is clearly given by the act"—quoted by Redfield, supra, in note on page 432. And that eminent jurist says: "The language of Taney Ch. J. in Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Peters. R. 420, 548, is still more specific, and, in my opinion, eminently just and conservative: 'the continued existence of a government would be of no great value, if by implications and presumptions it was disarmed of the powers necessary to accomplish the ends of its creation, and the functions it was designed to perform transferred to privileged corporations.' " "The conclusion of the learned judge and eminent jurist is," says C. J.

Redfield, whose own opinion carries with it almost the weight of authority, "that no claim in any way abridging the most unlimited exercise of the legislative power over persons, natural or artificial, can be successfully asserted, except upon the basis of an express grant, in terms, or by necessary implication" (note on p. 433). The express grant here is, "to all the benefits of the charter of the Covington & Ohio railroad," and "to all the rights, interests and privileges which by the statutes are conferred upon the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company when organized."

349 *Was the immunity of exemption from taxation upon the entire line of its road from Richmond to the Ohio river, now claimed by the defendant in error, conferred by the charter upon the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company, or by statute upon the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company when organized? If it was not, the defendant cannot claim the immunity under the contract before recited.

By an act of the 15th of February 1853 the legislature of Virginia had authorized the construction of a railroad from Covington to the Ohio river, entirely on state account. Appropriations had been made to the work and large sums expended upon it, when it was arrested by the late war. Soon after the conclusion of the war, a portion of the projected road falling within the limits of the new state of West Virginia, which had been carved from the state of Virginia by the sword, the legislatures of both states enacted laws, the same in terms, to construct the railroad between Covington and the Ohio river, by an incorporated company, to be styled the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company; and the law declared that no taxation upon the property of the company, that is, of the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company, shall be imposed by the state, until the profits of the company shall amount to ten per centum a year upon its capital. The property and rights and franchises of the Central Railroad Company were taxable to the company by the state at the date of this act. The state surely will not be held to have surrendered that right by the act aforesaid providing for the organization of a company, to be styled "The Covington and Ohio Railroad Company," and exempting its property from taxation. There is no such relinquishment by express terms, or by the remotest implication.

350 *And by the terms of the contract we have seen that there is no express grant to the Central Railroad Company, either by its old or its new name, of an exemption from taxation at all. It was only an agreement that the Central Railroad Company should have all the benefits which were given by the charter to the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company, which were, that no taxation upon the property of the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company shall be imposed by the state. Was the property, which the state now asserts the right to tax, ever property of the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company? Never! Then it was not exempted from taxation by the charter of the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company; and the benefit of no such exemption is conferred by the terms of said contract. Nor can it be implied that because the state was willing, that any party who would construct and operate a railroad from Covington to the Ohio river should be relieved from all tax upon the road and its rolling stock or its earnings; that if the Central Railroad Company should construct and operate it, the said company should have that immunity, and in addition exemption from all taxation upon its road from Richmond to Covington (then taxable), its rolling stock and all its property, real and personal, and its earnings. Surely it could not be claimed that such was a necessary implication. The reverse is a more reasonable inference, to wit: that the state did not intend to relinquish a subsisting right of taxation upon a road which was already completed and in operation, and upon a work which was then the exclusive property of the state, which the new company had the privilege of purchasing, but for the purchase of which it does not appear that even a proposition was then pending, and which it did not until some time afterwards *acquire, and then by a separate contract, in which it does not appear that there was any stipulation for exemption from taxation.

Is exemption from taxation, conferred by the statutes referred to in the contract, upon the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company when organized? There is a provision in section 14 of the act of March 1st, 1867, that it shall have the right any time within two years after its organization to purchase the stock held by the state in said company, and that it may also purchase the right of the state in and to the Blue Ridge railroad in the way prescribed by the act. But we have been unable to find any provision in the statutes referred to exempting the Chesapeake and Ohio Company when organized from taxation.

We are therefore clearly of opinion that the state has neither by act of the legislature nor by contract relinquished her right to tax that portion of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad which lies between the city of Richmond and the town of Covington, and all the property of the company, real and personal, belonging to that part of its road, and a fair proportion of its rolling stock and of the earnings of the company, to be ascertained and apportioned in such mode as shall be prescribed by law; and that to this end it was entirely competent for the legislature to call for the information required by the several acts referred to in these proceedings.

But these acts require not only reports from the companies of the several matters designated therein; they also provide that the several companies shall be collectors for the state of the taxes imposed on them respectively, and shall at the time fixed for making their several reports pay into the treasury the taxes imposed thereon by law.

352 *The first of these causes, No. 1, is a motion against the defendant for a fine for failing to make report as required by the act, and to pay the tax imposed by section 8 of the act, approved July 9, 1870; that is, two and one-half per centum of its net earnings for each quarter of a year, to be ascertained and paid into the treasury as prescribed by section 48 of the act for the assessment of taxes approved June 29, 1870. That section provides, that if the road is only in part within the commonwealth, the report shall show what part is within the commonwealth, and what proportion the same bears to the entire length of the road. The said eighth section can therefore be fairly construed to impose a tax only upon the proportion of the net earnings of that portion of the road which is within this commonwealth. But as we have seen, a small portion of that is part of the Covington and Ohio portion of the Chesapeake and Ohio road, and which was exempted by contract from taxation until the profits of the company shall amount to ten per centum a year upon its capital, which has not yet been realized. The court is of opinion, that the tax imposed by this section on that portion of the defendants' road which lies between Richmond and Covington is valid, and binding upon the company. But if it can be construed to impose a tax upon any part of the company's road west of Covington, or upon the net income derived therefrom, which probably was not intended by the legislature, being embraced in the contract of exemption, it would be unconstitutional and void.

No. 2 is a motion for a fine for failing to report, as required by section 91 of the act of February 1871, and to pay the tax imposed by section 8 of act of March 24, 1871. The tax imposed by this section is fifty cents on every hundred dollars of the 353 estimated *value of the real and personal property of the company, and one-half of one per centum upon the net earnings of the company per annum in excess of $1,000, to be ascertained and paid into the treasury as prescribed in section 91 of the aforesaid act. This act is obnoxious to the objection made to the act of the previous year, so far as it imposes a tax upon any part of the Covington and Ohio portion of the defendants' road.

No. 3 is a motion for a fine for failing to report, as required by section 91 of the act of March 15, 1872, and to pay the tax imposed by section 8 of the act of April 3, 1872. The tax imposed by this section is the same imposed by the act of the previous year upon the real and personal property of the company, and so far as it is a tax upon the property of the company, belonging to that portion of the road lying west of Covington, for the reasons already stated, it is invalid. But it is provided, that in lieu of the property tax there shall be paid upon the indebtedness of the company, out of all interest due and payable upon such indebtedness after the passage of said act, a tax equivalent to fifty cents upon the one hundred dollars of the market value of the bonds upon which such interest shall accrue, the market value of such bonds to be ascertained as of the first day of May in each year. And the company is required to retain and collect for the state the said tax out of the interest upon its indebtedness, as well as to bonds held and owned by non-residents as residents of this state, and deducting the tax from the interest, to pay the same into the treasury, to the credit of the auditor of public accounts, within thirty days after such interest shall have become due or payable. And the tax so retained and paid over shall

354 and *offset in favor of said company against any claim for such interest.

And it is further provided, that the bonds, out of the interest upon which such tax shall be retained, shall be exempt in the hands of their owners from the tax imposed by this state upon property and from assessment. It is contended by the learned counsel for the defendant that this tax is unlawful. It is obviously a tax upon the creditor, whether resident or non-resident, which is required to be paid by the debtor, whose domicil is within the state.

It seems to be pretty well settled by judicial decisions, that the stock or bonds of a corporation of this state, which are owned and held by inhabitants of another state, are not liable to taxation here. Judge Redfield says: "As to shareholders' interest, and all choses in action, they are personal to the creditor, and only taxable in the place of his domicil. The creditor cannot be taxed in the place of the domicil of the debtor, unless he resides there; nor can the debtor be taxed for the debt, and allowed to deduct the tax from it; nor can a tax against the creditor be imposed upon the property which is pledged or mortgaged to secure a debt, and thus made to apply towards the payment of the debt. The legislature has no power to tax choses in action held by non-residents. They are altogether beyond their jurisdiction. Redfield's Law of Railw., p. 461. Angel and Ames on Corp. § 458, is in accord. Judge Cooley says in his recent work on Taxation, page 15, "corporations, it is conceded, may be taxed like natural persons, on their property and business. But debts owing to foreign creditors, by either corporations or individuals, are not the subject of taxation. The creditor cannot be taxed, because he is not within the jurisdiction, and the debts cannot be taxed in the debtor's hands, through any 355 fiction of the law, *which is to treat them as being for this purpose, the property of the debtors." And the doctrine as thus laid down is supported by the current of decisions. We must conclude, therefore, that so much of the said act as imposes a tax upon the indebtedness of the company, which is held and owned by non-residents, is invalid and void.

No. 4 is a proceeding under the same acts of assembly last named, which continued in force for the year 1873, and must be disposed of in the same way.

The tax upon the indebtedness of the company is not continued by the act of 1874. The tax imposed is a tax upon the real and personal property within the commonwealth, and an income tax, and if the same is confined to the portion of the Chesapeake and Ohio Company's road which lies between the city of Richmond and the town of Covington, the court is of opinion that the act by which it is imposed is constitutional and valid. We are of opinion, therefore, to reverse the judgment of the circuit court with costs in each case.

Judgment reversed.

356 *Hatorff v. Wellford, Judge.*

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

Homestead Exemption—Rights of Widow.†—A householder dying leaving a widow, without having had a homestead assigned him in his lifetime, his widow remaining unmarried, is entitled to claim the same and have it assigned to her.

This was an application to this court by Mrs. — Hatorff, widow of — Hatorff, deceased, for a mandamus to compel the judge of the circuit court of the city of Richmond, to allow her a homestead out of the estate of her deceased husband. The case is sufficiently stated by Judge Staples in his opinion.

Don P. Halsey, for the petitioner.

Wm. Green, Esq., at the request of the court, presented his views in writing on the constitutionality of the homestead act.

Staples, J. The petitioner filed her application in the circuit court for the city of Richmond, stating that her husband was in his lifetime a householder and the head of a family; that he died on the 13th of January 1875, leaving the petitioner, his widow, and five infant children surviving him; that her said husband was possessed only of personal estate at the time of his death, and that he had not selected or claimed the homestead to which he was entitled. The petitioner therefore prayed the court

357 to appoint commissioners to *assign the same to her in said property in the manner prescribed by law.

The circuit court refused the application, and thereupon the petitioner applied to this court for a mandamus. In response to the rule issued against him, the judge of the circuit court has filed an answer stating at length the ground upon which his refusal was based. It is necessary to a proper understanding of these grounds we should have before us so much of the act of 1870 as relates to the subject-matter of inquiry. That act is contained in chapter 183, Code of 1873, page 1168. The tenth section under which this question arises is as follows:

*For monographic note on Homestead Exemption, see end of case.

†Homestead Exemption—Rights of Widow.—See Helm v. Helm, 30 Gratt. 404, and note, citing the principal case; Reed v. Bank, 29 Gratt. 719, and note, where the principal case is again cited. Scott v. Cheatham, 78 Va. 82, quoted the following proposition from the principal case: "A householder dying leaving a widow, without having had a homestead assigned him in his lifetime, his widow remaining unmarried is entitled to claim the same and have it assigned to her." See also, Strange v. Strange, 76 Va. 322.

"If any such householder or head of a family shall have departed this life since the adoption of the present constitution, leaving a widow or infant children, and such homestead shall not have been selected or assigned in the lifetime of said householder, she, if remaining unmarried, or they, if she marry or die before such selection, shall be entitled to claim the same, and the court shall appoint commissioners to assign the same in the same manner that commissioners are appointed to assign dower."

There are other provisions in this section, but it is unnecessary to cite them, as they have no immediate connection with the matter before us.

The learned judge of the circuit court is of opinion that this section applies only to the case of a husband or head of a family dying between the adoption of the constitution and the date of the act of July 1870. According to his view, until the passage of that act, or some legislation by the general assembly, the provisions of the constitution on the subject of the homestead were wholly inoperative. If, therefore, the householder or head of the family had died between *the two periods mentioned, his widow or minor children would be deprived of the benefit secured by the constitution. To obviate this difficulty, the section already quoted was adopted, authorizing them to do what the householder or head of a family might and probably would have done had he been allowed to assert his claim to the homestead exemption.

But where the householder or head of the family lived until after the passage of the act, and refused or declined to avail himself of the provisions intended for his benefit, his widow and minor children, claiming only through him, cannot be permitted to appropriate his estate to the exclusion of creditors and the adult children. And so the legislature must have intended in adopting the section under consideration. The peculiar phraseology of that section furnishes very persuasive evidence of this intention: "If any such householder or head of a family shall have departed this life since the adoption of the present constitution;" words obviously referring to some antecedent period. Whereas if the design had been to give the law a prospective operation, the additional words, "or shall hereafter die," would have been inserted, thus placing the legislative intent beyond all cavil or controversy.

This is the construction given to the statute by the learned judge of the circuit court, and in support of it he has presented a very elaborate argument. We are however of opinion that this is not the correct construction. The question is one of the first impression in this state, and from its general importance deserves careful consideration. The phraseology of the section under consideration, it must be confessed, is somewhat peculiar, but the difficulty of ascertaining its precise meaning is more apparent than real.

The learned counsel for the petitioner has called our *attention to several statutes in the Code of 1860, in which the same peculiarity of language is employed. For example: In the first section of chapter 174 it is provided that "where any suit, motion, or other proceeding shall have remained pending a year," &c. There are other instances of the same kind not necessary to be quoted, all of them manifestly having a prospective operation. Similar examples may be found in the chapter relating to the homestead exemptions, as in the sixteenth section, wherein it is provided that "Any householder or head of a family who shall have failed to select and set apart a homestead and personal property according to the provisions of the foregoing sections, and who desires to avail himself of the benefit of the exemptions provided for in this act," &c. These examples are sufficient to show that the peculiar phraseology used in the tenth section has been adopted in the other sections—that it has no special significance, certainly none restricting its operation to the case of the death of the householder before the passage of the act. That very section (the tenth), in connection with the twelfth section, furnishes unmistakeable evidence that it was designed to extend to cases occurring after its adoption. After declaring, as already stated, that if the householder or head of a family shall have departed this life since the adoption of the present constitution, leaving a widow or infant children, it proceeds as follows: "And such homestead shall not have been selected or assigned in the lifetime of said householder." Now this section is not only superfluous but senseless, if the section is to be confined to the case of the householder dying before the passage of the act, because until that act was passed it was impossible for the householder to make selection or assignment of the homestead. It will also be observed that the *twelfth section, after making provision for the terms and conditions upon which personal estate may be held in the place of the homestead, declares, "And in case no such selection (that is of personal property) shall have been made, and the householder be dead, leaving a widow or infant children, she may, if unmarried, make such selection, or if she be dead or married, the infant children may, &c., by their guardian or their next friend make the same." This is the law which controls when there is no real estate. It is the law under which the petitioner claims. It omits the words, "since the adoption of the present constitution," used in the tenth section, upon which so much reliance is placed. The language is substantially the same as that of the sixteenth section, which confessedly extends to every class of cases.

And it would seem impossible to resist the conclusion that the object of the provision was to give to the widow and infant children the privilege of selection in all cases where the husband or father had failed to exercise it in his lifetime. If we construe these sections (the tenth and twelfth) as speaking, not from the date of their enactment, but as at the death of the householder or head of a family, and as applying to all cases arising since the adoption of the constitution, whether the death occurred before or after those sections were adopted, we have some explanation of the peculiar phraseology just adverted to.

This construction is much strengthened by a careful consideration of the policy which has dictated these homestead exemptions—a policy suggested by considerations both of a political and a benevolent character. Political, because the homestead is regarded as tending to foster views of manly independence in the citizen, and as contributing to the settlement of a 361 country *by inviting immigration, and by holding out inducements to the improvement of property. Benevolent, because the possession of the homestead is the security of the family against the improvidence, the follies and the imprudences of the husband or father. Householder, or head of a family, are the terms pervading these homestead enactments—a home for the destitute and helpless, secure from financial ruin and the pursuit of creditors. These objects cannot, in many cases, be accomplished. They may be, and often are, defeated by the act of the owner himself, because the legislative power cannot interfere with a man's dominion of his own property while he lives. Homestead laws prevail, perhaps, in a large majority of the states. No one can look through their various statutes without at once seeing that "protection of the family" is one of the leading ideas upon which these exemptions are founded. In some of the states the claim of the widow and minor heirs to a homestead in the estate of the father has been the subject of animated discussion, and in every instance it has been sustained by the courts. O'Docherty v. McGloen, 25 Texas R. 67; Hode v. Johnson & Heath, 40 Georgia, 439; Roff, Sims & Co. v. Johnson, Ibid, 555.

Are we to suppose that the legislature of Virginia intended to depart from the policy of the other states in this particular?

There is nothing in the various statutes on the subject to indicate that purpose. On the contrary, upon looking through them, we find everywhere the evidences of a design to confer upon the family the benefits of these exemptions in the lifetime and after the death of the owner of the estate. It is a great mistake to suppose that the husband or father, because he fails to claim the homestead in his lifetime, thereby 362 *manifests a purpose or wish that his estate shall be appropriated to the claims of his creditors. His failure to assert his claim may, and often does, proceed from very different causes—want of intelligent counsel, or sudden death, or from a spirit of procrastination, the besetting infirmity of many minds. But whatever may be his motive, if he has done no act to encumber or charge his estate, it is competent for the legislature to prescribe how and to whom the estate shall go after the death of the owner, and the terms and conditions upon which it is to be used and enjoyed. If the homestead laws be founded upon considerations of sound policy and humanity, there is as much reason for extending their benefits to the widow and minor children, where the householder has failed to claim the exemption, as in those cases in which he has asserted his claim. Deprived of the protection and the support of the head of the family, the widow and minor children have but stronger claims to the benefits of the homestead. In many cases there is no real estate, and of course no dower, as in the case before us, and the little pittance is often swept away by the claims of creditors, while the widow, with a family of helpless children, is turned adrift to struggle with poverty and misfortune. It is difficult to believe that the legislature could ever have designed so palpable a departure from the spirit of the constitution and the whole object and policy of the homestead exemptions. If the householder has waived his privilege, that, of course, presents an entirely different question. But if he has not waived it, and has merely failed to claim it while he lived, his widow and children should be permitted to assert the claim, as he would probably have done under different circumstances. At all events, the court ought so to decide until the legislature

363 shall otherwise provide in *terms plain and unmistakable. Such intention cannot be gathered from doubtful and obscure phrases of equivocal import.

No one can justly complain of this, certainly not the creditor, as he trusted the debtor with full notice of the consequences which might result from the credit he was extending. It is said, however, that the effect of this construction is practically to exclude the adult children from their share of the ancestor's estate, and to give it to the widow and minors, when there are no debts, and in many instances contrary to the wishes of the head of the family. It is sufficient to say that the mere appointment of commissioners settles nothing, except perhaps that the widow and minor children are entitled to select and set apart a homestead in the estate of the father or head of the family. It certainly does not adjudicate the rights of the creditors or the adult heirs unless they are parties to the proceeding. Whether the homestead when assigned is good against them, depends upon a variety of questions to be determined in some direct proceeding for that purpose. It has been held in Georgia and North Carolina certainly, and probably in other states, that the object of the homestead laws is the security of the debtor and his family against the demands of the creditor, and where there are no debts the homestead cannot be held against the adult children, and the assignment does not preclude them from asserting their title to a share of the estate. Kemp v. Kemp, 42 Georgia 523; Hager v. Nixon, 69 North Car. 108.

Upon these questions this court is not now called on to express any opinion. It is sufficient to say that the petitioner and her children are entitled to have assigned them, and to hold exempt from levy, seizure or sale so much of the personal estate of 364 the father or *head of the family as he himself would be entitled to select and set apart were he now living and asserting his claim to the homestead. They stand, with reference to his creditors, in the same position they would have occupied had the householder himself asserted his claim, and then died, leaving the petitioner and the minors surviving him.

In regard to the constitutional question the court had at one time some difficulty. The doubt was, whether it was competent for the legislature consistently with the constitution to allow the widow and minor children a homestead in the property of the householder, when he himself had failed to claim an exemption in their behalf. It is proper to say that this difficulty has been removed by a more careful consideration of the subject, and more particularly by the arguments of the learned gentlemen who addressed the court on that subject. The provisions in favor of the widow and minor children are believed to be in accordance with the spirit of the constitution and the whole object and policy of the homestead exemption.

I. DEFINITION.

Homestead exemption is the right given by law to a debtor to retain a portion of his property without its being liable to execution at the suit of a creditor, or to a distress for rent. Bouvier's Law Dict. 734; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law 525.

II. ORIGIN.

Homestead exemption is a creature of constitutional provision or statutory enactment; the common law did not recognize this right of the debtor. However, the privilege thus conferred by the legislature or constitution is not in derogation of the common law; for at common law though the right did not exist, neither was the real estate of a debtor ever liable to execution. In Virginia and West Virginia, the state constitutions are the source and origin of the right of homestead exemption. The constitutional provision of Virginia (Va. Const. Art. XI) is self-executing, that is, itself confers the right and no legislation would be necessary to carry the right into execution; but the West Virginia provision (W. Va. Const. Art. VI, Sec. 48), is not self-executing, but confers on the legislature the power to provide for the right of homestead exemption by statute. See Reed v. Union Bank, 29 Gratt. 719; Moran v. Clark, 30 W. Va. 358, 8 Am. St. Rep. 66, 4 S. E. Rep. 303. In the latter case the court said: "From our investigation of this interesting subject, these propositions are naturally deduced: That the people in their constitution, as far as future debts may affect it, have the right to provide for any sort of homestead guarded as they please, subject to restrictions, or without restrictions, to prohibit the owner of the homestead from encumbering it, or to permit it to be done as in their wisdom they may see fit. That, unrestricted by the constitution, the legislature may exercise the same power. That where there is neither constitutional nor statutory prohibition as incident to the right of ownership, the owner of the homestead may sell or encumber it; and such sale or encumbrance will be as valid as if the property had not been set aside as a homestead. That, if the statute points out any particular mode by which the owner of the homestead may sell or encumber it, to that extent his power over it is restricted; that particular mode must be adopted, or the sale or encumbrance is invalid. That, where the constitution or statute is silent on the subject, a waiver of a debtor's right to claim personal property as exempted from execution, where attempted to be made by an executory contract as a clause in a note or contract, 'waiving the benefit of all exemption laws,' is ineffectual, and will not be enforced. That the sale of the homestead under a deed of trust, or under a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage thereon, is not a 'forced sale' within the meaning of the constitution which exempts a homestead from 'forced sale.'" See also, Spedel v. Schlosser, 13 W. Va. 686; Holt v. Williams, 13 W. Va. 704.

III. CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTES.

A. Power of Legislature in General.—In Helm v. Helm, 30 Gratt. 409, the court said: "Generally the legislature cannot impair or abridge the rights of homestead secured by the constitution; it may enlarge such rights and confer them upon a class of persons not specifically mentioned in the constitution. Indeed, this question has been definitely decided by this court. In Hatorff v. Wellford, 27 Gratt. 356, the precise question as to the constitutionality of the act which confers the right to claim a homestead upon the widow or minor children of a decedent, who had not claimed and set apart his homestead, in his lifetime, was raised and argued in that case, and this court decided in favor of the constitutionality of the act, and of the right of the widow to claim the homestead in the estate of her deceased husband." See also, Moran v. Clark, 30 W. Va. 358, 8 Am. St. Rep. 66, 4 S. E. Rep. 303; Va. & Tenn. C. & I. Co. v. McClelland, 98 Va. —, 36 S. E. Rep. 479.

B. Discretion of Legislature.—In Wray v. Davenport, 79 Va. 25, the court, in passing upon the constitutionality of a statute providing for the manner and conditions of setting apart homestead exemption, said: "The homestead is given by the constitution of Virginia; but the constitution provides that the legislature shall prescribe in what manner and on what conditions the said householder or head of a family shall thereafter set apart and hold for himself and family a homestead out of any property hereby exempted, and may, in its discretion, determine in what manner and on what conditions he may thereafter hold for the benefit of himself and family such personal property as he may have, and coming within the exemption hereby made." See also, White v. Owen, 30 Gratt. 51.

C. Restraints on Alienation of Homestead.—In White v. Owen, 30 Gratt. 52, the constitutionality of a statute, requiring the wife's joinder in a conveyance or incumbrance of the homestead, and thus to that extent imposing a restraint on the alienation of the homestead, was questioned. The court expressly declined to decide the point, though in a dictum it was strongly intimated that the statute went beyond the requirements of the constitution. But in the late case of Va. & Tenn. C. & I. Co. v. McClelland, 98 Va. —, 36 S. E. Rep. 479, it was held that the statute (Va. Code, § 3634), providing that the homestead of a married man shall not be aliened except by joint deed of himself and wife, is not an unreasonable restriction of the form of alienation of the homestead, and does not impair the benefit intended to be given by the constitution. Accordingly a deed of the homestead by the husband alone was held to be void, and conveys nothing to the grantee.

D. Retroactive Homestead Exemption Laws.—The article in the constitution of Virginia, and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, giving a retroactive effect to the homestead exemption laws, are unconstitutional and void, being in repugnancy to that caused in the federal constitution which provides that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. In the Homestead Cases, 2 Gratt. 295, the court said: "The true doctrine is that such property as was subject to execution at the time the debt was contracted must continue subject to execution until the debt is paid, so long as it remains in the hands of the debtor." To the same effect, see Russell v. Randolph, 26 Gratt. 713; Com. v. Ford, 29 Gratt. 687; Huffman v. Leffell, 32 Gratt. 44; Taylor v. Stearns, 18 Gratt. 244; Antoni v. Wright, 2 Gratt. 858; Spedel v. Schlosser, 13 W. Va. 686; Moran v. Clark, 30 W. Va. 358, 8 Am. St. Rep. 66, 4 S. E. Rep. 303.

E. Statutory Exceptions to Right of Homestead.—Statutory exceptions to the right of homestead are void if in conflict with the state constitution. In Donaldson v. Voltz, 19 W. Va. 156, in passing upon the constitutionality of a statute whereby debts due for rent were excepted from the benefit of homestead exemption, the court said: "The constitution makes certain debts exceptions; but as to all other debts the exemption applies. If it was in the power of the legislature to except a debt due for rent from the benefit of the exemption, it could except all other debts and thus deprive the debtor of all the benefit intended by the constitution." See also, Moran v. Clark, 30 W. Va. 358, 8 Am. St. Rep. 66, 4 S. E. Rep. 303.

F. Statute Allowing Waiver of Homestead.—In Reed v. Bank, 29 Gratt. 719, the statute which authorizes the waiver of the homestead exemption was held to be constitutional; and that if a party, executing his bond or note, waives his homestead exemption as to the bond or note, neither he nor his wife can set up said homestead exemption as against said bond or note. See also, Linkenhoker v. Detrick, 81 Va. 44; Scott v. Cheatham, 78 Va. 82.

Where, however, there is no statutory authority for a waiver, it is held that a clause in a note or contract, "waiving the benefit of all exemption laws," is ineffectual, and will not be enforced. Moran v. Clark, 30 W. Va. 358, 8 Am. St. Rep. 66, 4 S. E. Rep. 308.

G. Registry of Homestead Declaration.—It is held constitutional for the legislature to enact, that the declaration of intention to set apart homestead must be recorded, and that the homestead shall be liable for debts contracted before the recording of such declaration. See Reinhardt v. Reinhardt, 21 W. Va. 82; Spedel v. Schlosser, 13 W. Va. 686; Holt v. Williams, 13 W. Va. 704.

IV. CONSTRUCTION OF HOMESTEAD LAWS.

A. In General.—Homestead exemption being laws remediable in nature and not being in derogation of the common law, are liberally construed by the courts. Calhoun v. Williams, 32 Gratt. 18, 34 Am. Rep. 759; Moran v. Clark, 30 W. Va. 358, 8 Am. St. Rep. 66, 4 S. E. Rep. 308; Wilkinson v. Merrill, 87 Va. 513, 12 S. E. Rep. 1015.

The homestead exemption was intended to benefit in succession three classes: first, husbands; second, parents; and third, infant children of deceased parents. Each class steps into the shoes of its predecessor, and has the right to assert the homestead, subject to such regulations as are prescribed by law; but if the property has been obtained, from or through the preceding class or classes, the homestead will be subject to such liens and equities, as surrounded it in the hands of its predecessor. Reinhardt v. Reinhardt, 21 W. Va. 82; Spedel v. Schlosser, 13 W. Va. 686; Holt v. Williams, 13 W. Va. 704.

B. Status of Homesteader.

1. "Householder" or "Head of a Family."—In Calhoun v. Williams, 32 Gratt. 18, 34 Am. Rep. 759, it was held that the terms "Householder" and "Head of Family" have the same meaning, in the provisions of the constitution and statutes relating to homesteads. This case also decided, that an unmarried man who has no children or other persons dependent on him living with him, though he keeps house, and has persons hired by him, living with him, is not a householder or head of a family, within the meaning of these terms as used in the constitution and laws of Virginia, and therefore is not entitled to the homestead exemption as provided by the same. See also, Kennerly v. Swartz, 83 Va. 704, 3 S. E. Rep. 348.

2. After Dissolution of Family.—The above case of Calhoun v. Williams, 32 Gratt. 18, 34 Am. Rep. 759, was overruled in the later case of Wilkinson v. Merrill, 87 Va. 513, 12 S. E. Rep. 1015. In the former case, though not noticed by the court in its opinion, close perusal of the facts discloses that when the homestead was set apart, the person setting it apart was a homesteader in the purview of the homestead laws; for although unmarried he was under a legal obligation to support persons living with him. When suit was instituted against the debtor for the subjection of his homestead to the payment of his debts, the persons dependent upon him had died, and the court held that he had consequently ceased to be a "householder" and that the property set aside as his homestead was liable for his debts. The facts of the case of Wilkinson v. Merrill, 87 Va. 513, 12 S. E. Rep. 1015, were precisely similar, (as far as to the question under consideration is concerned), to those of Calhoun v. Williams, 32 Gratt. 18. The debtor had set apart his homestead when he was the head of a family. The family had consisted of his grandson whom he supported and who lived with him, but who had since died. The court held, however, that notwithstanding the fact that the family has ceased to exist, yet that the homestead having been legally set apart by the debtor while he was the head of a family, the exemption did not cease upon the dissolution of the family; but being for the benefit of the householder as well as the family, it continued to exist for the benefit of the householder himself. See further on this subject, 2 Va. Law Reg. 170.

C. "Debt Contracted."—In Whiteacre v. Rector, 29 Gratt. 714, it was held that a homestead exemption cannot be claimed against a fine due the commonwealth, imposed for a violation of the criminal laws. The court, construing the phrase "debt contracted," said: "A fine imposed by the statute for the violation of a law cannot, in any just sense, be designated as a debt contracted. The ordinary meaning of the word 'debt' is a sum of money due to another by contract; and a 'debt contracted' necessarily means that a debtor has come under a voluntary obligation to a creditor. The relation of debtor and creditor implies, as of course, that the one has given credit to the other in a contract. It would be a solecism and absurd to say that a fine imposed as a punishment for a penal offence was a debt contracted. Contracted how? Contracted with whom? 'A debt contracted' implies the voluntary action of debtor and creditor founded on a valuable consideration. This cannot be predicated upon a fine imposed by way of punishment. The very essence of a contract is taken away when the amount is assessed as a penalty for violated law claimed by the state as a punishment for crime."

D. "Forced Sale."—The sale of a homestead, under a deed of trust or under a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage thereon, is not a "forced sale" within the meaning of the constitution which exempts a homestead from a "forced sale." Moran v. Clark, 30 W. Va. 358, 4 S. E. Rep. 308, 8 Am. St. Rep. 66; Holt v. Williams, 13 W. Va. 704.

E. "Laboring Man."—In Farinholt v. Luckhard, 90 Va. 986, 44 Am. St. Rep. 953, 21 S. E. Rep. 817, a mail carrier was held to be a "laboring person" within the meaning of the constitutional provision, declaring that the homestead exemption shall not be claimed as against any demand for services rendered by a laboring person.

F. Compliance with Statutes.

1. In General.—Where the statute prescribes a particular method to be adopted with respect to the claiming, selecting, and setting apart of the homestead, such provisions must be complied with, since the entire right to homestead exemption depends upon statutory authority. Wray v. Davenport, 79 Va. 19.

2. As to Valuation of Property.—In Williams v. Watkins, 92 Va. 680, 24 S. E. Rep. 223, it was held that, although a homestead deed may fail to sufficiently describe and value certain property intended to be set aside as exempt, this will not affect the validity of the deed as to other property which is accurately described and valued.

V. EXCEPTIONS TO RIGHT TO CLAIM HOMESTEAD.

A. Fiduciary Debts.—It was held in Com. v. Ford, 29 Gratt. 683, that a public officer who had made default in accounting for taxes of the state placed in his hands for collection, was not entitled to homestead exemption as against the state, in a suit for the recovery of such funds. The decision was based upon that provision of the constitution and the statutes passed in pursuance thereof, whereby the benefit of homestead is expressly excepted from fiduciary liabilities. See also, Whiteacre v. Rector, 29 Gratt. 714.

B. Torts.—In Burton v. Mill, 78 Va. 468, it was held that the homestead exemption cannot be claimed against a demand for damages for breach of promise to marry, which is not a "debt contracted" but a quasi tort.

C. Non-Residents.—The privilege of homestead is accorded under the constitution of Virginia only to citizens of this state while they remain such. Change of domicile from the state, puts an end to the homestead privilege. Domicile is residence with no intention of removal. Mere absence, however long, effects no change of domicile. Hence a person, who having resided in Virginia with his family had set apart his homestead does not lose or abandon his homestead exemption by a temporary removal from the state with animus revertendi. The burden of proof of change of domicile, in such case, is on him who alleges it. Lindsay v. Murphy, 76 Va. 428; Blose v. Bear, 87 Va. 178, 12 S. E. Rep. 294.

D. Purchase Price of Property.—The constitution and laws of Virginia not allowing property to be claimed as exempt for debts contracted for the purchase price of such property or any part thereof, where a large portion of goods claimed as exempt has not been paid for, and are so mingled with those that have been, as to put it out of the power of the vendors to distinguish between the two, the onus is on the person claiming the exemption, to show which has been paid for; and he failing to do this, they will be treated as not having been paid for as far as the homestead deed is concerned, and therefore not exempt under the law. Rose & Wife v. Sharpless & Son, 33 Gratt. 158.

E. Shifting Stock of Goods.—The court in Rose v. Sharpless, 33 Gratt. 159, touched upon the question as to whether a homestead can be claimed in a shifting stock of goods, but declined to decide the point.

VI. RIGHTS OF WIDOW OF HOMESTEADER.

A. As against Creditors of Husband.—In Hanby v. Henritze, 85 Va. 177, 7 S. E. Rep. 204, a householder, having set apart his homestead, died leaving debts. It was held that the homestead continued after his death as against his creditors, for the benefit of his widow and minor children, by virtue of the statute authorizing such continuance. In Hatorff v. Wellford, 27 Gratt. 356, it was held that the widow has the right to claim homestead against creditors of her husband though the latter had not set it apart in his lifetime. See also, Helm v. Helm, 30 Gratt. 404; Scott v. Cheatham, 78 Va. 82.

B. As against Husband's Heirs.—The case of Helm v. Helm, 30 Gratt. 404, held, that a widow, whose husband has died leaving no children and no debts, and has not claimed the homestead in his lifetime, is not entitled to a homestead in his estate as against his heirs. Nor, according to Barker v. Jenkins, 84 Va. 806, 6 S. E. Rep. 459, can she claim a continuance of the homestead where her husband had legally set it apart during his lifetime, and died leaving no debts.

VII. RIGHTS OF HEIRS OF HOMESTEADER.

In Hanby v. Henritze, 85 Va. 177, 7 S. E. Rep. 204, it was held that, though the benefit of the homestead continues in favor of the infant children of the homesteader, yet that such exemption expires when the children have all attained their majority, and the property becomes liable for the ancestor's debts, provided, of course, his wife be then dead. See also, Williams v. Watkins, 92 Va. 684, 24 S. E. Rep. 223.

VIII. PRIORITIES.

A. Liens Attaching before Status is Acquired.—One who becomes a householder or head of a family after a judgment lien has fastened on his land, is not entitled to a homestead exemption in the land paramount to that lien until its discharge. See also, Cabell v. Given, 80 W. Va. 760, 5 S. E. Rep. 442; Kernerly v. Swartz, 83 Va. 704, 3 S. E. Rep. 348.

B. Liens Attaching before Homestead is Claimed.—In Blose v. Bear, 87 Va. 177, 12 S. E. Rep. 294, it was held that a judgment lien attaching before homestead claimed in land cannot be enforced against the homestead during the existence of the exemption. The reason for this, as given by the court, "is found in the character of our homestead exemption, which unlike that in most of the other states, is not so much an estate in land itself as a right of occupancy which cannot be disturbed while the homestead character exists. This same general view, although expressed in different language, has been repeatedly taken by this court. Scott v. Cheatham, 78 Va. 82; Lindsay v. Murphy, 76 Va. 428."

C. After Expiration of Homestead.—After the expiration of the homestead exemption, liens which attached before the homestead was claimed, are to be paid out of it in the order of their priority in point of time. Blose v. Bear, 87 Va. 177, 4 Va. Law Reg. 28, 12 S. E. Rep. 294.

D. Between Conflicting Liens.—A judgment creditor who has the first lien on real estate of his debtor worth nearly $30,000, has the right to subject the same to the payment of his judgment, though his debt contains no waiver of the homestead exemption, and the subsequent liens which are paramount to the homestead are in excess of the whole value of the land. If the debtor claims the homestead it may be set apart to him, and the judgment paid out of the residue, but, if necessary to pay subsequent liens which are paramount to the homestead, the land so set apart should be subjected. Strayer v. Long's Ex'or, 93 Va. 606, 26 S. E. Rep. 409.

E. Between Assignee of Homestead and Execution Creditor.—A householder who has set apart as exempt, under what is known as the homestead law, a chose in action, may assign the same as collateral security for a debt, and his assignee will take priority over an execution issued on a debt in which the homestead is not waived, though the assignee had notice of the execution. The property is free from the lien of the execution. A householder may claim an exemption in a debt which has been assigned by him as collateral security for a loan, and the exemption will prevail over an execution on a debt in which the homestead is not waived, and the assignee be entitled to priority over the execution creditor. Williams v. Watkins, 92 Va. 680, 24 S. E. Rep. 223.

IX. WAIVER OF HOMESTEAD.

A. By Contractual Stipulation.—It was held in Williams v. Watkins, 92 Va. 680, 24 S. E. Rep. 223, that a householder may waive the benefit of his homestead exemption by contractual stipulation, and that thereby the property set apart as exempt will be subject to the debt. See also, Long v. Pence, 93 Va. 584, 25 S. E. Rep. 508, where it was held that the waiver of the homestead exemption in the body of a negotiable note was only a waiver as to the particular obligation in the body of the note, and not as to the implied obligation growing out of an assignment of the note, and, as against the liability of the assignor to the assignee, the former may claim the benefit of the exemption, although the note declares that "the drawer and endorsers each hereby waive the benefit of our homestead exemptions."

1. Form of Waiver.—See 8 Va. Law Reg. 309, on this subject.

B. Effect of Waiver.

1. Application of Property to Homestead-Waived Debts.—The entire estate of a decedent is liable for homestead-waived debts, but the portion not embraced in the homestead deed shall be first subjected. After the exempted property has been set apart, the residue shall be applied towards paying all the decedent's debts ratably, unless there be some entitled to priority under the statute (Va. Code 1873, ch. 126, § 25), and after such residue has been exhausted the exempted property may be subjected to pay such portions of the homestead-waived debts as remain unpaid. Strange v. Strange, 76 Va. 240; Scott v. Cheatham, 78 Va. 82.

2. No Lien.—In Scott v. Cheatham, 78 Va. 82, it was held that a creditor with a waiver of homestead is not a lien or preferred creditor, but merely has the right to apply the homestead to satisfy his debt so far as unpaid, after taking his ratable share of his debtor's estate outside the homestead.

C. Failure to Waive.—Where for certain reasons a supersedeas bond should contain a "waiver of homestead," the omission of such waiver may make the bond insufficient, but not void, and it may be made sufficient at any time on motion of the defendant in error. Acker v. A. & F. R. Co., 84 Va. 648, 5 S. E. Rep. 688.

X. ALIENATION OF HOMESTEAD.

A. Generally.—Where there is neither constitutional nor statutory prohibition as incident to the right of ownership, the owner of the homestead may sell or incumber it; and such sale or incumbrance, will be as valid as if the property had not been set apart as a homestead. Williams v. Watkins, 92 Va. 680, 24 S. E. Rep. 223; Moran v. Clark, 80 W. Va. 358, 4 S. E. Rep. 308, 8 Am. St. Rep. 66.

B. By Deed of Trust to Secure Debts.

1. General Rule.—In White v. Owen, 30 Gratt. 43, it was held that a deed of trust to secure a debt, executed by the debtor and his wife, conveying real and personal property which had been previously set apart as homestead, has priority over the homestead exemption, and the said property may be subjected to satisfy the debt.

2. Homestead Expressly Reserved.—A deed of trust to secure debts conveys certain real estate, and the grantor reserves in it, to himself and his family, all exemptions and property allowed by the constitution of Virginia and laws passed in pursuance thereof, and in addition thereto all exemptions allowed under the bankrupt laws. Held, the reservation is legal and valid. Brockenbrough v. Brockenbrough, 31 Gratt. 580.

C. In Fraud of Creditors.

1. General Rule.—Since general creditors have no specific charge or lien upon the homestead, it follows naturally that a sale or incumbrance of such homestead cannot generally be fraudulent as against them. Simon v. Ellison (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 860; Williams v. Watkins, 92 Va. 680, 24 S. E. Rep. 223.

2. Qualification.—In Rose v. Sharpless, 33 Gratt. 153, though the facts of the case do not show that the creditors had any lien upon the homestead, it was held, that, where a "householder or head of a family," executes a homestead deed as a part and in furtherance of a design to hinder, delay and defraud his creditors in the recovery of their just debts, such deed will be vitiated and invalidated by such conduct.

2. Where Fraudulent Conveyance Annulled.—Where a fraudulent conveyance of property is subsequently annulled at the suit of creditors, the grantor is not estopped as against the creditor to assert his right to homestead in the said property. Hatcher v. Crews, 83 Va. 371, 5 S. E. Rep. 221; Marshall v. Sears, 79 Va. 49; Shipe v. Repass, 28 Gratt. 716; Boynton v. McNeal, 31 Gratt. 456; Mahoney v. James, 94 Va. 180, 26 S. E. Rep. 384.

XI. NEW HOMESTEAD.

A. Generally.—A householder, in 1874, by deed recorded, declared his intention to hold exempt as his homestead property to the amount of $1,468. He afterwards removed to another town in another county, and becoming indebted, he created, in 1878, a new homestead of property valued at $1,844.50, by a recorded deed, wherein he assailed the validity of his original homestead deed, without accounting for the amount thereof, thereby seeking to hold exempt from his creditors, an aggregate of $3,312.50 worth of property; and obtained an injunction to restrain sale under executions levied. Held, that the debtor must be charged with the $1,468, the value of the property exempted by the original homestead, but that he is entitled to enough of the property levied on to make the aggregate of his exemptions equal the amount of $2,000, and no more.

The primary object of the statute (Va. Code 1873, ch. 183, § 7), is to authorize the sale of a homestead and the investment of the proceeds in a new one, to be held on like terms as the original, but there is nothing in the statute to authorize a debtor, who has squandered one homestead, to appropriate another against subsequent creditors. However, the debtor may supplement the original homestead by a new one, so as to make the aggregate equal, but not exceed, the maximum $2,000; but this privilege, once fully exercised, is regarded as exhausted. The creation of a new homestead, determines the original one, if the property exempted under the latter remains in existence; at all events, the debtor will be required to account for the value of the old homestead in ascertaining the amount he is entitled to under the new. Oppenheimer v. Howell, 76 Va. 218; Hatcher v. Crews, 83 Va. 371, 5 S. E. Rep. 221.

B. Estoppel.—If a householder has squandered, or does not account for, the property set apart for his original homestead he cannot found a claim to a new one by attaching the validity of the deed, of his own making, which created the original. Oppenheimer v. Howell, 76 Va. 218.

XII. EFFECT OF BANKRUPTCY OF HOMESTEADER.

A. In General.—M was adjudged a bankrupt and discharged in 1873. He claimed as his homestead certain land, which the bankrupt court allotted him, but without notice to his creditors, who were lienors by judgments recovered in 1857. Those creditors in 1878 filed their bill in the state court to enforce their liens on said land, but did not make T, who was the assignee in bankruptcy of M. a party. M demurred, answered, and pleaded that the enforcement of the judgments was barred by the lapse of twenty years between their date and the filing of the bill. The demurrer was overruled and decree of sale entered, but the commissioner of sale was not directed to give the usual bond. On appeal by M,—held, under the bankrupt laws of the United States the legal title to the bankrupt's homestead does not vest in his assignee; and if it does vest, eo instante the homestead is allotted him, the legal title thereto reverts to him. Therefore the assignee had no interest in the subject of this suit and was not a necessary party. The assignee had not even a reversionary interest in the subject of this suit, as by Code 1873, p. 1171, ch. 183, § 8, if the homestead be not aliened in the householder's lifetime, after his death it continues for benefit of his widow and children, until her death or marriage, and after her death or marriage until the youngest child becomes twenty-one years of age; after which it passes to his heirs or to his devisees, not subject to dower, but subject to all his debts. In no event does it pass to his assignee in bankruptcy. Judgments obtained and docketed, and liens acquired before the debtor is adjudicated a bankrupt, may, after he is discharged as such, be enforced in the state courts at the instance of persons who were not parties to the bankrupt proceedings, on lands owned by him before his adjudication and allotted him for his homestead. McAllister v. Bodkin et als., 76 Va. 809.

B. Where Part of Homestead Claim Allowed.—The fact that a homesteader has claimed his homestead in a bankrupt court and been allowed part thereof by the assignee, does not affect his claim to the balance. Hatcher v. Crews, 83 Va. 871, 5 S. E. Rep. 221.

XIII. RIGHTS OF CREDITORS AFTER EXPIRATION OF EXEMPTION.

In Hanby v. Henritze, 85 Va. 177, 7 S. E. Rep. 204, it was held that the statute, allowing the homestead, after its expiration, to be sold for all the debts of the householder, which accrued before or after it was set apart as exempt, is constitutional; and that accordingly after the expiration of the exemption, the homestead may be subjected by creditors.

XIV. WHEN RECEIVER OF HOMESTEAD PROPER.

When the guardian of non-resident infants, asks to transfer their money homestead out of the state, it is proper for the court to appoint a receiver to take charge of such funds and invest them, so that the principal may be forthcoming when the youngest of such infants becomes of age. Clendenning v. Conrad, 91 Va. 410, 21 S. E. Rep. 818.

XV. PLEADING AND PRACTICE.

A. In Equity.—In Russell v. Randolph, 26 Gratt. 713, the court held that, under the provisions of Code 1860, ch. 177, § 2, it was competent for a judgment creditor, without having sued out an execution at law, to impeach by bill in equity, a deed of homestead and a deed of trust, upon the ground of fraud, actual or constructive.

1. Amendment of Bill.—Where the homestead exemption expires pending a bill to sell the reversion of such homestead, the bill may be so amended as to pray for a sale of the entire estate. Hanby v. Henritze, 85 Va. 177, 7 S. E. Rep. 204.

B. Authority of Lower Court When Case Remanded.—A decree on former appeal remanding to the circuit court with direction to assign to the debtor his homestead, the proceeds of a deed that has been annulled as fraudulent, concludes with these words, "unless he appears not entitled to the same on other grounds." The circuit court disregarded the new objections presented by the creditor to such assignment, and made the assignment. Held, there is no error in the order of the circuit court, the intention of those words not being to open up the matter at large to new objections.

C. Claim of Homestead Pendente Lite.—In a suit by judgment creditors to subject their creditor's land to the payment of their debts, pending the cause the debtor is declared a bankrupt, and he applies for a homestead under the constitution and laws of Virginia and the acts of bankruptcy of the United States. Held, the court should proceed to adjudicate upon the right of the debtor to his homestead. Barger v. Buckland et als., 28 Gratt. 852.

D. Bond for Forthcoming of Corpus.—In Williams v. Watkins, 92 Va. 680, 24 S. E. Rep. 223, it was held that the court will not require security to be given for the forthcoming of the principal of the exemption at the expiration of the homestead period. So also, neither is the widow nor the infant children of a householder required to give such forthcoming bond. Mahoney v. James, 94 Va. 176, 26 S. E. Rep. 381.

E. Appellate Jurisdiction.—An appeal lies to a decree allowing a widow homestead for her lifetime in the realty of her deceased husband, though the appellant's interest therein be less than the minimum jurisdictional sum, as the controversy concerns title to land. Barker v. Jenkins, 94 Va. 805, 6 S. E. Rep. 459. In Smith v. Rosenheim, 79 Va. 540, where the amount in controversy was less than $500, the supreme court of appeals was held not to have jurisdiction, notwithstanding the fact that in the progress of the cause in the court below a claim of homestead in the land was asserted by the defendant.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

Banks — Dissolution — Creditor's Bill — Receiver.—The bank of P. was ruined by the late war; and no officers of the bank have been elected nor has there been a meeting of the board since April 1865, and it has done no business since, and in fact it had been abandoned and ceased to exist. In April 1866 H and M. suing as well for themselves as for all the other stockholders, creditors and depositors, &c. filed their bill against the bank and the president for a settlement of its affairs and a distribution of its assets. The court appointed a receiver in the case, and in June 1866 there was a decree for an account. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same.—It is a proper case for a creditor's suit.

2. Same—Purchaser of Debts—Rights.—A debtor of the bank purchasing debts due, from the bank after the decree for an account, is only entitled to stand in the shoes of his assignor, and receive his proportion of the assets realized.

The principal case is cited in the following cases: Universal, etc., Co. v. Binford, 76 Va. 109, where it is distinguished; Nunnally v. Strause, 94 Va. 200, 26 S. E. Rep. 580, where it is approved; Richmond, etc., Ry. Co. v. N. Y., etc., Ry. Co., 95 Va. 389, 28 S. E. Rep. 571.

3. Same—Action by Receiver—Record as Evidence.—

In an action by the receiver against a debtor of the bank, the record in the chancery cause is evidence for the plaintiff.

This is a supersedeas to a judgment of the circuit court for the county of Pittsylvania, rendered in an action of debt brought by Coalman D. Bennett, "who styles himself treasurer of the Pittsylvania Savings Bank at Pittsylvania court-house," against William A. J. Finney, Jesse Carter and Philip Thomas, surviving promisors of themselves and George Craft, deceased.

The action was brought in April 1868, on a note for $3,100, dated Pittsylvania court-house, March 23d, 1861, signed by said

Finney, Carter, Craft and Thomas,
366 *payable sixty days after date to said Bennett, treasurer as aforesaid, or order, without offset for value received. The declaration was in the usual form. The defendant demurred to the declaration, plead payment, and filed an account of offsets. The plaintiff joined in the demurrer, and also joined issue on the plea. On the 6th day of November 1868, the court overruled the demurrer; and the issue on the plea of payment was tried by a jury, which found a special verdict, in which were set forth all the facts proved upon the trial, in substance as follows:

The defendants proved three certificates of deposit in the said bank, two by Elizabeth Stone, one for $1,662.33, No. 1890, dated September 25th, 1858, and the other for $2,696.66, No. 1836, dated August 2d 1858, and the third of the said three certificates of deposit was by Watoley Anderson, for $605.51, No. 2521, dated October 8, 1861; and proved that said three certificates were regularly assigned in writing to William A. J. Finney, the principal debtor in the note aforesaid, before the commencement of the suit; which said certificates and assignments were embodied in the special verdict. And the defendants further proved, that the amount as shown on the back of each of said certificates, No. 1890, and No. 1836, is still due and unpaid by the said Pittsylvania Savings Bank, to-wit: on No. 1836 the amount due as of the 17th January 1865 is $2,695.66, and on No. 1890 the amount due as of the 16th of June 1864 is $1,662.33, and that the amount due on certificate 2521 as of the 16th of August 1866 is $619.40.

The jury further found, that the defendant Finney acquired all the said certificates after the order of account was made at May term 1866, in a chancery suit now pending in the circuit court of Pittsylvania, 367 in *the name of George W. Hall and R. W. Martin, against Pittsylvania Savings Bank and others. But that the certificates No. 1836 and No. 1890 were acquired before the order of injunction in said cause, made at October term 1867. And the jury found that the said suit in chancery is still pending, and they set out in their verdict the record of the said suit; from which it appears that,

The bill was filed on the 28th of April 1866 by Geo. W. Hall and R. W. Martin, suing as well for themselves as for all the stockholders, depositors and creditors of the Pittsylvania Savings Bank, who will come forward and contribute to the costs of the suit; and the said bank, and Richard White, late president thereof, were made defendants to the bill. The complainants among other things, state in substance in their bill that the said bank was incorporated on the 15th of March 1850 by an act of the legislature of Virginia; that it went into operation soon after its charter at Chatham, in the said county, and was prosperously engaged in the business of banking until during the war, when it became utterly insolvent; that it has been broken up and destroyed by the result of the war, since which it has not been engaged in business, nor has there been any election of officers, nor any meeting of the board of directors since April 1865; and that by mutual consent, and general understanding of all parties interested, it had been abandoned, and in fact ceased to exist; that there was "a large amount of money due to the said bank by negotiable notes discounted by it while doing business, most of which are well secured, or at least were so," &c. "That these notes, all the books, records and effects of the bank are now in the hands of some one or more of the officers last elected by the direct-368 ors; *that no one has been appointed by the directors or stockholders to take charge of the said notes, books, records and effects, in order to wind up and settle its accounts, but they remain in the custody in which they were when the bank ceased to do business;" that the stockholders and depositors in said bank are very numerous (some of them infants, and others laboring under disability), so that they could not all be united in a suit without great inconvenience, expense and delay; that the complainants are depositors and creditors of said bank, and directly interested in the assets belonging to it; and that there are no liens on the same. They therefore pray that defendants be made to the bill as aforesaid; that all the stockholders, depositors and creditors who will come forward and prove their claims, &c., be allowed to do so, and to have the benefit of any decree that may be made in the suit; that a receiver may be appointed, all necessary accounts settled, the debts due to the bank collected, the rights of all parties interested ascertained, its debts paid, and the proceeds divided among complainants and the other parties entitled thereto; that an injunction might be awarded (if necessary) to stay proceedings at law against said bank; and for general relief.

On the same day on which the bill was filed, the defendant, Richard White, late president of the bank, filed his answer; in which he admitted all the allegations of the bill to be true, and submitted to the court to make such decree as might seem right and proper.

On the 28th day of April 1866, on the petition of the said complainants, the judge of the said court, in vacation, appointed a receiver in the case, who was the said Coalman D. Bennett.

On the 9th of June 1866, there was a 369 decree in the *cause for an account by a commissioner, of the debts due by and to the bank, and that the commissioner should, by notice, set up at the courthouse door of the county, and inserted for at least four successive weeks in a newspaper published in the town of Danville, warn and require all creditors of the bank to prove their debts or demands before him at such time as he should appoint for taking said accounts, and the commissioner was directed to make report to the court.

It appears that commissioner Neal made a report in pursuance of the said decree of the 9th of June 1866, but a copy of it is not in the record. It appears, however, that he ascertained and reported that the creditors of the bank would be entitled to 48 45-100 per cent. on the amount of the debts due to them respectively by the bank, as their ratable portions of the assets of the bank which were available, but that only 30 per cent. on said amount could for the present be paid to them.

On the 9th of November 1867 the cause came on again to be heard on the papers formerly read, and the report of commissioner Neal, to which there was no exception; when the court—Wingfield J.—delivered the following opinion:

This is a suit brought by certain depositors in and creditors of the bank, suing for themselves and all other creditors of the bank, upon the ground that the bank has, by the calamities of the late war, become insolvent, ceased to do business, and is practically dissolved.

Has a court of equity jurisdiction in the premises? is a question raised by the counsel of some of the creditors of the bank, who suppose they have obtained a legal advantage over others by the assignment 370 of *their certificates of deposit to debtors of the bank, to be used as offsets against the debts due from the latter to the bank, and they insist that the remedy of the creditors of the bank is by actions at law, and that this court has no jurisdiction.

This bill seems to have been brought upon the principle of a creditor's bill against the estate of a deceased insolvent debtor in the hands of his personal representative.

In considering the subject, one cannot but observe the striking analogy between the creditors of an insolvent corporation and those of an insolvent decedent's estate in the hands of his personal representative. In each case the remedy of the creditor at law is complete—if he obtained his judgment, he became entitled to satisfaction to the exclusion and prejudice of the rest. In each case the maxim, that equality is equity, disposes the court to intervene—in each case the discovery of assets and the settlement of intricate accounts is necessary before justice can be done. Insolvency to a corporation produces in many respects the same consequences that death does in the case of a natural person. Its labor in its vocation ceases—its vital functions are ended—it no longer does or can pursue the objects of its creation. It goes into liquidation, which to it is administration on its effects. A natural person who has become insolvent still lives and works, and may retrieve his fortune. The insolvent corporation has ipso facto ceased its life work forever: that which formed the motive power for carrying it on (the value of its stock) is annihilated; its property can only be used for the payment of its debts. When this is done, it is a thing of the past.

The creditors of the bank are of various classes. Some of them are under the 371 disability of coverture *and infancy, and could not sue at law in their own names. Many of the certificates are for funds deposited by orders of chancery courts, upon which no proceedings can be taken until the chancery courts can have an opportunity to authorize proceedings at law.

Meanwhile the other creditors may, by motion on ten days' notice, unless restrained, acquire liens which will absorb the whole of the assets. Upon the whole, I think that upon the same principle that a court of equity has jurisdiction in the case of a creditor's bill or bill of conformity (if there were no other ground), the court of equity ought to take jurisdiction in cases like this.

But it may be said, there is no precedent for such a case. Concede this. Yet it does not follow that when a case arises which comes within the principles of its constitution and ordinary jurisdiction, the court ought not to take cognizance of it because it is a new case and not to be found in the reports. It ought to be borne in mind that these savings banks are institutions of recent origin; and that no question as to the administration of their effects, upon going into liquidation upon insolvency, has probably gone up to the higher courts; and an eminent recent chancellor of England has declared, that "it is the duty of every court of equity to adapt its practice and course of proceedings, as far as possible, to the existing state of society, and to apply its jurisdiction to all new cases, which, from the progress daily making in the affairs of men, must certainly arise." (Lord Cottenham, 4th Mylne & Craig, 141.) The right of a court of equity to jurisdiction in such a case seems to have been held by an eminent Virginia judge in the case of Barksdale v. Finney, 14 Gratt. 338. The president, Judge Allen, apparently replying to an argument from the bar, at 372 *page 360, says: "They (the appellees) were asserting their individual claim against their personal debtor. It is not a creditor's bill, calling for the distribution of the assets of an insolvent corporation among all entitled to participate." &c. It seems clear, from the context in which this occurs, that it was his opinion that a creditor's bill would lie for the distribution of the assets of an insolvent corporation.

The fact that the creditors of the bank had each a remedy by action at law, furnishes (I think) no sufficient objection to the jurisdiction of a court of equity in cases like the one under consideration. If so, the same objection might have been originally taken to a bill of conformity, or a creditor's bill. It was not because the creditors had not a remedy at law that the courts originally took jurisdiction of a creditor's bill. But it was to prevent an unseemly struggle between the creditors, each trying to get an advantage over the other, so as to appropriate the assets to himself, to the exclusion of others who had equal claims in justice to satisfaction, and also to administer the assets equally among all the creditors, upon the principle that equality is equity. (See 1 Story's Eq., § 547), where he states the equity of the creditor's bill thus: "As executors and administrators have vast powers of preference at law, courts of equity ought, upon the principle that equality is equity, to interpose upon the application of any creditor by such a bill to secure a distribution of the assets without preference to any one or more creditors." (And the same reason applies here: for the officers of the bank, in whose hands the assets were left, might have applied them to the payment of such of the creditors as they preferred, and left the others wholly unpaid.) Therefore, on a creditor's bill, as soon as the court has taken jurisdiction 373 *and made a decree for an account, it will prevent any of the creditors from proceeding elsewhere by enjoining them, so as to protect the executor against vexatious and unnecessary suits, and to prevent them also from disturbing the equitable distribution of the assets. This is the doctrine of the court, although the assets are legal exclusively. § 560. It was adopted at a time when the order of distribution was unsettled, so that diligence gave preference. And this fact, that diligence gave preference, was the cause of the courts intervening by injunction to prevent it. Creditors who had not sued are restrained from suing at law at all; and those who have brought suits are stayed at whatever stage their actions may happen to be when the decree for an account passes. 1 Story's Eq., § 549; Daniel's Chan. Prac. 1844. The principle is stated by Story as follows: "The object of the court is to compel all the creditors to come in and prove their debts before the master, and to have the proper payments and discharges made under the authority of the court, so that the executor may not be harassed by a multiplicity of suits, or a race of diligence be encouraged between different creditors, each striving for an undue mastery and preference."

This principle of the courts of equity was established in the reign of Charles the Second, and we have seen it enacted into statute law in our own time. And (I think), therefore, that causes similar in principle ought to be administered and governed by the same rule. There is besides (on grounds of public policy) another reason why courts of equity ought to take jurisdiction in cases like this. These corporations are not created merely for the benefit of the corporators, but for the public convenience and benefit—to encourage industry, frugality and economy in the people, 374 *and to afford them a safe and profitable depository for their earnings and small gains as their industry and other exigencies of their business may enable them to acquire and lay up for future emergencies; and we all know, in fact, that the capital put into these savings banks by those who are called the actual stockholders is but a mite compared with the operative capital put in by the depositors, who, if not actual, may be regarded as quasi stockholders, in having afforded the principal means upon which the bank operated; and as the effects of the bank, when it ceased to do business, arose from a common fund contributed by all of the depositors, they have in justice a right to follow it where it was invested by those who had the custody and management of it by the bank while it was in existence; and when recovered, it ought by the rule of right and justice to be divided ratably among all who so contributed, and ought not to be appropriated by a part of them to the exclusion of the others.

But if the court had not jurisdiction upon the principle of its constitution and ordinary jurisdiction, it would, in this case, have a substantive ground of jurisdiction to prevent the vast multiplicity of suits at law that must necessarily have arisen out of the subjects of this suit.

The court having (as I have endeavored to show) properly taken jurisdiction of the whole subject, appointed a receiver to take possession of the assets of the bank, and hold them for the benefit of all its creditors, decreed an account to be taken of the assets and of the debts due to and from the bank. The next question is, will it protect the funds which it has taken into its own hands? Unless it will, the result will be that while some of the creditors are properly proceeding upon a case of equitable jurisdiction to obtain 375 *from this court such a disposition of the whole case as would be equal justice to all, and while they are prohibited by known rules from suing, as to the same subject of litigation in a court of law, others who have been cited to establish their claims in this forum may refuse, and proceed to frustrate all the work of the commissioner, destroy the principle of equity, absorb the entire subject which the court has undertaken to deal with, and thus wholly to defeat its jurisdiction. This can never be allowed by the court. To do so would be to abandon fundamental maxims upon which its jurisdiction is founded, and by which its relation to the law courts are regulated.

The order sequestering the effects of the bank, and putting them into the hands of a receiver for the benefit of all its creditors, and the decree for an account, for the purpose of their equitable distribution, were, in effect and principle, very much the same as an assignment in bankruptcy; and each of the creditors then became entitled to his ratable share of such effects, and had no right afterwards, by a contrivance with a debtor of the bank, to get his whole debt by the assignment of his certificate of deposit to such debtor, so as to enable him to get the whole amount allowed as an offset, and thus deprive other creditors of getting even their ratable proportion of the assets. Such a shift and inequitable contrivance ought not to be tolerated in a court of equity, and will not be allowed in this case. Therefore that statement of the commissioner which allows credits to the debtors of the bank for certificates of deposit acquired by them after the decree for an account was passed, only for their equal ratable proportion of such certificates, is approved, and the holders of such certificates will be enjoined from offsetting or pleading, or 376 attempting to offset against *the debts due from them any greater amount of any such certificate than the equitable ratable amount allowed thereon by the commissioner in the statement approved by the court as aforesaid.

The receiver will be directed to sell the letter-press mentioned in the report, and to proceed to collect the debts in his hands, and to report in order to a distribution.

The court approved and affirmed a portion of said report, and disapproved and rejected another portion thereof, and decreed among other things that the said receiver should proceed to collect the debts in his hands due to said bank, and to pay the costs of the suit, &c. And all parties who had appeared and proved their claims before the commissioner, or whose debts were reported by said commissioner in the statement approved by the court as aforesaid, were enjoined and restrained from finally setting off, or offering to set off, against their debts to the bank a larger amount than their pro rata share of the assets of said bank; but for the present were enjoined from so setting off a greater amount than 30 per cent. of their debt so reported as due to the bank, the court for the present reserving the difference between 30 and 48 45-100 per cent. on the amount of said debt, as a fund to cover any deficiency that may occur on account of the failure to collect any of said debts on account of the insolvency of the debtor or otherwise, and to insure equality in the distribution of the effects of the bank among all those entitled thereto; but for the present, and until the further order of the court, the said receiver was directed not to collect from the debtors who hold such offsets, and whose offsets at par appear to be equal to, or greater 377 than, the amount of *their debts to the bank, any greater sum on the amount of such debts than the excess over

48 45-100 per cent. thereon; but in all cases where debtors have such offsets, he is to allow them credit at present for 30 per cent. on the amount as ascertained to be due from the bank to the holder of such offsets by the report aforesaid; and the receiver was directed to report his proceedings to the court.

And the jury further found that the certificates of deposit aforesaid were included by commissioner Neal in a report made by him in pursuance of an order made in the chancery suit aforesaid, and approved by the said court; but that the said certificates were never presented by the holder thereof, or by any other person before said commissioner, or attempted to be proved. If upon the above facts the defendants were only entitled to a credit of 30 per cent. upon their certificates of deposit, then the jury found for the plaintiff the debt in the declaration mentioned, with interest from the 25th of May 1861, subject to a credit of $1,648.37, as of the 16th of August 1866. But if the defendants were entitled to the full amount of their said certificates, then the jury found for the defendants.

The court rendered judgment for the plaintiff upon the special verdict.

An exception was taken by the defendants to the ruling of the court in the progress of the trial, in admitting the record of the suit in chancery aforesaid as evidence, and instructing the jury that they should only allow 30 per cent. of the certificates filed by the defendants, by way of offset to the plaintiff's demand. An exception was also taken by the plaintiff to another ruling of the court in the progress of the trial, but it is not material to the decision of the case.

To the judgment aforesaid the de-
 378 fendants applied *to a judge of the late district court at Lynchburg for a supersedeas; which was accordingly awarded.

Dabney, Tredway & Barksdale, for the appellants.

Ould & Carrington, for the appellee.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

After stating the case he proceeded:

The only question in this case is, whether the bill in the proceedings mentioned, filed on the 28th day of April 1866 by George W. Hall and R. W. Martin, suing "as well for themselves as for all the stockholders, depositors and creditors of the Pittsylvania Savings Bank, who will come forward and contribute to the costs of the suit," is what is called a "creditor's bill," or has the same effect? For if it is, or has, it is perfectly certain that the decree for an account, rendered in the suit on the 9th day of June 1866, operated as a decree in favor of all the creditors of the said savings bank, all of whom might come forward and prove their claims under the said decree, and placed them all on an equality in the distribution and application of the assets of the said bank, except such as at the time of said decree may have had specific liens on the said assets or any part thereof, which liens would, of course, remain in full force, notwithstanding such decree. So that in that view the plaintiff in error, Wm. A. J. Finney, having obtained the assignments of the certificates of deposit in the proceedings mentioned after the date of the said decree of the 9th day of June 1866, acquired only the rights to which his assignors were then entitled in regard to the assets of the said bank, which were to a ratable proportion of *the said assets with the other creditors of the bank, which ratable proportion has been accorded to the said assignee by the judgment of the court below; and the said judgment ought therefore in that view to be affirmed.

The learned judge of the court below, in an able opinion delivered by him, and made a part of one of the decrees rendered in the said chancery suit, maintained this view; and as we entirely concur in that opinion, we adopt it as our own, which makes it unnecessary for us to say much, if anything more, in the case. Besides the cases referred to in that opinion, that of Exchange Bank of Va. &c. v. Knox &c., 19 Gratt. 739, since decided by this court, has an important bearing upon the question; and much of what is said by Judge Christian in that case, in whose opinion the other judges concurred, is strongly confirmatory of the same view; and so are the cases, or many of them, referred to by the counsel for the appellees, among which are the cases cited from 21 Howard 112, and 22 Id. 380. The nature, object and effect of a "creditor's bill," and the course of proceeding therein, are set forth in 1 Story's Eq., sections 547-550; and in Story's Eq. Pl., sections 99-104. See also the cases referred to in the notes to those sections. That this case comes within the same reason, and is subject to the same principle, which apply to an ordinary creditor's bill, in regard to the distribution of assets among creditors, seems to us to be very clear. Here is a case in which, by a sudden and extraordinary convulsion of war, a bank has been rendered insolvent, and totally unable to prosecute its business. Its stockholders have been deprived of all their property, and the remaining assets of the bank are insufficient to pay its debts, or even fifty per cent.

380 *of their amount, if apportioned ratably among the creditors. There has been no recent election of officers of the bank; and there is no responsible person in charge of its assets, whose duty it is to collect and apply them to the payment of the debts of the bank; and there is danger of a general scramble among the creditors for priority, by bringing suit, obtaining judgment, and suing out execution against the bank. What more suitable case could there be for a creditor's bill, and the application of the rules and principles which apply to it?—and for the application of the rule of equity, that "equality is equity?" Here is a trust fund, amounting, it is said, to about $100,000, without a trustee, and distributable among a large number of creditors. The law affords no adequate remedy for such a case, none that will not produce the greatest confusion, and end in the rankest injustice. Is it not a case which loudly calls for equitable relief—the institution of a suit by some in behalf of themselves and all the other creditors, the appointment of a receiver, and the collection of the assets and distribution of them ratably among all the creditors? Surely cases already decided by courts of equity warrant this court, if not expressly, at least by strong implication and analogy, in pursuing that course. And if there be no case expressly in point, it is the province of a court of equity to provide a suitable and adequate remedy for such a case. A necessity for new remedies, or rather for the application of old remedies to new cases, is continually arising in the progress of affairs and the transactions of mankind; and our system of law and equity is so wisely and happily framed, that it can be moulded to suit any new case which may arise. The opinion of Lord Cottenham, in the case of Taylor v. Salmon, 4 Myl. & Cr. 133, 381 141 (18 Eng. Ch. *R.), referred to by the judge of the court below, is well expressed on this subject. "I have before taken occasion to observe," says his lordship, "that I thought it the duty of this court to adapt its practice and course of proceeding as far as possible to the existing state of society, and to apply its jurisdiction to all those new cases which, from the progress daily making in the affairs of men, must continually arise, and not from too strict an adherence to forms and rules established under very different circumstances, decline to administer justice, and to enforce rights for which there is no other remedy."

In regard to the admissibility of the record of the chancery suit aforesaid, as evidence in the case, we are of opinion that there is no error in the ruling of the court below, as mentioned in the bill of exceptions tendered by the defendants. They were in effect parties to that suit, and conclusively bound by it.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the court below, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

382 *Boaz's Adm'or v. Hamner & als.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Executors—Freed Slaves—Liability for Price of.—Testator dies in 1850, and directs all his estate to be sold as soon as convenient. The executor has the personal property appraised on the 21st of November, and sells it the next day. Four slaves, appraised at $3,700, are sold for $4,955, and bought by one of the legatees living in Missouri. This legatee was not present, but the executor, on his request, bought them for him. The purchaser executed his bond for the price, but without security; and the executor retained possession of the slaves until they were freed by the results of the war. The executor and his sureties must account for the slaves at the price for which they were sold by him.

2. Same—Duty to Take Security for Credit Sales.*—It is always the duty of a personal representative to demand and take good security of every purchaser on credit of property of the decedent, wherever the purchaser may reside, and whatever may be his pecuniary circumstances.

This was a suit in equity in the circuit court of the city of Lynchburg, brought in September 1866, by Charles H. Hamner and others, three of whom were infants suing by their next friend, against Robert J. Boaz in his own right and as executor of Meshack Boaz deceased, and his sureties and others, to have an account of his administration, and payment of the amount due from him to the legatees of Meshack Boaz deceased. The account was referred to a commissioner, who made his report; and the only question in the cause was as to the liability of the executor for four slaves, purchased by Emmett D. Boaz, who lived in the state of Missouri.

Meshack Boaz, of the county of Appomattox, died *in 1859, leaving a will, which was duly admitted to probate in the county court of that county at its November term of that year; and Robert J. Boaz qualified as his executor. The first item in the will is as follows: 1st. After my death, as soon as convenient, I desire my executor to advertise and sell my whole estate, both real and personal, on such reasonable credit as he may think best for the interest of my estate, and out of the proceeds of such he pay all my just debts and funeral expenses.

The testator then proceeds to give his estate, in five equal parts, to the children of his five children, except one-fifth which he gives to his son Emmett D. Boaz. David Boaz, one of the sons, was dead, and his children lived in Missouri.

The executor proceeded promptly to have the property appraised and sold. The appraisal took place on the 21st of November 1859, when the four slaves bought by Emmett D. Boaz were appraised at $3,700; and the sale was made the next day upon a credit of six months, when these slaves were sold at $4,955.

The executor filed with his answer two letters of Emmett D. Boaz; the first dated October 23d, 1859, in which, after saying he cannot be present at a sale in November, he says, "I would earnestly request you and all the legatees to make such disposition of the blacks as would gratify their wishes and best secure their comfort and happiness. You are hereby particularly desired to buy any or as many blacks as may desire to be bought by me, to the full amount of my interest and the interest of David's children in the entire estate; and in addition to my and David's children's interest, you are requested to use $2,000 in buying the negroes belonging to the estate that may 384 *desire to be purchased by me; provided you can make an arrangement to wait for the money for one year, at an interest not exceeding ten per centum per annum. Any legatee wishing to buy any of the blacks, to gratify the blacks, shall have the full and entire amount of my interest and the interest of David's children in said blacks for one year, by paying such interest as may accrue by law. Buy no negro for me unless they request it."

At the sale the executor bought for Emmett D. Boaz the four slaves, and retained them in his possession until the terms of sale should be complied with. This, however, was never done: Emmett Boaz gave his own bond for the amount without security; and on the 1st of January 1861 he paid to the executor $550. The balance of the purchase money was not paid; and the slaves, except one that died, were retained by the executor until they were emancipated by the results of the war.

The cause came on to be heard on the 29th of November 1867; when the court held, that the executor should be charged with the sum for which the said four slaves were sold on the 22nd of November 1859; and made a decree against the executor and his sureties, in favor of the respective plaintiffs and a trustee of the legatees of one-fifth of the estate, for the amount appearing due to them by the report. And directed the executor to render a further account.

Robert J. Boaz having died, his administrator applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Bocock, for the appellant.

J. Alfred Jones and Kirkpatrick & Blackford, for the appellees.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

385 *The court is of opinion that the circuit court did not err "in holding the executor chargeable with the value of the slaves, John, Frederick, Polly and Sally, and with interest thereon." It was the plain duty of the executor to sell them. The first clause of the will expressly declares, that "After my death, as soon as convenient, I desire my executor to advertise and sell my whole estate, both real and personal, on such reasonable credit as he may think best for the interest of my estate, and out of the proceeds of such he pay all my just debts and funeral expenses." Accordingly, very soon after the probate of the will and the qualification of the executor, and during the same month, to wit: on the 22d day of November 1859 he sold the slaves at public auction on a credit of six months, when Emmett D. Boaz, residing in the state of Missouri, one of the sons, and five residuary devisees and legatees of the testator, and also testamentary guardian of the children of David Boaz, a deceased *Duty of Executors to Take Security for Credit Sales.

—This duty is imposed by statute. Va. Code, § 2851. See also, 3 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 578; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 718; Cogbill v. Boyd, 77 Va. 450; Southall v. Taylor, 14 Gratt. 269; Miller v. Holcombe, 9 Gratt. 665.

son of said testator, the said children, also residing in the said state, became the purchaser of the said slaves, through the agency of the said executor, at the price of $4,955. It was the plain duty of the executor to demand and take of the purchaser bond with good surety for the purchase money. That the purchaser was a man of ample means, if he really was so (though that fact does not appear from the record), makes no difference. It would make none if the purchaser had resided in the state of Virginia. It is always the duty of a personal representative to demand and take good security of every purchaser on credit of property of the decedent, wherever the purchaser may reside, and whatever may be his pecuniary circumstances. That the purchaser resides abroad, if it be not a reason for increased strictness in this respect, is certainly no reason for the 386 *contrary. When therefore the purchaser in this case failed to comply with the terms of sale, by giving bond with good security for the purchase money, in a reasonable time after the sale, it was the plain duty of the executor to resell the slaves at the risk and loss of the purchaser. Had he performed this plain duty the estate would have sustained no loss by the transaction, but would have realized the full market value of the slaves at that time. Suppose the executor, though required by the will to sell the testator's whole estate as soon as convenient after his death, had not sold the slaves at all, but retained them as his testator's estate, until they perished in his hands by the result of the war, would he not have been clearly liable to the estate for their value at the time when they ought to have been sold? Was not that in effect the very course which he pursued? To retain and hold the slaves themselves as security, in lieu of that which the law made it his duty to demand and receive, was no legal equivalent therefor. Slaves were a precarious security at best, and especially at that time. They were always liable to loss by sickness, death and running away, and their intrinsic value daily diminished, until, in consequence of the late war, it was wholly destroyed. In that way the value of these slaves was destroyed, and the loss of that value has thus plainly resulted from the neglect of the executor. His liability to indemnify against the consequences of that loss such of the legatees as had no agency in bringing it about cannot be denied. That he was influenced by kind and humane feelings in what he did cannot alter the case. It may excite our sympathy for him, and our regret at his loss, but right and justice must still be done by us, and we must administer the law as it is written.

Men may do what they please with 387 their *own, and may justly be commended for their liberality in so dealing. But when they undertake to execute a fiduciary trust for others, and especially infants and others under disability, they must take care to proceed according to the rules of law and equity. It can require no citation of authority to sustain these principles with which we are all familiar.

The court is further of opinion that the circuit court did not err "in fixing the value of said slaves at the price at which they were sold at the executor's sale, instead of the sums at which they were appraised at the appraisement the day before." The presumption is, that they were sold for no more than their market value, and that if they had been resold at the loss and risk of the purchaser, on his failure to comply with the terms of sale, they would have brought the same, or nearly the same, price; and at all events the loss would have been made good by the first purchaser.

The court is further of opinion that the court did not err "in decreeing payment of the shares of the minor plaintiffs directly to them, instead of to their guardians." The effect and object of the decree, which is merely interlocutory, was to settle the rights of the parties, or some of them. Of course the money will not be paid into the hands of infants; and the court below can yet make any order on that subject which may be necessary to ensure the payment of the money into proper hands. If the appellant has any interest in that question, he might have guarded his interest by a proper motion to the court below before he brought the cause here, and he may guard it by such a motion after the cause goes back.

This court is of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the court below, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

March Term 1876, Richmond.

1. Suit Setting Aside Decree of County Court.—L died in 1863. By his will he gave to the children of a deceased daughter E, all infants, to two married daughters, to one not married, and to a son, the residuum of his estate; and appointed K his executor and trustee, to hold the same for the separate use, &c., of his daughters, and after their death to their respective children. In 1868 K filed a bill in the county court, alleging he had bought of L, in his lifetime, a tract of land called T, and had paid him the price, and was put in possession, but the title was not made; and he asked for a conveyance. With the bill he filed a paper signed by the widow and three daughters of L and their husbands, by which they express the wish that a deed for the land may be made to K. When the bill was filed, an answer was filed for the parties who had signed the paper, and by a guardian ad litem for the infants. And at the same time a decree was made appointing a commissioner to convey the tract of land to K. At another term the decree was amended, and the commissioner was directed to convey also to K a small tract adjoining T, with a mill on it. The commissioner died without conveying the land to K; and K sold it to W, but had made no deed. In 1869 the six infant children of E, and the two married daughters, filed their bill against K and W, to set aside the decree of the county court and recover the land. They alleged that there was no written contract between L and K; that K had not paid a dollar for it; that they knew nothing of the suit, and were not parties to it, and it was not binding on them. K answered, admitting he had not paid any part of the price to L; but their contract was, that he was to be executor of L, and apply the price in the course of administration. W said he bought and paid, with no knowledge of any act or conduct of K which would defeat his title. The decree of the county court was held to be void and of no effect as against the plaintiffs. K was removed from the trust, and another trustee appointed, who was decreed to hold the land under the same title and the same right prescribed by the will of L; and the decree was affirmed by this court.

389 *William Lyon, of the county of Pittsylvania, died in 1863, and his will was duly admitted to probate in the county court of that county. By his will he provided that his property should be equally divided among his children then living, and the descendants of such as were dead, the descendants to take their parents' share; and all his children, except his son William, were to have but a life-interest in the property given them, and at their death the same to go to all their children living at their respective deaths. He directed that what was called his Thomas tract, containing about two hundred and seventy-five acres, should be valued by two neighbors, and that his son William should take it at said valuation, as a part of his share of testator's estate. And he directed that all the property of every description, given to his daughters and to his son James, should be vested in Witcher W. Keen, as trustee, to hold the same for the sole and separate use of his daughters, free from the debts of their respective husbands, and after their deaths to go to their children. And he appointed said Keen his executor; who qualified as such. The will bears date July 7th, 1859.

William Lyon died in the lifetime of his father; and the controversy in this case relates to the Thomas tract of land devised to him.

On the 16th of November 1863 W. W. Keen presented his bill to the county court of Pittsylvania, in which he says, that several years before that time he purchased of William Lyon a tract of land in the county of Pittsylvania, with a mill thereon, known as a part of the Thomas tract, containing by estimation two hundred and seventy-four acres: that he paid to Lyon the full amount of the purchase money for said land, and took possession thereof; that Lyon after-

390 wards *died without conveying plaintiff the land, leaving a widow and children and grandchildren, the children of a daughter Elizabeth Hill, who was dead, the grandchildren being infants. He says that the adult parties are willing to make title to said lands, but the infant parties are incapable; and making the widow, the daughters and their husbands, and the infant children by name, parties, he calls upon them to answer; and prays that the title to said land may be made to him, and for general relief.

The plaintiff filed with his bill a paper dated October 9th, 1863, signed by the widow, James Lyon, the two married daughters and their husbands, and an unmarried daughter, in which they say—We the widow and heirs at law of Wm. Lyon, deceased, of Pittsylvania county, are desirous that the title to a mill and a tract of land called the Thomas tract, which were sold in the lifetime of said Wm. Lyon, should be made good to W. W. Keen, who purchased said mill and land of said Lyon in his lifetime, and received possession thereof, but no conveyance, do hereby authorize and request the court to make such decree as will complete the contract and make the title good to W. W. Keen.

At the same time that the bill was presented, a paper purporting to be the answer of the same parties who had signed the above paper, was also filed, in which they say they admit the allegations of the bill to be true, and they are willing that their interests in the land in the bill mentioned shall be conveyed to the plaintiff: And still at the same time, on motion of the plaintiff, a guardian ad litem was appointed for the infant defendants, and an answer by their guardian ad litem was filed for them, in which they say—they have no doubt of the truth of the facts in said bill, and 391 submit *their rights to be disposed of as may be proper and legal.

On the same 16th of November 1863, the cause came on to be heard upon the bill, answers and exhibits, when it was decreed that James M. Williams do, by proper deed with special warranty, convey the land in the proceedings mentioned as part of the Thomas tract, with the mill thereon, to the plaintiff.

And at another day, viz: on the 19th of September 1864, the cause came on upon the papers formerly read, and upon the application of the parties to correct the decree pronounced at the November term 1863; and it being agreed (as the decree states) that the Thomas tract of land in the bill mentioned contains two hundred and seventy-four acres, and is separate from a tract of twenty acres with mill thereon, which was held by William Lyon deceased and James H. Howerton, the court doth alter and amend said former decree, and decree that James M. Williams, instead of executing said decree, do, by proper deed with special warranty, convey to W. W. Keen the interest of the said William Lyon deceased in the said tract of two hundred and seventy-four acres, a plat of which, &c., and also the interest of the said William Lyon in the tract of twenty acres, with mill thereon.

In February 1869 the six infant children of Elizabeth Hill deceased, and the two married daughters of William Lyon deceased, by Mrs. Ellen H. Lyon, their next friend, and Mrs. Carter, the unmarried daughter, instituted their suit in equity in the circuit court of Pittsylvania county, against W. W. Keen in his own right and as trustee, &c., under the will of William Lyon deceased, A. G. Walters, James Lyon, and the husbands of the married plaintiffs. After referring to the will of William Lyon, 392 and the death of his son *William in his lifetime, they claim that they are entitled to the land devised to him as a part of the residuary estate of the testator William Lyon. They refer to the suit brought by Keen, and exhibit a copy of the record. They charge that Keen never paid one cent of said land to said Lyon in his lifetime, or to any other person at any time, and that he is largely indebted to his testator's estate as executor. They charge that they were no parties to the suit. The married daughters say they have no recollection of signing the paper exhibited with Keen's bill, but may have done so at the request of Keen, in whom at the time they placed great confidence, he being the executor appointed by their father. But if they signed it, they were at the time married women, and they are not bound by any admissions in it. The plaintiffs further charge that no written contract was made between Keen and William Lyon for said land, and no money paid by Keen. They are informed that Keen has contracted to sell said land to A. G. Walters, but no deed has been made by Keen to Walters; they do not know whether a deed was made by Williams to Keen.

The prayer of the bill is, that the decree of the county court may be set aside and annulled; that Keen may be removed as trustee under the will of said William Lyon; for a sale of the land for partition among the residuary devisees; and for general relief.

At the October term 1869 of the court, Walters demurred to the bill on the ground of multifariousness, and because the bill does not charge fraud in procuring the decree of the county court, and does not show any ground on which the court could set aside the proceedings and decree of the said county court.

Keen answered the bill. He says 393 he purchased said *land from Wm. Lyon some time before his death, with the understanding that he was to be Lyon's executor, and as such would apply the purchase money of said land (which it was agreed should remain in his hands,) to the payment of whatever claims might be found outstanding against said Lyon's estate; and under this agreement and understanding, the said Lyon in his lifetime put him, Keen, in full possession of said land. He admits there was no written contract between him and said Lyon for the said land, and that he did not pay to Lyon in his lifetime any part of the purchase money, as under the contract of sale he was not to pay the money to him in his lifetime, but was to apply it after his death to the benefit of his estate; and he has not since his death paid the legatees. He admits he sold the land to C. G. Holland, who ordered a deed to be made to A. G. Walters. He denies that he, as executor, is largely indebted to the estate of his testator, or is in fact indebted to said estate at all, except for such portions of the purchase money for said land as may still be due. He denies the allegations of the plaintiffs, both adults and infants, that they were not parties to the suit in the county court, and he denies that there was any fraud in obtaining the decree in that case; and he insists the adult parties are bound by the paper they signed; which they signed freely and with full knowledge of its contents.

The court overruled the demurrer of Walters to the bill; and he thereupon filed his answer. He insists that the proceedings in the suit brought by Keen are valid; that no fraud is charged; and certainly the decree was not procured by any fraud of which he, Walters, had knowledge. He does not know whether Williams executed the deed to Keen; but insists that so far as the title or rights of Keen and those claiming 394 *under him are concerned, the fact is immaterial; as a court of equity will regard that as done which ought to have been done by said commissioner. That Keen sold the land to Holland for full value, and Holland transferred his purchase to respondent for full value. It was true that Keen had not conveyed the land to respondent, but the only reason for that was, that Williams, the commissioner, appointed to make the deed to Keen, died in 1864, and it was supposed that Keen's deed to respondent would not be good until a new commissioner was appointed; and the matter passed by from neglect.

There was evidence taken in the cause which showed that Keen had a very large property in his possession during the war, and was in good credit; but he was largely indebted, he having become a bankrupt in 1867 or 1868, when his debts amounted to between four and five hundred thousand dollars.

The cause came on to be heard on the 5th of June 1871, when the court being of opinion that the decree of the county court of Pittsylvania in the bill and proceedings mentioned was obtained in fraud of the rights of the plaintiffs, decreed the same to be void and of no effect as to them; and it was further decreed that the powers of Keen as trustee, under the will of William Lyon, should be revoked, and he should be removed from his trust, and Joseph D. Blair appointed in his place; that the infant plaintiffs, and said Blair as trustee, were entitled to hold the land under the same title and in the same right prescribed by the will of William Lyon; and it being admitted by all the parties in interest that the said land could not be conveniently divided in kind, the said Blair was appointed a commissioner to sell the same in the manner and on the terms stated in the decree.

395 From this decree *Walters applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Robertson & Green and Jones & Bouldin, for the appellant.

Tredway, E. E. Bouldin and W. W. Henry, for the appellees.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

William Lyon departed this life in March 1863. Previous to his death he made and published his will, bearing date the 7th of July 1859; by which he bequeathed to the children of his deceased daughter Elizabeth Hill, all of them infants, and his three living daughters, and his son James, the whole residuum of his estate; and appointed Witcher W. Keen his executor. All the property given to his daughters and to his son James by his will he vested in said Witcher W. Keen as trustee, to hold the same for the sole and separate use of his said daughters, free from the debts of their respective husbands, and after their deaths to go to their respective children, as he had before directed. The bequest to his son James was made to him for life, remainder to his children by the woman Jane, to the exclusion of any children he has by any other person. The children of Elizabeth Hill were to get one hundred dollars less than a child's part, and his son James was to get one hundred dollars less than a child's part; and none of the other children to account for any advancements theretofore made.

The tract of land which he calls his Thomas tract, containing about two 396 hundred and seventy-five acres, *he directed to be valued by two neighbors, and to be taken by his son William at valuation, and to be accounted for by him in the equal division. William died before the testator, unmarried and without issue; by reason whereof this devise to him lapsed into the residuum. This controversy is in relation to that tract of land.

W. W. Keen, the executor and trustee, claimed to have purchased it from the testator in his lifetime; and after his death he filed his bill in chancery in the county court of Pittsylvania, on the 16th day of November 1863, against the widow and devisees and legatees of William Lyon deceased; alleging that he had purchased the said tract of land of the decedent in his lifetime, had paid him the full amount of the purchase money, and had taken possession of it under his purchase; that said Lyon had departed this life without conveying him the title; and he prays that the title may be conveyed to him. On the same day, November 16th, 1863, a decree was pronounced in the cause, that James M. Williams, who was appointed a commissioner for the purpose, do, by proper deed with special warranty, convey the land in the proceedings mentioned, as part of the Thomas tract, with the mill thereon, to the plaintiff. And on the 19th day of September 1864 an amended decree was entered, correcting the foregoing decree as to the description of the land to be conveyed; describing it as the interest of said Lyon in the said tract of two hundred and seventy-four acres, and also directing a conveyance of his interest in a tract of twenty acres with mill thereon, which, in fact, had not been claimed by the bill. No conveyance was ever made.

On the 5th of April 1869, Mary Ann Hill & als., infant children of Elizabeth 397 Hill, who sue by their *next friend, Ellen H. Lyon, and Mary W. Howerton and Nancy Howerton being femmes covert, holding separate property, who sue by their next friend, Ellen H. Lyon, whose husbands, William H. Howerton and James H. Howerton, are made defendants, and Martha Carter, daughters of said decedent, filed their bill in chancery in the circuit court of Pittsylvania county against W. W. Keen in his own right, and as executor of William Lyon, and trustee as hereinbefore described, and others, in which they allege the suit brought by said Keen in the county court, and the decree in his favor for the conveyance of title, which they are informed has never been made. They charge that said decree was made upon an alleged agreement of purchase by said Keen, and an allegation that he had paid the whole of the purchase money. They expressly charge that said Keen never paid one cent of purchase money to the said Lyon in his lifetime, or to any other person at any time, and that he is largely indebted to his testator's estate as executor; and they further charge that they were not parties to said suit. The infant children of Elizabeth Hill, by their next friend, charge that they were never made parties to said suit, and are not bound by the decree; and they charge that there never was any contract in writing between the said William Lyon in his lifetime and the said Keen for the sale and purchase of said land.

The appellants claim the right to hold the land by virtue of that decree in favor of W. W. Keen. If the appellees were not parties to that suit as they allege, or if said decree was fraudulently procured, which though not expressly charged, if the facts alleged be true, is established, said decree is not binding on them, and can confer no rights upon Keen, or those who claim under him.

398 *There appears to have been no process against them. There is, with the papers in the cause, a paper which professes to be the answer of the defendants named. But it is not signed by either of them, or by anybody for them, and two of them, William H. and James H. Howerton, who are made defendants in this suit, swear that they never authorized any one to put in their appearance, or to answer for them, and that they did not know of the suit. And the others who are plaintiffs in this suit aver that they were not parties to that suit, and thus is the onus thrown upon the appellants, to show that they were, in order to bind them by the decree.

It should appear from the record itself that they were before the court. There is nothing to show it unless the paper referred to is their answer, and was filed as such by their agency, or at least with their knowledge and consent. That does not appear. How it got amongst the papers is not shown. It might have been put there by the plaintiff himself without their knowledge or consent. There is nothing to show that any one of them had any connection with it or any knowledge of it. Unless it was their act, or done with their consent or authority, it is not binding on them, nor shows an appearance on their behalf, or that they were before the court.

The circumstances attending the procurement of said decree tend strongly to negative any equity in the plaintiff in that suit, and are so indicative of fraud in the procurement of the decree as would disincline a court of equity to give it effect.

What were the relations of these parties? On one side they were married women, daughters of the testator, who had a life interest, and their children, who had the remainder thereof, a son of the testator, who <sup>399</sup> was not sui juris as to this property, who had a life interest, and his children who were entitled to his interest in remainder, and the infant children of a deceased daughter of the testator. On the other side was the plaintiff, who was the executor of the testator, and who was constituted trustee by the testator's will for his said married daughters and his son and their children, who was seeking to acquire title in his own name and for his own benefit of property, which had been intrusted to him for their benefit. His relation to the widow of the testator and his children and grandchildren was a relation of confidence.

Holding this relation of confidence not long after the death of the testator, flagrante bello, he has a paper prepared, to which he obtains the signatures of the widow and her children, in which they are made to acknowledge the sale of the land in question to him by the testator in his lifetime, of which he received possession, but no conveyance, and authorizing and requesting the court to make such decree as will complete the contract and make good the title to him. This paper is dated October 9, 1863, and is not addressed to any court, no suit being then pending. But armed with this paper, on the 16th of November following he institutes his said suit in the county court of Pittsylvania county, files his bill, and on the same day obtains the decree aforesaid, which, nearly a year afterwards, he has amended as hereinbefore described. He does not set out in his bill any contract of purchase; he merely alleges that he purchased the land in the lifetime of his testator, and paid the full amount of the purchase money. Nor does it appear in any part of the record of that suit, or this, what price he was to pay for the land. But it <sup>400</sup> does appear now, that the *allegation of his bill that he had paid the whole amount of purchase money was untrue, and that he had not in fact paid one dollar thereof.

If he had disclosed the truth in his bill, which, in the relation he stood to the parties, he had no right to suppress, much less to misrepresent, he must utterly have failed to have obtained the decree which was entered. It was consequently procured by a deception practised upon the court—a representation which he now virtually admits, in his answer to the bill in this suit, was not true.

There was no evidence before the court of the alleged purchase except the paper above referred to. And that is not entitled to the weight of evidence. It was, in fact, but a certificate of what they had been informed of by Keen himself; for they do not appear to have had knowledge of it themselves, and evidently relied upon his representation, and were influenced by the relation of confidence which subsisted between them to sign the paper. Surely such an acknowledgment could not divest married women of their estate in land, of which, under the statute, they can only be divested upon privy examination properly certified, and it could not divest their children of their interest, nor the infant children of Mrs. Hill, who were not parties to it.

The whole procedure, instituting the suit flagrante bello in the county court, to acquire a transfer to him of the rights of infants and married women, which he held in trust for them when their husbands were soldiers in the army, upon testimony procured through the influence of confidential relations, upon the mere allegation that he had purchased the land, without setting <sup>401</sup> out the contract or the price he was to pay for it, *and upon the false allegation that he had paid the full amount of the purchase money, when, in fact, he had not paid one dollar, shows so conclusively the fraudulent procurement of said decree, that it would be rendered null and void if all the parties had been before the court, which it seems was not the case.

The court does not therefore regard said decree of the county court as interposing any barrier to the relief which the plaintiffs in this suit seek to obtain. And upon the merits, the court is of opinion that the devisees and legatees are entitled to have the land in question embraced in the partition and distribution of the estate of their testator, the evidence being insufficient to establish such a contract of sale by the testator in his lifetime to W. W. Keen, and such a performance on his part as would entitle him to a decree of specific performance.

The court is further of opinion that the appellant, A. G. Walters, having purchased from one who had no valid title, cannot hold it against parties whose title is good in law and equity, and of which they have never been lawfully divested. And if the decree in favor of his grantor was invalid, he was not invested with the legal title, and his equity could not prevail over the prior equity of the appellees, upon the authority of Briscoe v. Ashby & als., 24 Gratt. 454.

The court is also of opinion that the demurrer to the plaintiff's bill, on the ground of multifariousness, was properly overruled. Before the Code of 1849, courts of equity could pass on all equitable questions arising in cases of partition. And they may now take cognizance, under the provisions of the Code, of all questions of law affecting the legal title that may arise in such proceeding.

402 *The court is also of opinion that it was not error to remove W. W. Keen as trustee in this suit, as ancillary to the design and object of the suit, and to appoint another in his stead. Upon the whole, the court is of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court, and that the same be affirmed with costs.

Decree affirmed.

The principal case was also cited in Owens v. Boyd Land Co., 95 Va. 562, 28 S. E. Rep. 950.

This was an action of debt in the circuit court of Rappahannock county, brought in January 1871 by John S. Fletcher against James F. Brown, Benjamin F. Miller and John Miller, upon a bond of $2,409.51, bearing date the 4th of September 1861, and payable on demand. The bond was perfect on its face.

B. F. Miller, one of the defendants, filed a special plea, that the writing declared on was made and delivered as an escrow to the plaintiff, on the express condition, and none other, that John Miller and Eastham Jordan should sign and seal it as their own act and deed, and should become bound equally and jointly with the said James F. Brown and B. F. Miller; and if the said John Miller and Eastham Jordan should refuse, or fail to sign, seal and deliver the said writing as joint co-obligors of the said James F.

Brown and B. F. Miller, the same was 404 not to bind the said B. *F. Miller. but was to be held null, &c.; and he avers that said Eastham Jordan did not sign, seal and deliver the said writing; and so, &c.

The plaintiff demurred to the plea; but the court overruled the demurrer.

Upon the trial of the cause, the defendant, B. F. Miller, was introduced as a witness, and his counsel proposed to prove by him that a firm, under the style of Brown, Miller & Co., composed of the three defendants and Eastham Jordan, who were dealers in cattle, on the 4th of September 1861 owed the plaintiff the sum of $2,409.51 on a transaction between them, for which the plaintiff held their written contract not under seal, and that he desired to change the form of the evidence of the debt, and applied to B. F. Miller to execute the bond sued on: and that B. F. Miller executed the bond upon condition, that all the other members of the firm should execute said bond. But the court excluded all evidence of the facts proposed to be proved, save as to the conditions upon which the bond was executed: And the defendant excepted.

The plaintiff was then sworn in his own behalf, and on his cross-examination the defendant proposed to prove by him the facts stated in the foregoing exception, as to the original debt. But the court excluded the evidence; and the defendant again excepted.

The jury found in favor of the plaintiff for $2,409.51, with interest from the 4th September 1861, subject to the credits endorsed upon the bond; and the court rendered a judgment according to the verdict. Whereupon B. F. Miller applied to a judge of this court for a supersedeas; which was awarded.

W. W. Gordon, for the appellant.

405 *Brooke & Scott, J. C. Gibson and Menifee, for the appellee.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an action founded upon a bond or single bill for the payment of money. The defendants plead, that it was executed by them in satisfaction of a debt due the plaintiff by the firm of Brown, Miller & do., and delivered to the plaintiff as an escrow, upon condition it was to be likewise executed by two other members of said firm; but that in fact it had been executed only by one of them; and so the condition upon which the writing was to take effect had not been performed. The question raised by this plea, and which we are called upon to decide is, whether where a deed, perfect on its face, is delivered by the obligor or grantor directly to the obligee or grantee, it is competent to prove by parol evidence the delivery was upon a condition which has not been complied with, and hereby render the instrument inoperative as to the parties executing it.

In Sheppard's Touchstone, volume 1, pages 58, 59, the rule is thus laid down: "The delivery of a deed as an escrow, is said to be, where one doth make and seal a deed and deliver it unto a stranger, until certain conditions be performed, and then to be delivered to him, to whom the deed is made, to take effect as his deed. And so a man may deliver a deed, and such delivery is good. But in this case two cautions must be heeded: 1. That the form of words in the delivery of a deed in this manner be apt and proper. 2. That the deed be delivered to one that is a stranger to it, and not to the party himself, to whom it is made."

After discussing the first ground of 406 caution at some length, *the learned author proceeds as follows: "So it must be delivered to a stranger; for if I seal my deed and deliver it to the party himself, to whom it is made upon certain conditions, &c., in this case let the form of the words be what it will, the delivery is absolute, and the deed shall take effect as his deed presently; and the party is not bound to perform the condition; for in traditionibus chartarum, non quod dictum, sed quod factum est inspicitur." Another reason assigned for this rule of the common law by Lord Coke is, "the delivery is sufficient without speaking of any words; and then when the words are contrary to the act, which is the delivery, the words are of none effect."

The doctrine here laid down by these learned writers has been sometimes spoken of by judges as extremely technical and unsatisfactory. It may be so; but after a very careful examination I have not been able to find any well considered case in which that doctrine has been directly overruled.

In Hicks v. Goode, 12 Leigh 479, 490, Judge Cabell, in delivering the opinion of the court, conceded the distinction between a deed delivered as an escrow to the party to the deed, and one that is delivered to a stranger, and he was not disposed to controvert it. He said, "the reasoning on which the distinction is founded was not only technical but unsatisfactory to his mind. He considered it as settled, however, that if a deed be delivered to the party himself, to whom it is made as an escrow, but to become the deed of him who sealed it on certain conditions; in such case, whatever be the form of the words, the delivery is absolute, and the party is not bound to perform the conditions."

The counsel who argued that case, on both sides, admitted that such is the law; 407 too well settled for controversy. *It was insisted, however, on behalf of the defendant, that the rule applied only to a deed perfect and complete on its face, requiring nothing to be done to give it full efficacy as a deed, according to the intention, but the mere delivery. But where the instrument at the time it passes into the hands of the grantee or obligee is incomplete, and indicates clearly on its face that some other act is to be done to give it effect, according to the intention of all the parties, there it was insisted the rule did not apply, and it was competent to show by parol that the delivery was upon a condition which had not been performed. And so this court held; and it will be seen upon examination that the decision was placed upon that ground exclusively.

In Ward v. Churn, 18 Gratt. 801, Judge Joynes adverted to this rule of the common law: "He said it was strict and technical to the last degree; and yet he did not venture to deny that the doctrine is well settled." In the course of his opinion he cites with approbation some observations of Chief Justice Best in the case of Hudson v. Revett, 15 Eng. C. L. R. 467, wherein the learned chief justice quotes Comyn, vol. 4, page 276, 4 A., Fait as saying: "If the deed be delivered to the party as an escrow, to be his deed on the performance of a condition, it is not his deed till the condition be performed, though the party happens to have it before the condition is performed."

Now it is most remarkable, be it said with all humility, that two judges, so distinguished for accuracy and learning, should have fallen into such an error. What Comyn does say is this:

"So if it (the deed) be delivered to a stranger as an escrow, to be his deed upon performance of conditions, it is not his deed till the conditions are performed, 408 *though the party happens to have it before. 2 Rol. 25, 125, 45; Coke Lit. 36 a.

"Or be delivered to a stranger to keep till conditions be performed, 2 Rol. 25, 1, 40.

"Or to be delivered to the party as his deed upon performance of a condition."

Now this is relied upon by Chief Justice Best as authority for the position, that a deed may be delivered to the party upon condition, and it is good. But it will be perceived that Comyn means simply to affirm, that if the deed be delivered to a stranger, "to be delivered to the party as his deed upon performance of a condition, it is not his deed till the conditions be performed, though the party happens to have it before." That such was his meaning is manifest from the very next sentence, not noticed by the learned chief justice, in which he declares: "But a delivery cannot be to the obligee as an escrow." 2 Cro. 85, 86.

And in division A 3, page 274, Comyn again declares, that "if an obligation be made to A, and delivered to A himself as an escrow, to be his deed upon performance of a condition, this is an absolute delivery; and the subsequent words are void and repugnant."

A more remarkable instance of an entire misconception of an author's meaning has rarely been exhibited by a learned judge. It is worthy of observation, that Chief Justice Best himself does not assert the rule laid down by Sheppard as not sound law; he merely declares it a technical subtlety. The case of Hudson v. Revett, was decided upon the ground, that the deed was incomplete when it passed into the hands of the grantee; and the observations of the chief justice were wholly unnecessary to the decision.

There is one other case decided by 409 an English court, *sometimes relied on as opposing the doctrine of the text in Sheppard and the other common law writers. I mean the case of Johnson et als. v. Baker, 4 Barn. & Ald. 440, in which it was held it might be shown by parol that a composition deed was delivered as an escrow, upon condition it should be void unless executed by certain other creditors, which was not done. It will be seen, however, that the instrument was a deed of composition, whereby payments were to be made to all the creditors, each of whom was to release his claim, and if any should refuse, the entire purpose of the deed was defeated. Nor does it appear that the creditor, to whom the delivery was made, was then a party to the deed, and he was therefore in no condition to insist upon the estoppel.

With the exception of these cases, which, indeed, do not expressly controvert the principle, the English authorities, so far as I have seen, are uniform in their adherence to the doctrine for which I am contending.

In the United States the cases speak almost with one voice. This is the more remarkable, because, in a large majority of the states, a strong disposition has been constantly manifested, either by judicial decision or by legislation, to rid the courts of those rules of the common law, which are regarded as purely technical. The rule in question has, however, been adhered to with an unanimity almost without parallel. It is impossible, with any just regard to the proper limits of an opinion, to quote from the numerous authorities upon this subject. It may not be improper, in a question of so much importance, never yet settled in this state, to cite the opinions of distinguished judges in some few of the cases decided in the different states, and also the opinions of learned commentators who have written upon the subject.

410 *The first case is that of Simonton's estate, 4 Watts' R. 180, Pennsylvania.

Kenedy, J. "An agreement to deliver a deed as an escrow to the person in whose favor it is made, and who is likewise a party to it, will not make the delivery conditional. If delivered under such an agreement, it will be deemed an absolute delivery, and a consummation of the execution of the deed."

"To construe such agreements otherwise, would not only be putting it in the power of the party, in whose favor the deed is made, to practice a fraud upon the community by means of it, in obtaining a credit that otherwise would not be given to him, but would be opening a wide door for the introduction of frauds and perjuries."

Duncan et al. v. Pope, 47 Georgia R. 445.

Montgomery, J. "An escrow, ex vi termini, is a deed delivered to some third person, to be by him delivered to the grantee upon performance of some precedent condition by the grantee or another, or the happening of some event. If delivered to the grantee or his agent, the delivery is complete, and the paper is not an escrow. It follows that the delivery of the deed to the attorneys of the bastard, carried the complete title in the property granted to the grantee, divested of all parol conditions."

Cin., Wil. and Zanesville R. R. Co. v. Iliff, 13 Ohio St. R. 235.

Brinkerhoff, J. "There can be no doubt, according to the uniform current of authority, that if, in this case, the instrument of release had been, as a completed instrument, delivered to Carrol, simply as the agent of the company to procure the right of way, although the delivery may have been accompanied by verbal stipulations that the instrument should not 411 *operate as a release until and unless certain conditions were first performed, the release would have been operative according to its terms, and the verbal stipulations, in respect to its operation after delivery, would have amounted to nothing."

Ward v. Lewis, 4 Pick. R. 518.

Morton, J. "We are therefore satisfied that the deed of indenture was delivered by the debtors to the assignees and to the creditors. It could not have been delivered as an escrow, because it was delivered to the parties; an escrow can be delivered only to a third person. It could not have been delivered to the parties conditionally, to take effect upon the happening of any future contingency, because this would be inconsistent with the terms of the instrument itself. Upon delivery it became an absolute deed, and went into immediate operation as to all who had executed it. If it had been the intention of the parties to make a conditional assignment, to take effect only upon the signature of the whole, or a major part of the creditors, that condition ought to have been inserted in the instrument itself. But to permit parties to a deed, purporting to be absolute, to show by parol evidence that it was conditional, and to avoid it for a non-performance of the condition, would be not only a violation of the fundamental rules of evidence, but productive of great injustice and mischief."

Currie v. Donald, 2 Wash. Va. R. 59.

Lyons, J. "The second objection is to the proof respecting the delivery. The parties have declared it to be sealed and delivered, and this is attested by the sign-ture of four witnesses, who could not afterwards have been permitted to disprove it. This delivery we must consider as absolute, because if it had been intended as an escrow it ought to have been so stated."

412 *2 Lomax's Digest 38.

"Secondly, that the delivery of the deed as an escrow be to a stranger; for if a person delivers a deed to the party himself, to whom it is made as an escrow upon certain conditions, the delivery is absolute, and the deed will take effect immediately; nor will the party to whom it is delivered be bound to perform the conditions."

In 3 Washburn on Real Property 268, the doctrine is thus laid down: If the delivery is made to the party, no matter what may be the form of the words, the delivery is absolute, and the deed takes effect presently as the deed of the grantor, discharged of the conditions upon which the delivery was made.

To these authorities may be added the cases of Brackett v. Barney, 28 New York R. 333; Worrall v. Mann, 1 Seld. R. 238; Jackson v. Catlin, 2 John. R. 259, decided by the supreme court of New York. The case of Black v. Shreve, 13 New Jersey Eq. R. 456; the case of Herdman v. Bratton, 2 Har. R. (Del.) 396; the case of Cin., Wil. & Zanesville R. R. Co. v. Iliff, 13 Ohio St. R. 235; the case of Mad. & Ind. Plank R. Co. v. Stevens, 10 Ind. R. 1; the case of Brown v. Reynolds, 15 Snead R. (Tennessee) 639; Gibson v. Partee, 2 Dev. & Battle (N. C.) 530; Hagood v. Harly, Rich. Law R. 325; Graves v. Tucker, 10 Smeedes & Mar. (Miss.) 9; Firemens Ins. Comp. v. McMillan, 29 Alab. R. 147, 161; and the case of Moss v. Riddle, decided by the supreme court of the United States.

A doctrine sustained by such an array of authorities, a doctrine which has survived all the changes and innovations of modern reform, must have something to commend it to the approbation of the courts beyond its mere antiquity. It is not to be overturned by denunciation. The chief 413 argument against it is, *that it recognizes distinctions technical and unsatisfactory in the extreme.

It is said, for example, a deed may be delivered as an escrow to a stranger, or even to a co-obligor, to be delivered by them to the obligee; and there can be no good reason why it should not be delivered directly to the obligee as an escrow. It would be easy to show that this distinction is not so technical and unsatisfactory as is imagined. But it does not concern me to vindicate that distinction. I am dealing only with the particular rule of the common law invoked in this case. The question is, whether this court can safely depart from it here. Whether it can overturn that which is so well established elsewhere, and so fully sustained by the concurring voice of able commentators and great judges.

It may be that the rule will sometimes lead to fraud and to grievous injustice; but what rule can be laid down that will not occasionally be perverted to purposes of mischievous. The statutes of "frauds and perjuries" were designed for the prevention of notorious evils; and yet constant experience attests that they are often but a cover for the perpetuation of the grossest frauds.

In Towner v. Lucas' ex'or, 13 Gratt. 705, the obligee induced one of the obligors to execute the bond as surety by the most solemn assurances that it was a mere matter of form, that the surety would never be required to pay any part of the debt, and that he, the obligee, would give him a written indemnity against any liability or damage.

This agreement was proved by the clearest evidence, and was found by the verdict of a jury upon an issue directed by the circuit court. This court held it was not compe-

414 tent to prove such an agreement by parol. *Judge Allen, in a very able opinion which has received the almost universal approbation of the profession, relied upon the common law maxim, that it would be inconvenient that matters in writing, made by advice and on consideration, and which finally import the certain truth and agreement of the parties, should be contradicted by averment of parties, to be proved by the uncertain testimony of "slippery memory." He said, "it is reasoning in a circle to argue that fraud is made out, when it is shown by oral testimony that the obligee, contemporaneously with the execution of the bond, promised not to enforce it. Such a principle would nullify the rule. The true question is, was there any such agreement. And this can only be established by legitimate testimony. For reasons founded in wisdom, and to prevent frauds and perjuries, the rule of the common law excludes such oral testimony of the alleged agreement; and as it cannot be proved by legal evidence, the agreement itself, in legal contemplation, cannot be regarded as existing in fact. Neither a court of law nor of equity can act upon the hypothesis of fraud where there is no legal proof of it."

Most of the observations here made apply with peculiar force to the question under discussion.

It is easy to see that the most solemn obligations given for the payment of money, are of but little value as securities, if they may at any future day, be defeated by parol proof of conditions annexed to the delivery of the instrument, and never performed. This case before us is in point. The bond in controversy was given in 1861, for a debt antecedently due, for which all the defendants are confessedly bound independently of the obligation. The plaintiff being no doubt well satisfied with his security,

415 did not sue *till 1871. On the trial he is met with the defence, that the defendants executed the bond with the understanding that another person alleged to be jointly bound with them for the debt should also execute the bond; and that it was delivered to the plaintiff upon that condition. The plaintiff and one of the defendants were the only witnesses examined; each giving his version of the transaction. The jury it seems, believed the plaintiff; but they might have believed the defendant with equal propriety. If we reverse the judgment of the court below upon the ground of the rejection of proper testimony, it is not improbable that upon a new trial a verdict may be found for the defendants. And it may be that such a verdict would be correct. The result would be in effect, however, that this most solemn deed of the parties is of no more value than the most informal parol promise to pay. It thoroughly exemplifies the observation in the case of Williams v. Green, Cro. Eliz. 884, that if such testimony is allowed "a bare averment without any writing would make void every deed."

A doctrine of this sort is perhaps still more mischievous as applied to deeds of conveyance—for the title of the grantee is liable at any time to be defeated by evidence establishing parol conditions accompanying the delivery of the deed. No safeguard can be provided against perjury or the mistakes of "slippery memory" in such cases. If parties desire to make the delivery of deeds conditional, it is easy to make such delivery to a stranger, or to insert in the instrument the terms of the contract.

For these reasons I am for adhering to the rule of the common law. In doing so, I do not mean to affirm that this rule will apply to every species of contracts in writing. There are cases in which it has 416 *been held, that you may show the agreement was signed by mistake, or that it was signed on the terms that it should not be an agreement till money was paid, or something else was done. Pym v. Campbell, 88 Eng. C. L. R. 370, is one of these. But these cases, whether rightly decided or not, have no application to deeds; as to which delivery is the essence and constitutes the estoppel.

I am, therefore, for affirming the judgment of the circuit court: first, because that court ought to have sustained the demurrer to the plea; and, second, because the evidence offered by defendants and excluded was rightly excluded upon the grounds already stated. The judgment, being right, although upon a false issue, must of course be sustained.

Anderson, J., was not fully prepared to concur in the doctrine, that a delivery to a grantee in a deed on condition, is absolute and free from the conditions; but he would not dissent.

Judgment affirmed.

417 *Rogers v. Strother & als.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Limitations—"Stay Law"—When Not Applicable.—

The § 7, of the act of March 2, 1866, known as the stay law, and the act amendatory thereof, do not apply to appeals, writs of error, or supersedeas; and therefore an appeal from a final decree made on the 1st of November, 1867, cannot be allowed on the 12th of June, 1871.

2. Decrees—When Final.*—In a pending cause, R. who had been administrator of S, is decreed in November 1867 to pay to A, administrator of L, the amount ascertained to be due from him to S, and from S to L, which was the same. There is another cause in the same court, in which A, who had become administrator of S and R, are parties; and in this cause in June 1869 it was decreed that A, as administrator of L, should recover from himself, as administrator of S, the amount S owed L; and the decree of November 1867 was modified, and R was directed to pay to A, as administrator of L, the amount he had been directed to pay S's administrator. Held: The decree of November 1867 having given all the relief asked for in that case, was a final decree; and its character was not altered by the decree of June 1869.

Asa Rogers qualified as the administrator of Martha Strother in 1859. In 1860 he filed his bill in the circuit court of Loudoun county, in which he asked the direction of the court in his administration upon the estate. Among the subjects mentioned in his bill he states, that Mrs. Lucinda Rawlings, the wife of Wm. Rawlings and a sister of his intestate, holds a number of bonds of his intestate given to Mrs. Rawlings, amounting to upwards of $5,000, and he is in doubt to whom they should be paid.

418 *The distributees of Martha Strother were so numerous and so widely dispersed that the case could not be matured before the late war came on and courts ceased to be held in the county of Loudoun. During the war both Mr. and Mrs. Rawlings died, and F. M. Young qualified as executor of Mr. Rawlings, and Andrew Robey became the administrator of Mrs. Rawlings.

In December 1865 Mrs. Rawlings' death was suggested, and the suit was revived against Andrew Robey as her administrator. And Robey and Young having entered into a written agreement, that a decree might be entered in the cause authorizing the payment of the bonds executed by Martha Strother to Mrs. Lucinda Rawlings, to Mrs. Rawlings' personal representative, it being admitted by the executor of Wm. Rawlings that her estate was entitled to them, the cause was brought on as to these parties, and a decree was made according to the agreement, giving to Mrs. Lucinda Raw-*Final Decrees.—In 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 302, it is said: "The general doctrine is that any decree or order is final which disposes of the whole subject, gives all the relief that was contemplated, provides with reasonable completeness for giving effect to the sentence, and leaves nothing to be done in the case, save to superintend ministerially the execution of the decree. (Cocke v. Gilpin, 1 Rob. 20, 46; Harvey v. Branson, 1 Leigh 106; Ruff v. Starke, 3 Gratt. 122; Vanmeter v. Vanmeters, 3 Gratt. 148; Fleming v. Bolling, 8 Gratt. 292; Ambrouse v. Keller, 22 Gratt. 774 et seq.; Rogers v. Strother, 27 Gratt. 417; Scott v. Hore, 1 Hughes' U. S. Circuit Ct. R. 167-8.)" See further, Thorntons v. Fitzhugh, 4 Leigh 309; Rawlings v. Rawlings, 75 Va. 76; Barton's Ch. Pr. (3d Ed.) p. 821, and foot-note; Barton's Law Pr. (3d Ed.) p. 762, and foot-note; Core v. Strickler, 24 W. Va. 66, citing the principal case.

lings' administrator the said bonds, but not deciding upon the validity of said bonds as against the plaintiff as administrator of his intestate.

In 1866 a decree was made directing Rogers to settle his administration account before a commissioner of the court; and in the same year the commissioner returned his report. He rejected a claim for a credit of $9,000, invested by Rogers in 1863 in a confederate bond under an order of the circuit court of the city of Richmond, and reported Rogers' indebtedness at $9,662.91, of which $8,375.83 was principal and $1,226.20 was interest on the 11th of July 1863.

Rogers having ceased to be administrator of Martha Strother, Robey qualified as administrator de bonis non on her estate;

and in July 1867, as administrator
419 *of Mrs. Rawlings and administrator de bonis non of Martha Strother, filed his cross bill against Rogers and his sureties in his administration bond and the other distributees of Martha Strother; in which he asked for a further settlement of Rogers' administration account, and payment to the parties entitled, and for general relief.

On the 1st of November 1867 the two causes came on to be heard together; when the court, having reduced the amount reported by the commissioner against Rogers, by several credits allowed him, to the sum of $6,889.36, with interest thereon from July 11th 1863, decreed that Rogers and his sureties should pay this sum with its interest to Robey as administrator de bonis non of Martha Strother.

On the 21st of October 1869 the court made a decree in another case in the court, of Robey, executor of Lucinda Rawlings, against Asa Rogers and others; by which Robey, as executor of Lucinda Rawlings, was to recover from Robey, administrator de bonis non of Martha Strother, the amount of the bonds referred to in the bill of Rogers. And the decree of the 1st of November 1867 was modified, and Rogers and his sureties were directed to pay the said sum of $6,889.36, with its interest, to Lucinda Rawlings' administrator, subject to such sums or credits as they had theretofore paid to said Andrew Robey, administrator of Martha Strother.

On the 21st of June 1871 Rogers presented his petition for an appeal from the decrees of November 1st 1867 and the 21st of October 1869 to one of the judges of this court; and the appeal was allowed on the 26th of the same month.

The only question considered by this court was, whether the appeal had been ap-420 plied for in time; and *only so much of the case is given as seemed necessary to the presentation of that question.

Meredith, Jones & Bouldin and Spilman, for the appellant.

Eppa Hunton, for the appellee.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion that the decree which was rendered on the first day of November 1867 in the original cause of Rogers v. Strother &c., and the cross cause of Robey v. Rogers &c., to which two causes this appeal applies and is confined, was a final decree in those causes, notwithstanding the pendency in the same court of the case of Andrew Robey, executor of Lucinda Rawlings, deceased, plaintiff, against Asa Rogers &c., defendants; and notwithstanding the decree thereafter made in the last named cause, on the 21st day of October 1869. By the said decree of the first day of November 1867, and the prior decrees rendered in the first named two causes, the court below gave all the relief which it intended to give in those causes; and having ascertained the balance due by Asa Rogers, the late administrator of Martha Strother, deceased, to her estate, to be $6,889.36, with interest thereon from July 11th, 1863, until paid; and it appearing to the court proper, in order to the complete administration of the estate of Martha Strother, deceased, that the amount due by Asa Rogers, the late administrator as aforesaid, should be paid to Andrew Robey, the present administrator de bonis non of said Martha Strother, deceased, who is also the administrator of 421 itor of said *estate, to an amount nearly, if not entirely, equal to the said sum of money and interest; the court, therefore, by the said decree of the 1st day of November 1867 decreed that the said Asa Rogers, administrator as aforesaid, and his sureties, John D. Rogers, Arthur L. Rogers, and Hamilton Rogers, should pay to the said Andrew Robey, administrator de bonis non of Martha Strother, deceased, the said sum of $6,889.36, with legal interest thereon from July 11th, 1863, until paid. The whole remaining subject of controversy, in the said two suits first above named, was thus decreed to be transferred from the hands of the late administrator to those of the present administrator de bonis non of said Martha Strother, to be by him disposed of among the parties entitled thereto according to their respective rights; and nothing further could be done in said suits except by bill of review or appeal. There was no bill of review in the case, but this appeal was taken; and the question now to be decided is, whether or not it was taken in time.

The court is further of opinion that when the petition for this appeal was presented, to wit: on the 12th day of June 1871, such an appeal was barred by the statute of limitations which was then in force. This is certainly so, according to the express decision of this court in Callaway v. Harding, 23d Gratt. 542, unless the stay law applies to this case. Judge Christian, in delivering the opinion of the court in that case, reviews the acts of limitation bearing upon it, and comes to the following conclusion thereon: "Upon the plain and obvious construction of the acts above referred to, we think it is clear that the longest period of limitation, within which a petition for an appeal, writ of error and supersedeas can be presented, is two years, nine months and ten days, as to final judgments, 422 *decrees or orders rendered before the passage of the act approved November 5th, 1870; and as to those rendered after the passage of that act, such period of limitation is two years."

The judge then says: "As to what may be the effect of the seventh section of the act passed March 2d, 1866, known as the stay law, it is not necessary to refer to in this case; for conceding that the seventh section applies to appeals, writs of error, &c., in the case before us, more than three years after the expiration of the stay law had elapsed, before the petition for a writ of error was presented."

While more than two years, nine months and ten days elapsed after the final decree was rendered in the case under consideration, to wit: the first day of November 1867; and even after the first day of January 1868, when the stay law passed, March 2d, 1866, was, by its terms, to expire, yet such an interval of time did not elapse after the first day of January 1869, to which day the operation of the said act of March 2d, 1866, was extended by an act passed March 2d, 1867, and before the 12th day of June 1871, when the petition for an appeal was presented in this case.

It will therefore be necessary for us to do in this case what was not necessary to be done, and was not done by the court in Callaway v. Harding, supra, nor in the subsequent case of Sexton v. Crockett & als., 23 Gratt. 857; that is, decide whether the seventh section of the stay law, and the act amendatory thereof as aforesaid, apply to the case.

The court is of opinion that they do not apply to the case; that the 7th section of the stay law never did apply to an appeal, writ of error, or supersedeas; and if it ever did, it was repealed as to such application, either expressly or by implication, by 423 an act *passed March 15, 1867; in either of which views, the petition for an appeal, when presented in this case, was barred by limitation.

First, The acts constituting the stay law, never did apply, nor were intended to apply, to an appeal &c. Section 1, of the act passed March 2, 1866, provides, "that while this act remains in force, no execution, venditioni exponas, attachment upon a decree or order for the payment of money, or other process to compel the payment of money, or the sale of property for that purpose, shall be issued, or if heretofore issued shall be proceeded with; nor shall there be any sale under a deed of trust, mortgage, pledge or other security, nor under any judgment, decree or order for the payment of money, except in the cases hereafter provided for, until the first day of January 1868."

Section 7 provides, that "the period during which this act shall remain in force, shall be excluded from the computation of the time within which, by the operation of any statute or rule of law, it may be necessary to commence any proceeding to preserve or prevent the loss of any right or remedy."

Does this section apply to a right or remedy by appeal &c., or was it intended to be confined to an original right or remedy by suit or action &c.? The first section applies only to a levy on, or sale of, property under execution &c., and to effectuate its object, there would seem to be really no necessity for staying an original right or remedy, by suit or action. Indeed the act created no stay of such right or remedy, but merely directed the time during which the act should remain in force, to wit: from the date of the passage of the act, March 2, 1866, to the 1st day of January 1868, to be excluded from the computation of the time prescribed by law for the limitation 424 *of such right or remedy. It was perfectly competent for the party entitled to such right or remedy to commence and prosecute it while the act remained in force, though it was not necessary for him to do so in any case, to preserve, or prevent the loss of his right or remedy. The uninterrupted operation of the statute of limitations in regard to original remedies by suit or action, would not have been inconsistent with the first section of the stay law before set forth; and it may be difficult to account for the adoption of the 7th section aforesaid for any purpose. Statutes of limitation are measures of repose, founded on public policy, which requires that disputes shall be commenced and settled while the transactions are fresh, and the evidence concerning them is still in existence, and in the power of the parties. There may be a necessity for the suspension of the operation of such statutes during a period of war: according to the maxim, inter arma silent leges. But it is not perceived that there was any necessity, or propriety in such a suspension after the war was over, and the courts were reorganized, and in full operation. Nay, it would seem that the suits and actions, having already been long delayed by the necessities of war, there was reason, rather for expediting, than for longer delaying them, after such necessities had ceased. All that the state of the country seemed to require in that respect after the termination of the war, was, that a levy on, or sale of, property under execution &c., should be stayed; and that was effectually done by the first section of the act.

But whatever necessity or propriety there may have been in providing, as was done by the seventh section of the act for cases of original suits and actions, there would seem to be none whatever for the application of such a provision to a case of 425 *appeal, &c., to revise the judgment or decree of an inferior court. Such a proceeding is not in its nature instituted to obtain a judgment or decree, nor to enforce the execution of one already obtained; but rather to revise and reverse a judgment or decree. And reason and policy required that if any party were dissatisfied with a judgment or decree on account of any sub-posed errors therein, he should proceed in a reasonable time, if at all, to endeavor to have them corrected. This view of the subject is confirmed by other acts of the legislature, passed at or about the same time with the stay law. On the same day on which that law was passed, to-wit, on the 2d day of March 1866, another act was passed, entitled "an act to preserve and extend the time for the exercise of certain civil rights and remedies;" the first section of which enacts, "that the period between the 17th day of April 1861 and the passage of this act shall be excluded from the computation of the time within which, by the terms or operation of any statute or rule of law, it may be necessary to commence any action or other proceeding, or to do any other act, to preserve or to prevent the loss of any civil right or remedy, or to avoid any fine, penalty or forfeiture; nor shall the further period, from the expiration of that above prescribed to six months after a supreme court of appeals shall be organized under the present government, be included in the computation of the time within which any party or parties may be required by statute or rule of law to obtain a writ of error, supersedeas, or other process, from the supreme court of appeals of Virginia: provided," &c. The legislature at the time of the passage of that act, on the 2d of March 1866, well knew that a supreme court of appeals would be organized in a 426 very short *time, under the then government; for on the very day after the passage of that act, to-wit, on the 3d day of March 1866, another act was passed "making provisions concerning the organization, jurisdiction and proceedings of said court;" and in a month or two thereafter, said court was organized and in full operation. Where was the necessity or propriety for postponing the right of appeal to the end of six months after the organization of the court of appeals under the then existing government, if the 7th section of the stay law, enacted on the same day, applied to the case; under which section, in that view, there could be no appeal until after the 1st day of January 1868, which time was afterwards, to-wit, on the 2d of March 1867, extended to the 1st day of January 1869? We cannot suppose that the legislature intended such an incongruity; and we therefore believe that it did not intend to apply the 7th section of the stay law to the right of appeal. And we think this view is conclusively sustained by an act passed March 15, 1867, which declared that no petition shall be presented for an appeal, &c., to any final judgment, &c., which shall have been rendered more than two years before the petition is presented. Now this act conclusively shows that the legislature thought it important that the time for taking an appeal, &c., should be greatly shortened; for by this act the limitation was reduced from five years to two years. Can we suppose, with this manifest indication of legislative policy on the subject before our eyes, that the legislature intended, by the obscure and doubtful and general words of the seventh section of the stay law, to extend the time for taking an appeal to the 1st day of January 1868, and then to the 1st day of January 1869, when neither necessity nor convenience required any such *extension, and when, on the contrary, convenience and public policy were opposed to it? We think not. We therefore think that the stay law never did apply, nor was intended to apply, to an appeal, &c. But if it ever did,

Secondly, it was repealed as to such application, either expressly or by implication, by the said act passed March 15, 1867. On this particular question we deem it unnecessary to add anything to what we have already said, as most of that applies also to this question, and is decisive of it.

We have noticed the case of Sexton v. Crockett &c., 23 Gratt. 857, in which the questions we have been considering were raised, but not decided, the court being equally divided upon them. The reasoning of our brother Bouldin, with whom our brother Anderson concurred in that case, is certainly very strong, but has not shaken our confidence in the views we have expressed; and two of us, Christian and Moncure, still adhere to the views entertained and expressed by them in that case; and another of us, Judge Staples, who did not sit in that case, nor in Callaway v. Harding, supra, having been counsel in both of those cases, concurs with the two. Judge Anderson will speak for himself in regard to the present decision.

The court is therefore of opinion, that this appeal when taken was barred by the statute of limitations, and must be dismissed, but without prejudice to any relief to which the appellant and his sureties, as administrator of Martha Strother, deceased, may be entitled in the said suit of Andrew Robey, executor of Lucinda Rawlings, plaintiff, against Asa Rogers, &c., defendants, now pending in the court below, in which was made the decree of the 21st day of October 1869 as aforesaid. But this 428 court expresses no opinion as *to the existence of any right to such relief, nor as to the nature or measure of such right if it exists.

Anderson, J. said: I am not now satisfied that the opinion of Judge Bouldin in Sexton v. Crockett, in which I concurred, as to the effect of the 7th section of the stay law, upon the limitation of appeals and writs of error, is not right; upon which question, in that case the court was equally divided. But a majority of the whole court holding, in the cause now under judgment, that the said seventh section does not apply to the limitation of the right of appeal, and writs of error, settles the question adversely to the opinion which I have entertained. I must therefore recognize this decision as an exposition of the law, which precludes me from an investigation of the case before us, upon its merits. Upon these grounds I concur in the judgment.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the decree which was rendered on the first day of November 1867 in the original cause of "Rogers v. Strother &c.," and the cross cause of "Robey v. Rogers &c.," to which two causes this appeal applies and is confined, was a final decree in those causes, notwithstanding the pendency in the same court of the case of Andrew Robey, executor of Lucinda Rawlings, deceased, plaintiff, against Asa Rogers &c., defendants; and notwithstanding the decree thereafter made in the last named cause, on the 21st day of October 1869. The court is further of opinion, that when the petition for this appeal was presented, to wit: on the 12th day

429 of June 1871, the said appeal *was barred by the statute of limitations, which was then in force. Therefore it is decreed and ordered that the said appeal be dismissed, and that the appellant pay to the appellee, Andrew Robey, administrator of Lucinda Rawlings, deceased, his costs by him about his defence in this behalf expended.

But this decree is without prejudice to any relief to which the appellant and his sureties as administrator of Martha Strother, deceased, may be entitled in the said suit of Andrew Robey, executor of Lucinda Rawlings, deceased, plaintiff, v. Asa Rogers &c., defendants, now pending in the court below, in which was made the decree of the 21st day of October 1869 as aforesaid. But this court expresses no opinion as to the existence of any right to such relief, nor as to the nature or measure of such right if it exists.

Which is ordered to be certified to the circuit court of Loudoun county.

Appeal dismissed.

430 *Norfolk City v. Cooke.

Absent, STAPLES J.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Water Lots—Rights of Proprietor.*—The city of Norfolk is the owner of the ground which she has not disposed of, covered by water, lying between Parker street and the portwarden's line, both as riparian proprietor and as having had long possession thereof; and the city may maintain an action of unlawful entry and detainer, against any intruder upon said water lots.
2. Patents of Navigable Rivers.—A patent for land constituting a part of the bed of a navigable river, conveys no title to it.

The case is stated by Judge Christian, in his opinion.

*Rights of Proprietor of Water Lots.—See Alex., etc., R. Co. v. Faunce, 31 Gratt. 761, and note, citing the principal case; also, Barre v. Flemings, 29 W. Va. 319, 1 S. E. Rep. 735; Ravenswood v. Flemings, 22 W. Va. 64, in both of which cases the principal case is cited with approval.

The principal case is also cited by MR. JUSTICE GRAY in Shively v. Bowlby, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557.

W. B. Martin, for the appellant.

W. H. C. Ellis, for the appellee.

Christian J. delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a writ of error to a judgment of the corporation court of the city of Norfolk.

The action was unlawful entry and detainer, brought by the city of Norfolk to recover of the appellee Cooke, the possession of a certain water lot described in the summons. A jury being waived by the parties, and all matters of law and fact being referred to the court, a judgment was entered for the defendant, the appellee here. To this judgment a writ of error was awarded by this court.

The only question we have to determine is, whether *upon the facts disclosed by the record, the city of Norfolk had the right of possession to the water lot described in the summons; and whether upon these facts, the action of unlawful entry and detainer can be maintained.

The material facts shown by the record are as follows: The house of burgesses by an act passed in the first year of the reign of George III, and to be found in 7 Hen. Stat. §§ 4, 5, pp. 435-6, declared that certain land in the borough of Norfolk, then known as the Fort land, should be vested in certain persons named in said act, as trustees and directors who should hold the same in fee simple, for the purpose of enlarging and securing said land, and erecting thereon a wharf and warehouses; and upon certain conditions the trustees were to convey the same to the county or borough of Norfolk. By another act, 7 Hen. Stat. §§ 3, 4, 5, pp. 511-12, the trustees were required to convey to the borough of Norfolk to the exclusion of the county. A third act (8 Hen. Stat. pp. 269-70,) reciting that the trustees formerly appointed had formed themselves into the Town Point Company, perpetuated the succession of said trustees.

In July 1792 the Common Hall of Norfolk borough had the Town Point or Fort lands surveyed, and laid off into lots and streets. A copy of this plat was filed in the clerk's office of the borough. This plat was recognized, together with the port warden line, established by the act of 1801, as an official map of the borough of Norfolk, in Harris' case, 20 Gratt. 833.

In 1792, James Taylor and others, trustees of the Fort lands, or Town Point Company lands, in consideration of £2,000, the amount of advances made by them, conveyed by deed, bearing date August 1st, 432 1792, the said lands to the mayor, recorded, aldermen *and common councilmen of the city of Norfolk, in fee simple.

The deeds filed, and the authentic map of this property recognized by this court in Harris' case, supra, show that the Fort land, or the Town Point property, extended westward to Parker street, the western limit of Parker street being the limit of the survey, investing the city of Norfolk with the title of the property to the line.

This plat shows that the city of Norfolk had extended its streets as occasion required, and sold or leased water lots down to Parker street, and without dispute extended the streets of the city to Parker street. Much of the land conveyed and claimed by the city of Norfolk was covered by water at high tide; but up to the line of Parker street there is no dispute as to the title of the city of Norfolk both to the lots and the streets running towards Elizabeth river down to Parker street.

As to the streets, Main, Kelly and Water streets, which bisect Parker street, running towards Elizabeth river, it is clear the city of Norfolk has the right—both under its charter and on well settled principles of law—the right to extend these streets out into the water as far as the port warden line.

According to the recognized plat of the Fort or Town Point lands, the city of Norfolk has the title to this property to the western boundary of Parker street, and the fee simple title to this street is in the city of Norfolk.

The city of Norfolk has, for many years, claimed title, and exercised acts of ownership over the water lots lying west of Parker street, having, in 1841, sold one of these lots to Hardy & Bros., who built wharves thereon, and hold possession of the 433 same under title *derived from the city of Norfolk; and in 1867 having leased the other lot, which is a part, if not the whole, of the water lot in controversy to William and J. J. Swaine, whose interest in the same was sold under execution, and purchased by Chamberlaine and Grandy for the sum of $500. Afterwards, it seems, Chamberlaine and Grandy surrendered to the city all their interest in said water lots.

In November 1873, the defendant, Cooke, obtained from the commonwealth a patent for the water lot lying between Parker street and the port warden line, and adjoining the lot sold to the Hardys, it being the same lot which had been leased to the Swaines, and purchased by Chamberlaine and Grandy, and by them surrendered to the city of Norfolk. Under this patent Cooke entered and had built a small house on piles, and was in possession of it when this action was brought. His claim of title and his possession is under and by virtue of this patent.

Upon these facts, the question we have to determine is, whether the city of Norfolk can maintain against Cooke the action of unlawful entry and detainer, and is entitled to recover against him in this action. The corporation court decided that question in favor of the defendant; and it is this decision we now have to review.

First, as to Cooke's title: we think it is clear that the grant of the commonwealth is void. The patent conferred on Cooke only such title as was in the commonwealth. The lot called for in the patent was the bed of a navigable river, and was incapable of being granted to any individual. See Horne

v. Richards, 4 Call 441-449; Meade v. Haynes, 3 Rand. 33-36; French v. Bankhead, 11 Gratt. 169; Code 1873, chap. 62, § 1, p. 604; chap. 108, § 4; §§ 42, 43, 867. But 434 *although Cooke's patent is void, and he is a mere trespasser, yet being in possession, he cannot be turned out unless it can be shown that the city of Norfolk has the right of possession as against him. While it is not necessary in this action to show a fee simple title to the property in controversy in the city of Norfolk, it is essential at least to show the right of possession even against an intruder. This brings us to the consideration of the important question in the case, viz: whether the city of Norfolk has the right of possession to the water lot in controversy against the defendant, Cooke; or, in other words, whether the action of unlawful entry and detainer can, upon the facts of this case, be maintained against the defendant who has no title, and is in possession under a grant which is void.

Now it must be conceded that by virtue of the statutes, deeds and established plat, above referred to, the title to the Fort or Town Point lands up to the western boundary of Parker street, was vested in the city of Norfolk. This street though sometimes covered with water at high tide, is one of the recognized streets of the city to which the city has the fee simple title. The city therefore is the riparian owner of the water lots opposite the line of Parker street, and has the same rights and privileges as an individual owner.

These rights both at common law and by statute, are secured to the riparian owner, to erect wharves, piers, or bulk heads for his own use or the use of the public, subject only to such general rules and regulations as the legislature may prescribe; and the only limitation upon such right is, that navigation may not be obstructed, or the rights of others be injured. This is the common law rule; and the same rights are secured by statute in this state. Sec. 59,

ch. 52, Code 1873, declares that, "any 435 person owning land upon a *water course may erect a wharf on the same, or a pier, or bulkhead, in such water course opposite his land, so that the navigation be not obstructed thereby, and so that such wharf, pier, or bulk head, shall not otherwise injure the private rights of any person."

This right of the riparian owner is not a mere license or privilege, but is property, property in the soil, up to the line of navigability, though covered by water; for the wharf, pier or bulkhead, can only be built on the soil. It is not a mere easement to pass over the water, or a privilege to use the surface, but property in the soil under the water, on which to fasten and build such structures; and for this purpose, and subject to the restriction that navigation shall not be obstructed, is as much property as the land above the margin of a navigable stream.

This principle has been fully recognized by the supreme court of the United States in Yates v. Milwaukie, 10 Wall. U. S. R. 447, 504. Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, says: "But whether the title of the owner of such a lot extends beyond the dry land or not, he is certainly entitled to the rights of a riparian proprietor whose land is bounded by a navigable stream; and among those rights are access to the navigable part of the river from the front of his lot, the right to make a landing, wharf or pier, for his own use, or for the use of the public, subject to such general rules and regulations as the legislature may see proper to impose for the protection of the rights of the public, whatever those may be.

"This riparian right is property, and is valuable; and though it must be enjoyed in due subjection to the rights of the public, it cannot be arbitrarily or capriciously destroyed or impaired. It is a right of 436 which, *when once vested, the owner can only be deprived in accordance with established law, and, if necessary, that it be taken for the public good upon due compensation." See also Wall. U. S. R. 22, 289; 1 Black. 23; 1 Del. on Cor. § 70, note 3, § 72, note 2.

It is clear, therefore, that the city of Norfolk had the right of property in the water lot in controversy, and consequently the right of possession for the purpose of erecting wharves, piers or bulkheads, and could exercise that right whenever it chose to do so. For that purpose (subject to the only limitation imposed by the legislature, that the rights of navigation should not be obstructed), it had the right of exclusive possession, and upon this ground could maintain the action of unlawful entry and detainer to recover possession unlawfully withheld, or an action of trespass against any wrongdoer interfering with such right.

But the city of Norfolk can maintain this action upon another ground. It had had for many years, and at the time of the unlawful entry of the defendant, the actual possession of these water lots. I say actual possession, so far as such property is susceptible of actual possession. Of course, water lots cannot be in the literal occupation of the owner, but he may exercise such acts of ownership over them as constitute in law the actual possession. Such acts of ownership have been for many years exercised by the city of Norfolk. It has sold lots adjoining the one in controversy. It has leased for a number of years the very lot which the defendant has unlawfully taken possession of. By authority of law and order of the city council the port warden has marked off and designated these water lots, and they have been plotted and made a matter of record. By all these acts of ownership the city of Norfolk has had the actual possession of these water 437 *lots as far as such property is capable of being reduced into actual occupation. Having in legal contemplation, such possession it may maintain an action to recover possession against one who wrongfully and unlawfully withholds it. This position is conclusively sustained by a recent decision of this court in the case of Power & Kellog v. Tazwells, 25 Gratt. 786. In that case the Tazwells, under authority of an act of the general assembly, had leased for one year from the state inspector of oysters, a lot covered by water below low water mark for the purpose of planting oysters thereon. The Tazwells had staked off the lot so as to designate it, but had planted no oysters thereon when defendants took possession of the lot. An action of unlawful entry and detainer was brought to recover the possession. It was insisted in that case, as it has been in this, that the action could not be maintained; that the lease of the state was only a license or privilege; that the Tazwells had no title and no right of possession to the bed of the river covered by water, and therefore could not maintain an action of unlawful entry and detainer. This court held otherwise, and declared that the lease to Tazwells was not a mere license or privilege, but that it conferred rights of property in the soil covered by water, to which the plaintiffs had the right of exclusive possession, and that the action of unlawful entry and detainer was a proper remedy. I refer to the able opinion of Judge Anderson in that case, as fully sustaining the principles upon which the city of Norfolk may maintain its action in this.

In that case, the lot covered by water was designated by stakes driven into the water to mark its boundaries. In this, the water lot claimed by the city of Norfolk was designated by the port warden line, made 438 under *official authority, plotted, mapped, and put upon the public records. In that case, the only evidence of possession or acts of ownership was the driving down a few stakes. In this we have, in addition to the distinct and official designation, the fact, that for years the city of Norfolk has leased out this and contiguous water lots, and its right and title disputed by no one.

Another important fact to be mentioned in this connection is, that by its charter the city of Norfolk has the right to extend its streets running at right angles to Parker street out to the port warden line; and a part of the lot claimed by Cooke is opposite the ends of these streets.

I am therefore of opinion, that the city of Norfolk, for the purposes of extending its streets, building wharves, piers and bulkheads, or other structures in the interests of commerce, has a right of property in the soil covered by water contained in the survey within the port warden's line and opposite Parker street. I think it had such possession in these lots at the time of the unlawful entry of Cooke, as to maintain against him the action of unlawful entry and detainer. As was said by Judge Moncure in Olinger v. Shepherd, "such possession is not confined to actual occupancy or enclosure: It applies to any possession which is sufficient to sustain an action of trespass. 12 Gratt. 462, 473."

I think it would be technical in the last degree to hold that the city of Norfolk is without remedy to recover possession of this valuable property, so necessary to the extension of its streets and the protection of its commerce, because it is land covered by water, below low water mark, and was never in the actual occupancy of the city. The privilege to extend streets and build wharves would be of no value, if the 439 soil (though *covered with water), over which such streets are to be built and such structures erected, may be taken possession of by another and not recovered by any action. This would be to give a right without a remedy—a thing unknown to the law. It would be unjust to the last degree to say that a commercial city, one which we hope to see at no distant day the great commercial emporium of the state, shall be deprived of her right to extend her streets and build her wharves in the interests of a growing commerce, by any squatter who may, with or without color of title, choose to occupy her water fronts; and that upon the merest technicality the city is without remedy to keep off intruders, or recover possession whenever she may choose to assert her right.

I am for reversing the judgment of the corporation court, and entering a judgment for the plaintiff for the premises mentioned in the summons.

Judgment reversed.

440 *Paine, Surv. &c. v. Tutwiler & als.*

s. Executions—Return—Presumption.—Execution on a forfeited forthcoming bond for $318.53, in the name of K against T, returnable to December rules 1860, went into the hands of J, deputy of S, sheriff of the county of F. On January 1st, 1861, J becomes sheriff of F. In May 1861 J receives from T $176.40 on this execution and signs his own name to the receipt with the addition of sheriff: but he does not return the execution. In February K issues another execution on the judgment; when T files his bill to enjoin it on the ground that he had paid it, and he files J's receipt for $176.40. Neither T nor J can say positively whether the execution was or was not levied, or whether J received the money as deputy of S, or as sheriff. HOLD: After the great lapse of time, the court will presume that the execution was levied by J before the return day, and that he received the money as deputy of S, so as to entitle T to a credit for the amount paid.

This was an appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Fluvanna county, rendered on the 12th of April 1872, in a cause in which Thomas H. Tutwiler was plaintiff, and Wm. G. Paine, survivor of Kent, Paine & Kent, and others were defendants, and also from a judgment of the same court between the same plaintiff and Paine survivor defendant. The case is substantially as follows:

In September, 1860, Kent, Paine & Kent, issued their execution from the clerk's office of the circuit court of Fluvanna, on a judgment on a forfeited delivery bond, against Thomas H. Tutwiler and John P. Baskett, for $637.06, to be discharged by the payment of $318.53, with interest thereon, from 441 July 23d, 1860, *and $3.23 costs. Said execution went into the hands of Joseph Payne, deputy for John Sclater, sheriff of Fluvanna, on the 4th October, 1860, and was returnable to the December rules. On the 1st of January, 1861, the said Joseph Payne became the sheriff of Fluvanna. The said execution never was returned. On the 13th February, 1871, Kent, Paine & Kent sued out another execution, returnable to April rules, 1871, for $637.06 to be discharged by the payment of $318.53, with interest from 23rd July, 1860, till paid, and costs $4.97, which was delivered to Lewis J. Walton, sheriff of Fluvanna, on the 15th day of February, 1871.

Tutwiler filed his bill on the first Monday in April, 1871, against Kent, Paine & Kent, John Sclater, Joseph Payne, and Lewis J. Walton, praying for an injunction against the last named execution, that the said execution might be quashed, and Kent, Paine & Kent be required to refund to him the sum of two years' interest, which he had paid on the execution. The bill alleges rather inferentially and argumentatively than positively, that Tutwiler had paid sundry amounts on the first execution to Joseph Payne, after the return day of the execution, to-wit, in and after May 1861, while said Payne was sheriff of Fluvanna. In the same inferential and argumentative way, he alleges that Payne, while he was deputy, and before the return day of the execution, levied the execution upon his property or some portion of it. He gives at length his reason for coming to these two conclusions. He exhibits a receipt from Payne, signed by him with the addition to his name of "sheriff," dated March 3rd, 1861, for $176.40½ in part of execution of Kent, Paine & Kent. Tutwiler calls on the defendants to answer on oath; and accordingly, Kent, Paine & Kent answer denying both levy and payment. Payne also 442 answers, *denying that he had levied the execution, and denying any payments by Tutwiler to him on account of the execution, except the payment of $176.40½ in May, 1861, and alleging that he received that as sheriff and not as the deputy of Sclater.

After Tutwiler had filed his bill, to-wit, in September, 1871, he made a motion in the Fluvanna circuit court, to quash the last execution. Kent, Paine & Kent objected on the ground that the same application was then pending on the chancery side of the court on bill and answers. But the court overruled the objection and examined two witnesses, Tutwiler and Payne, whose testimony is substantially the same as that found in the bill of the first and the answer of the latter.

No depositions were taken on either side in the chancery cause.

The court on the motion to quash, gave judgment in favor of Tutwiler on the alleged grounds, that the first execution had been levied on the property of Tutwiler, and that the amount of said execution had been fully paid by Tutwiler "to the proper officer of said county, in whose hands the same had been properly placed."

On the 12th day of April, 1872, the chancery cause came on to be finally heard on the bill and exhibits, the answers of Kent, Paine & Kent, and of Joseph Payne, and the order of the circuit court of the county made in the aforesaid motion to quash, and thereupon the court perpetuated the injunction, and decreed that W. G. Paine, surviving partner of Kent, Paine & Kent, should refund to Tutwiler the aforesaid two years interest, being $37, with interest from 11th February, 1869.

443 *Upon the application of Wm. G. Paine this court allowed an appeal.

Ould & Carrington, for the appellant.

There was no counsel for the appellees.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The appellee proceeded by bill in equity to perpetually enjoin the appellant's execution, and subsequently by motion in the court of law to quash it pending the injunction. The defendant, in the proceeding at law, moved the court to dismiss the motion, upon the ground, that the plaintiff had elected to proceed in equity in respect of the same matter, which was still pending, and that the court of equity had possession of the cause, and had full power to do justice; but the court refused to dismiss the motion, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for costs, and to quash the execution, and the case is brought here upon a writ of error and supersedeas to said judgment.

The appellee subsequently prosecuted his suit in equity to a decree perpetuating his injunction, and giving him his costs expended in the prosecution of his suit in equity. From that decree the defendants appealed to this court. Without deciding now whether the court of law erred in refusing to dismiss the plaintiff's motion upon the grounds set out in the defendant's bill of exceptions, the court is of opinion, for reasons which will hereafter appear, that the judgment of the court of law quashing the execution is erroneous, and must be reversed.

In the case of appeal from the decree, perpetuating the injunction to the appellant's execution, the court *is of opinion that it does satisfactorily appear from the evidence in the record, that a previous execution upon the same judgment was sued out by the plaintiffs, which came to the hands of Jos. Payne on the 4th of October 1860, who was then deputy for John Sclater, sheriff of Fluvanna county, and that the same was returnable on the first Monday in December next following; and that said execution was not returned, but remained in the hands of the said Jos. Payne, deputy as aforesaid, who, in January following, qualified as sheriff of said county. And that on the 3d of May next following, the appellee made payment to the said Joseph Payne, in part of said execution, $176.40½ cents, as is shown by his receipt, which is signed "Jos. Payne, sheriff."

The appellant contends that the appellee is not entitled to a credit on the execution for said payment, and that he is still liable to the plaintiffs in the execution for the whole amount thereof, the payment not having been made to an officer authorized to collect the same. That the payment was made on that execution, and was so intended by both payer and payee is undoubtedly true.

The execution having been put in the hands of Jos. Payne, in his official character as deputy sheriff for collection, and he having retained it in his possession after the return day had passed, whilst he continued to be deputy sheriff, and before he became sheriff of the county, the presumption is, that it remained in his possession after he became sheriff of the county as deputy sheriff. His being appointed sheriff of the county could not change his possession of the execution which he then held as deputy sheriff.

It is also presumable that he received the payment, which was afterwards made 445 to him upon it in the character *in which he held the execution. And after so great a lapse of time, when neither the debtor nor the sheriff can speak from memory as to whether the execution had been levied or not, the deputy sheriff's receiving, implies that he considered himself authorized to receive it, which he only could have been in the character which he held it as deputy sheriff, and then only upon the ground that he made a levy before the return day of the execution. That would have authorized him to receive the payment at the time it was made; and this taken in connection with the fact, that the execution was one upon which the sheriff was forbidden to take security, and that the defendant had ample property to satisfy it, entirely accessible to the sheriff, and often in his view, upon which he could have made a levy, in the absence of any positive testimony to the contrary, leads almost irresistibly to the conclusion that a levy was made. It is true, the sheriff testifies that he received payment in his character of sheriff; but evidently he does not speak from personal recollection, for he had almost in the same breath said he had no recollection of the payment at all. There is an affix of "sheriff," as we have seen, to his signature to the receipt. Does that show that the money was paid to him as the sheriff of the county, as the letters S.

F. C. annexed to his signature might import, although, as we have seen, the execution was not in his hands in that character, and although he had no authority to receive payment in that character? Or does it merely indicate that it was received by him, not in his personal character, but in his official character as sheriff? And may it not be applied as well to his official character as deputy sheriff, in which character he had possession of the execution, as to his official character as high sheriff, in which character he did not hold the 446 *execution: For he was sheriff officially in both characters: in the one as deputy, and in the other as high sheriff, or sheriff of Fluvanna county—S. F. C. If he received payment officially, as deputy sheriff, in which character he held the execution, and not in his personal character, that would be indicated by the affix of "sheriff," as unmistakably as the affix of S. F. C. might have shown that he received it as sheriff of Fluvanna county. Under all the circumstances of this case, and after so great a lapse of time, it seems to the court, it would be too rigorous to hold that the appellee was not entitled to receive a credit for the money, which he unquestionably paid on the execution to the officer, in whose hands it had been placed for collection, because he annexed those letters to his signature to the receipt.

But the appellee has failed to show any further payment on the execution. The court is therefore of opinion to reverse the decree of the circuit court, perpetuating the injunction as to the whole amount of the execution, and that the following order be made:

The court being of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the judgment of the court of law, quashing the execution and giving the plaintiff his costs in said motion is erroneous; it is considered that the same be reversed and annulled, and the said motion be dismissed, and that the defendants to said motion recover their costs therein in the court below; and it is further considered, that the plaintiffs in error recover their costs expended in the prosecution of their writ of error and supersedeas here.

And the court being also of opinion that the decree in the injunction case, perpetuating the injunction to *the entire execution, and decreeing costs to the plaintiff therein, is erroneous, it is ordered that the same be reversed and annulled, and that the appellants recover their costs expended in the prosecution of their appeal here. And the court proceeding to render such decree as ought to have been rendered by the circuit court, it is adjudged, ordered and decreed, that the injunction awarded in this case be dissolved, except as to one hundred and seventy-six dollars and forty and one-half cents, paid on the 3d day of May 1861, and be perpetuated as to so much thereof; and that the defendants below pay to the plaintiff his costs expended in the prosecution of his said suit in equity in the circuit court.

Decree reversed.

I. DEFINITION.

A writ of execution is a process by which the final judgment of a court is carried into effect. 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 609.

II. PROPERTY SUBJECT AND PROPERTY NOT SUBJECT TO EXECUTION.

A. Property of Wife for Husband's Debts.—Since, at common law, the personality of a feme sole in possession, passes, upon her marriage, to her husband, it becomes subject to execution for his debts. Vance v. McLaughlin, 8 Gratt. 289; Hill v. Wynn, 4 W. Va. 58; Dold v. Geiger, 2 Gratt. 98. In this last case, it was held that even the choses in action to which the wife becomes entitled during coverture, are liable to the claims of the husband's creditors.

B. Interests of Mortgagor.—In Tiffany v. Kent, 3 Gratt. 231, it was held that a sale by a sheriff of an equity of redemption in lands surrendered by a debtor in execution, upon his taking the benefit of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors, is legal.

C. Property under Valid Deed of Trust.—The equitable interest of the grantor in a valid deed of trust, before sale thereunder, cannot be taken under an execution at law, but can only be subjected in equity. Clayton v. Anthony, 6 Rand. 307; Countts v. Walker, 2 Leigh 280. But see contra, Spence v. Repass, 94 Va. 714, 27 S. E. Rep. 583, and criticism in 4 Va. Law Reg. 255.

D. Property Conveyed by Marriage Settlement.—It seems that property conveyed by deed of marriage settlement, in trust, that the husband and wife shall be permitted during their joint lives, to enjoy the profits, may be taken in execution to satisfy a debt incurred after the marriage for supplies furnished for the proper support of the husband and wife. Scott v. Loraine, 6 Munf. 117.

E. Property Fraudulently Conveyed.—If property subject to execution be conveyed and such conveyance be either with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, or be upon consideration deemed voluntary in law, execution may still be enforced; for where the conveyance is fraudulent it is void as to both existing creditors, and subsequent purchasers, and where the conveyance is voluntary only, it is void as to antecedent creditors, though it may be sustained as against subsequent purchasers. Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. 384; Wright v. Hencock, 3 Munf. 521; Harvey v. Fox, 5 Leigh 444; Penn v. Whitehead, 17 Gratt. 528; Goshorn v. Snodgrass, 17 W. Va. 717; Rixey v. Deltrick, 85 Va. 46, 6 S. E. Rep. 615; Lockhard v. Beckley, 10 W. Va. 87; Hunter v. Hunter, 10 W. Va. 321; Beall v. Shaul, 18 W. Va. 258; Watkins v. Wortman, 19 W. Va. 78; Harden v. Wagner, 22 W. Va. 356; Silverman v. Greaser, 27 W. Va. 550; Livesay v. Beard, 22 W. Va. 585; Knight v. Capito, 28 W. Va. 639; Williams v. Blakey, 76 Va. 254; Witz v. Osburn, 83 Va. 227, 2 S. E. Rep. 38; Whitten v. Saunders, 75 Va. 563; Sutherland v. Price, 75 Va. 223; Tebbs v. Lee, 76 Va. 744; McCormick v. Atkinson, 78 Va. 8; Burton v. Mill, 78 Va. 468; Saunders v. Waggoner, 82 Va. 316; Young v. Willis, 82 Va. 291; Wray v. Davenport, 79 Va. 19; Fink v. Denny, 75 Va. 663; Clay v. Walter, 79 Va. 92; Beecher v. Burns, 84 Va. 812, 6 S. E. Rep. 209; Hatcher v. Crews, 78 Va. 460; Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 390; Click v. Green, 77 Va. 827; Batchelder v. White, 80 Va. 108; Hickman v. Trout, 83 Va. 479, 3 S. E. Rep. 181; Armstrong v. Lachman, 84 Va. 726, 6 S. E. Rep. 129; Lucas v. Claffin, 76 Va. 269; Johnson v. Wagner, 76 Va. 567; Moore v. Ullman, 80 Va. 307; Scott v. Rowland, 82 Va. 484; Baker v. Naglee, 82 Va. 876, 1 S. E. Rep. 191; Waller v. Johnson, 82 Va. 966, 7 S. E. Rep. 382; Fishburne v. Ferguson, 84 Va. 87, 4 S. E. Rep. 575; Fisher v. Dickenson, 84 Va. 818, 4 S. E. Rep. 737; Roanoke Nat. Bank v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 84 Va. 608, 5 S. E. Rep. 662; Rucker v. Moss, 84 Va. 634, 5 S. E. Rep. 527.

A husband had obtained slaves through a sale under a deed of trust fraudulent as to the creditors of the grantor, and one of these slaves had been allotted to his widow, after his death. Held, the slave in her possession may be taken in execution at the suit of a creditor of the grantor, though the husband and those claiming under him had been in possession of the slave for more than five years. Snoddy v. Haskins, 12 Gratt. 363; Lawrence v. Swann, 5 Munf. 382; Lang v. Lee, 3 Rand. 410; Wilson v. Buchanan, 7 Gratt. 834; Addington v. Etheridge, 12 Gratt. 436; Marks v. Hill, 15 Gratt. 400; Pratt v. Cox, 22 Gratt. 837; Russell v. Randolph, 26 Gratt. 713; Perry v. Shen. Nat. Bank, 27 Gratt. 757.

It is well settled that the ownership of personal property will be taken to be with the possession, and the retaining of possession after a sale is prima facie fraudulent, and the property still subject to execution against the seller. This presumption of fraud may however be rebutted by proof that such possession is consistent with a bona fide sale. Wray v. Davenport, 79 Va. 19; McCormick v. Atkinson, 78 Va. 8; Young v. Willis, 82 Va. 291; Saunders v. Waggoner, 82 Va. 316; Claffin v. Foley, 22 W. Va. 434; Klee v. Reitzenberger, 23 W. Va. 749; Curd v. Miller, 7 Gratt. 185; Lewis v. Caperton, 8 Gratt. 148; Land v. Jeffries, 5 Rand. 211; Braxton v. Gaines, 4 Hen. & M. 151.

F. Property Loaned.—T makes a parol loan of a slave to C; and the slave remains in the possession of C and C's ex'ors for more than five years, and then T takes possession of him. Held, the slaves may be subjected by the execution creditors of C, to satisfy their claims. But the ex'ors of C having brought an action of detinue for the slave against T, who dies pending the suit, which is revived against his ex'or, and a verdict and judgment having been given in favor of the defendant, the creditors of C, who having recovered judgments against his ex'ors, cannot levy their executions upon the slave. Taylor v. Beale, 4 Gratt. 93; McKenzie v. Macon, 5 Gratt. 379; Beale v. Digges, 6 Gratt. 582; Garth v. Barksdale, 5 Munf. 101; Rose v. Burgess, 10 Leigh 197; Beasley v. Owen, 8 H. & M. 449; Pate v. Baker, 8 Leigh 80; Collins v. Lofftus, 10 Leigh 10; Boyd v. Stainback, 5 Munf. 305; Lightfoot v. Strother, 9 Leigh 451.

Money bona fide lent to a sheriff, and applied by him to his own use, prior to his receiving a writ of hæri facias against the lender is not liable to satisfy such execution, either at law, or in equity; notwithstanding the same money was originally deposited in his hands as a pledge for certain purposes. Price v. Crump, 2 H. & M. 89.

G. Property of Vendee.—Upon a bona fide sale of personal property, though the vendee does not take possession at the time of the sale, yet if he gets possession before an execution is issued against the vendor, his title is good against creditors. So also, where a bona fide vendee of personal property having gotten possession thereof before issuing of an execution against the vendor, his title is good against the creditor, though after such possession by the vendee, he employs the vendor as his agent to sell the property; and the vendor is in possession as the agent of the vendee at the time the execution issues, and is levied upon it. M'Kinley v. Ensell, 2 Gratt. 333.

A sale of property under an execution, by the sheriff, is bona fide, though irregular; and the purchaser leaves the property with the debtor in the execution. Held, the sale is valid; and the property is not liable to the creditors of the debtor in execution. A purchaser of property leaves it in the possession of the original owner, but possession thereof is taken by the adm'r of the purchaser before creditors have acquired a specific lien thereon, by judgment and execution. Held, it is not liable to the original owner's creditors. Carr v. Glasscock, 3 Gratt. 343.

H. Property of Bankrupt.—The lien of a judgment is not defeated by the discharge of the debtor as a bankrupt, and it may be enforced in the state courts. In such a case the elegit sued out upon the judgment may be in the usual form; and in executing it the sheriff must take notice of the bankruptcy of the debtor, and disregarding all property of the debtor not subject to the lien, levy it upon that which is so subject. McCance v. Taylor, 10 Gratt. 580.

I. In Hands of Personal Representative.—If there be two executors, one of whom is a legatee of part of the personal estate; and a division of the testator's property is made according to his will, subsequent to which, the legatee executor dies, a creditor, who afterwards obtains judgment against the surviving executor, cannot levy the execution upon one of the slaves allotted to the deceased executor, in the hands of his administrator. And if the administrator of the deceased executor obtains an injunction to the sale of the slave which is dissolved, and the slave then sold under the execution, the creditor will, at the hearing, be decreed to pay the then value of the slave, if living, and his hires from the time of the sale; and an issue will be directed to ascertain them. Chapman v. Washington, 4 Call 327; Sampson v. Bryce, 5 Munf. 175.

K. Property Exempt under Statutes.

"Poor Man's Law."—A laborer's $50 exemption, allowed him by statute cannot be waived so as to give a lien by fi. fa. thereon. Crump v. Com., 75 Va. 922.

Homestead Exemption.—See monographic note on "Homestead," appended to Hatorff v. Wellford, 27 Gratt. 364.

L. Property of Building Contractor.—Where one contracts to build, the materials to be used in such building remain the property of the contractor until actually put into the construction; and hence are liable for the contractor's debts and subject to execution. Wheeling v. Baer, 86 W. Va. 777, 15 S. E. Rep. 979.

M. Property Purchased for Valuable Consideration without Notice.—The trustees and beneficiaries in a deed to secure bona fide debts, without notice, are purchasers for valuable consideration within the meaning of the statute which exempts property of such persons from liability for the debts of their assignor. Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 153.

N. Property of Principal in Possession of Agent.—Property consigned to an agent at a stipulated price, to be paid for when such property is sold, remains the property of the principal until such sale to a bona fide purchaser, and hence is not subject to execution against the agent. Barnes, etc., Co. v. Bloch Bros., etc., Co., 38 W. Va. 158, 18 S. E. Rep. 482, 22 L. R. A. 850; Brown, etc., Co. v. Deering & Co., 35 W. Va. 255, 13 S. E. Rep. 383.

O. Property Forfeited to State.—Where land is forfeited to the state for non-entry on the assessor's land books the title vests in the state, and the property is not liable to execution under a judgment rendered against the former owner since the forfeiture; but the right of such former owner to the excess of the proceeds of sale after the payment of taxes, etc., is property which he can sell, and which is liable to the lien of an execution. Wiant v. Hays, 38 W. Va. 681, 18 S. E. Rep. 807.

P. Property in Remainder.—Two persons being entitled to a remainder in slave property expectant on a life estate therein, a fi. fa. is sued out against one of the remaindermen, and levied on some of the slaves then in his possession by consent of the tenant for life and the slaves so taken in execution are sold by the sheriff; then this remainderman conveys all his estate to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors; and after the death of the tenant for life, in a suit brought by the trustee against two remaindermen for partition, the slaves so sold by the sheriff, are allotted to the trustee, the purchaser at the sheriff's sale not being a party to that suit. Held, at the time of the levying the execution and sale made by the sheriff, the debtor had no several property in any particular slaves, and so the sale by him made, passed no title to the purchaser. Leslie v. Briggs, 5 Leigh 6.

Q. Property Received by Commissioner without Authority.—A commissioner having received money without authority to receive it, is liable to the purchaser for the amount so paid, and may be proceeded against by a rule in the cause and an execution of scire facias may be sued out against him for the money. Tyler v. Toms, 75 Va. 116.

R. Property of Railroad Companies.—The road and franchises of a railroad company are liable for the satisfaction of executions against the company. W. & S. R. Co. v. Colfelt, 27 Gratt. 777.

S. Money.—It was held in Steele v. Brown, 2 Va. Cas. 246, that a writ of execution may be levied on ready money in the possession of the defendant. See also Norris v. Crummey, 2 Rand. 330.

T. Fixtures.—It was held in Green v. Phillips, 28 Gratt. 752, that the engines and machinery of a planing-mill are fixtures and hence not liable to execution. See also, Shelton v. Ficklin, 32 Gratt. 37; Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428; McFadden v. Crawford, 36 W. Va. 671, 15 S. E. Rep. 408; Franks v. Cravens, 6 W. Va. 185; Bank v. Anderson, 75 Va. 33; Morotock Ins. Co. v. Rodefer, 92 Va. 753, 24 S. E. Rep. 393; Haskin, etc., Co. v. Cleveland, etc., Co., 94 Va. 45, 26 S. E. Rep. 878.

III. ISSUANCE OF WRIT.

A. Prerequisites.

1. Judgment or Decree.

a. In General.—As a condition precedent to the issuance of a writ of execution there must be a valid subsisting judgment, or decree, to support it: hence an execution issued, before judgment, on the verdict of a jury, is simply void. Lowther v. Davis, 33 W. Va. 132, 10 S. E. Rep. 20.

It is improper for the court or judge in vacation to allow an execution to issue unless the grounds for it are shown. Shackelford v. Apperson, 6 Gratt. 61.

It was held in Enders v. Burch, 15 Gratt. 71, that when execution is capable of being issued on a judgment, such judgment becomes final though the term of court be not ended.

It is held in Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 153, that it is the duty of the clerk, in all cases, to issue the execution as soon as possible after the adjournment of the court, unless he be instructed to the contrary by the plaintiff or his attorney.

b. Necessity for Revivor.—In May v. State Bank of N. Car., 2 Rob. 56, 40 Am. Dec. 726, it was held: first, that if after the death of a sole plaintiff or defendant, a judgment be, nevertheless, entered, as though such party were alive, it must be revived by scire facias before execution can regularly issue thereon; second, that the death of a sole plaintiff after judgment renders a scire facias necessary to the issuance of execution; and third, that if a corporation exists either before or after judgment, execution can no longer issue in its name. There is also a dictum to the effect that, where there is but one defendant, and he dies after judgment, an execution cannot be issued without first surviving such judgment by a writ of scire facias, unless the writ is tested as of a day before his death. See also, Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. 182.

Where, however, a judgment is rendered against several defendants, and afterwards one of them dies, the execution should still be issued against all. Holt v. Lynch, 18 W. Va. 567.

If proceedings on a judgment at law be enjoined by a court of chancery, and the injunction be afterwards dissolved, and on appeal the order of dissolution is affirmed in omnibus, an execution may be sued out on the judgment at law, before the decree of affirmance is entered up in the court of chancery. Epes's Adm'rs v. Dudley, 4 Leigh 145.

Judgments do not bind land after one year from their date, unless an execution be taken out within that time, or an entry of elegit be made on the record. Eppes v. Randolph, 2 Call 125.

Upon a scire facias, to revive a judgment against a defendant who makes default, there should be award of execution. Williamson v. Crawford, 7 Gratt. 202.

B. Time of Issuance.

1. At Common Law.—In Beale v. Botetourt, 10 Gratt. 281, the court held that, "a judgment on which no execution is issued within a year and a day from its date, is, generally, so far presumed to be satisfied as to render a scire facias to revive if necessary. See dicta to the same effect, in Nimmo v. Com., 4 H. & M. 67, in Spotts v. Com., 85 Va. 531, 8 S. E. Rep. 375, and again in Smith v. Charlton, 7 Gratt. 447. But no length of time can bar the commonwealth from execution on a judgment in its favor, nor even render it necessary to sue out a scire facias to entitle it to such execution. Nimmo v. Com., 4 H. & M. 57.

2. Alias and Pluries Writs.

In General.—In Hamilton v. McConkey, 83 Va. 533, 2 S. E. Rep. 724, it was held that by statutory provision the limitation within which an alias execution may be issued is twenty years, where there is "a return of the officer"; and whether such return be true or false, sufficient or insufficient, is not a question which can arise under the statute. See also, Brown v. Campbell, 33 Gratt. 402; Taylor v. Spindle, 2 Gratt. 44; Stuart v. Hamilton, 8 Leigh 503; Eppes v. Randolph, 2 Call 125; Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 251; Coles v. Ballard, 78 Va. 139; Rowe v. Bentley, 29 Gratt. 756; McCarty v. Ball, 82 Va. 874, 1 S. E. Rep. 189; Ayre v. Burke, 82 Va. 338.

According to statute in West Virginia, it is held that where an execution issues within two years, other executions may be issued within ten years from the return day of the last execution on which there is no return, or which has been returned satisfied. Shipley v. Pew, 23 W. Va. 494; Werdenbaugh v. Reid, 20 W. Va. 596; Laidley v. Kline, 23 W. Va. 574.

Effect of Stay Law.—In computing the time within which a scire facias may be sued out under § 2577 of the Code, to revive a judgment, the time which elapsed between January 1, 1860, and March 29, 1871, is to be included, though the same period, by the terms of the statute, is excluded as to writs of Aeri facias. Fadely v. Williams, 96 Va. 397, 31 S. E. Rep. 515; James v. Life, 92 Va. 702, 24 S. E. Rep. 275; 4 Va. Law Reg. 508, and note.

In West Virginia it is held that the statute providing that no execution shall issue on any judgment after ten years from its date, applies to judgments rendered prior to the first day of April 1860, when the Code took effect. Bank v. Hays, 37 W. Va. 475, 16 S. E. Rep. 561; Spang v. Robinson, 24 W. Va. 327.

It is held, in Gardner v. Landcraft, 6 W. Va. 36, that an execution may be issued within two years after the date of the judgment.

3. Delay of Execution by Debtor.

Injunction.—In Hutsonpiller v. Stover, 12 Gratt. 582, the court held "that where the plaintiff is prevented by injunction from proceeding to execution, he may at any time within the year after its dissolution, sue out execution without scire facias; and this, where the parties remain unchanged, whether the injunction have continued for more or less than ten years." The statute of limitation to judgments does not run while an injunction to the execution is pending. See also, Smith v. Charlton, 7 Gratt. 447; Noland v. Seekright, 6 Munf. 185.

In Richardson v. Prince George, 11 Gratt. 190, it was held that where either party to a judgment died pending an injunction, a scire facias, might be sued out to revive the judgment. But nowhere in the opinion is it even intimated that a scire facias is necessary, though the defendant had since died.

4. Procedure upon Scire Facias.—Neither a declaration nor a rule to plead is necessary upon a scire facias to revive a judgment. If a scire facias is returnable to rules, and the defendant makes default, there should then be an award of execution, which if not set aside at the next term, becomes a final judgment as of the last day of the term. No order of the court is necessary in such case. McVeigh v. Bank, 76 Va. 267; Gedney v. Com., 14 Gratt. 318.

5. Effect of Writs Irregularly Issued.—The fact that an execution was issued irregularly and unlawfully after the expiration of more than a year and a day from the time of the decree, without any previous proceeding by way of scire facias or otherwise to authorize the same, is not such irregularity as would render the execution void, but only voidable. Beale v. Botetourt, 10 Gratt. 278; Spotts v. Com., 85 Va. 531, 8 S. E. Rep. 375.

6. Effect of Proceedings in Chancery.—Where ten years or more have elapsed since rendition of judgment, and no execution was issued upon it, and no writ of scire facias was sued out to revive it, within the period of ten years, the said judgment is barred by the statute of limitations, both at law and in equity. Petitions filed during that period by judgment creditor in a chancery suit brought to subject the lands of judgment debtor to the payment of judgment liens, and dismissed without any order on it except that of dismissed seven years after it was filed, did not suspend the right to sue out execution upon the judgment. Dabney v. Shelton, 82 Va. 349.

C. Formal Contents of Writ.

1. Irregularity in Caption.—An execution purported in its caption to have been issued by a justice of the peace of Hardy county, when in fact it was issued by a justice of Hampshire county. Held, that the error was immaterial, and that the writ was valid to give authority to an officer in Hampshire county to levy it. Davis v. Davis, 2 Gratt. 363.

2. Recitals of Property to Be Taken.—In Gill v. State, 39 W. Va. 479, 20 S. E. Rep. 568, it was held that a writ of Aeri facias upon a judgment of a circuit court for a fine against a person convicted of a misdemeanor, ought, according to statute, to run against the goods and chattels and real estate of the debtor.

3. Conformity of Execution with Judgment or Decree.—Every execution should conform accurately to the judgment or decree which it is used to enforce. Snavey v. Harkrader, 30 Gratt. 487; Taney v. Woodmansee, 23 W. Va. 709; Holt v. Lynch, 18 W. Va. 567; B. & O. R. Co. v. Vanderwarker, 19 W. Va. 265; O'Bannon v. Saunders, 24 Gratt. 138; Moss v. Moss, 4 H. & M. 293; Beale v. Botetourt, 10 Gratt. 282.

4. Where There Are Separate Judgments.

Against Several Defendants.—Where separate judgments are obtained, in favor of the same plaintiff, against several defendants in different suits, it is error to issue one execution upon such several judgments. B. & O. R. R. Co. v. Vanderwarker, 19 W. Va. 265; Taney v. Woodmansee, 23 W. Va. 709. But in Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 50, it was held that where in a proceeding at law against several parties, judgments against one or more are entered at one time, and against others at another time, one execution may issue against all.

Against Same Defendant.—In Stuart v. Heiskell, 86 Va. 191, 9 S. E. Rep. 984, where there were two complainants before the court, one by original bill and the other by cross-bill, it was held that a provision in the decree giving them the right to have executions severally was both proper and in accordance with the usual practice.

5. Where Writ Issued after Assignment of Judgment.

—After a judgment has been assigned, an execution thereon should be issued in the name of the assignor and not in the name of the assignee, though the court will not permit the former to control the execution. Reinhard v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 805; Clarke v. Hogeman, 18 W. Va. 718.

6. Interest.—According to statute the clerk in issuing executions is to include interest, even though interest is neither mentioned in the declaration, nor in the promise upon which the action was brought. Baird v. Peter, 4 Munf. 76; Wallace v. Baker, 2 Munf. 334.

D. From What Court Issuable.

1. At Law.—The power of courts of law to issue executions is conferred by the common law, and also by statutory enactments, in Virginia. Coleman v. Cocke, 6 Rand. 618.

2. In Equity.—In Shackelford v. Apperson, 6 Gratt. 453, it was held that it is only by force of statute that process of execution can be sued out upon decrees in chancery. See also, Windrum v. Parker, 2 Leigh 369; Snively v. Harkrader, 30 Gratt. 487.

The court, in Windrum v. Parker, 2 Leigh 369, said: "Since all executions, which can be issued upon a judgment at law, have been allowed by our statute to issue upon decrees in chancery, the courts of chancery are bound, in deciding upon all questions in respect to them, to abide by the common law and statutes respecting executions at law." See also, Snively v. Harkrader, 30 Gratt. 487.

3. Leave of Court.—In Shackelford v. Apperson, 6 Gratt. 453, it was held that, according to statute, the clerk had no authority to issue an execution upon an interlocutory decree, without an order of the court or the judge thereof in vacation.

Notice of Motion for Leave of Court.—A party may, without any previous notice to the defendant, move the court to direct an execution to be issued, where the clerk refused to issue one. Com. v. Hewitt, 2 H. & M. 181.

E. To What Place Issuable.—An execution must issue to the county where the defendant lives in the first instance, unless he has removed his effects out of it. Fleming v. Saunders, 4 Call 563; Byrdie v. Langham, 2 Wash. 72.

F. Who May Sue Out the Writ.

Assignee of Judgment.—The assignee of a judgment, acquires the ancillary right of execution and may, upon sufficient proof of his rights, demand an issuance of the writ. Wallop v. Scarborough, 5 Gratt. 5; Reinhard v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 805.

G. Against Whom the Writ May Issue.

1. Municipalities.—By virtue of statutory authority in West Virginia, an execution may issue against the private property of a municipal corporation. But by implication the taxes and public revenues of such corporations are exempt from the operation of the execution statutes. Brown v. Gates, 15 W. Va. 181.

2. Personal Representatives.

a. De Bonis Propriis.—Where there is a judgment or decree de bonis propriis against a personal representative, the execution thereon should not be against the goods and chattels of the decedent in his hands to be administered, but against his own goods and chattels. Moore v. Ferguson, 2 Munf. 42; Barr v. Barr, 2 H. & M. 26.

b. De Bonis Testatoris.—Upon a judgment or decree de bonis testatoris against a personal representative, the execution should issue against the assets of the decedent, in the hands of the personal representative, not against the property of the latter in his own right. Beale v. Botetourt, 10 Gratt. 278.

But where the writ directs the sheriff to levy on the goods and chattels of E, executor of D, instead of on the goods and chattels of D in the hands of E to be administered, this is error of form only and not of substance, hence will not be held fatal. Beale v. Botetourt, 10 Gratt. 278.

H. Delivery to Sheriff.

In General.—After the issuance of the execution there are several successive steps to be taken. The first step is to place the execution into the hands of the sheriff. The effect of this step is to make the execution a lien on the property of the defendant to a certain extent and of a certain character. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 43, 98 Am. Dec. 631.

Delivery to Deputy Sheriff Who Afterwards Becomes Sheriff.—Where an execution delivered to a deputy sheriff and he retains it until after the return day has passed, and thereafter he is appointed sheriff, his appointment does not change his possession of the execution, and he still holds it as deputy sheriff. Paine v. Tutwiler, 27 Gratt. 444.

I. Officers' Commissions.—A debtor after the levy of a f. fa., or an arrest on a ca. sa., cannot deprive the officer of his commissions by paying the money to the plaintiff before the sale of his property, or his discharge from custody, as the case may be. Garner v. Neal, 9 Gratt. 87.

IV. ALIAS AND PLURIES EXECUTIONS.

A. In General.—A plaintiff may always, with the consent of all the defendants, abandon a levy upon the property of all or any of them, and afterwards sue out a new execution. If the defendants in an execution be a principal and his sureties, and the property levied on be that of the sureties, the plaintiff may, with the consent of the sureties only, abandon the levy, and afterwards sue out executions against all the defendants. If the levy be abandoned by the sheriff, with the consent of the defendants, without the concurrence or authority of the plaintiff; or if the property be eloiigned or removed by the defendant out of the reach of the sheriff, without the consent of the sheriff or the plaintiff, the latter may sue out a new execution. A mere suspension of proceedings on a levied execution does not authorize a restoration of the property to the possession of the defendant, or release the levy. And if, by a misunderstanding of the directions of the plaintiff by the sheriff and the defendants, the property is released by the sheriff to them, the plaintiff may have a new execution. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 43.

B. While Levy in Force.—As a general rule where an execution has been levied upon property, an alias execution is not issuable while such levy is still in force and remains undisposed of. Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 269; Windrum v. Parker, 2 Leigh 361.

According to statute, a party who has sued out one execution, may sue out others, if the first be not returned and not executed; but if the first be executed though not returned, the party is not entitled to sue out any other execution. Windrum v. Parker, 2 Leigh 361.

C. While Forthcoming Bond in Force.—Where an execution has been levied, and a forthcoming or replevy bond given, a new execution cannot issue while such bond is in force and has not been quashed. Taylor v. Dundass, 1 Wash. 92; Downman v. Chinn, 2 Wash. 139; Randolph v. Randolph, 3 Rand. 490.

D. Where First Execution Not Complete Satisfaction.—Under an execution, of which there was no return by the officer, it appeared that some shares of stock belonging to the debtor had been sold to satisfy the judgment; but the stocks did not bring enough to discharge the judgment, and it was held that the plaintiff could have another execution for the balance still due. Fisher v. March, 26 Gratt. 765; Coleman v. Cocke, 6 Rand. 618, 18 Am. Dec. 757.

E. Discharge from Arrest under Ca. Sa.—It was held in Windrum v. Parker, 2 Leigh 361, that if a debtor be arrested on a ca. sa. and discharged by order of the creditor or his agent, no other execution can be had on the same judgment or decree. There is a dictum, however, by GREEN, J., to the effect that if a debtor in custody under a ca. sa. be permitted to escape, the creditor is entitled to another execution against him.

If a debtor charged in execution escape, the creditor may obtain a new execution, either by scire facias, or upon motion after reasonable notice. Fawkes v. Davison, 8 Leigh 554.

F. Issued without Authority of Law.—The commonwealth got judgment against the sheriff of W. county and his sureties, and had a f. fa. issued and levied. Upon return thereof, it had a venditioni exponas issued. Instead of this writ going to the sheriff, it was taken in charge by the auditor of public accounts. Nothing was done, and no other process issued for over sixteen years, when, in December, 1884, an alias f. fa. was issued, levied and returned, and thereupon a writ of venditioni exponas was issued. The sureties moved the court below to quash the alias writ of venditioni exponas, which motion was denied. Held, the writ of venditioni exponas, as well as the alias f. fa., was issued without authority of law, and should be quashed. Sutton v. Marye, 81 Va. 329.

V. LEVY OF EXECUTION.

A. Necessity for Levy on Tangible Property.—The second step after the issuance of the execution is to levy the same on specific tangible property, by which such property is set apart from the general property of the defendant and placed in the custody of the law until it can be sold and applied to the payment of the execution. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 43, 98 Am. Dec. 631.

Before there can be a sale of corporeal personal property under execution there must be an actual levy of the writ of scire facias and the mere delivery of the writ to the sheriff without a levy creates no security for the debt. Humphrey v. Hitt, 6 Gratt. 523, 52 Am. Dec. 134; Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 43; Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 225.

An officer who is interested in an execution cannot levy it himself. Carter v. Harris, 4 Rand. 199.

Under Control of Plaintiff.—In executing a writ of scire facias the sheriff is the agent of the beneficial plaintiff, and he and his attorney have the right to control the execution of the writ, and to say whether the sheriff shall levy it, or return it without doing so. Rowe v. Hardy, 97 Va. 674, 34 S. E. Rep. 625.

B. Time of Levy.

1. Levy after Return Day.—The officer has no right to make a levy after the return day of the writ, and such levy is void and not binding on the creditor. Grandstaff v. Ridgely, 30 Gratt. 1; O'Bannon v. Saunders, 24 Gratt. 138; Chapman v. Harrison, 4 Rand. 336; Cockerell v. Nichols, 8 W. Va. 159.

But where the execution has been levied before the return day, the officer may receive payment after that day has passed. Paine v. Tutwiler, 27 Gratt. 440; Grandstaff v. Ridgely, 30 Gratt. 1; O'Bannon v. Saunders, 24 Gratt. 138; Chapman v. Harrison, 4 Rand. 336; Cockerell v. Nichols, 8 W. Va. 159.

2. After Satisfaction of Judgment.—Though, as a general rule, after the payment of a judgment the writ of execution cannot be levied, yet in West Virginia it is still an open question whether the execution will be kept in force for the benefit of a sheriff or stranger who has paid the judgment. Feamster v. Withrow, 12 W. Va. 611; Neely v. Jones, 16 W. Va. 628; Beard v. Arbuckle, 19 W. Va. 135. In Virginia, however, a sheriff may purchase a debt in his hands for collection if he acts in good faith. Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 757.

3. After Death of Plaintiff.—The death of the plaintiff does not abate an execution, and it is proper for the officer to levy the writ notwithstanding such death. Turnbull v. Claibornes, 3 Leigh 392; May v. Bank, 2 Rob. 60.

C. Mode of Levy.

1. In General.—In Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 269, it was held that a writ of scire facias, may be levied upon chattels without touching or removing them, provided they be in the immediate power of the sheriff, and admitted by him to have been taken to satisfy the debt. This is especially true where the debtor waives seizure and requests that the property be left in his possession. See also, Wardsworth v. Miller, 4 Gratt. 101; Dorrier v. Masters, 83 Va. 459, 2 S. E. Rep. 927. In 4 Va. Law Reg. 253, there is a very able editorial on this subject.

2. Partnership Chattels.—Upon an execution against partnership property for the individual debt of one of two partners, the sheriff must seize all the social effects, and sell a moiety thereof undivided, for if he seized a divided moiety and sold that the other partner would still have a moiety of such moiety. Shaver v. White, 6 Munf. 110, 8 Am. Dec. 730; Wayt v. Peck, 9 Leigh 434; Christian v. Ellis, 1 Gratt. 396; Pettyjohn v. Woodroof, 86 Va. 478, 10 S. E. Rep. 715; Ashby v. Porter, 26 Gratt. 455; Robinson v. Allen, 85 Va. 721, 8 S. E. Rep. 835; Straus v. Kerngood, 21 Gratt. 584; Carper v. Hawkins, 8 W. Va. 291; Shackelford v. Shackelford, 32 Gratt. 502.

3. Confusion of Goods with After-Acquired Property.—Where executions of different dates are levied on a fluctuating stock of goods the senior execution has preference on all the goods in stock before its return day, and the onus probandi is on the junior execution creditor to show that any special articles came into the stock after the return day. Carr v. Meade, 77 Va. 142.

D. Against Several Defendants.—In Humphrey v. Hitt, 6 Gratt. 523, 52 Am. Dec. 134, there is a dictum by BALDWIN, J., to the effect that upon a joint judgment against two defendants, execution may issue and be levied upon the property of either. See also, Knight v. Charter, 22 W. Va. 422.

E. When There Are Several Executions.—Where there are several executions against the same debtor in the hands of the sheriff, it is his duty to levy them in the order in which they were delivered to him. Hartman v. Campbell, 5 W. Va. 394.

F. Property in Custodia Legis.—While property is in the hands of a receiver, or under the control of the court, no execution can be levied upon it, for that would be to interfere with the possession of the court, but the f. fa. creates a lien thereon. Davis v. Bonney, 89 Va. 769, 17 S. E. Rep. 229; Frayser v. R. & A. R. Co., 81 Va. 392. But see, 3 Va. Law Reg. 23.

The court may direct money made under an execution, and which money is in the hands of the sheriff, or is brought into court, according to the command of the writ of fieri facias, to be paid over in satisfaction of another writ of f. fa. in the hands of the same sheriff against the goods and chattels of the plaintiff in the first execution, he having the legal and equitable title to receive the same. And this is true although it may not appear that sufficient effects cannot otherwise be found to satisfy the judgment. Steele v. Brown, 2 Va. Cas. 246.

G. Return of Writ.—A return on a writ or process is the short official statement of the officer endorsed thereon of what he has done in obedience to the mandate of the writ, or why he has done nothing. He may have been prevented from obeying the mandate of the writ by an injunction, or by a supersedeas, or by the order of the plaintiff or his attorney. A return of any of these facts endorsed on the writ is a sufficient return. Rowe v. Hardy, 97 Va. 674, 34 S. E. Rep. 625; 5 Va. Law Reg. 672.

1. Endorsement.

a. In General.—Where a writ of f. fa. is returned "not levied by reason of the stay law," it will be presumed in the absence of an endorsement or proof of the date of its receipt by the officer, that it went into his hands after April 30, 1861 (time when stay law took effect), in which case such return was valid. And where by statute it is required that the officer shall return upon a writ of f. fa. "whether the money is or cannot be made," a return of "not levied by reason of the stay law" is a return substantially that the money "cannot be made." Hamilton v. McConkey, 83 Va. 533, 2 S. E. Rep. 724; Shipley v. Pew, 23 W. Va. 495.

The sheriff's failing to mention, in his return of an execution, one of the negroes on whom it was levied, is no ground for reversing a judgment on a forfeited forthcoming bond, in which that negro is mentioned as one of those on whom such execution was levied. See Jones v. Hull, 1 H. & M. 212; Dix v. Evans, 8 Munf. 308.

In general, the return of the sheriff, of "no effects," on an execution in favour of an assignee of a bond against the obligor, is sufficient to charge the assignor. Goodall v. Stuart, 2 H. & M. 105.

An execution was returned endorsed to the effect that on April 14th, 1861, a f. fa. had been levied on one slave, the property of defendant, and held up by order of plaintiff. On April 30th, 1861, the stay law was enacted, and continued in force until emancipation. Held, it is not to be presumed from the levy that the judgment was satisfied. Saunders v. Prunty, 89 Va. 921, 17 S. E. Rep. 231.

In Eckhols v. Graham, 1 Call 492, it was held that the names of slaves taken upon an execution ought to be endorsed thereon, to prevent purchasers from being deceived.

b. Extra-Official Return.—What a sheriff adds to his official return is extra-official, and such additional extra-official return is not even prima facie evidence of any fact therein stated. Alexander v. Byrd, 85 Va. 690, 8 S. E. Rep. 577; Shannon v. McMullin, 25 Gratt. 211.

2. Presumption as to Levy.—In Paine v. Tutwiler, 27 Gratt. 440, where there was nothing to show whether an execution, placed in the hands of the officer, had been levied or not, it was held that after a great lapse of time the court will presume that the execution was levied before the return day thereof. See also, O'Bannon v. Saunders, 24 Gratt. 133.

a. Evidence.—Parol evidence is admissible to prove that an execution was levied, though no return was made upon it. Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 269.

b. Rebuttal of Presumption.—In Paxton v. Rich, 8 Va. 378, 7 S. E. Rep. 531, it was held that the presumption, that an execution delivered to an officer has been levied, may be repelled by evidence to show that, about the time when the writ went into the officer's hands, the debtor possessed no leviable property, though there has been a non-return of the writ for fourteen years.

3. Time of Return.—Though as a general rule the officer must return the execution before the return day is past, yet by order of court, a sheriff may be permitted to make or amend a return at any time after the return day. Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 269; Baird v. Rice, 1 Call 24; Hare v. Niblo, 4 Leigh 361.

In the absence of a date, or other evidence showing when the return of an officer on a writ was made, it is presumed to have been made at a time when he had the right to make it, and in due time, as the prima facie presumption is that the officer has done his duty. Rowe v. Hardy, 97 Va. 674, 34 S. E. Rep. 625.

4. Amendment of Return.—Having made return on an execution and on that return, in part, a decree having been entered, in subsequent proceedings against him and his sureties, the sheriff will not be permitted to amend his return, so as to explain it away and enable his sureties to escape liability for his default. Carr v. Meade, 77 Va. 142.

But in Rucker v. Harrison, 6 Munf. 181, a supersedeas to the execution having been awarded, the sheriff was allowed by the court to amend his return after a lapse of seven years from its date. See also on this point, Smith v. Triplett, 4 Leigh 500; Wardworth v. Miller, 4 Gratt. 99.

A sheriff cannot amend his return upon an execution after it has been filed, except by motion to the court, upon notice to the creditor. Hammen v. Minnick, 32 Gratt. 249.

A sheriff may have leave to amend his return upon an execution, after notice of a motion against him founded on the original return. And the amended return may be made by a deputy who did not make the first return. Stone v. Wilson, 10 Gratt. 523.

Upon a motion to quash a second execution in vacation, the judge may, in vacation, allow the sheriff to amend his return on the first execution. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 14.

It was held in Henry v. Stone, 2 Rand. 455, that a sheriff can not contradict his return, but may obtain leave of the court to amend it.

5. Conclusiveness of Return.—In an action between the assignees and assignors, the sheriff's return of nuda bona on the execution against the obligors in the forthcoming bond, though amended after the assignees' action and five years after the return, so as to show the insolvency of both, is conclusive evidence of such insolvency. Smith v. Triplett, 4 Leigh 590; Taylor v. Dundass, 1 Wash. 92.

A sheriff's return may be contradicted by evidence alibide; in which case the sheriff himself would be a competent witness to prove its truth. But after judgment by default, a party cannot object in an appellate court, to the truth of the return. Cunningham v. Mitchell, 4 Rand. 189; Lathrop v. Lumpkin, 2 Rob. 49; Norris v. Crummey, 2 Rand. 329; Henry v. Stone, 2 Rand. 455.

In the absence of proof to the contrary, and especially after a great lapse of time, an execution which had gone into the hands of the sheriff, and is indorsed by him as levied on personal property of the debtor, will warrant two presumptions: first, that the officer levied on sufficient property to pay the debt; and, secondly, that the property had been sold, and the judgment and execution satisfied. Northwestern Bank of Va. v. Hays, 16 S. E. Rep. 561, 37 W. Va. 475.

The validity of the return of an officer on a writ of Aeri facias is not affected by the fact that the writ is not returned to the office till after the return day thereof. The record is incomplete till the writ is returned, but when returned, the return becomes competent evidence of the facts therein stated, and the parties are entitled to the benefit of their legal effect. Rowe v. Hardy, 97 Va. 674, 34 S. E. Rep. 625.

A return upon an execution which the officer has the right to make is conclusive between the parties, and they are interested to have the officer make his return and file the writ with the proper custodian. But neither of the parties can be deprived of the benefit of the return by the failure of the officer to make it at the return day of the writ. The officer may be thereafter compelled to make his return by process of contempt, or by proceeding to enforce the forfeitures and penalties prescribed by law. Rowe v. Hardy, 97 Va. 674, 34 S. E. Rep. 625.

A sheriff's or other officer's return upon a forthcoming bond is not conclusive, but only prima facie evidence of its truth. Adler v. Green, 18 W. Va. 201.

H. Abandonment of Levy.

1. By Fraudulent Collusion.—When goods have been taken in execution under a f. fa., a direction given by the creditor to the sheriff to restore the goods to the possession of the debtor, is fraudulent, and destroys the lien of execution on the property; but a mere order to postpone the sale, without collusion, does not affect the lien of the execution. Fisher v. Vanmeter, 9 Leigh 18, 33 Am. Dec. 221; Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 269; Claytor v. Anthony, 6 Rand. 305.

2. By Alias Writ.—A previous levy of an execution is waived and abandoned by the issuance of another writ. Eckhols v. Graham, 1 Call 492.

3. By Voluntary Relinquishment.—In Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 13, 98 Am. Dec. 681, it was held that an execution creditor cannot voluntarily abandon a valid subsisting levy, and afterwards insist that the judgment has not been discharged and demand a new execution.

I. Garnishment Proceedings.

Whom Summoned.—Under the West Virginia statute regulating garnishment proceedings, it is held that, where a suggestion is issued it is unnecessary that any other person than the one designated, as indebted to, or holding effects of, the judgment debtor, should be summoned. Lanham v. Lanham, 30 W. Va. 222, 4 S. E. Rep. 273.

Personal Representatives.—In Bickle v. Chrisman, 76 Va. 678, the court said: "It is well settled that process of garnishment at law will not lie against personal representatives." See also, Whitehead v. Coleman, 81 Gratt. 784; Parker v. Donnally, 4 W. Va. 648; Brewer v. Hutton, 45 W. Va. 106, 30 S. E. Rep. 81. Compare Vance v. McLaughlin, 8 Gratt. 289.

Public Fiduciaries.—In Aumann v. Black, 15 W. Va. 773, it was held, a collector of a municipal corporation could not be garnished to enforce the lien of a Aeri facias.

Nor can the treasurer of the state be a garnishee in respect to money or effects which he holds strictly in his official capacity. Rollo v. Andes Ins. Co., 23 Gratt. 509.

Corporations.—The shares of a stockholder in a joint stock company, incorporated by and conducting its operations, in whole or in part, in the state are such estate as is liable to be attached in a proceeding instituted for that purpose, by one of the creditors of such stockholder; and such estate may properly be considered, for the purpose of such proceeding, as in the possession of the corporation in which the shares are held, and such corporation may properly be summoned as garnishee in the case. Chesapeake & O. R. R. Co. v. Paine, 29 Gratt. 502; S. V. R. Co. v. Griffith, 76 Va. 913.

Under the 10th and 11th sections of chapter 141 of Code of West Virginia, pp. 678-674, providing for a suggestion by a judgment creditor, that by reason of the lien of a writ of Aeri facias there is a liability on any person other than the judgment debtor and a summons thereon to such third person to answer the suggestion, a judgment can be rendered against such third person, only when he owes a debt to the defendant in the execution or has in his hands personal estate of the defendant in the execution, for which debt or estate an action at law could have been brought against him. And if his liability is purely equitable and could be enforced only in a court of equity, no judgment can be rendered against him in such proceeding as a garnishee. Swann v. Summers, 19 W. Va. 115; Clough v. Thompson, 7 Gratt. 83; Penn v. Spencer, 17 Gratt. 94.

If by any legislation one corporation takes charge of a portion of the property and franchise of another and conducts its business in part, and by such legislation and action it is responsible to render an account in a court of equity for its actings and doings to the first corporation of its creditors, the creditor of the first corporation, who has issued a Aeri facias against the property of the first corporation, cannot obtain by the garnishee process a judgment against the second corporation or any of its debtors. Swann v. Summers, 19 W. Va. 115.

Effect.—The proceeding by garnishment under an execution and that by attachment have practically the same effect, except that under the former the creditor does not acquire a lien upon the specific property. Bickle v. Chrisman, 76 Va. 691; and see especially, on this subject, monographic note on "Attachments" appended to Lancaster v. Wilson, 27 Gratt. 624.

VI. LIEN OF EXECUTION.

A. Effect of Levy.

1. In General.—A f. fa. levied at the suit of a creditor, upon the corporeal personal property of the debtor, is unquestionably a security for the debt; it is a direct appropriation, by authority of law, of specific property of the debtor, for the purpose of satisfying the demand. The lien thereby created is substantial and enduring, as much so as a mortgage or a pledge, and can be defeated only by the act of the creditor. Humphrey v. Hitt, 6 Gratt. 526, 52 Am. Dec. 186; Spence v. Repass, 94 Va. 716, 27 S. E. Rep. 588; 2 Va. Law Reg. 704.

2. As to Title of Property.—The levy of an execution of A. fa. does not divest the defendant in the execution of the property, and transfer the title to the plaintiff or the sheriff. Only a special interest is vested in the sheriff as a mere bailee, to enable him to keep the property safely, and defend it against wrongdoers. It is in the custody of the law, and the sheriff has a naked power to sell it and pass the title of the owner to the purchaser. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 18; Lusk v. Ramsay, 8 Munf. 431; Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 772.

B. Commencement of Lien.—According to statute, a Aeri facias is a lien only from the time it goes into the hands of the sheriff to be executed, upon all the personal estate of the debtor, with the exception stated in the statute. Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401; Frayser v. R. & A. R. R. Co., 81 Va. 392; Huling v. Cabell, 9 W. Va. 522, 27 Am. Rep. 562; Wiant v. Hays, 38 W. Va. 681, 18 S. E. Rep. 807.

The lien of a Aeri facias never levied, attaches to all the personal property owned by the debtor, and to all choses in action to which he may be entitled at any time prior to the return day of the Aeri facias, subject only to the exceptions specified in chapter 141, section 1, of the Code of West Virginia. Huling v. Cabell, 9 W. Va. 522.

C. Extent of Lien.

1. Property Subject to Levy.—In Huling v. Cabell, 9 W. Va. 530, 27 Am. Rep. 566, it was held that the lien of an execution attaches to all the personal estate of the debtor capable of being levied on, though such property is not levied on.

2. Property Not Subject to Levy.—In Frayser v. R. & A. R. R. Co., 81 Va. 392, the court said: "By the comprehensive terms of the statute, the lien of a A. fa., from the time the writ is delivered to the officer to be executed, extends to all the personal estate of the judgment debtor—although not levied on nor capable of being levied on—with certain enumerated exceptions. See also, to the same effect—that personal property not capable of being levied on, may, nevertheless, be subject to the lien—Hicks v. Roanoke Brick Co., 94 Va. 749, 27 S. E. Rep. 506; Davis v. Bonney, 89 Va. 760, 17 S. E. Rep. 229; Huling v. Cabell, 9 W. Va. 530, 27 Am. Rep. 566; Wiant v. Hays, 38 W. Va. 681, 18 S. E. Rep. 807. See especially, strong editorial, in 4 Va. Law Reg. 255.

3. Title of Creditor under an Elegit.—A creditor extending the land of his debtor under an elegit, stands, in judgment of law, as if he had taken a lease for years in satisfaction of his debt; and by virtue of such intent, he acquires a title to the premises which may be the subject of adjudication in the court of appeals, as a controversy concerning the title of land. Lyons v. McGuire, 22 Gratt. 202.

The officer executing a writ of elegit does not deliver to the creditor actual possession of the premises, but only the legal possession, which may be enforced by ejectment, or by writ of unlawful detainer when the cause of action has accrued within three years. Lyons v. McGuire, 22 Gratt. 202.

If, after an extent under an elegit, the possession of the premises is withheld by the debtor, or some one claiming under him, the tenant, by elegit, may recover the same by action, and hold over even after his term has expired; and this, though his term has expired before the trial of the cause. Lyons v. McGuire, 22 Gratt. 202.

D. Assignment of Property Subject to Lien.

Bona Fide Purchasers.—The lien of an execution is held, according to statute, not to affect a bona fide assignee of intangible property, for value and without notice of such lien. Trevillian v. Guerrant, 21 Gratt. 525; Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 216; Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 153; Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401; Huling v. Cabell, 9 W. Va. 522, 27 Am. Rep. 562; Wiant v. Hays, 38 W. Va. 681, 18 S. E. Rep. 807.

But these cases also recognize the rule, that if the purchaser has notice of the lien, or does not pay value for the property, he is not protected, and the lien still binds the property in his hands.

In Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 153, a deed to secure bona fide debts was upheld as against an execution creditor.

In West Virginia, by statute, the docketing of the lien is notice, even against a bona fide purchaser for value, who buys the property after the return day of the writ. Wiant v. Hays, 38 W. Va. 685, 18 S. E. Rep. 809.

E. Priority between Several Liens.

1. General Rule.—As a general rule, where there are several executions against the same property, they take priority in the order in which they were delivered to the officer. Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 216; Foreman v. Loyd, 2 Leigh 284, overruling Jackson v. Heiskell, 1 Leigh 257.

Hence, according to the general rule, a junior execution creditor, obtains no priority by reason of first discovering assets. Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 216.

2. Common-Law Rule.—In Humphrey v. Hitt, 6 Gratt. 527, 52 Am. Dec. 183, it was held that the delivery of the execution to the sheriff was not a lien upon the goods of the debtor; but that it was the levy which made the lien. It followed of course, from this hypothesis, that the execution first levied had priority, even though it was not the first delivered to the officer. This case, however, was decided before the enactment of the statute, declaring that the execution lien should commence from the time of delivery to the officer.

3. Prior Incumbrances.—A deed of trust, which had been given and recorded prior to the issuance, delivery, or levy of a writ of execution, is held to have priority over such execution. Bank v. Turnbull, 22 Gratt. 695; Childers v. Smith, Gilmer 196.

But in Pegram v. May, 9 Leigh 176, the writ of execution had been issued and delivered, but, before levy, the debtor made a deed of trust of certain tangible property, which was afterwards levied on in the hands of the purchaser. Held, the lien of execution has priority over the lien of the deed of trust, and the purchaser under the execution is entitled to the property.

4. Subsequent Incumbrances.—It was held in Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401, that the mere delivery of the writ to the officer gives the execution priority over a subsequent attachment.

Choses in Action.—An insolvent debtor may, notwithstanding his insolvency, make a valid assignment of a chose in action owned by him, and the bona fide assignee for value of such chose in action takes title thereto superior to the lien of a Aeri facias against such debtor. It is immaterial whether the debtor intended to commit a fraud in making the assignment or not, if the assignee has no notice of such intent, or of the existence of the A. fa. and pays value. Shields v. Mahoney, 94 Va. 487, 8 Va. Law Reg. 302, 27 S. E. Rep. 23.

At the time a receiver is appointed at the suit of trust creditors to take possession of a railroad and carry it on, there are a number of executions against the company in the hands of the sheriff; and there are funds derived from income and balances due from employees, in the hands of or due to the company. Held, the execution creditors are entitled to have these funds and balances applied to the satisfaction of their debts in preference to the trust creditors. Gibert v. Washington City, etc., R. Co., 83 Gratt. 645; Frayser v. R. & A. R. Co., 81 Va. 388.

5. Landlord's Lien.—The landlord's lien, for a year's rent on the goods and chattels of his tenant, does not extend to protect them from being taken by virtue of any execution, except in cases where the said goods and chattels shall be in or upon the demised premises. Geiger v. Harman, 8 Gratt. 130; City of Richmond v. Duesberry, 27 Gratt. 213; Wades v. Figgatt, 75 Va. 578; Crawford v. Jarrett, 2 Leigh 638; Upper Appomattox Co. v. Hamilton, 88 Va. 319, 2 S. E. Rep. 195.

6. Adjustment of Conflicting Liens.—A conflict of liens may be adjusted by a petition to the court, the force and effect of whose process is in question, or more satisfactorily by a proceeding in equity, to which all persons concerned should be made parties. Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284; Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 220; Erskine v. Staley, 12 Leigh 406.

F. Duration of Lien.

1. In General.—In Carr v. Glasscock, 8 Gratt. 354, it was held that the lien which a creditor acquires by a levy of his execution upon personal property is, if not enforced by a sale thereof, only temporary, and expires with the authority to sell under the execution. But under Va. Code, § 3002, the lien of a writ of Aeri facias continues so long as the judgment can be enforced. Hicks v. Roanoke Brick Co., 94 Va. 749, 27 S. E. Rep. 596.

The lien continues after the return day of the execution, and only cases when the right to levy the execution, or to levy a new execution upon the judgment ceases, or is suspended by a forthcoming bond being given and forfeited, or by a supersedeas or other legal process. Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401; Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 227; Trevillian v. Guerrant, 31 Gratt. 525.

2. West Virginia Rule.—The lien, as to the property not leviable, does not end with the return day; but on leviable property, the lien ceases with the return day, unless there has been a levy of the writ, or a docketing of the lien. Wiant v. Hays, 88 W. Va. 685, 18 S. E. Rep. 809.

3. Death of Debtor.—In Trevillian v. Guerrant, 31 Gratt. 525, it was held that the lien of an execution upon the debtor's choses in action, though not enforced in his lifetime, continues after his death as against the other creditors of the debtor. See also, Frayser v. R. & A. R. Co., 81 Va. 388; Allan v. Hoffman, 83 Va. 129, 2 S. E. Rep. 602; Hicks v. Roanoke Brick Co., 94 Va. 750, 27 S. E. Rep. 596; Werdenbaugh v. Reid, 20 W. Va. 599.

4. Taking Out Second Execution.—If a plaintiff sues out a second execution, before the property taken under the first is disposed of, he waives the first, and destroys the lien on the property taken under the first. Eckhols v. Graham, 1 Call 492; McKey v. Garth, 2 Rob. 33, 40 Am. Dec. 725.

G. Forthcoming or Delivery Bond.

1. Form of Bond.—A forthcoming bond should be made payable to the creditor, and not to the sheriff; the amount of the execution ought to be recited, and the condition should be to deliver the property at the time and place of sale, and not when demanded. If the bond be defective in any of the above instances, or in others, the court may, and ought to quash it on motion. Downman v. Chinn, 2 Wash. 189.

The condition of a forthcoming bond ought to set forth, with certainty, the time and place of sale; but it need not state that the day mentioned, is that appointed for the sale. Irvin v. Eldridge, 1 Wash. 161; Wood v. Davis, 1 Wash. 69.

A forthcoming bond given by the defendant only, without any security, will support a motion, and judgment will be rendered on it in favor of the plaintiff. Washington v. Smith, 3 Call 18.

A forthcoming bond, mentioning the persons against whom the execution issued, and that "they were desirous of keeping in their possession, until the day of sale, the property taken by the sheriff," sufficiently describes it as their property. Bronaugh v. Freeman, 2 Munf. 266.

A forthcoming bond should not be quashed for the vagueness with which the property named in it is described, the description being: "All of F. J. Calhoun's household and kitchen furniture now in said tenement," referring to that described in the warrant; there being in such case no necessity that an inventory of the property should be made. Central Land Co. of W. Va. v. Calhoun, 16 W. Va. 361.

A forthcoming bond is good, although it appoints no place at which the delivery is to be made. Burwell v. Court, 1 Wash. 254.

If a forthcoming bond do not recite against whom the execution issued, and upon whose property it was levied, it may be quashed on motion. Hubbard v. Taylor, 1 Wash. 259; Lewis v. Thompson, 2 H. & M. 100.

If the forthcoming bond recites an execution, and that property has been taken to satisfy it, a variance, between the sheriff's return and the bond, provided the bond agrees with the execution, is unimportant. If the clerk of the court alter a forthcoming bond, it will not prejudice the plaintiff; but the bond will be restored to what it originally was. Buchanan v. Maynadier, 6 Call 1.

Where the execution is against four persons, and the forthcoming bond recites that the execution was against three, it is a material variance, for which the bond should be quashed. Holt v. Lynch, 18 W. Va. 568.

2. Validity of Bond.—If the forthcoming bond include an excess, and the plaintiff after judgment, but during the same term, release the excess, the defect is thereby cured, and the judgment rendered valid. Bell v. Marr, 1 Call 47; Scott v. Hornsby, 1 Call 41.

Where execution against two is levied on the goods of one, and the latter gives a forthcoming bond with the others as his only surety, such surety, being already bound, is not security such as the law requires. Garland v. Lynch, 1 Rob. 546.

The sheriff's fee for taking a forthcoming bond may be included in it. Bronaugh v. Freeman, 2 Munf. 266.

If before the act of 1794, the sheriff in taking a forthcoming bond included his commissions on the debt, it was erroneous, but in such case the bond is not void; and the judgment shall be entered for the sum due without the commissions. Worsham v. Egleston, 1 Call 48.

The obligee in a forthcoming bond may also be a surety, and such fact will not render the bond void. Booth v. Kinsey, 8 Gratt. 560.

A N. fa. is sued out by X and Y on a judgment recovered by them; they endorse on the writ that it is for the benefit of A, and the sheriff levies it and takes a forthcoming bond payable to A. Held, the bond is valid. Meze v. Howver, 1 Leigh 442.

Where a surety on a forthcoming bond was induced to sign the bond in blank by the false representations of the principal and sheriff as to the amount of the judgment, equity will not grant him relief, the judgment creditor not being a party. But where judgment on the forthcoming bond was rendered on proof of notice by the sheriff, when in fact no such notice had been given, and the surety was induced by the other party to believe that notice would be given, relief will be granted to the surety on the ground of surprise, if he pays the amount for which he supposed he was bound. Gordon v. Jeffery, 2 Leigh 410.

3. Liability on Bonds.—Parties who voluntarily enter into a forthcoming bond are estopped from all inquiry into the regularity and validity of the levy of the writ of Aeri facias upon which the bond was taken. Shaw v. McCullough, 3 W. Va. 200.

A. gave a forthcoming bond, with W. surety. Judgment was rendered on the bond against A., and a N. fa. issued. Property was taken, but the N. fa. was not returned. These proceedings were no bar to a motion upon the bond against W. Winston v. Whitlocke, 5 Call 485.

Where a forthcoming bond is given, and the debtor, on the day of sale, pays to the creditor the full amount of the debt, interest and costs, except the sheriff's commission, the bond will be forfeited, and a motion will lie upon it. Bernard v. Scott, 3 Rand. 522.

A judgment is obtained against three persons, and execution is issued thereon, which is levied on the property of one of them, who, thereupon, gives a bond with security for the forthcoming and delivery of the property on the day of sale; and this bond is forfeited. Held, the execution and forfeiture of the bond did not discharge and extinguish the original debt, as against the other joint debtors.

The surety of a joint debtor, in a forthcoming bond, becomes, upon the forfeiture thereof, surety for the debt; and when he has discharged it, is entitled to be substituted to all the rights of the creditor against the original debtors, subsisting at the time he became so bound for the debt. Robinson v. Sherman, 2 Gratt. 178, 44 Am. Dec. 881.

A judgment cannot be obtained upon a forthcoming bond, bearing date before the 7th of January, 1807, against the sheriff to whom the estate of a deceased obligor has been committed, as against an executor or administrator in ordinary cases;—but the plaintiff must exhibit his claim before the court, according to the act of 1792. Jackson v. Ewell, 4 Munf. 426.

Where, on the day of sale mentioned in the forthcoming bond, the property is on the spot before 1 o'clock, but not delivered to the sheriff until after 4 o'clock, this will not be a good delivery under the act of 1821, in certain cases, and the bond will be forfeited. M'Kinster v. Garrott, 3 Rand. 554.

Where a forthcoming bond was given on an execution issued in contravention to the stay law, no advantage can be taken of this fact to defeat the question of substitution between sureties, or change the liability of endorsers, however much it may have been good ground for quashing the execution. Conaway v. Odibert, 2 W. Va. 25.

The surety in a forthcoming bond has a right to deliver the property on the day of sale, if he can on that day peaceably obtain possession thereof. Lusk v. Ramsay, 3 Munf. 417.

If the sheriff, after taking a forthcoming bond, accept the same goods from the defendant, in discharge of his body from another execution, and prevent the surety in such bond from delivering them on the day of sale therein appointed; a court of equity, on a bill for discovery and injunction, exhibited by the surety, will require the sheriff, and all parties concerned, to answer a charge of fraud and combination, and (whether fraud be established or not) will perpetually enjoin a judgment rendered against the surety upon the forthcoming bond, as unconscionable against him; leaving a plaintiff, in that judgment, to his remedy against the sheriff; and the sheriff to his remedy against the person who indemnified him, or to whom, by mistake, or in his own wrong, he paid the money in satisfaction of the second execution. Lusk v. Ramsay, 3 Munf. 417.

The bond executed under the act of May 23, 1831, entitled "an act to prevent the sacrifice of personal property at forced sales," Session Acts 1830-73, ch. 120, p. 162, is a lien on the land of the obligors who are alive, from the return of the bond to the clerk's office; and the surety in the bond paying it off is entitled to be substituted to the lien of the bond upon the land of the principal obligor. Barger v. Backland, 28 Gratt. 850.

If a forthcoming bond fixes a day of sale different from the day of delivery named in the bond, and on the day fixed for the delivery the execution debtor goes to the sheriff or other officer and informs him that the property is at the place of sale, and he does not go there to receive it, and the property is there in fact and ready to be delivered to the officer, this is a satisfaction of the condition of the bond, and there can be no recovery on it. Adler v. Green, 13 W. Va. 202.

On the day of sale the property is at the place of sale and consisting principally of household furniture and ornaments in different rooms of the house, and the officer goes through those rooms, has the property in his presence and power, and the execution-debtor does not interfere or prevent a sale of the property; this is such a delivery of the property, as discharges the obligors in the bond from responsibility, notwithstanding the fact that the execution-debtor may claim that a portion of the property is exempt from forced sale under the exemption-law, and third parties may claim a portion of it as their property. Adler v. Green, 13 W. Va. 202.

Judgment on a forthcoming bond ought not to be relieved against, in equity, because the bond was forfeited, by a slave having run away, who by the condition, was to be forthcoming. Cole v. Fenwick Gilmer 184.

A partial delivery of the goods mentioned in the condition of a forthcoming bond, is not a performance, and the penalty becomes forfeited. But if the sheriff secure and sell what is so delivered, the amount must be credited to the obligor. Pleasant v. Lewis, 1 Wash. 274.

If the forthcoming bond be not forfeited at the time when the injunction issues, the penalty is saved; but it is otherwise, if the bond be forfeited before the injunction issues. Wilson v. Stevenson, 2 Call 218.

The right to move on a forthcoming bond is not suspended by a supersedeas to the original judgment. Spencer v. Pilcher, 10 Leigh 490.

A forthcoming bond dated the 1st day of November 1834, being conditioned for the delivery of the property "on the third Monday of November next," it is contended that there could be no breach of the condition until the third Monday in November 1835. Held by the court of appeals (construing the instrument according to the subject-matter and the evident meaning of the parties) that the day for the delivery of the property was the third Monday of November 1834. Spencer v. Pilcher, 10 Leigh 490.

4. Actions on Bond.

a. In General.—No formal issue need be joined on a motion on a forthcoming bond, as the pleading may be ore tenus, and the court may pronounce judgment on the evidence. M'Kinster v. Garrott, 8 Rand. 554.

An amendment of the return made by an officer on a notice, does not permit him in any wise to change or amend the notice itself; and if he does, the changed or amended notice is a nullity. White v. Sydenstricker, 6 W. Va. 46.

A notice of motion for judgment on an undertaking, in which a blank is left for the day on which the motion will be made, and a blank for the name of the party who will make the motion; the name of the party to whom the undertaking is given, and to whom the money is to be paid, being signed at the foot of the notice, as the person giving the same, is sufficient. White v. Sydenstricker, 6 W. Va. 46.

Although the judgment on a forthcoming bond should be rendered for a larger sum than that due by the execution, yet if the execution is not made part of the record by bill of exceptions, nor any objection made in the court below, such objection cannot be sustained in the court of appeals. Burke v. Levy, 1 Rand. 1.

Executors may maintain an action of debt upon a three month's replevy bond payable to their testator. Booker v. M'Roberts, 1 Call 243.

An action of debt may be brought upon a defective forthcoming bond, even after an unsuccessful motion had been made on it. Hewlett v. Chamberlayne, 1 Wash. 307.

In a judgment on a forthcoming bond, if the record states that the cause was continued until the next day, but does not mention that the defendant was called, it is not error, if the defendant, on the day of the judgment, prays an appeal, and gives bond, in court, to prosecute it. Wilkinson v. Hendrick, 5 Call 12.

Though the forthcoming bond be left at the clerk's office before it is forfeited, yet, if the property is not produced on the day of sale, the officer may have the clerk endorse it as filed in the office after the day of sale, and it will operate as a judgment, and as if actually returned to the office after the day of sale. Central Land Co. of W. Va. v. Calhoun, 16 W. Va. 361.

Evidence—Officer's Return.—A sheriff's or other officer's return upon a forthcoming bond is not conclusive, but only prima facie evidence of its truth. But a forthcoming bond, which provides for the delivery of the property on a day different from the day of sale fixed in the bond, is not a good statutory bond; and the sheriff's, or other officer's return of "forfeited," on such bond is not even prima facie evidence of the truth thereof. Such a bond, though not good as a statutory bond, is good as a common-law bond, if there is no other objection to it. Adler

v. Green, 18 W. Va. 201; Wallace v. McCarty, 8 W. Va. 193.

A sheriff's return may be contradicted by evidence alibis; in which case the sheriff himself would be a competent witness to prove its truth. But after judgment by default, a party cannot object in an appellate court, to the truth of the return. Cunningham v. Mitchell, 4 Rand. 189.

A motion on a forthcoming bond can only be made on the date to which the notice is given, unless the defendant be called, and the motion entered and continued. Parker v. Pitts, 1 Hen. & M. 4.

On a joint notice to all the obligors in a forthcoming bond, the plaintiff may take judgment against one of the defendants. Glassel v. Delima, 2 Call 303.

A f. fa. is directed to the sheriff of Campbell, but is delivered to and levied by the sergeant of Lynchburg, who takes a forthcoming bond upon it, reciting that the writ had been directed to the sergeant. Held, the writ gave no authority to the sergeant, and no warrant to him to take the forthcoming bond, and that the bond is variant from the execution and therefore the bond ought to be quashed. It is competent to the obligors in a forthcoming bond to move to quash it for irregularity. Couch v. Miller, 2 Leigh 545.

Upon a motion to quash a forthcoming bond, for defects apparent on the face of the execution on which it was taken, an appellate court will regard the execution as part of the record, though not made so by any express order to that effect. Couch v. Miller, 2 Leigh 545.

A notice upon a forfeited forthcoming bond, given to a regular term of a court which the judge fails to attend, is sufficient to authorize an award of execution on the bond, at a special term. Wootten v. Bragg, 1 Gratt. 1.

Even after execution has been awarded on a forthcoming bond, the bond may be quashed on the motion of the creditor, to enable him to have execution on the original judgment, if the case be one in which the execution on the forthcoming bond has proved unavailing, without any default of the creditor. Garland v. Lynch, 1 Rob. 545.

A judgment on a forthcoming bond, instead of awarding execution thereon, is that the plaintiff recover a debt against the defendant. Held, though irregular in form this is substantially right. Harpers v. Patton, 1 Leigh 306.

Where there is a material variance between a forthcoming bond and the execution upon which it is taken, the bond should be quashed. But where the forthcoming bond in its condition recites that the amount due on the execution with the fee for taking the bond and the sheriff's commissions is larger than is in fact due, this is not a variance for which the bond will be quashed, but judgment should be rendered for the actual amount due. Holt v. Lynch, 18 W. Va. 567.

Where non est factum is pleaded to a motion on a forthcoming bond, the court may render judgment without the intervention of a jury; or they may empanel a jury to try the issue at its discretion. Burke v. Levy, 1 Rand. 1.

A writ of Heri facias against an administratrix, "to be levied, as to certain damages and costs, of the goods and chattels of her intestate, and as to other damages and costs of her own goods and chattels," was returned "executed on certain slaves the property of the administratrix, and a forthcoming bond taken," &c. The bond being given by the administratrix, eo nomine, but expressing that the f. fa. was against the goods and chattels of the said administratrix, was decided to be variant from the fi. fa. and therefore quashed. Glascock v. Dawson, 1 Munf. 605.

The act of May 28, 1870, entitled an act to prevent the sacrifice of property at forced sales, acts of 1869-70, ch. 120, p. 162, does not require three months' notice of a motion on a forthcoming bond, where the bond was forfeited before the passage of the act. Goolsby v. Strother, 21 Gratt. 107.

b. On Appeal.—An appellate court will not reverse the judgment of an inferior court, overruling a motion to quash an undertaking or forthcoming bond made to the sheriff, simply because it appears that the undertaking was executed after the return day of the writ of fi. facias. Harwood v. Creel, 8 W. Va. 579.

In reviewing a judgment by default on a forthcoming bond, the appellate court will compare it with the execution on which it was taken. Glascock v. Dawson, 1 Munf. 605.

A. B. & C. execute a forthcoming bond, to release the goods of A. taken in execution. C. pays the debt, and moves against B. as a principal in the bond. There is nothing in the bond to show whether B. was principal or surety. B. contends that he was only a surety jointly with C. The court below gives judgment for C. on the motion. No evidence is in the record to show whether B. was surety or principal. The judgment was affirmed in this court, as it will be presumed, that the court below had evidence before them, that B. was a principal and not a surety. Cunningham v. Mitchell, 4 Rand. 189.

If a supersedeas to a judgment (execution being levied, and a forthcoming bond taken), be issued before the day of sale; and thereupon, the property be not forthcoming; the penalty of the bond is saved, and no motion lies upon it. Rucker v. Harrison, 6 Munf. 181.

In a motion on a forthcoming bond, the defendant is not allowed to prove that the execution issued against another person of the same name who is now dead. Downman v. Downman, 2 Call 508.

One forthcoming bond may be taken on several executions. Winston v. Com., 2 Call 290.

Where a judgment upon a forthcoming bond is obtained against a defendant, having legal notice, and appearing by attorney, but not moving to quash the bond, nor stating by plea or bill of exceptions, any variance between it and the execution, the appellate court is not to reverse the judgment on the ground of such variance. Bronaugh v. Freeman, 2 Munf. 266.

A forthcoming bond, being inserted in the transcript of the record, is to be taken as the bond on which the court gave judgment, without any certificate by the clerk to that effect.

If a judgment quashing a forthcoming bond be reversed, the appellate court will not proceed to give judgment for the plaintiff, unless it regularly appear that the defendants had legal notice of the motion, or appeared to oppose it. If, therefore, there be no bill of exceptions, making the notice, stated in the record, a part thereof, and it does not appear by the judgment itself, that the defendants had legal notice, or appeared in the court below, the cause should be sent back, to give the plaintiff an opportunity to prove his notice, and the defendants to make any defence thereto, which their case may admit of, according to law. Beale v. Wilson, 4 Munf. 380.

5. Effect of Bond.—An execution lien upon the property of a debtor is not released by his giving a forthcoming bond, but continues until such bond is forfeited. Lusk v. Ramsay, 3 Munf. 417.

If a forthcoming bond be quashed, the lien of the execution prevails. Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 75.

A forfeited forthcoming bond stands as a security for the debt, and while in force no execution can be taken out, or other proceedings be had at law, to enforce the original judgment; such forfeiture of the bond has the effect of a judgment. Yet, even where forfeited, the bond is merely a suspension and not an absolute satisfaction of the judgment; for if it be faulty on its face, or the security when taken be insufficient, or the obligors, though solvent when the bond is taken, become insolvent afterwards, the plaintiff may for these or other good reasons, on his motion, have the bond quashed and be restored to his original judgment. Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 75; Taylor v. Dundass, 1 Wash. 92; Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 408; Downman v. Chinn, 2 Wash. 189; Lusk v. Ramsay, 3 Munf. 417; Trevillian v. Guerrant, 31 Gratt. 528; Randolph v. Randolph, 3 Rand. 490; Irvin v. Eldridge, 1 Wash. 161; Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 179; Frayser v. R. & A. R. Co., 81 Va. 393.

Until the forthcoming bond be forfeited there is no satisfaction of the execution. Cooke v. Piles, 2 Munf. 153; Lusk v. Ramsay, 3 Munf. 417.

Neither is there a satisfaction where the bond, though forfeited, is invalid. Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 757.

A forthcoming bond forfeited has the force of a judgment so as to create a lien upon the lands of the obligors, only from the time the bond is returned to the clerk's office. And there being no evidence that the bond was returned to the clerk's office before the day on which there was an award of execution thereon by the court, it will be regarded as having been returned to the office on that day. Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 179.

If a forthcoming bond be delivered, by the sheriff to the plaintiff, before notice thereupon be given to the defendants, execution may be awarded upon it, though it has not been filed in the clerk's office. Eppes v. Colley, 2 Munf. 523.

Though a forthcoming bond is forfeited, and not quashed, yet in equity the lien of the original judgment still exists; and if the obligors in the bond prove insolvent, so that the debt is not paid, a court of law will quash the bond so as to revive the lien of the original judgment. And a court of equity, having jurisdiction of the subject, will treat the bond as a nullity, and proceed to give such relief as the creditor is entitled to under his original judgment. Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 180.

A sheriff or other officer levying a writ of fi. facias takes a forthcoming bond, and the property therein named is delivered upon the day of sale, but for the want of bidders is not sold, he can take another forthcoming bond under the statute. But a sheriff or other officer, who takes a second forthcoming bond for the property included in the first bond, is estopped from denying that the property was delivered in performance of the condition of the first bond. Adler v. Green, 18 W. Va. 201.

VII. DISCHARGE AND SATISFACTION

A. By Levy on Corporeal Property.—A levy on sufficient personal property to satisfy the execution, is prima facie a satisfaction and discharge of the judgment. Taylor v. Dundass, 1 Wash. 95; Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 282; McKenzie v. Wiley, 27 W. Va. 48; Sherman v. Shaver, 75 Va.

This presumption of satisfaction from levy may, however, be rebutted, by showing that it was not so treated by the creditor, and occasioned no loss to the debtor; though to the extent of the latter's loss the levy is conclusively a satisfaction. Com. v. Byrne, 20 Gratt. 207; Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 47; Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 758.

The prima facie satisfaction resulting from levy, becomes absolute if the property be wasted or lost by reason of the fault or neglect of the officer, and the plaintiff must, in such case, seek his remedy against the officer. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 47; Harman v. Oberdorfer, 33 Gratt. 497; Sherman v. Shaver, 75 Va. 1.

Where the property levied on is left with the debtor and the levy abandoned, the lien is discharged, and other creditors may resort to such property in like manner as if no execution has issued. Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 758.

Where the defendant elognes or removes the property out of the reach of the officer, without the consent of either him or the plaintiff, there is no satisfaction. Neither is there a satisfaction if the property is restored or abandoned at the request of the defendant. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 45.

B. Satisfaction in Favor of Third Person.—In Baird v. Rice, 1 Call 18, 1 Am. Dec. 497, a judgment had been recovered against a principal debtor and his surety; the execution issuing thereon was levied on the property of the principal; the plaintiff, on receiving part of the money, gave the execution debtor further time, and ordered the officer to restore the goods to him. Held, by this procedure the judgment was discharged at law, and the surety, not having acquiesced in the agreement for further time, was discharged in equity. See also, Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 209; McKenzie v. Wiley, 27 W. Va. 658; Gatewood v. Goode, 23 Gratt. 880.

But a mere countermand of an execution by a creditor after it goes into the hands of the sheriff, but before it is levied, does not release a surety of the execution debtor. Humphrey v. Hitt, 6 Gratt. 509, 52 Am. Dec. 133; Knight v. Charter, 22 W. Va. 422; Ambler v. Leach, 15 W. Va. 677.

Neither does the release of the levy of an execution upon property of surety release his co-surety, as they are joint principals as respects each other and the principals. Alexander v. Byrd, 85 Va. 690, 8 S. E. Rep. 577.

C. By Payment.

1. To Attorney.—In Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 541, the court said: "The payment of a judgment or decree to the attorney of record, who obtained it, before his authority is revoked, and due notice of such revocation given to the defendant, is valid and binding on the plaintiff so far as the defendant is concerned. Yoakum v. Tilden, 3 W. Va. 167. But it must be a payment of money, or if not a payment of money, it must be accepted by the plaintiff as money or the attorney must have special authority to receive it. Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 699." See also, Pidgeon v. Williams, 21 Gratt. 251; Johnson v. Gibbons, 27 Gratt. 637; Hill v. Bowyer, 18 Gratt. 364; Smith v. Lamberts, 7 Gratt. 141; Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 159; Kent v. Chapman, 18 W. Va. 485; Gilkeson v. Smith, 15 W. Va. 44; Low v. Settle, 22 W. Va. 337.

2. By Third Persons.—A sheriff may purchase a debt, in his hands for collection by execution, if he act bona fide. The creditor holds the title, and he may transfer it to whom he will, and it makes no difference that the advance is made at the instance of the debtor, provided there is no intention to extinguish the debt, and the judgment is assigned as a continuing security. Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 757; Hall v. Taylor, 18 W. Va. 544; Beard v. Arbuckle, 19 W. Va. 135; Neely v. Jones, 16 W. Va. 625, 37 Am. Rep. 794.

Subrogation.—A sheriff or other officer, who pays an execution in his hands for collection, without an assignment at the time, of the judgment on which it is founded, or the debt, is not entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the creditor whose debt he has paid, as against other creditors having liens by judgment or otherwise. Clevinger v. Miller, 27 Gratt. 740; Kendrick v. Forney, 22 Gratt. 748; Beard v. Arbuckle, 19 W. Va. 135.

3. Time of Payment.—A sheriff or other officer has no authority to receive payment under an execution after the return day thereof, unless the execution has been previously levied. Such payment would not bind the creditor; nor would it impose any liability upon the sureties of the sheriff in his official bond. Grandstaff v. Ridgely, 30 Gratt. 1; O'Bannon v. Saunders, 24 Gratt. 138; Chapman v. Harrison, 4 Rand. 336; Cockerell v. Nichols, 8 W. Va. 159.

Where it does not appear from the evidence that the execution was levied by the sheriff before the return day thereof had passed, a payment made to the sheriff upon such execution, after such return day had passed, is not binding upon the creditor, unless it appears that such payment was made to the sheriff by the direction or consent of the debtor. Cockerell v. Nichols, 8 W. Va. 159.

VIII. RELIEF AGAINST EXECUTION.

Though an execution is sued out irregularly and unlawfully, it is not void, but at most only voidable. Until it is avoided it must be regarded as a valid execution, and cannot be avoided by plea or proof in a collateral suit. Beale v. Botetourt, 10 Gratt. 281.

A. Motion to Quash.

1. In General.—It was held in Lowther v. Davis, 33 W. Va. 132, 10 S. E. Rep. 20, that a motion to quash is the proper remedy where an execution has been issued without authority of law. See also, Taylor v. Dundass, 1 Wash. 94; Downment v. Chinn, 2 Wash. 189.

In Hamilton v. Shrewsbury, 4 Rand. 427, there is a dictum to the effect that, where the sale, under a valid execution, is void, on account of the interest or improper conduct of the sheriff, the court from which the execution issued, may correct such abuse of its own process, by quashing the execution. See also, Hendricks v. Dundass, 2 Wash. 50.

Where an execution is issued by the clerk, who has no authority to do so, the court may quash the execution. Shackelford v. Apperson, 6 Gratt. 451.

In State v. Brookover, 33 W. Va. 141, 18 S. E. Rep. 476, it was held that an execution issued upon a judgment after two years from its rendition, without an order of court allowing its issuance, is properly quashed.

Upon a motion to quash a second execution in vacation, the judge may, in vacation, allow the sheriff to amend his return on the first execution. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 51; Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 209.

If on a motion to quash an execution, the relief of the party depends upon a matter of fact, the court has a discretion to direct a jury to try the facts. Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 699, 16 Am. Dec. 780.

A tender of money in payment of a judgment, will not authorize the quashing an execution issued thereon, unless the tender is followed by the payment of the money into court, and a motion to enter satisfaction on the record. Shumaker v. Nichols, 6 Gratt. 592.

2. After Payment of Judgment.—Where a judgment had been paid before an execution thereon has been issued, it is proper to quash such execution upon motion. Hall v. Taylor, 18 W. Va. 544; Howell v. Thomason, 34 W. Va. 794, 12 S. E. Rep. 1088; Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 689, 16 Am. Dec. 780; Crawford v. Thurmond, 3 Leigh 85.

3. When Judgment Set Aside.—When a judgment is set aside, the execution which issued upon it falls with it, without any express order to quash the execution. Ballard v. Whitlock, 18 Gratt. 235.

4. In Equity.—The courts of chancery may quash executions irregularly sued out on their decrees, and forthcoming bonds taken under them, on motion made on notice, in a summary way. Windrum v. Parker, 2 Leigh 861; Snavely v. Harkrader, 30 Gratt. 492.

5. Notice of Motion.—The motion to quash, as provided by statute, must be "after reasonable notice," and such notice, whatever may be the ground on which the notice is based, does not of itself suspend the execution of the writ. Snavely v. Harkrader, 30 Gratt. 492.

It was held in Ballard v. Whitlock, 18 Gratt. 235, that, where the defendants being present by their counsel when the motion to quash an execution was made, they had reasonable notice of such motion.

In Reinhard v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 805, it was held that the length of notice of a motion to quash an execution, is a reasonable time, to be judged by the circumstances of each case; and that such motion may be made either by the plaintiff or defendant in the execution, and after the return day of the execution. See also, Hendricks v. Dundass, 2 Wash. 50.

6. Parties to Motion.—A motion to quash a writ of execution must be made in the name of the party on the record, and must be against the other party on the record; a stranger to the writ can only make the motion in the name of a legal party to the process. Wallop v. Scarborough, 5 Gratt. 1.

7. Time When Motion Must Be Made.—The motion to quash the execution need not necessarily be made before the writ has been returned, but may as well be made after the return. Beale v. Botetourt, 10 Gratt. 278; Hendricks v. Dundass, 2 Wash. 50; Taylor v. Dundass, 1 Wash. 92; Reinhard v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 805.

If, however, the writ has been returned nulla bona, a motion to quash will not lie. Beale v. Botetourt, 10 Gratt. 278.

In Reinhard v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 805, it was held, that if the money made by the sale of the property is still in the sheriff's hands, the writ may be quashed.

8. On Appeal.—An appeal from or supersedeas to, an order quashing an execution against two defendants, need not, if one of them die, be revived against his personal representative, but should be proceeded on as to the other only. Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 269.

Execution is awarded on a forthcoming bond against the principal and the surety therein bound; the principal alone obtains an injunction to stay proceedings at law, which injunction is dissolved. Held, the surety is not liable for the damages incurred by the principal for retarding the execution by an injunction; and if an execution issue against the surety as well as principal for such damages, it ought, on the surety's motion, to be quashed. The execution should be so moulded, as to exempt the surety from the damages, and to make the principal who incurred them alone liable therefor. Garnett v. Jones, 4 Leigh 633.

A tender of money in payment of a judgment will not authorize the quashing an execution issued thereon, unless the tender is followed by the payment of the money into court, and a motion to enter satisfaction on the record. A tender of money in payment of a judgment, will not authorize a court of equity to stop the execution, where there is neither allegation or proof that the defendant is the execution kept the money on hand for the discharge of the judgment. Quare: If a court of equity will interfere to arrest an execution on a judgment at law, on the ground that the money had been tendered before execution issued. Shumaker v. Nichols, 6 Gratt. 592.

A supersedeas will not lie where an execution has improperly issued upon a forthcoming bond. The injured party may move to quash the execution, and the judgment on that motion, if erroneous, may be corrected on an appeal or supersedeas. Barwell v. Anderson, 2 Wash. 194.

If the clerk of an inferior court, misconceive a judgment, and issue execution against any person not properly a party thereto, the remedy is not by supersedeas or writ of error, but by motion to quash the execution; and if such motion be overruled, an appeal may be taken to the court of error, or application may be made for a writ of error or supersedeas to the order overruling such motion. Moss v. Moss's Adm'r, 4 Hen. & M. 293.

B. Injunction.

1. In General.—Where an execution is irregularly issued, and the remedy by motion to quash is inadequate because of the formalities and delay incident thereto, it is competent for the judge in vacation to restrain proceedings upon it, by an injunction order. Shackelford v. Apperson, 6 Gratt. 61; Snavely v. Harkrader, 30 Gratt. 487.

It was held, in Crawford v. Thurmond, 3 Leigh 85, that where a judgment had been satisfied by payment in full, before the delivery of the execution to the sheriff, further proceedings on such execution may be enjoined by a court of equity, though there was a remedy at law, by motion to quash. The latter remedy, under the circumstances, was not as safe and convenient as the former.

If a debtor under arrest by virtue of ca. sa. obtain an injunction against the execution, the sheriff is bound to discharge him from custody. Ross v. Poythress, 1 Wash. 120.

Equity will take jurisdiction by injunction to preserve the inheritance; and when a mill is about to be dismantled by execution—creditors of the owner, who have levied on the fixtures attached thereto, equity will interfere to prevent it. Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428.

A defendant in an execution files a bill to enjoin the execution on the ground that a previous execution sued out on the same judgment had been levied by the sheriff on the property of another defendant in the execution, sufficient to discharge it. In such case the bill must be filed in the county in which the judgment was recovered; and the circuit court of another county has no jurisdiction of the case. In such case it is not necessary that the objection to the jurisdiction should be made by demurrer or plea but it may be taken at the hearing of the cause. Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. 625.

The courts of chancery have jurisdiction in all cases where property taken in execution on behalf of the commonwealth is claimed by any person under a mortgage or deed of trust. Moore v. Auditor, 8 H. & M. 232.

Upon the dissolution of an injunction on a judgment, the damages for retarding execution by the injunction, should be computed on the aggregate of principal, interest and costs, appearing due on the judgment at the date of the injunction. And the damages should be ascertained, and the precept to levy them inserted in the body of the execution. Washington v. Parks, 6 Leigh 581.

2. Adequate Remedy at Law.—Where, however, the remedy at law is full, summary, adequate, and complete, a court of equity will not assume jurisdiction to enjoin an execution. Hall v. Taylor, 18 W. Va. 544; Howell v. Thomason, 34 W. Va. 794, 12 S. E. Rep. 1088; Morrison v. Speer, 10 Gratt. 228; Crawford v. Thurmond, 8 Leigh 85; Jarrell v. Eddins, 2 Pat. & H. 579.

In Shnmaker v. Nichols, 6 Gratt. 592, it was held that a tender of payment of a judgment, unless followed by actual payment into court, or to the creditor, did not entitle the debtor to the right to enjoin an execution.

The trustees or cestui que trust cannot go into a court of equity to enjoin a sale of trust effects under an execution issued and levied by virtue of a subsequently acquired judgment, there being a complete and adequate remedy at law. Kuhn v. Mack, 4 W. Va. 186.

In Williamson v. Ong, 1 W. Va. 84, a judgment had been confessed in favor of the plaintiff, subject to sundry credits. Execution was issued thereon, without indorsing the credits. After levy had been made the defendant gave the plaintiff notice that he would move to quash the execution because of the variance from the judgment, occasioned by the failure to endorse the credits in the execution. Previous to the sale, however, the clerk who issued the execution endorsed the credits on it. Held, that no injury resulted to the defendant by the endorsement of the credits after issuance of the execution, and that it was error in the lower court to quash the execution for that reason.

A party claiming that he has not been credited for all the money paid by him to the sheriff, on an execution, may have any injustice done to him in that respect corrected by the court from whence the execution issued; and it is not a case for an injunction and relief in equity. Morrison v. Speer, 10 Gratt. 228.

In a case where, by virtue of an agreement between a judgment debtor and a judgment creditor, the judgment ought to be entered as satisfied, but in lieu thereof the creditor has an execution issued and levied upon the goods of the debtor, the latter cannot obtain relief by injunction in a court of equity, for the reason that he has a complete and adequate remedy at law. Howell v. Thomason, 34 W. Va. 794, 12 S. E. Rep. 1088.

Where the debtor in an execution objects that a previous execution has been levied by the sheriff upon sufficient property to satisfy the judgment, and that he has improperly misapplied the proceeds of the sale of the property, or if he insists that payment has been made to the sheriff which has not been credited on the execution, if he has an opportunity to apply to the court of law from which the execution issued, for redress, he has no right to come into equity for relief. Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. 625.

3. In Favor of Strangers.

a. General Rule.—Generally a stranger, whose property has been or is threatened to be wrongfully levied upon, has a complete and adequate remedy at law, and hence is not entitled to an injunction. Bowyer v. Creigh, 3 Rand. 25; Baker v. Rinehard, 11 W. Va. 238; White v. Stender, 24 W. Va. 615; Dunn v. Baxter, 30 W. Va. 672, 5 S. E. Rep. 214; Allen v. Freeland, 3 Rand. 170; Rollins v. Hess, 27 W. Va. 570.

b. Qualifications.—Where, however, the remedy at law is inadequate, owing to the nature of the property or other peculiar circumstances, an injunction will be allowed. Bowyer v. Creigh, 3 Rand. 25; Allen v. Freeland, 3 Rand. 170; Kelly v. Scott, 5 Gratt. 479; Sims v. Harrison, 4 Leigh 346; Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. 194; Green v. Phillips, 26 Gratt. 752; McMillan v. Ferrell, 7 W. Va. 228; Walker v. Hunt, 2 W. Va. 491; Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428; Wilson v. Butler, 3 Munf. 559; McFarland v. Dilly, 5 W. Va. 185.

c. Writ of Error.—Upon an appeal, from the judgment of an inferior court, errors in the execution or replevy bond, issued or taken after the judgment, will not be noticed. They are merely ministerial acts, and must be corrected in the same court upon motion; and if, on such motion, that court give an erroneous opinion, the party injured may then appeal and have it corrected in the appellate court. Leftwich v. Stovall, 1 Wash. 306; Moss v. Moss, 4 H. & M. 314.

An execution of an inferior court used as evidence upon the trial of the cause, will be regarded by the appellate court as part of the record without certiorari. Preston v. Auditor, 1 Call 471.

The writ of supersedeas stays the proceedings in the state they were when it was allowed, and, therefore, when the execution of a judgment is suspended for a given time, and no supersedeas is allowed until after the expiration thereof, and an execution is sued out and possession of property delivered to the plaintiff, no writ of restitution will be awarded until the cause is decided. Kreglo v. Fulk, 3 W. Va. 74.

D. Audita Querela.—The audita querela is entirely superseded, in the Virginia practice, by the proceeding by motion to quash, as the latter is the cheaper and more convenient mode. Windrum v. Parker, 2 Leigh 367; Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 644.

IX. SALE UNDER EXECUTION.

The third and last step after the issuance of the execution, is the sale of the property. Then and not until then, the plaintiff may be said to have gotten to the end of his suit, at least as far as the defendant is concerned, and to the extent of the value of the property. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 43; Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 757.

A. When Valid, Though Irregular.—A sale of property under an execution, by the sheriff, is bona fide, though irregular; and the purchaser leaves the property with the debtor in the execution. Held, the sale is valid, and the property is not liable to the creditors of the debtor in execution. Irregularities in the sale, if any, did not affect the validity thereof, the same having been acquiesced in by both the plaintiff and the defendant in the execution. Carr v. Glasscock, 3 Gratt. 354.

If the sale, under a valid execution, is void on account of the interest or improper conduct of the sheriff, the court may quash the execution. But a fair purchaser under a sheriff's sale, without knowledge of any improper conduct on the part of the offcer, acquires a valid title to the property purchased, and the remedy of the injured party is by action of law, for damages, against the sheriff. Hamilton v. Shrewsbury, 4 Rand. 427.

Where land sold under a judicial decree contained but 89 acres instead of 90 as described in the deed, it was held, upon objection by the purchaser, that, as it was a sale in gross, and not by the acre, the purchaser was not entitled to an abatement of the purchase money. Jones v. Tatum, 19 Gratt. 720.

A deed from a sheriff, which conveys all "the right, title and interest, vested in the sheriff by law, in and to eight negroes, conveyed by a debtor to his children," without naming the negroes, is sufficiently descriptive to pass them. The identity of the negroes is matter of proof, and as soon as they are identified, the deed operates on them. Shirley v. Long, 6 Rand. 736.

B. When Property Sold Left with Debtor.—A purchaser of property sold under an execution, leaves it in the possession of the original owner, but possession thereof is taken by the administrator of the purchaser before creditors have acquired a specific lien thereon by judgment and execution. Held, it is not liable to the original owner's debts. Carr v. Glasscock, 8 Gratt. 343.

C. Sale Delayed by Plaintiff.—A plaintiff by directing the sheriff to put off the sale of property taken in execution, to a day after the return day, and to allow the property to remain in the possession of the debtor, releases the latter's sureties altogether, from that or any subsequent execution,—such direction being without their concurrence. Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 269.

D. Sale of Equity of Redemption.—At a sale by the sheriff of an equity of redemption surrendered by a debtor in execution, the whole amount of the debt secured by the deed of trust on the land, is stated to be due, when in fact the debtor is entitled to a credit thereon. In a suit by the insolvent debtor setting up such claim, the creditor in the execution is a necessary party. Tiffany v. Kent, 2 Gratt. 231.

In selling an equity of redemption, the sale will be out and out—not of a moiety only, but the whole; and as between lands aliened, the whole of the tract aliened last will be sold before any part of the tract aliened first; the sales stopping when the debt has been satisfied, or when lands have been sold equal to half the aggregate value of the whole lands. McClung v. Beirne, 10 Leigh 394, 34 Am. Dec. 739.

E. Sale under Second of Two Executions.—Whilst on the one hand, where an officer holding two executions sells under the second, the title of the purchaser is good against the plaintiff in the first, and the remedy of the latter is against the officer, so on the other hand the purchaser at such sale cannot invoke the lien of the first execution, in aid of a title acquired at a sale made under the second. Therefore, where a slave was levied upon under a f. fa. delivered to a constable before any conveyance of the slave by the debtor, and other executions issued after such conveyance, under which (and not under the first f. fa.) the evidence tended to prove that the slave was sold, it was held, in an action brought by the grantee in the conveyance against the purchaser at the sale, that the title of the purchaser must be referred to the process under which the sale was made. Eckhols v. Graham & Others, 1 Call 492; McKey v. Garth, 2 Rob. 33, 40 Am. Dec. 725.

F. Statutes Regulating Sales.—The act of May 28, 1870, sep. acts 1869-70, p. 162, to prevent the sacrifice of personal property at forced sales, which requires the officer selling personal property, for a debt contracted before the 10th of April 1865, when required by the debtor, to sell upon a credit of twelve months, is not unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of the contract, or as being in violation of sec. 4, article 11, of the state constitution, prohibiting the enactment of a stay law. The bonds taken at sales under this act are in the nature of forthcoming bonds; and the creditor is not bound to receive them as so much paid on his debt. Garland v. Brown, 23 Gratt. 173.

The act of the 19th of Jan. 1802, (Rev. Code, vol. 1, c. 295, p. 425) which authorizes clerks of courts to issue writs of venditioni exponas in certain cases, is prospective only, in its operation, and consequently does not extend to cases existing before it was passed. Com. v. Hewitt, 2 Hen. & M. 181.

A party may, without any previous notice, move the court to direct an execution to be issued, (where the clerk refuses to issue one,) or to quash an execution; and it will be so far considered a cause depending, that either party may appeal from the decision of the court on such motion. Com. v. Hewitt, 2 Hen. & M. 181.

G. Caveat Emptor.—Purchasers at an execution sale are bound to take notice of all errors apparent on the record, and are chargeable with notice as to whether the proper persons were parties to the suit. Lamar v. Hale, 79 Va. 147; Hall v. Hall, 30 W. Va. 72, 5 S. E. Rep. 200.

H. Purchase by Officer at His Own Sale.—A sale by a sheriff will be vacated, if he raises doubts, or makes impressions unfavorable to a fair sale, and then buys the property at an under rate. Carter v. Harris, 4 Rand. 199.

I. When Sale Enjoined.—Where the sheriff in levying an execution takes property of a third person, equity will enjoin the sale of such property, under the execution. Whitton v. Terry, 6 Leigh 139.

K. Sale of Debtor's Unascertained Interest.—A sale by the sheriff of the interest of an execution debtor in an estate, before it is ascertained, is void; and the purchaser, if he took possession of the property, will be liable for the rents, hires and other profits of the property, and for the value of such of it as he has sold or otherwise converted to his own use, or has been lost by his act or wilful neglect; and he will be entitled to be reimbursed for the amount paid by him to the sheriff for the property. Penn v. Spencer, 17 Gratt. 85, 91 Am. Dec. 375; Clough v. Thompson, 7 Gratt. 38; Guerrant v. Anderson, 4 Rand. 333.

L. Distringas against Sheriff's Executors.—In Harrison v. Tomkins, 1 Call 295, it was held that no distringas lies against the executors of a sheriff to oblige them to sell property taken by him in his lifetime, under a writ of hæc facias.

X. LIABILITY OF OFFICER.

A. Where Levy is Made.—When an execution has been placed in the hands of an officer, in the absence of evidence that he did not levy it, he and his sureties will be liable for the debt to the creditor. O'Bannon v. Saunders, 24 Gratt. 138; Chapman v. Harrison, 4 Rand. 336; Ballard v. Thomas, 19 Gratt. 24; Tyree v. Wilson, 9 Gratt. 61; Grandstaff v. Ridgely, 30 Gratt. 15; Paine v. Tutwiler, 27 Gratt. 441.

B. For Failure to Levy.—If an officer fails to levy an execution when he might do it, he and his sureties are liable for the debt. O'Bannon v. Saunders, 24 Gratt. 138.

In Huffman v. Leffell, 32 Gratt. 41, where the officer failed to levy on property claimed by the debtor as homestead, before an indemnifying bond which he demanded from the creditor was given, by reason of which the debt was lost, it was held that the officer was excusable for not levying, and hence not liable.

But see, Sage v. Dickinson, 33 Gratt. 361, where the facts were similar to those in the above case of Huffman v. Leffell, 32 Gratt. 41, except that the property levied on was released, and no indemnifying bond was demanded or required by the officer; here he was held liable for the loss of the debt.

C. For Levy on Wrong Property.—If a deed of trust be fair and the sale under it be fair also, a sheriff who levies an execution, (issued against the goods and chattels of the debtor in the deed,) on the property so fairly sold and in the possession of the purchaser, is a trespasser, and an action will lie against him. Claytor v. Anthony, 6 Rand. 285; Sangster v. Com., 17 Gratt. 124; Garrett v. Hutchison, 86 Va. 872, 11 S. E. Rep. 406.

D. Fine for Not Returning Execution.—In Bierne v. Mann, 5 Leigh 864, a sheriff was fined for failure to make return of an execution, and it was held that equity will not assume jurisdiction to relieve the officer and his sureties from liability on the fine. See also, McDowell v. Burwell, 4 Rand. 317; Fletcher v. Chapman, 2 Leigh 560.

If the sheriff neglects to return an execution, at the request of the plaintiff, he is not liable to a fine. Bullock v. Goodall, 3 Call 44.

E. Indemnifying Bond.—According to statute, the officer may, before levy of an execution, demand of the creditor an indemnifying bond, where any doubt arises as to the right to levy. This bond is conditioned to indemnify the officer or any claimant against all damages which may be sustained by reason of the levy, and also to warrant and defend to any purchaser of the property such estate as is sold. Davis v. Davis, 2 Gratt. 363; Dabney v. Catlett, 12 Leigh 383; Aylett v. Roane, 1 Gratt. 284; Hewlett v. Chamberlayne, 1 Wash. 367; McClunn v. Steel, 2 Va. Cas. 256; Johnstons v. Meriwether, 3 Call 523; Crawford v. Jarrett, 2 Leigh 680; Stone v. Pointer, 5 Munf. 290.

F. For Non-Payment.—A county creditor provided for in the levy of an execution, is not bound to apply to the sheriff or his deputies for payment, before he proceeds to enforce payment of his debt by the sheriff and his sureties. But when the plaintiff in execution does not reside in the same county, with the sheriff, there must be a demand of payment, before an action can be maintained on the sheriff's official bond. Ballard v. Thomas, 19 Gratt. 14; Grandstaff v. Ridgely, 30 Gratt. 1; Tyree v. Donnally, 9 Gratt. 64.

It seems that since the attorney at law, who prosecutes a suit and obtains judgment, has full power to receive the money recovered when levied by execution, a demand made by him of the sheriff by whom it is levied, is sufficient to authorize a motion against such sheriff for non-payment. Wilson v. Stokes, 4 Munf. 455.

XI. SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

A. By Statute.—The power given by section 4, chapter 218 of the Acts of 1872-3, to the commissioner to attach a defendant, who refuses to answer the interrogatories propounded to him as provided therein, is constitutional. And the act authorizing courts to appoint commissioners in chancery is constitutional. Lewis v. Rosler, 19 W. Va. 61.

B. Order for Payment or Delivery of Property.—Under the fifth section of chapter 141 of the Code a commissioner may in the manner prescribed by that section compel the debtor to convey his real estate lying out of this state to satisfy the creditor's judgment; but he is not authorized to compel the debtor to execute an assignment of his chose in action for such purpose. Spang v. Robinson, 24 W. Va. 327.

C. Writ of Capias Pro Fine.—The common-law writ of capias pro fine is unrepealed, and may be used by the Commonwealth. Where there is a judgment in favour of the Commonwealth for a fine and costs of prosecution, the writ may issue for the fine and the costs; but where the judgment is for the costs without a fine, the writ is not a proper process to enforce the judgment. Where a party is imprisoned upon a capias pro fine for a fine and costs, he can only obtain his discharge from imprisonment by paying the fine and costs. Commonwealth v. Webster, 8 Gratt. 702.

XII. EXECUTION AGAINST THE PERSON.

A. Priorities.—Several creditors recover judgments against N., and sue out writs of ca. sa. upon which he is taken and charged in execution; then F. recovers judgment against the same debtor, and sues out elegit on which his lands are extended, and a moiety delivered to F., and then the debtor is regularly discharged from custody under the writs of ca. sa. as an insolvent debtor, putting into his schedule the whole of lands which had been extended under F's elegit. Held, the lien of the writs of ca. sa. executed, given by the statute, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 134, § 10, does not overreach and avoid the extent under F's elegit. Foreman v. Loyd, 2 Leigh 284, overruling Jackson v. Heiskell, 1 Leigh 257.

Where after the rendition of the judgment but before the ca. sa. was executed, mortgages were executed by the debtor to secure debts to other creditors, it is held that the judgment lien was destroyed by the actual service of the ca. sa., and the mortgagees were entitled to precedence. Rogers v. Marshall, 4 Leigh 425.

On a judgment against several, the service of a ca. sa. on one, and the execution and forfeiture of a forthcoming bond by him, does not extinguish the lien of the judgment upon the land of the others. Leake v. Ferguson, 2 Gratt. 419.

B. Title to Property.—Upon the taking of the insolvent debtor's oath, the land of the insolvent vests in the sheriff of the county where the land lies, without any deed from the insolvent; and a deed from him attempting to convey it to the sheriff of another county is inoperative. Ruffners v. Lewis, 7 Leigh 720; Syrus v. Allison, 2 Rob. 200.

An endorsement of the name of the sheriff on the bond before action brought, is a sufficient assignment thereof; and the action may be maintained by the creditor as assignee, without writing out the assignment; or the assignment may be written out in the progress of the trial after the jury is sworn. McGuire v. Pierce, 9 Gratt. 167.

C. Alias and Pluries Executions.—If a debtor be arrested on a ca. sa. and discharged by order of the creditor or his agent, no other execution can be had on the same judgment or decree. But if a debtor in custody under a ca. sa. be permitted to escape, the creditor is entitled to another execution against the debtor as well as to an action against the sheriff for the escape. Windrum v. Parker, 2 Leigh 361; Noyes v. Cooper, 5 Leigh 186; Fawkes v. Davison, 8 Leigh 554.

A writ which purports to be a pluries capias, but which is without date, and is not attested by the clerk, is wholly null and void as process. Hickam v. Larkey, 6 Gratt. 210.

D. Prison Fees.—If a debtor be able to pay his own prison fees, the jailor cannot demand them of the creditor. And the presumption is, that the debtor is able to pay them, until the contrary be shown by the jailor. Rose v. Shore, 1 Call 540.

Under the act of 12th February, 1823, ch. 30, §§ 2 and 3, concerning jailors, a written notice of the imprisonment of the debtor is necessary from the jailor to the creditor, his agent or attorney, to enable the jailor to recover his fees for supporting the debtor under the creditor's execution. The knowledge by the creditor, that his debtor is in jail under his execution, will not dispense with the written notice. Sixty days (after the notice) must expire before the jailor's right, to move for his fees, accrues; and he cannot recover for fees due prior to his notice. Zimmerman v. Buzzard, 2 Va. Cas. 406.

The creditor of an insolvent prisoner, who has the liberty of the rules, is bound to give security for the prison fees; but the sheriff cannot legally discharge him, unless he be actually insolvent, and, being so, the plaintiff having notice thereof, refused to pay his fees, or to give bond for the payment thereof. Meredith v. Duval, 1 Munf. 76.

E. Return.—An execution against the person, and the officer's return thereof, though sued by an officer other than the officer to whom it was directed, will not for that reason be quashed. Purcell v. Richardson, 4 H. & M. 404; Turner v. Harris, 1 Rob. 475.

A capias ad respondendum is made returnable to the next term generally, instead of the first day of the term as the statute requires; the writ is executed before the term and returned to the first day; an office judgment is entered at rules; at the ensuing term, defendant moves to quash the writ and all the proceedings on it at rules, on the ground that the writ being returnable to term generally, was void; and the court overrules the motion. Held, the motion was rightly overruled. Hare v. Niblo, 4 Leigh 359.

F. Discharge from Custody.

By Payment.—It seems that where a capias ad satisfaciendum is executed at any time before the return-day thereof, the sheriff may receive property tendered by the debtor, in discharge of his body out of custody, and appoint a day of sale posterior to the return-day; and that a bond for the forthcoming of such property is good in law, though dated after such return-day. Dix v. Evans, 8 Munf. 308.

Where a party imprisoned upon a capias pro fine for a fine and costs, he can only obtain his discharge from imprisonment by paying the fine and costs. Com. v. Webster, 8 Gratt. 702.

By Oath of Insolvency.—A county court, or justices of peace in the country, to whom a debtor in execution applies to have the oath of insolvency administered to him, and to be thereupon discharged, have no discretion to administer or refuse to administer the oath, but are bound to administer it, though they may be of opinion that the debtor has effects not put into his schedule to be surrendered which he fraudulently conceals. Harrison v. Emerson, 2 Leigh 764; Shirley v. Long, 6 Rand. 737.

By Prison-Bounds Bonds.—Upon a writ of ca. sa. sued out for debt, the debtor is taken in execution by the sheriff, who permits him to go at large, upon his giving a bond to the sheriff with condition that he will surrender himself into custody under the process, on a day certain, the debtor does voluntarily surrender himself into the custody of the sheriff upon the process, accordingly: and, then, wishing to have the benefit of the prison rules, gives a prison-bounds bond with sureties. Held, the debtor was legally in custody of the sheriff at the time the prison-bounds bond was given, and so this bond is good and binding on the sureties. Carthrae v. Clarke, 5 Leigh 268.

If the prisoner depart from the rules by an illegal discharge from the sheriff, the creditor, having an assignment of the bond has his election to bring suit upon it, or to sue the sheriff. Meredith v. Duval, 1 Munf. 76.

There is a joint judgment and execution against two, who have been arrested and committed to prison. They may jointly execute a prison-bounds bond. McGuire v. Pierce, 9 Gratt. 167.

By Injunction.—If a debtor in execution obtain an injunction, the sheriff is bound to discharge him from custody. Ross v. Poythress, 1 Wash. 122.

*Danville Bank v. Waddill.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

I. Limitations—"Stay Law."—In an action of assumpsit, on the plea of the statute of limitations, the time from the 2d of March 1866, to the 1st of January 1869, is to be left out of the computation.

II. Same—Instructions—Exception to.—To an action of assumpsit there is a plea of payment and of the statute of limitations. On the trial the plaintiff asks the court to instruct the jury that in passing upon the plea of the statute they must leave out of the computation of time all the period extending from the 2d of March 1866 to January 1st, 1869. The court refuses to give the instruction, and plaintiff excepts. The jury find a general verdict for the defendant, and there is judgment accordingly. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Error—New Trial.—That the appellate court will reverse the judgment for the error in refusing the instruction, and send the case back for a new trial.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same—When Awarded.—This will always be done, unless the appellate court can see from the whole record, that even under correct instructions a different verdict could not have been rightfully found, or unless it is able to see that the erroneous ruling of the trying court could not have influenced the verdict. The onus is upon the appellee to show this, and where there are distinct issues a general verdict is not sufficient in general to show it.

This was an action of assumpsit in the circuit court of the town of Danville, brought in March 1872 by the Danville Bank against Pleasant Waddill. The declaration contained the common counts, and also a special count, in which it was alleged that in April 1865 the Danville Bank delivered to Waddill $4,865 in gold, to be by him kept and to be delivered to the plaintiff when demanded.

*Limitations—Stay Law.—As to the effect of the suspension of the running of the statute of limitations, see Connecticut, etc., Co. v. Duerson, 28 Gratt. 630, citing the principal case, and also, Johnston v. Gill, 27 Gratt. 587. The principal case is again cited in Justis v. English, 30 Gratt. 578. See further, Marrison v. Householder, 79 Va. 628; 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 557; Barton's Law Pr. (2d Ed.) 79.

449 *The defendant appeared and filed the pleas of payment, and the statute of limitations; on which issues were made up.

On the trial of the cause the plaintiff moved the court to instruct the jury as follows:

Evidence having been introduced before the jury at the trial of this cause, tending to show that the right of action set forth and relied on in the plaintiff's declaration, first accrued on the 30th of May 1865, on motion of the plaintiff by counsel the court instructs the jury that in passing upon the issue raised in the cause by the plea of the statute of limitations pleaded by the defendant, they shall leave out of the computation of time all the period extending from the 2d of March 1866 to the 1st of January 1869. But the court refused to give the instruction.

The jury found a verdict in the following words: "We the jury find a verdict for the defendant." The plaintiff thereupon moved the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial; but the court overruled the motion, and rendered a judgment in favor of the defendant; and the plaintiff excepted. The exception contains the instruction asked by the plaintiff and refused by the court, as above stated. On the application of the plaintiff this court awarded a supersedeas.

E. Barksdale, Flournoy and Dabney, for the appellant.

Staples J. In an action of assumpsit brought in the circuit court of Pittsylvania by the Danville Bank against Waddill, the issues were made up on the pleas of non assumpsit, and the statute of limitations. 450 On *the trial the plaintiff asked the court to instruct the jury, "that in passing upon the issue raised by the statute of limitations, they shall leave out of the computation of time all the period extending from the 2d March 1866 to the 1st day of January 1869." The court refused to give this instruction; and the plaintiff excepted. Thereupon the jury rendered their verdict in the following words: "We the jury find a verdict for the defendant;" which verdict the plaintiff moved the court to set aside, and grant it a new trial: but the motion was overruled; and the plaintiff again excepted.

There is no doubt but that the court erred in refusing to give the plaintiff's instruction. Indeed, this is not seriously controverted by the counsel for the defendant. The only question, then, we have to consider is, whether a new trial is to be granted. The rule almost universally recognized is, that a misdirection of the trying court is always a ground of reversal, unless it can be plainly seen from the bill of exceptions that the error did not and could not affect the verdict. Kincheloe v. Tracewells, 11 Gratt. 587; Noyes v. Shepherd, 30 Maine R. 173; Graham and Waterman on New Trials, 869.

In Wiley et als. v. Givens, 6 Gratt. 277, 285, this court went much farther. In that case, an erroneous instruction having been given in the court below, it was argued that this court ought not to reverse on that ground, if upon the whole record it appeared that the judgment was substantially correct. But it was held, that the appellate court could look no farther than to the propriety of the instruction given; and if it was erroneous, the judgment would be reversed and a new trial granted. That decision was followed by this court in Rea's adm'x v. Trotter, 26 Gratt. 585.

451 Whatever *may be said of the ruling in these two cases, it will not be disputed, that whenever an erroneous instruction is given, or what is the same thing, a correct one refused, the judgment will be reversed, unless the appellate court can see from the whole record, that even under correct instructions a different verdict could not have been rightly found, or unless it is able to perceive that the erroneous ruling of the trying court could not have influenced the jury.

The learned counsel maintains, that such was the case here, as is proved by a general verdict for the defendant; that such a verdict is responsive to both issues; that the jury would have found a verdict for the defendant, even if the court had given the instruction; for they have found for the defendant upon the plea of non assumpsit as well as upon the plea of the statute of limitations: and so, with or without the instruction, the result would have been the same.

The defect in this argument is, in assuming that a general verdict is necessarily a finding upon all the issues in favor of the party for whom it is rendered. It is certainly more regular in practice, and in some cases it is essential, that the finding shall respond to all the issues. The cases of Hite's heirs v. Wilson, 2 Hen. & Munf. 268; Jones' ex'or v. Henderson, 4 Munf. 492, furnish illustrations of this rule. In the latter case issues were joined on the "pleas of payment and fully administered:" the jury found for the defendant, "he having fully administered," &c. A judgment on this verdict was reversed by this court, on the ground that the issue on the plea of payment had not been tried. The reasons upon which this decision was based are too obvious to require comment.

On the other hand cases often occur in which the finding of one issue is decisive of the case, and renders *a consideration of the others wholly unnecessary or immaterial. In French v. Hanchett, 12 Pick. R. 15, and Inhabitants of Sutton v. Inhabitants of Dana, 1 Metc. R. 383, may be found illustrations of this principle.

In 1 Rob. Prac. 365, (old ed.) it is said, where there are several issues, and the jury is of opinion that the defendant ought to succeed upon any one of them, it is common to find a general verdict in his favor. This observation is in accord with the experience of any lawyer familiar with the practice in the inferior courts of the state. Can we affirm that the jury did not pursue this course in the case before us. Is it not to be inferred they did pursue it. They had been told in effect by the court, that the claim of the plaintiff was barred by limitation; why should they give themselves the trouble to consider it upon its merits. One of the issues was of easy solution under the instruction of the court; the other depended upon difficult questions of evidence, conflicting testimony requiring careful examination. Is it not more reasonable to suppose that the verdict was based upon the law as expounded by the court, rather than the troublesome controverted question of fact. We cannot assert that this was done: we cannot assert that it was not done. In this state of uncertainty, a reversal is the inevitable result of the misdirection. Where the chances are equal, that the verdict resulted from the error of the judge, a new trial will be granted. 3 Graham & Waterman on New Trials, 872. In Wardell v. Hughes, 3 Wend. R. 418, Marcy J. in commenting upon a somewhat similar case, said: If the verdict was found on the first ground it ought to be set aside for the misdirection of the judge; if on the latter ground, the evidence being of such a character, it might be regarded as insufficient to show the assent of *More, it should not be disturbed. Inasmuch therefore as the verdict may have resulted from the misdirection of the judge—and I think that there is an equal chance that it did—a new trial ought to be granted.

The result of all the authorities and of the reasoning on the subject is, that the onus is upon the party in whose favor the error was committed. The onus is upon him clearly to show that the error did not and could not affect the merits.

If the matter be doubtful, if the pleadings point to two distinct propositions, and the verdict may be referred to either, without indicating which, unless indeed the court is able clearly to perceive that the finding would have been the same without the instruction, the judgment will be reversed and a new trial granted.

The learned counsel for the defendant has depicted in strong language the injustice which he supposes may result to the defendant without any means of redress. He insists, that in this case, the defendant, being successful, could take no bill of exceptions; he must necessarily accept the verdict as the jury renders it. It is sufficient to say, that a party, in whose favor an instruction is given or refused is fully apprised by the exception taken, that the ruling may be the subject of review by an appellate court. If he means to rely upon the fact that the misdirection did not affect the finding of the jury, he must take care that the record so shows beyond all controversy. He has only to ask that the verdict may be so extended as to cover in unmistakable terms all the issues, or so many of them as are sufficient to show the grounds upon which the jury proceeded. If he fails in this, he cannot justly complain that an error occasioned by himself leads to a reversal of his judgment.

454 *For these reasons the judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial; upon which the circuit court is to give the instruction if again asked for.

Moncure P. and Anderson J. concurred in the opinion of Staples J.

Christian J. dissented.

Judgment reversed.

†Negligence—Ordinary Care.—In Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin, 98 Va. 805, 22 S. E. Rep. 869, JUDGE BUCHANAN delivering the opinion said: "Ordinary care depends upon the circumstances of the particular case, and is such care as a person of ordinary prudence, under all the circumstances, would have exercised." This was the doctrine laid down by this court in the case of the Norfolk & Petersburg R. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 27 Gratt. 455, and which has been reiterated in subsequent cases as late as the case of Richlands Iron Co. v. Elkins, 90 Va. 249, 261, 17 S. E. Rep. 899."

‡Railroads on City Streets.—In N. & W. R. Co. v. Burge, 84 Va. 63, 4 S. E. Rep. 21, it was held that a railroad company running its trains on city streets must use greater care than in less frequented localities, and any neglect of precautions proper in such case, constitutes negligence, citing the principal case; also, *B. & O. g. Evidence of Injuries.—In an action for injuries involving the loss of an arm, plaintiff may introduce evidence to show what must be the effect of his injuries in disqualifying him from pursuits requiring two hands.

This was an action of trespass on the case in the corporation court of Norfolk, brought in December 1869, by Charles Ormsby, an infant, by his next friend, against the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad Company. The declaration set out:

For that whereas the defendants before and at the time of the committing of the grievances hereinafter mentioned, to-wit, on the 30th day of August, in the year 1869, were the owners of a certain railroad, 456 to-wit, *of a railroad from the said city of Norfolk, which connects with the Southside railroad, at or near the city of Petersburg, and of a certain engine and cars, then under the care and management of certain servants of the said defendants; nevertheless the said defendants, by their said servants, so carelessly, negligently and improperly behaved and conducted themselves in and about the management, control, and direction of the said engine and cars, that the same, by and through the default, carelessness, negligence, and improper conduct of the said servants of the said defendants, then with great force and violence were driven and struck against the said plaintiff, by means whereof the right arm of the plaintiff was so fractured and injured that it became necessary to amputate the same, and the said arm was thereupon amputated, and he was otherwise greatly wounded, bruised, and injured, and so remained for a long space of time; and also by means of the premises the plaintiff was so maimed as to be disabled for the remainder of his life. To the damage of the said plaintiff of $30,000.

The issue was made upon the plea of "not guilty;" and the cause came on to be tried at the May term of the court 1872, when the jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and assessed his damages at $8,000. The defendant thereupon moved the court to set aside the verdict and grant it a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence. But negligence of Parent.—As sustaining the doctrine of the principal case, see Roanoke v. Shull, 97 Va. 426, 34 S. E. Rep. 34; N. & W. R. Co. v. Groseclose, 88 Va. 270, 13 S. W. Rep. 454; Trumbo v. City Street-Car Co., 89 Va. 782, 17 S. E. Rep. 124; Gunn v. Ohio R. R. Co., 42 W. Va. 678, 26 S. E. Rep. 549, all citing the principal case. See also, Dicken v. Liverpool, etc., Co., 41 W. Va. 511, 23 S. E. Rep. 582, 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 405, 445.

The principal case is again cited in the following decisions: R. & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 177, 4 S. E. Rep. 211; N. & W. R. Co. v. Harman, 83 Va. 564, 8 S. E. Rep. 251; Simmons v. McConnell, 86 Va. 498, 10 S. E. Rep. 838; Jones v. O. D. C. M., 82 Va. 148.

the court overruled the motion, and rendered judgment according to the verdict. To this opinion of the court the defendant excepted; and the court certified the following as the facts proved upon the trial.

That on the morning of the last day of August, 1869, between the hours of 457 nine and ten o'clock, the *agents of the defendant carried two flat cars loaded with lumber, from its depot in the city of Norfolk down its track on Widewater street, in the said city, and left them in front of McCullough's lumber-yard, on said street, to be unloaded, and one other flat car loaded with lumber, further down the said street, and left the same in front of Murdock Howell's lumber-yard on said street, to be unloaded; that the said flat cars remained at the place at which they were respectively left, until between four and five o'clock in the afternoon of that day, when the said agents of the defendant left the said depot with a locomotive and five box cars in front of it, loaded with freight for the Boston steamer, the purpose being to carry the said box cars down Widewater street to Town Point, near the foot of said street, to be unloaded and to gather up and carry back to the depot the three flat cars that had been left on said street loaded with lumber during the forenoon. When the said locomotive and box cars reached McCullough's lumber-yard, the two flat cars left there in the morning having been unloaded, were coupled on the said train, the said agents with the locomotive, five box cars and two flat cars, then proceeded on in the direction of Murdock Howell's lumber yard, on said street, for the purpose of coupling on to the flat car left at that point in the forenoon, to be unloaded. That on the said train when it left the depot, there were G. W. Alsop, the engineer; a fireman, whose name was not given; J. T. Roberts, the yard master; James Pierce, switchman, and a colored train hand named Smith Vass. That the said J. T. Roberts was stationed on a brake-wheel two feet above the top of the fifth box car, being the next one to the flats, and the said Pierce and the said Vass were stationed on the foremost

458 flat car, after they were coupled on at *McCullough's lumber yard. That while the train moved from the depot down Widewater street, the bell on the engine was rung continually by the fireman, until the train reached Market Square, a point on the said track between the depot and Howell's lumber-yard, and at that point the fireman left the train, by the permission of the engineer; and from that point by the engineer until the train reached the flat car at Howell's lumber yard. That when the said front of the said train reached the United engine house, situated on said street, at a point about two hundred and twenty feet from the flat car in front of Murdock Howell's lumber-yard, it was moving at a rate of speed between two and three miles an hour. That about that point a signal was given to the engineer by the yard master, Roberts, to slacken the speed of the train in order to couple on to the flat car in front of Howell's lumber yard, which signal was heard and obeyed by the engineer. That at the time the moving train came in contact with the stationary flat car, the engine was running with steam from the boiler shut off, and was propelled solely by the steam in the dry pipe, the train was moving very slowly; the engineer on the train used all the appliances known to his business, to make the train move as slow as possible in order to couple. It is not possible to move a train slower than one mile per hour, it is very difficult to move at all at this rate; ordinarily, when using every appliance, the rate is one and one-half miles per hour; that during the whole time that the said train was moving from the depot westward, to collect the flats left on the track in the forenoon, the engine bell was rung, a man was on top of one of the box cars, and two men on the flat car at the extremity of the train, by way of 459 lookout, to give signals *to the engineer in charge of the engine; that the man on the box car blew a whistle as he deemed necessary, and that these were the precautions usual and customary when the defendant was moving a train on said street. That the said James Pierce and Smith Vass, who were stationed on the front flat car attached to the moving train, and whose business it was to couple the stationary flat car to the moving train, attempted to effect the said coupling, but failed to do so, because the coupling pin which was left on the stationary car in the forenoon had by some means been removed during the day. That the said Pierce, when the moving train was within two cars of, or seventy-five or eighty feet of the stationary flat car, discovered that the coupling pin had been removed, and jumped from the flat car on which he was standing, and ran back to the engine for the purpose of getting another. That it had been customary to leave the coupling pins on the freight cars, which were detached and left on the track to be loaded or unloaded. That in Portsmouth the coupling pins left with the cars were so commonly thrown away by mischievous boys, or stolen by negroes, that the train master was put to great inconvenience, and adopted the plan of attaching them permanently to the cars. That when the train struck the stationary car and failed to make a coupling, the said stationary car was driven back on the track about one-half of its length, its whole length being from twenty-seven to thirty feet; and if the attempt to couple had been successful, the said stationary flat car would have been driven back not more than three feet. That at the time of the concussion of the moving train with the stationary car, the said stationary car had been discharged of about one-half of its load of lumber; that on 460 the day on which the *plaintiff received his injury, some time between ten o'clock A. M. and two o'clock P. M., one of the agents of the defendant, F. M. Ironmonger, whose business it was to superintend the railroad track on Widewater street and attend to the moving of the trains, was passing along said street, and saw a small boy, whom he supposed to be the plaintiff, in rear of the wheel of the said stationary flat car in front of Mr. Howell's lumber-yard, and in a very dangerous position, and drove him away from said car in the direction of the residence of Mrs. Ormsby, mother of the plaintiff; that Mrs. Ormsby, the mother of the plaintiff, lived in a tenement on Widewater street, between the United engine-house and the flat car standing in front of Mr. Howell's lumber-yard, being about one hundred and eighty feet distant from the engine-house, and about forty feet distant from the said stationary car; that on the afternoon of the last day of August, 1866, about three and a half o'clock, she, Mrs. Ormsby, being sick at the time, having become the mother of an infant about four days before, and her husband being absent from home, directed the servant to mind her children; that the servant took them into the kitchen; that when the servant brought in the dinner, the plaintiff followed her; that she directed the servant to get a basin of water and wash the plaintiff's face; that the plaintiff, hearing her give this direction to the servant, ran to the front door, which opened on Widewater street; that there were two lower rooms in her house, one immediately in the rear of the other, that the front room was occupied by her as a grocery and the rear room as a sitting-room, that the door opening upon Widewater street and the door between the two rooms are immediately opposite each other; that at the time she was lying 461 upon a lounge in the back *room, which was in a position that enabled her to command a view of the front door; that while the plaintiff was standing in the front door, in full view of the mother, she directed the servant, who had brought the basin of water, to go directly and bring the plaintiff; that the plaintiff, hearing this direction to the servant, ran out upon the street; that the servant went immediately after the plaintiff, going out of the back door and through a lane leading to Widewater street; that the servant was gone not over two or three minutes, and when she returned, brought the plaintiff in her arms, with his right arm mangled and hanging by his side; that the plaintiff at the time of the injury was two years and ten months old, having been born in the month of October, 1866.

At the time the plaintiff ran out the front door on Widewater street, there were three persons standing in front of the United engine-house and one other person standing in front of a house three or four doors between Mrs. Ormsby's residence, all being on the north side of the said railroad track; that the last named person was about sixty feet from the said stationary car, looking in the direction of the moving train at the time it came up to the stationary car; that the plaintiff was not seen by any of these persons or by any of the defendant's agents on the moving train until the flat car had been put in motion by the said moving train, which was moving westwardly; that then the witness standing west of the said flat car, and looking eastwardly in the direction of the moving train, saw the plaintiff lying about six feet west of and beyond the said flat car, with his arm upon the track and the rest of his body on the north side thereof, looking as though he had stumbled and fallen and was struggling to get up; that when the plaintiff was 462 first seen by the persons *standing in front of the United engine-house, he was being carried around by the wheel of the flat car, which had been put in motion by the moving train, and he was not seen by any of the agents of the defendant until he had been taken from under the wheel and was being carried in the direction of his mother's house by a colored woman; that when the moving train came in contact with the stationary car there was a colored man standing on the said car engaged in throwing off lumber, and the said colored man was not in the employment of the defendant.

That the neighborhood in which Mrs. Ormsby, the mother of the plaintiff, lived, on Widewater street, was thickly settled, and there were a great many children living in the houses on both sides of Widewater street in that neighborhood; that the plaintiff's mother had a nurse employed, whose duty it was specially to attend to the plaintiff, and his said mother never permitted him to go on the street; that since the injury was received the plaintiff has been very troublesome, has complained of pain in his breast, and has required constant attention; that after the injury was received, by which the plaintiff's right arm was mangled and nearly severed from his body, it became necessary to amputate, and that it was amputated and removed from the socket at the shoulder; that the loss of the arm is injurious to the plaintiff's health, that it leaves his right lung more or less unprotected, and creates a predisposition to sickness, such as pneumonia, pleurisy, and other pulmonary complaints; that owing to the loss of the arm, the plaintiff's right side will not develop as well as his left, and his general health will be affected; that he cannot engage in manual labor requiring the use of two hands, and in order to make a livelihood he will have to resort to some other employment.

463 *That on the 26th January, 1867, the select and common councils of the city of Norfolk adopted an ordinance in the words and figures following to-wit: "That the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad Company be and they are hereby authorized and granted the right and privilege to enter upon and lay the track of their road in any and upon such of the streets of this city as the directors of said company may deem fit, proper, and prescribe for their use and purposes, either in the loading or unloading of cars, as well as the transit of cars, engines and trains, on the express condition, however, that the speed of their cars, engines, or trains shall not within the limits of the city exceed a rate of five miles per hour."

That although the defendant was permitted by the said ordinance to run its cars and engines through the streets at a rate of speed not exceeding five miles an hour, the instructions given to all the agents and employees of the road were not to exceed the rate of four miles an hour, and always to ring the bell and to give all the necessary and proper signals above mentioned in passing through the said street; and that the witnesses of the plaintiff, one of whom was sixty feet, and the others about one hundred and eighty feet from the stationary car, watched the train as it moved down the said street, and did not hear the sound of the engine bell, and did not see or hear any signal by those on said train. And these are all the facts proved.

On the trial of the cause the defendant excepted to various opinions and rulings of the court. The first was to the refusal of the court to give to the jury certain instructions asked, and the giving one of them with a modification. They are as follows:

464 *Instruction No. 1. If the jury believe from the evidence, that the defendants were not guilty of negligence, but were exercising ordinary care in the management of their engine and cars at the time of the injury complained of in the plaintiff's declaration, they must find for the defendant.

Instruction No. 2. If the jury believe from the evidence, that the plaintiff at the time the injury complained of was sustained, was only two years and ten months of age, and was permitted by his parents to go on the railroad track of the defendant on Widewater street, without placing him under the charge of some one capable of taking care of him and protecting him from injury, then the said parents were guilty of negligence and a want of proper care for the child, and such negligence and want and proper care in thus permitting the plaintiff to be exposed to injury on the said railroad track, furnishes the same answer to an action by the child for such injury, as would the negligence or other fault of an adult plaintiff; and if the jury further believe from the evidence, that the injury complained of in the plaintiff's declaration would not have happened but for such negligence and want of proper care on the part of the parents, then they must find for the defendants.

Instruction No. 3. If the jury believe from the evidence, that the plaintiff at the time of the injury complained of was so concealed either behind or under the stationary car as not to be visible to the agents of the defendant, and that the said agents of the defendant at the time of the said injury were exercising ordinary care and watchfulness, and the said engine was not running exceeding the rates of one or two such negligence on the part of the defendants as renders them liable in this action, and the jury will therefore find for the defendant.

465 *miles per hour, then there was not

Instruction No. 4. The defendants to maintain the issue on their part, having introduced evidence tending to prove that in the forenoon of the day on which the plaintiff received the injury complained of, the defendant sent a flat car loaded with lumber, to a point on their railroad track on Widewater street opposite the lumber yard of Murdock Howell, for the purpose of delivering the said lumber to the said Howell; that in the afternoon of the same day the defendants sent an engine with a train of five box cars and three flats, (the box cars being all together next to the engine), from the depot down Widewater street for the purpose of collecting the cars on the said street and taking them out to the depot; that the engine was pushing the said train down the said track; that one of the employees of the defendants was stationed upon the top of the rearmost box car to look out for obstructions upon the track, and, if any such obstructions appeared, to notify the engineer; that two train hands of the said defendants were stationed on the rearmost flat car of the moving train for the purpose of coupling on to stationary cars along the track; that the employee of the defendant stationed as aforesaid on the top of the rearmost box car, when the moving train got within about one hundred and eighty feet of the stationary car in front of Murdock Howell's lumber-yard, gave a signal to the engineer to slacken his speed for the purpose of coupling with the said car, which was obeyed by the engineer, and afterwards gave another signal when 466 the moving train had approached *very near to the aforesaid stationary car, in order to notify the engineer to run still slower, which signal was also obeyed by the engineer; that the said employee so stationed on the top of the rearmost box car was constantly on the lookout for obstructions upon the railroad track; that he saw none except the stationary car aforesaid; that the train at a distance of one hundred and eighty feet from the stationary car was running between two and three miles per hour; that at the time the moving train struck the stationary car it was moving as slowly as it could be moved; that when the train struck the stationary car the shock or concussion was not greater than is usually the case; that the force with which the moving train came against the stationary car was so feeble as to drive the stationary car back not exceeding ten or fifteen feet; that the two employees of the defendants, whose duty it was to make a coupling with the stationary car, failed to do so because some one, while the stationary car was standing on the track in front of Howell's lumber-yard, had removed the coupling pin, and another had to be gotten from the engine before the coupling could be effected; that the bell upon the locomotive was regularly and continuously rung from the time the train left the depot until the train struck the stationary car aforesaid; that the said employee stationed on the top of the rearmost box car, although constantly on the lookout, did not see the plaintiff until after he had received the injury complained of; that the said plaintiff was so concealed at the time, either behind or under the stationary car, as to be wholly invisible to the said employee; that none of the said employees saw the plaintiff until after he had received the injury complained of; and that one of the said employees, whose duty 467 it was to assist in *coupling the train to the flat car, jumped from the train about twenty steps above the stationary car and went back to the engine for a coupling pin; that he, too, was on the lookout for obstructions upon the railroad track, and that he did not see the plaintiff until after he had received the injury complained of; that it was the custom of the said defendants, in running their trains through Widewater street, to have on their trains a sufficient number of hands to look out for obstructions and guard against accidents, and that on the occasion when the injury complained of was received the said defendants had the usual number of hands on the train, and used the customary precautions against accident.

The court instructs the jury, that if they believe the evidence proves what it tends to prove, the defendant has not been guilty of negligence or want of ordinary care, and therefore is not liable for damages in this suit.

Instruction No. 5. The court instructs the jury, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for the injury complained of, if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff's own negligence contributed directly to the injury, although they may further believe from the evidence that the defendants did not use proper care and caution in running their cars at the time said injury was sustained.

Instruction No. 6. The court instructs the jury, that as an infant is chargeable with the negligence of his parents or guardian in permitting him to be exposed to the risk of injury, and is debarred from recovering damages in the same cases in which he would be precluded from recovering if 468 he were of full age *and had been himself guilty of such negligence, the plaintiff in the case is not entitled to recover damages from the injury complained of, if they believe from the evidence that his parents' negligence contributed directly to that injury, although they may further believe from the evidence that the defendants did not use proper care and caution in running their cars at the time said injury was sustained; unless they farther believe from the evidence that the defendants were aware of the said parents' negligence, and failed to use proper care and caution to avoid the injury.

Instruction No. 7. If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, at the time the injury complained of was sustained, was only two years and ten months of age, and was permitted by his parents to go unattended on the railroad track of the defendants on Widewater street, then the said parents were prima facie guilty of negligence and a want of proper care for the child; and such negligence and want of proper care, in thus permitting the plaintiff to be exposed to injury on the said railroad track, furnishes the same answer to an action by the child for such injury as would the negligence or other fault of an adult plaintiff; and if the jury believe further from the evidence that the injury complained of in the plaintiff's declaration would not have happened but for such negligence or want of proper care, then they must find for the defendant.

Instruction No. 8. The court instructs the jury that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for the injury complained of, if they believe from the evidence that the defendants were using ordinary care and caution in the pursuit of their lawful business at the time said injury was sustained.

469 *Instruction No. 9. If the jury believe from the evidence that the injury complained of in the declaration was occasioned by the plaintiff's throwing himself in the way of a moving train of cars belonging to the defendant, and that he was run over before the agents of the defendants having charge of the said train could prevent it, they must find for the defendants.

But the court refused to give the instructions numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and gave the instruction numbered 1, with the following modification:

Modification of Instruction No. 1. The terms negligence and want of ordinary care are correlative terms. If the defendants are guilty of negligence as alleged in the declaration, the plaintiff is entitled to recover; if the defendants exercised ordinary care the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. Ordinary care depends on the circumstances of the particular case, and is such care as a person of ordinary prudence under the circumstances would have exercised. For instance, the defendants while running along their road through the country would not be required to take the same care as when passing a crossing where the highway crosses their road—they must exercise a greater degree of care; and when they enter the city and pass along the streets where many persons are passing, and where there are dwelling houses on each side of the street, they must exercise greater care. If under all the circumstances of the case, looking to all the evidence in the case, you believe the defendants exercised such care as a prudent man would have exercised under the circumstances, then the defendants are not liable. But should you believe the defendants guilty of negligence in running their cars, yet if you believe the plaintiff by his negligence contributed to the injury, the defendants are not liable.

470 *To ascertain whether the plaintiff was guilty of negligence you will apply the same rules as to the defendant; if, looking to his age and the circumstances, you think he exercised such care as was reasonably to be expected of a child of that age, then the defendants are liable, though the plaintiff by his act did contribute to the injury. If you believe that the parents of the child did not exercise ordinary care in allowing their child to be on the street without an attendant, yet the defendants are liable; this is an action brought by the child, it is his cause of action and he is not responsible for the negligence of the parents.

The plaintiff, to maintain the said issue on his part, offered to give in evidence to the jury that on the last day of August 1869 he had been injured by the cars of the defendant running against him on Widewater street within the limits of the city of Norfolk; to which evidence the defendant, by its counsel, objected as improper to go to the jury because of the variance between the said evidence and the allegations contained in the declaration. But the court being of opinion that there was no variance, overruled the objection to the said evidence, and permitted the same to go to the jury.

The third exception was as follows:

The plaintiff to maintain the issue on his part, introduced a witness, Dr. James D. Galt, to prove that owing to the injury which he had received, and the loss of his arm, he was incapacitated from the pursuit of the ordinary vocations of life which required the use of two hands, and would be compelled to resort to some other means of obtaining a livelihood. To which evidence the defendant, by its counsel, objected as improper to go to the jury. But 471 the court being of *opinion that the said evidence was proper, overruled the objection and permitted it to go to the jury.

Upon the application of the defendant a supersedeas was awarded by one of the judges of this court.

The case was elaborately argued in printed notes by Goode & Chaplain, for the appellant, and by Scarborough, Duffield & Sharp, for the appellee.

Moncure P. delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a writ of error and supersedeas to a judgment of the court of the corporation of the city of Norfolk, rendered on the 28th day of May 1872 in an action of trespass on the case, wherein Charles Ormsby, an infant, suing by James Ormsby, his next friend, was plaintiff, and the Norfolk and Petersburg railroad company were defendants. The injury complained of in the declaration was, that the defendants so negligently conducted their engine and cars as to strike them with great force and violence against the plaintiff, by means whereof his right arm was so fractured and injured that it became necessary to amputate the same, and it was thereupon amputated, and he was otherwise greatly wounded and injured, and by means of the premises the plaintiff was so maimed as to be disabled for the remainder of his life. Issue was joined on the plea of not guilty, which was tried by a jury; and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, whose damages were assessed at $8,000. Whereupon the defendants moved the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence. But the court overruled the motion, and the defendants excepted to the opinion of the court, and tendered a bill of exceptions, which 472 was *made a part of the record. The facts proved on the trial of the cause were certified by the court; and judgment was rendered in pursuance of the verdict.

On the trial of the cause the defendants excepted to various opinions and rulings of the court, besides the opinion and ruling of the court in overruling their motion for a new trial, and tendered their several bills of exceptions, which were also made a part of the record. To the judgment aforesaid, the defendants applied to a judge of this court for a writ of error and supersedeas, which were accordingly awarded. The errors complained of are assigned in the petition for said writ, and are founded on the said bills of exceptions. The case was argued before this court with great ability and learning; and we will now proceed to consider and dispose of the questions presented by the record in the order in which they arise.

First—We are of opinion that the court below did not err in overruling the motion of the defendants to set aside the verdict of the jury and grant a new trial, upon the ground that the said verdict was contrary to the law and evidence.

The defendants contend that the injury complained of in this case did not proceed from any fault or neglect on their part; and that if it proceeded from their neglect at all, there was such contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff or his parents in regard to the cause of the injury as exonerates them (the defendants) from liability to him therefor. We will consider each of these grounds of defence; and,

First, whether the injury proceeded from any fault or neglect on the part of the defendants?

Could the injury have been avoided by the use of any reasonable means which might and ought to have been used by the defendants? We are constrained to 473 *say that it could. In running cars propelled by steam along a railroad over the streets of a populous city, where there are a great many children, the greatest care and precaution are necessary, and ought to be used, to avoid danger to human life. The injury complained of in this case was caused by the running of the flat car at Howell's over the plaintiff, who had fallen on the railroad track just beyond the car; and the running of that car over the plaintiff was caused by its being propelled by the engine and moving train before it had been coupled with that train; whereas it ought and might conveniently have been coupled with that train before it was set in motion. The facts are certified, that if the coupling had been done before the flat at Howell's lumber yard was set in motion, the injury would not have occurred; for, in that case, the flat car would not have been propelled more than three feet, and so would not have touched the plaintiff, who was "lying about six feet west of and beyond the said flat car, with his arm on the track, and the rest of his body on the north side thereof, looking as though he had stumbled and fallen, and was struggling to get up." Whereas, "when the train struck the stationary car, and failed to make a coupling, the said stationary car was driven back on the track about one-half of its length, its whole length being from twenty-seven to thirty feet." In consequence of which the flat not only reached the plaintiff lying on the track, but passed over him, and carried him several times around the car wheel. Why was not this connection made? Because there was no coupling pin then there with which to make it. Why was not one there? It is said that one had been left there with the flat in the morning, as had been 474 the usual *practice in such cases, but that somebody had taken it away.

Why was not such a probable danger guarded against by fastening the pin to the flat, so that it could not be taken away? or, why was not the precaution used of bringing a pin with the moving train, to be sure of being ready to make the connection at once? It is certified "that in Portsmouth the coupling pins left with the cars were so commonly thrown away by mischievous boys, or stolen by negroes, that the train master was put to great inconvenience, and adopted the plan of attaching them permanently to the cars." Why was not the same precaution used in Norfolk, where the obvious danger of loss of the pins must have been just as great as in Portsmouth? Again, why was not the obvious precaution used—of making an examination before the stationary flat at Howell's was set in motion, to see if there was anybody or anything under or near the car which could be injured by its being set in motion? This would have taken very little time, and given very little trouble. There were several hands on the moving train, either one of which, without stopping the train, could have made the examination. It may be said that it was not probable there was any person or thing under or near the flat which could be hurt, as nothing was seen by those on the train or by the bystanders. Nothing, it seems, was carefully looked for by them. But was it so improbable as to excuse such a want of caution when human life and limb were at stake? A flat had been left standing in the street of a populous city from between nine and ten o'clock in the morning until between four and five o'clock in the afternoon of the day on which the injury complained of was done. Was it strange or extraordinary that the 475 *plaintiff, a child only two years and ten months old, should have been found on the track under or near the car then standing just in front of his mother's door, and only forty feet therefrom? A flat left nearly all day in the street might naturally be expected to be a play place for the neighboring children.

We are therefore of opinion, that the injury complained of in this case proceeded from the negligence of the defendants, who are therefore liable therefor; unless they can be exonerated from such liability on the ground of contributory negligence. We therefore proceed now to consider:

Secondly. Whether there was such contributory negligence on the part either of the plaintiff or his parents, in regard to the cause of the injury, as exonerates the defendants from liability to him therefor.

In regard to any negligence on the part of the plaintiff himself, it has not been contended, and cannot be, that he was old enough to be guilty of any, or, at all events, that he was guilty of any in this case. And in regard to any negligence of his parents, or either of them, if such negligence can be imputed to him, about which we will presently enquire, when we come to consider the case upon the instructions, we think it very clear that there was in fact no such negligence on their part. The facts which are certified in the record are conclusive on this subject; and we will not repeat them, as they may be seen by reference to the certificate.

We therefore conclude, on this branch of the subject, that the court below did not err in overruling the motion of the defendants to set aside the verdict, upon the ground that it was contrary to the law and evidence.

476 *Second. We are of opinion, that the court did not err in refusing to give the instruction asked for by the defendant, numbered two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight and nine; nor in giving instruction numbered one, with certain modifications.

The second instruction is objectionable on two grounds: First, the plaintiff was not "permitted by his parents," as the instruction assumes, "to go on the railroad track of the defendants on Widewater street, without placing him under the charge of some one capable of taking care of him and protecting him from injury;" and, secondly, the said instruction imputes to the infant plaintiff the assumed negligence of his parents; for which, even if there had been any such negligence, as in fact there was not, the infant plaintiff would not have been responsible. On this question, as to the liability of infants for the neglect, imputed to them, of their parents, there appears to be much conflict in the cases, many, and perhaps most of which were cited in the arguments of the learned counsel. But without following them through their review of the cases, we deem it sufficient to say, that we concur in the principle of the case of Lynch v. Nurdan, 1 Ad. & El., N. S., 29, 41 Eng. Com. Law R. 422, and others of that class; which decide that the neglect of parents and guardians is not imputable to infant children and wards in such cases; and that we do not concur in the principle of the case of Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. R. 615, and others of that class, which decide the contrary.

The third instruction is objectionable, because it was calculated to mislead the jury, and was apparently contradictory. Though the plaintiff might not have been actually visible to the agents of the 477 defendants, *he might have been seen by them, certainly, if they had looked for him, as they ought to have done. In other words, they ought to have made sure, as they might have done, that there was no person under or behind the stationary car when they set it in motion. And besides, they ought to have coupled the moving train with the stationary car before they set the latter in motion; in which case they would have guarded against all injury to persons visible or invisible.

The fourth instruction is objectionable, for reasons already given in regard to the first assignment of error.

The fifth instruction is objectionable, because it imputes negligence to the plaintiff, of which, from his tender years, he was not capable.

The sixth and seventh instructions are objectionable, for reasons already stated, because they hold the plaintiff responsible, by imputation, for the supposed negligence of his parents.

The eighth instruction embodies a general truth which seems to be unobjectionable in itself; but it is clearly embraced in the first instruction as modified by the court.

The first instruction, as modified by the court, is unobjectionable, and embodies all the law which seems to apply to the case, or to be necessary to enable the jury to decide it properly.

Third. We are of opinion that the court below did not err in overruling the objection of the defendants on the ground of the supposed variance mentioned in their "bill of exceptions number two;" being of opinion that there was no such variance.

Fourth. We are of opinion, that the said court did not err in overruling the ob- 478 jection of the defendants *to the evidence mentioned in their "bill of exceptions number three."

Upon the whole, we are of opinion, that there is no error in the judgment of the court below, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

a. Object of the Law of Damages.—"The object of the law is to give amends or reparation." JOYNER, J., in Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472, 485, 94 AM. Dec. 468, or as expressed by RIMLY, J., in Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 413, 416, 26 S. E. Rep. 875, "The general rule in awarding damages is to give compensation for pecuniary loss; that is, to put the plaintiff in the same position, so far as money can do it, as he would have been if the contract had been performed or the tort not committed." See also, Alleghany Iron Co. v. Teaford, 96 Va. 372, 31 S. E. Rep. 525.

b. Kinds of Damages—Compensatory and Punitive.—Damages are either actual or compensatory, exemplary or punitive. As expressed by RIMLY, J., in Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Neely, 91 Va. 540, 22 S. E. Rep. 367, "Actual or compensatory damages are the measure of the loss or injury sustained, while exemplary or punitive damages are 'something in addition to full compensation, and something not given as his due, but for the protection of the public.'"

c. Distribution of Damages.—"The manner in which the damages are to be distributed is no concern of the defendant, and not under the control of the plaintiff. It is a question for the jury exclusively, not involved in the issue." STAPLES, J., in B. & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r., 29 Gratt. 441, quoted and approved in N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Stevens' Adm'r., 97 Va. 634, 34 S. E. Rep. 525.

In an action for damages by administrator for the wrongful killing of his intestate, if the jury fail to direct how the damages shall be distributed, the administrator after having paid all attorney's fees and costs shall distribute it according to the statute of distribution. Powell's Adm'r v. Powell, 84 Va. 415, 4 S. E. Rep. 744.

Damages—Compromise—Distribution.—The money received by an administrator upon a compromise of an action for damages for the killing of his intestate, must after paying the costs and attorney's fees, be distributed according to the statute of distribution. Powell's Adm'r v. Powell, 84 Va. 415, 4 S. E. Rep. 744.

d. Interest Not Allowed on Damages.—In an action for a tort, interest on the damages from the date of the injury is not allowed. But should the jury in their verdict allow such interest, the court should not set the whole verdict aside, but only the interest, entering judgment for the damages alone. Brugh v. Shanks, 5 Leigh 598, citing and following Garrard v. Henry, 6 Rand. 110; Austin's Ex'or v. Jones, Gilmer 341.

Rent Arrears.—Interest is not recoverable by way of damages, in an action of debt for rent arrears. Cooke v. Wise, 3 H. & M. 463; Skipwith v. Clinch, 2 Call 257; Newton v. Wilson, 3 H. & M. 470; Mickle v. Lawrence, Ex'or, 5 Rand. 571.

II. NATURAL AND PROXIMATE CAUSE AND CONSEQUENCE.

a. Generally.—The law does not hold a person responsible in damages for the remote consequences of his act, but only for those which are natural and proximate and necessarily result from the wrongful act. Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 413, 26 S. E. Rep. 875; Slaughter v. Denmead, 88 Va. 1019, 14 S. E. Rep. 833; Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472, 94 Am. Dec. 468; James v. Adams, 8 W. Va. 568; Kendall Bank Note Co. v. Comm'rs of Sinking Fund, 79 Va. 563; Crescent Horseshoe, etc., Co. v. Eynon, 96 Va. 152, 27 S. E. Rep. 935.

Difficulty Found in Applying Rule.—The general rule that a person is responsible in damages, for all injuries that are the natural and proximate result of his wrongful act, is well settled, but difficulty is often found in applying the rule to a particular case. Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 413, 26 S. E. Rep. 875.

b. Requisites of Recovery.—The plaintiff must not only show that he has sustained damages, by reason of his rights being violated, but must show with reasonable certainty the extent of such damages. And he must also show that such damages are the natural and proximate result of the injury complained of. Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 413, 26 S. E. Rep. 875.

In Fowlkes v. Southern Ry. Co., 96 Va. 742, 2 S. E. Rep. 464, the facts were these: The plaintiff, a married woman, in a pregnant condition was told by the ticket agent of the defendant company, that she would make close connection with a train on another railroad, at a certain point on defendant's line, for her destination, which was her father's home. On the train's reaching the junction where she was to catch her train, she found that there would be no train for her destination that day. The day was hot and sultry, and a storm was brewing. There was no station where she could wait or any accommodation at the place. She finally succeeded in hiring a buggy to convey her to her father's house, eight miles distant; as a result of the jolting of the ride, the wetting she got and her worrying, she became sick, had abdominal pains, hemorrhage from the womb, and finally a miscarriage, and some months afterwards another miscarriage. Since that time she has been in bad health. KERTH, P., in delivering the opinion of the court said: "It is not only requisite that damage, actual or inferential, should be suffered, but this damage must be the legitimate sequence of the thing amiss. The maxim of the law here applicable is, that in law the immediate and not the remote cause of any event is regarded. In other words, the law always refers the injury to the proximate, not to the remote cause. If an injury has resulted in consequence of a certain wrongful act or omission, but only through or by means of some intervening cause, from which last cause the injury followed as a direct and immediate consequence, the law will refer the damage to the last or proximate cause, and refuse to trace it to that which was more remote. To the proximate cause we may usually trace consequences with some degree of assurance; but beyond that we enter a field of conjecture, where the uncertainty renders the attempt at exact conclusions futile. If the wrong and the resulting damage are not known by common experience to be naturally and usually in sequence, and the damage does not, according to the ordinary course of events, follow from the wrong, then the wrong and the damage are not sufficiently conjoined and concatenated as cause and effect to support an action. The negligent act proved in this case was committed at the time the ticket was purchased, and it seems to us manifest that a most prudent and experienced man, acquainted with all the circumstances which existed at that moment, could never have foreseen or anticipated the consequences that supervened. It might reasonably have been anticipated that a failure to make the connection at Mosely Junction would involve delay and inconvenience, but not that the plaintiff would procure a buggy, and in the face of a storm, in her delicate condition, drive over a rough road to her father's house, and that a miscarriage would be the result."

c. General Rule in Cases of Contracts.—Only such damages can be recovered for a breach of contract, as can fairly and reasonably be considered as naturally arising from the breach of the contract in question, according to the usual course of things, or as having been in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, as a probable result of a breach of it. Slaughter v. Denmead, 88 Va. 1022, 14 S. E. Rep. 833, citing and approving Kendall Bank Note Co. v. Comm'rs of Sinking Fund, 79 Va. 563; Alleghany Iron Co. v. Teaford, 96 Va. 372, 31 S. E. Rep. 525.

d. Expected Profits or Gains.—"A plaintiff will not ordinarily be allowed to give evidence of or to recover profits or expected gains, for it is generally conjectural whether there will be any profits or gains. The prohibition against the recovery of profits or gains, when not excluded as unnatural or remote, is due mainly to the inability to prove with reasonable certainty that the injury prevented the receipt of profits or gains, and their amount. But if it be shown that the loss of profits or gains was the natural and proximate result of the wrongful act, and their extent is also satisfactorily proved, they may be recovered." RIELY, J., in Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 413, 416, 26 S. E. Rep. 875; citing Bolling v. Colver, 26 Gratt. 36. Says the court, in Kendall Bank Note Co. v. Comm'rs of Sinking Fund, 79 Va. 563, 572, "Profits or advantages, which are the direct and immediate fruits of the contract entered into between the parties, are part and parcel of the contract itself, entering into and constituting a portion of its very elements—something stipulated for, and the right to the enjoyment of which is just as clear and plain as to the fulfillment of any other stipulation. They are presumed to have been taken into consideration, and deliberated upon before the contract was made, and formed, perhaps the only inducement to the arrangement." Cited and approved in Trigg et al. v. Clay et al., 88 Va. 335, 13 S. E. Rep. 434. See also, Alleghany Iron Co. v. Teaford, 96 Va. 372, 31 S. E. Rep. 525; Hare v. Parkersburg, 24 W. Va. 554; Patton & Shaver v. Elk River Nav. Co., 13 W. Va. 259.

The general rule seems to be that the party injured by a breach of contract, is entitled to recover all his damages, including gains prevented, as well as losses sustained, provided they are certain, and such as might naturally be expected to follow the breach. It is only uncertain and contingent profits, therefore, which the law excludes; not such as being the immediate and necessary result of the breach of contract, may be fairly supposed, to have entered into the contemplation of the parties when they made it, and are capable of being definitely ascertained by reference to establish market rates, or other like definite criteria, according to the case. James & Mitchell v. Adams, 8 W. Va. 569.

e. Expenditures Made Because of Breach of Contract.—In order to recover such expenditures, it must be made to appear, that they could be fairly and reasonably considered as naturally arising from a breach of the contract in question, or that they were contemplated by the parties in question at the time of the making of the contract. Slaughter v. Denmead, 88 Va. 1019, 14 S. E. Rep. 833, citing Kendall Bank Note Co. v. Comm'rs of Sinking Fund, 79 Va. 563. In Slaughter v. Denmead (supra), plaintiff was not allowed to recover expenditures made in recovering cord wood washed away by winter and spring freshets on account of defendant having failed to transport such wood in November as per its agreement.

III. UNCERTAIN, SPECULATIVE AND CONTINGENT DAMAGES.

Damages which are in their nature uncertain, speculative or contingent, cannot be recovered. Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 413, 26 S. E. Rep. 875; James v. Adams, 8 W. Va. 568; Slaughter v. Denmead, 88 Va. 1019, 14 S. E. Rep. 833; Trigg et al. v. Clay et al., 88 Va. 330, 13 S. E. Rep. 434; Kendall Bank Note Co. v. Comm'rs of Sinking Fund, 79 Va. 573; Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472.

IV. LIQUIDATED, STIPULATED OR STATED DAMAGES.

Parties entering on an agreement, may avoid all questions of future damage, as a result of the breach of the contract, by agreeing upon a definite sum which shall be paid by the party in default to the other contracting party. And in such a case, the party violating the agreement is not responsible in damages, for any sum greater than that stipulated, whatever may be the real damage. Welch et al. v. M'Donald, 85 Va. 500, 8 S. E. Rep. 711.

V. NOMINAL DAMAGES.

Whenever a party has violated the rights of another, the party whose rights have been so violated, has a cause of action against the other for damages, but in the absence of proof of some actual damage resulting from the wrongdoer's act, nominal damages only can be recovered. Building, L. & W. Co. v. Fray, 96 Va. 559, 32 S. E. Rep. 58; Watts v. N. & W. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 196, 19 S. E. Rep. 521; Hare v. Parkersburg, 24 W. Va. 554; Newbrough v. Walker, 8 Gratt. 16.

Burden on Plaintiff to Show Actual Damage.—Where an actionable wrong by the defendant is shown, the plaintiff may recover nominal damages from the mere fact of such wrong; but, if compensatory damages are asked, the plaintiff must in some way show, by evidence, data and means by which the jury can ascertain and fix the amount of damages. The jury cannot go by merely arbitrary conjecture. Watts v. N. & W. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 196, 19 S. E. Rep.

521. See Hare v. Parkersburg, 24 W. Va. 554; Newbrough v. Walker, 8 Gratt. 16.

Breach of Covenant.—In an action for breach of the covenant of "good right to convey" the property in question, nominal damages only can be recovered where, before actual injury is sustained, the title to the property is perfected by inurement. Building, L. & W. Co. v. Fray, 96 Va. 559, 32 S. E. Rep. 58.

VI. PUNITIVE, EXEMPLARY AND VINDICTIVE DAMAGES.

a. Generally.—The Virginia and West Virginia cases, with the exception of the three early West Virginia cases of Pegram v. Stortz, 31 W. Va. 220, 6 S. E. Rep. 485; Beck v. Thomson, 31 W. Va. 459, 7 S. E. Rep. 447; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780, which were overruled in Mayer v. Frobe, 40 W. Va. 246, 22 S. E. Rep. 58, hold, that where a tort is committed under aggravating circumstances, punitive, exemplary or vindictive (which terms are synonymous, Mayer v. Frobe, supra) damages may be recovered of the wrongdoer. Borland v. Barrett, 78 Va. 128, 44 Am. Rep. 152; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Va. 1, 17 S. E. Rep. 757; Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472; Harman v. Cundiff, 82 Va. 239; Fishburne et al. v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 22 S. E. Rep. 354; Mayer v. Frobe, 40 W. Va. 246, 22 S. E. Rep. 58; Turner v. N. & W. R. Co., 40 W. Va. 675, 22 S. E. Rep. 83; Ricketts v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 33 W. Va. 433, 25 Am. St. Rep. 901, 10 S. E. Rep. 801; Downey v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 3 W. Va. 732; Matthews v. Warner's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. 570; Forbes et al. v. Hagman, 75 Va. 168; Bolton et al. v. Vellines, 94 Va. 393, 26 S. E. Rep. 847; Blackwell v. Landreth, 90 Va. 748, 19 S. E. Rep. 791.

b. Object of Punitive Damages.—The object of vindictive or exemplary damages, is, not only to recompense the party injured, but to punish the offender, and deter others from like offending in the future. N. & W. R. Co. v. Neely, 91 Va. 539, 22 S. E. Rep. 367; Blackwell v. Landreth, 90 Va. 748, 19 S. E. Rep. 791; N. & W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Va. 1, 17 S. E. Rep. 757; Mayer v. Frobe, 22 S. E. Rep. 58, 40 W. Va. 246, disapproving and overruling Pegram v. Stortz, 6 S. E. Rep. 485, 31 W. Va. 220; Beck v. Thomson, 31 W. Va. 459, 7 S. E. Rep. 447, in so far as they hold that a wrongdoer cannot be punished in a civil suit by punitive damages, in a proper case.

c. Rule for Awarding Compensatory or Punitive Damages.—"The law awards the former (compensatory or actual damages) only where in the unlawful act there is an absence of intentional wrong, fraud or malice, or where the act is not oppressively or recklessly committed, while the latter (punitive or exemplary damages) are given where the wrongful act is done with a bad motive, or with such gross negligence as to amount to positive misconduct or in a manner so wanton or reckless as to manifest a wilful disregard of the rights of others." RILEY, J. in Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Neely, 91 Va. 540, 22 S. E. Rep. 367.

d. Aggravating Circumstances Necessary.—All the cases hold that, in order to enable a party to recover punitive damages, the act complained of must be accompanied by circumstances of aggravation, such as fraud, malice, oppression, or such circumstances that show an absolute disregard of the rights of others. Vinal v. Core, 18 W. Va. 1; Wilson v. City of Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323; Blackwell v. Landreth, 90 Va. 748, 19 S. E. Rep. 791; Forbes et al. v. Hagman, 75 Va. 168; Bolton et al. v. Vellines, 94 Va. 393, 26 S. E. Rep. 847. See also, Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472; Borland v. Barrett, 78 Va. 128;

Harman v. Cundiff, 82 Va. 239; Fishburne et als. v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 22 S. E. Rep. 354; N. & W. R. Co. v. Wysor, 82 Va. 250; N. & W. R. Co. v. Lipscomb, 90 Va. 137, 17 S. E. Rep. 809; Downey v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 28 W. Va. 732; Mayer v. Frobe, 40 W. Va. 246, 22 S. E. Rep. 58; Parsons v. Harper, 16 Gratt. 64.

e. Instances That Prove the Rule.—In Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Neely, 91 Va. 539, 22 S. E. Rep. 367, the conductor, under an honest impression that he was doing his duty, unlawfully expelled plaintiff from the car, but in doing so was guilty of no rudeness or violence. The ejection was effected quietly and respectfully, the plaintiff offering no resistance. Held, that (clearly not a case for exemplary or punitive damages) actual damages only could be recovered.

In Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128, defendant made an unprovoked and wanton attack upon plaintiff, in the dining room of a hotel. Held, case for punitive damages.

Where a party wrongfully sues out a distress warrant against another, he is not liable in punitive damages, in the absence of fraud, malice, oppression or other aggravating circumstances. Fishburne et als. v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 22 S. E. Rep. 354, citing and following Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472.

In Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Lipscomb, 90 Va. 137, 17 S. E. Rep. 809, where a passenger with wife and two children, one very sick, bought at B. tickets to W. and was assured by defendant's officials that a through sleeper was attached to the train. Entering sleeper, he paid for two berths, and was assured by its conductor that it would go through. Suddenly, without notice to him, sleeper was cut loose, and the train went on carrying off his baggage, including the child's clothing and medicine, part whereof was lost. Sleeper was left on the track at night when it was too late to get into a hotel or drug store. This distressing situation was produced by the negligence of the defendant's officials, of whom said conductor was one.

The court in holding the company not responsible in punitive damages says: "But it is not clear that the company can be held to respond in any other measure of damages than such as are compensations for the actual injury sustained. The record discloses that the officers of the company were themselves mistaken, negligently mistaken it may be conceded, yet we perceive in the record no indication of any malicious purpose or evil intent. It was an honest mistake, and one much regretted by those in fault as soon as it occurred, and disclaimed by the company, and everything within reasonable bounds done to alleviate the unfortunate condition of the plaintiff. Such baggage as was discovered was put off at a station and reclaimed by the company's servants as the train passed on which the plaintiff ultimately travelled. The valise was lost and should be paid for, but that does not appear otherwise than as an accident. But there was no insult, no disrespect, either before or after the sleeper was cut loose."

f. Actual Malice Not Necessary.—To entitle a person to recover of another vindictive or punitive damages, actual malice need not be shown. Where the act complained of is attended by such circumstances, as show a wilful disregard for the rights of others, malice will be inferred. Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128, cited and approved in N. & W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Va. 1, 17 S. E. Rep. 757. See Daingerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136.

"An improper motive may be inferred from a wrongful act based on no reasonable ground; and such improper motive constitutes malice in law; the act need not be prompted by anger, malevolence or vindictiveness." The court in Bolton et al. v. Vellines, 94 Va. 393, 26 S. E. Rep. 847, citing and approving Forbes et al. v. Hagman, 75 Va. 168.

g. Punitive Damages Belong Alone to Actions of Tort.—N. & W. R. Co. v. Wysor, 82 Va. 250.

"Where the action is for a breach of contract, the vicious intention of the defendant can have no effect on the damages." GREEN, J., in Pegram v. Stortz, 31 W. Va. 220, 6 S. E. Rep. 485.

h. Liability of Master in Punitive Damages for Servant's Wrong.—A master is liable, to the extent of compensatory damages, for the unlawful act of his servant, committed in the course of his employment, whether ratified or not, but not in punitive damages, unless he has ratified such act. N. & W. R. Co. v. Neely, 91 Va. 539, 22 S. E. Rep. 367; N. & W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Va. 1, 17 S. E. Rep. 757; N. & W. R. Co. v. Lipscomb, 90 Va. 137, 17 S. E. Rep. 809; Ricketts v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 33 W. Va. 433, 25 Am. St. Rep. 901, 10 S. E. Rep. 801; Downey v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 28 W. Va. 732; Talbott v. W. Va., etc., Ry. Co., 42 W. Va. 560, 26 S. E. Rep. 311.

i. The Term "Ratification" Construed.—Both the Virginia and West Virginia courts liberally construe the term "ratification;" thus in both Ricketts v. C. & O. Ry. Co., supra, and Downey v. C. & O. Ry. Co., supra, the court quotes approvingly the following language from "Patterson on Railway Accident Law" page 471, "but such authorization or ratification can be evidenced either by an express order to do the act, or an express approval of its commission, or by an antecedent retention of a servant of known incompetency, or by a subsequent retention or promotion of the negligent servant."

j. The Aggravating Circumstances Must Appear in Declaration.—Where there are no allegations in the declaration of such facts that would show that the wrongful act was accompanied with circumstances of aggravation, or no general allegation of alta anormia, under which circumstances of aggravation might be proved, punitive or vindictive damages, which are special damages, cannot be recovered; only such damages as are the natural and proximate consequence of the lawful act, may be recovered in such a case. Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472, cited and approved in Fishburne et als. v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 558, 22 S. E. Rep. 354; Lee v. Hill, 84 Va. 919, 6 S. E. Rep. 473.

k. Evidence of Defendant's Wealth and Standing.—Evidence of the defendant's wealth and standing in the community, may be considered, where the evidence shows a case for punitive damage, not to show his ability to pay heavy damages, but to show the probable weight and effect his words, as in an action of slander, would have upon the community. Harman v. Cundiff, 82 Va. 239, citing Womack v. Circle, 29 Gratt. 210.

l. Punitive Damages a Question for the Jury.—In cases where punitive damages are proper, the amount of damages is a question that is peculiarly within the province of the jury, and their verdict will not be disturbed unless it appear that they were actuated by passion, prejudice, undue influence, or unless the amount is grossly excessive. Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 137, citing Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472. See Blackwell v. Landreth, 90 Va. 748, 19 S. E. Rep. 791; Fishburne v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 22 S. E. Rep. 354.

VII. MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

a. Generally.—The object of the law is to give compensation for the injury suffered. Where the loss is merely pecuniary, and admits of definite estimate, it is proper enough to speak of compensation, which implies the notion of equivalents. But that word becomes inappropriate, where the injury is not merely pecuniary, and does not admit of definite estimate. It is more appropriate to say that the object of the law is to give amends or reparation. The injury done depends upon the rights that are violated, and the extent of the violation, and the amends or reparation in damages must be measured accordingly. Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472, 485.

b. Damages That Admit of Definite Estimate.—Where the damages admit of definite and pecuniary estimate, the object of the law, is to give compensation for the injury suffered, and the verdict of the jury must be limited to the actual pecuniary loss of the plaintiff. Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472.

c. Damages That Do Not Admit of Definite Estimate.—Where the damages do not admit of definite estimate, and there is no legal measure of damages the law leaves the amount entirely to the sound discretion of the jury, and the court will not disturb the verdict of the jury unless the amount awarded is so large or small as to indicate that the jury acted under the impulse of some undue motive or some gross error or misconception of the subject. N. & W. R. Co. v. Shott, 92 Va. 34, 22 S. E. Rep. 811; Bertha Zinc Co. v. Black's Adm'r, 88 Va. 308, 18 S. E. Rep. 452; Norfolk v. Johnakin, 94 Va. 285, 26 S. E. Rep. 830; Ward v. White, 86 Va. 212, 9 S. E. Rep. 1021; Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 25; Farish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 697; Richmond Ry., etc., Co. v. Garthright, 92 Va. 635, 24 S. E. Rep. 267; Daingerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136; N. & W. R. Co. v. Ampey, 93 Va. 108, 25 S. E. Rep. 226; Richlands Iron Co. v. Elkins, 90 Va. 249, 17 S. E. Rep. 890; Va. Mid. R. Co. v. White, 84 Va. 498, 5 S. E. Rep. 573; Blackwell v. Landreth, 90 Va. 748, 19 S. E. Rep. 791; Fishburne v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 22 S. E. Rep. 354; Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128; Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472; N. & W. R. Co. v. Draper, 90 Va. 245, 17 S. E. Rep. 888; Miller v. Shenandoah Pulp Co., 88 W. Va. 558, 18 S. E. Rep. 740.

"To justify the granting of a new trial on the ground that the damages awarded are excessive, the verdict must be so out of the way as to evince passion, prejudice, partiality or corruption in the jury." The court in Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 33. In N. & W. R. Co. v. Ampey, 93 Va. 108, 25 S. E. Rep. 226, where plaintiff sued for the loss of an arm and was given $3,500 damages, RIELY, J., in delivering the opinion of the court said, "There is no legal measure of damages in a case of this kind, and their estimation is peculiarly within the province of the jury, who are deemed especially competent to determine such matters. It is well settled that the court will not disturb the verdict in such a case, unless the amount allowed is so great as to evince prejudice, partiality, or corruption on the part of the jury, or that they were misled by some mistaken view of the case."

"Where a case depends upon the tendency and weight of evidence, and the jury and judge who tried the case concur in the weight and influence to be given to the evidence, it would be an abuse to the appellate powers of this court to set aside a verdict and judgment, because the judges of this court, from the evidence as it is written down, would not have concurred in the verdict." The court in Benn

d. Damages for Pain and Suffering.—"No method has yet been devised, nor scales adjusted, by which to measure or weigh the value in money the degrees of pain and anguish of a suffering human being. * * * and the verdict of a jury will not be set aside on the ground of excessive damages unless the damages be so great as to indicate that the jury was actuated by partiality or prejudice." RIELY, J., in Richmond Ry. Co. v. Garthright, 92 Va. 635, 24 S. E. Rep. 267, quoted and approved in Norfolk v. Johnakin, 94 Va. 287, 26 S. E. Rep. 830. See also Farish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 697; Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 25; N. & W. R. Co. v. Shott, 92 Va. 34, 22 S. E. Rep. 811.

e. Instances That Prove the Rule.—The court in Farish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 697, affirmed a judgment for $9,000 damages, where plaintiff had his head severely cut, leg broken, from which a stiff joint followed, which his physician testified would continue through life, and in consequence of his injuries he was confined in a house near the place where the accident occurred for six months, and incurred doctor's bills to the amount of $220.

In Norfolk v. Johnakin, 94 Va. 285, 26 S. E. Rep. 830 a verdict of $5,000 was affirmed, where the evidence showed that the plaintiff (a young lady) was severely injured, by reason of which she was rendered invalid and cripple for two years; and during which time she suffered excruciating agony every day.

In N. & W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Va. 1, 17 S. E. Rep. 757, $2,000 damages was held not to be excessive, where plaintiff was maliciously, but not violently ejected from car. But in N. & W. R. Co. v. Neely, 91 Va. 539, 22 S. E. Rep. 367, the plaintiff was without violence or malice ejected from defendant's train. The jury thinking it a case for exemplary damages, found a verdict for $800, which the appellate court set aside, as excessive, holding that the plaintiff was entitled to compensatory damages only, in the absence of circumstances of aggravation.

A verdict for $1,000 damages for throwing a man from a truck, cutting his face and bruising him. The plaintiff suffered no permanent injury. Affirmed. Richmond Ry., etc., Co. v. Garthright, 92 Va. 635, 24 S. E. Rep. 267.

In N. & W. R. Co. v. Shott, 92 Va. 34, 22 S. E. Rep. 811, the plaintiff, a mail clerk, got a verdict for $7,500 damages, for personal injuries received through the gross negligence of the railway company. Judgment affirmed.

In N. & W. R. Co. v. Ampey, 93 Va. 108, 25 S. E. Rep. 226, the plaintiff, a young able-bodied man, who depended wholly on manual labor for a livelihood, was allowed $3,500 damages for the loss of an arm.

Plaintiff's skull was negligently broken, a part of which was removed, leaving brain unprotected, his capacity for work impaired. Held, $2,500 damages not excessive. Richlands Iron Co. v. Elkins, 90 Va. 249, 17 S. E. Rep. 890.

$5,500 damages not too much, where plaintiff had both legs and thighs broken, and one of the legs were so badly injured that it had to be amputated. R. & D. R. Co. v. Rudd, 88 Va. 648, 14 S. E. Rep. 381.

In Daingerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136, the court affirmed a judgment for $8,000 given plaintiff for an injury sustained by him in his foot, which necessitated amputation of the leg below the knee joint; his health was greatly impaired, and business suffered by reason of his wound.

In Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128, $10,000 punitive damages, was held not excessive, for maliciously breaking a bottle over plaintiff's head in the dining room of a hotel, inflicting a scalp wound only.

In Bertha Zinc Co. v. Black's Adm'r, 88 Va. 303, 13 S. E. Rep. 452, the court reversed the judgment of the lower court in setting aside a verdict for $10,000 damages as excessive, where deceased came to his end, through the negligence of the company, and left a wife and number of children. Deceased was old, infirm and a common laborer.

In D. & W. R. Co. v. Brown, 90 Va. 340, 18 S. E. Rep. 278, plaintiff recovered $7,500 damages, for a broken thigh, which also occasioned a consequent shortening of his leg.

$2,000 damages for a permanent injury to one's foot. Held, not excessive. N. & W. R. Co. v. Burge, 84 Va. 63, 4 S. E. Rep. 21.

$1,375 for dangerously wounding a person, by reason of which he suffered much and was in bed for several months. No permanent injury. Held, not inadequate. Ward v. White, 86 Va. 212, 9 S. E. Rep. 1021.

A verdict for $5.00 was set aside in Blackwell v. Landreth, 90 Va. 748, 19 S. E. Rep. 791, as being inadequate in an action for slander of a girl of unblemished reputation by false imputations upon her chastity.

f. Breach of Contract—Measure of Damages—Generally.—As has been seen compensation to the party injured is the cardinal rule in assessing damages and this rule applies with particular force to cases of breach of contract. The object of the law, in such cases, is to put the injured party in such circumstances as he would have been had the other party carried out his part of the contract. Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 418, 26 S. E. Rep. 875; James v. Adams, 8 W. Va. 568; Trigg et al. v. Clay et al., 88 Va. 380, 13 S. E. Rep. 434; Kendall Bank Note Co. v. Comm'rs of the Sinking Fund, 79 Va. 573; Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472; Alleghany Iron Co. v. Teaford, 96 Va. 372, 31 S. E. Rep. 525; James v. Kibler's Adm'r, 94 Va. 165, 26 S. E. Rep. 417; Hare v. Parkersburg, 24 W. Va. 554; Patton & Shaver v. Elk River Navigation Co., 13 W. Va. 259.

Where a party is not permitted to perform his part of the contract, by the fault of the other party, he may recover any damages he may have suffered by not being allowed to perform his part of the contract, such as wages paid to idle employees, and costs of keeping his plant in readiness; he may also recover the profits he would have made had he been allowed to carry out his part of the contract. Alleghany Iron Co. v. Teaford, 96 Va. 372, 31 S. E. Rep. 525.

Where party fails to accept property at a stipulated price at a designated place, according to his contract, the measure of damages, is the difference between the amount it would have cost plaintiff to have the property at the designated place, and the amount defendant agreed to pay for such property. Alleghany Iron Co. v. Teaford, 96 Va. 372, 31 S. E. Rep. 525; Hare v. Parkersburg, 24 W. Va. 554. In this last case GREEN, J., said: "It seems to me, there was no impropriety in the jury ascertaining the amount of damage the plaintiff below sustained in consequence of the breach of this contract by calculating what it would have cost him to perform his contract and taking that from what he was under the contract to get for the delivering of this * * *." See also, Patton & Shaver v. Elk River Nav. Co., 13 W. Va. 259.

g. Measure of Damages in Particular Cases.

For Abandonment by Lessee of His Contract of Rent.

—The measure of damages to the lessor in such a case is generally the amount of the rent that would have accrued during the term of rental, had the lessee carried out his part of the contract. But if the lessor succeeds in rerenting the property before the lessee's term expires, then the measure of damages is the difference between the amount lessee contracted to pay, and the sum lessor receives from the new tenant. If the lessor suffers no actual damage, he is nevertheless entitled to nominal damages for the breach of the contract. James et als. v. Kibler's Adm'r, 94 Va. 165, 26 S. E. Rep. 417.

For Breach of Contract to Pay Money.—"For the breach of a contract to pay money, no matter what the amount of inconvenience sustained by the plaintiff, the measure of damages is the interest on the money only." The court in Bethel & Co. v. Salem Imp. Co., 93 Va. 354, 25 S. E. Rep. 304.

For Failure to Deliver Stock.—Where it is agreed to deliver stock of fluctuating value on a certain day, the measure of damages for failure to make such delivery, is not the nominal amount of said stock, but the true value of it, on the day agreed on for its delivery. Bull v. Douglas, Adm'r, 4 Munf. 303. See also, Groves v. Graves, 1 Wash. 1; Reynolds v. Waller's Heir, 1 Wash. 164. In Gray v. Kemp et al., 88 Va. 201, 16 S. E. Rep. 225, the court held, that in such a case the plaintiff might recover the highest price the stock would have brought in market at any time after the day agreed on for its delivery.

I have this day, Sept. 26, 1859, borrowed of Mrs. P. five thousand dollars, in stock of the state of Virginia, on which interest is payable semi-annually; and for the repayment of the same, with the accruing interest, I bind myself, my heirs, &c., witness, &c., K. The stock was borrowed to be converted into money, and was sold in November for $4,755. Held, P. is entitled to the value of the stock at the time of the loan. Davis, Trustee, v. Knight, 24 Gratt. 406.

For Unlawfully Taking Part of Land—Railroads.—Railroad company, without authority, erected expensive improvements on plaintiff's land. Becoming insolvent, its franchises and property were purchased by another company. Held, the purchaser is liable for the land taken without considering the benefit from the construction of the railroad, and for the damage to the residue of the land. In such a case, the amount of the damages, as respects the residue of the land, is the difference in the market value of the land before and after the taking thereof; and as respects the land taken, including said improvements, is the fair cash market value of the land and said improvements at the time of the taking in view of the uses to which they have been put; and it was not error to refuse to allow a witness to testify that he had donated similar property to the company. Richmond & Mecklenburg R. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 90 Va. 425, 18 S. E. Rep. 901.

For Property Unlawfully Sold.—The measure of damages for a party whose property has been unlawfully sold by a wrong-doer, is the value of the land at the date of the sale. Sims v. Tyrer, 96 Va. 14, 30 S. E. Rep. 448.

For Undermining Foot-Path—Death of Licensee.—In an action by the personal representative of a licensee of a foot-path, against the owner of the lands, for causing the death of such licensee, by carelessly and negligently undermining said foot-path, the measure of damages is such sum as to the jury may seem fair and just under all the circumstances of the case, not exceeding the amount claimed in the declaration. N. & W. R. Co. v. DeBoard's Adm'r, 91 Va. 700, 22 S. E. Rep. 514.

For Destroying Pass Way.—The measure of damages, recoverable of a railroad company, for destroying a pass way over one's lands, is not merely the injury to the part of the land made inaccessible. N. & W. R. Co. v. Carter, 91 Va. 587, 22 S. E. Rep. 517.

For Wrongful Distress.—In an action to recover damages for wrongfully distraining property for rent not due, the measure of damage, in the absence of circumstances of aggravation, such as fraud, malice, oppression, etc., is such damages as are the natural and proximate result of the injury complained of. Fishburne v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 22 S. E. Rep. 354.

For Failure to Transmit Message.—Where a telegraph company has received a message for transmission and the usual charges according to their regulations, it is bound to transmit the message faithfully and promptly, whether it be in "cipher" or "intelligible," and should the company negligently fail to transmit such message altogether, or to transmit it faithfully and promptly, it will become liable to an action for damages by the party aggrieved, and the measure of damages in such case is such loss as the party aggrieved has sustained by reason of the wrongful act of the company in violation of the duties imposed on it by law. A more precise statement of the rule is: The company is liable to all the direct damages which both parties would have contemplated as flowing from the breach of the contract or violation of the duty, if, at the time, they had bestowed proper attention to the subject, and had been fully informed of all the facts. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Reynolds Bros., 77 Va. 173.

For Alteration of Telegram.—Plaintiff wired his brokers in Mobile to buy 500 bales of cotton for him. In transmission the number was by the mistake of the telegraph company, changed to 2500. Held, the measure of damages was the amount lost on the sale at Mobile of the excess of the cotton above that ordered, or if not sold then, what would have been the loss on the sale of the cotton of Mobile in the condition and circumstances in which it was when the mistake was ascertained, including in such loss all the proper costs and charges thereon. Washington & N. O. Tel. Co. v. Hobson & Son, 15 Gratt. 122.

Sheriff for Default of Deputy.—A sheriff against whom a judgment is rendered for the default or misconduct of his deputy, is entitled to recover of that deputy, not only the amount of the judgment, but all costs and damages connected with such judgment. Stowers, Adm'r of Bragg, v. Smith's Ex'r, 5 Munf. 401.

In Holcomb v. Flournoy, 2 Call 438, the court refused to interfere with an award that allowed a sheriff to recover against his deputy, on a bond to "have harmless" the sheriff by reason of any default or misconduct of the deputy, all damages and expenses necessarily incurred by him, and damages for his trouble and anxiety which were caused by the deputy's default.

On Indemnifying Bond.—The proper measure of damages in an action on a bond, to indemnify a sheriff for the sale of property, seized under execution, is the actual value of the property seized and sold, with interest in the way of damages, on the amount of the value, from the day fixed on by the jury, as the time at which the property is to be valued, until the time of the trial. Crump v. Ficklin, 1 Patt. & H. 201.

On Injunction Bond.—In an action on an injunction bond with condition "to pay all such costs as may be awarded against the plaintiff, and all such damages as shall be incurred in case the said injunction be dissolved," fees paid to counsel in the injunction suit cannot be recovered as damages, although the bill be a pure bill of injunction. Wisecarver & al. v. Wisecarver, 97 Va. 452, 34 S. E. Rep. 56.

Upon Warranty of Soundness of Animal.—For upon a warranty of the soundness of an animal sold, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the animal sound as warranted, and his value at the time of the sale in the condition he really was; and the price at which the animal was sold is the proper evidence of value at that time, if sound to the extent of the warranty. And the rule is the same whether the purchaser offers to return the animal or not. Thornton v. Thompson, 4 Gratt. 121.

Trover and Conversion.—In trover and conversion the plaintiff may recover an amount greater than the value of the thing converted. Pearpoint v. Henry, 2 Wash. 192.

For Prematurely Filing Mechanic's Lien.—A subcontractor files a mechanic's lien before completion of the work, contrary to Code, § 2476. Held, he is liable to an action for damages for injury thereby done the contractor. In such action the declaration should charge some special damage to plaintiff, as the language of the alleged lien does not necessarily import injurious defamation; but it is not necessary to give the name of any one whose custom has been lost to the plaintiff, nor to state that the alleged lien has been ended by limitation or decree. Moore v. Bohn, 89 Va. 107, 15 S. E. Rep. 520.

For Destroying Fruit Trees.—The measure of damages for destroying by fire an orchard of fruit trees is the value of the trees destroyed; not "the cost of replacing the trees the first proper season for planting after the burning, and the value of the care and labor bestowed on said trees by plaintiffs before the burning, with interest on the value of the care and labor from the time it was bestowed. N. & W. R. Co. v. Bohannon, 85 Va. 298, 7 S. E. Rep. 236.

For Property Lost by Carrier.—Says the court in Tompkins v. Kanawha Board, 21 W. Va. 232: "The general rule is, that where personal property is being shipped to a certain place for sale, and a loss occurs, the measure of damages is the difference between the price at which the property was bought, and its market value at the place of and at the time when it should have been delivered. Boyd v. Garrison, 14 W. Va. 1. This rule is established to ascertain what the party had in fact lost. But where he has actually contracted to sell the property in the place where it is to be delivered at a specified price, that price at which it was so contracted to be sold is the best evidence of its value, and of the loss which its owner had sustained."

VIII. MODE OF ESTIMATING DAMAGES.

a. In Actions for Personal Injuries, the jury may always take in consideration, in estimating the damages to be allowed,

1. The Mental Suffering the plaintiff has undergone. N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Marpole, 97 Va. 594, 34 S. E. Rep. 42; Parsons v. Harper, 16 Gratt. 64; R. & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 4 S. E. Rep. 211; Vinal v. Corb, 18 W. Va. 1; Riley v. Railway Co., 27 W. Va. 145; Dalgerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136; Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128, any

2. Physical Suffering and Pain he has undergone on account of the injury complained of, Ampey's Case, 93 Va. 110, 25 S. E. Rep. 226; N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Marpole, 97 Va. 594, 34 S. E. Rep. 462; Parsons v. Harper, 16 Gratt. 64; R. & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 4 S. E. Rep. 211; Riley v. Railway Co., 27 W. Va. 145; Bolton et al. v. Vellines, 94 Va. 393, 26 S. E. Rep. 847; Daingerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136; Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128, his

3. Loss of Time, Riley v. Railway Co., 27 W. Va. 145; Parsons v. Harper, 16 Gratt. 64; Vinal v. Core, 18 W. Va. 1; Bolton et al. v. Vellines, 94 Va. 393, 26 S. E. Rep. 847; Daingerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136; Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128; R. & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 4 S. E. Rep. 211, and the

4. Degree and Probable Duration of Injury, Daingerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136; R. & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 4 S. E. Rep. 211; N. & P. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 27 Gratt. 455, any

5. Medical Expenses the plaintiff may have incurred by reason of the injury, R. & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 4 S. E. Rep. 211; Farish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 697; Riley v. Railway Co., 27 W. Va. 145; Wilson v. City of Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323; Daingerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136; Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128; also the

6. Permanent Reduction of His Capacity to Earn Money for himself or those dependent on him, Riley v. Railway Co., 27 W. Va. 145; Wilson v. City of Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323; Daingerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136; Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128; R. & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 4 S. E. Rep. 211; N. & P. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 27 Gratt. 455, and the fact that he has a

7. Family Dependent on Him for Support may be taken into consideration where he is permanently injured, or has died from his injuries. B. & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. 431.

"All the cases agree that where the deceased has left a widow and children it is proper for the jury, in assessing the damages, to estimate the value of the support and maintenance properly derived from the deceased, the amount realized by him from his usual occupation, as also the loss of his care, nurture and instruction." B. & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, supra.

8. Mental and Physical Suffering of Deceased's Family.—In an action to recover damages for the death of a son occasioned by the wrongful act of another, it is error to instruct the jury, that in estimating the damages, they may take in consideration the effect the news of the son's death had upon the nervous system of the mother. As there is no necessary or probable connection between negligence which results in the death of a son, and the consequent nervous condition of his mother. N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Stevens' Adm'r, 97 Va. 631, 34 S. E. Rep. 525.

b. Other Torts.

1. Injury to Character.—The jury may take in consideration, in a proper case, the injury one's character receives, as in a case of malicious prosecution, slander, etc. Vinal v. Core, 18 W. Va. 1.

2. Counsel Fees.—"The general rule is that counsel fees are not recoverable as damages, but on the trial of an action for malicious prosecution or false imprisonment, where exemplary damages are recoverable, the fees paid or incurred to counsel for defending the original suit of prosecution may be proved, and, if reasonably and necessarily incurred, may be taken into consideration by the jury in the averment of damages." RILEY, J., in Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 413, 420, 26 S. E. Rep. 875, citing Par- sons v. Harper, 16 Gratt. 64. See also, Vinal v. Core, 18 W. Va. 1; Bolton et al. v. Vellines, 94 Va. 393, 26 S. E. Rep. 847.

3. Credit and Business Standing.—The jury in assessing the damages may take in consideration the loss of credit and business standing of the plaintiff.

In Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472, where the defendant entered the store of the plaintiff at night-time, in collusion with his clerk, and carried off most of his stock, the court, by JOYNES, J., said: "That such acts are well calculated to injure the credit and business standing of a merchant, and that such will always be their effect, to a greater or less extent, seems too obvious to require proof by argument or illustration. They involve an imputation, in the harshest form, upon his credit and also upon his integrity. * * * * * The damages resulting from the credit and business standing of the plaintiff, * * *, were therefore properly recoverable, as natural, proximate and necessary consequences of the acts of the defendants."

4. Injury to Business.—Certain wrongful acts will necessarily injure the business of the person whose rights are violated, and when such is the case, the jury may consider the injury to plaintiff's business, in assessing the damages. Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. 472. See Daingerfield v. Thompson, 33 Gratt. 136. And in such a case, to ascertain the damages, the nature and extent of the merchant's business, whether profitable or not, are proper subjects of inquiry. Peshine v. Shepperson, (supra).

5. Mental Anguish.—In an action by a father, for the seduction of his daughter, the jury may take in consideration the mental anguish of the father, in estimating the damages. Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 253.

6. Humiliation—Indignity—Insult.—In an action for false imprisonment the jury may, in estimating the damages, take into consideration, the humiliation, indignity and insults borne by plaintiff. Vinal v. Core, 18 W. Va. 1. See Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 128.

7. Fact That Legislature May Act.—Upon the trial of an issue to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by a ferry franchise by the erection and operation of a bridge, the jury are to regard the franchise as permanent, and in estimating the damage cannot take into consideration the fact that the legislature may repeal the law creating the exclusive privilege of transporting persons and things across the river within half a mile of the ferry. Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co., 20 W. Va. 223.

IX. MITIGATION OF DAMAGES.

Effect of Insurance Money Received by Deceased's Family.—In B. & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. 431, 26 Am. Rep. 384, the court held that evidence to the effect, that deceased at the time of his death held policies on his life to the amount of $5,000, for the benefit of his wife and children, and that since his death the amount of such policies had been paid over to his widow and children, was properly held inadmissible. The court, in passing on this question, said by STAPLES, J., "We think the court did not err in refusing to admit this evidence. It was clearly calculated to mislead the jury as to the issues they were to try. The mere fact that the family of the deceased received money from some other source would not justly influence the measure of compensation to be made by the defendant for injuries attributable to the misconduct of its employees and agents. The party effecting the insurance paid the full value for it, and there is no equity in the claim of the defendant to the benefit of a contract for which it gave no consideration. It is said that LORD CAMPBELL, the author of the English act, was of opinion that the money received on a policy of insurance by the family of the deceased, might be taken into account in assessing the damages. In this country the courts have uniformly held the contrary; and this view is the more just and reasonable."

Fact That Plaintiff Brought on the Injury by His Misconduct.—In Matthews v. Warner's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. 570, 26 Am. Rep. 396, it was held that the jury might, in assessing the damages, take into consideration, the fact that plaintiff's deceased, in a way, brought on his death, by cursing defendant repeatedly before the fatal shot.

Property Illegally Taken — Evidence That Similar Property Was Donated.—In an action against a railroad company, for the value of land illegally taken by it, and for damages to the residue, evidence that another party donated similar land to the company is proper. R. & M. R. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 90 Va. 425, 18 S. E. Rep. 901.

X. PROSPECTIVE DAMAGES.

a. The General Rule Stated.—Prospective damages are, as a general rule, recoverable, when the cause of action is complete, and the prospective damages are reasonably certain. James v. Kibler, 94 Va. 165, 26 S. E. Rep. 417; Hargreaves v. Kimberly, 26 W. Va. 787, 53 Am. Rep. 121; Smith v. Point Pleasant, etc., R. Co., 23 W. Va. 453; Rogers v. Coal River, etc., Co., 19 S. E. Rep. 401, 39 W. Va. 272; Watts v. N. & W. R. Co., 19 S. E. Rep. 521, 39 W. Va. 196.

b. Injury Must Be Permanent.—Where it is proven that the cause of the injury to the property in question, is of a permanent nature, and the damage is permanent, then the rule is that all damages, both past and prospective, may be recovered in one suit. Hargreaves v. Kimberly, 26 W. Va. 787, 53 Am. Rep. 121; Smith v. Point Pleasant, etc., R. Co., 23 W. Va. 453; Rogers v. Coal River, etc., Co., 19 S. E. Rep. 401, 39 W. Va. 272; Watts v. N. & W. R. Co., 19 S. E. Rep. 521, 39 W. Va. 196.

c. Successive Action for the Consequences of the Same Injury.—"It seems to me that in all those cases, where the cause of the injury is in its nature permanent, and a recovery for such injury would confer a license on the defendant to continue the cause, the entire damage may be recovered in a single action; but, where the cause of the injury is in the nature of a nuisance and not permanent in its character, but of such a character that it may be supposed, that the defendant would remove it, rather than suffer at once the entire damage, which it might inflict, if permanent, then the entire damage cannot be recovered in a single action; but actions may be maintained from time to time, as long as the cause of the injury continues." The court, in Hargreaves v. Kimberly, 26 W. Va. 799, quoted and approved in Rogers v. Coal River, etc., Co., 39 W. Va. 272, 19 S. E. Rep. 401, 404; Watts v. N. & W. R. Co., 19 S. E. Rep. 521, 39 W. Va. 196.

d. Injury Must Be Temporary.—But where the cause of the injury to the property is not of a permanent nature, but only of a temporary character, the rule is that only such damages may be recovered as have actually accrued, at the date of the institution of the action, and subsequent actions must be maintained to recover any future damage. Hargreaves v. Kimberly, 26 W. Va. 787, 53 Am. Rep. 121; Rogers v. Coal

River, etc., Co., 19 S. E. Rep. 401, 39 W. Va. 272; Watts v. N. & W. R. Co., 19 S. E. Rep. 521, 39 W. Va. 196.

XI. PLEADING AND PRACTICE.

a. Amount of Damages Omitted in Declaration—Effect of.—After verdict, the damages having been left blank in the declaration, the court will inspect the writ and supply them from it. Digges v. Norris, 3 H. & M. 268; Hook v. Turnbull, 6 Call 85.

In Craghill et al. v. Page et al., 2 H. & M. 446 which was an action of debt on a bond with a collateral condition, no damages were laid in the declaration; nevertheless the judgment was sustained.

In debt on a bond, damages need not be laid in the declaration or found by the jury. Taylor & Co. v. M'Clean, 3 Call 557. See Woodson v. Johns, 3 Munf. 230.

b. Declaration—Counts—Claim of Damages.—A declaration contains several counts, and no damages are claimed at the end of each count, but the entire declaration concludes: "In all to the damage of the plaintiff $500, and therefore they sue," this claim of damages must be regarded as on account of the wrongs named in each several count, and therefore a verdict and judgment may on such a declaration be rendered for damages. Postlewaite v. Wise, 17 W. Va. 2, cited and approved in Hoffman v. Dickinson, 31 W. Va. 142, 6 S. E. Rep. 53.

c. Summons—Copy—Variance.—Original summons stated damages at $5,000; copy at $1,500. The variance could be taken advantage of only by plea in abatement (§ 3259); and, at least, was waived by failure to object before verdict. R. & D. R. Co. v. Ridd, 88 Va. 648, 14 S. E. Rep. 361.

d. Damages Not to Exceed Amount Claimed in Declaration.—Greater damages cannot be awarded than are claimed in the declaration. Hook v. Turnbull, 6 Call 85; Pearpoint v. Henry, 2 Wash. 192; Ga. Home Ins. Co. v. Goode & Co., 95 Va. 751, 30 S. E. Rep. 361; Cahill v. Pintony, 4 Munf. 371; Winslow et al. v. Commonwealth, 2 H. & M. 459.

e. Principal and Interest Together May Exceed Amount Claimed.—But this restriction is confined to the principal alone, and does not affect the interest that may be allowed thereon. Cahill v. Pintony, 4 Munf. 371; Ga. Home Ins. Co. v. Goode & Co., 95 Va. 757, 30 S. E. Rep. 366.

f. Verdict in Excess of Amount—Plaintiff May Release Amount in Excess.—If the jury find a verdict for a larger amount than is claimed in the declaration, the plaintiff may release so much of the amount that is in excess of that claimed by him in his declaration, and take judgment for the remainder, and unless he does so a new trial should be awarded. Cahill v. Pintony, 4 Munf. 371; Hook v. Turnbull, 6 Call 85; Tennant's Ex'or v. Gray, 5 Munf. 494.

g. When Damages May Exceed Amount Laid in Declaration.—In debt upon a bond with a collateral condition, the jury may assess damages beyond those laid in the declaration, if the penalty be sufficient to cover them. Payne v. Ellzey, 2 Wash. 184; Winslow et al. v. Commonwealth, 2 H. & M. 459; Johnstons v. Meriwether, 3 Call 523.

TUCKER, J., in Winslow v. Commonwealth (supra) says: "In perusing the record, an objection occurred to me which was not noticed at the bar. The damages laid in the declaration are only 600%. The damages assessed in one of these suits are upwards of 900%, and in the other 1,900%. And I was at first inclined to think, that the same reason which restrains a plaintiff from recovering more damages than he demands in his declaration, in an action sounding merely in damages, would apply to these cases. But I find that this point occurred in Johnstons v. Meriwether (supra), and again in Payne v. Ellzey (supra), and in both cases was disregarded. My doubts are consequently changed into submission. Yet, I cannot help saying that such a practice has, in my opinion, a tendency to mislead a defendant, who may think it not worth while to defend a suit, where the damages are laid at 10¢. only, but would, probably, be roused on receiving notice, that he might be subject to the payment of 2,000¢."

h. Debt on Bond—Jury Need Not Assess Damages.—In debt on a bond the jury need not find plaintiff's damages, but may bring in a general verdict in his favor. Taylor & Co. v. McClean, 3 Call 557.

i. Declaration—Allegation—Particular Injury.—A declaration, in an action for personal injuries, need not state the particular injury, for instance a broken leg; a general allegation that plaintiff was thereby "greatly injured, bruised, wounded and crippled" is enough. It is different though where the plaintiff seeks to recover special damages, consequent on the particular injury. Yeager v. City of Bluefield, 40 W. Va. 484, 21 S. E. Rep. 752.

Where the plaintiff, in his complaint, claims from the defendant damages for the destruction of 500 rails and about one mile of board fence, some wood upon his land, and a lot of growing timber, which, he alleges, was caused by the negligence of the defendant in permitting fire to emit from its locomotive and spread over his land, he will not be permitted to prove general damages done to his farm, but he will be confined to the specific items of damage alleged in his complaint. Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 10 S. E. Rep. 26, 33 W. Va. 88.

Not Necessary to State Every Matter That May Enhance the Damages.—In a declaration in an action for damages resulting from the death of a person by the wrongful act of another, it is not necessary to state every matter which may enhance the damages. N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Stevens' Adm'r, 97 Va. 631, 34 S. E. Rep. 525; B. & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, 29 Gratt 441.

Loss of Time—Married Women.—Under chapter 103 of the Va. Code of 1887, a married woman cannot recover damages for loss of time, because of injuries she has wrongfully sustained, unless it be averred and proved that she is a sole trader. Richmond Ry., etc., Co. v. Bowles, 92 Va. 738, 24 S. E. Rep. 388; A. & D. R. Co. v. Ironmonger, 95 Va. 625, 29 S. E. Rep. 319.

Medical Expenses Incurred—Married Women.—Neither may a married woman, under the same act, recover damages, for any expenses incurred by her in effecting her cure, unless she avers and proves that such money came out of her separate estate. Richmond Ry., etc., Co. v. Bowles, 92 Va. 738, 24 S. E. Rep. 388; A. & D. R. Co. v. Ironmonger, 95 Va. 625, 29 S. E. Rep. 319.

j. Special Damages—Must Aver in Declaration.—In an action of trespass on the case by employee against employer for a wrongful discharge, declaration makes no averment of malice or of special damage beyond loss of employment and wages, evidence of special damage to character by reason of the discharge is irrelevant and inadmissible. Lee v. Hill, 84 Va. 919, 6 S. E. Rep. 473.

k. Judgment by Default—Writ of Inquiry.—According to the common law, as recognized and settled in this state there can be no final judgment by default, in an action sounding in damages, in the absence of a writ of inquiry, either in the circuit court or before a justice, when the value in controversy or damages exceeds $20.00, and the right of either party, if he demands it, to have such writ executed by a

l. Jurisdiction—Justices of the Peace.—In determining the question of jurisdiction in an action for a wrong before a justice, the amount claimed in the summons, and not the damage as shown by the testimony, must control. Stewart v. B. & O. R. Co., 33 W. Va. 88, 10 S. E. Rep. 26.

m. Motion to Recover Money—Damages for Breach of Contract.—Damages for an injury resulting from a breach of contract, recoverable only in an action "sounding in damages," can in no sense be considered money due upon contract, and hence a motion under sec. 3211 of the Code, cannot be maintained to recover damages for a breach of contract. Wilson v. Dawson, 96 Va. 687, 32 S. E. Rep. 461.

n. Joint Tort Feasors—Assessment of Damages.—In a joint action of trespass against several who plead jointly, if the jury find them guilty jointly, they should assess the damages jointly against all. If in such case the jury by mistake assess several damages, the plaintiff may cure the defect by entering a nolle prosequi as to some, and taking judgment against one. In such a case it is not correct for the court to instruct the jury, that they may sever in the damages, and assessed respectively what in their opinion each party found guilty ought to pay. In such a case the jury should assess against all who are found guilty, the amount which they think the most guilty should pay. In such a case therefore an instruction to the jury that they may sever the damages, is not an error of which a defendant can complain in an appellate court; though the plaintiff may. Crawford v. Morris, 5 Gratt. 90; Ammonett v. Harris, et al., 1 H. & M. 488.

o. Damages in Appellate Court.

Damages on Costs.—Where an appellate court reverses a judgment as to costs, the successful party is not entitled to damages on the costs. Hudson v. Johnson, 1 Wash. 10.

Executor Prosecuting Appeal.—Appellant dies, and the appeal is revived by his executor. Judgment is affirmed. Damages and costs ought not to be awarded against the proper estate of the executor, in case of deficiency of that of the testator. Hudson v. Ross & Co., 1 Wash. 74, disapproving Bates v. Gordon, 3 Call 555.

In Caveat.—Damages are not to be given upon affirmance of the judgment in cases of caveat. Preston v. Harvey, 3 Call 495.

Retarding Execution of Decree.—If the defendant appeals from a decree of the high court of chancery, pronounced on a forthcoming bond, the court of appeals may allow ten per cent. damages for his retarding the execution of the decree. Skipwith v. Clinch, 3 Call 86. See McClung v. Beirne, 10 Leigh 394.

"Matter in Controversy"—Damages Allowed by Law.—The damages allowed by law, upon affirmance of a county court judgment by a superior court of law, are not to be reckoned as part of the "matter in controversy," for the purpose of giving the court of appeals jurisdiction. If therefore the judgment be for less than one hundred dollars, but would amount to more, by adding the damages, upon affirmance, an appeal does not lie to the court of appeals. Melson v. Melson's Adm'r, 2 Munf. 542.

Injunction Bond—Surety.—The security in a bond for the prosecution of an injunction is not liable for the costs and damages, which may accrue on an appeal to an appellate court. Woodson v. Johns, 8 Munf. 230.

479 *Wallace's Adm'r & als. v. Treakle & als.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Suits to Avoid Fraudulent Conveyances—When Creditor's Lien Begins.*—Creditors at large who file a bill to set aside a deed of their debtor conveying land as fraudulent, and succeed, have a lien on the land for their debts from the filing of their bill.

2. Same—Priority of Creditors.—The deed of H for land is set aside as fraudulent at the suit of some of his creditors, and there is a decree after the death of H for the sale of the land, and for account of the debts of H, and their priorities. The report shows that there was one judgment against H before the deed was made. Some of the plaintiffs in the bill were creditors by judgment, one a creditor at large; a number came in by petition before the decree; and a number came in before the commissioner, and by petition after the decree. In distributing the fund, it is to be applied, 1st. To pay the judgment recovered before the deed was made. 2d. To the judgments recovered before the bill was filed. 3d. To the creditors at large who joined in the bill. 4th. To the creditors by petition before the death of Henderson, in the order in which their petitions were filed. 5th. To all the other creditors pro rata.

3. Sale of Lands under Decree—Setting Aside.—Though in this case there was a decree for the sale of the land, and a sale before an account of the debts was taken, the sale of the land will not be set aside upon the objection of some of the creditors who came in after the decree, made years after the sale, when it is obvious the land would not sell for as much as it had sold for before, and which was more than some of these creditors had expressed their willingness to take for it.

By deed bearing date the 20th of April 1866, William Henderson, Sr., of Lancaster county, conveyed to his son, William Henderson, Jr., five hundred acres of land and one-half of his stock of horses, cattle, sheep, &c. In consideration of which,

480 William Henderson, *Jr., executed to him ten bonds of $300 each, payable with interest in one, two, &c., to ten years, and conveyed the property purchased in trust to secure the payment of the bonds. And by a deed of the same date, William

Henderson, Sr., conveyed to his son, Charles E. Henderson, three hundred acres of land, including the dwelling house, &c., and one-half of his stock of horses, cattle, sheep, &c., for the same price, to be paid and secured in the same way.

By deed of the same date, William Henderson, Sr., conveyed to Warner Eubank three or four other tracts of land, and all the bonds of his two sons, except the first due of each, in trust to pay all his debts in which he was principal debtor, placing them all on the same footing. All these deeds were admitted to record on the 23d of April 1866.

On the 18th of September 1866, John S. Treakle, who sued for himself and four others, filed his bill in the circuit court of Lancaster county, in which he alleged that they were creditors of William Henderson, Sr.; himself and three of the other parties, by judgments recovered on the 25th of August 1866, and the fourth by bond. He charged that the deeds to William Henderson, Jr., and Charles E. Henderson, were fraudulent, intended to hinder and delay the creditors of the grantor; and he prayed that they might be set aside, and the property conveyed in them might be sold and applied to the payment of the plaintiffs' debts.

On the 7th of November 1866 the death of William Henderson, Sr., was suggested, and the suit was revived against his administrator.

In November 1867, William Henderson, Jr., and Charles E. Henderson, filed their answer denying the fraud, insisting the price they were to pay was the full 481 *value of the property. A number of depositions were taken by the defendants, which went to sustain the deeds; but the cause coming on to be heard on the 18th of April 1868, the court being of opinion that the deeds from William Henderson, Sr., to his sons, having been executed on the same day with the deed of trust to Eubank for the benefit of his creditors, the said deeds constituted one and the same transaction, and that the deeds to the sons were fraudulent, it was decreed that they be set aside, and that William and Charles E. Henderson should surrender the personal property conveyed to them by said deeds to commissioners named, who were directed to sell the property, real and personal, in the bill mentioned, upon a credit of one, two and three years, except enough to pay the costs of the suit and the expenses of sale. And a commissioner was directed to take, among others, an account of all outstanding debts of William Henderson, Sr., secured by the deed to Eubank, with the priorities, if any, of the said debts growing out of liens upon the real estate conveyed to the sons.

On the 1st of October 1868 the commissioner returned his report. He reported that the outstanding debts and liabilities of William Henderson, deceased, that had been exhibited to him, and proved to his satisfaction, amounted to the aggregate sum of $24,862.32, including interest to the date of the report; of which amount $24,128.05 was secured by the deed to Eubank. That there were judgments obtained before the death of William Henderson, deceased, amounting to $3,789.94; and a judgment of $24.45 after his death. One of these judgments was recovered in 1861, and the others, except the last, were recovered in August 1866. There were exceptions to this report, but it is not necessary to state them.

482 *It appears that a number of petitions were filed by creditors of Henderson, to be admitted parties in the cause, but they are, with one exception, omitted from the record; the time or order of their presentation does not appear. The commissioner states, that creditors, whose debts he states, amounting to $11,161.19, joined in the suit; but this must have been by petition, as the debts of the plaintiffs named in the bill did not amount to more than $6,000.

At the November term 1868, R. A. Claybrook and three others, whose debts were stated in the report of the commissioner, presented their petition in the cause, in which they insist there was error in the decree of the 18th of April 1868, because there was no enquiry in order to ascertain the outstanding liabilities against the estate of Henderson, and no enquiry to show the order of priority in which the debts should be paid, before the decree directing the sale; and they pray that the said decree be reheard in behalf of the petitioners; and that a majority of Henderson's creditors may be permitted to adopt, if they prefer, the deeds made by the said Henderson in his lifetime to his sons.

The cause came on to be heard on the 10th of October 1871, and the report of the sales of the real and personal estate having been confirmed by a former decree, the court rejected so much of the petition of Claybrook and others as asked that a majority of the creditors might be allowed to adopt the deeds which had been set aside in the cause, and decreed that the sales of the real estate of Wm. Henderson, deceased, which was conveyed to his sons, to the amount of $3,789.94, with interest from the 1st of October 1868, paid, or so much thereof as might be then in the hands of Robert A. Mayo

483 the receiver, be applied as *follows, viz: To the payment in full of the judgment recovered in 1861, and the balance remaining in the hands of the receiver ratably between the judgments recovered in August 1866. And the commissioner was directed to take a further account of the outstanding debts of the estate of Wm. Henderson, and also an account of the entire amount of assets to be distributed in the cause, and apportion the same among all the debts secured by the deed of trust.

The commissioner reported additional debts to the amount of $1,184.98 in which Henderson was surety. And he says there are difficulties in the way of a distribution of the funds arising from the conflicting claims of the creditors. 1st. The plaintiffs in the suit who are not judgment creditors, claiming that they are entitled to the funds both real and personal, arising from setting aside the deeds to Wm. and Charles E. Henderson as fraudulent, after satisfying the judgments. 2nd. The creditors secured by the deed of trust to Eubank claiming that they are entitled to all the estate of Henderson after satisfying the judgments. 3d. The creditors not provided for in the deed of trust to Eubank claiming that they are entitled to a pro rata distribution of the funds arising from setting aside the deeds to Wm. and Charles E. Henderson after satisfying the judgments.

The cause came on again to be heard on the 11th of April 1872, when the court decreed that the plaintiffs in the suit who made themselves parties thereto either by joining in the original bill or by petition filed prior to the decree of April 18th, 1868, setting aside as fraudulent the deeds made to William and Charles E. Henderson, were entitled to the whole proceeds arising from the sales of the property conveyed by said deeds, including any rents and profits

484 with which *William and Charles E. Henderson might be properly chargeable after the rendition of that decree. Those having judgment liens on the real estate in the lifetime of William Henderson to be paid according to their priorities out of the proceeds of the real estate; and all others who were parties to said suit prior to the rendition of said decree to be paid pro rata out of the balance of said fund; it being apparent to the court, from the record in the cause, that there was not a sufficiency to pay the whole amount of said claims in full. And the court further decreed that all the creditors included in the deed of trust to Eubank were entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale of the trust property, according to the provisions of said deed: the creditors entitled to the fund arising from the sales of the property included in the deeds set aside as fraudulent, who were also beneficiaries under the deed of trust, were entitled to their proportion of the trust fund or any balance which might be due them after exhausting the fund arising as aforesaid from the sale of the property included in the deeds declared to be fraudulent.

And the purchasers of the land having failed to pay the purchase money, they were directed to show cause at the next term of the court why the land should not be again sold. From this decree Wallace's administrator, Claybrook and others, whose debts had been reported by the commissioner, but who had not made themselves parties in the cause until after the decree of April 18th, 1868, applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Robert & R. M. Mayo, for the appellants.

W. W. Walker, for the appellees.

485 *Christian J. delivered the opinion of the court.

It is conceded that the deeds executed by William Henderson to his sons are fraudulent and void. At all events there is no controversy here in respect to so much of the decree of the circuit court as declares them vacated. The real matter of contention is in reference to the distribution of the fund arising from the sale of the real estate conveyed by said deeds. The circuit court was of opinion, that the creditors who had obtained judgments in the lifetime of Henderson, the debtor, were entitled to be first paid, according to their respective priorities; and that the other creditors who were parties to the suit before the decree of sale were entitled to be paid pro rata out of the balance of the fund. The appellants are creditors, but, with one exception, they are not judgment creditors; nor were they parties to the suit before the rendition of the decree. These debts were, however, proved before the commissioner subsequently to the date of the decree, and at the following term of the court they became parties more formally by petition.

They do not controvert the preference accorded the creditors by judgment; but they claim that any surplus remaining after the satisfaction of their claims shall be applied pro rata to the payment of all the creditors, without regard to the time of their becoming parties to the suit. This is the main ground of controversy raised in the appeal here.

Our statute provides that a creditor, before obtaining a judgment or decree for his claim, may institute any suit to avoid a gift, conveyance, transfer, or any charge upon the estate of his debtor which he might institute after obtaining such judgment or decree, and he may in such suit have all 486 the relief in respect to *such estate which he would be entitled to after obtaining a judgment or decree for the claim which he may be entitled to recover. Code 1860, ch. 179, sec. 2.

Previous to this enactment it was the settled rule of the courts, that a creditor at large could not resort to a court of equity, to impeach any conveyance made by his debtor, on the ground of fraud. If real estate was the subject of the conveyance, a judgment was regarded as sufficient. If goods and chattels or any equitable interest therein, although incapable of being levied on, were embraced in the conveyance, the creditor was required to take out execution and have it levied or returned, so as to show that his remedy at law had failed. Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. 384; Kelso v. Blackburn, 3 Leigh 300; Rhodes v. Cousins, 6 Rand. 189; Tate v. Liggit & Mathews, 2 Leigh 84.

Such was the state of the law before the Code of 1849. The enactment before referred to was for the first time incorporated in that code. It was adopted in consequence of the decisions above referred to, and was intended to afford a remedy in the cases designated in these decisions. For the first time the statute is before this court for its true construction. I think there can be no doubt that it was the intention of the legislature to declare that a party creditor who filed his bill to avoid a fraudulent conveyance, acquired a lien upon the property of the debtor conveyed in such void conveyance, if he obtained a decree setting it aside, and in that event the lien attaches from the day the bill is filed.

The very terms of the act, as well as the necessity of its passage, growing out of the decisions above referred to, conclusively shows this to be the true construction.

It provides, that "a creditor, before 487 obtaining a *judgment or decree for his claim, may institute any suit to avoid a gift, conveyance, assignment or transfer of or charge upon the estate of his debtor, which he might institute after obtaining such judgment or decree; and he may in such suit have all the relief in respect to said estate, which he would be entitled to after obtaining a judgment or decree for the claim which he may be entitled to recover."

It is plain that by the very terms of this statute the creditor, assailing successfully a fraudulent conveyance, is placed in the same position, and is entitled to the same relief, as if he had already obtained a judgment or decree against his debtor. What is that position, and what is that relief? Plainly a lien upon the property of the debtor, just as if he had, at the filing of his bill, already obtained a judgment or decree. The statute places the creditor, who assails a fraudulent conveyance, if he succeeds in vacating it, in the position of one already having obtained a judgment or decree, and his lien subsists from the time of filing his bill.

It is clear that creditors filing a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance acquire a specific lien, and are entitled to priority over other creditors at large.

I am therefore of opinion that the true rule of distribution of the fund in the hands of the circuit court of Lancaster, was to pay first the judgment creditors of Henderson their judgments obtained in his lifetime, according to their priorities; and second the creditors, who, in his lifetime, filed their bill to set aside the deeds to his sons, and those who came into said suit by petition before his death, regarding their liens as subsisting from the date of the filing of said bill or petitions respectively, and the balance, if any, to be distributed pro rata among his other creditors.

488 *I am further of opinion that the said circuit court did not err in refusing to order a re-sale of the land sold by its commissioners upon the ground assigned in the petition of appeal, that it was sold before any account was taken of the debts and liabilities of William Henderson. The theory upon which courts of equity require generally that land shall not be sold until such accounts are taken is, that the creditors are interested in bidding for the land and making it bring its full value, and may not be sacrificed; but in this case it abundantly appears that the land brought its full value, indeed a much larger price than it was sold for by Henderson, and for which two of the petitioners for appeal in this case were willing it should be sold. After the lapse of ten years, and when the rights of purchasers have intervened, and when the appellants acquiesced in said sale for four years, it would be to the last degree inequitable to set aside said sale, when a resale would inevitably result in a sacrifice of the property, consequent upon the general depreciation of real estate, especially in that portion of the state where this land is situate.

I am therefore of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court in refusing to set aside the sale made by its commissioner.

But the said circuit court erred in declaring that the creditors who were parties to the suit assailing the deed of Henderson prior to the rendition of the decree of 18th April 1868, should be paid pro rata, out of the balance of the fund, after satisfying the judgment creditors. Instead of directing a payment pro rata, the circuit court should have held that the creditors who filed the bill had acquired a lien from the date of its being filed, and those who came into said suit by petition, had acquired a 489 lien from the date of the filing *of the same, and treating them as judgment creditors, they should have been paid according to their priorities; and the balance, if any, distributed pro rata among the creditors at large.

For this error the decree of the circuit court must be reversed; and the cause remanded to said circuit court for further proceedings to be had therein according to the principles herein declared.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the circuit court erred in holding that the creditors who were parties to the suit impeaching the fraudulent deeds of Wm. Henderson, Sr., before the decree of sale, were entitled to be paid pro rata out of the balance of the fund remaining in the hands of the court after paying the judgment creditors: This court being of opinion that the true rule of distribution of the funds in the hands of the court, was to pay, first, the judgment creditors of said Henderson, Sr., the amounts of their judgments obtained in his lifetime, according to their respective priorities. And secondly, the creditors who in his lifetime filed their bill to set aside the said fraudulent deeds, and those who came into said suit by petition before his death, regarding the liens of such creditors as subsisting from the date of filing said bill or petitions respectively; and the balance, if any, to be distributed pro rata among the other general creditors. Therefore it is decreed and ordered that so much of the decrees of the said circuit court as are inconsistent with the foregoing decree, be reversed and annulled, and that in all other respects they be affirmed; and that the appellant Slacum, out of the estate
490 of his intestate, *in his hands to be administered, and the other appellants out of their own estate pay to the appellees their costs by them about their defence in his behalf expended; and that the cause be remanded to the said circuit court, for further proceedings to be had therein to a final decree in accordance with the principles herein declared. Which is ordered to be certified to the said circuit court of Lancaster county.

Staples J. did not concur in so much of the opinion as treats the filing of the bill as giving a lien.

Decree reversed in favor of appellees.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

Wife's Equity.*—G died in 1863 in the county of C. By his will, after a number of specific devises and legacies, he directs the residue of his estate, which includes lands, to be divided into four parts, which he gives to one of his sons and three daughters, one of whom is L the wife of W; and directs his executors to sell the property. W, who then lived in C, removed, and lived in Tennessee in 1869 with his wife and seven children; and he was insolvent. In 1869 W came to C, and he and some of the other children entered into a bond with the executors to submit the matters of difference between them to arbitration, the award to be made a rule of court. W signed this bond for himself and his wife L, without authority from her. The arbitrators awarded to each of the residuary legatees $8,000, to be paid by the executors, the part of L to be paid to W; and that W and the other legatees should give bonds of indemnity. This award was entered as an order of the Circuit court of C, directing the executors to pay the $8,000 to W. Before the money was paid, creditors of W, whose debts were contracted before the death of G, instituted proceedings to subject this sum of $8,000, awarded to W, to pay their claims; and L then filed her bill against them, the executors and W, to have it settled on her. HELD: She is entitled to have the whole, or a part, as may be deemed reasonable on enquiry, settled to her separate use.

John Gouldin, of the county of Caroline, died in February 1863. He left a will, which was admitted to probate in the county court of Caroline; and his sons, Thomas W. and James F. Gouldin, qualified as his executors. The provisions of the will are sufficiently set out in the opinion of Anderson, J. After a number of specific devises and bequests to his children, he says: "I 492 desire that all the balance of my *estate, not already disposed of, be equally divided into four parts. After the sale of the land, as hereafter directed, one part to go to the heirs of my son Silas B. Gouldin, one part to my daughter Martha J. Broadus, one to Lavinia C. White, and one part to Bettie J. Conway." By a subsequent clause he directs and empowers his executors to sell the estate embraced in this residuary clause of his will, as soon after the payment of his debts as they may think best for the benefit of the legatees interested.

Testator's daughter Lavinia was married to William S. White. He lived in Caroline county until 1863, when he removed with his family to the state of Georgia, where they remained until some time in the year 1871, and then removed to the state of Tennessee, where they still live. The family consists of Mr. and Mrs. White and seven children. He is at present insolvent.

In 1869 William S. White appears to have come to Virginia; and in August 1869 the following submission and award and proceedings thereon were entered and made, viz:

Whereas differences of opinion and opposing claims have arisen between Thomas W. Gouldin and James F. Gouldin in their capacity as executors of the last will and testament of John Gouldin deceased, and as beneficiaries under the same, and as heirs and distributees of said decedent, on the one side, and William S. White and Lavinia C. his wife, Lysander B. Conway and Bettie J. his wife, and certain children of Silas B. Gouldin, viz.: John G., Wilton S., and William M. Gouldin, respecting their respective interests as devisees, legatees, heirs and distributees of said John Gouldin deceased; which differences and disputes 493 relate to the proper legal construction of the will of said testator, to the proper rights, interests and claims of all said parties thereunder, and to the actings and doings of the said executors in their administration of the estate of said testator.

Now, for the final ending of all such questions and disputes, and the decision of the same, it is consented, concluded and agreed, by and between all the said parties, that all the said questions and disputes, and all matters of controversy, and of conflicting rights and interests between said parties in the premises shall be, and they are hereby, referred and submitted to the final award and determination of John L. Marye, Jr., of Fredericksburg, and Judge Richard H. Coleman of Fredericksburg arbitrators, indifferently chosen by the said parties, to hear, decide, and finally determine the same; and in case of disagreement arising between said arbitrators, touching any such matter so submitted to them, they shall select and call in a third arbitrator to act as umpire between them, and decide and determine any such matter of disagreement. So that the award, decision and judgment so made by said arbitrators and said umpire (if one be called in), be rendered in writing on or before the 20th day of October 1869, and duly authenticated copies thereof be delivered to each of said parties; and it is hereby mutually agreed by and between the said parties that this submission shall be made a rule of the circuit court of Caroline county. And it is further understood and agreed by, and between said parties, that in making this arbitration the said arbitrators are not to be held rigidly bound by the rules and principles governing courts of law and equity, as settled by the courts of this country, whenever in their judgment the rigid application of such rules 494 would work gross injustice to any of said parties; but shall in such case decide and determine according to their individual views and judgment of the very right and justice of the case.

And in order that the award and decision so made by said arbitrators may be effectual and satisfactory between the said parties, it is hereby agreed by the latter that the said arbitrators shall prescribe, declare and determine in what mode, and out of what property which came from the estate of said decedent, and now under control of any of said parties, all the rights and claims of all said parties, as ascertained and determined by said award, shall be satisfied.

In witness whereof, the said parties acting for themselves, and binding themselves as to the assent and submission hereunto of their respective wives, who have interest to be affected hereby, have hereunto set their hands and seals this 11th day of August 1869.

495 *In Caroline Circuit Court, Sept. 22d, 1869. Ex parte John Gouldin's heirs, devisees, legatees, distributees and executors.

It appearing to the court that Wm. S. White, and Lavinia C. his wife, Lysander B. Conway and Betty J. his wife, Wilton S. Gouldin, William M. Gouldin and John G. Gouldin, and Thomas W. Gouldin, and J. F. Gouldin, did on the 11th day of August 1869 agree to submit to the arbitration of John L. Marye and Richard H. Coleman all matters of controversy and difference between said parties, which differences and disputes relate to the proper legal construction of the will of John Gouldin deceased, to the proper rights, interest and claim of all said parties thereunder, and to the actings and doings of the said Thomas W. Gouldin and J. F. Gouldin, as executors of John Gouldin deceased, in their administration of his estate; and that said parties did also agree that said arbitrators should prescribe, declare and determine in what mode and out of what property which came from the estate of said decedent, and now under the control of any of said parties, all the rights and claims of all of said parties, as ascertained and determined, shall be satisfied.

It is ordered that a rule be made that the said parties submit to the award which shall be made in pursuance of said agreement.

And an award made under said agreement having been returned by said arbitrators, it is ordered that said award be entered up as a decree of this court, so far as said award relates to said William S. White and Lavinia C. his wife, Lysander B. Conway and Bettie J. his wife, Thomas W.

496 Gouldin, and J. F. Gouldin; *the said William S. White and Lavinia C. his wife, Lysander B. Conway and Bettie J. his wife, Thomas W. Gouldin and J. F. Gouldin, having appeared in court through their counsel, and having waived any summons to show cause against said award: and in accordance with the terms and provisions of said award,

The court doth adjudge, order and decree, that Thomas W. Gouldin and James F. Gouldin do pay Lysander B. Conway, in full of all interest, claim and demands of himself and his wife Bettie J. Conway in the estate of John Gouldin deceased, the sum of eight thousand dollars, with six per cent. interest thereon from this date until paid.

Second. That they pay a like sum, with like interest, unto William S. White in full of all the interest, claim and demand of himself and his wife Lavinia C. White in said estate; but that the said William S. White and wife shall allow as a credit to the said Thomas W. and James F. Gouldin, in the payment of the said $8,000, the amount of a certain debt owing by the said Wm. S. White and said John Gouldin, dec'd, jointly unto John Kay.

Third. That the said Thomas W. and James F. Gouldin pay the like sum of eight thousand dollars, and like interest, unto the heirs and distributees of Silas B. Gouldin, dec'd, equally to be apportioned between them, in full of their interest in said estate of John Gouldin, dec'd; subject, however, to a credit to be allowed to said T. W. and J. F. Gouldin, in paying said sum, of the amount of a certain debt due by the estate of said John Gouldin to the estate of Wiley R. Mason, dec'd.

Fourth. That in satisfaction of the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars of the 497 moneys to be paid to Wm. *S. White and L. B. Conway, the said Thos. W. and James F. Gouldin, as executors, do transfer unto said White and Conway the twenty-five shares of the capital stock of the Fredericksburg Aqueduct Company belonging to their testator, the said White and Conway, each giving his receipt for twelve hundred and fifty dollars on account thereof to said T. W. and J. F. Gouldin.

Fifth. That the said Wm. S. White, L. B. Conway, and the adult heirs and distributees of Silas B. Gouldin, shall, before they receive any of the moneys awarded them hereby, execute and deliver unto the said T. W. and J. F. Gouldin bonds with security satisfactory to the latter, conditioned as follows, viz.: The said L. B. Conway shall execute a bond conditioned for the payment and satisfaction of one-fifth part of any amount of debt which may hereafter be discovered as due by the estate of said John Gouldin, and which may be enforced against the same, and the existence of which is not now known to said executors, provided that such after discovered indebtedness shall swell the indebtedness of said estate beyond the sum of thirty-three thousand and five hundred dollars when computed as of the present date (this award being based upon the estimate that the entire indebtedness of said estate of J. Gouldin, computed as of this date, amounts to the sum of thirty-three thousand and five hundred dollars), and that the said William S. White shall execute a bond with like security and like conditions, and that the adult heirs and distributees of Silas B. Gouldin shall execute a bond with like security and like conditions.

Sixth. That the said Thomas W. and James F. Gouldin shall execute their joint bonds to the said parties for the money so awarded herein to be paid by them 498 *to said parties, which bonds shall stipulate for the payment of said moneys, with interest thereon as aforesaid, in three equal annual instalments, at one, two and three years respectively from this date. But written obligations shall be executed by the said T. W. and J. F. Gouldin, binding them that in case a sale of either of the acts of land which they derive from the estate of John Gouldin, called "Hays Mount" and "Lynden," shall be made on terms, and at a time, so that the proceeds of such sale shall be realized earlier than the maturity of said three annual instalments stipulated in said bonds, then that two-thirds of such instalments of purchase money realized from such sale of said farms shall be applied to the payment of the instalments called for in said bonds in anticipation of the maturing of said instalments.

Seventh. Proper and sufficient deeds of trust shall be executed by the said Thomas W. Gouldin and James F. Gouldin, and their respective wives, conveying unto Richard H. Coleman and John L. Marye, as trustees, the said real property called "Hays Mount" and "Lynden" (embracing all the area of land as pertaining to each farm as was designated for each in the will of said John Gouldin) in trust, to secure by such provisions in said deeds as said trustees may deem discreet and efficacious and reasonable the payment of said bonds.

Eighth. The said L. B. Conway, William S. White, and the adult heirs and distributees of Silas B. Gouldin, and their wives respectively, shall execute good and sufficient deeds of release, releasing unto the said Thomas W. Gouldin and James F. Gouldin all the interests and claims of said parties respectively, of, in, and to the estate of said John Gouldin, and releasing and discharging the latter as executors of 499 said John *Gouldin, from all liability or obligation to them over and beyond the obligation for the payment of moneys as imposed and directed by this award.

And it is ordered that said Wilton S. Gouldin, William M. Gouldin and John G. Gouldin be summoned to the next term of this court to show cause, if any they can, against this award.

In October 1869 and in September 1870 and 1871 certain creditors of William S. White in Virginia, whose debts were contracted prior to the death of John Gouldin, instituted proceedings in the county and circuit courts of Caroline, against said White and the executors of said Gouldin, to have satisfaction of their debts out of the money directed by the award to be paid by the executors to William S. White; and in these proceedings there were orders by the court that the debts should be paid by T. W. and James F. Gouldin, the executors, when the money they owed became due.

In November 1871 Mrs. Lavinia C. White, by her next friend L. B. Conway, filed her bill in the circuit court of Caroline county, setting out the foregoing facts. She says, her husband has little or no means, and it is with great difficulty that he can support her and her children, and that not comfortably. That the said $8,000 and the interest thereon, directed to be paid by Thomas W. and James F. Gouldin to said White, arises from the land of her father, which was directed to be sold by his will and which is still in the possession of said Thomas W. and James F. Gouldin, his executors; and the fund has not been paid either to William S. White or the creditors who have sought to subject it, naming them; that said White has not reduced the said fund into his possession by 500 *unconditional decrees, judgments, assignments, or otherwise; nor has she, the plaintiff, personally united in or been bound by any such proceedings. And making Thomas W. and James F. Gouldin, as executors and in their own right, and the said creditors, naming them, parties defendants, she prays that the said Gouldins may be enjoined from paying any part of said fund to the said creditors; that it may be settled upon her for the support of herself and her children; and for general relief.

The creditors answered, insisting that Mrs. White was bound by the submission and award and the order of the court upon the award; and that the fund had been by these proceedings reduced into possession by the husband.

Several witnesses were examined, who proved the insolvent condition of White, and the number of the children.

The cause was removed to the circuit court of Spottsylvania, and came on to be heard on the 25th of November 1872; when the court held that there had been a reduction into possession by William S. White of the estate sought to be settled on the plaintiff, by the award which was entered as a decree in the case, ex parte Gouldin, in Caroline circuit court on the 23d of September 1869. The injunction was therefore dissolved, and it was decreed, by the consent of William S. White, that after the payment of the debts to the creditors named, and any other debts of William S. White which might be made out of said funds, the balance of the fund should be paid to L. B. Conway, as trustee, for the sole and exclusive use and benefit of the said Lavinia C. White. From this decree Mrs. White, by her next friend, obtained an appeal to this court.

501 *E. C. Moncure and A. B. Chandler, for the appellant.

E. P. Chandler, Braxton and Wallace, for the appellees.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

John Gouldin, by his last will, bearing date 1st day of February 1863, and probated March 9th following, after the payment of his debts, desired that all his lands, except the land he bought of the Buckners, called the Summer-house tract, and the land he bought of Catharine Merryman's estate, be divided into three lots, which are described, and gives to his son James F. Gouldin the first choice of the three lots, and to his son Thomas W. Gouldin the second choice.

He bequeaths to his granddaughter Josephine A. Broadus, for life, with remainder to her issue, if any, and in default of issue to his children and their legal representatives, the sum of three thousand dollars in bank stock and two servants.

To his son Thomas W. Gouldin a specific legacy, including a number of servants.

To his son James F. Gouldin a similar specific legacy.

To the estate of his son Silas B. Gouldin, the interest of Silas B. Gouldin, Jr., which he bought of C. C. Jett, trustee.

To his daughters, Martha J. Broadus, Lavinia C. White and Bettie J. Conway, he makes severally specific legacies of slaves.

To his daughter Lavinia C. White he gives the money he lent her husband Wm. S. White, and his watch; to his daughter Bettie Conway one thousand dollars, to be added to what she has already received;

502 *and to his daughter Martha J. Broadus he lends the farm on which she resides, for her use and benefit during her life, and at her death to return to his heirs or their legal representatives.

All the balance of his estate, not already disposed of, he directs shall be equally divided into four parts. After the sale of the land, one part to go to the heirs of his son Silas B. Gouldin, one part to his daughter Martha J. Broadus, one to Lavinia C. White, and one part to Bettie J. Conway.

That portion of his estate included in the foregoing residuary clause, allotted to the heirs of his son Silas, he leaves in the hands of his executors, to be sold or not as they may think best for the children, and equally divided among them. And that portion allotted to his daughter Martha J. Broadus, as well as the farm on which she resides, he leaves also in the hands of his executors, in trust, for her use and benefit during her life, and at her death to return to his children, &c. He directs his executors to sell the portion of his estate which is included in the residuary clause, as soon after the payment of his debts as they may think best for the benefit of the legatees interested. And he appoints his sons Thomas W. Gouldin and James F. Gouldin his executors, and requires of them no security.

William S. White removed, with his wife Lavinia and their seven children, to the state of Georgia, in 1863, where they remained until 1871, when they removed to the state of Tennessee, where they now reside. This is a suit by Mrs. Lavinia C. White, by bill in chancery, for a settlement on her and her children of the foregoing legacy. The bill alleges that her husband, William S. White, has little or no means, and can with great difficulty support her 503 and her children, *and that not comfortably. The evidence shows very clearly that he is insolvent. The issue is between her and creditors of her husband, who seek to subject her legacy to the payment of his debts. When these debts were contracted the property involved in this controversy was neither hers nor her husband's. It was the property of John Gouldin, who subsequently bequeathed it to his daughter.

The wife had rights in this legacy independently of, and adversely to her husband. The theory of this branch of equity jurisprudence, is very clearly stated by Mr. Story (2 Stor. Eq. § 1405). "By marriage (he says) the husband clearly acquires an absolute property in all the personal estate of his wife capable of immediate and tangible possession. But if it is such as cannot be reduced into possession except by an action at law, or by a suit in equity, he has only a qualified interest therein, such as will enable him to make it an absolute interest by reducing it into possession. If it is a chose in action, properly so-called, that is, a right which may be asserted by an action at law, he will be entitled to it if he has actually reduced it into possession in his lifetime. (Mr. Story says a judgment is not sufficient; upon which we give no opinion.) But if it is a right which must be asserted in a court of equity, as where it is vested in trustees who have the legal property, he has still less interest. He cannot reach it without application to a court of equity, in which he cannot sue without joining her with him; although perhaps a court of law might permit him to do so, or at least to use her name without her consent. If the aid of a court of equity is asked by him in such case it will make him provide for her, unless she consents to give such equitable property to him." Baldwin, J., in Yerby & wife v. Lynch & al. 3 504 Gratt. 439, 476, said, "It *will be found that whenever the husband has not the unlimited disposition by assignment of choses in action of the wife, they are such as are not assignable at common law, as debts due her on bonds or otherwise, money in funds, legacies, trust funds, and other property recoverable by action or suit." The property in this case is a legacy, which is only recoverable by suit in equity; and in a suit for such purpose by the husband he must join the wife as plaintiff. And if the husband had brought suit in this case to procure said legacy, or any portion of his wife's fortune, a settlement would have been decreed to the wife upon her request. In such case it is of no consequence, whether the fortune accrues before or during a marriage, the equity of the wife will attach to it. (Stor. Eq. § 1408.) And the legacy having been made to her during the marriage, and after the debts sought to be enforced against it were contracted, she has a higher equity against the claims of her husband's creditors, because the debts could not have been contracted on the faith of the property now claimed by her. All who claim under the husband must take his interest subject to the same equity.

The wife was then, in this case, invested with a property by the will of her father, of which she could not be divested by her husband or his creditors by any legal proceeding except by suit in equity, to which she was a party. The wife may not only assert her right to a settlement in a suit brought by the husband or his assignee to extinguish her right, by way of defence; but she may bring a separate and independent suit in her own name by her trustee, against the husband and his assignee, to prevent her property being subjected to the marital rights of her husband, and to have it, or a part of it, settled upon her 505 and her children. It was *at one time supposed that the wife could only assert her equity in a suit by the husband or his assignee to acquire her property absolutely, only upon the principle that he who asks equity must do equity. But it seems to be settled now, that the wife's equity constitutes a valuable consideration to support a post-nuptial settlement by her husband; and it is now firmly established that she may recover her property in a suit brought by her or her trustee for the purpose of asserting her claim to a settlement, and that a court of equity will decree to her the whole of it if only a reasonable settlement. Poindexter & wife v. Jeffries & als., 15 Gratt. 363; Stor. Eq., § 1377 a; Davis' widow v. Davis' creditors, 25 Gratt. 587.

But it is contended by the appellees, that the right of the husband to the wife's legacy in this case has become absolute, and the wife's equity extinguished by the submission and award of arbitrators, and the entering up said award ex parte as the decree of the court.

It does not appear that the appellant was a party to that submission. The deed of submission is signed and sealed by William S. White, and under his signature is written, "For self and Lavinia C. White." There is nothing to show that her signature is there either by her act or by her authority, or with her assent. Indeed it does not purport to have been signed by her. It only purports to have been signed and sealed by William S. White for himself and Lavinia C. White. She puts in issue the fact of execution by her bill, by the averment that she has not personally united in or been bound by any of those proceedings; and there is nothing in the record to show that she participated in them in any manner. At the time of these proceedings, from their inception to their ending, she was not present, but resided in a distant state.

506 *and in all probability had no knowledge of what was going on. Her husband disclaims any authority from her to assent to the submission, or to confirm or sanction the award, and there is no proof of her knowledge or assent.

Is it competent for the husband, in the absence of his wife, and without her consent or knowledge, to enter into an agreement with the executors of her father and the legatees, to submit to arbitration her legacy, which he could only recover by suit, by suing jointly with her in equity, and in which suit he could not recover without making a settlement on her, and to agree that the award should be made the decree of court under a rule, thereby depriving the wife of her right to a settlement? It would be a fraud upon the rights of the wife. If she were notified of the proceeding, she might invoke the interposition of a court of equity to restrain the arbitrators from proceeding to award the payment of her legacy to her husband, or her husband from receiving it, without making a reasonable settlement on her and her children. It does not appear that she was ever served with notice of the award or of the rule of court. The whole proceeding was ex parte as to her, and should not be allowed to deprive her of her right to a settlement. The award itself is but a chose in action, and doubtless was not intended by the arbitrators to settle and adjust any questions involving the marital rights of the husband or wife; nor was the litigation of any such matters contemplated or designed by the parties in their deed of submission; nor was there in fact any such question canvassed or passed upon by the arbitrators in making up their award. The only purpose was to ascertain the extent of the executors' liabilities, and the amount due to each legatee; and 507 the direction that *the executors should pay to William S. White the legacy due to his wife was given evidently without reference to any question as to the right of the wife to a settlement, and without intending to pass upon such right. The award has not been executed; the ex parte decree has not been performed; the subject matter remains in statu quo. What is there to preclude the wife from now filing her bill, and asking that the ex parte decree may be reformed, and that the amount awarded her should not be paid to her husband or his creditors, but that it be settled on her and her children; as she has done in this case?

But does the award and the ex parte decree of the court, if valid, vest the plaintiff's legacy absolutely in her husband, and debar her right to proceed in equity for a settlement?

"No act or intention of the husband which stops short of an actual reduction into possession, or of an entire extinguishment of the original right of action in the wife, in some of the modes indicated, can operate so as to destroy her right." Allen, J., in Yerby & wife v. Lynch & al., 3 Gratt. 439, 495. In this case there has been no actual reduction of the wife's legacy by the husband into possession. The residuum consisted of lands, which the executors were required to sell as soon after payment of testator's debts as they may think best for the legatees interested. The bill alleges that said lands are still held by the executors unsold, and the legacies which are to be raised by the sale thereof have not been paid; that the legacy to the plaintiff has not been paid to her husband or to his creditors, and that she is not precluded by reason of said award and ex parte decree, to which she was not a party, from obtaining a decree against the executors in this suit.

She is willing to accept the amount 508 *in satisfaction of her legacy as ascertained by the said arbitrators; but asks that the same may be settled upon her for the support of herself and children, free from the control or appropriation of her husband, or any of his creditors. Admitting said award and ex parte decree to be binding as between her husband and the other parties to the same, it cannot be binding as between her and any of the parties thereto, she not having been a party to either. And the decree that the executors should execute their bonds to William S. White for the amount of his wife's legacy so ascertained, and execute a deed of trust upon certain lands as security for the same, upon receiving refunding bonds with security satisfactory to them, from the said William S. White, and deeds of release from the said William S. White and Lavinia C., his wife, of all the interests and claims of said parties in and to the estate of John Gouldin, deceased; and moreover, releasing said Thomas W. and James F. Gouldin of all liability and obligation to them, over and beyond their obligation for the payment of moneys, as imposed and directed by said award, having never been performed; and the payment to W. S. White by the executors being conditioned upon the performance of said several acts by the said Wm. S. White, which he has not chosen to perform, and upon the execution of a joint deed of release by the said Wm. S. White and Lavinia C. White, which it was at least optional with her to perform or not, it seems to the court that said conditional award and decree not having been performed by the husband, and not obligatory upon the executors until performed by William S. White and Lavinia C., his wife, and being incapable of a coerced performance by the wife, they cannot be regarded as even constructively a reduction by the husband of the wife's 509 legacy into his *possession. Nor can said award and decree, under the circumstances and in connection with the facts, be regarded as a surrender or waiver by the wife, or extinguishment of her equity.

Courts of equity will interpose to secure to the wife her equity to a settlement—first, when the husband seeks aid or relief in a court of equity in regard to her property; secondly, when he makes an assignment of her equitable interest; and, thirdly, where she seeks, as plaintiff, relief in equity against her husband, or his assignees, in regard to her equitable interests. It is true, she may waive a settlement, and agree that the equitable fund shall be wholly and absolutely paid over to her husband. But it must very satisfactorily appear that such was her wish. In a pending proceeding her consent must be given before a settlement under the decree is completed, and her consent must be given in open court or under a commission. Such is the respect which the courts of equity have for the wife's equity. And in some cases a court of equity will not allow the wife to dispense with a settlement out of her property, as where she had been a ward of the court of chancery and married without its authority. 2 Story Eq. §§ 1404 and 1418.

As to the amount which should be settled upon the wife—whether a part or the whole of her legacy, and, if only a part, what proportion—depends upon what would be a reasonable settlement. The court is not prepared to say that the whole of the wife's legacy in this case ought not to be settled on her and her children. If it is not more than would afford them a reasonable support, being property given to her by her father, and upon the faith of which the debts in question could not have been contracted, and evidently not intended to go to her 510 husband, for even the debt due *the testator by the husband he gives to her, it would not be an unreasonable settlement. But there ought to be an account, to ascertain what would be a reasonable allowance. The court is therefore of opinion, to reverse the decree with costs, and to remand the cause, to be proceeded with in conformity with the principles herein declared.

Decree reversed.

511 *Walker v. Beauchler.

March Term, 1876. Richmond.

Sale of Land under Deed of Trust.—B, a German by birth, was the owner of a tract of twenty-four acres of land on which he lived, in the county of Alexandria, near Georgetown. In June 1850, to secure a debt of $300, which he owed to P of Georgetown, payable in two years, he conveyed the land to

J, the son-in-law of P, in trust to secure the payment of the debt, and if the debt was not paid, he was, on the request of P, to advertise the land in a paper published in A, and sell at public auction. In 1861 the union forces having taken possession of that part of the county, B removed with his family to Fairfax court-house, and remained there until the close of the war. In October 1864, J having advertised the sale of the land in a paper in A, sold it at public auction in Georgetown, when Mrs. B, the wife of B, and niece of P, bought it at a reduced price. W was present at this sale. Mrs. B and her husband afterwards sold it to W and S at the same price, and afterwards W bought out S, and made permanent improvements upon it. In 1870 B filed his bill against W, &c., to set aside the sale and conveyances. Held:

1. Same—Debtor and Creditor—Alien Enemies.*—B being within the confederate lines, and P being in the union lines during the war, B could not legally pay, or P receive his debt, and therefore the deed of trust could not be enforced, and the sale was invalid.
2. Same—Purchaser Not Bona Fide—Rights.—W having been present at the sale, and knowing the circumstances, can stand in no better condition than the purchaser at the sale, and his title therefore is invalid.
3. Same—Rights of Original Owner—Of Purchaser.—B is entitled to have his land, he paying to W the amount of the debt which he owed to P.
4. War Interest.—B's debt is not to bear interest during the war.
5. Laches of Owner—Improvements by Purchaser.†—B having delayed for four years after the war had closed to assert his right to the property, and permitted W to put valuable *and permanent improvements upon it, believing that he had an undisputed title to it, W is to be charged for the rents and profits of the land, exclusive of his improvements, whilst he held it, and to be allowed a reasonable compensation for the permanent improvements he has made upon it, though this shall be in excess of the rents and profits.

In June 1854, John Beauchler, a German by birth, purchased of Luke Osborn a small tract of twenty-four acres of land, lying in the county of Alexandria, within some three or four miles of Georgetown, at the *Debtor and Creditor, Alien Enemies.—Where a debtor and creditor occupy the status of alien enemies towards each other, it is unlawful for the one to make, or the other to receive, payment of the debt. It follows therefore, that the right of the creditor to enforce the obligation is suspended, and any proceeding to do so is nugatory and void. See Haymond v. Camden, 22 W. Va. 191, 197, where the principal case is approved. Tracey v. Shumate, 22 W. Va. 512, also citing the principal case. See also, Billgerry v. Branch, 19 Gratt. 393. In Morriss v. Va., etc., Co., 90 Va. 381, 18 S. E. Rep. 843, the principal case is discussed, and in Shurtz v. Johnson, 28 Gratt. 667, it is also cited but distinguished. The principal case is again cited in Coltrane v. Worrell, 80 Gratt. 447.

†Laches of Owner—Improvement by Purchaser.—See note to Wood v. Krebs, 33 Gratt. 685. Further, see Hall v. Hall, 80 W. Va. 786, 5 S. E. Rep. 263; Dawson v. Grow, 29 W. Va. 337, 1 S. E. Rep. 567; Hall v. Lowther, 22 W. Va. 579.

price of $850. Though the building upon the land was very small, Beauchler seems to have lived in it until 1861, when the late war having broken out, and the union forces having taken possession of that part of the county, he removed with his family to Fairfax court-house.

Whilst Beauchler was living on the land, viz: on the 6th of June 1859, he conveyed it to Frederick W. Jones of Georgetown, in trust to secure a debt of $300, which he owed to Joseph N. Fearson of Georgetown. This debt was evidenced by a promissory note, payable in two years from its date, which was the date of the deed, with interest payable semi-annually; and the deed provided, that upon any default of payment in the interest or principal of said note, Jones, upon the written request of Fearson, should proceed to sell the land, or so much of it as might be necessary, at public auction, upon such terms as he should deem most for the interest of both parties, first giving twenty days notice of the time, place and terms of sale, in some newspaper published in the city of Alexandria.

In October 1864, on the request of Fearson, Jones, having advertised the sale in an Alexandria paper, proceeded to sell the land at public auction in the city of Georgetown, when it was purchased by Mrs. Julia Barrett, the wife of Erastus B. Barrett, for the sum of $425, and Jones conveyed the land to her. In February 1865 Mrs. Barrett and her husband conveyed the land to Robert Walker and Franklin Scott at the same price; and in January 1869 Scott, in consideration of $400, conveyed his undivided moiety to Walker.

In October 1870 Beauchler filed his bill in the county court of Alexandria county against Walker, Jones, and the unknown personal representative of Fearson, to set aside the sale by Jones, and the deeds which had been executed by Jones and the subsequent holders. He set out the facts above stated; stated that he had gone in 1861 within the confederate lines; that when the notice of sale was given, and the sale made, he was living in the state of Virginia, and was, because of the existence of war and military regulations, unable to visit the place from which he had fled, or where the pretended sale occurred, and that he had no notice of the sale. He insisted that Jones was not authorized to sell the land in Georgetown, outside of the state of Virginia, and the sale was a nullity; that Jones was the son-in-law of Fearson, and that Mrs. Barrett was his niece, and had been reared by him as one of his own family, and that Walker at the time of his purchase of the land was aware of the plaintiff's right, and of the irregularities in the sale.

Walker answered the bill. He said he was present at the sale; that it was well attended, and brought a full price; that it was fair in every particular, so far as he knew or believed. That he is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice; and he relies upon the laches of the plaintiff in delaying so long to bring his suit, with the knowledge that he was making large improvements upon the property.

A number of witnesses were examined as to the value of the land, its condition when sold, and the improvements put upon it by Walker. The commissioner, who was directed to report upon the question, put the value at the time of the sale at $600; to which both parties excepted. Some of the witnesses thought it sold for a full price, and others for more than it was worth; and some thought that Walker's improvements cost more than land and improvements would sell for.

The cause came on to be heard on the 4th of December 1871, when the court set aside the sale of the land made by Jones in October 1864, and declared his and the subsequent deeds null, so far as respected the conveyance of any title to said land as against Beauchler; and a commissioner was directed to report the amount of the debt due from Beauchler to Fearson, omitting interest during the war, and an account of rents and profits, and the improvements made upon the land since October 1864, which was to be set off against the rents. From this decree Walker obtained an appeal to the circuit court of the county of Alexandria; but the decree was affirmed by that court by its decree of the 28th of May 1872. And Beauchler waiving all demand for rents beyond the value of the improvements, the court made a decree in favor of Walker, as substituted to the rights of Fearson against Beauchler, for the sum of $300, with interest from June 6th, 1860, until June 6th, 1861; and from April 10th, 1865, till paid; and if not paid within ninety days from the date of the decree, then commissioners named were to proceed to sell the land, &c. And thereupon Walker applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

F. L. Smith, Jr., for the appellant.

Smoot, for the appellee.

515 *Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Whatever may be the diversity of opinion in respect to the validity of acts done under the authority of the confederate government, there is one proposition, certainly, as to which the courts are now generally agreed: that is, that the late war between the two sections was a civil war in the most literal and comprehensive sense of the term, and was attended by all the incidents and consequences of a war between independent nations. Having no common superior to judge between them, the two sections stood precisely in the same predicament as two nations who engage in a contest and have recourse to arms. Numerous cases in the state courts might be cited in support of these propositions; but it is unnecessary. A reference to some of the decisions made by the supreme court of the United States will be conceded by all as sufficient for that purpose. In Brown v. Hiatts, 15 Wall. U. S. R. 177, Mr. Justice Field said: It is unne-essary to go at length over the grounds upon which this court has repeatedly held that the statutes of limitation of the several states did not run against the right of action of parties during the continuance of the civil war. It is sufficient to state, that the war was accompanied by the general incidents of war between independent nations; that the inhabitants of the Confederate States, on the one hand, and of the loyal states, on the other, became thereby reciprocally enemies to each other, and were liable to be so treated, without reference to their individual dispositions or opinions; that during its continuance all commercial intercourse and correspondence between them were interdicted by principles of public law, as well as by express enactments of congress; that all contracts previously made *between them were suspended; and that the courts of each belligerent were closed to the citizens of the other. See opinion of Judge Joynes in Billgerry v. Branch & Sons, 19 Gratt. 393, 417, and cases cited.

The prohibition here alluded to by Mr. Justice Field, it has been held in numerous cases, affected debtors and creditors on either side equally with those who did not bear that relation; so that the transmission or payment of money for any purpose was utterly forbidden. It was unlawful for the debtor to pay, it was unlawful for the creditor to receive. It was unlawful for them to have any intercourse, communication, or correspondence, whatever, upon any subject or for any purpose. The operation of the contract during the war was as completely suspended as though it had never had any existence. In the language of the supreme court of New York in the famous case of Griswold v. Waddington, 16 John. R. 438, the idea that any remission of money may be lawfully made to an enemy is repugnant to the very rights of war, which require the subjects of one country to seize the effects of the subjects of the other. The law that forbids intercourse and trade must equally forbid remittances and payment.

No one familiar with the history of the struggle between the two sections, and with the decisions of the courts since its close, will hesitate to apply these rules in all their stringency, to the respective belligerents after the date of the president's proclamation of the 2nd August 1861.

Applying these principles to the case in hand, it follows, that the appellee, residing within the confederate lines of occupation, could not lawfully pay the appellant residing within the federal lines. He was positively interdicted from making such 517 payment by the *laws of his country and the laws of nations. How then could the trust deed be enforced. A sale under that deed was founded upon the supposed default of the debtor. But there can be no default, when the debtor is prohibited from paying and the creditor from receiving. In this connection I cannot do better than to give an extract from the opinion of an enlightened federal judge. In the Kan- awha Coal Company v. Ohio Coal Company, 7 Blatch. Cir. C. R. 391, 408, Judge Blatchford uses this language: The enforcement (of the debt) was indeed not by a judgment that the debtor personally pay the debt to the creditor, but was by a sale of land which the debtor had specifically put in trust to pay the debt. Nevertheless the foundation of the proceeding was that the debt existed and the debtor had not discharged it. The duties and rights of the creditor were correlative. The right which the creditor undertook to exercise by enforcing a sale of the land, was to compel the discharge of the debt in invitum by that means, so far as the proceeds of sale would go. This right could not exist in favor of the creditor unless there existed at the same time a corresponding duty and capacity on the part of the debtor to pay the debt to the creditor. The right of action that is suspended must include the right to resort to any species of proceedings, judicial or otherwise, to enforce the contract.

These positions of the learned judge are supported by a number of cases cited in his opinion, and by a force of reasoning which appears to be unanswerable.

The supreme court of the United States has, however, decided differently. In the case of "University v. Finch," 18 Wall. U. S. R. 106, that court held that a sale was valid made by a trustee during the war under a trust deed executed before;
518 the creditor being a *resident of Missouri, and the debtor a resident of Virginia. Mr. Justice Miller, in delivering the opinion of the court, maintained, that even the enforced absence of the debtor afforded no sufficient reason for arresting his agent and the agent of the creditor in performing a duty which both of them imposed upon him before the war began. His power over the subject was perfect; its exercise required no intercourse, commercial or otherwise.

The learned justice loses sight of the principle that the deed of trust is a mere security for the debt, and that the authority of the trustee to sell results only from the default of the debtor. No one will maintain that the creditor could enforce a sale of his debtor's property while the latter is prohibited by injunction or process of garnishment from making the payment. The prohibition arising from a state of war is much more stringent: for in the latter case the debtor is not only forbidden by positive law, but by the highest obligations of duty and patriotism from holding any communication with his creditor. The injustice of selling the property of the debtor to satisfy a debt which he is prohibited by law from paying, is too palpable to admit of justification. The debtor's right to redeem his estate is commensurate with that of the creditor to make the sale. If the one is suspended, justice and reason require that the other shall not be exercised.

The learned judge felt the force of these difficulties in University v. Finch. He answered them, or attempted to do so, by declarifying that the effect of the proposition was to give immunity to rebels against the government not accorded to the soldier who is fighting for that government; its tendency is to make the very debts which the citizens of one section may owe

519 *to another an inducement to revolution and insurrection; and it rewards the man who lifts his hand against his government by protection to his property which it would not otherwise possess, if he can raise his efforts to the dignity of a civil war. It is very obvious that the learned judge is disposed to make a wide distinction between the case of a "rebel debtor in the insurrectionary states" and "a loyal debtor in the loyal states." If the position of the parties in University v. Finch had been reversed, and the estate of a loyal debtor had been sold, the argument of the learned judge must of necessity have been very different. No authority is cited for this supposed distinction between the rights and privileges and exemptions, during the war, of those adhering to the federal government and those siding with the confederate government. The writers on the laws of nations utterly repudiate any such distinction. Those writers universally declare, that in a civil war the parties, having no common superior to judge between them, stand precisely as two independent nations who engage in a contest and have recourse to arms. Who shall judge between them; who shall pronounce on which side the right or the wrong lies? On earth they have no common superior. Vattel's Law of Nations.

But as I have already said, the supreme court of the United States itself has again and again decided that the late conflict was a war, in the legal sense, with all the incidents and consequences of an international war; and that in order to determine how the contracts, rights and obligations of citizens were affected by that war, recourse must be had to the general principles applicable to a state of war between nations. According to these principles the very same privileges, disabilities and exemptions

520 attached to the debtor residing *in the South during the war as to the debtor resident in the northern section. It was equally unlawful for the former as the latter to make any transmission of money to his enemy creditor, or to hold any communication whatever with him. And when the southern debtor seeks to avail himself of this universally acknowledged principle, he is told that his proposition gives immunity to rebels not accorded to the loyal soldier; and that its tendency is to make the very debts which the citizens of one section may owe to another an inducement to revolution and insurrection.

Whatever may be the motives of a people in going to war, even if they be so paltry as the non-payment of a few years interest upon their debts, these motives are not the subject of inquiry with the courts in adjudicating the contracts of citizens as affected by that war. The political department, the treaty-making power, may deal with the causes of the war, with a view to indemnity and security, but the courts have no concern with them. It is sufficient for them that the contest was waged—that it assumed the magnitude and proportions of a civil war, and was so treated by the legislative and executive departments. It cannot but excite astonishment that when the validity of the blockade was to be maintained, or a right to capture private property was asserted, doctrines were announced the effect of which was to invest the Confederate States with the powers and rights of belligerent sovereignties; but when the rights of loyal citizens of the North are involved in controversies with citizens of the South, the people of the Confederate States are denounced as traitors, escaping the just punishment of their crimes only through the clemency of a magnanimous government. Spotts

521 v. United States, 20 Wall. U. *S. R. 459; Mrs. Alexander's Cotton. Speaking for myself only, upon this and questions of a kindred character, I feel under no obligation to follow the decisions of any tribunal, unless they accord with my own convictions of the rights and obligations growing out of the struggle through which the country has passed.

It has been argued, however, that the principles here involved have no application whatever to the case of a debtor who voluntarily left his home during the war, for the purpose of residing within the confederate lines; thereby, by his own act, disabling himself from performing his contract. The cases of Dean v. Nelson, 10 Wall. U. S. R. 158, and Ludlow v. Ramsey, 11 Wall. U. S. R. 581, are relied on in support of this proposition. Those cases certainly establish the distinction between the case of a debtor who voluntarily left his residence in the North, for the purpose of engaging in hostilities against the federal government, and a debtor who was expelled by military force and forbidden to return. In the one case, it was held, the party is bound by judicial proceedings against him in his absence; and in the other it was held, that he was in no wise bound.

Now there may be cases in which a debtor, voluntarily abandoning his home and going into the opposing lines, cannot claim the benefit of the rule as applied to actual residents. The present is, however, not one of them, as will be hereafter seen. But, I submit, the mere fact of such voluntary abandonment is not of itself sufficient to deprive the debtor of the benefit of the rule. In the first place, it is very difficult now to determine what constituted a voluntary abandonment of home in the case of a citizen who fled from one section to the other. Thousands of persons, being in the northern states, and suspected of southern 522 sympathies, *were expelled from their homes, not by military force, but by that which was far more terrible and alarming, the fire and passion of mighty mobs, aroused to the highest exasperation by the attack upon Sumpter, and, as they conceived, by an unjustifiable rebellion. These persons were liable at any moment to popular violence. They were perpetually subject to a system of espionage, annoying and degrading in the extreme; and they were in constant apprehension and danger of arrest and confinement in dungeons, beyond the reach of the courts of law. To some extent this condition of things existed in some of the southern states with reference to persons of northern proclivities. Ninetenths of those who abandoned their homes at the commencement of the struggle did so under the most powerful motives and inducements that could animate the human heart. There were many who fled in sudden alarm when the storm broke in its fury, without any fixed intention except to escape the dangers that surrounded them, and who had no conception of the magnitude and duration of the struggle, and who were never able to return in safety.

Again, as the war progressed, the federal armies extended their conquests from state to state, acquiring firm possession as they advanced; in many instances the terrified inhabitants fleeing before them, and taking refuge still further within the confederate lines. Henceforth such territory would be enemy territory, and the creditor and debtor be regarded as enemies.

Every one can see the injustice of applying to persons thus situated, and thus acting, the rule laid down by the supreme court of the United States in the cases cited. It cannot be justly said of these men that they voluntarily removed from the one section to the other. *But if it can be so said; if the abandonment of residence and home was voluntary, does it follow a different rule is to be applied to them? The doctrine I understand to be well settled, that upon the breaking out of a civil war every man is permitted (in the language of Mr. Justice McKean) to choose his party. It was so held in Respublica v. Chapman, 1 Dall. R. 53-58; in Jackson v. White, 20 John. R. 313. In Inglis v. Trustees of the Sailors' Snug Harbour, 3 Peters. R. 99, it was decided that the right of election must necessarily exist in all revolutions like ours, and is so well established by adjudged cases, it was unnecessary to enter into any examination of the authorities. The only difficulty that could arise was to determine the time when the election should have been made.

This right of election was freely exercised during the revolutionary war, and was universally conceded. The doctrine of the English courts was, that American antenati, by remaining in this country after the treaty of peace of 1783, lost their character of British subjects. On the other hand, the American courts adopted the declaration of independence as the period for determining the status of the citizen as a subject; and it was held that a person born here, but who left the country before the declaration of independence and never returned, thereby lost the character of an American citizen. It will be perceived that neither the English nor American courts confined the right of election to a period anterior to the commencement of the war.

In the late struggle it is well known that as late as the battle of Bull Run, vast numbers changed their residences from one section to the other, as a sense of duty, inclination or necessity suggested. And none exercised this privilege more freely 524 than officers of the *government, officers of the army and navy; and their right to do so was not questioned at Washington. Indeed it was considered safer for the federal government and for individuals themselves, that they should take this course. Henceforth these persons, officers, and private citizens, became by the laws of war, enemies of the government of the United States, and of all who adhered to it. I can see no just reason why all these men thus treated as enemies, should not be entitled to the same exemptions, and stand precisely in the same predicament with those who happened to be resident here at the commencement of the struggle.

If, in determining the status, rights, and liabilities of the citizen we are to look exclusively to the beginning of the war, we encounter numerous and perplexing questions. As is well known, and as has been judicially determined, the war did not begin, nor did it close, at the same time in all the states. In the case of "The Protector," 12 Wall. U. S. R. 700, the supreme court of the United States held that the proclamation of the 27th April 1861, declaring a blockade, must be taken as ascertaining the commencement of the war in Virginia. But in a more recent case, Matthews v. McStea, 20 Wall. U. S. R. 646, the same court has decided that the blockade proclamations did not contemplate a cessation of all intercourse and business relations between citizens of the different sections. The only interference intended was such as might arise from the blockade itself; and the whole purpose as announced, was inconsistent with the idea that the people of the south were at that date to be regarded as public enemies.

The proclamation of the 27th August 1861, it would seem, is now regarded as the one establishing absolute non-intercourse, and the cessation of all business relations.

525 *Are we to look to the 27th of April 1861 as the commencement of the war, as the period after which there could be no voluntary change of domicile, in the sense of the rule laid down by the supreme court? or must we take the 27th August 1861 as the period of non-intercourse? or the ratification of the ordinance of secession by the people of Virginia? or must we take the date of the battle of Manassas as the period and the event, which more effectually terminated friendly intercourse and communication.

Instead of attempting to lay down a rule, dependent upon inquiries of this sort, it is better to adhere to those fixed principles which define the rights and liabilities of parties as affected by the existence of war, without perplexing investigations into the causes of the war, or the manner in which the relation of enemies was acquired. As the creditor is forbid to receive, and the debtor to pay by a supreme power, each is therefore relieved from all the penalties, forfeitures and damages incident to the non-enforcement and the non-performance of the contract, and that, too, without regard to the particular circumstances under which they were placed in the attitude of enemies each to the other. If we hold it is the duty of the citizen to obey the laws of the government under which he lives, and to have no communication with its enemies, obedience to that law ought not to impose upon him the loss or sacrifice of his property. This rule accords with the dictates of an enlightened public policy, and with humanity and justice. In support of these views, there is abundant authority found in the opinion of Judge Blatchford, already cited, and in an able and interesting article published in the 14th vol. of Am. Law Reg., page 129.

It will be understood, of course, that 526 these rules *have no application to a party who abandoned his section with a view to the non-performance of his contracts. Nor do I mean to affirm that it will apply to every case in which a debtor, even without such intention, changed his residence after the commencement of the war. Whatever may be the exceptions to the rule, the present case is not one of them.

The appellee is a German by birth, and is now perhaps seventy-five years of age. It is not very clear as to the precise date of his abandoning his home in Alexandria county. It was certainly not later than the 1st of June 1861, and was, of course, long before the non-intercourse acts and the proclamation based thereon. What was his precise motive in thus coming within the confederate lines does not appear. His residence was in the midst of the federal troops, and it is easy to understand his apprehension of the annoyances and dangers to which he was hourly exposed. According to his own statement, he afterwards made an attempt, on several occasions, to return to his home, but was unable to do so. It is probable he might have done so by taking an oath of allegiance; whether he could have remained there in safety is another question. However that may be, whether he could or could not have returned, it may be reasonably supposed he had no apprehension of a sale under the trust deed at the time it was made, as there was then in force a statute passed by the Alexandria legislature prohibiting sales of property under trust deeds for debt. This court has never decided that such legislation in time of actual war is unconstitutional; nor is it necessary now to pass upon that question. The existence of such a law, in connection with the other facts, was well calculated to cast a cloud over the title, and to lead to a sacrifice of the property. The sale 527 was made not in *Alexandria, nor even in the state, but in the District of Columbia. It is very true the deed does not prescribe the place of sale, and much was therefore left to the discretion of the trustee. In the exercise of that discretion, it would seem clear that the sale ought certainly to have been at least in the county where the property was situated, more particularly as at that time access to Georgetown was rendered more difficult by the presence of the military and by the requirement of permits for persons resident in the county of Alexandria. As might have been expected, at a sale made under such circumstances, the property commanded a price considerably below its real value. The purchase was made by a married woman, the niece of the creditor, and a member of his family; the trustee being also a son-in-law. All the facts and circumstances tend strongly to show that the sale was a family arrangement, made exclusively in the interest of the creditor. The appellant was no doubt cognizant of all the facts as he was present at the sale, and was then apprised of the absence and place of the appellee's then residence. He can therefore occupy no higher ground than the parties under whom he derives title.

Under all the circumstances, I think there was no error in the decree of the county court vacating the sale, and no error in the decree of the circuit court affirming the decree of the county court.

These views equally apply to the question of interest during the war. Interest is paid for the use or forbearance of money. There can of course, be no forbearance where the creditor cannot compel the payment of the principal, and where the debtor is prohibited by law from paying. During the period of such prohibition no interest can be exacted.

See Hoare v. Allen, 2 Dallas R. 102. 528 The circuit court *therefore committed no error in abating interest during the war.

The only remaining enquiry is whether the appellant is entitled to compensation for such permanent improvements as he may have made on the land, before the claim of the appellee was asserted. The circuit court was of opinion that the appellant was entitled to such compensation, but not to exceed the value of the rents and profits of the land. In this respect the decree is erroneous to the prejudice of the appellant. The appellant made his purchase in January 1865, took possession of the land at once, and has remained in possession ever since. Between the date of his purchase and the year 1870, he made permanent improvements in the full conviction that his title was good. During all this time the appellee asserted no claim to the land; nor did he in any manner notify the appellant of his purpose to contest the title of the latter. Although this silence is not sufficient to affect the appellee's right of recovery, it is sufficient under the circumstances, to give the appellant a strong equitable claim to compensation for the full value of his improvements. On this ground the decree of the circuit court must be reversed, and the cause remanded, that an account may be taken, in which the appellant is to be charged with a reasonable rent for the use and occupation of the land during the time he has had possession; and he is to be allowed reasonable compensation for such improvements of a permanent character as he may have made, which have given an increased value to the land.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons 529 stated in writing, *and filed with the record, that the circuit court did not err in holding that the sale of the appellee, Beauchler's land, made on the 11th October 1864, was not a valid execution of the trust, and that the parties claiming under such sale acquired no valid title to the said land. Nor did the said court err in holding that the appellee, Beauchler, is entitled to an abatement of the interest upon the debt secured by the said deed during the existence of the war. The court is further of opinion that the appellant is entitled to compensation for such permanent improvements as he may have made upon the land before notice of the appellee, Beauchler's claim, although it may be in excess of the rents and profits for which the appellant is liable. Therefore it is decreed and ordered, that so much of the decree of the said circuit court as is in conflict with this decree be reversed and annulled, and the residue thereof affirmed, and that the appellant and appellees pay the costs by them incurred respectively in the prosecution and defence of this appeal aforesaid here. And it is further decreed and ordered that the same be remanded to the circuit court, with instructions that an account be taken, on which the appellant is to be charged with the rental value of the land, exclusive of his permanent improvements during the time he had possession; and credited with the value of such permanent improvements as he may have made before notice of the appellee, Beauchler's claim, and a decree rendered for or against him, as the case may be, for any balance which may appear to be due. Which is ordered to be certified to the said circuit court of Alexandria county.

Decree reversed.

*Winston v. Giles.

March Term, 1876. Richmond.

1. Bills of Exception—Put in after Judgment Entered—By Leave of Court.*—In an action at law, which is submitted to the judgment of the court without a jury, the court renders a judgment, to which one party excepts, and it being near the end of the term, the court gives the counsel time, until the first day of the next term, to prepare the bill of exception: but judgment is entered. The court cannot give such leave, and the bill of exception cannot be made a part of the record.

*Bills of Exception—Put in after Judgment Entered—By Leave of Court.—It is an unbending rule, that a bill of exceptions cannot be made part of the record after the rendition of a final judgment, and the term ended. See Page v. Clopton, 30 Gratt. 415, and note; Danville Bank v. Waddill, 31 Gratt. 409, and note; Peery v. Peery, 26 Gratt. 320, and note. The principal case is further cited in Hudgins v. Simon, 94 Va. 662, 27 S. E. Rep. 606; Powell v. Tarry, 77 Va. 260; Owens v. Owens, 14 W. Va. 98; Welty v. Campbell, 37 W. Va. 801, 17 S. E. Rep. 314.

2. Same—Same—Same.—Even if the court had authority to give the time until a day certain in the next term to prepare the bill of exception, if the bill of exception is not tendered to the court on that day, it cannot afterwards be received.

3. Same—Correct Course.—In cases when it may be important to give time until the next term to prepare the bill of exception, the case should be kept open, and the judgment should not be entered until the next term.

The case is stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

Meredith & Blackwell, for the appellant.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment of the circuit court of the city of Richmond, rendered in an action of ejectment, brought in said court by Pleasant Winston against Thomas T. Giles, for the recovery of certain real estate lying in and near the said 531 city. Issue was *joined on the plea of not guilty; and the parties waiving their right to have a jury, and agreeing that the whole matter of law and fact should be heard and determined, and judgment given by the court; accordingly, on the 23rd day of December 1871, all the evidence adduced on both sides, and the argument of counsel being heard, the court was of opinion that the case was for the defendant, and gave judgment for him.

Immediately under the copy of the judgment in the transcript of the record before us, is this:

"Memorandum. The plaintiff this day excepted to an opinion of the court given against him upon the trial of this cause, and leave is given him until the first day of the next term to file his bill of exceptions."

Then follows, in the transcript, a copy of an order made by the same court on the 9th day of April 1872, in which order it is stated, that the plaintiff, on that day, tendered to the court a bill of exceptions to an opinion rendered against him on the 23rd day of December 1871; that the defendant objected to the signing of said bill, and the court refused to sign the same; to which refusal of the court the plaintiff excepted, and tendered to the court his bill of exceptions to such refusal; which latter bill was received, signed and sealed, and ordered to be made a part of the record. The latter bill is then set out in the transcript, and in it is embodied the former bill, which is a bill of exceptions to the judgment of the court in the case, and sets out all the evidence offered on the trial. After the insertion of that bill, there follows a statement in these words, in the bill which was signed:

"And the defendant, by his counsel, thereupon objected to the signing of said bill by the court, on the ground that the record was closed, and that the court 532 *had no power to reopen the same; which objection of the defendant, being maturely considered, was sustained, and the court refused to sign the said bill," &c., as above stated. "And the court certifies that the judgment to which the plaintiff excepts was rendered on Saturday, December 23rd, 1871; that the court finally adjourned for that term on December 27th, 1871, and did not sit upon December 25th 1871; that the present term of this court began on the 5th day of February, 1871, and that the bill of exceptions, now tendered for signature was handed to defendant's counsel some two weeks before this date.

"And the court further certifies, that the judgment rendered by the court in the said cause in the 23d day of December 1871 was the opinion of the court, to which, as it appears by the record, the plaintiff immediately excepted, and obtained leave until the first day of this term to file a bill of exceptions; but on that day no bill was tendered; and the court being satisfied that the evidence set forth in the said bill is an accurate and full statement of all the evidence submitted to the court on the trial, further certifies that its refusal at this time to sign the said bill is for the single reason alleged by the defendant in objecting thereto, viz: that the record is closed and cannot be reopened, altered, amended, or supplemented without consent of both parties.

"And it is further certified that the said cause has not been upon the docket of the court at this term."

There are two assignments of error in this case: First, that the circuit court erred in refusing to sign the bill of exceptions first tendered to it by the plaintiff, and considering that bill of exceptions as properly a part of the record. Second, 533 that the said court erred *in giving judgment for the defendant instead of the plaintiff.

We will proceed to consider the first of these assignments of error, on the decision of the question arising upon which the necessity for at all considering the second will depend.

Then, did the court err in refusing to sign the said bill of exceptions?

The counsel on both sides have argued this question with much learning and ability, and have cited a great many cases on the subject, both from the English and American reports, in which cases there appears to be some, if not much conflict. But we deem it unnecessary to follow the counsel in the review of these cases, which would occupy much time and space, and be perhaps unprofitable. They depend generally, if not entirely, upon local statutes, decisions and practice, which do not prevail in this state; and we must look for our law on the subject to our own statutes, decisions and practice. Looking to them alone for information, the question recurs, did the court err in refusing to sign the said bill of exceptions?

In this question are involved two others, viz: 1st. Can a bill of exceptions to an opinion of the court given on the trial of a cause, be signed by the court after the end of the term during which final judgment is rendered in the cause; at least, unless the parties to the cause consent to such signature? And, 2dly, if that can be done at all, and a day is named by the court in a succeeding term for tendering and signing such a bill, which, however, is not accordingly tendered, and of course is not signed on that day, and no notice is then taken of the matter, must the court sign a bill tendered on a later day of the term, even 534 though *such bill correctly state the facts of the case and the opinion of the court to which the exception applies?

In the absence of any special statute, or any authoritative decision or settled and established practice on the subject, such as exists in some other states, a bill of exceptions to an opinion given by a court on the trial of a cause ought to be tendered at least before the end of the term during which the final judgment in the cause is rendered. A bill of exceptions, when duly tendered and signed, becomes a part of the record in the cause, and cannot therefore be properly or regularly added to the record of a case after that cause is ended by final judgment therein, and after the power of the court over it is ended by the close of the term of the court during which the judgment is rendered. The rule at common law is, that during the term wherein any judicial act is done, the record remains in the breast of the judges of the court and in their remembrance, and therefore the roll is alterable during that term as the judges shall direct; but when that term is past, then the record is in the roll, and admits of no alteration, averment, or proof to the contrary. 1 Rob. old Prac. 638, quoting from 3 Tho. Co. Lit. 323.

Formally and regularly, a bill of exceptions purports to be tendered and signed when, or immediately after, the opinion excepted to is given; and certainly, if convenient, the facts would then be set out more accurately and with less difficulty than at any other time. It is admitted in all the cases, everywhere, that at least the exception must be taken at the time, so as to give notice of it to the adverse party; and some of the cases require that the substance of the exception should be stated in 535 writing at the time. And all of *them seem to admit, that on exception being properly taken at the time, a formal bill of exceptions may be drawn up and tendered by the exceptant at such time afterwards, during the same term, as may be prescribed or allowed by the court. Convenience seems to require this measure of indulgence, but does not seem to require more; and to give more would create dangers and difficulties, which are obvious, and ought to be avoided if possible without encountering greater evils. Generally, a bill of exceptions may conveniently be prepared and tendered when the opinion excepted to is delivered, or during the trial, and almost always it may be done during the same term of the court. And in the very rare cases in which that cannot be done, the case could be kept open and continued until the next term; or by consent of the court, and all the parties entered of record, a day in the next term might be named by an order of the court for tendering and signing the bill of exceptions, to be done only on that day, unless the time for doing so should be then further enlarged by a like consent, and so on. We think that a practice of that kind would answer every purpose of necessity or convenience.

And now let us see whether there be any law or decision or settled practice of this state which requires or authorizes us to go farther than is above indicated in favor of the right of tendering bills of exception.

We have no special statute in this state, as there is in several other states of the union, expressly giving a right to tender a bill of exceptions at a succeeding term to that during which the judgment is rendered. The only statute we have on the subject is the Code, ch. 173, § 8, p. 1119, which stands in the place of 1 R. C. of 1819, ch. 133, 536 p. 523. That act was taken from *the statute of Westm. 2, 13 Ed. 1, c. 31, and is almost in the same identical words. It continued on our statute books in the same quaint language, which by successive changes in our judicial system had become very awkward, and to some extent unintelligible, down to the period of our revision in 1849, when it was materially modified and curtailed by the revisors, and the law as it now stands in our code was recommended by them and adopted by the legislature. There is nothing in the law as it stood in the Code of 1819, which seems to afford any warrant for the idea, that it authorized a bill of exceptions to be tendered to the court after the end of the term at which the judgment complained of was rendered. It is said that the law prescribed no period for tendering the bill, which might therefore be tendered at any convenient time. But the very nature of the case implied that the bill should be tendered at the same time, or at least during the same term, at which the judgment was rendered. The bill was to be a part of the record, which would be unalterable and unamendable by the same court, except for a clerical error, after the end of the term. It was therefore unnecessary expressly to name what was so plainly implied. We think that the early and leading case of Wright v. Sharp, 1 Salk. R. 288, decided by Lord Chief Justice Holt, shows that this was the then construction of the statute. But if there could be any doubt about the construction of that statute, there ought we think, to be none in the construction of the law as it now stands in the code. The words of it are: "In the trial of a case at law in which an appeal, writ of error or supersedeas lies to a higher court, a party may except to any opinion of the court and tender a bill of exceptions, which (if the truth of the case be fairly stated therein) the judge or justices, or the 537 *greater part of those present, shall sign; and it shall be a part of the record of the case." In the trial of a case a party may except and tender his bill of exceptions. Not after the trial, and at another and different term, after the case had been ended. The trial may be considered as lasting during the term at which it occurred, for the purpose of completing the record by signing bills of exception in the case, but not during a succeeding term.

We have no decision of this court which authorizes us to go to the extent now claimed. It is somewhat singular that numerous as are the cases which have been cited from the reports of other states, there is but one in the reports of this state on the subject to which we were referred in the argument, and that is the case of Washington & New Orleans Telegraph Co. v. Holson & Son, 15 Gratt. 122. That case, we think, strongly maintains, if it does not conclusively establish, the views we have already presented on the subject. In that case it was held, as stated by the reporter, that "it must appear from the record that a point decided by the court has been saved before the jury retires; though the exception may be prepared and may be signed by the judge either during the trial or after it is ended, during the same term. If this appear from the whole record, it is sufficient, though it is not expressly stated in the bill of exceptions, but if it does not so appear from the record, the appellate court cannot review the judgment of the court below on the point." The portion of the cases extending from page 134 to 143 is pertinent and material to the question we are now considering. Judge Daniel, in delivering his opinion in that case, in which all the other judges concurred, at least so far as is material to this case, makes the following remarks in regard to our practice 538 *which seem to be pertinent to our present inquiry: "According to our practice, it is not necessary that a bill of exceptions should be tendered immediately on the transpiring or happening of the action of the court to which a party excepts. It is true, that when the character of the exceptions is such that little delay is occasioned by the preparation of the bill of exceptions, it is sometimes immediately prepared and disposed of; and, in such a case, a memorandum of the transactions is usually made in the minutes of the proceedings of the day. But as in a great number, perhaps a majority, of cases, serious delay and inconvenience would result from stopping the progress of the trial to prepare bills of exceptions to the rulings of the court, a practice, sanctioned by long usage, has prevailed, for the counsel desiring to except to any opinion of the court given against them on the trial, simply to state to the court that they intend to save the point and ask the court to note the exception, and afterwards, during the term, to prepare the bill of exceptions and tender it to the court for its signature"—page 137. "Little aid in determining the question under consideration is derived from a reference to the decisions of other states; as each state has moulded for itself, either by statute or the decisions of its courts, a practice in the matter of bills of exceptions varying in a greater or less degree from the practice observed in any other state," &c.—page 141.

There is a subsequent decision of this court on the subject which was not referred to in the argument, no doubt because being a very recent decision it therefore escaped the observation of counsel. We mean the case of Martz's ex'or v. Martz's heirs, 25 Gratt. 361. But that case is only confirmatory of what was decided in the case cited from 15 Gratt., supra.

539 *We think there has been no such general practice in this state as is contended for in this case, to authorize bills of exceptions to be tendered and signed after the term during which the cause to which the exceptions apply was decided, and certainly there is no sanction to be found for such a practice in any law or decision of the state. On the contrary, the only law and decision we have upon the subject, seem to be adverse to the legality of such a practice.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the circuit court erred in giving to the plaintiff until the first day of the next term after that at which the judgment was rendered, to file his bill of exceptions.

It might well be questioned, whether the exception taken at the time of the trial was sufficiently specific to inform the defendant of the precise nature of the exception intended to be taken, whether it was to the whole judgment, or some particular point embraced in it. But it is unnecessary to decide that question.

But if we were wrong in deciding that the circuit court erred in giving the plaintiff until the first day of the next term after the judgment was rendered, to file his bill of exceptions, we are clearly of opinion that the said court did not err in refusing to sign the bill of exceptions which was not tendered until long after the first day of the next term, to wit: the 5th day of February 1872; that is, not until the 9th day of April 1872. Many of the cases cited in the argument show that even where a statute expressly authorizes a bill of exceptions to be tendered on a certain day of a succeeding term to be named by the court, such bill cannot be tendered after that day; at least, unless for good cause shown, the time is enlarged on that day, and the parties are duly informed of such enlargement. If 540 such a course could be pursued *without express statutory authority, of course there would be at least as much necessity for complying strictly with the terms of the permission in that case as in a case in which such statutory authority existed.

As the decision which we have made excludes the bill of exceptions from the record, it is decisive of the whole case. We are, therefore, of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the circuit court, and that it must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

541 *Fred & al. v. Dixon & als.*

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Interest—War Interest.—A person residing in Virginia contracted debts here, and on the breaking out of the late war he went north, and there remained until his death in 1865. His creditors who remained in Virginia are not entitled to interest upon their debts during the war.
2. Same—Same.—In such case, the fact that the debtor had conveyed land in Virginia in trust 1st to pay all his debts, and 2d, to the separate use of his wife, does not entitle his creditors to interest on their debts during the war.

This was a suit in equity in the circuit court of Fauquier county, brought in 1859 by creditors of Henry T. Dixon against said Dixon, and Annie E. his wife and their children, to subject the real estate of Dixon to the payment of his debts. There was a deed of trust on this land, given to secure specially two debts given for the purchase money of the land, and then for all his other creditors; and any balance was given to Mrs. Dixon, for her separate use for her life, with power of appointment; and, if no appointment, to the children of the marriage. One of the debts specified was held by Frank L. Fred, and the other by Larkin Crenshaw.

Proceedings in the case were stopped during the war, and Dixon died in 1865. The case was then revived, an account of the debts of Dixon was taken, and the land was sold; and there was no disputed question in this court except as to the interest upon the debts during the war. The facts bearing 542 ing on this *question are stated by Judge Christian in his opinion. The court below disallowed the interest, and Fred and Crenshaw applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Jno. S. Mosby and Wm. J. Robertson, for the appellant.

Brooke & Scott, for the appellees.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question we have to determine in this case is, whether the decree of the circuit court of Fauquier abating the interest during the war upon the debts due to the appellants was erroneous?

This question arises upon the report of a commissioner made in the cause, and which is as follows:

"It appeared to the satisfaction of your

*For monographic note on interest, see end of case.

Commissioner, that the said Henry T. Dixon, from early in 1861 to the end of the late war, lived outside of the confederate lines; and that from August 1861, to July 1865, he held a commission as additional paymaster in the United States volunteers (said commission having been produced before your Commissioner), and during this entire time he (Dixon) was subject to the authority and laws of the United States government.

"The creditors (the appellants et als.) herein mentioned were residents of the state of Virginia, then a state in 'the Confederate States Government of America.' Under this statement of facts your commissioner has not allowed interest upon the different debts due by said Dixon to the creditors herein, who were during the recent war living in the said confederate government."

543 *The general principle that where debtor and creditor are separated during war, one residing on one side of belligerent line, and the other on the other side, the interest during the period of the war must be abated, does not seem to be seriously controverted by the counsel for the appellants. But if it had been, the general rule has already been declared by this court in Cole v. Bright, decided at the present term. It is true, in that case, the creditor left his debtor in Williamsburg then, and during the war, in the occupancy of the federal army, and came into the confederate lines. But the principle declared in that case was, that when debtor and creditor were separated by the belligerent lines the interest must be abated. I refer to that case and the following authorities to establish the doctrine, that interest during the war, where debtor and creditor are separated by belligerent lines, must be abated. Hoare v. Allen, 2 Dall. R. 102; Mr. Jefferson's letter in note McCall v. Turner, 1 Call 115; Brewer v. Hastie & Co., 3 Call 22; Conn & als. v. Penn & als., 1 Peters R. 523-26; Hanger v. Abbott, 6 Wall. U. S. R. 532; 1 Gall. R. 295; Griswold v. Waddington, 16 John. R. 438.

It is insisted, however, by the learned counsel for the appellants, that this case is taken out of the operation of the general rule above declared, because the debtor in this case was domiciled in Virginia up to the spring of 1861, and voluntarily left the state of Virginia and went to Washington, where he remained during the war; and that having thus voluntarily left his former domicil, he cannot claim the benefit of an abatement of interest due his creditor.

In my opinion this act of the debtor, though voluntary, cannot affect the status of the parties, or the legal rights and liabilities growing out of the laws of earnest conviction of right and duty, to leave the north and unite their fortunes and their destinies with the south in that cause which they believed was the cause of the right of self-government and of the maintenance of civil liberty. And so in the south there were men who, from the same motives, chose to espouse the cause of the north and to uphold the integrity of the union. In all civil wars men must choose for themselves which side they may take. But I will pursue this line of discussion no further, contenting myself with a reference to the admirable opinion of my brother Staples, delivered to-day in the case of Walker v. Beauchler, for the true doctrines upon this subject.

544 war. *He had the right upon the approach, or after the commencement of the civil war, to choose for himself which side he would take, which cause he would espouse. In our late unhappy civil war many men at the north were constrained by family ties, by early education, by local attachments, by political proclivities, by

The question here is not how the parties became separated—whether voluntary or not—but the whole question is, were they separated? The question is not how the residence became changed, but where was the actual residence of the debtor and creditor during the war: were they during the war on different sides of the belligerent lines? If they were, no matter how they became thus separated, the question is closed. Dixon was in Washington from the early spring of 1861 till after the close of the war. The appellants were in the county of Fauquier. A line of bristling bayonets was between them. They were enemies; no intercourse between them was lawful; no payment could be made; no money could be transmitted. It is clear, therefore, that it is a case where the interest ought to be abated.

545 *But one of the counsel for the appellants objected to the decree of the circuit court upon another ground. He argues, with much ingenuity, that inasmuch as the debts due to the appellants are secured upon land in the county of Fauquier; that the land is in a court of equity to be regarded as debtor, and not Dixon; and that therefore there should be no abatement of interest. A brief reference to the facts of the case will be a sufficient answer to this position. Dixon, by deed bearing date December 8th, 1837, conveyed a large estate, real and personal, to a trustee,—first, to secure his creditors, among whom were the appellants: which deed provides that the said trustee is to have and to hold the above granted property, real and personal, upon the following trusts and confidences unto them the said parties of the second part: 1st. To pay a debt due Aquila Glascock of about six thousand dollars; a debt to Frank Fred of seven thousand dollars, and all other debts due and owing by the said Henry T. Dixon, amounting as it is supposed to about two thousand dollars; but, whether more or less, it is to be understood that all debts due by the said Dixon, enumerated or not enumerated, are to be paid; and to that end the said parties of the second part, trustees shall collect all debts due to the said Dixon, and from time to time sell such of the property as may be necessary for that purpose, at public or private sale, as may be best. 2d. After the payment of all the debts due by the said Henry T. Dixon, for the sole, separate and exclusive use and benefit of the said Annie E. Dixon, wife of Henry T. Dixon, for and during her life, free from the contracts and liabilities of her said husband, or of any future husband.

It became necessary, therefore, in the court below, to enquire and ascertain what debts of the said Dixon *were still due; because Mrs. Dixon was entitled to the balance after payment of his debts. She filed her petition, claiming that her husband did not owe the interest on the debts secured which had accumulated during the war; and the circuit court sustained that claim.

Now the land was merely the security for the debts due by Dixon; and after these debts were paid it belonged to Mrs. Dixon. It was competent to show what part had been paid, or that part was not in fact due, or that no interest could be claimed for the period of four years. The debt was due by Dixon; the land was merely the security for its payment.

Upon the whole case, I am of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court, and that the same be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

I. WHEN INTEREST IS ALLOWED.

1. General Principles of Allowance.—"Interest is allowed because it is natural justice that he who has the use of another's money should pay interest for it." PENDLETON, P., in Jones v. Williams, 2 Call 102. Cited with approval in Baker v. Morris, 10 Leigh 284; McVeigh v. Howard, 87 Va. 599, 13 S. E. Rep. 31; Stuart v. Hurt, 88 Va. 848, 13 S. E. Rep. 438. See also 3 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) pt. 1, p. 363; Bart. Law Pr. (2d Ed.) 718.

It is allowed whether demanded eo nomine in the declaration or not for "the interest follows the principal as the shadow does the substance." COALTER, J., in Hatcher v. Lewis, 4 Rand. 152. See also 3 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) pt. 1883; Bart. Law Pr. (2d Ed.) 718.

"It has always been lawful in Virginia for parties to contract for the payment of interest for the use or forbearance of money within the limits prescribed by statute; and in the absence of any express agreement for the payment of interest, in obligations for the payment of a certain sum of money on demand or on a given day, interest on the principal sum from the time it becomes payable is a legal incident of the debt, and the right to it is founded on the presumed intention of the parties." BURNS, J., in Roberts v. Cocke, 28 Gratt. 207. Quoted with approval in Kent v. Kent, 28 Gratt. 840; Cecil v. Hicks, 29 Gratt. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 391; McVeigh v. Howard, 87 Va. 599, 13 S. E. Rep. 31. See also Cecil v. Deyerle, 28 Gratt. 773.

2. Accounts, Unliquidated, Doubtful or Uncertain.—Interest ought not to be allowed where the accounts are unliquidated and disputed between the parties. Kerr v. Love, 1 Wash. 172; Waggoner v. Gray, 2 Hen. & M. 603; M'Connico v. Curzen, 2 Call 358, 1 Am. Dec. 540; Skipwith v. Clinch, 2 Call 253; Stearns v. Mason, 24 Gratt. 484. Nor where the claim, though just, is doubtful. Auditor v. Dugger, 3 Leigh 241.

Under the statutory enactments, interest may be recovered on estimated rents and profits. See post under the title "Rents." As to the allowance of interest in actions of contract or tort and in suits in equity, see Va. Code 1887, §§ 3390, 3391.

3. Legacies and Annuities.—Where a testator bequeaths a certain sum to each of his two infant daughters, to be paid at age or marriage; but if either die, her legacy to go to her sister; and one of them dies during infancy, the legacy thus accruing to her is due immediately and bears interest from one year after her death. Cary v. Macon, 4 Call 65.

Where slaves are specifically bequeathed to a child when he or she shall attain the age of 21 years or shall marry, and no provision is made expressly for maintenance in the meantime, their intermediate profits, if not otherwise disposed of, do not pass by a general residuary clause, but go to the legatee. In such case, the legatee is also entitled to interest on the profits from the time of the receipt thereof by the executor, no good reason appearing for his failure to apply the principal to the use of the legatee. Quarles v. Quarles, 2 Munf. 321.

Interest is allowed on a legacy, where no certain time for payment has been appointed, from the end of one year from the testator's death; and to a legatee in remainder, from the end of the year in which the tenant for life died. Shobe v. Carr, 3 Munf. 10.

If the testator "desire that no interest shall be demanded on a legacy, but that the executor will pay it off as soon as money can be raised by selling certain property," no interest is to be demanded until a reasonable time for raising the money shall have elapsed; after which, the executor, if he improperly withhold payment, is chargeable with interest. Patton v. Williams, 3 Munf. 59.

A testator directed his executors to set apart enough of his property to produce an annual income of a certain sum and pay such income in certain annuities. The executors failed to set apart the property and died wholly insolvent. One of the annuitants sued the administrator d. b. n. for her annuity with interest thereon. Held, that she was not entitled to interest. Adams v. Adams, 10 Leigh 527.

In Hite v. Hite, 2 Rand. 409, the testator left 17 children. For four of them, as he states in his will, he had made ample provision. To each of his remaining children, he bequeathed a legacy of $1,000. There being no other provision for these children, interest was allowed on these legacies from the testator's death.

In Lyon v. Magagnos, 7 Gratt. 377, the testatrix gave a legacy, directing that it should be paid within a year from her death. The legacy bears interest from the end of the year although there is no hand to receive it for thirteen years. See also, Bourne v. Mehan, 1 Gratt. 292; Granberry v. Granberry, 1 Wash. 246, 1 Am. Dec. 455.

For several years an infant legatee resided with and was maintained by her grandmother, who was chargeable with the payment of the legacy, the annual interest of which was less than the annual value of the maintenance. Held, the grandmother should not be charged with interest on the legacy during the period of such maintenance. Arrington v. Cheatham, 2 Rob. 492.

Interest will not be allowed on the arrears of an annuity, which was to be paid in agricultural products at a particular place, the value of which was to be ascertained by testimony; and in the absence of any proof of a demand, at the place where it was to be paid, or of any agreement to dispense with such demand, and to convert the same into money. Philips v. Williams, 5 Gratt. 259.

4. Obligations in Writing.

a. In General.—In an action of debt on a note for a certain sum of money with interest from date, if the declaration does not claim interest, judgment upon non sum informatus should be given for the principal only. Hubbard v. Blow, 1 Wash. 70.

In an action upon a bond, the court may instruct the jury with regard to the interest. Fine v. Cockshut, 6 Call 16.

Before Va. Statute 1805, if the declaration did not demand interest, in an action upon a promissory note, and the defendant waived his plea, judgment could not be given for interest. Brooke v. Gordon, 2 Call 212.

In an action of debt on a single bill, under Va. Statute 1805, interest was allowed, although not mentioned in the bill or demanded in the declaration. Baird v. Peter, 4 Munf. 76; Wallace v. Baker, 2 Munf. 334.

In an action on a negotiable note, a demand of interest in the declaration, which is not demanded in the writ, is not erroneous. Hatcher v. Lewis, 4 Rand. 152.

The purchaser gave a bond for the purchase price of a piece of land, with the provision that if he did not succeed in procuring the legal title, the contract should be void. He went into possession and continued to hold, but neglected to obtain the legal title. Held, that he ought to pay interest. Bailey v. James, 11 Gratt. 468, 62 Am. Dec. 659.

Where interest on a principal sum to date was included in a note, and there was a decree for the payment of the note, it was proper to decree interest on the whole amount. Kraker v. Shields, 20 Gratt. 377.

In a debt or check, where the declaration demands a sum certain and interest, the judgment may be for "the principal and charge of protest with interest thereon from the date of such protest." Va. Code 1887, § 2853; Lake v. Tyree, 90 Va. 719, 19 S. E. Rep. 787.

b. Penal Bonds.—If a bond be given in the usual form with a penalty, conditioned to be discharged by the payment of the principal at a future day "with interest from the date if not punctually paid," such back interest is to be considered an additional penalty and not recoverable. Waller v. Long, 6 Munf. 71.

A court of equity will relieve against back interest secured by way of penalty. Mosby v. Taylor, Gilmer 172.

In debt on a bill penal, a judgment entered upon nil dicit or non sum informatus, ought not to be reversed on the ground that the declaration, though describing the bill correctly as to the principal, penalty and date, omits to mention that the debt is payable "with interest from a day prior to the date" and that the judgment, in conformity with the bill penal, is entered for the penalty, to be discharged by the principal, with such interest and costs. Harper v. Smith, 6 Munf. 389.

Interest on a bond or judgment for a penalty may be recovered at law or in equity, although the principal and interest exceed the penalty. Tennant v. Gray, 5 Munf. 494; Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. 182; Baker v. Morris, 10 Leigh 294; Tazewell v. Saunders, 18 Gratt. 354.

By Va. Code 1887, § 3390 "the jury, in any action founded on contract, may allow interest on the principal due, or any part thereof, and fix the period at which such interest shall commence."

5. Purchase Money.—Where a purchaser of land, being thoroughly informed of the defects of the vendor's title, nevertheless agreed to pay interest on the purchase money from a certain day, he shall not be relieved from paying such interest on the ground that he could not get possession of a part of the land, which he knew, at the time of entering into the agreement, was held by another person. Mayo v. Purcell, 3 Munf. 243.

A part owner, being ignorant of the title of the other partners, remained in possession and enjoyment of the whole land for many years, but made their title known to the other partners immediately after it was discovered by himself. Upon a bill filed by them for partition, it was considered equitable, that he should account for their proportion of the rents received by him, deducting his disbursements for securing the title; that all leases he had made of the land should be acquiesced in by the plaintiffs; and that for the part he had sold he should pay the price received, with interest from the time of sale; the time when he received it not appearing to be different from that of sale. Carter v. Carter, 5 Munf. 108.

In a contract for the sale of land, if no day be specified for delivering the deed and possession of the land, but the money be payable after delivery of the deed; it must be understood that the deed is to be delivered and possession given without delay. If, therefore, in consequence of a misunderstanding between the parties in relation to the terms of sale, this be not done, the vendor is bound to account for and pay the profits of the land received by him after the contract; and the vendee to pay interest on the money from the time it would have been payable if the deed had been immediately delivered. Hundley v. Lyons, 5 Munf. 342, 7 Am. Dec. 685.

Where the vendee has been in possession and the purchase money has remained unpaid, he shall pay interest thereon, although the vendor be in default, unless he has not only kept the purchase money idle, but had given the vendee notice that he has so kept it. Brockenbrough v. Blythe, 8 Leigh 619; Selden v. James, 6 Rand. 465; Oliver v. Hallam, 1 Gratt. 298; Bailey v. James, 11 Gratt. 468, 62 Am. Dec. 659.

Where the vendee so elects, he is entitled to have an account of the rents, issues and profits of the land, and to have them set off against the purchase money; or, if he elects to waive an account, he shall not pay interest on the purchase money. White v. Dobson, 17 Gratt. 262.

When it is uncertain what amount, if any, is due on the bonds for the purchase money, interest will not be allowed except from the date of the decree. Stearns v. Mason, 24 Gratt. 484.

In a contract for the sale of real property, conditioned upon a termination of a pending suit respecting the title in favor of the vendor, the purchase price bears interest only from the final decree of the appellate court reversing the judgment of the lower court adverse to the vendor. Central Land Co. v. Johnston, 95 Va. 223, 28 S. E. Rep. 175.

6. Rents.

a. In General.—A court of equity may, in its discretion allow interest on arrears of rent. Interest was allowed where the tenant had endeavored to defeat the rents altogether and thereby delayed payment. Graham v. Woodson, 2 Call 249. But not where the lessor might have distrained. Skipwith v. Clinch, 2 Call 258.

Interest cannot be recovered as of course in actions for the recovery of rent, but may be given, under circumstances to be judged of by the jury. Mickle v. Lawrence, 5 Rand. 571; Dow v. Adam, 5 Munf. 21. But where the proprietor delayed for many years to prosecute her claim for ground rents, she will not be allowed interest thereon. Mulliday v. Machir, 4 Gratt. 1.

A trustee, accountable for rents received by him, is chargeable with interest thereon. Mundy v. Vawter, 3 Gratt. 518. See also, Cross v. Cross, 4 Gratt. 257.

Interest is not recoverable by way of damages in an action for rent in arrear. Cooke v. Wise, 3 Hen. & M. 463. Nor, prior to the statutory enactments, was interest allowed on estimated rents and profits. Roper v. Wren, 6 Leigh 38; Payne v. Graves, 5 Leigh 561.

Judgment ought not to be rendered on a three months' replevy bond, for interest from a day anterior to the date of the bond, but it may be rendered for interest from that date, on the rents and costs of the distress added together. And if the bond be taken, including interest from a day anterior to its date, such erroneous interest may be deducted, and judgment entered for the right sum. Williams v. Howard, 8 Munf. 277.

b. Under the Statutes.—By statute "in any action for rent, or for such use or occupation, interest shall be allowed as on other contracts." Acts 1826-7, p. 21, ch. 27, § 3; Va. Code 1873, ch. 134, § 7; Va. Code 1887, § 225. Tenants, therefore, holding property which is the subject of controversy in a pending suit, are bound to pay interest upon the rents, though it is not ascertained who is the party entitled to receive them. Commonwealth v. Ricks, 1 Gratt. 416.

The landlord is entitled to interest on rent in arrear from the time it becomes due. Brooks v. Wilcox, 11 Gratt. 411.

Where one tenant in common occupied the whole property and was liable to his co-tenants for a reasonable rent, he was also liable for interest on such rent. Early v. Friend, 16 Gratt. 21.

Interest was allowed on estimated damages in Bolling v. Lersner, 26 Gratt. 65. As to interest on estimated rents and profits, see also, Vance v. Evans, 11 W. Va. 342.

It is supposed that the statute allows interest on rent in arrear where the parties are settling the transactions privately between themselves, although there be no action. See 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) pt. 1, p. 127.

7. Funds Held in Trust.

a. By Administrator.—An administrator paying away the assets of the estate to distributees, without notice of the debts or liabilities of his intestate, must account to creditors for the amount so paid away with interest. Cookus v. Peyton, 1 Gratt. 61.

An administrator residing during the Civil War in Winchester, was not liable for interest on funds of the estate in his hands during that period. Brent v. Clevinger, 78 Va. 12.

Where the administrator, during the Civil War, held money payable to distributees living within the United States lines, he should not be charged with interest thereon during that period. Dromgoole v. Smith, 78 Va. 665.

The mere neglect, on the part of an administrator, to invest small sums of unexpended moneys, will not render him chargeable with compound interest. Lovett v. Thomas, 81 Va. 245.

As to administrator's liability for interest, see also, Adams v. Adams, 10 Leigh 527; Peale v. Hickie, 9 Gratt. 457.

b. By Attorney.—Prior to statutory enactment Va. Code 1887, § 2076, allowing interest in such case, where an attorney at law was employed to collect debts and some of them were lost to his client through his negligence, he was chargeable for the principal of the debts so lost, but not with interest thereon. Rootes v. Stone, 2 Leigh 650. This case seems to be in conflict with Chapman v. Shepherd, 24 Gratt. 38.

c. By Collector.—If a collector, living in the neighborhood of his principal does not pay over his collections in a reasonable time, he is chargeable with interest thereon. Hawkins v. Minor, 5 Call 113.

d. By Committee of Lunatic.—As a general rule, the committee of a lunatic is only to be charged with simple interest upon the balances found against him, on a settlement of his account. Crigler v. Alexander, 33 Gratt. 674.

e. By Court.—Where the funds have remained in the hands of the court during the litigation, interest is not allowable except from the date of the judgment. Daniel v. Wharton, 90 Va. 584, 19 S. E. Rep. 170.

f. By Employer.—Where the compensation of an employee remains in the hands of the employer, it bears interest from the date it was due. Goldsmith v. Latz, 96 Va. 680, 82 S. E. Rep. 483.

g. By Executor.—There is no general rule as to an executor's liability to pay interest on money in his hands. Each case must depend upon its own particular circumstances. In this case he was charged with it from the end of each year for the balance then resting in his hands; but such interest is not to be carried to the balance of the succeeding years. Granberry v. Granberry, 1 Wash. 246. See also, Burwell v. Anderson, 3 Leigh 348.

Where the failure to bring an executor to a settlement appears to have proceeded from neglect of the residuary legatees, without any wilful default on his part, interest ought not to be charged on the balance due from him to the estate, except from the date of the decree. Fitzgerald v. Jones, 1 Munf. 150.

An executor or administrator, hiring slaves belonging to the estate of his testator or intestate, ought not to be charged with interest on such hire from the day it became due; but a reasonable time, to collect and apply the money, should be allowed before the commencement of interest. Dilliard v. Tomlinson, 1 Munf. 183.

Whether interest ought to be charged in an administration account, is a question, the decision of which may depend upon extraneous testimony. White v. Johnson, 2 Munf. 286.

An executor, except as to debts lost by his negligence or improper conduct, is chargeable with interest only, on his actual receipts. Cavendish v. Fleming, 3 Munf. 198.

Moneys directed to be invested by executors in government securities should be accounted for as if invested, after a reasonable time for that purpose; but the executor ought not to be charged with interest during such reasonable time. Carter v. Cutting, 5 Munf. 223.

Where a legacy is left in trust and the trustee refuses to act, the executor is not bound to pay the legacy until a new trustee is appointed by the court, and is not chargeable with interest before the decree. Johnson v. Mitchell, 1 Rand. 209.

Prior to statute allowing interest in such case, Va. Code 1887, § 2676, executors who fail by their negligence to collect a debt due to their testator by bond under a penalty, the debtor being good for the money at the death of the testator and continuing good for it for 14 years, when he fails, are chargeable with the principal and interest thereon up to the time of failure of the debtor; but they are not chargeable with interest since that time. Chapman v. Shepherd, 24 Gratt. 377.

h. By Fiduciaries.—Interest is required to be paid by fiduciaries on funds kept and used by them. And if such funds are kept they are presumed to have been used, and to have been worth or to have made interest. Sharpe v. Rockwood, 78 Va. 24; Templeman v. Fauntleroy, 3 Rand. 484.

i. By Guardian.—A guardian is not to be charged with interest upon the money received by him from the day it is received, but he is to be allowed six months in which to invest it. Armstrong v. Walkup, 12 Gratt. 608.

The provision of sec. 2608 of Code 1887 allowing the guardian thirty days, during which time no interest shall be charged against him to invest funds of his ward does not apply where he fails to make any investment thereof, and he is charged with interest from the date of receipt. Snively v. Harkrader, 29 Gratt. 113.

If, upon the first settlement of his accounts by the guardian, a balance remain in his hands on which he is to account for interest, such interest must, in his second annual account, be credited to the ward, like other profits of the estate; and if the interest and other profits credited in this second account exceed the disbursements, the surplus, whether it arise from the interest aforesaid or from other profits, will constitute a balance against the guardian, on which, if it remain in his hands, he must account for interest, which interest must, in the third annual account, be credited to the ward; and so on, toties quoties. But, from the time the guardianship terminates, the account is to be settled on the ordinary principals of debtor and creditor as to interest, compound interest being generally excluded on both sides. Garrett v. Carr, 1 Rob. 196; Childers v. Deane, 4 Rand. 406; Cunningham v. Cunningham, 4 Gratt. 48; Handly v. Snodgrass, 9 Leigh 484; Armstrong v. Walkup, 12 Gratt. 608; Evans v. Pearce, 15 Gratt. 513; Martin v. Fielder, 82 Va. 455; Va. Code 1887, § 2606; 1 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) pp. 486, 487.

j. By Receiver.—A receiver will not, as a matter of course, be chargeable with interest upon a sum which he is ordered to pay, unless special circumstances to warrant it are shown. Crawford v. Fickey, 41 W. Va. 544, 23 S. E. Rep. 662, 2 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas., N. S., 417, and note, p. 421.

k. By Trustee.—Where a trustee retains money in his hands for an unreasonable length of time, he is chargeable with interest thereon. Lomax v. Pendleton, 3 Call 538.

A trustee is chargeable with the interest on trust money in his hands, unless he can show it was necessarily kept in hands for the purposes of the trust. Miller v. Beverleys, 4 Hen. & M. 415. See also, Beverleys v. Miller, 6 Munf. 99, where, under the particular circumstances of the case, no interest was charged against the trustee. A trustee, accountable for rents received by him, is chargeable with interest thereon. Mundy v. Vawter, 3 Gratt. 518.

8. Money Paid by Mistake.—Where, in the absence of fraud, money has been paid and received under a mutual mistake of fact, interest will be allowed only from the time the mistake was discovered and demand made. Craufurd v. Smith, 93 Va. 623, 23 S. E. Rep. 235. See also, Hull v. Watts, 96 Va. 10, 27 S. E. Rep. 829.

9. Verdicts, Judgments and Decrees.

a. On Contracts.

(1) At Law.—Where judgment was recovered for the principal debt, with damages in lieu of interest, and costs, and the debtor executed a mortgage to secure the payment, interest was allowed on the aggregate of principal, damages and costs, from the date of the mortgage till payment. Laidley v. Merrifield, 7 Leigh 346.

In an action of debt on a decree for an amount of interest thereby found due, interest on the amount of the decree may be recovered in the shape of damages for its detention. Stuart v. Hurt, 88 Va. 343, 13 S. E. Rep. 438.

Under W. Va. Code, ch. 181, § 16, providing that where a judgment is rendered for the payment of money, "it shall be for the aggregate of principal and interest due at the date of the verdict if there be one, otherwise at the date of the judgment or decree, with interest thereon," it was held that, where this had been done, it was error in a subsequent decree to reaggregate the debt by calculating interest to the date of the subsequent decree, and then to add this interest to the sum of the first decree and give interest on the second aggregate from the date of the last decree. Tiernan v. Minghini, 28 W. Va. 314. For the construction of this provision, see also, Douglass v. McCoy, 24 W. Va. 722.

By Va. Code, sec. 3390, it is provided that "the jury, in any action founded on contract, may allow interest on the principal due, or any part thereof, and fix the period at which such interest shall commence. And in any action whether on contract or for tort, the jury may allow interest on the sum found by the verdict, or any part thereof, and fix the period at which such interest shall commence. If a verdict be rendered which does not allow interest, the sum thereby found shall bear interest from its date, and judgment shall be entered accordingly."

(a) In Equity.—Prior to Va. Stat. 1804, chancery courts could not grant interest, subsequent to the date of the decree, on debts not bearing interest in terms. Dillard v. Tomlinson, 1 Munf. 183; Deanes v. Scriba, 2 Call 415. Nor, prior to said statute, could the court of appeals, in affirming a decree appealed from, allow interest on the amount of the decree pending the appeal. Scott v. Trents, 4 Hen. & M. 356. Since the 1st of May, 1804, when interest is allowed in equity, it should not stop when the balance of account is struck, nor at the date of the decree, but should run to the payment of such balance. Snickers v. Dorsey, 2 Munf. 506. See Va. Code 1887, sec. 3391.

b. In Action of Tort.—Prior to statutory enactment (Va. Code 1887, § 3390), interest could not be allowed upon a verdict in an action of tort. Brugh v. Shanks, 5 Leigh 508. See also, Hepburn v. Dundas, 18 Gratt. 219.

It was held proper to charge interest from the date of the verdict, upon a judgment in an action of tort depending when a provision, similar to the one above referred to, went into operation. Lewis v. Arnold, 18 Gratt. 454.

Under Va. Code 1887, § 3390, which provides that if a verdict does not allow interest, the sum thereby found shall bear interest from the date of the verdict, the judgment on a verdict for damages in an action of tort must allow interest from the date of the verdict, when interest is not given by the verdict. Fry v. Leslie, 87 Va. 209, 12 S. E. Rep. 671.

Under W. Va. Code, § 18, ch. 131, a judgment, in an action of tort, bears interest from the date thereof, and not from the date of the verdict. But judgments on contracts, as provided by § 14 of the same chapter of the code, bear interest from the date of the verdict. Talbott v. Ry. Co., 42 W. Va. 560, 26 S. E. Rep. 311. See also, Fowler v. R. Co., 18 W. Va. 579.

II. COMPUTATION OF INTEREST.

1. Partial Payments.—With regard to computing the interest where partial payments have been made, the court, in Lightfoot v. Price, 4 Hen. & M. 431, says: "That so much of any payment as is equal to, or exceeds the interest, is to be applied to the discharge thereof, and the residue towards discharging the principal, unless the debtor, at the time of the payment or before, directed otherwise; that is to say, from the sum of principal and interest, computing the latter to the time of payment, the payment is to be deducted, and the balance forms a new capital; on that, interest is to be computed from that time, but with this caution, that the new capital be not more than the former, so that if the payment be less than the interest due at the time, the surplus of interest must not augment the remaining capital; because that would give interest upon interest, which would be unlawful." See also, Boss v. Pleasants, 1 Wythe 10; Hurst v. Hite, 20 W. Va. 138; Mercer v. Beale, 4 Leigh 189.

It is error in a commissioner to allow interest on part payments of a judgment; the proper rule is to bring the interest on the principal sum up to date of each payment, and deduct it from the amount of that payment, thus making the partial payments first applicable to the interest. De Ende v. Wilkinson, 2 Patt. & H. 663.

2. Application of Payments.—See the title "Application of Payments," 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 467. Where it is agreed between a debtor and his creditor that the principal shall be first paid, the payments will be applied accordingly. Pindall v. Bank of Marietta, 10 Leigh 481.

III. TIME DURING WHICH INTEREST ACCRUES.

1. As Damages for Breach of Contract.—Where interest is allowed in an action for breach of contract it should be computed from the date of such breach. Enders v. Board of Public Works, 1 Gratt. 364; Bachanan v. Leeright, 1 Hen. & M. 211.

2. On Obligations in Writing.—Where no time is fixed for the payment of the principal of a bond it becomes due immediately and interest will be allowed from the date of its execution. Kent v. Kent, 28 Gratt. 840; McVeigh v. Howard, 87 Va. 300, 13 S. E. Rep. 31.

Upon a sale of a house and lot, upon credits extending through several years, where separate bonds are taken for the interest, they bear interest from the time they fall due. Græme v. Cullen, 28 Gratt. 266.

Coupons for interest bear interest from the time they are payable. Gibert v. R. Co., 33 Gratt. 586.

A contract of sale, dated Aug. 26, 1873, says the bonds for the purchase money are "to bear interest from this date." The trust deed describes the bonds as "dated Sept. 10, 1873, with 6 per cent. interest from Aug. 26, 1873." The bonds say, "with 6 per cent. interest from date above," when there is no "date above," except the date of maturity of the bond. Held, the bonds bear interest from the date of the contract, Aug. 26, 1873, till paid. Ware v. Starkey, 88 Va. 191.

"The words 'on demand' have a plain, distinct, clearly defined, legal and popular signification, well known to the courts and to the people. When an obligation for money or its equivalent is executed containing this provision, the parties perfectly understand that the debt is payable presently; that it is due immediately and bears interest from its date." STAPLES, J., in Omohundro v. Omohundro 21 Gratt. 626. Approved in McVeigh v. Howard, 87 Va. 300, 13 S. E. Rep. 31.

By Va. Code 1887, § 3390, "the jury, in any action founded on contract, may allow interest on the principal due, or any part thereof, and fix the period at which such interest shall commence."

3. On Money Paid by Mistake.—Interest is allowed on money paid by mistake from the time the mistake is discovered and demand made. Crauford v. Smith, 93 Va. 623, 23 S. E. Rep. 235.

4. Interest from Institution of Suit.—In a suit to subject the wife's separate estate for improvements hereon made by the husband without fraudulent intent while debts existed against him, interest should be allowed only from the commencement of the suit. Humphrey v. Spencer, 36 W. Va. 11, 14 S. E. Rep. 410.

IV. SUSPENSION OF INTEREST.

1. By Act of Creditor.—Evidence, in order to extinguish the interest, may be given to the jury on the plea of payment to a bond, that the plaintiff was absent in foreign parts beyond seas, and had not any known agent or attorney within the commonwealth. Call v. Turner, 1 Call 133.

The vendee of land, on a credit, to whom a deed is made, and possession given, is not excused from paying interest on the purchase money, where the payment of the principal was delayed by a third party, the vendee having continued all that time in possession and having enjoyed the profits. Selden v. James, 4 Rand. 465.

If a tender be made of a less sum than is justly due, a refusal to receive it is no bar to the subsequent recovery of interest on the sum so tendered from the time of the tender. Shobe v. Carr, 8 Munf. 10.

A willingness to pay the amount admitted to be due is not the equivalent of a legal tender of the amount, though followed by bringing the money into court to make the tender good, when no such tender was ever actually made. N. & W. R. Co. v. Mills, 91 Va. 613, 22 S. E. Rep. 556.

2. By Act of Law.—An act of assembly authorizing the auditor to issue a warrant in favor of a creditor of the commonwealth on any particular fund will not stop the interest accruing on the debt, unless it appears that the fund was sufficient at the time for its payment. Commonwealth v. Newton, 1 Hen. & L. 90.

If a defendant, however, in a judgment for costs enjoins the collection of the judgment on grounds which do not affect its validity, he is liable for interest on the judgment from the time the injunction was granted. Shipman v. Fletcher, 95 Va. 585, 29 S. E. Rep. 325; Templeman v. Fauntleroy, 8 Rand. 434.

Where a debtor lawfully agreed to pay interest at 10 per cent., the court will compel the payment, though the debtor's lands are placed in a receiver's hands at the creditor's instance. Strayer v. Long, 1 Va. 715, 3 S. E. Rep. 372.

3. By Existence of War.—Interest is suspended during a war where the creditor resides within the territory of one of the belligerent powers, and his debtor within that of the other. Roberts v. Cocke, 3 Gratt. 207; Brewer v. Hastie, 3 Call 22. But where creditor and debtor reside within same territory, interest is allowed. Coltrane v. Worrell, 30 Gratt. 434.

In Kirby v. Goodykoontz, 26 Gratt. 298, a trustee was held liable for a loss resulting from his investment of good money in confederate bonds, but he was not held liable for interest during the Civil War.

But after judgment for principal and interest of a debt, courts are without power to abate the interest on a debt on the ground that the creditor was within the lines of the enemy. Rowe v. Hardy, 97 Va. 674, 34 S. E. Rep. 625.

V. COMPOUND INTEREST AND INTEREST ON INTEREST.

1. In General.—It is a general rule of law that interest will not bear interest, unless there is some express or implied agreement to that effect between the parties. Pindall v. Bank of Marietta, 10 Leigh 481; Childers v. Deane, 4 Rand. 407. Nor does the mere agreement that interest shall be paid annually warrant the recovery of interest on interest, unless there be an agreement after an interest installment is due that interest shall be paid thereon. Genin v. Ingersoll, 11 W. Va. 549. Coupons for interest bear interest from the time they are payable. Gilbert v. R. Co., 33 Gratt. 586. Interest upon interest on a legacy will not be allowed unless the testator plainly requires it. Calloway v. Langhorne, 4 Rand. 181. The executor has no power to bind the testator's estate to pay compound interest, and only the principal sum originally due, with simple interest, should be charged the estate. Staples v. Staples, 85 Va. 76, 7 S. E. Rep. 199. As to when a guardian may recover compound interest for ward, see Va. Code 1887, § 2607.

But an agreement to pay interest upon interest is valid, if made after the interest which is to bear interest has become due. Stansbury v. Stansbury, 24 W. Va. 634; Craig v. McCulloch, 20 W. Va. 154; Pindall v. Bank of Marietta, 10 Leigh 481; Childers v. Deane, 4 Rand. 406; Fultz v. Davis, 26 Gratt. 903.

2. On Judgments and Decrees.—But a judgment or decree may be rendered on an interest bearing claim for the principal with accrued interest; and this aggregate, in the form of a judgment or decree, bears interest from its date. Stuart v. Hurt, 88 Va. 343, 13 S. E. Rep. 438; Pickens v. McCoy, 24 W. Va. 344; Tiernan v. Minghini, 28 W. Va. 314.

3. On Claims Referred to a Commissioner.—Where a commissioner's report showed a balance due, from the defendant, consisting entirely of interest found due on an account never before settled, and stated, that that balance of interest was to bear interest from a remote day, and there was no exception to the report, and the court decreed the balance with interest accordingly, it was held that the decree was erroneous in giving interest upon the interest from a remote day since the interest should have been allowed only from the date of the final decree. Dunbar v. Woodcock, 10 Leigh 623.

There was a provision in a bond for the payment of money, that it should be paid three years after date, with interest at 10 per cent. per annum from date, the claim was audited by the commissioner at 10 per cent. to the time the report was completed. Held, that the amount so computed, principal and interest, should bear interest at the contract rate from the date of auditing till paid. Barbour v. Tompkins, 31 W. Va. 410, 7 S. E. Rep. 1.

4. On Successive Decrees in the Same Cause.—Where a decree was entered, in accordance with W. Va. Code, ch. 131, § 16, for the aggregate of the plaintiff's debt, with interest on such aggregate from the date of the decree, it was held error in a subsequent decree, entered several years thereafter, to reaggregate such debt by calculating interest on such first aggregate sum to the date of the latter decree and giving interest on the second aggregate from the date of the last decree. Tiernan v. Minghini, 28 W. Va. 314.

VI. RATE.

See monographic note on Usury appended to Coffman v. Miller, 26 Gratt. 698.

547 *Alex. & Wash. R. R. Co. v. Chew and Wife & als.

Conveyances — Covenants — Construction.—By act of congress in 1808, the Washington & Alexandria Turnpike Co. was incorporated to construct a turnpike road from Alexandria to Washington, to be not less than thirty, nor more than one hundred feet wide. In 1809 A conveyed to the company a strip of land one hundred feet wide and three-fourths of a mile long, for the purpose of the road. And the company covenanted with A and his heirs that said space of one hundred feet should be forever kept open and unobstructed as a public highway, and for no other purpose; and should the route of said turnpike road be thereafter altered, or should it cease to be a public highway, the said property should immediately revert to A, his heirs and assigns. The company made a graveled track twenty feet wide, in the centre of the strip, and on each side a summer road. By a statute of the state the company was authorized to sell any part of their work to the A. & W. R. R. Co., and the turnpike company conveyed to the railroad company the eastern half of their entire line; and a railroad track has been laid on the summer road occupying in all about eighteen feet on the east line, and leaving the graveled road and the western summer road unobstructed. This dealing with the road does not create a forfeiture under the deed of A, of the land conveyed by him, or any part of it.

This was an action of ejectment in the circuit court of the county of Alexandria, brought in November 1872 by Roger P. Chew and Louisa his wife, and others, heirs at law of Charles Alexander, Jr., deceased, against the Alexandria and Washington railroad company, to recover a strip of land fifty feet in width by about three quarters of a mile in length, being the half of a section of land one hundred feet in width, conveyed by the said Alexander for 548 the purposes *of a highway. The cause came on to be tried in November 1872, when the facts appeared to be as follows:

By an act of the congress of the United States of April 21, 1808 (2 Statutes at Large 485), a company was incorporated for opening a turnpike road between the town of Alexandria and the city of Washington, both then in the District of Columbia, to be called the Washington and Alexandria turnpike company the road to be not less than thirty feet and not more than one hundred feet in width.

The land for the road was to be acquired either by condemnation or purchase, as might be found necessary.

The company was duly organized, and the road built in conformity with the requirements of the charter.

A section of the road was built upon the hundred feet strip before mentioned, which had been conveyed to the company by Charles Alexander, Jr., by deed of July 4th, 1809.

By this deed the grantor conveyed the land to the turnpike company, "to have and to hold * * * to them, the said president and directors, and their successors in office, as a public highway forever. In consideration of which said cession, the said president and directors, for themselves and their successors in office, hereby promise and agree to and with the said Charles Alexander, his heirs and assigns, that the said space of ground, one hundred feet wide, shall be forever kept open and unobstructed as a public highway, and for no other purpose whatsoever, without the consent of the said Alexander, his heirs and assigns, in writing first had and obtained; and 549 also, that should the route of *the said turnpike road be hereafter altered, or should it ever cease to be a public highway, the property shall thereupon immediately revert to the said Alexander, party to these presents, his heirs and assigns, in like manner as if this present indenture had never been made."

By an act of the general assembly of Virginia, of March 4, 1854, the turnpike company was authorized to sell any part of their work to the Alexandria and Washington railroad company; and on the 18th of April 1854 the turnpike company conveyed to the railroad company the eastern half of their entire road from Alexandria to Washington.

On the eastern half (fifty feet in width) thus acquired, the railroad company in 1855-'6 constructed and operated, and have ever since continued to operate, a railroad between the two cities.

The railroad track was of the usual width (eight feet), and was laid along the eastern side of the strip conveyed to the railroad company, at an average distance of ten feet from the east boundary of said strip, so that the track and the space to the east of it occupied together eighteen feet.

Before the railroad was built there was a gravelled way, about twenty feet in width, running through the middle of the hundred feet strip, and on either side was a summer road.

The railroad track occupied the summer road on the east side of the gravelled way, but did not at all infringe upon the latter, and, of course, did not infringe upon the summer road to the west of it.

The railroad track destroyed the east summer road for the purposes of travel in ordinary vehicles, leaving the gravelled way and the other summer road the same as before.

550 *When the evidence had been introduced, the plaintiff and defendant asked for the following instructions:

If the jury shall believe from the evidence, that the plaintiffs are the heirs at law of Charles Alexander, Jr.; that he was the owner of the premises, fifty feet, described in the declaration; that the said Charles Alexander, Jr., did, by the deed bearing date on the 4th day of July, 1809, grant unto the defendant, the Alexandria and Washington Turnpike Company, to wit: 100 feet of ground, to be used as a public highway or a turnpike, of which 100 feet, fifty feet, the premises described in the declaration, constitute part; that by the conditions of that grant, the said Alexandria and Washington Turnpike Company bound themselves to use the said 100 feet for a public highway or turnpike, and for no other purpose; and that the said Alexandria and Washington Turnpike Company entered under that grant, and afterwards, to wit: by a deed bearing date on the 18th day of —, 1855, did grant unto the Alexandria and Washington Railroad company, the said fifty feet for another purpose, to wit: to be used for constructing a railway; and that the defendant did construct and are now using the said fifty feet as a railway, and that the said fifty feet, for all practical purposes, has ceased to be used as a turnpike or public highway, then the plaintiffs are entitled to recover in this action.

Which instructions the court granted as prayed. The defendants prayed the court to instruct the jury, that upon the facts proved as aforesaid, the jury must find for the defendants. Which instructions the court refused.

The defendants, by their counsel, excepted to the ruling of the court by which 551 the instructions prayed *by the plaintiffs were granted, and also to the ruling of the court refusing the instructions prayed by the defendants.

There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs; and on the application of the railroad company a supersedeas was allowed by this court.

Beach, for the appellant.

W. Arthur Taylor and John S. Chapman, for the appellees.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The alleged right of recovery in this case is founded upon a provision in the deed from Charles Alexander to the Washington and Alexandria turnpike company. That provision is as follows: "In consideration of which cession, the said president and directors for themselves, and their successors in office, hereby promise and agree that the said space of ground, one hundred feet wide, shall be forever kept open and unobstructed as a public highway, and for no other purpose whatever without the consent of the said Alexander, his heirs and assigns, in writing first had and obtained; and also should the route of the said turnpike road be hereafter altered, or should it ever cease to be a public highway, the property shall thereupon immediately revert to the said Alexander, his heirs and assigns."

It is insisted that the deed executed by the turnpike company to the Alexandria and Washington railroad company was, ipso facto, a breach of this provision, creating a forfeiture of the estate.

552 *And secondly, if this be not so, the construction of the railroad track upon the turnpike certainly had that effect, because such appropriation and use are utterly inconsistent with the use of the soil for the purposes of a highway.

Before considering these propositions, it is well to bear in mind that if a forfeiture has taken place it occurred in the year 1856, at which time the railroad was constructed.

The company was permitted to locate and build its road, and to incur all the expense incident to an enterprise of that character, without objection from any one, so far as the record before us discloses; and now after the lapse of sixteen years the representatives of the original grantor for the first time assert the existence of the supposed forfeiture. If their claim is sustained, the effect will be to cut asunder the railroad track, and to vest in the plaintiffs not only the soil, but all the works of the company, to the extent of three-fourths of a mile. But this is not all. If there has been a forfeiture, it will operate to revert in the representatives of Charles Alexander the entire estate, being the one hundred feet conveyed to the turnpike company by the deed of 1809. It is very true that this suit extends only to the fifty feet conveyed to the railroad company; but if the heirs choose to assert title hereafter to the whole, there is strong ground to believe the claim would be successful, so that the part still used as a turnpike will be lost to the public.

A result which thus injuriously affects public and private interests to so great an extent ought not to be tolerated unless required by some imperative rule of law operating upon the contract of the parties. Clearly there is nothing in the terms of Charles Alexander's deed, already 553 cited, forbidding or restraining *an alienation by the turnpike company, so long as the terms of the grant are substantially complied with. So long as the route conveyed is used for the purposes of a highway, it is a matter of no sort of consequence to the grantor or his representatives whether the turnpike company or its alienees hold the title.

The only question we have then to consider is, whether the construction of the railroad is such a diversion of the land conveyed to the turnpike company by Alexander as constitutes a forfeiture.

The learned counsel for the appellee, in a very elaborate note, takes the ground that a railway is so essentially and radically different from an ordinary turnpike, that the two cannot be used and operated on the same space of ground, one hundred feet wide, with any safety to travelers on the turnpike. All this may be true, and yet it does not follow that the construction of the railroad track upon the turnpike necessarily supersedes, or even interrupts, the latter as a highway. No question has been productive of more controversy than this. On the one hand, it is argued that the owner of the land is not divested of the fee by laying out the soil as a highway, and that the public only acquires thereby an easement; that the location of a railroad thereon is an increased burden upon the fee, and the appropriation of the surface, for the purposes of a railway, is inconsistent with the free and unrestricted user by the public of the soil as a highway, and for this increased burden upon the fee the owner is entitled to compensation.

On the other hand, it has been argued that the construction of a railway along a highway, or upon the streets of a city or town, is simply a mode of accomplishing one of the objects of the original dedication, that of creating a thoroughfare for the public, and *that the railway is but a species of improved highway, the two uses being substantially identical; and therefore the legislature may authorize (as in the case before us) the construction of a railway on a public highway, and the inconvenience thereby incurred by the citizen must be borne for the sake of the public good.

Controversies of this character must generally if not universally arise in those cases in which the owner has subjected the land to an easement, and the point of contention is as to his right to compensation for the increased burden upon the fee by reason of the construction of the railway.

Whether in the present case the owner has parted with the fee, and is therefore not entitled to compensation, is a question we are not called on to decide at this time; nor is it necessary to determine whether the turnpike company is liable in damages to an action of covenant for the failure to keep open and unobstructed as a highway the entire width of one hundred feet conveyed. The question we have to deal with is one of forfeiture exclusively. It may be that the operating the railroad subjects travelers on the turnpike to inconvenience, and even to danger; but the turnpike is none the less a highway by reason of the fact. It does not necessarily cease to be a highway because the track of the railroad may be laid upon a portion of the one hundred feet, to any greater or less degree than a street of a city ceases to be a street because of the location of the railroad thereon.

We must not lose sight of the fact, that we are considering, not a question of compensation for increased burdens and inconveniences, but of forfeiture for a breach of condition subsequent; always rigidly construed. The language of the deed is,

“should the route of the said turnpike road be hereafter altered, *or should it ever cease to be a public highway, the property shall thereupon immediately revert,” &c. Now it is apparent from the facts certified, that the turnpike is still used as a highway. It has never ceased to be such. The graveled way is untouched, and so is one of the summer roads. It is true that the track of the railroad, eight feet in width, is laid upon the other summer road. But there is no obligation on the company to keep up two summer roads or even a summer road. The charter only prescribes that the width of the road shall not be less than thirty nor more than one hundred feet. If there are obstructions or irregularities upon other portions of the one hundred feet, making the passage of carriages sometimes difficult, they proceed from the carelessness and inattention of the turnpike company, or those having charge of its road. The remedy for such evils is in the courts by indictment, information or other proper proceeding. The only portion of the land actually occupied by the railroad is the bed or track eight feet wide. If it appeared that this strip cannot be used as a highway, it is manifest there is still abundant space for all the purposes of the travelling public; more than has ever been or ever will be required. If the people who use the route are subjected to some inconvenience by reason of the passage of the trains, they are in no worse condition than the inhabitants of many towns and cities and counties. Outside of the limits of the three-fourths of a mile conveyed by Alexander, all along the route between Washington city and Alexandria, travellers upon the turnpike are more or less exposed to the same inconveniences and perils.

When the grantor seeks to destroy an estate which he himself has created, it must plainly appear that the act is within the very terms of the condition and *breach. It is not sufficient to show mischiefs and even losses which might have been provided against had they been foreseen. The fact that they were not and could not have been anticipated, may be a sufficient reason for the failure to provide a remedy; but they cannot justify the courts in so enlarging the operation of the covenant as to make them a ground of forfeiture.

The learned counsel for the appellee relies much upon that provision of the deed, which declares “that the said space of ground, one hundred feet wide, shall be forever kept open and unobstructed as a highway;” and he insists that the parties meant thereby “that a turnpike road one hundred feet wide should be made, kept open and unobstructed in its entire width for all time, and that if any portion of the space should be obstructed and cease to be used as a turnpike road, the whole should revert to the grantor or his heirs. According to this construction, a road one hundred feet wide was necessary to be made, kept open and clear of all obstructions for all time, whether required or not by the public wants and necessities; and that too notwithstanding the charter left it optionary with the company to determine the width of its road, so that it was not less than thirty nor more than one hundred feet. If this be the correct view, a forfeiture occurred long before the construction of the railroad, because it is, I think, very manifest that the actual width of the road was never at any time as great as one hundred feet. Under this construction, a failure to grade and use as a road a narrow strip of ten feet would result in the forfeiture of the whole, even though the remaining ninety feet was used as a highway, and was more than sufficient for all the demands of the public. It is impossible to believe that such was the intention *of the parties. If the provision admits of no other interpretation than an agreement to construct a turnpike of the width of one hundred feet, and so maintain it forever, although wholly unnecessary, it will be construed as a covenant, the breach of which is compensated in damages and not by a forfeiture of the entire estate. This construction saves the rights of the public, and is more consistent with the real intention of the parties. They did not mean that the entire width of a hundred feet, every parcel of it, should be graded and constructed as a road and so maintained forever, whether required or not by the necessities of trade and travel. All they designed was, that the land should not be diverted to any mere private or individual ends, but that it should be held for the purposes of a public highway, and used as the public necessities might require. Any failure of proper repair, any mere obstructions upon the road tending to the inconvenience of the public, might constitute a breach of covenant sounding in damages; but nothing short of a discontinuance of the route as a highway constitutes a ground of forfeiture.

This view is in entire harmony with all the principles of law in regard to forfeitures. The rule laid down in the cases, and sustained by all the authorities is, that conditions subsequent are strictly construed, because they tend to destroy estates, and a rigorous exaction of them is a species of summum jus, and in many cases hardly reconcilable with conscience. In McKelvey v. Seymour, 5 Dutcher R. 321, a well considered case, the supreme court of New Jersey decided that "where land is conveyed to be used for a certain purpose, with a clause of forfeiture if it cease to be used for the object specified, it is no ground of forfeiture if the land is used for other purposes, provided *it is also used for the purpose for which it was conveyed."

In Jackson v. Silvernail, 15 John. R. 278, a lessee for lives covenanted not to sell, or assign, or dispose of his estate in the premises without permission. He nevertheless executed a deed demising part of the premises for twenty years. The supreme court of New York held this did not constitute a forfeiture. Platt, J. said, "the plaintiff's claim is stricti juris; and to entitle him to recover on the ground of forfeiture, he must bring his case within the penalty, on the most literal and rigid interpretation of the covenant; that a lease of part of the land for a term of years was not a sale or assignment of the estate in the premises." And yet it is easy to see that such an alienation of part was, as to such part, a violation of the whole spirit of the contract, and the intention of the parties. See also Hunt v. Beeson, 18 Ind. R. 380; Emerson v. Simpson, 4 New Hamp. R. 475; Bolling v. Mayor &c. of Petersburg, 8 Leigh, 224. I refer particularly to the case of Emerson v. Simpson, where a number of cases are cited by the learned judge, in confirmation of the doctrine that the object of the courts is so to construe the covenant as to prevent, if possible, a forfeiture; and therefore the extent and meaning of conditions defeating estates are considered as questions strictissimi juris.

In the case in hand the same rule of construction very justly applies. The result attains the ends of justice, and I think is conformable to the real intention of the parties. Upon the facts as stated in the record, the court ought to have given the instruction asked for by the defendant, and not that asked by the plaintiff.

559 *The judgment was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the circuit court ought not to have given the instruction asked for by the plaintiffs; but instead thereof, ought to have instructed the jury as prayed for by the defendants. Wherefore, for the errors aforesaid, it is considered by the court here, that the said judgment be reversed and annulled, the verdict set aside, and a new trial awarded; and that the defendants in error pay to the plaintiffs in error their costs by them expended in the prosecution of their writ of error and supersedeas here.

And it is further considered, that the case be remanded to the circuit court for a new trial therein to be had in conformity with the views herein expressed.

Judgment reversed.

560 **Jones & Wife v. Hughes & als.*

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

I. Dower in Executory Devises.—H by his will gave certain lands, which he describes, to his sons J and D; and, by another clause, he says if his son J should die without issue, he gives certain part of the land given to him to D; and if both of his sons should die without issue, then all of the aforesaid lands should go to his daughters, naming them. J died without children, and the lands went into the possession of D; and D afterwards died without children, leaving a widow, to whom by his will he left all his estate, and appointed her his executrix. He owned, however, only personal estate. More than a year after D's will was admitted to probate, his widow filed her bill against the executory devisees of H, to recover dower in the lands which had come to D under the will. Held:

1. Same.*—The widow of D is entitled to dower in the said lands.
2. Same.—The act, Code of 1873, ch. 106, § 4, does not apply to the case, and her right to dower is not barred.

*Dower in Executory Devises.—In Nickell v. Tomlinson, 27 W. Va. 706, the court said: "The overwhelming weight of authority both in England and in this country is in favor of the doctrine, that the widow has a right to dower, when the husband's fee simple estate is determined by an executory devise over upon his dying without issue." For this proposition the court cited, among others, the following cases: Tallaferro v. Burwell, 4 Call 321; Jones v. Hughes, 27 Gratt. 560; Medley v. Medley, 27 Gratt. 568.

The principal case is cited but distinguished in Corr v. Porter, 83 Gratt. 285. And in Tomlinson v. Nickell, 24 W. Va. 160, there is a strong dictum to the same effect as the above proposition, where the principal case is again cited. See further, 2 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 155.

This was a suit in equity in the circuit court of Mecklenburg county, brought in November 1871, by Ann Eliza Hughes, widow of John D. Hughes, deceased, against Thomas L. Jones and Martha E., his wife, and others, devisees of Crawford Hughes, deceased, to recover her dower in certain land devised by the said Crawford Hughes to his son John D. Hughes. The case is as follows:

Crawford Hughes died in 1843, leaving a will, by which he gave his whole estate, except some small legacies, to his wife for her life. By the 5th clause of his will he says: I bequeath, after the death of my wife, my lands to be divided between 561 my sons James *C. Hughes and John D. Hughes as follows:—and he then sets out the part which each is to have.

The sixth clause of his will is as follows: It is my will and desire, that should either or both of my sons, James C. Hughes and John D. Hughes, die without issue, then the aforesaid land should be disposed of as follows: In case that James C. Hughes should die, I wish John D. Hughes to have all the tract on which I live; and the tract I purchased of Dr. Francis R. Gregory to be sold, and the proceeds to be equally divided between my daughters Ann F. Simmons, Martha E. Hughes, Susan J. Hughes, and Louisa M. Hughes; and should both of my sons die without issue, then all the aforesaid lands to go to my daughters and their children.

James C. Hughes survived his father for some years, and died without children; and John D. Hughes was put into possession of all the land on which the testator lived. He lived until 1870, when he died, leaving a widow, the plaintiff, but without children; and leaving a will by which he gave to his widow his whole estate, real and personal, and made her executrix of his will. This will was admitted to probate on the 19th of September 1870, and Mrs. Hughes qualified as executrix. His whole estate, however, was not more than fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars, and consisted of personalty.

After the death of John D. Hughes the daughters of Crawford Hughes, one of whom had married Thomas L. Jones, took possession of the land; and in November 1871, more than a year after the will of John D. Hughes had been admitted to probate, Mrs. Hughes brought this suit.

The defendants in their answer, insisted first that John D. Hughes was not 562 seized of such an estate in *the land as would entitle his widow to dower therein; and second, that she had not renounced the provision made for her in the will of her husband, and as a year had passed after the admission of his will to probate, before her suit was brought, she was under the statute precluded from her claim of dower in his estate.

The cause came on to be heard on the 26th of October 1872, when the court held that John D. Hughes, under the fifth and sixth clauses of the will of Crawford Hughes, took an estate of inheritance in the lands mentioned therein, and that the executory devise which determined his estate by its regular and natural limitations, without disturbing his prior seizure, did not deprive his widow of dower therein; and that she under the laws of Virginia was entitled to dower in said lands. And commissioners were appointed to allot to her her dower; and an account of profits was directed to be taken. Jones and wife thereupon applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Neeson and Atkins, for the appellant.

Goode, Page & Maury, for the appellees.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Two questions are raised upon the record of this cause. The first is, does the determination of an estate by the operation of an executory devise defeat the right of the widow to dower?

The leading English case on this subject is Buckworth v. Thirkell, 3 Bos. & Pul. 652 note, decided in 1785. In that case, Lord Mansfield held that it would not defeat the right of the husband to curtesy. And the same was held by this court a few 563 years after in Taliaferro v. Burwell.

4 Call 321. No reference is made by the court in its decision, or by the counsel in argument, to the above decision of Lord Mansfield, which was probably not then known here. The principle involved in the right to dower and curtesy is the same. If the determination of the estate by an executory devise will not defeat the husband's right to curtesy, it cannot defeat the wife's right to dower; which seems to be conceded on all sides.

With regard to this question, eminent jurists and able conveyances, both in England and the United States, have entertained conflicting opinions; and Buckworth v. Thirkell has been the subject of much discussion, of disapproval by some eminent jurists and text-writers, and of approval by others, equally eminent; among the former may be named Jacob and Kent. Some of the leading English text-writers have forbore to express an opinion on the question, among whom may be mentioned Barton and Preston. Atkinson says, when the husband's estate is defeated by executory devise, it has been settled (but it has been thought rather anomalously) that the widow shall nevertheless be entitled to dower. Other distinguished writers support Buckworth v. Thirkell; among whom I will name Jarman, Roper and Bissett. Mr. Jarman states the law thus: that an immediate estate in fee, defeasible on the taking effect of an executory limitation, has all the incidents of an actual estate in fee simple in possession, such as curtesy, dower, &c.; the devisee having the inheritance in fee, subject only to a possibility. 1 Jarman on Wills 792; 1 Roper, Husb. & Wife 38-41, 377, Bissett's Est. for Life, 82-87. See also 2 Crabb Real Prop. 167.

The case of Goodenough v. Goodenough is referred to by Mr. Preston, as sup-

564 porting the claim of dower in *estates determined by conditional limitation or executory devise, 3 Prest. Abstr. 372. The case of Moody & wife v. King, 2 Bing. R. 447, 9 Eng. C. L. 475, decided in 1825, since Buckworth v. Thirkell had been reviewed and discussed by eminent writers, supports the judgment of Lord Mansfield. And, in a recent case, the vice chancellor applied the doctrine of Moody v. King to an equitable determinable estate, and held that the widow of the tenant in fee simple in that case was entitled to dower as against the executory devisee. Upon appeal to the lord chancellor the decree was affirmed. Smith v. Spencer, 6 De Gex, McNa. & Gord. 631. The current of American decisions seems to be in the same direction. In Evans v. Evans, a testator had devised lands to two sons, G. and O., their heirs and assigns; but if either should die without having lawful issue living at his death, his estate was to vest in his surviving brothers and sisters—a case very analogous to ours. One of these sons died without issue, outliving the other son, and the question was made, whether his widow was entitled to dower. Chief Justice Gibson discussed the subject at length, and it was held that the widow was entitled to dower. The same doctrine has been held in Kentucky and South Carolina, and in the early decision in Virginia, supra; and no American case, contra, has fallen under our notice, except the case of Weller v. Weller, 28 Barb. R. 588, which was not a decision of a court of the last resort.

Mr. Scribner, from whose valuable treatise on dower, cited by appellee's counsel, I have derived much assistance in this investigation, takes an important distinction. He says "there seems to be a marked distinction between a case where, by the terms of the limitation, the husband takes a fee simple estate, which, if he have issue living at his death, will descend to such 565 *issue, and which is limited over only in the event of his death without issue; and other cases of conditional limitation. Such a case is closely assimilated in principle, to the natural determination of the estate for want of heirs generally; and there would seem to be no good reason why the husband's estate should not be prolonged, so as to give the right of dower in the one case as well as in the other, particularly as it is allowed to estates tail under similar circumstances; and also to conditional fees at common law." It is not necessary that the estate of which the husband died seized shall be transmissible to his heir, in order to entitle the widow to dower. It is only necessary that if she has issue by him, according to Littleton (who is high authority upon such questions), that such issue may possibly inherit the estate of which he died seized. (Littleton, § 53.)

"In all the reported cases in which dower or curtesy has been allowed upon estates of this character (it is remarked by Mr. Scribner), the estate was such, that the issue of the wife, had there been any, would have been entitled to take by descent. In the cases in which it was denied, the issue could not have taken by descent." Upon the whole, the court is of opinion that John D. Hughes, the husband, having died seized of an estate in fee, determinable by an executory devise over upon his dying without issue, his widow was entitled to dower in said estate.

The second and only remaining question raised by the record we will now consider: "Is the failure of the widow to renounce the will of her husband a bar to her claim of dower, she being a devisee under the will?" This is claimed under the following clause of chapter 106, § 4, of Code of 1873: "If any estate, real or personal, intended to be in lieu of dower, shall be conveyed 566 *or devised for the jointure of the wife, such conveyance shall bar her dower of the real estate, or the residue thereof; and every such provision, by deed or will, shall be taken to be intended in lieu of dower, unless the contrary intention plainly appear in such deed or will."

The will of John D. Hughes contains the following clause: "Article 1st. I give and bequeath to my beloved wife my whole estate, both real and personal, for her especial use and behoof." And he appoints her his executrix, without security.

Bequeathing his whole estate to her, real and personal, if he had any real estate which could pass by the devise, her dower right would be merged in the fee. But if she chose only to claim her dower, that is a life estate in the one-third thereof, and disclaim the remainder, which she would have unquestionably a right to do, it would be an absurdity to hold that the heir could plead in bar of her recovery the devise to her of the whole real estate in fee. But if the real estate, in which, as we hold, she is entitled to dower, did not pass to her by the devise, it is because it was not devisable by the husband, and if so, not descendible from him, and his heir has no interest in it, and cannot defeat her recovery by pleading in bar the devise made to her by the will. The appellants must claim it either as heirs of the testator, John D. Hughes, or as the executory devisees. But we have seen that, as executory devisees, they are not entitled to hold it against the widow's right of dower. Having no right to it as executory devisees, they cannot claim it in that right under the foregoing clause of the statute. If the devise to the widow would be a bar to her recovery, her inability to recover, by reason of having received other property in lieu of it from her husband, 567 band, would not vest *the dower estate in the executory devisee. It would be virtually a purchase of the dower by the husband, and would be an accession to his estate, and could not go to the executory devisee, but would be descendible to his heir. And for the same reason the section of the statute under consideration could only enure to the benefit of the heir or distributee, or personal representative of the testator. If the wife's dower is barred under this section, what she loses her husband's estate gains. If she is defeated in the recovery of her dower, it is because she has received from her husband's estate other property in lieu of it, and thus her husband's estate acquires her dower. It becomes a part of his estate, in consideration of the jointure which he has devised to her in lieu of dower.

In this view of the subject, which we think is just, it is manifest that the section of the statute under consideration has no application to this case. If the wife had received the devise in lieu of dower, her husband's estate would be virtually the purchaser of her dower. The appellants, as the executory devisees, would not be entitled to it, and her husband's heirs or distributees would not be entitled to it as a part of his estate, because, by his will, he gave the whole of his estate, real and personal, to his wife; and she would be entitled to it.

The court is therefore of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court, and that the same be affirmed with costs.

Decree affirmed.

568 *Medley & als. v. Medley.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

Dower in Executory Devises.*—M devised his lands to his son G; and if G should die without having had lawful issue of his body, the said lands were to be divided among testator's four daughters. G died, leaving a widow; but without having had lawful issue of his body. G's widow is entitled to dower in the lands so devised to him.

This is a suit in equity in the circuit court of Halifax county, brought in March 1872, by Lucy V. Medley, the widow of Granville C. Medley, deceased, against the executor and devisees of Isaac Medley, to recover her dower in a tract of land devised by said Isaac Medley to his son Granville C. Medley. The only question in the cause arises upon the construction of the said devise, which is set out in the opinion of Judge Christian.

The circuit court decreed in favor of the plaintiff; and the defendants applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Jones & Bouldin, for the appellants.

Riley, Ould & Carrington, for the appellee.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The only question we have to determine is, whether Lucy V. Medley, the widow 569 of Granville Medley, was *entitled to dower in the estate of her husband, which he took under the will of his father, Isaac Medley.

*Dower in Executory Devises.—See note to Jones v. Hughes, ante, 560; also citation of the principal case in Medley v. Medley, 81 Va. 287.

The provision of the will under which the question arises is as follows:

"I devise to my son, Granville C. Medley, my lands lying between Miry creek, Hewey creek and the road leading from the Union meeting house to my mill, bounded as follows," &c., &c. "I also give to my son, Granville, all the lands that I have devised to my wife during her life or widowhood, the possession whereof the said Granville is to be entitled to at the determination of the estate so devised to my wife by her death or marriage, whichever shall first happen." "If my son, Granville, shall die without having had lawful issue of his body, the lands so devised to him are to be divided among those as hereinafter provided." And in the eleventh clause of his will, the said Isaac Medley devised as follows:

"All other lands belonging to me, not mentioned in this will, together with all my estate of every kind not otherwise disposed of, I direct to be sold, the proceeds of said sale and whatever may be due me, I appropriate to the payment of my debts; and whatever surplus may remain, I give, to be equally divided among my four daughters above named. The Roanoke stock, above named, at the death of my wife, is to be considered as embraced in this clause, likewise the lands devised to my son, Granville, should he die without having had issue as aforesaid."

Granville C. Medley died "without having had lawful issue of his body," and his widow, Lucy V. Medley, filed her bill in the circuit court of Halifax, praying that the will of Isaac Medley be construed 570 by *the court, and that she be endowed of all the real estate taken by the said Granville C. Medley, under the will of his father, the said Isaac Medley, deceased.

On the trial of this suit, the learned judge of the circuit court of Halifax was of opinion that the said Lucy V. Medley was entitled to dower in the real estate aforesaid, and accordingly so decreed on the 9th day of September, 1872.

Was Mrs. Lucy V. Medley entitled to dower in the real estate so devised, is the only question we have to determine.

The court is of opinion, that according to the principles settled in the case of Jones & wife v. Hughes, decided at this term, and upon authority of the cases there cited, Mrs. Medley was entitled to dower in the estate of her husband, Granville Medley, devised to him by his father under the provisions of the will above referred to.

The court is therefore of opinion, that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court of Halifax, and that the same may be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

571 *Tate v. Vance.*

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

Injunctions—Awards by Arbitrator—Hearing and Deciding in the Absence of One Party.—T files a bill to enjoin V from cutting the timber on a piece of land which T claims to be his, and of which he claims to be in possession, and which was adjudged to be his by the award of an arbitrator, to whom the question of title was submitted by T and V. V answers, denying T's title or possession, and insisting the award was invalid, because the arbitrator was induced by T to receive evidence and decide the case in V's absence; and this is sustained by the arbitrator. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same—Invalidity—Injunction Dissolved.—The award is invalid; and T showing no other evidence of title, the injunction must be dissolved.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same—Same—Answer in Lieu of Cross-Bill.*—V, not claiming any relief in the case, but a dissolution of the injunction and dismissal of the bill, may rely upon the invalidity of the award by his answer; and it is unnecessary to file a cross-bill for the purpose of avoiding it.

This was a bill in equity, filed by M. B. Tate in the circuit court of Smyth county, to enjoin and restrain Samuel Vance from cutting the timber on land which he claimed belonged to him. Plaintiff alleged that he purchased the land in 1872 from the McCreadys, who had been in peaceable possession of it for fifty years, and they sold to him, and put him in possession; and that he still holds possession. That, soon after his purchase, Samuel Vance claimed title to a part of this land, consisting of some eight or ten acres. Though plaintiff believed he had a good title to the land, and was in possession of it, yet not desiring litigation, he and the said Vance 572 agreed to submit the *matter in dispute between them to the award of one Samuel Cole, and bound themselves to abide by his award. That under this submission the said Cole heard all the evidence submitted by them both, made a survey of their several lands, and after full hearing, decided that plaintiff was possessed of and had good title to the land in controversy: And he filed a copy of the award. He says the entire value almost of the lands consists of the timber standing upon it. That, since the making of said award, Vance had unlawfully entered upon the said land, and is engaged in cutting and destroying the timber standing upon it. That, unless restrained, said Vance will inflict irreparable injury upon the plaintiff, as he will destroy the entire value of his estate in the said land; and that he is insolvent. He therefore prays for an injunction to restrain Vance, his servants and employees, from cutting any more timber from the land, and from removing any that he had cut; from any interference with the possession of the plaintiff; and for general relief. The injunction was granted.

Vance answered the bill. He claimed that a tract of land which had been conveyed to his wife by her father, included this land, and was held under an older title than that under which the plaintiff claimed. That there being a conflict of boundary between the two tracts, he and Joseph McCready, in 1857, agreed upon a dividing line; and respondent had moved his fence on this line, and he had ever since been in possession of all the land on his side of this line, including the land in controversy. He denies that the plaintiff, and those under whom he claims, had title to or possession of the land. He says that soon after plaintiff purchased from the McCreadys, he set up a title to this land; and for the sake 573 of peace, respondent agreed to *submit the matter to the award of Samuel Cole. No day was fixed for said Cole to hear the parties; but plaintiff, in the absence of respondent, went to said Cole, and, by misrepresenting the facts of the case, prevailed on him to render an award in the case. He denies that the award is valid, because it was procured upon ex parte statements, and was made and delivered in the absence of the respondent.

The only witness examined was the arbitrator Cole. His testimony showed that evidence of the plaintiff was received, and the award made in the absence of the defendant.

The cause came on to be heard on the 21st of December 1874, when the court dissolved the injunction, and dismissed the bill with costs. And thereupon, Tate applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Gilmore, for the appellant.

J. A. Campbell, for the appellee.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court is of opinion, that the award upon which complainant relied in the court below, being founded upon evidence received by the arbitrator in the absence and without the knowledge or consent of the defendant, is invalid, and furnishes no just claim to relief in a court of equity.

The court is further of opinion, that a cross-bill is not necessary to impeach said award; but the same may be done by answer. The right to an injunction is not ex debito justitiæ; but the application is addressed to the sound discretion of the 574 chancellor, upon all the *circumstances of each particular case. A party seeking the exercise of this prohibitory power must come with clean hands and with a case sanctioned by the clearest principles of justice. The only foundation for the complainants claim to the interposition of the court is the award. If that be invalid by reason of the misconduct of the arbitrator, or the complainant, a court of equity will not interfere, but leave the party to such remedies as he has, if any, in a court of law. In such case it does not matter whether the objections to the award appear on the face of the bill, or by the answer, or by the evidence. In either case the result is a dismissal of the bill. If the defendant asks nothing beyond such dismissal, there is no good reason why he may not in his answer rely upon any matters which make it inequitable to grant the prayer of the bill. It is only when the defendant goes beyond this, and asks affirmative relief at the hands of the court, that a cross-bill is indispensable. The case of German v. Mastrin, 2 Paige R. 288, affords an illustration of this principle. It was there held, that the defendant might in his answer, set up an equitable title in himself against the demand of the plaintiff for partition; but if he desires affirmative relief by a decree for a conveyance of the legal title, then vested in the plaintiff, he must file a cross-bill.

In this state, the courts have, in a number of cases, given to the answer all the effects of a cross-bill; and the same course has been occasionally followed by the English courts. And according to the settled practice, a cross-bill is now dispensed with in cases where it was once uniformly required. The court will sometimes of its motion direct a cross-bill to be filed when it is of opinion it is demanded by the purposes of justice. There is no inflexible rule on the subject. If the court is satisfied that the whole merits of the case have been fully developed on bill and answer, no good can be effected by a cross-bill. And there can be no valid reason for putting the parties to the expense and delay of such a proceeding. And this is precisely the aspect of the case before us. The decision turns upon the testimony of the arbitrator. There is no controversy as to the facts stated by him. Neither party can therefore possibly be prejudiced by the failure to file a cross bill, nor can either derive the slightest advantage from having it in the cause.

The award being out of the case, and all the allegations of the bill in regard to the plaintiff's title being denied by the answer and unsustained by proofs, there was no cause for the interference of a court of equity. The court is therefore of opinion, that the circuit court did not err in dismissing the plaintiff's bill.

Decree affirmed.

In equity, pleading an answer is "a defense in writing, made by a defendant to the charges contained in a bill or information filed by the plaintiff, against him in a court of equity." Bouvier's Law Dict. 145. This is the definition generally accepted by the modern courts and text writers. See 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 865.

II. GENERAL NATURE AND OFFICE.

The general nature and office of an answer is nowhere better discussed than by Prof. Minor, in 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 1423 et seq., to which reference is now made without any attempt to expatiate.

III. FRAME.

A. Composite Parts.—An answer in chancery practice consists of the following composite elements: (1) The caption; (2) The reservation of exceptions to the bill; (3) A distinct and categorical answer to the bill; (4) A general traverse or denial of the averments of the bill; and (5) The conclusion. See Sand's Suit in Eq. 889; 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 1430; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 406. For a discussion of these several divisions of an answer, see 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 1430, 1431.

B. Caption.

1. Dual Character of Respondent.—A defendant in equity is charged as executrix and as devisee of a decedent; in the caption of her answer, she professes to answer only as executrix; but in the body of her answer, she in fact answers as devisee. Held, such answer places her before the court in her character as devisee. Kinney v. Harvey, 2 Leigh 70.

2. Co-Executors.—An answer filed by one executor is not to be taken as that of his co-executors, although the record states that "they appeared by counsel and filed their answer," and no further steps were taken to compel a further answer from them. Chinn v. Heale, 1 Munf. 63.

3. Partners.—Where, however, the answer of one partner in the name of both is replied to generally, and no steps are taken to compel an answer from the other partner, it is deemed a sufficient answer of both. Freeland v. Royall, 2 H. & M. 575.

This case is not overruled by the above case of Chinn v. Heale, 1 Munf. 63, but they are distinguished, in that the answer in Freeland v. Royall, 2 H. & M. 575, on its very face, expressly stipulates to be the answer of both, and is acquiesced in by the plaintiff in his general replication, whereas, in Chinn v. Heale, 1 Munf. 63, the answer of the other executors was only an adoption of the answer of the real respondent.

4. By Guardian Ad Litem.—Though an answer filed by the guardian ad litem purports to be the answer of the infant, by his guardian ad litem, yet where it is signed by the latter, and the opinions, responses, and statements are those of the latter, it has the same effect as if it had been designated and filed as the answer of the guardian in his proper person. Durrett v. Davis, 24 Gratt. 302.

C. Demurrer and Reservation of Exceptions to Bill.

1. Demurrer and Answer.—The Virginia statute, Va. Code, § 3264, allowing a defendant to "plead as many several matters, whether of law or fact, as he shall think necessary," was held in Bassett v. Cunningham, 7 Leigh 407, to apply, by analogy, to proceedings in equity as well as in law, and accordingly an answer and a demurrer were allowed to be put in at the same time. See also, Jones v. Clark, 25 Gratt. 675; Dunn v. Dunn, 26 Gratt. 291; Matthews v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 463; Cook v. Dorsey, 88 W. Va. 196, 18 S. E. Rep. 468.

It is settled in this state that a demurrer in the form prescribed by statute, and alleging no grounds, inserted in the answer is sufficient. Dunn v. Dunn, 26 Gratt. 291; Matthews v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 463.

2. Reservations of Exceptions.—Though the reservation of exceptions is usually inserted in the answer, it is really superfluous in Virginia because of the rule that allegations in a bill which are not noticed are not thereby admitted. See infra, "Admissions—General Rule."

In West Virginia, however, this subject is regulated by statute. See infra, "As Evidence—Responsiveness."

D. Distinct and Categorical Answer to Bill.

1. General Rule.—"To a bill of discovery the plaintiff is entitled to a full answer to all the charges of the bill which are not covered by a demurrer, plea, or disclaimer; or unless by answer the defendant shows that he is not bound to make the disclosures called for by the bill." Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 408.

a. Exceptions.—An answer which would result in the breach of professional confidence, cannot be compelled; the client, however, may waive the privilege since it only exists for his benefit. See Chahoon v. Com., 21 Gratt. 822; State v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 770; Tate v. Tate, 75 Va. 522.

By the well established rule of equity, a defendant is not bound to disclose or answer matters which will expose him to pains, penalties or punishment, or to a criminal prosecution; and it is not necessary it should be made to appear that the defendant will be certainly exposed to peril by making the discovery sought; but it is enough if it appear that by answering the interrogatories of the bill he will thereby be probably subjected to danger. If the objection appears upon the face of the bill, the defendant may demur. If it does not thus appear, he must claim his protection by plea or answer, the averments of which, if traversed by replication, must be proved. Bank v. Nelson, 1 Gratt. 108; Poindexter v. Davis, 6 Gratt. 481; Dulany v. Smith, 97 Va. 130.

A foreign corporation, being without the jurisdiction of the court, cannot be compelled to answer; however, absence of such answer is not ground for refusing to dissolve an injunction. B. & O. R. Co. v. City of Wheeling, 13 Gratt. 62.

Where upon the face of the bill the whole facts of the case appear from the records of other causes which have been ended, a demurrer to the bill may be passed upon without requiring the defendant to answer. Young v. McClung, 9 Gratt. 336.

2. Consistent Defenses.—An answer may set up any number of defenses which are consistent with each other, but it cannot insist upon inconsistent defenses. Bank v. Parsons, 42 W. Va. 139, 24 S. E. Rep. 557; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 414.

3. To Bills of Discovery.—The case of Baker v. Morris, 10 Leigh 284, was a suit in equity, there being no remedy at law under the circumstances, to enforce payment of a bond debt twenty-eight years after the right to demand it accrued. To rebut the presumption of payment, the bill called upon the defendant to answer whether the debt had been paid or not. Held, the defendant must answer the interrogatory. See also, Kyle v. Kyle, 1 Gratt. 532. See infra, "As Evidence—In Special Instances."

4. Impertinent Matter.—"If an answer contain impertinent or scandalous matter, it will be referred to a commissioner to expunge such matter, at the costs of the party filing the answer." Mason v. Mason, 4 H. & M. 414.

5. Reference to Extrinsic Papers.—Where an answer contains certain averments "as would appear by the accounts and receipts annexed to the answer" such accounts and receipts should be produced, or interrogatories as to them should be awarded if required. Clay v. Williams, 2 Munf. 105.

E. General Traverse or Denial of Averments in Bill.—Though not an essential element in the frame of an answer, it is always advisable to put in a general traverse, in order to cover the possibility of failure to deny distinctly each separate charge in the bill; for the effect of such denial is to throw upon the plaintiff the burden of proving his allegations. Bronson v. Vaughan, 44 W. Va. 406, 29 S. E. Rep. 1022; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 410. See especially, infra, "Evidence—Conclusiveness."

Where the answer denies generally all knowledge concerning facts alleged in the bill it suffices to put those facts in issue. Ronald v. Bank, 90 Va. 815, 35 S. E. Rep. 780; Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. 198.

F. Conclusion.

1. Affidavit.

a. General Rule and Qualifications.—As a general rule the answer must be sworn to. Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 411. The plaintiff, however, may dispense with the oath by express waiver in his bill. Va. Code, § 3281. See infra, "As Evidence—Waiver of Oath."

b. Of One of Several Defendants.—It was held in Arnold v. Slaughter, 36 W. Va. 589, 15 S. E. Rep. 52 that the affidavit of only one of several defendants was sufficient.

The court in the same case, quoting from the decision in Burlew v. Quarrier, 16 W. Va. 109, said "When no exception or objection was taken in the court below, so far as the record shows, to an answer in chancery or to the filing thereof, became not verified by affidavit, it is too late to make the objection in the appellate court."

c. Of Guardian Ad Litem.—In both Virginia and West Virginia, the answer to a bill for the sale of infants' lands must be sworn to by the infant (if over 14 years of age), and also by his guardian ad litem in proper person. Va. Code, § 2618; W. Va. Code, ch. 83, § 3; Durrett v. Davis, 24 Gratt. 302; Ewing v. Ferguson, 33 Gratt. 548; Hull v. Hull, 26 W. Va. 1; Hart v. Hart, 31 W. Va. 688, 8 S. E. Rep. 582; Hays v. Camden, 38 W. Va. 109, 18 S. E. Rep. 461; Lancaster v. Barton, 92 Va. 615, 24 S. E. Rep. 251.

d. Answer of Corporations.—Contrary to the general rule the answer of a corporation is not required to be sworn to. The rationale of this is obvious: for since "a corporation has no soul," it is morally impossible for it to swear. It follows, therefore, that such an answer is not evidence for the defendant though it be responsive to the bill; but it puts in issue the allegations of the bill to which it responds.

If the plaintiff wishes to have a sworn answer, he must make some of the officers or members of the corporation parties. B. & O. R. Co. v. City of Wheeling, 13 Gratt. 62; Teter v. W. Va. C. & P. Ry. Co., 35 W. Va. 483, 14 S. E. Rep. 146; Roanoke St. Ry. Co. v. Hicks, 96 Va. 510, 32 S. E. Rep. 295.

It was held, in B. & O. R. Co. v. Gallahue, 12 Gratt. 664, that the answer of a corporation must have the corporate seal affixed. See also, B. & O. R. Co. v. City of Wheeling, 13 Gratt. 62; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 411; Teter v. W. Va. C. & P. Ry. Co., 35 W. Va. 483, 14 S. E. Rep. 146.

e. Certification by Unauthorized Person.—An unsworn answer is not evidence for the defendants for any purpose. And in the case of Sittingtons v. Brown, 7 Leigh 274, it was decided that a paper purporting to be an answer, but which was not certified by any person authorized by law to administer oath, was altogether defective, and of no evidence in the cause.

f. Belief of Affiant.—By Va. Code, § 3282, and W. Va. Code, ch. 125, § 42, the affidavit is sufficient if the affiant swear that he believes the matter sworn to be true. See C. & O. R. Co. v. Harlow Huse, 5 W. Va. 579; Oil, etc., Co. v. Gale, 6 W. Va. 542; Hickman v. Painter, 11 W. Va. 386.

g. Presumption on Appeal.—In Durrett v. Davis, 24 Gratt. 302, it is held that where the decree recites that the cause came on to be heard upon the answer of a guardian ad litem it will be presumed, in the appellate court, that the answer was sworn to, though there be no evidence of the fact in the record.

IV. FILING.

A. Time.—"At any time before final decree, a defendant may be allowed to file his answer, but a cause shall not be sent to the rules or continued because an answer is filed in it, unless good cause be shown therefor." Va. Code, § 3275.

A similar statute is thus construed in Bowles v. Woodson, 6 Gratt. 81: "A defendant in chancery, though in default for want of an answer, ought to be permitted to file any proper answer at any time before a final decree." See also, Bean v. Simmons, 9 Gratt. 391; Reynolds v. Bank, 6 Gratt. 183; Brent v. Washington, 18 Gratt. 540.

In Elder v. Harris, 76 Va. 192, the court held that, "the provision of the statute, allowing a defendant to file his answer at any time before final decree, has no reference to an amended or supplemental answer." See further applications of the above quoted statute, in Welsh v. Solenberger, 85 Va. 441, 8 S. E. Rep. 91; Radford v. Fowlkes, 85 Va. 820, 8 S. E. Rep. 817; Buford v. North R., etc., Co., 90 Va. 418, 18 S. E. Rep. 914; Ogden v. Brown, 83 Va. 670, 3 S. E. Rep. 236.

In West Virginia there is a statute similar to that in Virginia abovequoted. See W. Va. Code, ch. 125, § 53. For constructions of this statute, see Elliott v. Hutchinson, 8 W. Va. 452; Tracewell v. Boggs, 14 W. Va. 254.

1. Filing at Rules.—Answers except in cases of injunction, can only be filed at rules or in court. Bank v. Huntington, etc., Co., 41 W. Va. 530, 23 S. E. Rep. 792; Goddin v. Vaughn, 14 Gratt. 102; Zell, etc., Co. v. Heatherly, 38 W. Va. 409, 18 S. E. Rep. 611; Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. 200.

The irregularities or defects at rules are waived by the submission of the case for hearing. Ronald v. Bank, 90 Va. 815, 20 S. E. Rep. 780.

2. Failure to File Answer.—By Va. Code, § 3284 and W. Va. Code, ch. 125, § 44, a defendant who appears and fails to plead answer, etc., may be given a rule to plead, and if he continue in default, at the next rule day the bill will be taken for confessed, as to him. See Price v. Thrash, 30 Gratt. 515 and Hartley v. Roffe, 12 W. Va. 401, for applications of these statutes.

In Mitchell v. Evans, 29 W. Va. 569, 2 S. E. Rep. 84, the syllabus by the court was as follows: "A decree overruling a demurrer by the defendant to the plaintiff's bill uses these words, 'and the defendant not asking further time to answer said bill.' Held, these words, as construed by the context, are equivalent to the words, 'and the defendant not desiring further time,' etc., and therefore operated as a waiver of a rule upon the defendant to answer the bill."

3. After Demurrer Overruled.—If a demurrer to the plaintiff's bill be overruled the defendant may be required to answer the bill forthwith, and in default thereof the bill may be taken for confessed, and the matter thereof decreed, or the plaintiff may have an attachment against him or an order for him to be brought in to answer interrogatories. This is the substance of the statutes in Virginia and West Virginia on the subject. See Va. Code, §§ 3273, 3289; W. Va. Code, ch. 125, §§ 30, 48.

For judicial construction of these statutes, see Sutton v. Gatewood, 6 Munf. 398; Bank v. Nelson, 1 Gratt. 108; Capehart v. Hale, 6 W. Va. 547; Nichols v. Nichols, 8 W. Va. 174; Pecks v. Chambers, 8 W. Va. 210; McKay v. McKay, 28 W. Va. 514; Moore v. Smith, 26 W. Va. 379; Gates v. Cragg, 11 W. Va. 300;

Mitchell v. Evans, 29 W. Va. 569, 2 S. E. Rep. 84; Reynolds v. Bank, 6 Gratt. 174; Brent v. Washington, 18 Gratt. 540.

Where the defendant's demurrer to the bill is overruled, he is at liberty to file any sufficient answer. Bank v. Nelson, 1 Gratt. 108; Billingsley v. Manear, 47 W. Va. —, 35 S. E. Rep. 847.

4. Answer to Injunction Bill.—"There seems to be some confusion of opinion among the legal profession, as to when and where an answer may be filed to a bill of injunction, and be considered and have its proper effect on a motion to dissolve. In the case of Goddin v. Vaughn's Ex'ors et al., 14 Gratt. 102, JUDGE LEE in delivering the opinion of the court, at pages 129 and 130 says: 'Another objection taken for the first time in the argument here, is that the motion to dissolve was premature, or at least that the answer should not have been read on the hearing, because it had not been filed either in court or at the rules. Generally it is true that an answer can only be filed during the session of the court or at the rules, but by our statute, as I think, an exception is made in cases of injunction. The object, in giving the judge in vacation power to dissolve an injunction, was to prevent delay and this would be to some extent defeated, if a party had to wait until the rule day or a session of the court, before he could put in his answer, and have the benefit of it on a motion to dissolve. I think the larger power to entertain and decide the motion to dissolve, embraces that of receiving the answer and making it a part of the record. If there was anything in the objection, it should properly have been made, when the motion to dissolve was heard,' &c. It seems to me, that these views of JUDGE LEE are correct and well founded, and I think in addition, that the answer may not only be received, as stated by JUDGE LEE and made a part of the record, but that a replication to such answer may likewise be received, and made a part of the record by the judge at the hearing of the motion to dissolve." Hayzlett v. McMillan, 11 W. Va. 477.

5. Answer to Cross-Bill.—It is error to grant leave to answer a cross-bill after a final decree settling the rights of the parties has been rendered. Scott v. Rowland, 82 Va. 484. This case also held, that an answer cannot be treated as a cross-bill if proper relief is attainable on the bill and answer.

6. When Conditional.—After a decree for an account against a defendant who is in contempt, and a report of a commissioner, such defendant can be permitted to file his answer on condition only, that he does not delay the trial. Fisher v. Fisher, 4 H. & M. 484.

The answer of an absent defendant cannot be received, except upon paying down or giving security for the payment of such costs as the court shall think reasonable, unless the plaintiff will consent that the answer may be filed without such security. Hooe v. Barber, 4 H. & M. 440.

7. Waiver of Objections to Filing of Bill.—It is the duty of the clerk to dismiss a suit, when the process is served, and the bill is not filed in the time prescribed by the statute. But if the bill is filed before an order of dismissal is entered, and the defendant answers without insisting upon the dismissal of the suit, and consents to a hearing of the cause, he thereby waives the objection. Buchanan v. King, 22 Gratt. 414.

V. EXCEPTIONS TO.

A. Office and Object.—Exceptions are allegations in writing stating the particular points or matters, with respect to which the complainant considers the answer insufficient as not responsive to the bill, or scandalous, or impertinent. The object of exceptions is to direct the attention of the court to the points excepted to, and to take its opinion thereon, before further proceedings are had, to the end that, if the answer is insufficient, a better answer may be compelled, or if scandalous or impertinent, that the scandalous or impertinent matter may be expunged. Richardson v. Donehoo, 16 W. Va. 685; Bennett v. Pierce, 45 W. Va. 654, 31 S. E. Rep. 972.

B. Essentials.—Mr. Barton, in his admirable work on Chancery Practice (2d Ed.) pp. 415, 416, says: "The exceptions should pray that the defendant put in a further and full answer to the bill, and all the points of insufficiency should be fully and minutely stated, for, after the answer to the exceptions, unless the defendant files a further answer, or except in the case of a clear mistake, the plaintiff cannot add to his exceptions, nor will he be allowed to file exceptions after a replication to the answer."

C. Mode of Excepting.—The mode in which an exception to an answer shall point out the omission excepted to, is a matter of practice discretionary with the court, and not a subject of appeal. Craig v. Sebrell, 9 Gratt. 181.

D. For Insufficiency, (See also Infra, "Admissions").—Objections to an answer for insufficiency, and other proper objections to an answer are set up by exceptions, which ought to be and are generally written on the answer itself. Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 515; Burlew v. Quarrier, 16 W. Va. 108.

"A total failure to answer admits the whole bill to be true; ergo, a partial failure to answer admits the part unanswered to be true. But in the case of a total failure, the party is in contempt; and yet such steps are taken, as are calculated to warn him of the effects of his contumacy. Whereas, when he answers, and no exception is taken to his answer as insufficient, he has no notice that hereafter, at the hearing, certain facts will be relied on as proved because he has not expressly noticed and negatived them in his answer." Per CARR, J., in Coleman v. Lyne, 4 Rand. 456.

1. When Overruled.—The court, in Richardson v. Donehoo, 16 W. Va. 708, said: "Exceptions for insufficiency of an answer can only be sustained where some material allegation, charge or interrogatory in the bill is not fully answered. Exceptions founded on verbal criticism, slight defects and the omission of immaterial matter, will be disallowed and treated as vexatious." See also, Kelly v. Lehigh, etc., Co., 98 Va. —, 36 S. E. Rep. 511.

2. Issue upon.—In Bank v. Parsons, 42 W. Va. 147, 24 S. E. Rep. 557, it was decided that when the exceptions to an answer are set down to be argued, the court simply decides whether the answer is sufficient or not. See also, Clarke v. Tinsley, 4 Rand. 250. In this latter case the chancellor instead of deciding whether the exceptions were good or bad entered a decree as upon a hearing and sent the cause to a commissioner for an account. On appeal, the proceedings subsequent to the exceptions were set aside, and the cause sent back for the exceptions to be heard. However, in Goddin v. Vaughn, 14 Gratt. 102, it was held that if exceptions to an answer are not well founded, it is not ground for reversing a decree, that they were not set down to be argued, but the cause was heard and decided without passing upon them.

E. Filing Exceptions.—In both Virginia and West Virginia, there are identical statutes regulating this proceeding, which provide that "when the plaintiff files exceptions to an answer, they must be set down to be argued." Va. Code, § 3276; W. Va. Code, ch. 125, § 54. See Craig v. Sebrell, 9 Gratt. 181; Blair v. Core, 20 W. Va. 265; Burlew v. Quarrier, 16 W. Va. 109; Richardson v. Donehoo, 16 W. Va. 685. This last case contains an approved form of exceptions to answer. In Johnston v. Wilson, 29 Gratt. 200, it was held that when exceptions to an answer are sustained, the defendant will be allowed further time to answer.

F. Effect When Sustained.—If the exceptions to an answer are sustained and the defendant refuse to answer further within the time required by the court, the bill may be taken for confessed, and a decree entered accordingly. Clarke v. Tinsley, 4 Rand. 25; Coleman v. Lyne, 4 Rand. 456; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 417.

Where exceptions to a part of an answer are sustained, and the defendant does not ask leave to amend his answer, the case may be heard on the bill and so much of the answer as is not excepted to. This rule was laid down in Chapman v. R. Co., 38 W. Va. 307.

G. Disposal of Exceptions.—In West Virginia there may be a reference of exceptions to a commissioner in the discretion of the court. Arnold v. Slaughter, 36 W. Va. 593, 15 S. E. Rep. 252.

H. On Appeal.—In Burlew v. Quarrier, 16 W. Va. 109, syllabi 10 and 11 contain the following by the court: "When no exception or objection was taken in the court below, so far as the record shows, to an answer in chancery or to the filing thereof, because not verified by affidavit, it is too late to make the objection in the appellate court. But when there are specific allegations of material facts in a bill in equity, and the answer does not specifically admit or deny such material allegations, but among other things contains this clause, viz: 'They deny all the material allegations contained in the plaintiff's bill, and call for strict proof of the same,' while this denial is general and not sufficient to constitute good pleading in chancery proceedings, if excepted to properly in the court below, still in the absence of such exceptions in the court below the appellate court will generally consider said part of the answer as controverting said material allegations of the bill."

"If by inadvertence the circuit court decides a cause upon the bill and answer, when the record shows, that the answer had been replied to generally, and the case made by the bill and answer is entirely different from the case made by the bill, answer and general replication, this court will reverse the decree so entered upon the bill and answer. It will however enter no decree in the cause made by the bill, answer and general replication, as such cause has never been before the circuit court for its consideration and has never been acted upon by it. This court will simply remand the case to the circuit court to be proceeded with, as if no decree had been entered in the cause." Armstrong v. Grafton, 23 W. Va. 2.

VI. ISSUE UPON AN ANSWER.

A. Defendant Setting the Case for Hearing.—In Virginia, if one month, and in West Virginia if two months, elapse after the answer of a defendant is filed, without the cause being set for hearing and without exception being filed to such answer, the defendant may have the cause set for hearing as to himself. Va. Code, § 3291; W. Va. Code, ch. 125, § 52. See Dalby v. Price, 2 Wash. 191; Poling v. Johnson, 2 Rob. 255.

B. Plaintiff Setting the Case for Hearing.—A plaintiff in equity may at or after the rule day at which the bill is taken for confessed as to any defendant, or at which his answer is filed, (or, in Virginia, whenever the execution of an order of publication against him is completed,) have the cause set for hearing as to such defendant, and it may be so set for hearing on the answer, or upon a general replication thereto, as the plaintiff may prefer. Va. Code, § 3291; W. Va. Code, ch. 125, § 50.

C. Replication to Answer.—Special replications have long since fallen into disuse. See 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 1445; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 441. The present practice is, if the plaintiff conceives, from any matter in the answer or plea, that his bill is not properly adapted to the case, he may obtain leave from the court to amend his bill, or may file a supplemental bill. Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 442, and cases cited. For the practice in West Virginia see infra, "As Cross-Bills—Statute."

D. Omission of Replication.—It is provided by statute, that no decree shall be reversed for want of a replication to the answer, although the defendant has or has not taken depositions, if there has been a hearing upon the merits. Va. Code, § 3450. See application of this statute in Dabney v. Preston, 25 Gratt. 838; Harris v. Harris, 31 Gratt. 19; Simmons v. Simmons, 33 Gratt. 451; Cocke v. Minor, 25 Gratt. 246; Jones v. Degge, 84 Va. 685, 5 S. E. Rep. 799; Kern v. Wyatt, 89 Va. 885, 17 S. E. Rep. 549; Ward v. Funsten, 86 Va. 366, 10 S. E. Rep. 415.

The West Virginia statute upon the subject, similar to the former Virginia statute, provides, that no decree shall be reversed for want of a replication to the answer, where the defendant has taken depositions as if there had been a replication, and it appears that there was a fair hearing upon the merits. W. Va. Code, ch. 134, § 4. See Goddin v. Vaughn, 14 Gratt. 131; Jones v. Janes, 6 Leigh 174; Forqueran v. Donnelly, 7 W. Va. 114; Coal R., etc., Co. v. Webb, 3 W. Va. 438; Martin v. Rellahan, 3 W. Va. 480; Moore v. Wheeler, 10 W. Va. 41; Richardson v. Donehoo, 16 W. Va. 707; Chalfants v. Martin, 25 W. Va. 394; Cunningham v. Hedrick, 23 W. Va. 580.

The effect of a failure to reply under these enactments, would leave the answer to be taken as wholly true. 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 445; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 441. The question, however, will probably never arise, since it has (at least in Virginia) become an established custom for the clerk himself to enter a replication.

VII. ADMISSIONS IN.

A. General Rule.—In Dangerfield v. Claiborne, 2 H. & M. 18, it was said: "The rule in future will be understood as settled; that, where the answer is not responsive to a material allegation of the bill, the plaintiff may except to it as insufficient, or may move to have that part of the bill taken for confessed; but if he does neither, he shall not, on the trial, avail himself of any implied admission by the defendant: for, where the defendant does not answer at all, the plaintiff cannot take his bill for confessed, without an order of court to that effect, and having it served upon the defendant; and this is the only evidence of his admission. Of course, if this mode of proceeding, as to the confession of the whole bill, be correct, it must be equally correct as to the confession of any part."

This proposition was apparently overruled in the later decision of Page v. Winston, 2 Munf. 298, and Scott v. Gibbon, 5 Munf. 86. A close perusal of the facts in these cases will, however, disclose certain distinctions, by which they may be reconciled with the older adjudication. In both cases the onus probandi lay upon the defendant,—in Page v. Winston because of the fact that the allegation in the bill was negative—that something was not done, while in Scott v. Gibbon, certain documentary evidence proved prima facie that the fact alleged, and not denied, was true. The still more recent cases adhere to the proposition laid down in Dangerfield v. Claiborne, 2 H. & M. 18. See Cropper v. Burtons, 5 Leigh 426; Coleman v. Lyne, 4 Rand. 454; Argenbright v. Campbell, 3 H. & M. 165; Miller v. Argyle, 5 Leigh 460; Clinch R. M. Co. v. Harrison, 91 Va. 181, 21 S. E. Rep. 660; 1 Va. Law Reg. 45.

1. Qualifications.—Where an injunction is granted, and a material fact is alleged in the bill, and not denied in the answer, such fact must be taken as true on a motion to dissolve; and no other proof will be required on such motion, though at the hearing the plaintiff would have to bear the burden of proof. Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. 198; B. & O. R. Co. v. City of Wheeling, 18 Gratt. 61; Ludington v. Tiffany, 6 W. Va. 11.

If the plaintiff in equity call upon the defendant, as assignee of a bond, to say whether he had notice of the consideration thereof, when he received the money due thereon; and, in his answer, he says, that he had no such notice when he took the assignment, the answer is not to be considered as admitting notice at the time of receiving the money. Edgar v. Donnally, 2 Munf. 387.

If matter appear in the answer of a defendant in equity, which is nowise alleged in the bill, it cannot justify a decree for plaintiff against defendant, though it might have been ground for such decree, if it had been alleged in the bill. (Per BROCKENBROUGH, J.) Eib v. Martin, 5 Leigh 132.

B. Conclusiveness of.—The admissions in an answer to the allegations of a bill are conclusive, and cannot be denied by the defendant in his proofs. Shirley v. Long, 6 Rand. 764. In this case a defendant in his answer admitted that a slave claimed by him as a gift had always been in the possession of the donor. Held, that he cannot be allowed to give evidence that he, the donee, had the possession, for such evidence varies from the admission.

In the case of Kerr v. Love, 1 Wash. 172, a decree against the defendant was based entirely upon the admissions in his answer without other proof.

C. Contradictions in Answer.—Where an answer contains positive denials or statements, which are responsive to the bill, these will not be overthrown by any admissions, or contradictions which may be found in the answer. Neither will the weight of the whole answer be destroyed, by proof that the defendant is unworthy of credit, nor by direct or indirect proof that the answer is false in one or several respects: the only effect of such proof being to destroy the weight of the answer to the extent to which it is disproved by that amount of evidence which is required by the rule in chancery. See Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 187; Powell v. Manson, 22 Gratt. 189; Broughton v. Coffey, 18 Gratt. 196; Shannon v. McMullin, 25 Gratt. 211. See infra, "As Evidence."

VIII. AS EVIDENCE.

A. General Rule.—"The general rule," says CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL, "that either two witnesses or one witness with probable circumstances will be required to outweigh an answer asserting a fact responsively to a bill, is admitted. The reason upon which the rule stands is this: The plaintiff calls upon the defendant to answer an allegation he makes, and thereby admits the answer to be evidence. If it is testimony, it is equal to the testimony of any other witness; and as the plaintiff cannot prevail if the balance of proof be not in his favor, he must have circumstances in addition to his single witness, in order to turn the balance. But, he adds, 'certainly there may be evidence arising from circumstances stronger than the testimony of any single witness.' Clark's Ex'ors v. Van Riemsdyk, 9 Cranch 158, 160. This case, among numerous others, is cited by the editor (1 Dan. Ch. Prac. 843, note 7, 4 Amer. Ed.) in support of the proposition, that 'where a replication is put in and the parties proceed to a hearing, all the allegations of the answer which are responsive to the bill shall be taken as true, unless they are disproved by evidence of greater weight than the testimony of a single witness,' and that 'this may result from the testimony of two witnesses; or of one with corroborating circumstances; or from corroborating circumstances alone; or from documentary evidence alone.'" Jones v. Abraham, 75 Va. 470; Moore v. Ullman, 80 Va. 307.

"There is nothing better settled than that where the answer is responsive to the bill, it is to be taken as true, unless it be contradicted by two witnesses or by one witness and corroborating circumstances.

Tuck. Com. book 3, p. 502, and cases cited. The rule is thus broadly laid down by Story: 'In every case the answer of the defendant to a bill filed against him upon any matter stated in the bill and responsive to it, is evidence in his own favor. Nay, the doctrine of equity goes farther, for not only is such an answer proof in favor of defendant, as to the matters of fact of which the bill seeks a disclosure from him; but it is conclusive in his favor, unless it is overcome by the satisfactory testimony of two opposing witnesses, or of one witness corroborated by other circumstances and facts, which give to it a greater weight than the answer, or which are equivalent in weight to a second witness.' 2 Story's Eq., § 1528. In the absence of such opposing testimony, the court will neither make a decree, nor send the case to be tried at law; but will simply dismiss the bill. Id. This is strongly illustrated by two cases recently decided by this court, in each of which a decree in favor of the plaintiff in such a case was reversed, because the court below, instead of ordering an issue, ought to have dismissed the bill. Wise v. Lamb, 9 Gratt. 294; Smith v. Betty, 11 Id. 752." This was the opinion of the court, in Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 205. See also, Beverley v. Walden, 20 Gratt. 154; Grigsby v. Weaver, 5 Leigh 197; Carter v. Carter, 82 Va. 636; Elder v. Harris, 75 Va. 72; Keagy v. Trout, 85 Va. 895, 7 S. E. Rep. 829; Jones v. Christian, 86 Va. 1081, 11 S. E. Rep. 984; Morrison v. Grubb, 23 Gratt. 350; Beale v. Hall, 97 Va. 383, 34 S. E. Rep. 53.

1. Conclusiveness.—In Thompson v. Clark, 81 Va. 428, in applying to the ordinary rule as to the effect of an answer to a bill for discovery and relief, the court continued:—"By that rule the answer is treated as evidence, including its affirmative statements of fact which are pertinent to the discovery sought by the bill, and is conclusive, unless overcome by the testimony of two opposing witnesses, or of one witness corroborated by other circumstances, or by corroborating circumstances or documentary evidence alone. Shurtz v. Johnson, 28 Gratt. 657; Jones v. Abraham, 75 Va. 466; Bell v. Moon, 79 Va. 341; Moore v. Ullman, 80 Va. 307." See to the same effect, Va. Code, § 3281; Corbin v. Mills, 19 Gratt. 466; Morrison v. Grubb, 23 Gratt. 342;

Maupin v. Whiting, 1 Call 225; Pryor v. Adams, 1 Call 390; Buck v. Copland, 2 Call 229; Beatty v. Smith, 2 H. & M. 396; Batchelder v. White, 80 Va. 109; Beffner v. Miller, 2 Munf. 45; Wise v. Lamb, 9 Gratt. 294; Powell v. Manson, 22 Gratt. 177; Statham v. Ferguson, 25 Gratt. 39; Shurtz v. Johnson, 28 Gratt. 657; Shultz v. Hansbrough, 33 Gratt. 581; Bullock v. Goodall, 3 Call 49; Love v. Braxton, 5 Call 537; Auditor v. Johnson, 1 H. & M. 536; Ward v. Cornett, 91 Va. 679, 22 S. E. Rep. 494; Roberts v. Kelly, 2 P. & H. 396, 2 Va. Law Reg. 681; Smith v. Smith, 92 Va. 664, 24 S. E. Rep. 280; Hoomes v. Smock, 1 Wash. 339; Kennedy v. Baylor, 1 Wash. 162; Arnold v. Welton, 5 W. Va. 436.

In West Virginia, this subject is now regulated by statute as follows: "When a defendant in equity shall, in his answer, deny any material allegation of the bill, the effect of such denial shall only be to put the plaintiff on satisfactory proof of the truth of such allegation, and any evidence which satisfies the court or jury of the truth thereof shall be sufficient to establish the same." Code of W. Va. ch. 125, § 59. This statute is construed in the following cases: Lowry v. Buffington, 6 W. Va. 299; Brown v. Knapp, 7 W. Va. 678; Nichols v. Nichols, 9 W. Va. 174; Hayzlett v. McMillan, 11 W. Va. 464; Bronson v. Vaughan, 44 W. Va. 406, 29 S. E. Rep. 1022; Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 584.

2. Exception.—In Purcell v. Purcell, 4 H. & M. 511 the court, in the course of its opinion, said: "The standing rule in equity is, that an answer is not evidence in favor of the defendant, unless it be responsive to the bill; and therefore, whatever the answer asserts affirmatively, in opposition to the plaintiff's demand, must be proved by indifferent testimony." See further, James R., etc. Co. v. Littlejohn, 18 Gratt. 77; Leas v. Eldson, 9 Gratt. 27; Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. 266; Paynes v. Coles, 1 Munf. 378; Beckwith v. Butler, 1 Wash. 225; Lewis v. Mason, 84 Va. 738, 10 S. E. Rep. 529; Hatcher v. Crews, 75 Va. 460; Jones v. Cunningham, 7 W. Va. 713; Fluharty v. Beatty, 4 W. Va. 525; Miller v. Blose, 30 Gratt. 254; Statham v. Ferguson, 25 Gratt. 39; Bowman v. Wolford, 80 Va. 215; Corbin v. Mills, 19 Gratt. 466; Fisk v. Denny, 75 Va. 663; Blow v. Maynard, 2 Leigh 49; Wilkins v. Woodfin, 5 Munf. 183; King v. Malone, 31 Gratt. 169; Porter v. Young, 85 Va. 53, 6 S. E. Rep. 808.

a. Qualification of Exception.—Even though an answer contain affirmative matter, if such matter be pertinent to the charges or interrogatories in the bill, it is nevertheless evidence of such affirmation. This qualification was laid down in Lyons v. Miller, 6 Gratt. 439; Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 205; Powell v. Manson, 22 Gratt. 177; Thompson v. Clark, 81 Va. 422.

B. When Oath to Answer Waived.—"If the complainant in a suit in equity shall, in his bill, waive an answer under oath, or shall only require an answer under oath, with regard to certain specified interrogatories, the answer of the defendant, though under oath, except such part thereof as shall be directly responsive to such interrogatories, shall not be evidence in his favor, unless the cause be heard upon bill and answer only; but may, nevertheless, be used as an affidavit with the same effect as heretofore upon a motion to grant or dissolve any injunction, or upon any other incidental motion in the cause; but this shall not prevent a defendant from testifying in his own behalf, where he would otherwise be a competent witness." Va. Code, § 3281.

1. Former Rule.—Prior to the passage of the above quoted statute (Acts 1883-4, p. 15), it was the settled rule in Virginia, that, even though the complainant in his bill expressly waive the oath to the respondent's answer, yet that he could not, by thus disclaiming the benefit of a discovery, deprive the defendant of his right to answer under oath and have the advantage of such answer as evidence in his favor, so far as responsive to the bill. See Jones v. Abraham, 76 Va. 466; Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 187; Thornton v. Gordon, 2 Rob. 719; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 418.

But the statute seems plainly to alter this rule, and allow the plaintiff to deprive the defendant of the weight of his answer as evidence, by the express waiver of oath thereto. Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 418.

2. Express Waiver Necessary.—Construing this statute, LEWIS, P., delivering the opinion in Throckmorton v. Throckmorton, 86 Va. 770, 11 S. E. Rep. 289, said: "Our statute (Code, sec. 3281); permitting a complainant in equity to waive in the bill an answer under oath, is taken from the amendment to the forty-first rule of practice for the Federal courts of equity, and in Conley v. Nailor, 118 U. S. 127, it was decided, construing that amendment, that when the bill neither demands nor expressly waives an answer under oath, and the defendant answers under oath, the answer, responsive to the bill, is evidence in his behalf, conclusive if not contradicted. If a plaintiff in equity, it was said, is unwilling that the answer shall be evidence against him, he must expressly waive the oath of the defendant in his bill."

3. In Amended Bill.—Where an original bill does not waive an answer, and the latter is filed under oath, the plaintiff cannot deprive the defendant of the benefit of his sworn answer by filing an amended bill waiving such oath. Throckmorton v. Throckmorton, 86 Va. 769, 11 S. E. Rep. 289.

C. Responsiveness of Answer.—"Every material allegation of the bill not controverted by an answer, and every material allegation of new matter in the answer constituting a claim for affirmative relief, not controverted by a special reply in writing, shall for the purposes of the suit, be taken as true, and no proof thereof shall be required." W. Va. Code, ch. 125, § 36.

This statute is construed in the following cases cited in inverse chronological order: Newlon v. Wade, 43 W. Va. 283, 27 S. E. Rep. 244; Paxton v. Paxton, 38 W. Va. 616, 18 S. E. Rep. 765; Kanawha v. Swann, 37 W. Va. 176, 16 S. E. Rep. 462; Bierne v. Ray, 37 W. Va. 571, 16 S. E. Rep. 804; Elliot v. Trahern, 35 W. Va. 634, 14 S. E. Rep. 223; Cunningham v. Hedrick, 23 W. Va. 579.

A prior but similar statute, to the above, was applied in Richardson v. Donehoo, 16 W. Va. 685; Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 98; Gardner v. Landcraft, 6 W. Va. 86; Dickinson v. R. Co., 7 W. Va. 390; Warren v. Syme, 7 W. Va. 476; Forqueran v. Donnelly, 7 W. Va. 114; Baker v. Oil Tract Co., 7 W. Va. 454; Jones v. Cunningham, 7 W. Va. 707; Laidley v. Kline, 8 W. Va. 218; Middleton v. Selby, 19 W. Va. 167; Snyder v. Martin, 17 W. Va. 276.

In the case of Major v. Ficklin, 85 Va. 738, 8 S. E. Rep. 715, where the defendant answered the plaintiff's bill under oath, and denied its allegations, held, "This answer is evidence, and is sufficient to overturn the allegations in the bill, and leaves the plaintiff without proof, while the defendant's case is established by his answer." See also, Moore v. Ullman, 80 Va. 310.

Where the allegations of a bill of injunction are denied in the answer, and no proof of them is offered, the bill must be dismissed. Sneed v. Smith, 1 Patt. & H. 46; Wise v. Lamb, 9 Gratt. 294.

D. On Motion to Dissolve Injunctions.—"As a general rule an injunction ought not to be dissolved till all the defendants implicated in the charges made by the bill have answered, but there are well established exceptions to this rule. 1st. The plaintiff must have been diligent in taking the necessary steps to procure the answers of all the defendants. 2d. Answers are required only of those defendants upon whom rests the gravamen of the charges in the bill, and lastly no answer need be filed if the injunction on the face of the bill ought not to have been awarded." Syllabus 4, by the court in Shonk v. Knight, 12 W. Va. 668.

Where a bill sets forth a contract and the plaintiff's construction thereof, and the answer admits the contract and claims under it, but denies the correctness of the plaintiff's construction, this is not such a denial as per se, entitles the respondent to a dissolution of the pending injunction. Hughes v. Tinsley, 80 Va. 259.

1. General Rule.—In Shonk v. Knight, 12 W. Va. 668, there was a motion, on bill and answer, to dissolve an injunction. Held, "The answers fully, fairly, plainly, distinctly and positively deny the allegation, and therefore, according to the general rule laid down by this court in Hayzlett v. McMillan, 11 W. Va. 464, the court on the coming in of such answers, ought to have dissolved the injunction, if, as was the case, the allegations of the bill were unsupported by proof. It is true there are various exceptions to this general rule, as where the plaintiff would lose all the benefit which would otherwise accrue to him should he finally succeed in the cause, or where the facts disclosed by the bill and answer afford strong presumption that the plaintiff will establish his claim for relief on the parol hearing, and it appears that he would suffer great and immediate injury by a dissolution of the injunction, or when a dissolution of the injunction would in effect amount to a complete denial of the relief sought by the bill. In these and some other cases it would be proper to continue the injunction till the hearing." See further, North v. Perrow, 4 Rand. 1; Thornton v. Gordon, 2 Rob. 719; Hogan v. Duke, 20 Gratt. 244; Deloney v. Hutcheson, 2 Rand. 183; Moore v. Steelman, 80 Va. 340; Thomas v. Rowe (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 157; Motley v. Frank, 87 Va. 432, 13 S. E. Rep. 26; Spencer v. Jones, 85 Va. 174, 7 S. E. Rep. 180; Muller v. Stone, 84 Va. 888, 6 S. E. Rep. 223; Va. Code, § 3281.

a. Exceptions to.—Where the equity of a bill of injunction is not denied, but a new equity is set up by the answer, to repel or avoid it, such answer, read as an affidavit on a motion to dissolve, is not sufficient, of itself, to support the motion. Noyes v. Vickers, 39 W. Va. 30, 19 S. E. Rep. 429; Kerr v. Hill, 27 W. Va. 607; Atkinson v. Beckett, 36 W. Va. 438, 15 S. E. Rep. 179; Hughes v. Tinsley, 80 Va. 259.

On a motion to dissolve an injunction, made without any answer by the defendant, all the allegations of the bill must be taken as true. Peatross v. M'Laughlin, 6 Gratt. 64.

E. In Other Causes.—The answer of a defendant in equity, is competent evidence against the same defendant, in a suit at law against him, although the plaintiff at law was not a party to the suit in equity. Hunter v. Jones, 6 Rand. 541.

In a suit against parties claiming under C, plaintiffs rely on statements in the answer of C in another case. The parties claiming under C are not estopped by these statements; but they have only the effect of admissions or declarations, not made in the pleadings in the cause, and their weight is to be ascertained by the circumstances connected with them. However, C, under whom defendant claims, having stated in her answer in another case, that a certain arrangement was made by the consent of the parties interested, the defendant must be bound by this admission, unless he can clearly establish that it was made under a mistake. Tabb v. Cabell, 17 Gratt. 100.

In Ellzey v. Lane, 4 Munf. 66, it was held that a complainant in his subsequent defense was not authorized to use as evidence his answer to a prior bill of review which had been dismissed on the ground that it ought not to have been allowed, the decree not being final.

F. Against Co-Defendant.—It is a well established rule that the answer of one defendant is not evidence against his co-defendant. This rule is based on the common sense reason that the defendant against whom the answer is proposed to be used as evidence would not have the benefit of a cross-examination, which is the main safeguard of truth. Dade v. Madison, 5 Leigh 401; Hoomes v. Smock, 1 Wash. 389; Pettit v. Jennings, 2 Rob. 681; 3 Va. Law Reg. 51; 4 Va. Law Reg. 582.

In Fisher v. White, 94 Va. 242, 26 S. E. Rep. 573, it is said: "No rule is better settled than that the answer of one defendant cannot be read as evidence by the plaintiff against another defendant where there is no joint interest, privity, fraud, collusion, or combination between the co-defendants. Dade v. Madison, 5 Leigh 401, 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 841 (5th Ed.); 1 Greenleaf's Ev., sec. 176." See also, Wytheville, etc., Co. v. Frick Co., 96 Va. 141, 30 S. E. Rep. 491; Gilmer v. Baker, 24 W. Va. 72.

G. For Co-Defendant.—In regard to whether the answer of one defendant is available as evidence in favor of co-defendant, there seems to be some conflict among the authorities. Prof. Minor in his able treatise of equity practice (4 Min. Inst. [3d Ed.] 1438), says that an answer is not, in general, available for a co-defendant, and he mentions no exceptions to the rule. Mr. Barton, however, in his authoritative work on Chancery Practice (Barton's Ch. Pr. [2d Ed.] 435), declares that under certain circumstances the answer of one defendant does enure to the benefit of his co-defendant.

The former of these text writers relies upon the case of Hoomes v. Smock, 1 Wash. 382, for his conclusion, while the latter bases his argument upon the decision in Dade v. Madison, 5 Leigh 401; Pettit v. Jennings, 2 Rob. 697; Cartigne v. Raymond, 4 Leigh 579.

It would, perhaps, be too presumptuous to undertake to dogmatically declare either the one or the other of such eminent writers in the wrong, though Mr. Barton's view seems the more consonant with sound principle, and is sustained in Ashby v. Bell, 80 Va. 819, in Terry v. Fontaine, 83 Va. 458, 2 S. E. Rep. 748; and in Johnston v. Zane, 11 Gratt. 568; Frank v. Lillienfeld, 33 Gratt. 380.

H. Hearing on Bill and Answer.—When a suit in equity is heard upon bill and answer, the answer is taken to be true in all its allegations whether responsive to the bill or not, unless the plaintiff files a replication thereto. The reason for this rule is that such failure on the part of the plaintiff to put in issue the facts alleged in the answer would preclude the defendant from proving them. Jones v. Mason, 5 Rand. 577, 16 Am. Dec. 761; Kennedy v. Baylor, 1 Wash. 162; Pickett v. Chilton, 5 Munf. 467; Findlay v. Smith, 6 Munf. 142, 8 Am. Dec. 733; Blanton v. Brackett, 5 Call 232; Copeland v. McCue, 5 W. Va. 264;

Cleggett v. Kittle, 6 W. Va. 452; Bierne v. Ray, 8 W. Va. 571, 16 S. E. Rep. 804; Snyder v. Martin, 17 W. Va. 276; Martin v. Rellahan, 3 W. Va. 480; Saunders v. James, 85 Va. 936, 9 S. E. Rep. 147; Ingles v. Stram, 91 Va. 209, 21 S. E. Rep. 490; Bryant v. Groves, 2 W. Va. 10, 24 S. E. Rep. 605; Cocke v. Minor, 25 Gratt. 246; Hartman v. Evans, 38 W. Va. 609, 18 S. E. Rep. 89; Jones v. Degge, 84 Va. 685, 5 S. E. Rep. 799.

When a case in equity comes on to be heard upon the bill, the answers and exhibits, without replication to the answers, the allegations of fact and denials of the answers, must be admitted to be true. If the answer clearly and unequivocally deny these allegations in the bill, upon which alone it can be sustained, or if the answer set up sufficient matter in avoidance of those allegations, in either case the bill should be dismissed. But the facts constituting the equity should be plainly denied or clearly avoided. There should be no fact admitted by the answer inconsistent with defendant's denial, no equivocal denial, no doubtful avoidance. In this case the denials and allegations of the answers, though there was no replication to them, were held not sufficient to defeat the plaintiff's claim. Cocke v. Minor, 25 Gratt. 246.

I. In Special Instances.

1. Evidence Overthrowing Answer.—In Jones v. Abraham, 75 Va. 466, where the answer did not profess to be on the defendant's own knowledge, it was held to be overcome by strong circumstantial evidence alone.

An answer supported by a commissioner's report and acknowledgments by the plaintiff, will not be set aside by evidence of loose conversations between the parties, and conjectures of witnesses. Harris v. Magee, 3 Call 502.

If an answer is not contradicted by the requisite evidence, two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances, no issue should be directed, but the bill must be dismissed. Carter v. Carter, 82 Va. 624; Beverley v. Walden, 20 Gratt. 147; Pryor v. Adams, 1 Call 382.

2. Without Personal Knowledge.—In Tabb v. Cabell, 17 Gratt. 100, it was held that though there is no replication to an answer, yet the averment of a fact of which the defendant could have had no personal knowledge, will not be held conclusive of it, and the testimony of one witness for the plaintiff will be sufficient to disprove such averment.

The answer of a defendant which does not profess to be on his own knowledge, can only be treated as a plea of denial, and not as evidence in his behalf. See Jones v. Abraham, 75 Va. 469; Kincheloe v. Kincheloe, 11 Leigh 393.

3. In a Proceeding Devisavit Vel Non.—Unless in such a proceeding, the bill specially calls for a discovery from the defendant, and unless the facts answered be within his special knowledge, his answer is not evidence in his favor even though responsive. Kincheloe v. Kincheloe, 11 Leigh 393; Coalter v. Bryan, 1 Gratt. 40; Malone v. Hobbs, 1 Rob. 303.

4. Identifying Land.—Where the answer and exhibits, in a suit for partition, identifying the land held by the defendant with the land claimed by the plaintiff in his bill, there is no need for proof on that point. Davis v. Tebbs, 81 Va. 600.

5. Contradicted on Material Points.—Where an answer is disproved in several material points, and contradiction deprives it of the weight which is allowed to answers by the rules of equity practice. Countz v. Gelger, 1 Call 191.

6. Discretion of Court as to Weight.—The court may believe part of an answer and disbelieve another part, though all of it be responsive to the bill. Mayo v. Carrington, 19 Gratt. 74.

7. Answer Taken as a Whole.—In Morrison v. Grubb, 23 Gratt. 342, the respondent in his answer not only denied the allegations in the bill, but made further statements. Held, that the whole answer must be taken together. See also, Clinch R. M. Co. v. Harrison, 91 Va. 130, 21 S. E. Rep. 660; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 422. See supra, "Conclusiveness."

8. To Bills of Discovery.—"Where a cause is retained which is brought into equity on the sole ground of discovery, and of which jurisdiction is acquired on that ground alone, the plaintiff must be content to have it disposed of in accordance with the established practice of the equity forum; that is to say, in accordance with the rule which does not permit the answer in such a case to be overturned by extrinsic evidence, since to falsify the allegation of a necessity for a discovery would defeat the jurisdiction of the court whose aid the plaintiff has invoked. 2 Tucker's Comm. 508." This was the opinion in Thompson v. Clark, 81 Va. 427, following the important case of Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 187, which overruled the doctrine of Lyons v. Miller, 6 Gratt. 427. See further, Chapman v. Turner, 1 Call 280; Smith v. Smith, 92 Va. 606, 24 S. E. Rep. 280. Where, however, the discovery sought by a technical bill of discovery, is required to be used in a trial at law, the general rule does not apply, since the plaintiff has his election to use the answer or not. Thornton v. Gordon, 2 Rob. 725; Powell v. Manson, 22 Gratt. 190; Jones v. Cunningham, 7 W. Va. 707.

9. Evasive Answer.—In Wilkins v. Woodfin, 5 Munf. 184, an evasive answer has held to be outweighed by the testimony of one witness and corroborating circumstances.

10. In Regard to Commissioner's Report.—Where bill to enjoin sale under trust deed alleges that a certain debt was embraced in the trust deed, and the answer denies the allegation, though the answer on oath is waived, and the master's report sustains the denial and is supported by the plaintiff's admissions elsewhere, the report should be confirmed. Adkins v. Edwards, 83 Va. 300, 2 S. E. Rep. 435.

It is settled doctrine that when an account is ordered of a fiduciary's transactions, if additional objections to settled ex parte accounts are discovered, the plaintiff may present the matter before the commissioner, with proper specifications in writing, and the defendant may meet it by affidavit, which has the same weight as an answer in chancery. Davis v. Morris, 76 Va. 34; Corbin v. Mills, 19 Gratt. 465; Chapman v. Shepherd, 24 Gratt. 377; Shugart v. Thompson, 10 Leigh 494.

IX. IN LIEU OF CROSS-BILL.

A. When Allowed.—Where the transaction between the parties are numerous and cognate, and have not all been embraced in the bill, but are set up in the answer, the latter may be treated as a cross-bill and put them in issue, and relief in respect thereto may be granted by the court, so as to avoid multiplicity of suits. Mettert v. Hagan, 18 Gratt. 231; Cralle v. Cralle, 79 Va. 182; Kendrick v. Whitney, 28 Gratt. 646, and note; Kyle v. Kyle, 1 Gratt. 526; Gregg v. Sloan, 76 Va. 502; Tate v. Vance, 27 Gratt. 571; Spoor v. Tilson, 97 Va. 279, 33 S. E. Rep. 609; Wayland v. Crank, 79 Va. 602; Adkins v. Edwards, 83 Va. 300, 2 S. E. Rep. 435.

B. When Not Allowed.—In Scott v. Rowland, 82 Va. 484, it was held that where proper relief is attainable on bill and answer, the answer should not be treated as a cross-bill.

C. In West Virginia.—"The defendant in a suit in equity may, in his answer, allege any new matter constituting a claim for affirmative relief in such suit against the plaintiff or any defendant therein, in the same manner and with like effect as if the same had been alleged in a cross-bill filed by him therein; and in such case, if the plaintiff or defendant against whom such relief is claimed, desire to controvert the relief prayed for in the answer, he shall file a special reply in writing, denying such allegations of the said answer as he does not admit to be true, and stating any facts constituting a defence thereto. But in case a defendant allege new matter in his answer upon which he relies for and prays affirmative relief, such defendant shall not file a cross-bill in the same cause except upon condition of striking from his answer, all such matter and prayer for affirmative relief as are contained in such cross-bill." W. Va. Code, ch. 125, § 35. For applications of this statute see the following cases: Paxton v. Paxton, 38 W. Va. 616, 18 S. E. Rep. 765; Goff v. Price, 42 W. Va. 384, 26 S. E. Rep. 287; N. & W. R. Co. v. McGarry, 42 W. Va. 395, 26 S. E. Rep. 297; Kilbreth v. Roots, 33 W. Va. 600, 11 S. E. Rep. 21; Enoch v. Mining & P. Co., 23 W. Va. 314; Cunningham v. Hedrick, 23 W. Va. 579.

A similar statute, to the one above quoted, was construed in the following cases: Armstrong v. Wilson, 19 W. Va. 108; Middleton v. Selby, 19 W. Va. 168; Alleman v. Kight, 19 W. Va. 201; Rust v. Rust, 17 W. Va. 901; W. Va. O. & O. L. Co. v. Vinal, 14 W. Va. 638; Hickman v. Painter, 11 W. Va. 386; Moore v. Wheeler, 10 W. Va. 35; Tompkins v. Stephens, 10 W. Va. 156; Vanbibber v. Beirne, 6 W. Va. 168.

In construing the above statute the court, in Moore v. Wheeler, 10 W. Va. 42, said: "An answer alleging new matter constituting a claim to affirmative relief in the suit, in the purview and meaning of the section under consideration, was intended simply to be allowed in lieu of a cross-bill in the cause as to such new matter, and not to make any other change in the practice as to pleadings in courts of equity. Vanbibber v. Beirne, et als., 6 W. Va. R. 168." See further, Armstrong v. Wilson, 19 W. Va. 114; Middleton v. Selby, 19 W. Va. 177.

An answer seeking affirmative relief foreign to the original bill was held bad on demurrer in Rust v. Rust, 17 W. Va. 904; McMullen v. Eagan, 21 W. Va. 247.

"Before sections 35 and 36 of chapter 125 of the Code were passed, while it was proper and in accordance with the strict rules of pleading when a bill to enforce a vendor's lien on real estate was filed, if the defendant wished to rescind the contract because the defendant was of unsound mind when it was made, or it was procured by fraud, to file a cross-bill for that purpose; yet where the record showed that the relief could as well be given upon the bill and answer and proofs taken, as if a cross-bill were filed, the filing was dispensed with, as in such case it would be a mere formality to require it." Per Curiam, in Cunningham v. Hedrick, 23 W. Va. 579.

X. ISSUE OUT OF CHANCERY.

A. Discretion of Court in Regard to.—While it is true that directing an issue to be tried by a jury is a matter of discretion in a court of equity, it is equally true that such discretion must be exercised upon sound principle of reason and justice. A mistake in its exercise is a just ground of appeal; and the appellate court must judge whether such discretion has been soundly exercised in a given case. Wise v. Lamb, 9 Gratt. 294; Stannard v. Graves, 2 Call 369; Reed v. Cline's Heirs, 9 Gratt. 136; Beverley v. Walden, 20 Gratt. 147; Robinson v. Allen, 85 Va. 721, 8 S. E. Rep. 885.

B. When Erroneously Awarded.—It is well settled, that in no case ought an issue to be ordered to enable a party to obtain evidence to make out his case; that, when the allegations of the bill are positively denied by the answer, and the plaintiff has failed to furnish two witnesses, or one witness and strong corroborating circumstances, in support of the bill, it is error in the chancellor to order an issue; that no issue should be ordered until the plaintiff has thrown the burden of the proof on the defendant; that, until the onus is shifted, and the case rendered doubtful, by the conflicting evidence of the opposing parties, the defendant cannot be deprived by an order for an issue, of his right to a decision by the court on the case, as made by the pleadings and proofs. Smith's Adm'r v. Betty, 11 Gratt. 752; Pryor v. Adams, 1 Call 382; Wise v. Lamb, 9 Gratt. 294; Grigsby v. Weaver, 5 Leigh 197; Beverley v. Walden, 20 Gratt. 147.

And it is held in Jones v. Christian, 86 Va. 1017, 11 S. E. Rep. 984, that even though an answer under oath be waived, yet when the case made by the bill is not sustained by proof, an issue out of chancery should not be awarded.

C. Evidence.—The rule of evidence is the same on the trial of an issue out of chancery as on the hearing in the chancery court; and such allegations in the answer as are responsive to the bill are conclusive unless contradicted by two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances. Powell v. Manson, 22 Gratt. 190.

In West Virginia, however, this rule does not apply, having been changed by statute, for which, see Tompkins v. Stephens, 10 W. Va. 163; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 481.

D. Instructions.—On the trial of an issue, an instruction that the jury shall weigh the defendant's answer instead of merely the parts responsive to the bill, though rather broad, is not error for which the verdict will be set aside. Snouffer v. Hansbrough, 79 Va. 166; Bank v. Waddill, 27 Gratt. 451.

XI. SPECIAL DEFENSES BY ANSWER.

A. Usury.—The defense of usury may be set up by answer, and though the averments in such answer be very informal, yet if, taken in connection with the charge in the bill, they make the defense of usury in substance, the answer is good. Kelley v. Lewis, 4 W. Va. 456; Smith v. Nicholas, 8 Leigh 830; Crenshaw v. Clark, 5 Leigh 69.

B. Innocent Purchaser.—In Donnell v. King, 7 Leigh 393, it was held that a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice might set up such fact as a defence by way of answer as well as by plea.

In Tompkins v. Mitchell, 2 Rand. 430, the court states the rule to be, "That he who claims protection as a purchaser without notice, must deny notice by answer, though it be not charged in the bill." See also, Downman v. Rust, 6 Rand. 591; Rorer Iron Co. v. Trout, 83 Va. 420, 2 S. E. Rep. 718. In the last case it is held that such an answer must contain the following averments: (1) That they are purchasers for valuable consideration actually paid; (2) That they have received or are best entitled to receive conveyance; (3) That their grantor was in possession of the property at the time; (4) That these facts happened before notice of the adverse claim.

Where a bill is filed to set aside a conveyance by husband to wife, on the ground that it is voluntary, if the wife in her answer set up a contract founded on valuable consideration, she must establish such contract by legal and proper evidence. Blow v. Maynard, 2 Leigh 49; W. & M. College v. Powell, 22 Gratt. 372; Campbell v. Bowles, 30 Gratt. 663; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 428; Flynn v. Jackson, 93 Va. 311, 5 S. E. Rep. 1.

C. Statute of Frauds.—"When an answer admits an agreement for the sale or purchase of land alleged in the bill, though it be but a parol agreement, the defendant must plead the statute of frauds and perjuries, or the answer must claim the benefit of this statute; otherwise he is taken to have admitted an agreement, which is either good under the statute, or otherwise binding on him. The effect is the same under our rules of pleading when the agreement, though parol, is positively and definitely alleged in the bill, and he fails in his answer to deny it, though he does not admit it. The admission in the answer, which produces this effect, is an admission of the fact, that the contract alleged in the bill was made; and the effect of such admission will not be changed by a denial of the justice of enforcing such contract specifically, or by allegation of other facts, which, if true, would render it improper to enforce such contract." Per Curiam, in Fleming v. Holt, 12 W. Va. 144 (Syllabi, 8, 9, 10).

D. In Proceedings against Gaming Transactions.—In both Virginia and West Virginia there are statutes providing that any person, who shall lose to another a certain amount within a certain time, may file a bill against the winner, who shall answer the same, and upon discovery and repayment of the money or property so won or its value, the winner shall be discharged from any forfeiture or punishment which he may have incurred for winning the same. Va. Code, §§ 2837, 2838; W. Va. Code, ch. 97, §§ 2 & 3.

E. To Bill for Divorce.—A divorce suit is conducted as other suits in equity, except that the bill cannot be taken for confessed, and whether the defendant answers or not the cause is heard independently of the admissions of either party. Va. Code, § 2306; W. Va. Code, ch. 64, § 8. See Bailey v. Bailey, 21 Gratt. 48; Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. 307; Throckmorton v. Throckmorton, 86 Va. 769, 11 S. E. Rep. 229; Cralle v. Cralle, 79 Va. 182; Hampton v. Hampton, 5 Va. 148, 12 S. E. Rep. 340.

In Harris v. Harris, 31 Gratt. 19, it was held that the answer to a divorce bill, excluding admissions is entitled to the same weight as evidence as in any other suit in chancery.

XII. IN SPECIAL INSTANCES.

A. Infants.—In the case of Bank v. Patton, 1 Rob. 535, BALDWIN, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "No rule is better settled than that an answer of an infant by guardian cannot be read against him at all for any purpose. 2 Madd. Ch. Pract. 278; Mid. 314, 315; 1 Stark. Ev. Pt. II. p. 278." See also, Alexander v. Davis, 42 W. Va. 465, 26 S. E. Rep. 291.

"The thirty-sixth section of chapter one hundred and twenty-five of the Code, so far as it relates to taking material allegations of a bill or material allegations of new matter in an answer constituting a claim for affirmative relief not controverted by a reply, as true, should be applied strictly, if at all, to the answer of infants by guardians ad litem." The construction of the statute was made in Laidley v. Kline, 8 W. Va. 232.

Before there can be a decree for the sale of an infant's land, there must be an answer filed by his guardian ad litem. Ewing v. Ferguson, 33 Gratt. 548; Hays v. Camden, 38 W. Va. 109, 18 S. E. Rep. 461. But where it appears from the record that the infant defendants appeared and answered by their guardian ad litem, and that there was a general replication thereto, it will be presumed in the court of appeals that the answer was regularly filed, though the answer itself is not found among the papers in the record. Smith v. Henkel, 81 Va. 524.

B. Married Women.—In a suit against a married woman where her husband was made a party for conformity, they each file separate answers. Held, that the answer of the husband cannot be used as evidence for the wife, though that filed by the latter can, so far as responsive to the bill. Frank v. Lillienfeld, 33 Gratt. 377.

Formerly a married woman answered by her husband or next friend. 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 1432. But by Acts 1899-1900, p. 151, she is probably allowed to answer in her own name; the statute providing as follows: "A married women may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, in the same manner as if she were unmarried."

C. Trustees.—Upon a bill against a trustee and cestui que trust in a deed, the trustee answers and puts the allegations of the bill in issue, but the bill is taken for confessed as to the cestui que trust. The answer of the trustee protects the cestui que trust, and the plaintiff must prove his case as to both. Johnston v. Zane, 11 Gratt. 552.

D. Assignors.—Under some circumstances, the answer of the assignor of a claim is held to be competent evidence against his volunteer assignee, in a controversy between said assignee and third persons. Griffin v. Macaulay, 7 Gratt. 476.

E. Co-Trustees.—On a bill filed against two trustees charging notice to one, the trustee charged with notice filed no answer to the bill, though his co-trustee did, denying the allegations of the bill. The effect of this answer was merely to present an issue and throw the burden of proof on the complainant. It could have no further weight. Chapman v. Chapman, 91 Va. 397, 21 S. E. Rep. 813.

F. Lunatics.—In Calloway v. Dinsmore, 83 Va. 309, 2 S. E. Rep. 517, it was held that the answer of the committee of a lunatic, does not relieve the court of the necessity of taking an account of liens in a creditor's suit.

G. Stockholders of a Corporation.—Where a suit is brought against a corporation, a purchaser of its stock cannot answer the plaintiff's bill, unless the corporation refuses to defend. Park v. Petroleum Co., 25 W. Va. 108.

XIII. WHEN TREATED AS PETITION FOR RE-HEARING.

In Staples v. Staples, 85 Va. 76, 7 S. E. Rep. 199, the answer of a personal representative to a creditor's petition asserting a judgment, may be treated as a petition for a rehearing.

XIV. AIDING DEFECTIVE BILLS.

An answer may be used to aid a defective bill and make a case, though on its face the bill does not state such facts as would give courts of equity jurisdiction. Salamone v. Kelley, 80 Va. 86; Green v. Massie, 21 Gratt. 356; Ambler v. Warwick, 1 Leigh 193.

XV. AMENDMENTS OF.

A. General Rule.—The courts are very reluctant to allow amendments to be made to an answer, unless they be clearly upon immaterial points, and the entire matters rests in the sound discretion of the court. 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 1442, 1443; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 444; Elder v. Harris, 76 Va. 187; Foutty v. Poar, 35 W. Va. 70, 12 S. E. Rep. 1096; McKay v. McKay, 33 W. Va. 736, 11 S. E. Rep. 218; Liggon v. Smith, 4 H. & M. 407; Matthews v. Dunbar, 3 W. Va. 188; Radcliff v. Corrothers, 33 W. Va. 632, 11 S. E. Rep. 228.

1. Qualifications.—Where it is evident that an answer was filed under a mistake of fact, the general rule is relaxed and the respondent allowed to amend his answer. Liggon v. Smith, 4 H. & M. 406; 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 1443; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 445.

In White v. Turner, 2 Gratt. 502, a defendant was allowed to amend his answer for the purpose of setting up the statute of limitations in bar of the plaintiff's claim.

It is also held that an amended answer may be allowed to explain equivocal expressions in the first answer. Tracewell v. Boggs, 14 W. Va. 254.

In Jackson v. Cutright, 5 Munf. 308, it was held that even a mistake as to a matter of law was ground for the amendment of an answer.

XVI. WITHDRAWAL AND DEMURRER.

The court may, at its discretion, allow a defendant to withdraw his answer, and demur to the bill, if he has not been guilty of unreasonable delay in making the motion to do so. Weisiger v. Richmond, etc., Co., 90 Va. 795, 20 S. E. Rep. 361.

*Selden &amp; Wife v. Keen &amp; als.

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

Wills—Bequests—Construction.—I by her will gives to her niece B for her life, the interest on a debt due L. of $500. She then says: After the death of B, I gave the said sum of money to L, in trust for C, daughter of E; and I request that it be invested in bank-stock, and applied by L for the benefit of C, as he shall think proper. ITEM: In case the said C shall die under the age of twenty-one years, or marries, I direct that the stock before given to L for her benefit, be vested in him in trust for E her mother, and M, my great-nieces, to be advanced to them in equal portions, as said L may think proper, free from the control of their husbands. At the death of B, C was married, and E and M were dead, leaving children. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same.—The bequest to C is not on a condition in restraint of marriage, but is a conditional limitation; and the bequest over to E and M on the marriage of C is valid.

This case was argued in Richmond, and was decided at Wytheville. It is a branch of the cases reported in 13 Gratt. 615, under the style of McCandlish v. Keen & als. and Same v. Coke's ex'or & als. The only question involved in this case, relates to the construction of a clause in the will of Rebecca Innes deceased. The case is fully stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

Ould & Carrington, for the appellants.

Brooke and Scott, for the appellees.

577

*Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Gloucester county, rendered on the 7th day of August 1874, in two causes then pending in said court. The only question presented by the appeal is, as to the true construction of a portion of the will of Rebecca Innes, which is in these words:

"First: I give and devise to my niece, Susan Byrd, widow and relict of Wm. Byrd, dec'd, late of Gloucester, the arrears of all interest which may be due me at the time of my death, and all the interest which, during her life, may accrue, on a debt due to me of five hundred pounds sterling, from the estate of the said William Byrd, and for which there was a decree in my favor, the 24th day of May 1800, in the high court of chancery in Richmond; and I direct that the said — shall remain on the said security during the life of the said Susan Byrd. Item. After the death of the said Susan Byrd, I give the said sum of money to Fielding Lewis of Charles City, in trust for Courtney W. Brooke, daughter of Elizabeth Brooke; and I request that it be vested in bank-stock, and applied by the said Fielding Lewis, for the benefit of the said Courtney, as he shall think proper. Item. In case the said Courtney W. Brooke shall die under the age of twenty-one years, or marries, I direct that the stock before given to my friend Fielding Lewis for her benefit, be vested in him, in trust for Elizabeth Brooke, her mother, and Mary Chiswell Nelson, my great-nieces, to be advanced to them in equal portions, as the said Fielding Lewis may think proper, and free from the control of their husbands."

Susan Byrd, the legatee for life, died on the 15th of November 1865. Courtney 578 W. Brooke had married *Robert C. Selden before the death of Susan Byrd, but when, does not appear in the record. Fielding Lewis died without having invested the fund in bank stock, according to the request of the testatrix, though the same, it seems, has always continued to be well secured. Elizabeth Brooke and Mary Chiswell Nelson both died in the lifetime of Susan Byrd; the former leaving several children, including the said Courtney W.; the latter leaving an only child, Rebecca C., who intermarried with Edward C. Marshall of Fauquier county.

In this state of things, the question arose, and was litigated in the said two causes, who was entitled, under the said will, to the said sum of five hundred pounds sterling, with interest thereon from the death of the said Susan Byrd—whether the said Robert C. Selden and Courtney W. his wife, or the personal representatives of the said Elizabeth Brooke and Mary Chiswell Nelson.

The court below decided in favor of the latter, and accordingly decreed, by the said decree of the 17th of August 1874, "that the said Rebecca C. Marshall, under and by virtue of the last will and testament of Rebecca Innes deceased, is entitled to one moiety of the sum of five hundred pounds sterling, with interest thereon from the 15th day of November 1865 until paid; and that the remaining moiety of the said sum, with like interest thereon, belongs to and is the property of the estate of Elizabeth Brooke deceased."

From the decision and decree aforesaid the said Robert C. Selden and Courtney W. his wife, applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was accordingly allowed, and which is the appeal we now have to dispose of.

579 *The question, therefore, is, which of these contending claimants are entitled?

On the one hand it is claimed that the representatives of Elizabeth Brooke and Mary Chiswell Nelson are entitled, by the express terms of the will of Rebecca Innes, which gave the subject to them in the event of the marriage of Courtney W. Brooke; which actually happened. If the intention of the testatrix, thus plainly expressed in her will, can legally be carried into effect, it must prevail, and the claim of the said representatives must be sustained. But.

On the other hand, it is claimed, in behalf of the appellants, that the said intention, even if it actually existed, cannot legally be carried into effect; that the condition on which the property was to cease to be that of Courtney W. Brooke, and become that of her mother Elizabeth Brooke and her aunt Mary Chiswell Nelson, was a condition subsequent, in general restraint of marriage, and was therefore against the policy of the law and void, leaving the gift of the subject which had been previously made in the will to Courtney W. Brooke to remain absolute and in full force and effect.

And this is the controversy between these contending parties which we now have to decide.

The great question involved in the case: that is, when a condition is void, as being in restraint of matrimony, and therefore against the policy of the law, was argued by the learned counsel on both sides with great ability and learning; and many decisions on the subject, both English and American, were cited and commented on by them. Few matters have been the subject of more frequent decisions by the courts, especially in England, and few, if any, have been the subject of greater conflict of 580 decision than the one now under consideration. *We have striking evidence of the truth of this assertion in the opinion of Lord Loughborough, in Stackpole v. Beaumont, 3 Vesey R. 89. His lordship there goes into a review of the doctrine of conditions in restraint of marriage being void, and concludes that the rule is one of an arbitrary character, adopted from the Roman civil law; and having no just application to the English law, it had been strangely perverted and embarrassed in its application by the senseless refinements of the judges, until it had become impossible for any one to know, with any approximation towards certainty, what the law of England upon the subject is; and he thus concludes: "The authorities stand so well ranged (upon either side) that the court would not appear to act too boldly, whatever side of the proposition they should adopt; but I have always, upon repeated consideration, thought that there was not much reason in any of the determinations, founded upon a rule applicable to the laws of the country from which it is taken, but not to this country."

In Redfield on the Law of Wills, part ii, p. 669, note 36, the author quotes these remarks of Lord Loughborough, and says of them: "We must confess it has always seemed to us that there is great truth in the exposition of this subject, and of the decisions of the courts upon the question here made by the learned chancellor; and that the strictures which have been made upon its good taste and sound discretion are without much foundation. For where there are hundreds of conflicting cases upon a point, and no general principle running through them, by which they can be arranged or classified, what better can be done than to abandon them all, and fall back upon the reason and good sense of the question, as the courts have of late attempted to do?" And Id. p. 677, the 581 same author *says: "This whole subject, as to what conditions in restraint of marriage, shall be regarded merely in terrorem, and so void; and what as valid, is certainly, both in England and this country, involved in great uncertainty and confusion." In the case of Dickson's Trust (1 Sim. N. S. 37), Lord Cranworth repudiates any such rule of law, as that conditions, where there is no bequest over, are to be held inoperative as mere idle threats in terrorem. And this experienced equity judge here gives utterance to an opinion which could scarcely fail to strike all minds that have examined the cases upon the point as eminently just. He says: "It is impossible to refer to the numerous cases on this subject without feeling that the judges in deciding them have never felt very sure of the ground upon which they were treading," &c.

But without noticing these numerous cases in detail, it will be sufficient to refer to the great case of Scott v. Tyler, with the notes thereto in the last American edition of the "Leading Cases in Equity," where all the material cases on the subject are cited and commented on; and also to 1 Story's Eq. J., 11th edition, §§ 274-291e, and the notes thereto. The case of Scott v. Tyler, is remarkable for having been very fully and ably argued by some of the most distinguished lawyers in England, and was decided by that great chancellor, Lord Thurlow. The edition of Story, to which we have referred, has the advantage of the additions of Redfield, a late editor of that valuable work. By looking alone to these two principal sources of information on this subject, we may fully learn the history and present state of the doctrine in regard to conditions in restraint of marriage. But reference may also be had for the same purpose to 1 Roper on Legacies, pp. 751-833. See also 2 Lom. on Executors &c., 582 *marg. 79, 80; 1 Lom. Dig., top 338-342.

It is somewhat remarkable, that numerous as are the cases which have been decided on the subject in England, there seems to be only one which has yet been decided by this court, and that is the case of Maddox &c. v. Maddox's adm'r &c., 11 Gratt. 84, very much relied on by the counsel for the appellants in this case. But as that case at most only affirms the doctrine, as it seems now to be generally understood in England, in regard to conditions in restraint of marriage, it will not be necessary to notice it any further, at least for the present.

It is unnecessary to state the rule on the subject and the exceptions to it, as they seem to be at present established in England and this country. It is enough to say that this case in our opinion, is governed by principles of law, which are well settled, and cannot be denied, and to state those principles, and show their application to the case.

It is well settled and very clear, that a testator can, by his will, give property to an unmarried female until her marriage, and then and in that event, to other persons. Such a bequest may, incidentally, operate as a restraint upon marriage. But such a possible, or even probable effect, will not invalidate the bequest. It is a bequest which every owner of property, in the exercise of his dominion over it, and his power of disposition of it, has a right to make; and it is a bequest which may be very reasonable and proper to be made, under the circumstances of the case. A head of a family would naturally wish to dispose of his property, or an adequate portion of it, in such a way as to supply the wants of the needy members of the family, at least so long as they might, or were likely to continue to be needy, and then to dispose of it as he might deem to be just and proper. He might, therefore, 583 secure *it to the use of a female member of the family until her marriage, and then in that event to other members of the family. He might well suppose that while the first object of his bounty would need it for her support so long as she remained unmarried and had no one to provide for her, she probably would not need it when she would have a husband to provide for her; and acting on that supposition, he might well, in the event of her marriage, give his bounty such other direction as he might think more proper and suitable to the wants and claims of other members of his family. Nothing, certainly, is more reasonable than this; and nothing is more certain than that it would be perfectly lawful for him to do this.

Now is not this precisely what, in effect, the testatrix, Sarah Innes, did in this case? She, in effect, by her will, gave the use of a debt of five hundred pounds sterling, which was due her, to Susan Byrd during her life, then to Courtney W. Brooke, daughter of Elizabeth Brooke, so long as she might remain single and unmarried, and in case of the death of the said Courtney W. under the age of twenty-one years, or of her marriage, then to the said Elizabeth Brooke and Mary Chiswell Nelson, great-nieces of the testatrix. If the testatrix had plainly expressed her intention in these very words by her will, it could not be denied that their legal effect would have been as above stated. But can it make any difference that she has expressed precisely the same intention by different words? The intention of a testator, as derived from his will, is the polar star by which his will is to be construed. This is the well established rule of construction of wills, and it applies to cases involving the doctrine of conditions, in restraint of marriage, as has been often adjudged. 1 Roper on 584 Legacies, 751; *832, and cases cited.

If the object of a condition of a bequest be to restrain marriage, the condition will be void, as being against the policy of the law, and the bequest will be absolute. If a bequest be made absolutely or for life, or for any other specified period, coupled with a condition that the interest shall cease in the event of the marriage of the donee, without saying anything more; here, by the very terms of the bequest, the condition is in general restraint of marriage, and therefore void. So also, if the testator, by the condition, imposes such clogs upon the marriage, as, in effect, to prohibit it, the condition would be against the policy of the law, and void. A condition intended to be in general restraint of marriage is void. But where the intention, by a proper construction of the will, appears to be otherwise; appears, for instance, to be to create springing and shifting uses for the benefit of different members of the testator's family, according as their needs may seem to require, then the condition, or what is called a condition, is not against the policy of the law, and void. The question then, seems in effect to be one of intention. Did the testatrix intend to impose a general restraint upon the marriage of Courtney W. Brooke? or did she intend to make such a provision as she deemed reasonable and proper for the needs of different members of her family, and such a disposition of her property among them as she deemed to be just?

We think the latter was her intention, and that therefore it must prevail. We can conceive of no motives she could have had for doing so unreasonable a thing as to consign her great-great-niece, Courtney W. Brooke, who must at the death of the testatrix have been very young, to perpetual celibacy. But we can plainly see in the will that she had an entirely different 585 *motive for doing what she did, that is, the motive of providing, reasonably, for three principal objects of her bounty, to-wit, Courtney W. Brooke, Elizabeth Brooke and Mary Chiswell Nelson. This she does by carefully creating a trust in favor of all these objects of her bounty, in these words: "Item: After the death of the said Susan Byrd, I give the said sum of money to Fielding Lewis, of Charles City, in trust for Courtney W. Brooke, daughter of Elizabeth Brooke; and I request that it be vested in bank stock, and applied by the said Fielding Lewis for the benefit of the said Courtney as he shall think proper. Item: In case the said Courtney W. Brooke shall die under the age of twenty-one years, or marries, I direct that the stock before given to my friend Fielding Lewis for her benefit be vested in him in trust for Elizabeth Brooke, her mother, and Mary Chiswell Nelson, my great-nieces, to be advanced to them in equal portions, as the said Fielding Lewis may think proper, and free from the control of their husbands." Now is the whole of this trust equally valid; or is that part of it only valid which relates to Courtney W. Brooke, and all the rest void? and not only void, but a trust springing up in its place, not created by the express words of the will, but in direct conflict with them? It is admitted, or, at least, cannot be denied, that if this intention, thus declared by the will in favor of Elizabeth Brooke and Mary Chiswell Nelson, had been expressed in the form of a limitation, it would have been valid. But it is contended that it is expressed in the form of a condition, which being in general restraint of marriage, is therefore void. We have already said, that in the construction of wills we look at substance, rather than mere form of words, to ascertain the intention of 586 the testator, and then give effect to it if it be legal; and that, applying that rule, there can be no doubt as to the intention of the testatrix in this case. But, in fact, what is called a condition in this case is a conditional limitation—4 Kent's Com. 127; 1 Lom. Dig. top p. 341—and so comes within the literal terms of the rule of which the existence seems to be admitted on all sides, and according to which the trust in favor of Mrs. Brooke and Mrs. Nelson would be valid. 1 Roper, supra. A limitation over in the event of the marriage of the first taker is always an important, if not a conclusive, circumstance to show that a condition in terrorem, and in restraint of marriage, is not intended. 1 Lom. Dig. top p. 341. How much more strongly is that shown in this case, in which there is not a mere limitation over, but a careful trust is created in favor of the parties to whom the limitation is made.

But it is contended that the testatrix did not intend what her words express, and that words which would have expressed a different, and her real intention, were accidentally omitted by her. The obvious answer to this view is, that even if the fact were so, yet as the words of the will have a plain meaning, and especially as they express a reasonable intention, we must construe them accordingly, and cannot, upon mere conjecture, give to them a different meaning and effect. It is impossible for us to say that she did not mean what she says. And if she did so mean, how could she have expressed her meaning in plainer language?

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

amount. In a suit by these legatees against the executor and his grantees, in a deed executed after his qualification, to set aside the deed on the ground of fraud, the decree against the executor, and the report on which it was founded, are prima facie evidence against said grantees of the indebtedness of the executor; but are liable to be surcharged and falsified by them.

This case was heard in Richmond, and was decided at the term of the court at Wytheville. It was a suit in equity in the chancery court of the city of Richmond, brought in January 1871, by J. W. Gill and Louisa, his wife, James S. Scott and Virginia, his wife, and James Lyons, their trustee, claiming to be creditors of Peyton Johnston by decree, against said Peyton Johnston and Ann M., his wife, and their children and trustee, to set aside a conveyance made by Peyton Johnston, by which he conveyed to Andrew Johnston, a house and lot in the city of Richmond, in trust, for the separate use of Mrs. Johnston for her life, remainder to the children. This deed bore date the 8th of January 1859, and was duly recorded on the 31st of the same month. The material facts of the case are as follows:

In July 1846, Peyton Johnston qualified in the county court of Spottsylvania, as the executor of James McIldoe, deceased. He seems to have settled his accounts before the court of probate for some years; but the two daughters of McIldoe having married James S. Scott and J. W. Gill, they instituted their suit in equity in the circuit court of Richmond against the executor, to have an account of his administration. There were several reports made in this cause; from which it appeared that in January 1859, when he conveyed the house and 589 lot aforesaid, he was *indebted to the estate, and in January 1870 a decree was made against him for $20,791.11.

When Peyton Johnston made the deed in question he owned other real estate in the city of Richmond and a tract of land near Richmond in the county of Henrico, he was carrying on an apothecary store in the city, and his circumstances seem to have been flourishing until the great fire in Richmond in April 1865, when his store and all his books, papers and notes due him were burned. Since that time he has probably been insolvent, and he has taken the benefit of the bankrupt act.

The conveyance in trust for Mrs. Johnston and her children was not, on consideration, purely voluntary. Though there was nothing in writing to show the agreement, it was clearly proved by parol testimony, that it was expressly agreed between Peyton Johnston and Mrs. Johnston, that in consideration of the conveyance of the house and lot, upon trust for the benefit of herself and her children, she would join in the conveyance of his other real estate; and that she had carried out the agreement on her part. But it also appeared that the house and lot was much more valuable than her contingent dower interest in his other real estate.

In their defence in this case, the defendants pleaded that the statute of limitations was a bar to this suit; and Mrs. Johnston and her children and the trustee insisted that they, not having been parties to the suit against the executor, the decree in that case was not evidence against them; and they all insisted that the decree was for a much larger amount than was justly due from the executor.

The cause came on to be heard on the 17th of October 1872, when the court 590 held, First. That the statute of limitations was no bar to the suit. Second. That the deed of January 8th, 1859, was not wholly a voluntary conveyance; that the relinquishment of dower by the wife was a consideration deemed valuable in law; and to the extent of the value of the interest relinquished, the settlement must be supported against the claims of all creditors, whether their debts were contracted before the making of the deed or not. Third. That beyond the value of the interest relinquished by the wife, the said deed was void as to the claims of all creditors whose debts were contracted at the time the deed was made. Fourth. That the said settlement was valid, and must be supported against the claims of all creditors whose debts were contracted after the deed was made. And fifth. That inasmuch as the trustee, and Mrs. Ann M. Johnston and her children were not parties to the suit of Scott &c. v. McKildoe's ex'or, in which the decree sought to be set up in this cause was rendered, neither that decree nor the account of the commissioner upon which it was based, was conclusive against them. It was therefore referred to one of the commissioners of the court to ascertain and report: First. In what property the wife relinquished her right of dower under the agreement in the proceedings mentioned, and the value of the interest so relinquished. Second. Whether the claim of the plaintiffs, in the bill and proceeding mentioned, was for a debt contracted in whole or in part at the time when the said deed of January 1859 was made; and if only a part thereof was then contracted, how much was so contracted. And in ascertaining such amount, the said trustee and the beneficiaries under the said deed should be at liberty to surcharge and falsify the decree against the executor and the account of the commissioner upon which it is based, and to 591 *make any lawful defense against the same, which they may be advised their rights and interests in the premises may require. And the commissioner was directed to report any other matters, &c.

In November 1872 the defendants presented a petition for a rehearing in the case, upon the question of the application of the statute of limitations; but by a decree made on the 6th of February 1873, the petition for a rehearing was overruled; and the commissioner was directed to proceed to execute the decree of October 17th, 1862. And thereupon Peyton Johnston and Ann M. his wife, applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Johnson, Williams, and Boulware and Steger, for the appellant.

Lyon & Stern and Guy & Gilliam, for the appellee.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

It is conceded that the settlement made by Peyton Johnston upon his family, to the extent of the dower interest relinquished by Mrs. Johnston, is valid, and cannot be disturbed.

It is not denied that that settlement was considerably in excess of such dower interest; and the question is, whether it is to be permitted to stand as to such excess against the claims of the then existing creditors of the grantor. The deed as to such excess being voluntary, the ground upon which it is sought to sustain it is, that Peyton Johnston was at the time in prosperous and unembarrassed circumstances; and the provision made for his family was a reasonable one according to his state and condition in life, leaving property amply sufficient 592 for the payment of all his debts, and this property would have been available for all the demands of creditors but for the great fire of 1865 in the city of Richmond.

At this day it is unnecessary to consider the question, so long and so ably discussed by former judges of this court, how far a voluntary conveyance without actual fraud is valid against the claims of existing creditors. That question, it is believed, was finally put at rest by the provision incorporated in the revisal of 1849-'50; which declares that every gift, conveyance, &c., which is not upon consideration deemed valuable in law, shall be void as to creditors whose debts shall have been contracted at the time it was made. See section 2, chapter 118, page 565, Code of 1860. This provision excludes all inquiry into the motives and circumstances of the grantor; it adopts the views of Judge Stanard in Hutchinson v. Kelly, 1 Rob. R. 123, and of Chancellor Kent in Reade v. Livingston, 3 John. Ch. R. 481, 500, that if the grantor be indebted at the time of the voluntary settlement, it is presumed to be fraudulent in respect to such debts; and no circumstances will permit those debts to be affected by the settlement, or repel the legal presumption of fraud. The effect of the statute is to disable the debtor from making any voluntary settlement of his estate to stand in the way of his creditors whose debts were contracted at the time. The mischief and inconvenience so much apprehended from the adoption of this rule, even if well-founded, will be to a considerable extent avoided by the statute requiring the creditor to institute proceedings within five years from the date of the conveyance. See section 13, chapter 149, page 639, Code of 1860.

And this leads us to the consideration of the second ground of error relied upon by 593 the appellant. It is that *the present suit was not brought until the year 1871; whereas the deed was executed in 1859. It is insisted that the act of March 3d, 1866, suspending the operation of the statutes of limitation, does not apply to suits against fraudulent donors or their purchasers; but such cases are expressly excepted from the operation of the act in question; that the creditor being free to recover judgment and sue out execution, he was not within the purview and spirit of the suspending statutes.

It is very true that the act of March 3rd, 1866, does in no manner interfere with the rights of creditors against fraudulent donors and purchasers; and it would seem, therefore, but reasonable that the creditor should be held to the exercise of the statutory diligence in instituting proceedings to vacate the deed. But a little reflection is sufficient to show it could not have been the design of the legislature in the enactment of the statutes to suspend the statute of limitations in one class of cases, and leave it in full force as to others equally meritorious. It was very justly provided by these laws that in certain excepted cases the creditor should not be delayed in the collection of his money. These exceptions are enumerated in the second clause of the first section of the act already mentioned. In these cases the creditor was permitted to bring suit and prosecute it to judgment and execution; but it was not incumbent upon him to do so. This remedy was given him as a privilege—a matter of indulgence—and not imposed as a necessity or duty, to be postponed at the peril of being barred by limitation.

The preamble to the act of March 3rd 1866, in enumerating the reasons for the enactment of the stay law, recites that in 594 consequence of the destruction of *the currency, and of all kinds of personal property, stocks and securities, the people were left with but little beside their lands, which, for the want of efficient labor, could not be successfully cultivated in many parts of the country; and in this condition of things forced sales of property would result only in ruinous sacrifice and loss both to creditor and debtor; thus adding to the embarrassment and afflictions under which the country was suffering. Now these considerations were equally applicable to all classes of creditors; to those belonging to the excepted class, as well as to those who did not. And while the fraudulent debtor, or his alienee might not be entitled to any consideration, there was no reason for forcing the creditor to sue if he preferred to wait for the dawn of a more auspicious period. The country was in a condition extremely unfavorable to deliberate investigation; the public mind unsettled and harassed with grievous apprehensions of the future; the courts disorganized, and with the exception of a brief period, under control of the military authorities, and in many instances filled with incumbents unknown to the people, and unacquainted with our laws and institutions. Surely the legislature under such circumstances, could hardly have intended to give the fraudulent debtor the benefit of the statutes of limitation, if the creditor delayed his action, and at the same time deny it to the honest debtor. The object was not to encourage but to discourage litigation; to preserve the remedy alike to all who were not inclined, or those unable then to embark in litigation; and therefore it was, the comprehensive language of the 7th section, was adopted. "The period during which this act shall remain in force shall be excluded from the computation of the time within which,

by operation of any statute or rule of 595 *law, it may be necessary to preserve the loss of any right or remedy."

The legislature could scarcely have used terms more comprehensive. If they do not embrace the case in hand it will be by depriving the words of their plain and natural signification. The language is too positive and unambiguous to be disregarded by the courts.

The learned counsel for the appellants have, however, raised the question of the constitutionality of the various acts suspending the operation of the statutes of limitation. It is very clear that when the bar of the statute has once attached, the legislature cannot remove the bar by retrospective legislation. It is equally clear that until the bar is complete it is competent for the legislature to extend the period for the institution of actions even as applied to rights already accrued. The various suspending acts adopted during the war were passed by a de facto government, and their validity was affirmed by the legislature which assembled after the termination of the war. At the time of the passage of the act of March 3rd, 1866, the plaintiffs' right of action consequently was not barred by any statute then in force. It was therefore entirely competent for the legislature to extend the period within which the complainants might bring their suit. This doctrine has repeatedly received the sanction of this court, and is now placed beyond the reach of controversy. I think, therefore, the chancery court of Richmond was entirely correct in holding that the claim of the plaintiffs was not barred by limitation.

The remaining ground relied upon by the appellant is, that the chancery court erred in receiving as evidence in this case, the record of the suit of Scott v. McKildoe's executor to which the appellants were not parties. That suit was instituted by 596 the plaintiffs in *this, against Peyton Johnston, the grantor, to obtain a settlement of his accounts as executor of McKildoe's estate. After a protracted and expensive litigation conducted through a long series of years, every step in the cause being strongly contested, the plaintiffs obtained a decree for a large amount against Peyton Johnston. An appeal was taken to this court, and the decree of the chancery court was reversed in part, and affirmed in part, but still leaving due the plaintiffs a large balance recognized and affirmed by the decree of this court.

The various accounts, settlements, orders and decrees, taken in that case, show that the executor was liable to the complainants for a large amount of money at the time of the execution of the deed, in the year 1859. The record of these proceedings was admitted by the chancellor as prima facie evidence of such liability. The correctness of this decision would seem to be too clear for argument. When the creditor has established his debt by record against the debtor, such record must, in the absence of all fraud or collusion, be regarded at least as prima facie evidence of the existence and validity of the debt in every controversy in which the debt may be the subject of investigation. This rule is universally acted on in suits involving the rights and priorities of conflicting creditors to the estate of the common debtor. In such cases the judgment or decree is often not only the best, but the sole evidence of the debt. When legatees or distributees have sued the personal representative for an account of assets, when settlements have been made under the supervision of the court, its commissioners and the parties, when every claim or demand asserted on either side has been the subject of earnest investigation, it is difficult to conceive of any proof

597 more satisfactory *than that furnished by the proceedings and decree in favor of the complainants. Fortunately, we are not without express authority upon this subject. In Hinde's lessee v. Longworth, 11 Wheat. R. 199, a similar question was before the supreme court of the United States. Mr. Justice Thompson, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It was certainly competent for the defendant to show that the grantor was indebted at the time he made the conveyance; this was a necessary step towards establishing the fraud; and if these judgments conduced to prove the fact, they could not be shut out as incompetent evidence. If the evidence ought to have been excluded because Doyle (the grantee) was not a party to the judgments, the same objection would have lain against the proof of his being in debt to others in any manner whatever. That would have been equally an inquiry into matters to which the grantee in the deed was not a party. The judgments appear to have been entered some short time after the date of the deed; and it is said that a voluntary deed is void only as to antecedent and not subsequent creditors, unless made with a fraudulent intent. But copies of the accounts upon which the judgments were founded are spread upon the record; by which it appears that the cause of action arose before the date of the deed. * * *

They may be looked to for the purpose of showing that Doyle (the grantor) was in debt at the date of the deed; but whether to an extent which would avoid the deed, must depend on circumstances which are not to be enquired into by this court. There was no error, therefore, in the admission of the evidence." The case of McLaughlin v. Bank of Potomac, 7 How. U. S. R. 220, is to the same effect. See also Birely's 598 **ex'ors v. Staley*, 5 Gill & John. 433; Alston v. Munford, 1 Brock. R. 279; 2 Rand. 398.

These decisions render any further discussion of the question wholly unnecessary. They conclusively vindicate the decision of the learned judge of the chancery court upon this branch of the case.

Upon the whole my opinion is, that the decree is correct in every respect, and should be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

*Porter v. Porter.

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

Divorce—Husband's Right to Wife's Land.—E is possessed of an estate in fee in a tract of land, and marries P; and they have two children born of the marriage. Upon a bill by P, the marriage is dissolved for the adultery and desertion of E; but the decree directs nothing as to the property of the parties. Upon the dissolution of the marriage all the husband's claims to the wife's lands which depended on the marriage were extinguished, and she is entitled to the possession of the land.

This was an action of unlawful detainer in the circuit court of the county of Russell, brought in January 1874 by William D. Porter against Elizabeth E. Porter. On the trial the parties agreed the facts, dispensed with a jury, and submitted the whole matter of law and fact to the court. The agreed facts were as follows:

That Elizabeth E. Porter owned in fee simple the land in controversy, which she has never by deed conveyed away. That while she thus owned the land she intermarried with William D. Porter, who, as her husband, took and held possession thereof. That during coverture she had two children, issue of the said marriage, born alive. That the said E. E. Porter abandoned her said husband, eloped with an adulterer, and was guilty of adultery; that the said William D. Porter sued for a divorce in the circuit court of Scott county, which was the county of his residence and the county in which he had lived with the suit, in the words and figures following, to-wit:

"This cause came on to be heard on the bill and evidence in the cause; and it appearing that the order of publication has been duly posted and published, it is decreed and ordered that the plaintiff be divorced from the defendant, and the bonds of matrimony as to him between them is forever dissolved, and that the plaintiff recover of the defendant his costs; and the cause is stricken from the docket." And it is further agreed that William D. Porter, after the divorce, did not live on the land, but claimed the possession, cultivated and controlled it until the defendant, E. E. Porter, in the winter of 1873, entered peaceably into the possession of said land, but without the consent and against the will of the said W. D. Porter, and was withholding from him the possession thereof at the time the writ issued.

The court rendered a judgment for the defendant; and thereupon William D. Porter applied to this court for a writ of error and supersedeas; which was awarded.

Burns, for the appellant.

C. F. Trigg and Morrison, for the appellee.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

At common law a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, could only be granted for causes existing before the marriage. By the Virginia statute, the circuit courts have jurisdiction of suits for annulling or 601 affirming marriages, *or for granting divorces; and they are authorized to decree a divorce from the bond of matrimony for certain causes therein specified, some of which are such as exist prior to the marriage, and others are such as arise subsequent thereto; and upon decreeing the dissolution of marriage, or a divorce, whether from the bond of matrimony, or from bed and board, the court is authorized to make such further decree, as it shall deem expedient, concerning the estate or maintenance of the parties, or either of them, and the care, custody, and maintenance of their minor children, and may determine with which of the parents the children, or any of them, may remain, &c. Code of 1860, chap. 109, p. 529.

In this case the decree of divorce simply dissolves the bonds of matrimony and nothing more. It makes no provision concerning the estate, or the maintenance of the parties or either of them. Their respective rights of property are undisturbed, except only so far as they may be affected by the dissolution of the marriage. It is more accurate to say that the rights of property of the husband and wife are to be found, where the dissolution of the marriage leaves them, than to say that they remain, where the law of the marriage placed them.

This is true as to the wife's personal property. For it is well settled, that upon the dissolution of the marriage by a decree of divorce which does not otherwise direct, the wife's choses in action, which had not been previously reduced to possession by the husband, or specifically assigned by him, revert immediately to her. But her choses in action, and her personal chattels, which had been reduced to possession by the husband prior to the divorce, had become absolutely vested in him as his property, and could not be divested *by the divorce. Why may it not be true also as to the wife's real estate? Mr. Bishop says, "All transfers of property which were actually executed, either in law or fact, abide; for example, the personal estate of the wife, reduced to possession by the husband, remains his after the divorce the same as before. But this divorce puts an end to all rights depending on the marriage, and not actually vested, as dower in the wife, curtesy in the husband, and his right to reduce to possession her choses in action." 2 Bishop on Mar. & Div. § 705.

If the husband retains an interest in the wife's real estate after the divorce, it must be either as tenant by the marital right or tenant by the curtesy.

Although the tenancy by the curtesy is ordinarily, to appearance, a mere prolongation of the tenancy by the marital right, enabling the husband to hold for his own life what otherwise would terminate with the life of the wife, yet the tenancy by the marital right attaches to some estates to which the tenancy by the curtesy cannot attach, though there should be issue of the marriage, as, for example, estates for life—even estates pur autre vie. And to other estates it cannot attach, in which there may be curtesy, as, for example, estates held for the separate use of the wife. In such estates, under some circumstances, there may be curtesy; but it is of their very essence not to be subject to the marital right.

It is the general doctrine, that marriage alone, without the birth of issue, casts upon the husband an estate in all the wife's real property in possession, whether of inheritance or of freehold for life, during the joint lives of husband and wife. The death of the husband, or of the wife, ends this estate. (1 Bishop on the Law of Mar. 603 Women, § 529.) It is a freehold *estate in the husband, since it must continue during their joint lives, and may by possibility last during his life, if his wife survives him. (2 Kent's Com. side p. 130.) By the intermarriage the husband acquires a freehold interest during the joint lives of himself and wife in all such freehold property of inheritance as she was seized of at the time of marriage; and a like interest vests in him in such as she may become seized of during the coverture. The seisin acquired by the husband is a joint seisin with the wife in right of the wife. This interest of the husband, which is a tenancy by the martial right, may be defeated by the act of the wife alone. For, if at common law the wife is attainted of felony, the lord by escheat could enter and eject the husband. 4 Hawk. P. C. 78; Co. Litt. 40 a; Vin. Abr. Curtesy A. In Co. Litt. 351 a, Lord Coke says: "It appeareth here by Littleton, that if a man taketh to wife a woman seized in fee, he gaineth by the intermarriage an estate of freehold in her right, which estate is sufficient to work a remitter; and yet the estate which the husband gaineth dependeth on uncertainty and consisteth in privity; for, if the wife be attainted of felony, the lord by escheat shall enter and put out the husband."

"Also, if the husband be attainted of felony (he says,) the king gaineth no freehold, but a pernanacy of the profits during the coverture; and the freehold remaineth in the wife. The claim to the rents and profits during the coverture was all the husband was entitled to in his own right, though in right of his wife he was jointly seized with her of the freehold, unless, by the birth of a child, he became tenant for life by the curtesy." 2 Bl. Com. 433.

If the foregoing principles are sound, which are well supported by high authority, it is clear that the husband's tenancy by the marital right is dependent upon and derives its support from the marriage relation, and ceases immediately upon its dissolution. It really vests no right to the realty in the husband as his own, and divests no right from the wife in the realty. The husband acquires in his own right only the pernanacy of the rents and profits during the coverture. And immediately upon the dissolution of the marriage by decree of divorce, his tenancy by the marital right, which he holds in jure uxoris, ceases, and the freehold remaineth to the wife.

After the birth of issue, the husband is entitled to an estate for his own life, and in his own right, as tenant by the curtesy initiate. Co. Litt. 351 a, 30 a, 124 b; Schermerhorn v. Miller, 2 Cowen R. 439. He then becomes sole tenant to the lord, and is alone entitled to do homage for the land, and to receive homage from the tenant of it, which, until issue born, must be done by husband and wife. 2 Bl. Com. 126; Litt., § 90; Co. Litt. 67 a, 30 a. Then he may forfeit his estate for life by committing a felony, which, until issue born, he could not do, because the wife was the tenant. 2 Bl. Com. 126; Roper Hus. & Wife 47. And, after issue born, the husband's estate will not be defeated by the attainder of the wife; for the tenancy continues, he being sole tenant. 1 Hale P. C. 359; Co. Litt. 351 a, 40 a; Bro. Abr. Forf. 78. Does it follow that it will not be defeated by a divorce, which dissolves the marriage? That is the important question in this case, because there is issue of the marriage, whereby the plaintiff in error became tenant by the curtesy of his wife's lands, of which she now holds possession, and from which to eject her he brought this suit. We have seen that he could not hold it as tenant by the marital right. But having by the birth of issue become tenant by the curtesy initiate, according to the authorities cited, he thereafter held by a different tenure. He no longer held it by a joint seisin with the wife in her right; but, by the birth of issue, he became the sole tenant, and held in his own right, as tenant by the curtesy initiate. The foregoing declaration of doctrines and citation of authorities may, for the most part, be found in Ewell's Lead. Cas., title Coverture, p. 485-6; and without affirming or disaffirming the law as declared by them, with regard to the rights acquired by the husband by the birth of issue, it may be conceded so far as it may affect the decision of this cause.

To constitute a tenancy by the curtesy, there are four requisites, the last of which is the death of the wife. The tenancy of the husband by the curtesy is initiate upon the birth of issue. It is consummate on the death of the wife. The attainder of the wife cannot prevent its consummation. Notwithstanding her attainder, at her death, the husband living, it will be consummate. Therefore the attainder of the wife cannot defeat it. But the divorce which breaks the bonds of matrimony perpetually dissolves the marital relation between them, so that the man ceases forever to be the husband and the woman to be the wife, must necessarily defeat its consummation. It can never be consummate by the death of the wife. As is said by Mr. Bishop: "Upon the birth of living issue, capable of taking her estate of inheritance by heirship, he (the husband) becomes tenant by the curtesy initiate of it; but the death of the wife is necessary to make such tenancy consummate, and there can be no death of the wife if the woman ceases to be a wife before her death." 2 Bishop on Mar. & Divorce, § 712. The attainder of the wife could not overturn the foundation upon which the tenancy rested, the marriage; or prevent its consummation by rendering the fourth requisite impossible. The divorce does both. It removes or destroys the foundation on which the tenancy rested, and without which it could not have existed at all; and it makes it impossible that it can ever be completed or consummated.

The question as to the relative merit or demerit of the parties can have no bearing upon the decision of this cause. It might have had a very important influence in the decision of questions relating to the estate and maintenance of the parties in the divorce case, if the court had undertaken in that cause, as authorized by the statute, to decree concerning them. But in a possessory action to eject the defendant from the possession of her freehold of inheritance, with which she was invested before the marriage, the case must turn upon questions involving the rights of property and possession. The plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his title or right of possession. It is only a question of property, and the plaintiff cannot avert the legal effect of a divorce upon his marital rights of property by showing that the divorce was decreed in his favor for the fault of his wife. Unless there was some rule of law for settling the rights of parties, according to their relative merit or demerit in the divorce suit, it is not perceived how that could have any legitimate influence upon the decision of this cause. The court is not aware of any such rule of law. Nor can it be perceived how such a rule could be framed or prescribed that would comport with justice, and be promotive of the public virtue.

The policy of the law is not to oppress the frail and erring, or to drive them to hopelessness and despair. It is rather to reclaim the weak and erring, and to invite 607 *and allure them back to the paths of virtue when they have in an evil hour departed from them. It would be impracticable, perhaps, to prescribe any general and inflexible rule that would not operate very often injuriously. It would not do to provide that the property of the party in fault, or such a proportion of it, should be taken from him or her and given to the other. Nor would it be right to prescribe an inflexible rule against the wife, to divest her of her property, and give it to her husband, when she was found to be in fault. Such legislation would not comport with a just, wise, or humane policy. The legislature, in its wisdom, has made a more judicious disposition of this subject, in vesting the divorce courts with power to make such decree concerning the estate and maintenance of the parties as the circumstances of each case may make expedient and proper. When the court fails to make such decree, as in this case, then the parties must, as to the property, stand upon their legal rights, as they may be affected by the dissolution of the marriage.

Upon the whole, the court is of opinion, that upon the dissolution of the marriage all the husband's claims to the wife's lands which depended on the marriage were extinguished, and she was entitled to be restored to them; and that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court, and that it be affirmed.

608 *Board of Supervisors of Washington Co. v. Dunn & als.

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

1. Notices—To Sheriff by Supervisors.—A notice by the supervisors of a county to D, late sheriff and his sureties, that they will move the county court at its November term, to render judgment against them for the sum of $4,840.08, the same being the amount of said D's deficiency, and default for county levies for the year 1869, that went into D's hands as sheriff as aforesaid, and which he had failed to account for, &c., is sufficiently specific and definite to warrant a judgment thereon.

2. Same—How Viewed.*—The rule governing notices is, that they are presumed to be the acts of parties,

*Notices—How Viewed.—In Union C. L. Ins. Co. v. Polard, 94 Va. 153, 26 S. E. Rep. 421, the court cited the and not of lawyers. They are viewed with great indulgence by the courts, and if the terms of the notice be general, the court will construe it favorably, and will apply it according to the truth of the case, as far as the notice will admit of such application. If it be such that the defendant cannot mistake the object of the motion, it will be sufficient.

3. Same—Sheriff and Sureties—Official Bond.—Upon a notice to a sheriff and his sureties of a motion against them for his failure to account for taxes, they appear and ask for a rule upon the attorney for the commonwealth to show cause why the record of the bond of the sheriff should not be amended, corrected or vacated; and several of the sureties file affidavits, in which each states the grounds on which he relies, to show he is not bound by the bond. One says he signed on condition that other persons should sign. Another says he signed the bond, but never acknowledged or delivered it, and after signing he determined not to acknowledge it. Another says he acknowledged it in court, on condition that all the parties who signed would acknowledge it. In fact, the defendants had either acknowledged the bond before a justice; and none of these conditions appeared on the record or bond, or were made known to the court. These affidavits present no ground for the release of the parties or for the rule.

4. Same—Same—Same—Proof of Execution.—It is not necessary that the sureties of a sheriff in his official bond should acknowledge the same in court. The bond may be acknowledged by 609 *them in court, or its execution out of court may be proved by witnesses. And there is no statute or rule of law requiring such proof to be adduced at the time the bond is received by the court. With or without such proof, the parties who had actually signed would be bound by the deed.

5. Bonds—Signed, Sealed and Delivered.*—A person who signs, seals, and delivers an instrument as his deed, will never be heard to question its validity, upon the ground that it was not acknowledged by him, nor proved at the time of the delivery. It is the sealing and delivery that gives efficacy to the deed; not proof of its execution. And this principle applies to all bonds, whether executed by public officers or private persons, unless there is a statute making the acknowledgment, or proof in court essential to the validity of the instrument.

6. Same—Evidence of Execution.—In an action on an official bond, if there is no record evidence, the execution of it may be established by the testimony of attesting witnesses, or if there be none, by proof of hand writing, or by discovery from the adverse party.

7. Same—Motions on—Pleas.*—On a notice of a motion against a sheriff and his sureties on his official bond, the pleas of "non damnificatus" and "nil debet" are not proper pleas.

8. Same—Parties' Names Not in Body of Instrument.—The fact that the names of two of the parties who executed and acknowledged the bond, were not in the body of it, does not invalidate it as to them.

9. Motion against Sheriff—Evidence of Indebtedness.†—On a motion against a sheriff and his sureties for the county levies he had failed to account for, the report of the clerk, who had been directed by an order of the county court to settle the sheriff's account, though made with the sheriff without notice to the sureties, is competent evidence against them to show the amount for which the sheriff is indebted. If they had notice, as the statute provides, the report would be conclusive upon them; without notice, it is prima facie evidence of the amount of the sheriff's indebtedness.

In October 1872 the board of supervisors of Washington county gave a notice to Wm. A. Dunn, late sheriff of said county, and fourteen other persons, as his sureties in his official bond as sheriff, that at the November term of the county court of Washington county, a motion would be made to said court to render judgment against them in favor of said board of supervisors for the sum of $4,840.03, the same being the amount of said Wm. A. Dunn's deficiency and default for county levies for the year 1869 that went into said Dunn's hands as sheriff as aforesaid, and which he failed to account for, or pay over as the law requires, with legal interest on said sum from May 1st, 1870, and such damages, &c.

When the case was called the defendants moved the court to quash the said notice on account of insufficiency and illegality. But the court overruled the motion; and the defendants excepted. This is the first exception.

†Motion against Sheriff—Evidence of Indebtedness.—In Carr v. Meade, 77 Va. 160, the principal case is cited, and also, Munford v. Overseers, 2 Rand. 313; Jacobs v. Hill, 2 Leigh 393; Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 323; Crawford v. Turk, 24 Gratt. 176. These cases sustain the rule that the record of a chancery suit is properly evidence prima facie against sureties, although they are not parties thereto.

ing him to show cause why the record in this court in regard to the bond of Wm. A. Dunn, late sheriff of this county, should not be corrected, amended or vacated, and asked leave to read certain affidavits in support of said motion; to the reading of which the plaintiff objected, which objection the court overruled; and then overruled the motion, and refused to grant the rule; and the defendants again excepted. The substance of these affidavits are sufficiently stated by Judge Staples in his opinion. This is the second exception.

The defendants then craved oyer of the record in reference to the execution of the bond of Wm. A. Dunn and his qualification as sheriff, and demurred to it; but the court overruled the demurrer. They then tendered the pleas of nil debet, payment, non damnificatus and conditions performed; and, on objection by the plaintiffs the court excluded the pleas of nil debet and non damnificatus; and the defendants again excepted. This is the third exception.

Robert P. Pippin, and Joseph Pippin, two of the defendants, filed their several pleas of nul tiel record, and insisted there was no record binding them. These pleas were objected to by the plaintiffs, but were admitted by the court; and the court proceeding to try the issue on the pleas, rendered judgment for the plaintiffs; and these defendants again excepted. This is the fourth exception.

On the calling of the cause, it was agreed by the parties to dispense with a jury, and submit the whole matter of law and fact to the court. And to maintain the issue on their part, the plaintiffs offered in evidence a report of commissioner Baugh, the clerk of the county court, before whom, by an order made at its March term 1870, the county court had directed William A. Dunn, late sheriff, &c., to settle his account with the clerk of the court, as provided by law. This report showed a balance due from said Dunn for taxes of $4,840.03, upon which he might be entitled to a credit for the proceeds of tax tickets turned over to his successor. To this evidence the defendants objected—1st, because the report was illegal; and 2d, because the sureties were not summoned, or in any way parties to the settlement on which the report was made. But the court overruled the objection, and admitted the evidence; and the defendants again excepted. This is the fifth exception.

When the evidence was introduced, the court rendered a judgment against the defendants for $4,840.03, with interest from the 1st of May 1870 till paid, subject to the credits of $1,138.32, and $1,077.60, as of that date; but refused to allow damages. From this judgment the defendants obtained a supersedeas to the circuit court; and in that court the judgment of the county court was reversed, and a judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants. And thereupon the plaintiffs applied to a judge of this court for a writ of error and supersedeas; which was awarded.

612 *J. L. White and J. A. Buchanan, for the appellants.

Baxter and York, for the appellees.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The board of supervisors of Washington county moved the county court of said county, at its November term 1872, for judgment against Dunn and his sureties on account of his default as sheriff, in failing to account for and pay over the county levies for the year 1869. At the December term the defendants submitted a motion to quash the notice upon which the motion of the plaintiffs was founded. The court overruled the motion to quash; and the defendants excepted. This is the defendants' first bill of exceptions.

The ground of the motion to quash does not appear by the record; but, as stated by the counsel, it is that the notice is not sufficiently specific and definite to warrant a judgment thereon. In Monteith v. Commonwealth, 15 Gratt. 172, it was decided by this court, that upon a motion against a sheriff and his sureties for his failure to pay taxes due the commonwealth, it is not necessary that the notice shall state on what bond of the sheriff the motion will be made. The rule governing notices is, that they are presumed to be the acts of parties, and not of lawyers. They are viewed with great indulgence by the courts; and if the terms of the notice be general, the court will construe it favorably, and apply it according to the truth of the case, as far as the notice will admit of such application. If it be such that the defendant cannot mistake the object of the motion, it will be sufficient. Graves v. Webb, 1 Call 613 443; Segouine v. Auditor, 4 *Munf. 398; Steptoe v. Auditor, 3 Rand. 221. In this case the notice states, that the sheriff had collected the levies for the year 1869, and that he had failed to account for and pay over the same as required by law. It states the amount for which he was delinquent, and for that amount judgment would be asked against him and his sureties. It would seem impossible for the defendants, upon reading this notice, to misunderstand the character of the claim asserted or the grounds of the proceeding. We are therefore of opinion, that the county court did not err in refusing to quash the notice.

The next ground of error arises upon the defendants' second bill of exceptions. At the January term 1874 the defendants moved the court to grant them a rule against the attorney for the commonwealth to show cause why the record of the bond of William A. Dunn, as sheriff of Washington county, should not be corrected, amended or vacated; and they asked leave to read certain affidavits in support of their motion, to the reading of which the plaintiffs objected; but the court overruled the objection, and permitted the affidavits to be read. It, however, refused to grant the rule asked for by the defendants; and to this ruling the defendants excepted. It will be observed that the application was for a rule to amend, correct or vacate the record; which of these was intended does not appear. We are not informed in what respect or to what extent the record was designed to be altered; nor are we informed whether the action of the court was desired as to all or part only of the defendants. Perhaps the object of the defendants may be more correctly gathered from the affidavits filed by them. One of these states, that the affiant signed the 614 bond upon condition that certain other persons were also to *sign; but this condition had never been complied with. No such condition appears on the face of the bond; nor is there anything from which it would be inferred; nor is it pretended it was ever communicated to the court. Another affidavit states, that the affiant signed the bond, but he never acknowledged or delivered it; upon information he afterwards obtained in regard to the sheriff, he determined that he never would acknowledge the bond.

A third affidavit states that the affiant acknowledged the bond in open court, on condition, however, that all the parties who signed would also acknowledge it; but no such condition appears either by the bond or by the record. Another affiant relies upon the fact, that his signature was affixed by his nephew; and further, that his name is not in the body of the bond. It is very true that this defendant did not himself sign his name, but it was done by another in his presence, and by his direction and authority. This, of course, is equivalent to a signing by himself. The other defendant, whose affidavit was taken, states that the sheriff informed him he only wanted affiant's name until next succeeding court, when it would be taken off the bond; and with this understanding he signed the bond; but it is not pretended that the county court was apprized of any such arrangement.

Upon these papers the application for the rule to alter the record was based. I have taken the trouble to state the substance of them, that it may be seen how utterly groundless is the claim of the defendants to escape the obligation of the bond executed by them. Notwithstanding this pretension of a conditional execution of the instrument, all of those making affidavits appeared before a justice or justices of the peace, and acknowledged they had respectively 615 signed the bond *as sureties; and these acknowledgments were made without qualification or reservation, and with full knowledge that such acknowledgments would be used before the county court by the sheriff as evidence of their execution of the bond. The fact is, that these affidavits are nothing more than pleas of non est factum in disguise. But however considered, whether as pleas or mere affidavits, whether taken singly or in the aggregate, they present no ground either for the release of the defendants, or for a rule to amend or vacate the record.

It is very apparent the main theory of the defence is, that an acknowledgment in court is necessary, in order to bind those who sign the sheriff's bond as sureties. This is, however, to confound the execution of the instrument with the proof. In Calwell v. Commonwealth, 17 Gratt. 391, it was decided by this court that the sureties may acknowledge the bond in court, or its execution out of court may be proved by witnesses. Such, indeed, is the language of the statute. There is, however, no statute nor rule of law requiring such proof to be adduced at the time the bond is received by the court. It is very true that a tribunal, charged with the duty of taking the bonds of public officers, would be grossly derelict in accepting a bond without satisfactory proof of its execution being adduced at the time of receiving the bond; but with, or without such proof, the parties who had actually signed would be bound by their deed. A person who signs, seals and delivers an instrument as his deed, will never be heard to question its validity upon the ground that it was not acknowledged by him, nor proved at the time of the delivery. It is the sealing and delivery that gives efficacy to the deed, not proof of the execution.

And this principle applies to 616 all bonds, whether executed *by public officers or private persons, unless, indeed, there is some statute making the acknowledgment or proof in court essential to the validity of the instrument. In an action upon an official bond, if there is no record evidence, the execution of it may be established by the testimony of attesting witnesses, or, if there be none, by proof of hand-writing, or by a discovery from the adverse party. Such proof may not be as conclusive as an acknowledgment of record, but in many cases it is equally satisfactory.

In the case before us the bond was acknowledged in open court by five of the sureties, at the May term 1869. And on motion of the sheriff, he was allowed until the June term to complete it. At the June term the bond was accordingly returned with the justices' certificates of acknowledgment, by nine other sureties, two of whom had become such since the preceding term. In this condition the bond was accepted by the court as a complete instrument.

There is no proof in the record; nor is there even an averment, save a brief statement made by Isaac B. Dunn in his affidavit, that any of these parties either signed or delivered the bond conditionally. All of them certainly acknowledge it without qualification, reservation or condition, either before the court or before justices of the peace in the country. Now, it may be true, that the mere certificate of a justice of the peace is not competent evidence of the execution of an instrument of this character. It does not follow, however, there may not have been other proof before the county court at the time, in addition to these certificates. Non constat but that the justices themselves were in court producing the certificates and testifying to the acknowledgment. Caldwell v. Craig, 17 Gratt. 396. Be that as it may, none of these 617 *defendants deny their signatures or their acknowledgments. Neither in the affidavits filed, nor in any other mode, so far as the record discloses, was there any question or controversy on this point. And, as will be hereafter seen, this court is bound to presume that satisfactory proof as to all the defendants was adduced upon the trial of this case in the court below.

It seems, however, there are six signatures to the bond, as to which there was no proof before the county court which recorded the bond, by acknowledgment or otherwise. There is no suggestion, however, that these signatures are not genuine, or that the bond is not valid as to the parties who made them. These obligors are not included in the plaintiffs' notice. Why they were not so included does not appear. No complaint was made upon that ground in the court below, for the reason, no doubt, that the statute authorizes a notice and motion against all or any intermediate number. There was doubtless good ground for the omission; and, as the record discloses nothing to the contrary, that which was done was rightfully done.

But it further appears, there are, or were, upon the bond the names of five other obligors. These names had, however, been erased, according to a statement of the deputy clerk, before the May term 1869, to which the bond was first returned. In recording the bond, these names were omitted by the clerk; so that they are not upon the instrument as recorded. Whether they were in fact genuine signatures, and, if so, why they were erased, does not appear. One thing is certain, the erasures had been made and were apparent at the time the five sureties unconditionally acknowledged the bond in open court. They were equally apparent when the bond was taken into the 618 *country and unconditionally acknowledged before the justices by nine of the sureties. So that all the present defendants may be regarded as having acknowledged the execution of the bond with full notice of the erasures. If they did not have such notice, it was because they deliberately closed their eyes to the fact, or because they most negligently failed to examine, or even to look at, the paper at the time of the acknowledgment. The consequences of such gross negligence must, of course, fall upon the defendants, and not upon the public.

Such was the case made by the defendants upon the application for a rule to alter the record. It may be true, as I have already said, that the certificate of a justice of the peace is not of itself competent evidence of the execution of the bond. But these certificates were exhibited by the defendants themselves; the original bond was exhibited by them; the unconditional acknowledgment was conceded in the affidavits. How then could the court grant the rule? Upon the defendants own showing, the papers upon which they relied showed conclusively they were not entitled to it, and fully vindicated the refusal of the county court to grant it.

It seems, however, that the defendants demurred to the record of the bond of the sheriff; and the learned judge of the circuit court was of opinion upon that demurrer the judgment of the county court ought to have been for the defendants. Now conceding that a demurrer to evidence is a proper proceeding upon a mere notice and motion to be tried by the court, was it ever heard that a party could select a single item of his adversary's testimony and demur to that? I had supposed that a demurrer of the kind could only be taken after the whole testimony is concluded, and 19 *then the demurrer affirms the insufficiency of the whole testimony to sustain the issue. But this is not all. No one will controvert the proposition, I imagine, there can be no demurrer to evidence until the trial is had. In this case the demurrer was taken at one term of the court before the trial had commenced, and before the case was even ready for a trial, and the case was in fact tried at the next succeeding term. If the court had held that the record was of itself insufficient to charge the defendants as sureties, it would not have precluded the plaintiffs from offering again on the trial at the next term in connection with parol proof to supply the defect. It would have been competent to show by any relevant evidence, that all the defendants had signed, sealed and delivered the bond, although the record showed that we only had actually acknowledged it in open court. Was it any less the bond of the nine who acknowledged before witnesses, than of the five who appeared before the court? Was it not proper, and every way permissible, to bring proof of the execution of these nine if the record failed to show it? Can we assume it was not adduced before the judge who tried the case? The record states that the whole matters of law and of fact were referred to the court. That were these matters of fact there is nothing to show. No bill of exceptions was taken to enlighten us in regard to the proceedings before the court. Are we not bound to presume that everything was thoughtfully done? The principle is universal, that an appellate court in reviewing the decision of the trying court, will always resume that the verdict and judgment were founded upon sufficient evidence unless the contrary is plainly made to appear. This principle is carried so far, that where there is a bill of exceptions professing to 20 state the evidence, *this presumption will still prevail, unless it can be fairly inferred that it contained all the evidence adduced on the trial. See Cooper v. Lepburn, 15 Gratt. 551; Powell on Appellate Proceedings 126. In the case before us, if the defendants desired to raise the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to charge them as sureties, it was incumbent upon them to spread it upon the record, in order that the appellate court might act understandingly upon that question. Failing to do so, they are precluded from controverting the correctness of the judgment rendered by the county court. According to these views there is nothing in the second bill of exceptions which would warrant an appellate court in reversing the decision of the county court.

The defendants' third bill of exceptions was taken to the refusal of the court to receive the plea of non damnificatus and the plea of nil debet. It is somewhat difficult to understand what was the object or necessity for the various pleas tendered by the defendants. The proceeding was a mere motion, founded upon a notice, upon which no formal pleadings were required. It was competent for the defendants, as well without as with the pleas offered by them, to make every defence those pleas suggested. But if this were not so, the plea of non damnificatus is good only where the condition of the bond is to indemnify and save harmless. Here the condition of the bond is "faithfully to discharge the duties of the office according to law." To an action upon such a bond, "conditions performed" is the proper plea, and that plea was offered by defendants, and received by the court. With it the defendants were entitled to the benefit of every defence they could make under the plea of non damnificatus. As to the plea of nil debet, it was altogether 621 *improper in an action or notice upon an official bond. If, however, it were admissible, still under the plea of conditions performed, the defendants were privileged to make any defence a plea of nil debet could possibly present. There is therefore no error appearing upon the third bill of exceptions.

The fourth bill of exceptions brings before us the pleas filed by the defendants Robert and Joseph Pippin, and the judgment of the court upon these pleas. Upon this point it is sufficient to say, the issues presented by these pleas were wholly immaterial. These defendants had signed the bond after the May term 1869. It was returned to the June term following with their names and with the justices' certificate of acknowledgment. In this condition it was delivered to and accepted by the county court. As already stated, it was a valid bond as to these defendants, although never acknowledged by them nor proved in open court. The record indeed states they are sureties; but if it was altogether silent on this subject, they would be bound by the signing, sealing and delivery, and estopped to deny they are such.

It was therefore no sufficient answer to the motion in this case to say there was no record binding these parties as sureties. Their obligations and duties resulted from the bond, and not from the record. The court would have been fully justified in rejecting the pleas in the first place; but, having received them, it was proper to disregard them upon the trial. The judgment was plainly right upon this point, whatever may have been the ground upon which the court proceeded.

We come now to the fifth and last bill of exceptions. The plaintiffs, with a view to show the amount of the county levies collected by the sheriff and never *accounted for by him, offered in evidence a settlement made by the sheriff with a commissioner appointed by the county court. This settlement showed a balance against the sheriff for which the supervisors are proceeding in this case. The defendants objected to this evidence, upon the ground they had no notice of the settlement, were not parties to it, and had not been notified to attend at the time it was made, as required by the 18th section of the 53rd chap. of the Code of 1860. This section certainly makes provision for summoning the sureties upon the official bond; and if so summoned the settlement would be held to be conclusive as to them. They would not be permitted to controvert it in any future proceeding. But it is not indispensable the sureties should be notified. In the absence of any notification the settlement, upon general principles, would at least be prima facie evidence of the amount of the sheriff's indebtedness. That testimony of this character is legally admissible to charge the sureties of a public officer upon their bond of indemnity, is fully established by the decisions of this court in numerous cases. Munford &c. v. Overseers of the Poor of Nottoway, 2 Rand. 313; Jacobs v. Hill, 2 Leigh 393; Cox et als. v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 323. In the more recent case of Crawford et als. v. Turk, 24 Gratt. 176, this court held that a judgment against the high sheriff, in the absence of fraud or collusion, is conclusive of the default of the deputy as against the sureties of the latter, the deputy having appeared and being examined as a witness in the action against the high sheriff. These were cases of judgments against the principal; but the same principle applies in the present case. See also the case of the United States v. Echsford, 1 How. U. S. R. 250; in which it was held that a treasury transcript of the *accounts of a collector was prima facie evidence against the sureties of moneys received by him during his term. These authorities are conclusive upon the question of the admissibility of the settlement in this case as evidence against the defendants. This disposes of all the defendants' bills of exceptions, and, indeed, of all the points raised by him in this court or in the court below.

Before concluding this opinion it is proper to allude to a question raised and strongly pressed by the plaintiffs, who are the appellants here. It is in regard to the sufficiency of the first three bills of exceptions to bring before the appellate court the alleged errors set forth in those bills. It is deemed unnecessary, however, to consider these matters; as this court is of opinion the case is more satisfactorily disposed of upon the merits. Upon the whole, we are of opinion, that the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed, and that of the county court affirmed.

Judgment of the circuit court reversed, and judgment of the county court affirmed.

*Lancaster v. Wilson.*

June Term, 1876. Wytheville.

1. Courts of Record—Proceedings of—Conclusiveness—Attachment.—J and C brought an action at law against W in the county court of W, and sued out an attachment, which was served on certain real estate of W. Plaintiffs having recovered a judgment, the court made an order directing the sheriff to sell the real estate attached, and the sheriff having sold to L, the court made an order appointing a commissioner to convey the real estate to L, which was done. In ejectment by W against L to recover the said real estate—Held: The county court being then a court of general jurisdiction, no irregularities or error in its proceedings can be inquired into in this case, but they are conclusive upon the rights of the parties to the property.
2. Same—Same—Collateral Impeachment.—A judgment of a court of record cannot be impeached in another action, except for want of jurisdiction in the court, or fraud in the parties or actors in it.

This was an action of ejectment in the circuit court of Washington county, brought by A. T. Wilson against Thomas C. Lancaster. On the trial of the case the jury found a special verdict, upon which the court rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. And thereupon Lancaster applied to a judge of this court for a writ of error and supersedeas; which was *awarded. The case is stated by Judge Christian in his opinion.

Gilmore and D. Trigg, for the appellant.

York, for the appellee.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This case is before us upon a writ of error to a judgment of the circuit court of Washington county. The action was ejectment brought by the defendant in error against the plaintiff in error, for the recovery of certain lots in the town of Goodson.

The jury to which the case was submitted, at the May term 1874, found a special verdict. That verdict found that the plaintiff had title to the land in controversy until a sale made in the case of Johnston & Campbell v. the plaintiff Wilson. The verdict after setting forth the fact, that the original papers in the case of Johnston & Campbell v. Wilson had been destroyed), finds certain matters of record taken from the execution books and minute books of the county court, as follows: Record of a judgment by default at March term 1861, in favor of Johnston & Campbell v. Wilson for $615, with interest from 17th April 1860 till paid; costs $8.24; fi. fa. satisfied, and money paid plaintiffs. See reports and orders of the May.

Also an order entered upon the minute book of said county court, dated June 25th, 1861, which after reciting the judgment above referred to, and the issuance of an attachment, and the levy of the same on the lots in controversy, and the fact that the plaintiffs had executed bond with security as required by law, directs the sheriff of said county to make sales of so much or so many of the lots of the defendants so attached as will be sufficient to satisfy the judgment and costs of plaintiffs, and that the same be sold for cash.

The special verdict further finds that the following orders were entered in said attachment suit, to wit:

"No. 3."—From Minute Book, April 28, 1862.

Johnston & Campbell, plt's
v. On an attachment.
A. T. Wilson, defendant.

William King Heiskell, sheriff of this county, having returned, upon the order of the court issued in this cause, that he had sold the property therein named to Thomas C. Lancaster for the sum of $615, it is ordered that the said Heiskell, sheriff of this county, do aforesaid, execute, acknowledge, and deliver to the said Lancaster a deed with special warranty, conveying to him the lots on the said order of sale, and other proceedings in the cause mentioned.

No. 4.—From Minute Book, March 2, 1866.
Johnston & Campbell

v. On debt.
A. T. Wilson.

By an order heretofore made in this case, William K. Heiskell, sheriff of the county, was directed to sell — lot in Goodson, the property of the defendant, and in obedience to said order he sold the same, as will appear by his report filed, and Thomas C. Lancaster became a purchaser at the sum of $615. It is therefore ordered that James C. Campbell be and he is hereby appointed a commissioner to convey said lots to the purchaser, Lancaster, with special warranty.

627 *The special verdict also sets out in hæc verba the deed executed by James C. Campbell to Lancaster, the purchaser, in accordance with this last named order; and concludes as follows:

"If the said proceedings and conveyance pass the title of the plaintiff to defendant, to the property in controversy, it being admitted that the property conveyed by commissioner Campbell to defendant is the property in controversy, then we find for the defendant; if they do not pass the title of plaintiff to defendant, then we find for the plaintiff the premises in question; and we find for the plaintiff $368.75 for mesne profits of the property from the — day of March, 1868, to the institution of this suit, being five years lacking one month."

Upon this special verdict the circuit court of Washington entered a judgment for the plaintiff; and to this judgment a writ of error was awarded by this court.

The court is of opinion that the circuit court erred in rendering a judgment for the plaintiff, and that upon this special verdict the judgment ought to have been rendered in favor of the defendant.

While the papers in the attachment suit had been destroyed, the orders and judgments taken from the execution book and minute book of the county court, show, conclusively, that in the suit of Johnston & Campbell v. Wilson, an attachment had issued, and was levied upon the lots in controversy, and that a sale was made by the sheriff; that that sale was approved by the court; that at that sale Lancaster became the purchaser, and that a deed was directed to be executed and delivered to him by a special commissioner of the court, conveying to him the lots thus levied upon and sold by the sheriff.

Now it is conceded that the county courts of the commonwealth, at the time this suit was brought, were invested by law with general jurisdiction in cases of attachment. Every presumption must be made in favor of the correctness of the proceedings set forth in that verdict; and in the absence of any thing in the record to show the contrary, the court will presume that proper process in a proper case was issued and served upon the defendant, and that he was properly before the court when these several orders were entered in the said attachment suit. We must treat the case then, as one in which the court had jurisdiction of the subject matter, and of the parties. Thus treating it, the question is, can the plaintiff in an action of ejectment oust the defendant of his possession, and defeat his title acquired as a purchaser from the sheriff at the sale made under the proceedings in the attachment suit? It is conceded in this case that Lancaster is a bona fide purchaser, who paid a full and fair price for the land in controversy. Fraud and collusion between him and the sheriff, or between him and the plaintiffs in the attachment suit, is neither proved nor even charged. But it is insisted that there were certain irregularities in the attachment suit which makes the sale void; and therefore no title was conferred upon the purchasers. In my view of the case it is not necessary to enquire whether such irregularities existed. No matter how irregular or how erroneous may have been the proceedings in that suit, they cannot be enquired into in this. That would be to assail collaterally the judgment of a court of record which had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter. This can never be done. But the judgment

629 of such a *court until reversed, upon

writ of error to an appellate court, must be accepted always and everywhere, as a final adjudication of the questions between the parties to the suit. This is the settled doctrine of the courts. It is not merely an arbitrary rule of law, established by the courts, but it is a doctrine founded upon reason and the soundest principles of public policy. It is one which has been adopted in the interest of the peace of society, and the permanent security of titles. If after the rendition of a judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction, and after the period has elapsed when it becomes irreversible for error, another court may in another suit enquire into the irregularities or errors in such judgment, there would be no end to litigation, and no fixed established rights. A judgment though unreversed and irreversible, would no longer be a final adjudication of the rights of litigants, but the starting point from which a new litigation would spring up; acts of limitation would become useless and nugatory; purchasers on the faith of judicial process would find no protection; every right established by a judgment would be insecure and uncertain, and a cloud would rest upon every title. As was well said by Mr. Justice Baldwin in the case of Vorhees v. The Bank of the United States, 10 Peters R. 449, 474: "If the principle once prevails that any proceeding of a court of competent jurisdiction can be declared to be a nullity by any court, after a writ of error or appeal is barred by limitation, then every county court and justice of the peace in the union may exercise the same right. If after its rendition, the judgment is declared void for any matter which can be assigned for error only on a writ of error or appeal, then such court not only usurps the jurisdiction of an appellate court, but collaterally nulli-630 fies *what such court is prohibited by express statute law from ever reversing." * * * "The errors of a court do not impair their validity. Binding until reversed, any objection to their full effect must go to the authority under which they have been conducted!"

These principles have been repeatedly declared by the decisions of the supreme court of the United States, as well as the decisions of this court, and cannot now be questioned. See Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Peters

R. 328, 340; 2 Peters 169; 6 Peters 72; Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. U. S. R. 328, 339; Slater v. Maxwell, 6 Wall. U. S. R. 248; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. U. S. R. 308; Cox & als. v. Thomas' adm'x, 9 Gratt. 323; Ballard v. Thomas and Ammon, 19 Gratt. 14; Cline's heirs v. Catron, 22 Gratt. 371.

Recognizing the doctrine firmly settled by these decisions, neither this court nor the court below can enquire whether the proceedings in the attachment suit were in accordance with law. It is needless, therefore, even to note the irregularities and errors pointed out by the learned counsel for the appellees in the record in the attachment suit. There is one, however, much relied upon, I will notice. It is said the sheriff acted without authority in making the sale of both lots, when the order of the court directed him to sell only so much as might be necessary to pay the judgment and costs; and that this want of authority in the sheriff affected the purchaser, because he was bound to see that the sale was made in accordance with the order of the court. The obvious answer to this view is, that the sale was reported to the court and confirmed, and thereby the sale became an act of the court. The remedy was, to correct the error by motion in that court, or by writ of error in an appellate court. It 631 is not the case of an unauthorized act of the sheriff, or other officer, selling property not directed to be sold by the court. In such case the sale would be a nullity, and such sale would not be a proceeding of the court. But when the sale is reported and confirmed, it then becomes an act of the court, and cannot be enquired into collaterally in another suit. Conceding, therefore, that the irregularities were many and the errors gross, they could only be remedied by motion in that suit, or by writ of error to the judgment. In the action of ejectment the door was closed to all enquiry except whether the court in the attachment suit had jurisdiction of the subject matter, or whether the purchaser was a fraudulent purchaser.

Want of jurisdiction, or fraud in the purchaser, may be shown in any case, and when established, will always vacate the sale and annul the deed made under it; but nothing else will, when relied upon in another suit which brings in to question collaterally the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.

The judgment of the circuit court of Washington cannot be sustained without a violation of principles which ought to remain inviolable. I am therefore of opinion that the judgment should be reversed and a judgment entered for the defendant.

Judgment reversed.

I. NATURE, OBJECT AND CONSTRUCTION.

Attachment is an extraordinary remedy, whereby the property of the party complained of is summarily seized; upon an ex parte complaint. 4 Min. Inst. (3rd Ed.) pt. 1, 404.

"This summary remedy," says Mr. Daniel in the preface of his works on attachments, "may be fitly termed the light cavalry of the law. To seize swiftly upon the effects of a nonresident or flying adversary and to hold him and them amenable to the issue of the proceeding are its chief functions in Virginia."

"An order of attachment is an execution by anticipation. It empowers the officer to seize and hold the estate of the alleged debtor for the satisfaction of a claim or demand to be established in the future and for which a judgment may never be obtained. The claim may be entirely unfounded, and even, when the demand is just the order may issue and be levied before it has become due and payable. The proceeding is to some extent the reverse of the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. The latter subjects the demand of the plaintiff to judicial investigation and permits the seizure of the debtor's property only after judgment obtained, while the former commences with the seizure of the debtor's property and afterwards subjects the plaintiff's claim to such investigation." SNYDER, J., in Delaplain v. Armstrong, 21 W. Va. 211. See also, Bart. Law Pr. (2d Ed.) 900.

Object.—"The prime object in levying the attachment," says the court, in Dorrier v. Masters, 88 Va. 450, 2 S. E. Rep. 927, "is to obtain, pendente lite, a lien; or, in other words, to put the property in the custody of the law until by the judgment of the proper tribunal the plaintiff's claim is established, when the lien becomes effective as of the date of the levy, but must be enforced, not by virtue of the writ of attachment, but by the judgment of the court ordering a sale of the property which the attachment has simply held in waiting."

Construction.—The remedy by attachment is in derogation of the common law and exists only by virtue of statutes, and being summary in its effects and liable to be abused and used oppressively, its application must be carefully guarded and confined strictly within the limits prescribed by statute. Delaplain v. Armstrong, 21 W. Va. 211. "This extraordinary remedy," says JOYNES, J., in Claffin v. Steenbeck, 18 Gratt. 842, "is not only harsh towards the defendant himself, but its operation is harsh towards the other creditors of the defendant, over whom the attachment creditor obtains priority. It is susceptible of great abuse and has often been greatly abused. It is, therefore, closely watched, and will never be sustained unless all the requirements of the law have been complied with." As to the strict construction of the statute in attachment proceedings, see also, Barnett v. Darnielle, 8 Call 415; Mantz v. Hendley, 2 Hen. & M. 308; Kelso v. Blackburn, 3 Leigh 299; Brien v. Pittman, 12 Leigh 379; Barksdale v. Hendree, 2 Pat. & H. 47; Lambert v. Jones, 2 Pat. & H. 163.

While "attachment, being a summary process, and liable to abuse, ought to be carefully watched by the courts, and kept within the bounds prescribed by statute. I do not mean, that the party must be held to the very letter, and that the slightest departure from it is to be caught at, to set aside the proceeding; but that there should be, at least, strictness and certainty to what my LORD COKE calls 'a common intent in general.'" CARR, J., in Jones v. Anderson, 7 Leigh 308.

"It is true, the attachment proceeding is a summary and harsh remedy, and is doubtless often much abused, and while it should be strictly, it should at the same time be rationally, construed. It must be borne in mind, however, that it was the will of the legislature that made it summary and necessarily harsh, and that the rule of construction was made for the protection of the debtor defendant." Richardson, J., in Dorrier v. Masters, 88 Va. 450, 2 S. E. Rep. 927.

II. ATTACHMENT IN ACTIONS AT LAW.

A. Foreign Corporations and Nonresident Debtors.—The Virginia and West Virginia statutes authorize attachments against foreign corporations and nonresident debtors. Va. Code 1887, § 2959, subdiv. 1 (see Acts, 1891-92, p. 520); W. Va. Code 1890, ch. 33 § 1, subdiv. 1.

Foreign Corporations.—"A foreign corporation is one created by the law of another state or country, which may transact in any other country any business warranted by its charter, and not prohibited by the local law of that country. But it cannot change its residence or citizenship." 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 407.

In Cowardin v. Universal Life Ins. Co., 22 Gratt. 445, the court says, "Nothing is better established by all the cases and text writers on the subject of corporations, than that a corporation can have no legal existence outside of the boundaries of the sovereignty by which it was created. While it may, by its agents, transact business anywhere, unless prohibited by its charter or prevented by local law, it can have no residence or citizenship except where it is located by or under the authority of its charter. As was said by CHIEF JUSTICE TANEY, 13 Peters R. 519, 'it exists by force of the law (creating it), and where that ceases to operate, the corporation can have no existence. It must dwell in the place of its creation, and cannot migrate to another sovereignty.' In ex parte Scholtenberger, 6 Otto 377, CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN said, 'A corporation cannot change its residence or its citizenship. It can have its legal home only at the place where it is located by or under the authority of its charter, but it may, by its agents, transact business anywhere, unless prohibited by its charter or excluded by local law.' In Drake on Attachments (3d Ed.) § 80, the proposition is stated, on abundant authority, as follows: 'The foreign character of a corporation is not to be determined by the place where its business is transacted, or (even) where the incorporators reside, but by the place where its charter was granted. With reference to inhabitancy it is considered as an inhabitant of the state in which it was incorporated.' " As to what constitutes a foreign corporation, see also, Rece v. Newport News etc., Co., 22 W. Va. 164, 9 S. E. Rep. 212.

In accordance with these principles, the court held that an insurance company, incorporated under the laws of New York, even though it had complied with the statutory provisions in relation to foreign insurance companies doing business in Virginia, was not a resident, and its property was therefore subject to foreign attachment. Cowardin v. Universal Life Ins. Co., 22 Gratt. 445.

In Balt. & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, reversing Balt. & O. R. Co. v. Noell, 32 Gratt. 394, it was held that a Maryland corporation, by leasing a railroad in Virginia from a Virginia corporation, with the assent of that state, did not thereby make itself a corporation of Virginia, MR. JUSTICE WARREN saying that corporations "by doing business away from their legal residence do not change their citizenship, but simply extend the field of their operations."

They reside at home, but do business abroad." See also, Rece v. Newport News, etc., Co., 32 W. Va. 164, 9 S. E. Rep. 212.

In November 1864, during the Civil War, the plaintiffs issued an attachment in a chancery suit against the Bank of Virginia as a nonresident on notes of that bank owned by them, some of which were payable at branches of that bank in Virginia and had not been presented at such branch banks for payment. Held, that the attachment was properly issued against the Bank of Virginia as a nonresident. Hall v. Bank of Va., 14 W. Va. 584.

Prior to the statute authorizing attachments against foreign corporations in express terms, it was held that such corporation could be proceeded against in equity as an absent debtor under 1 Rev. Code 1819, p. 474, c. 123. Kyle v. Connelly, 3 Leigh 719.

Nonresident Debtors — Who a Nonresident. — Instead of the present term "not a resident," the Code of 1819, ch. 123, § 1, contained the expressions "absent defendants" and "parties who are out of this country." In Kelso v. Blackburn, 3 Leigh 299, it was held that these expressions did not include residents and citizens of the state, absent temporarily for pleasure or business, but that "nonresidence" was the ground of attachment which the legislature had in view. All ambiguity, however, was removed by the provisions which the revisers of 1849 recommended, and the legislature adopted. See Rep. of Revisers, 1849, p. 756, note.

A person becomes a nonresident, subject to attachment, the moment he leaves the state without the animus revertendi; and with the fixed purpose of taking up his future residence elsewhere. Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284.

Where a person conveys away his property, abandons his residence, and commences to remove to another state with the purpose of residing there, he is a nonresident, in the sense of the attachment law, before he has actually left the state. Clark v. Ward, 12 Gratt. 440.

Where a person domiciled in Washington obtained a contract to construct certain sections of a railroad in Virginia, rented his house in Washington, and removed with his family to a place on the route of the railroad, where he kept house, it was held that he was a resident of Virginia, within the statutes relating to foreign attachments, the court saying that in the statutes relating to attachments, "actual residence is contemplated, as distinguished from legal residence. The word is to be construed in its popular sense * * * as the act of abiding or dwelling in a place for some continuance of time." Long v. Ryan, 30 Gratt. 718. "See the comments on this case in the note on page 427, 32 Am. Dec., to the case of Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. 11; attention being called to the fact that the case of Long v. Ryan illustrates the difference between residence and domicile, in that while Ryan was a resident, within the meaning of the attachment statute, yet 'there could have been no pretence that Ryan was domiciled in Virginia.'" Bart. Law Pr. (2d Ed.) 911. See also, Dean v. Cannon, 37 W. Va. 123, 16 S. E. Rep. 444, where the definition of "residence" given in Long v. Ryan, 30 Gratt. 718, is quoted with approval.

In Didier v. Patterson, 93 Va. 534, 25 S. E. Rep. 661, 2 Va. Law Reg. 615, following Long v. Ryan, 30 Gratt. 718, it was held that one who is dwelling in Virginia with no intention of leaving, being engaged in constructing public improvements under a contract that will occupy him for an indefinite period, is not a non-resident within the meaning of the attachment laws, although his family lives out of the state.

Where a person entirely abandons his former residence in one state, with no intention of resuming it, and goes with his family to another residence, which he has rented in another state, with the intention of making the latter his residence for an indefinite time, the latter state is his domicile, notwithstanding that after he and his family arrive at the new residence, which is only about a half a mile from the state line, they go on the same day on a visit to spend the night with a neighbor in the former state, intending to return in the morning of the next day, but he is detained there by sickness until he dies, and never does in fact return to his new home. White v. Tennant, 31 W. Va. 790, 8 S. E. Rep. 596.

If a man's family has been removed to West Virginia, and his business, means and property have been carried there, and he is engaged in business there, and dwells there, and his business engagements are such as to render his stay wholly uncertain and indefinite as to duration, he is not a nonresident of that state within the purview of the attachment law. Andrews v. Mundy, 36 W. Va. 22, 14 S. E. Rep. 414.

Residence once established is presumed to continue until proved to have been changed. The property of a fugitive from justice, who suddenly departs from the state, leaving his family, cannot be attached as that of a nonresident, since he, as wanderer and fugitive, though outside of the state, can acquire no residence which would make him a nonresident under the attachment laws. The proper remedy is to proceed against him as a removing or absconding debtor. Starke v. Scott, 78 Va. 180.

Volunteer Soldiers. — A resident of West Virginia, who enters the volunteer service of the United States, and with his regiment goes beyond the limits of the state, and remains for some time in such service, does not thereby become a nonresident of the state, within the meaning of the attachment law; and a valid attachment cannot, on that ground alone, be sued out against his property. In order that a person may become a nonresident of the state, it is necessary that he should leave the state with the intention of remaining absent therefrom. Lyon v. Vance, 46 W. Va. 781, 34 S. E. Rep. 761.

B. Absent, Removing or Concealed Debtors. — It will be noted that, in order to warrant an attachment, the Virginia Code provides that the debtor shall be removing or about to remove out of the state with intent to change his domicile (Va. Code 1887, § 2060, subdivision 2), while the corresponding statute of West Virginia provides for attachment where the debtor has left, or is about to leave the state, with intent to defraud his creditors, or so conceals himself that a summons cannot be served upon him. (W. Va. Code 1899, ch. 106, § 1, subdivisions 2 and 3.)

An original attachment, prior to the act of Jan. 25, 1806, ought not to have been granted to a creditor on the ground that his debtor intended to remove privately, or to abscond or conceal himself so that the ordinary process of law could not be served on him, but only on the ground that he was actually doing so. Mantz v. Hendley, 2 Hen. & M. 308.

The property of a fugitive from justice, who suddenly departs from the state, leaving his family, cannot be attached as that of a nonresident, since he, as a wanderer and fugitive, though outside of the state, can acquire no residence which would make him a nonresident under the attachment laws. The proper remedy is to proceed against him as a removing or absconding debtor. Starke v. Scott, 78 Va. 180.

Where the surety to a bond has removed from the country leaving the principal within it, the obligee may proceed against him as an absent defendant and attach any effects or debts he may have in the state. But if the obligee has parted with any security in his hands by which the debt or a part of it might have been paid, the surety will be discharged pro tanto. Loop v. Summers, 3 Rand. 511.

C. Fraudulent Conversion or Transfer of Property.—See Va. Code 1887, § 2959, subdivisions 4 and 5; W. Va. Code 1899, ch. 106, subdivisions 5 and 6.

Fraudulent Intent—Burden of Proof.—It is not enough that creditors believe and allege the existence of fraudulent intent. They must prove its existence. Wingo, Ellett & Crump v. Purdy & Co., 87 Va. 472, 12 S. E. Rep. 970; Burruss v. Trant, 88 Va. 984, 14 S. E. Rep. 845.

The burden of proving that an attachment was issued on sufficient cause rests on the plaintiff, and he should introduce his evidence first when the defendant moves an abatement. Wright v. Rambo, 21 Gratt. 158; Sublett v. Wood, 76 Va. 318; Burruss v. Trant, 88 Va. 980, 14 S. E. Rep. 845.

Threats to Assign.—A bona fide request for an extension of time of payment and a declaration of a purpose, if necessary, to make a general assignment for the benefit of all creditors cannot be held to be evidence of an intent to dispose of property to defraud creditors, especially where such debtor shows his intention to surrender all his property if required for the purpose of paying his indebtedness. Wingo, Ellett & Crump v. Purdy & Co., 87 Va. 472, 12 S. E. Rep. 970.

Failure to Pay Proceeds to Creditors.—Just before leaving the state, the defendant, at a large discount, assigned an obligation given him for the purchase money of a steamboat and carried the proceeds away, without leaving any adequate means to satisfy the claims of the plaintiff and other creditors, having mortgaged nearly all his real estate before leaving. Held, that these facts did not justify an attachment on the ground that he had fraudulently disposed of his property. Capehart v. Dowery, 10 W. Va. 130.

Failure to Record Deed of Trust.—The mere failure of a bank to record a deed of trust given to secure a note, in the absence of evidence of a request or desire on the part of the defendants that it should not be recorded, cannot be construed as an attempt on the part of the defendants to hinder or defraud their creditors and is no ground for an attachment against them. Burruss v. Trant, 88 Va. 980, 14 S. E. Rep. 845.

III. ATTACHMENT IN EQUITY.

A. In General.—It will be observed that as Va. Code 1887, § 2964, authorizes attachments in equity whether the claim be legal or equitable, the grounds which justify attachments at law under Va. Code, § 2959, as amended by Acts 1891-'92, p. 520, also authorize attachments in equity. The section of the Code of West Virginia corresponding to § 2959 of the Code of Virginia expressly provides that the attachment may be either at law or in equity. W. Va. Code 1899, ch. 106, § 1.

Prior to the Code of 1887, attachment in equity lay in Virginia only where the claim was actually due and payable. Batchelder v. White, 80 Va. 103; Cirode v. Buchanan, 22 Gratt. 205; O'Brien v. Stephens, 11 Gratt. 610. But the present statute, Va. Code 1887, §

2964, declares that "when a person has a claim legal or equitable, to any specific personal property, or a like claim to any debt, whether such debt be payable or not, or to damages for the breach of any contract, express or implied, if such claim exceed $20, exclusive of interest, he may, on a bill in equity filed for the purpose, have an attachment to secure and enforce the claim," etc. But "this section (2964) shall not be construed as giving to a court of equity jurisdiction to enforce by attachment a claim to a debt not payable, when the only ground for the attachment is that the defendant, or one of the defendants, against whom the claim is, is a foreign corporation, or is not a resident of this state, and has estate or debts owing to the said defendant within the county or corporation in which the suit is, or issued with a defendant residing therein." Hence, in Wingo v. Purdy, 87 Va. 472, 12 S. E. Rep. 970 where the suit was by attachment in equity against a firm of nonresident merchants for debts which were not yet due, on the ground that the defendants were about to make an assignment to hinder, delay or defraud their creditors, it was held that proof of the fraudulent intent was essential to the jurisdiction of the court; and that, as the plaintiffs had failed to prove such fraudulent intent, the attachment should be abated, notwithstanding the fact that the debtors were nonresidents. Nor is it enough that the attaching creditor believes and alleges the fraudulent intent; he must prove reasonable and rational grounds for his allegations and belief as the basis of his attachment proceedings. See Burruss v. Trant, 88 Va. 984, 14 S. E. Rep. 845.

It has been held that a guarantor of a debt may maintain a foreign attachment against his principal before he has paid the debt. Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284. See also, Williamson v. Bowie, 6 Munf. 176.

Several creditors having distinct demands cannot unite in one suit in equity to attach the property of an absent debtor. Corrothers v. Sargent, 20 W. Va. 51.

Bailment.—A claim against a nonresident of Virginia arising out of a contract of bailment made out of Virginia, by which flour was deposited in a warehouse in Georgetown, D. C., and there destroyed by fire is a claim for debt for which a foreign attachment in chancery lies. Peter v. Butler, 1 Leigh 25.

B. Jurisdiction.—The levy of the attachment, as shown by the officer's return on the nonresident defendant's property, is the foundation of the suit. If the property attached be not the defendant's property, the court is without jurisdiction. Culbertson v. Stevens, 82 Va. 406.

Equity has jurisdiction over an attachment to subject a legacy in the hands of an executor as garnishee, to the payment of the plaintiff's debt; for the proceeding involves the settlement of accounts which could not be done at law. Whitehead v. Coleman, 81 Gratt. 784.

A creditor residing in Maryland may sue out an attachment in chancery against the debtor residing also in Maryland, and others residing in Virginia indebted to, or having in their hands effects of such debtor. Williamson v. Bowie, 6 Munf. 176.

A creditor at large may maintain an attachment suit in equity to set aside as fraudulent a deed conveying real estate, made by his debtor, where both the debtor and his grantee are living out of the commonwealth. Peay v. Morrison, 10 Gratt. 148.

C. Removal of Property.—The shipment of the products of an enterprise out of the state in due course of trade, where the removal is not permanent and the proceeds are brought back within the state, is is sufficient ground for an attachment. Clinch v. Mineral Co. v. Harrison, 91 Va. 122, 21 S. E. Rep. 1.

IV. ATTACHMENT BEFORE ACTION BROUGHT.

A. In General.—The five grounds of attachment named in section 2960 of Va. Code of 1887, require an affidavit "at the time of, or after the institution of an action at law," and the attachment is issued by the clerk of the "court in which the action is." Since an action will not lie for a debt before it is due, no attachment can be maintained for such debt under this section. See Bart. Law Pr. (2d Ed.) 932. But sections 2961 and 2962 of the Va. Code of 1887, provide for attachment before the maturity of the debt claimed, and of course before the institution of any suit, against a debtor removing his effects out of this state, whether the claim is payable or not, and against a tenant removing his effects from the leased premises.

B. Removal of Property.—One member of a mercantile house, to which a debt has been contracted but which has not yet fallen due, is competent to make complaint on oath and to sue out an attachment against the debtor under the provisions of the statute. 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 123, § 14; Kyle v. Connelly, Leigh 719.

Where the defendant has removed a portion of his property out of the state and is about to remove the remainder, and it appears from the evidence that there are numerous pending suits and judgments against him, these facts warrant an attachment under Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 3. Weiss v. Hobbs, 84 Va. 489, 5 S. E. Rep. 367.

C. Attachment for Rent.

1. For What Rent Attachment Will Issue.—Prior to the present provisions (Va. Code 1887, § 2962) allowing attachment for rent which is yet to become due and which will be payable within one year, attachment could not issue for more than the installment of rent next due, whether that was for a month, quarter, year, etc. Redford v. Winston, 3 Rand. 148. See also, Glassell v. Thomas, 3 Leigh 113.

2. Will Not Issue before Commencement of Term.—An attachment for rent which is to become due at a future time cannot be issued before the commencement of the term for which it is to be paid; for until that time the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist. If such attachment be issued and served, the lessee, although he has entered into a recognizance to pay the rent, may have the attachment and recognizance quashed upon motion. Johnson v. Garland, 9 Leigh 149.

3. When Preferred to Distress.—Since distress for rent will not lie where the property has been removed from the demised premises, the claim of an attaching creditor to such property should be preferred to that of a landlord who has distrained. This is true although the attaching creditor, on account of some alleged defect in the attachment bond, has entered into a compromise giving the landlord the preference, such agreement being without consideration and void. Mosby v. Leeds, 3 Call 439.

4. Attachment without Bail—Interpleader.—Section 1, ch. 123, 1 Rev. Code 1819, allowing any person to interplead in attachments without bail applies only to attachments for debt, and not for rent. Hallam Jones, Gilmer 142.

5. Affidavit of Landlord.—Where an attachment is sued against the estate of a tenant for rent to become due at a future day, on the oath of the landlord that he has sufficient grounds to suspect that his tenant will remove his effects out of the county or corporation before the expiration of his term, it is not competent for the tenant, on the return of the attachment, to plead that his landlord had not sufficient grounds to suspect that the tenant was about to remove. Redford v. Winston, 3 Rand. 148.

6. Removal of Goods in Course of Trade.—The statute which authorizes a landlord to sue out an attachment against the goods of his tenant for rent not due, when the tenant intends to remove or is removing his effects from the leased premises, so that there will probably not be left on the leased premises property liable to distress sufficient to satisfy the rent when due, applies as well to removals in the regular course of business as to other removals. No exception is made in the statute. Offterdinger v. Ford, 92 Va. 636, 24 S. E. Rep. 246, 2 Va. Law Reg. 377.

7. Deed of Trust on Property on Leased Premises.—The trustee in a deed of trust given by the lessor on property after it has been carried on leased premises cannot remove the property from the leased premises without securing to the lessor one year's rent. He can stand on no higher ground than the lessee. And the intention of the trustee to remove said property by sale or otherwise, without securing a year's rent, is of itself sufficient cause for suing out an attachment by the landlord. Offterdinger v. Ford, 92 Va. 636, 24 S. E. Rep. 246.

V. ATTACHMENT FOR CONTEMPT.

A. Object.—An attachment for contempt has no other object than to bring the party into court. When the contempt is in open court, the party being present, there is no need of any process to bring him in. Commonwealth v. Dandridge, 2 Va. Cas. 408.

B. When Attachment for Contempt Will Lie.—An attachment for contempt in disobedience of a decree of the chancery court will only lie for disobedience of what is decreed, and not for what may be decreed. Taliaferro v. Horde, 1 Rand. 242.

An attachment ought not to be awarded against a party for refusing obedience to a decree, which as yet remains general and uncertain, and the extent of which, as it relates to him, he cannot ascertain without applying to the court for a further decree. Birchett v. Bolling, 5 Munf 442.

When an injunction has been awarded by a judge of the court of appeals, the chancellor ought to restrain any disobedience to that order by attachment or other proper process. Toll Bridge v. Free Bridge, 1 Rand. 206.

An attachment to enforce a decree pronounced against a person who was out of the commonwealth cannot be awarded against him after his return, until twelve months have elapsed from the time of service of a copy of such decree. Horton v. Horton, 4 Hen. & M. 408.

C. How Executed.—An attachment for not performing an order or decree of a court of equity should be executed by committing the party to the county jail till the court, or judge in vacation, is satisfied that such order or decree has been complied with. Lane v. Lane, 4 Hen. & M. 437. As to executing attachments to compel appearance, see Watts v. Robertson, 4 Hen. & M. 442.

VI. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ATTACHMENT.

A. Real Property.—No sale of real estate which has been attached can be ordered until all the personal property attached has been sold. Camden v. Haymond, 9 W. Va. 680.

Contingent Remainder.—A contingent remainder which is a mere possibility is not within Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 1, allowing an attachment against "estates or debts" in certain cases. Young v. Young, 89 Va. 675, 17 S. E. Rep. 470. See extensive note appended to this case in 23 L. R. A. 642.

Interest of Heirs.—A creditor of a deceased debtor may proceed by foreign attachment against the heirs residing abroad to subject land or its proceeds, in the state, descended to them from the debtor. Carrington v. Didier, 8 Gratt. 260.

Interest of Tenants in Common.—The undivided interest of a tenant in a common may be levied upon and sold under an attachment. The co-tenants of the debtor are not proper parties to a suit for such purpose. Curry v. Hale, 15 W. Va. 867.

B. Personal Property.—An attachment was served upon trustees in a deed of trust for the payment of certain debts, and among them the debts due to the plaintiff in the attachment. Held, that there could be no surplus in the hands of the trustees until the plaintiff's debts were paid, and consequently there could be no surplus in their hands liable to his attachment. Clark v. Ward, 12 Gratt. 440.

Choses in Action.—Under Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 11, debts due to a nonresident debtor by open account may be attached in the hands of resident garnishees. Porter v. Young, 85 Va. 49, 6 S. E. Rep. 803.

Wife's Interest as Legatee.—A wife's interest as legatee in her father's estate, in the hands of the executor, may be subjected by the creditor of her husband, by a proceeding by foreign attachment when the husband resides out of the state. Vance v. McLaughlin, 8 Gratt. 289.

Funds in Hands of State Treasurer or Public Officer.—Funds in the hands of the state treasurer, which he holds by law in pursuance of a trust, are not liable to attachment at the suit of an individual. Rollo v. Andes Ins. Co., 23 Gratt. 509, 14 Am. Rep. 147; Buck v. Guarantors' Co., 97 Va. 719, 34 S. E. Rep. 950, 5 Va. Law Reg. 854; Foley v. Shriver, 81 Va. 568.

Steamboats.—A process issued against the owners of steamboats navigating the waters of the state can be levied on such boats. Commonwealth v. Fry, 4 W. Va. 721.

Chattels Pawned.—A chattel pawned or mortgaged is not attachable in an action against the pawner or mortgagor. Neill v. Rogers Bros. Produce Co., 41 W. Va. 37, 23 S. E. Rep. 702.

Bill of Sale.—Where a bill of sale is executed from one party to another, for a steamboat navigating the Ohio river, and delivery accompanies the act, thereby rendering the sale complete, there is no such right of ownership or title in the vendor as would authorize a creditor of the vendor to attach the boat under Va. Code 1860, ch. 151, § 5, for money due on an account of materials furnished in building and equipping said boat. Hobbs v. Interchange, 1 W. Va. 57.

Corporate Stock.—The shares of a stockholder in a railroad corporation are liable to attachment. Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Griffith, 76 Va. 913; C. & O. R. Co. v. Paine, 29 Gratt. 502.

Municipal Corporations.—A municipal corporation may be garnished or attached for a debt due to one of its creditors just as a natural person may be. Such a proceeding is not contrary to the public policy of this state. Portsmouth Gas Co. v. Sanford, 97 Va. 124, 33 S. E. Rep. 516, 5 Va. Law Reg. 172.

Ownership or Possession.—The levy of the attachment, as shown by the officer's return on the nonresident defendant's property, is the foundation of the suit. If the property attached be not the defendant's property, the court is without jurisdiction. Culbertson v. Stevens, 82 Va. 408.

A house sold by parol contract to a purchaser, who has paid the purchase money and taken possession of the property cannot be taken by an attachment against the vendor as an absent debtor and subjected to the payment of his debt. Hicks v. Eddick, 3 Gratt. 418.

VII. AFFIDAVIT.

A. Necessity.—In a proceeding by foreign attachment in chancery where there has been no affidavit, as required by 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 123, § 1, that the defendants are absent from the country so that they cannot be served with process, it is error to decree a sale of their property, although one of the defendants answer admitting his nonresidence. Brien v. Pittman, 12 Leigh 379.

B. Time of Making.—It is not necessary for the plaintiff in a foreign attachment to file with the clerk an affidavit of the nonresidence of his debtor before the process is issued, in order to constitute it, with the endorsement thereon in the nature of an attachment, a valid lien when served. Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284.

The affidavit required by the statutes (Va. Code 1849, ch. 151, § 2; Acts 1852, ch. 95, § 1) to authorize a creditor to sue out an attachment against the effects of an absent debtor may be made either before or after the bill is filed. O'Brien v. Stephens, 11 Gratt. 610.

The affidavit in an attachment suit against a nonresident, under Va. Code 1849, ch. 151, § 1, may be made at any time before the abatement of the suit by the return of the officer. Pulliam v. Aler, 5 Gratt. 54.

When the bill states a good case for a foreign attachment suit, the affidavit of nonresidence required by the statute may be made at any time, before third persons have acquired rights; and the endorsement on the subpoena is not necessary to render the attachment valid. Cirode v. Buchanan, 22 Gratt. 205.

C. Who May Make.—The affidavit may be made by "any credible person," and the affidavit need not state that the affiant is a "credible person," as that will be presumed until the contrary appears. Rahl v. Rogers, 29 W. Va. 779, 2 S. E. Rep. 798; Delaplaine v. Rogers, 29 W. Va. 783, 2 S. E. Rep. 800.

In Behalf of Firm.—One member of an attaching firm may make the affidavit in behalf of the firm. Kyle v. Connelly, 3 Leigh 719.

Agents and Attorneys.—Under 1 Rev. Code 1803, ch. 78, § 6, the affidavit on which an attachment was issued, and the bond and security for its due prosecution, ought to be made and given by the creditor himself, and not by his attorney at law. Mantz v. Hendley, 2 Hen. & M. 308.

The affidavit may now be made by the plaintiff, his agent or attorney. See Va. Code 1887, §§ 2954, 2962, 2964, 2988.

In a foreign attachment in chancery, the affidavit required by the statute, Va. Code 1860, pages 641, 642, may be made by the agent of the plaintiff. Fisher v. March, 26 Gratt. 765.

Under Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 2 (see Code 1887, § 2999) which provides that "on affidavit, at the time of or after the institution of any suit * * * the clerk shall issue an attachment," etc., the affidavit may be made by any person who knows the facts. It is not necessary that it be made by the plaintiff or his authorized agent. Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 35.

D. Formal Requisites.—It is not a sufficient ground to quash an attachment that the affidavit does not technically allege that the affiant is entitled to recover the amount of his claim "in the suit" at bar as that sufficiently appears from the filing of the affidavit in the suit, and stating therein that the affiant is justly entitled to recover a certain sum by virtue of a note, describing it, and that the same is due and unpaid, and that affiant has instituted a suit in chancery for the purpose, and is about to issue an attachment in such suit, it further appearing that the attachment was issued in said chancery suit, and the debt was one that could properly be recovered therein. Altmeyer v. Caulfield, 37 W. Va. 847, 7 S. E. Rep. 409.

E. Jurat or Certificate of Officer.—Although the statute requires that the complaint to sue out an attachment against a debtor shall be made on oath as the foundation of the process, it does not require that the fact of the complaint having been verified by oath shall be certified by the justices and made a part of the record. Kyle v. Connelly, 8 Leigh 719.

Where a paper purporting to be an affidavit contains no jurat and does not show on its face that the party seeking the attachment was sworn, it is not a sufficient paper on which to base an order of attachment. Cosner v. Smith, 36 W. Va. 788, 15 S. E. Rep. 977.

But where such an affidavit as the law requires has been made in an attachment proceeding the accidental omission of the jurat when the affidavit was signed by the officer who administered the oath, was held not to vitiate the attachment. Farmers' Bank of Va. v. Gettinger, 4 W. Va. 305.

F. Averments.

1. Ownership.—In a suit in equity against an absent defendant where it appears from the bill that the court has jurisdiction of the case, it is not necessary for the affidavit to state that the defendant has property in the county where the suit is brought, but it is sufficient to state that he has property and effects in any county of the state. Anderson v. Johnson, 32 Gratt. 558.

2. Knowledge or Relief.—Under Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 1, (see, however, Va. Code 1887, § 2959) every averment in an affidavit to support an attachment had to be stated as a fact, and upon affiant's own knowledge and not upon belief, or information and belief. Clowser v. Hall, 80 Va. 864.

Affidavits as to the ground of attachment are always to be strictly construed, and any omission of the requirements of the statute is fatal to the attachment, but if the language of the affidavit necessarily implies the fact, it is sufficient. Hence, an affidavit "that the claim is just" and "that the defendant is converting, etc.," is a sufficient compliance with the statute, Va. Code 1887, § 2959, which requires an affidavit "that the claim is believed to be just," and "that to the best of affiant's belief defendant is converting," etc. Clinch River Mineral Co. v. Harrison, 91 Va. 122, 21 S. E. Rep. 660, 1 Va. Law Reg. 37.

Under the statute, W. Va. Code, ch. 106, § 1, requiring the affidavit to state the material facts relied on, where the attachment is sought on the ground that the defendant so conceals himself that a summons cannot be served on him an affidavit that "affiant and her friends have been informed by his friends that the defendant has left the state so that a summons cannot be served upon him personally," is insufficient because it does not allege the facts positively. Hudkins v. Haskins, 22 W. Va. 645.

Necessity.—Under W. Va. Act of 1867, an affidavit that the affiant "thinks" the plaintiff ought to recover the sum named is not equivalent to an affidavit that he "believes" he ought to recover such sum, and is not sufficient to authorize an attachment. Rittenhouse v. Harman, 7 W. Va. 380.

3. Nature of Claim.—Under W. Va. Code, ch. 106, § 1, providing that the affidavit must state the nature of the claim, an averment "that his claim is founded upon a written contract for the delivery of certain timber by the plaintiff to the defendant," without stating in what respect the defendant failed to comply with such contract, is insufficient. Cosner v. Smith, 36 W. Va. 788, 15 S. E. Rep. 977.

An affidavit in an attachment case stating that the claim "is for transcript of foreign judgment" sufficiently sets forth the nature of the claim. Todd v. Gates, 20 W. Va. 464.

In an attachment suit upon the ground that the debtor has assigned his property with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors, it is not sufficient for the affidavit to set forth that the debtor did certain acts which of themselves are not necessarily fraudulent, with an intent to defraud his creditors. This is a conclusion of law and should appear, not by averment, but from the facts. Landeman v. Wilson, 29 W. Va. 702, 2 S. E. Rep. 203.

4. Indebtedness.

a. Justice of Demand.—Under the W. Va. Statute of 1867, ch. 118, § 1, requiring that the affidavit for an attachment shall state that the plaintiff's claim is just, it is sufficient if the affidavit state that "the plaintiffs are justly entitled to recover." Gutman v. Va. Iron Co., 5 W. Va. 22.

W. Va. Code, ch. 106, § 1, prescribes that the affidavit for an attachment shall state the nature of the plaintiff's claim, and the amount, at the least, which the affiant believes the plaintiff is justly entitled to recover. Held, the term "justly" is not superfluous or insignificant, but is a material qualification of the rest of the phrase, "entitled to recover," and it, or its equivalent, must be used in order to constitute a substantial compliance with the statute. Reed v. McCloud, 38 W. Va. 701, 18 S. E. Rep. 924. See also, Crim v. Harmon, 38 W. Va. 596, 18 S. E. Rep. 753.

b. Amount of Debt.—The affidavit for an attachment is not sufficient if it does not show the amount the plaintiff is entitled to recover in the action, as well as the nature of the plaintiff's claim. Cosner v. Smith, 36 W. Va. 788, 15 S. E. Rep. 977.

But it is not necessary in Virginia to state the character of the claim, whether due by bond, note, account, or otherwise. McCluny v. Jackson, 6 Gratt. 96.

Under West Virginia Statute.—Where the affidavit for an attachment in designating the amount which the affiant believed the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, omits the words "at the least" contained in the statute, W. Va. Code, ch. 106, § 1, and uses no words equivalent thereto, such defect is fatal and the attachment should be quashed. Neill v. Rogers Bros. Produce Co., 41 W. Va. 37, 23 S. E. Rep. 702; Dulin v. McCaw, 39 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. Rep. 681; Crim v. Harmon, 38 W. Va. 596, 18 S. E. Rep. 753; Altmeyer v. Caulfield, 37 W. Va. 847, 17 S. E. Rep. 409.

c. Maturity of Debt.—Under W. Va. Acts 1885, ch. 33, it is not necessary that the affidavit for an attachment shall in express terms state that the "debt is due," but it is sufficient if it states "the amount at the least which the affiant believes the plaintiff is justly entitled to recover in the action." Ruhl v.

Rogers, 29 W. Va. 779, 2 S. E. Rep. 798; Delaplain v. Rogers, 29 W. Va. 783, 2 S. E. Rep. 800.

5. Nonresidence.—In an attachment suit against an absent debtor under 1 Rev. Code 1819, to subject lands fraudulently conveyed by him in the hands of home defendants, the affidavit must distinctly aver the nonresidence; and if this be denied by the answer, it must be proved, or the chancery court is without jurisdiction. Kelso v. Blackburn, 3 Leigh 299.

6. Sufficiency.

a. Following Language of Statute.—In an attachment proceeding against a corporation on the ground that it has failed to comply with the requirements of section 87, ch. 54 of the Code of W. Va., in reference to the appointment of a person to accept service of process, the affidavit must show that the requirements of said section have not been complied with before an order of attachment can issue by reason of such noncompliance. U. S. Baking Co. v. Bachman, 88 W. Va. 84, 18 S. E. Rep. 382.

b. Stating Specific Facts.—The grounds for attachment are conclusions of law and an affidavit is not sufficient which states that the debtor did certain acts, which of themselves are not necessarily fraudulent, with an intent to defraud his creditors. This, being a conclusion of law, should appear from the facts themselves, not by averment. Landeman v. Wilson, 29 W. Va. 702, 2 S. E. Rep. 203; Hale v. Donahue, 25 W. Va. 414; Delaplain v. Armstrong, 21 W. Va. 211.

Where the affidavit upon which an attachment is issued charges that the grantors made the assignment with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, and in "material facts" sets out the provisions of the deed in which said intent is claimed to appear, showing that the deed is fraudulent upon its face, the affidavit is supported by such "material facts." Landeman v. Wilson, 29 W. Va. 702, 2 S. E. Rep. 203.

But an affidavit alleging the "material facts" for an attachment to be "that the defendant is hiding and concealing a large part of the stock of liquors and wines which the plaintiff sold and delivered to him is not sufficiently definite to sustain the order of attachment. Sandheger v. Hosey, 26 W. Va. 221.

c. Stating Good and Bad Grounds.—Where the affidavit for an attachment contains two grounds for the attachment, the one good and the other bad, it is sufficient. Ruhl v. Rogers, 29 W. Va. 779, 2 S. E. Rep. 798; Delaplain v. Rogers, 29 W. Va. 783, 2 S. E. Rep. 800.

G. Supplemental Affidavit.—A defective affidavit for an order of attachment cannot be supplemented by a subsequent affidavit or proofs. U. S. Baking Co. v. Bachman, 88 W. Va. 84, 18 S. E. Rep. 382.

Although the affidavit does not state the "nature of the plaintiff's claim" as required by the statute, the attachment suit will not be quashed where a second affidavit has been filed before the rights of other parties have intervened. Chapman v. R. Co., 26 W. Va. 299.

H. Effect of Defective Affidavit.—Defective or irregular affidavits, although a ground for reversing a judgment or decree in attachment proceedings for error in departing from the directions of the statute, do not render such a judgment or decree or the subsequent proceedings void. Hall v. Hall, 12 W. Va. 1.

Objections in Appellate Court for First Time.—Objection to an attachment because not supported by an affidavit, or because the affidavit is defective, is ground for a motion to abate the attachment, but the objection must be made in the court below, and cannot be made for the first time in the appellate court. If, however, the bill upon which the attachment issues contains all necessary averments is sworn to and filed before the attachment issued, and the affidavit adopts the bill, this is all that is required. Sims v. Tyrer, 96 Va. 5, 26 S. E. Rep. 581, 4 Va. Law Reg. 530.

VIII. BOND.

A. Necessity.—Where the sheriff is not directed to take possession of the attached property, no bond is required under Va. Code 1887, § 2968. Kenebeck v. Caulfield, 88 Va. 122, 18 S. E. Rep. 348.

An order of attachment should not be issued requiring the officer to whom it is directed to take into his possession the property upon which it is levied until bond has been given as required by W. Va. Code, ch. 106, § 6. Cosner v. Smith, 36 W. Va. 38, 5 S. E. Rep. 977.

B. By Whom Given.—The attachment bond of one partner of a mercantile house suing out an attachment, conditioned that the partner shall pay all costs in case the house shall be cast in the suit, and all damages that shall be adjudged against him for suing out the attachment, is a good bond. Kyle v. Connelly, 3 Leigh 719.

But where an attachment is sued out in the name of a firm and one of the partners gives bond conditioned that if "he" shall be cast in the suit, "he" shall pay all costs and damages which shall be recovered against "him," the bond cannot be considered as that of the firm and is not good. Jones v. Anderson, 7 Leigh 308.

Under the act of 1792, the attachment bond had to be given by the creditor himself, and not by his attorney. Mantz v. Hendley, 2 Hen. & M. 308.

C. Amount.—Judgment on attachment will not be quashed because the bond given on suing it out recites only the sum due, without interest. Smith v. Pearce, Gilmer 84.

Where the claim of the plaintiff in an attachment against an absconding debtor is stated as for a certain sum due by negotiable note, with interest from the day when such note should have been paid, and the attachment bond describes it as sued out for the sum of money mentioned therein, saying nothing of interest, the variance is not material. Smith v. Pearce, 6 Munf. 585.

D. Amendment.—The failure of the clerk to endorse on an attachment bond that it has been acknowledged and approved may be cured at any time with the permission of the court. Anderson v. Kanawha Coal Co., 12 W. Va. 526.

E. Action on.

1. Necessary Averments.—In an action on an attachment bond, it is not sufficient to allege in the declaration, that the defendant "did not pay all such costs and damages as have accrued, etc.," but it must be expressly averred that costs and damages have been actually sustained. Dickinson v. McCraw, 4 Rand. 158.

2. Parties.—The provision in an attachment bond, under Va. Code 1871, ch. 136, § 6, to pay all damages "sustained by any persons by reason of their suing out said order of attachment," does not enure to the benefit of the sheriff, who levied the attachment and took the attached property into his possession and custody. Mitchell v. Chancellor, 14 W. Va. 22.

The bond authorized by Va. Code 1849, ch. 151, § 8, in relation to attachments, is not a general indemnifying bond; but where the attachment issues against the effects of the defendant generally, he alone can sue upon the bond; and where the attachment is issued against specific property, only the defendant or owner of such property can sue upon the bond. When the attachment is issued against the effects of the defendant generally, and is levied upon the property of a third person, such third person has no remedy upon the attachment bond. Davis v. Commonwealth, 13 Gratt. 189.

3. Plea.—Either non damnificatus or de injuria is a good plea to a suit on an attachment bond where the condition is that the plaintiff in the attachment "shall pay all costs and damages which may be awarded against him, or sustained by any person by reason of his suing out said attachment." Hoadley v. Roush, 3 W. Va. 280.

4. Liability of Sureties.—In an action upon an attachment bond with condition to pay all costs and damages which may be awarded against the plaintiff in the attachment, or sustained by any person by reason of the plaintiff having sued it out, it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the attachment was sued out without sufficient cause. The sureties in the attachment bond, when the attachment has been sued out with good cause, are not responsible for the failure of the officer to discharge his duty, or for a trespass committed by him. Offterdinger v. Ford, 92 Va. 636, 24 S. E. Rep. 246, 2 Va. Law Reg. 377.

The court in which a forthcoming bond for property levied on is taken may, in a proper case, direct an exoneretur of the surety, and need not require him to seek his remedy by audita querela or by bill in equity. Steele v. Boyd, 6 Leigh 547, 29 Am. Dec. 218.

5. Damages.—Upon an attachment bond with condition to pay all costs and damages which may be awarded against the plaintiff in the attachment, or sustained by any person by reason of the plaintiff having sued it out, the defendant may maintain an action not only to recover damages awarded against the plaintiff in the attachment, but also other damages sustained by the defendant by reason of the attachment having been sued out without sufficient cause. The words "any person" include the defendant in the attachment. Offterdinger v. Ford, 92 Va. 636, 24 S. E. Rep. 246, 2 Va. Law Reg. 377.

The defendant in attachment may have his action on the attachment bond, to recover damages sustained in consequence of suing out the attachment, without previously ascertaining his damages in some other action. Dickinson v. M'Craw, 4 Rand. 158.

Evidence.—Where a party is engaged in the performance of a contract on a railroad, using his teams and utensils in removing dirt at so much per cubic yard, and his teams and utensils are seized and sold under an attachment wrongfully sued out against him, whereby he is prevented from the performance of his contract, the profit of the contract, which he has thus been prevented from realizing, is a proper element of damage in an action upon the attachment bond, where such profit can be readily ascertained. State v. Andrews, 39 W. Va. 35, 19 S. E. Rep. 385, 45 Am. St. Rep. 884.

IX. WRIT OF WARRANT.

A. Requisites.—The endorsement on the subpoena by the clerk of the court of chancery that the suit is brought to attach the effects of the absent defendant is sufficient to restrain the application of them to any other use, until the plaintiff's demand is satisfied. M'Kim v. Fulton, 6 Call 106.

The order of attachment provided for by the W. Va. Act of 1867, ch. 118, § 1, is not a writ and need not run in the name of the commonwealth. Gutman v. Va. Iron Co., 5 W. Va. 22. But it was held in Sims v. Bank of Charleston, 3 W. Va. 415, that an endorsement for attachment was insufficient which was not directed to the sheriff or any one else, did not require the sheriff to attach the property of the defendant, and did not run in the name of the commonwealth.

B. To What Officer Directed.—Where the writ is not directed to the sheriff of the county where the attached property lies and does not require him to make the attachment, the attachment is invalid. Sims v. Bank of Charleston, 3 W. Va. 415.

An attachment against a nonresident defendant may be directed to the sheriff of another county where he has effects. Pendleton v. Smith, 1 W. Va. 16.

C. Names of Parties—Recital of Cause of Action.—A writ is fatally defective which does not specify the sum demanded, or the names of the plaintiffs or defendants, or to whom the property levied on belongs. Clay v. Neilson, 5 Rand. 596.

D. Recital of Proceedings.—An order of attachment otherwise sufficient is good although it does not recite that an affidavit has been filed or refer to any affidavit on its face, where it appears by the record that a sufficient affidavit was filed by the plaintiff with the clerk when the order of attachment was issued. King v. Board, 7 W. Va. 701.

E. Variance.—The mistake of the clerk in issuing the order of attachment for a greater amount than that named in the affidavit is not such a clerical error as may be corrected on motion, and such attachment should be quashed on motion of the defendant. Ballard v. Great Western Mining & Mfg. Co., 39 W. Va. 394, 19 S. E. Rep. 510.

X. LEVY.

A. Upon Real Property.—Va. Code 1860, ch. 151, § 7, provides that every foreign attachment, except when it is sued out specially against specified property, shall be sufficiently levied in every case by serving a copy of such attachment on such persons as may be designated by the plaintiff in writing, or be known to the officer to be in possession of effects of, or to be indebted to, the defendant; and as to real estate, by such estate being mentioned and described by endorsement on such attachment or on the subpoena. Held, that the endorsement on the subpoena is not necessary to render the attachment valid in such foreign attachment suit, where the bill particularly describes the real estate. Cirde v. Buchanan, 22 Gratt. 205.

B. Upon Personal Property.—Under Va. Code 1878, ch. 148, §§ 7, 8, the attachment may be levied on any visible and tangible effects of a nonresident debtor in his actual or constructive possession, in the common law mode, as in the case of an execution. If those effects, whether visible and tangible or not, are in a third person's possession, they may be sufficiently levied on by delivering a copy of the attachment to such person. But they cannot be seized and taken possession of, unless the creditor has given a bond with security in a penalty at least double the amount sued for; the giving of which bond is optional with the creditor who acquires a lien by the levy without the seizure. Dorrier v. Masters, 83 Va. 459, 2 S. E. Rep. 927.

To constitute an effectual levy, it is not essential that the officer make an actual seizure. If he have the goods in his view and power, and note on the writ the fact of his levy thereon, this will in general suffice. Dorrier v. Masters, 83 Va. 459, 2 S. E. Rep. 927; affirming Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 269.

To make a valid levy of an attachment upon chattels, the officer, though he need not physically seize or even touch them, must have them in his view and power, and do some act indicative of an intent to levy and of the act of levying, and, if the chattels are of a nature to admit of it, must take them into his custody and control. Poling v. Flanagan, 41 W. Va. 191, 23 S. E. Rep. 685.

XI. LIEN.

A. When Lien Commences.—The lien of an attachment commences at the time of the levy. Williamson v. Bowie, 6 Munf. 176; Poling v. Flanagan, 41 W. Va. 191, 23 S. E. Rep. 685.

B. Extent of Lien.—The attachment operates as a lien only upon the debts and effects of the absent debtor, in the hands of the home defendants against whom, and upon whom, it is served. Farmers' Bank v. Day, 6 Gratt. 360.

C. How Lien on Wife's Interest as Legatee Defeated.—Though the service of the process upon the executor, in a proceeding by foreign attachment, creates a lien upon the wife's interest as legatee in her father's estate in favor of the creditor, yet if the husband dies pending the proceedings, leaving his wife surviving him, the lien of the creditor is defeated, and the property belongs to the wife. Vance v. McLaughlin's Adm'r, 8 Gratt. 280.

D. Priorities.

1. Between Attachments.—Among attaching creditors proceeding by foreign attachment, the creditor whose subpoena is first sued out and served is entitled to priority of satisfaction. Farmers' Bank v. Day, 6 Gratt. 360.

Two attachments against an absconding debtor are levied on the same property. The first levied is quashed by the county court, but upon appeal this judgment is reversed. Pending the appeal an order is made in the second attachment case for a sale of the property, and it is sold and the proceeds are paid over to the creditor in the second attachment. Held, an action for money had and received will lie by the first attaching creditor against the creditor in the second attachment for the proceeds of the sale. Caperton v. M'Corkle, 5 Gratt. 177.

Since the question of priority between several attachments is determined not by priority of judgments but of attachments, the first attachment creditor may enjoin a creditor under a subsequent attachment but prior judgment. Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. 284.

Under 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 123, creditors of an absent defendant who have proceeded by foreign attachment in equity have priority over creditors seeking, by a subsequent attachment on the same property issued after the service of the subpoena in chancery on the home defendant, to enforce an appearance in an action at law. Erskine v. Staley, 12 Leigh 406.

2. Between Attachments and Other Liens.

a. Verbal Lien on Land.—A recital that the attachment issued in the cause was returned served on personal property and real estate is not evidence of the issue and levy of such attachment that will constitute a lien on the real estate mentioned as against third persons seeking to enforce a prior verbal lien upon such real estate. Houston v. McCluney, 8 W. Va. 135.

b. Execution Lien.—A fiat facias placed in the hands of an officer for execution is a legal lien under Va. Code 1860, ch. 188, § 3, and continues in effect after the return day. Such lien has priority over an attachment subsequently levied, or execution lien under the same law, even though there has been a proceeding by suggestion under the junior, prior to that under the senior execution. Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 216; Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401.

c. Lien on Property Pledged.—An attachment levied upon pledged property is subject to the lien of the pledge. First Nat. Bank of Parkersburg v. Harkness, 42 W. Va. 156, 24 S. E. Rep. 548.

d. Lien on Partnership Effects.—Where partners have been declared bankrupts, one creditor of the partnership cannot attach the partnership effects so as to obtain a preference over the other partnership creditors. Lindsey v. Corkery, 29 Gratt. 650.

e. Pendency of Suit.—An attachment against the effects of the husband as an absconding debtor, levied before the institution of a suit by the wife for a divorce, entitles the attaching creditor to be satisfied out of the attached effects, in preference to the claim of the wife. Jennings v. Montague, 2 Gratt. 250.

3. Between Attachments and Alienations.

a. Deed of Trust.—A subpoena in chancery was sued out against an absent debtor and home defendants. The subpoena was returned executed on the home defendants, but the date of its service upon them was not stated. After the issue of the subpoena, but before the return day thereof, the debtor executed a deed to secure certain creditors, which was duly filed. Held, that the attachment was postponed to the deed. Richeson v. Richeson, 2 Gratt. 497.

b. Sale of Shares of Stock.—A creditor attaching the shares of a stockholder in a railroad company acquires a claim superior to that of a subsequent bona fide purchaser of such shares for value without notice of the attachment. Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Griffith, 76 Va. 913.

c. Sale of Negotiable Note.—S, the owner of the negotiable note of M, endorses the same and deposits it with a bank as collateral security for a loan obtained upon the discount by the bank of the note of B. S sells the note to O, and gives O an order on the bank to deliver the note to O. On the same day O presents the order at the bank, and is told the president of the bank is absent from town. Some days thereafter O has an interview with the president at the bank, and is then informed that the debt of S is nearly paid, and that he would deliver to O the note but for the service of attachment upon the bank. The debt of S is afterwards paid in full. Before the sale by S to O, an attachment had been served upon M at the suit of a creditor of S; but of this O had no notice when he purchased the note. After the sale and notice to the bank by O, an attachment was served on the bank by another creditor of S. Held, that the sale by S to O is valid, and he is entitled to the note as against the attaching creditors of S. Howe v. Ould, 28 Gratt. 1.

d. Assignment of Legacy.—A creditor, at whose suit process of foreign attachment against an absent debtor is served on one of two executors, is entitled to priority of satisfaction, out of a legacy to the absent debtor, over an assignee of the legacy who claims under an assignment dated the day after the service of the attachment on the executor. Sandidge v. Graves, 1 Pat. & H. 101.

4. As Effected by the Recording Acts.—Prior to the Va. statute, Acts 1893-94, page 545, requiring foreign mortgages to be recorded, the lien of a mortgage creditor upon a chattel, subject to a mortgage in another state duly recorded according to the law of that state, though not recorded in Virginia, had iority over the lien of an attaching creditor in this state. Craig v. Williams, 90 Va. 500, 18 S. E. Rep. 899, Am. St. Rep. 934.

Since the Virginia statute of registry does not embrace choses in action, an assignment of such chose in action to a trustee to pay the debts of the assignor is valid against a subsequent attaching creditor of the assignor. Kirkland v. Brune, 31 Gratt. 126; Gregg v. Sloan, 76 Va. 497.

A purchaser of land without notice of an attachment which had been previously levied upon it, but which had not been recorded or docketed as required by Va. Code 1873, ch. 182, § 5, is entitled to hold the land free from the lien of the attachment. Ummack v. Soran, 30 Gratt. 292.

Under the Virginia Registration Laws (1866-67, page 538; Va. Code 1887, § 2465), an attachment has priority over a deed of trust, conveying goods and chattels, recorded in another state but not in Virginia. Smith v. Smith, 19 Gratt. 545.

XII. DISPOSITION OF ATTACHED PROPERTY.

A. Sale.—Upon a foreign attachment in chancery, subject lands of an absent debtor to a debt claimed by the attaching creditor, payable in instalments, some of which have, and others have not, been due at the time of the decree, held, that the court ought not to direct the sale of the subject to satisfy more than the instalments already due, but could order a sale to satisfy what is due, and hold the creditor's attachment a lien on the subject, for the instalments afterwards to fall due. Watts v. Linney, 3 Leigh 272.

A sale in a foreign attachment suit under W. Va. Code, ch. 151, without the bond required by section of said chapter conditioned that the plaintiff will perform such future order as may be made upon the appearance of said defendant, and his making defense," will be set aside. Hall v. Lowther, 22 W. Va. 570.

Where there is a valid attachment and levy of the same, a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, an order or decree of sale, and a sale by a commissioner appointed by the court, and confirmation thereof with direction to make a deed to the purchaser, a deed made by the commissioner, by direction of the purchaser, to his assignee is admissible in another suit in connection with the record, c., to show title in the assignee. Hall v. Hall, 12 W. Va. 1.

B. Delivery on Forthcoming or Delivery Bond.—Special bail to replevy the attached effects and answer to the action ought to be received, in behalf of the defendant upon an attachment issued against him as an absconding debtor; notwithstanding he did not appear in person or by attorney; such bail and plea being offered at the term to which the attachment is returned executed, and before the judgment upon it is pronounced. Smith v. Pearce, Munf. 585.

It is error to quash a forthcoming bond on motion, simply because the name of the obligee therein has been misspelled, or so written as to make it doubtful as to the person intended. Ambach v. Armstrong, 29 W. Va. 744, 3 S. E. Rep. 44.

XIII. PROCEEDINGS TO SUPPORT OR ENFORCE ATTACHMENT.

A. In General.—In an attachment suit in equity, it is not necessary or proper to direct an inquiry whether the rents and profits of the real estate will pay the debt within a reasonable time. Curry v. Sale, 15 W. Va. 867.

B. Process and Service.

1. Necessity.—In an attachment in equity against property alleged to belong to nonresident debtors, complainants, who asked for no order of publication against such nonresident debtors, who failed to serve them personally with process, and who consented to the hearing of a motion by the claimant of the property to abate the attachment, cannot object to a decree abating the attachment, on the ground that no process, personal or by publication, had been executed against the defendants. Kern v. Wyatt, 89 Va. 885, 17 S. E. Rep. 549.

Objections to the regularity of attachment proceedings may be taken advantage of, not only in the trial court, but in an appellate court, although not raised in the trial court; and the court may, of its own motion, dismiss an irregular attachment, and ought to do so when there has been no appearance by the nonresident debtor, and no personal service upon him. McAllister v. Guggenheimer, 91 Va. 317, 21 S. E. Rep. 475.

2. Sufficiency.—Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 27, providing on what conditions the defendant, after a decree, may petition for a rehearing, but exempting from its operation one who has been served with a copy of the attachment or with process in the suit, issued more than sixty days before the date of the decree, only refers to such a service in the proceedings in the suit, and not to a service out of the suit and out of the state. Anderson v. Johnson, 32 Gratt. 558.

Under Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 27, defendants in foreign attachment may appear pending the suit, tender security for costs and have it reheard. The exception of a defendant served with a copy of the attachment, or with process in the suit, does not refer to a service thereof outside the proceedings in the suit or outside the state. And such service can have no greater effect than an order of publication duly posted and published. Smith v. Chilton, 77 Va. 535; approving Anderson v. Johnson, 32 Gratt. 558.

C. Order of Publication.—Where a defendant in an attachment suit has been served with process, although he has not been served with a copy of the order of attachment, he need not be proceeded against by order of publication, and has no time given him by W. Va. Code, ch. 106, in which to appear in the suit after the term at which judgment is rendered against him on the claim and an order made to sell the attached effects or estate; nor is any bond required to be given as provided for in section 23 of said chapter. Capehart v. Dowery, 10 W. Va. 130.

Where an attachment proceeding is instituted against a firm consisting of two members and service of the writ is had upon only one partner, order of publication, as prescribed by the statute, should be had against the other partner; but if both partners appear by attorney, and submit motions or file a plea, this is an appearance to the suit, and the court may proceed as if both parties had been served. Andrews v. Mundy, 36 W. Va. 22, 14 S. E. Rep. 414.

A joint judgment was rendered against several of the defendants in a suit in which an attachment had issued against all the defendants as nonresidents. One of them, who had plead, took an appeal, and the court of appeals affirmed the judgment. Another of the defendants against whom the joint judgment was rendered, a nonresident, who had not plead, after due notice, moved the circuit court which had rendered the judgment to reverse and annul the same, because there had been a personal judgment against him, though he had never been served with process. Held, that the circuit court properly overruled his motion, it being conclusively presumed that he was notified of the appeal and that all questions raised by his motion had been considered and decided adversely by the court of appeals when it affirmed the joint judgment, summons of the nonappealing defendants being necessary to vest the court of appeals with jurisdiction. Newman v. Molloyhan, 10 W. Va. 488.

Necessity of Posting Notice.—Where, before an attachment is returned "executed," an order of publication is made, but the order is not posted by the clerk at the front door of the courthouse on the first day of the court next after it is entered, the attachment should be abated. Va. Code 1887, §§ 2979, 3231; Petty v. Frick, 86 Va. 501, 10 S. E. Rep. 886.

D. Appearance.—The defendant in an attachment may enter bail and plea without appearing in person. Smith v. Pearce, Gilmer 84.

Special bail to replevy the attached effects and a plea to the action ought to be received in behalf of the defendant upon an attachment issued against him as an absconding debtor, notwithstanding he did not appear in person or by attorney, where such bail and plea is offered at the term to which the attachment is returned executed and before the judgment upon it is rendered. Smith v. Pearce, 6 Munf. 585.

In an attachment proceeding instituted against a firm consisting of two partners, only one of whom is a resident, if both partners appear by attorney, and submit motions or file a plea, this is an appearance to the suit, and the court may proceed as if both parties had been served. Andrews v. Mundy, 86 W. Va. 22, 14 S. E. Rep. 414.

E. Sufficiency of Pleading.—A demurrer will not lie to a bill in equity for the failure of the plaintiff in an attachment suit to aver that an attachment has issued. O'Brien v. Stephens, 11 Gratt. 610.

Answer or Plea.—Complainants sued out an attachment under Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 11, and filed their bill averring a breach of warranty in a sale of phosphate to them. Defendants demurred to the bill, moved to abate the attachment, and filed their answer denying every material allegation of the bill. No testimony was taken. Held, that though the demurrer should be properly overruled and the motion to abate might not be properly sustainable, yet the bill being denied as to all its material averments, should be dismissed with costs to the defendant. Boyce v. McCaw, 76 Va. 740.

In a proceeding by foreign attachment to collect the price of personal property, it is competent for the defendant to plead and rely on a breach of warranty in reduction or abatement of the price, and when such defence is plead and relied on in the answer, it is unnecessary to file a cross-bill for that purpose. Baker v. Oil Tract Co., 7 W. Va. 454.

F. Judgment.

1. In General.—In an attachment suit under the act of April 3d, 1852, giving a remedy in equity to a creditor against his absent debtor where the debtor has estate or debts due to him in the county or corporation where the suit is brought, when the court has properly taken jurisdiction, it must proceed to give relief according to the principles of equity. O'Brien v. Stephens, 11 Gratt. 610.

Stock of a corporation, attached as in the hands of a garnishee, should be sold under an order of court made for that purpose; but it is error for the court to render a judgment against the garnished corporation for the value of the stock, unless it appear that the lien of the attaching creditor on the stock was lost by the act of the corporation. C. & O. R. Co. v. Paine, 29 Gratt. 502.

Upon a foreign attachment in chancery to subject lands of the absent debtor to a debt claimed by the attaching creditor, payable in instalments, some of which have, and others have not fallen due, at the time of the decree, held, that the court ought not to direct a sale of the subject to satisfy more than the instalments already due; but should order a sale to satisfy what is due, and hold the creditor's attachment a lien on the subject, for the instalments afterwards to fall due. Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh 272.

In an attachment against an absconding debtor, judgment should first be entered against the debtor, and then the garnishee should be ordered to pay it. George v. Blue, 3 Call 455.

2. In Personam or in Rem.—In an attachment proceeding under the act of April 3d, 1852, if an absent defendant does not appear in the cause there cannot be a personal decree against him; but the attached effects alone can be subjected. But if he does appear, there may be a personal decree only against him, or there may be both a personal decree and a decree subjecting the attached effects. O'Brien v. Stephens, 11 Gratt. 610.

The attaching creditor, having established the debt, is entitled to a personal decree against the absent debtor, though the whole property attached is exhausted in paying the debt of the home defendant. Williamson v. Gayle, 7 Gratt. 152. See also Schofield v. Cox, 8 Gratt. 533.

Where an attachment has been sued out against a nonresident corporation which has the equitable title to real estate attached in the cause, a personal decree may be rendered against such nonresident corporation, which appears in the cause; but the attached property will not be sold in the absence of the trustees who hold the legal title; they must either be served with process, or, if nonresident, an order of publications must issue against them and be duly published. Chapman v. P. & S. R. Co., 18 W. Va. 184.

3. Validity.—A decree for the plaintiff in a proceeding by foreign attachment in chancery was erroneous, where it was without affidavit of the defendant's nonresidence; was for a sale of lands without requiring bond with surety from the plaintiff with condition for performing future orders or decrees and was for a sale of land for cash, with directions for payment of money to the creditor and conveyance of land to the purchaser, before the sale was reported and confirmed. Brien v. Pittman, 12 Leigh 308.

Presumption.—In a suit by attachment the record may show upon its face that the debtor did or did not appear; and if it does, the judgment will have effect accordingly. If the record does not show whether he did or did not appear, the presumption is in favor of the validity of the judgment. Fisher v. March, 26 Gratt. 765.

G. Right to Rehear.—Under Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 27, Code 1887, § 2986, defendants in foreign attachment may appear pending the suit, tender security for costs and have it reheard. The exception of a defendant served with a copy of the attachment or with process in the suit, does not refer to a service thereof outside the proceedings in the suit or outside the state. And such service can have no greater effect than an order of publication duly posted and published. This rule applies to acknowledgments of such services made outside the state. Smith v. Chilton, 77 Va. 585; Anderson v. Johnson, 32 Gratt. 558. As to reopening case by nonresident defendant, see Smith v. Life Ass'n of America, 76 Va. 380.

XIV. RETURN.

A. Time for Making.—Prior to the Virginia statute, Acts 1893-94, p. 495, allowing attachments to be made returnable to a rule day, all attachments, whether by regular writ or by endorsement on the summons, had to be made returnable to a term of the court in which the suit was pending, and not to a rule day of such court. Va. Code 1887, § 2965; Craig v. Williams, 90 Va. 500, 18 S. E. Rep. 899, 44 Am. St. Rep. 934; Clinch River Mineral Co. v. Harrison, 91 Va. 122, 21 S. E. Rep. 660, 1 Va. Law Reg. 37; Grinberg v. Singerman, 90 Va. 645, 19 S. E. Rep. 161; McAllister v. Guggenheimer, 91 Va. 317, 21 S. E. Rep. 475.

B. Requisites.—The return must show that the attachment was levied on the property of the defendant in order to make it valid. Offtendinger v. Ford, 86 Va. 917, 12 S. E. Rep. 1.

The return must show that the attachment was levied upon the property as the property of the defendant in order to make a valid levy on real estate under Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, §§ 7 and 9. And in attachment proceedings in equity against a nonresident, under section 11, the officer's return that he "served the summons on — by delivering a copy to him," and that "he resided on the premises within described," does not show a valid levy. Robertson v. Hoge, 83 Va. 124, 1 S. E. Rep. 667.

A sheriff has no power to execute an attachment outside of his bailiwick. Hence, if the return is regular on its face, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the attachment was legally executed, and the return need not show that it was executed in his bailiwick. Guarantee Co. v. Nat. Bank, 96 Va. 480, 28 S. E. Rep. 909, 3 Va. Law Reg. 873.

C. Description of Land.—The levy of an attachment in equity on real estate must contain such general description of the real estate, and describe it with such substantial accuracy, that it may be easily identified when conveyed, by looking alone to the levy, without the aid of extrinsic evidence. Raub v. Otterback, 92 Va. 517, 23 S. E. Rep. 888, 1 Va. Law Reg. 841.

XV. CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS.

A. Right to Question Validity of Attachment.—Any person interested in the property attached, who was not originally a party to the suit, may intervene to have his rights adjudicated by the court in which the attachment suit is pending. Capehart v. Dowery, 10 W. Va. 130.

To entitle a person, who claims to have a mortgage lien on land attached by a creditor in a suit in equity in which an attachment is sued out against a nonresident debtor under W. Va. Code, ch. 106, § 24, to dispute the validity of the attachment, such person must appear in the court in which the proceeding is had and file his petition and give security for costs. Tappan v. Pease, 7 W. Va. 682.

A mere creditor at large of the absconding debtor is not a person interested in disputing the attaching plaintiff's claim within the meaning of W. Va. Code, ch. 106, § 23. Crim v. Harmon, 38 W. Va. 596, 18 S. E. Rep. 753.

B. Right of Subsequent Attaching Creditors.—A subsequent attaching creditor may appear to the first attachment and, either in his own name or in the name of the absconding debtor, contest the right of the first attaching creditor to recover. M'Cluny v. Jackson, 6 Gratt. 96.

A subsequent attaching creditor, whose attachment was issued in another county but levied in the county where the effects or property of the debtor are, may appear by petition and move to quash the preceding attachment for good grounds. Pendleton v. Smith, 1 W. Va. 16.

Parties who claim to be subsequent attaching creditors cannot come into court and dispute the validity of a prior attachment on mere motion. They must file their petition in accordance with Va. Code 1860, ch. 151, § 25. The same provision is found in W. Va. Code 1869, ch. 106, § 24. Ludington v. Hull, 4 W. Va. 130.

C. Proceedings to Determine Claims to Property.—The complainant in an attachment against property of a nonresident debtor, who had not been served with process personally or by publication, consented to the hearing of a motion by a claimant of the property to abate the attachment. Held, that a decree abating the attachment and declaring the estate not to belong to said debtors was not premature or erroneous. Kern v. Wyatt, 89 Va. 885, 17 S. E. Rep. 549.

Retention of Cause.—Where, in such case as the above, the court abated the attachment because the property was not owned by the nonresident firm, the decree ends the cause and it will not be retained to inquire whether one of said firm had an attachable interest in the property. Kern v. Wyatt, 89 Va. 885, 17 S. E. Rep. 549.

Where Claims Sustained.—The attaching creditor, proving his debt, is entitled to a personal decree against his absent debtor, though the property may be adjudged to the assignee. Schofield v. Cox, 8 Gratt. 533.

Appearance.—Where an affidavit is filed, along with the answer of a corporation whose stock has been attached, alleging that some third person claims the said stock, and that the corporation claims no interest therein, nor colludes with such claimant, but is ready to dispose of the stock as the court shall direct, the court should require such third person to appear and state the nature of his claim, and maintain or relinquish the same. C. & O. R. Co. v. Paine, 29 Gratt. 502.

Petitions.—A plaintiff in attachment, who has a deed of trust on the property attached, cannot unite with the trustees in the deed and come into the attachment suit by petition and ask to have the attached property delivered to the trustees. Section 2984 of the Code of 1887 was intended for the protection of the rights of third parties, and not of the plaintiff in the attachment. In this case the plaintiff, though united with the trustees, was the real petitioner, and, the attachment having been quashed because issued without sufficient cause and upon false suggestion, the property was rightly restored to the defendant. Littell v. Lansburg, 96 Va. 540, 32 S. E. Rep. 63, 4 Va. Law Reg. 843.

Proper Issue.—Where the petitioner claims the attached property under Va. Code 1873, ch. 148, § 25, the proper issue to be tried is, "whether or not petitioner has any title to, lien on or interest in the attached property or its proceeds." See Va. Code 1887, § 2984; Starke v. Scott, 78 Va. 180.

Right to a Jury.—Prior to Va. Code 1887, § 2984, where persons claiming the property attached, or some interest therein, were admitted as parties in the cause, it was error for the court to pass upon the claim without the intervention of a jury. Anderson v. Johnson, 82 Gratt. 558.

XVI. DISSOLUTION.

A. What Will Effect Dissolution.

1. Bankruptcy.—Under the federal bankruptcy act of 1867, the bankruptcy of the defendant in an attachment proceeding, and the assignment of his effects to a commissioner in bankruptcy dissolved any attachment not issued four months prior to the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy. Weisenfeld v. Mispelhorn, 5 W. Va. 46.

2. Death of Defendant No Dissolution.—The death of a debtor whose real property has been attached in a suit of equity, and proceeding therein by attachment against him and his estate as a nonresident, does not dissolve the attachment or lien thereon, where the death occurs after the attachment is levied. White v. Heavner, 7 W. Va. 324.

3. Failure to Require Security.—Where the plaintiff in an attachment suit waives the statutory right to require security from the defendant upon his appearance, the attached property is held to be thereby discharged. Tiernans v. Schley, 2 Leigh 25.

4. Lien of Prior Attaching Creditor.—See ante, "Lien of Attachment."

B. Procedure for.

1. Motion to Quash.

a. In General—Right to Quash.—An attachment irregularly issued ought to be quashed ex officio by the court to which it is returned, though bail be not given, nor any plea filed by the defendant. Mantz v. Hendley, 2 Hen. & M. 308.

Upon a motion under Va. Code 1860, ch. 151, § 22, to abate an attachment on the ground that it has been issued on false suggestions or without sufficient cause, the question is whether, upon all the evidence, there was probable cause to believe the defendant was doing the act which would authorize the attachment; and not whether the facts as they appeared to the affiant, though only a small part perhaps of the facts of the case, afforded him reasonable grounds for such a belief. Clafin v. Steenbock, 18 Gratt. 842.

b. Who May Make Motion to Quash.—Any party interested may move the court to quash an affidavit and attachment. Capehart v. Dowery, 10 W. Va. 130.

c. Waiver of Right to Move to Quash.—The right to move to quash an attachment on the ground of an insufficient affidavit is not, under W. Va. Code, ch. 106, § 19, waived by appearance and filing an answer. Dulin v. McCaw, 39 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. Rep. 681.

d. Effect of Decision Denying Motion.—The power given to circuit judges to quash or dismiss attachments in vacation is not final, and does not supersede the defendant's right to make defense at the trial in term under the Virginia statutes. Dunlap v. Dillard, 77 Va. 847.

e. Province of Court and Jury.—Where the plaintiff, on a motion to abate an attachment, declines to express any wish for a jury, and the defendant expresses a wish that a jury may be dispensed with, the court should hear and decide the cause without a jury. Clafin v. Steenbock, 18 Gratt. 842.

f. Evidence—Burden of Proof.—Upon a motion to abate an attachment the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the attachment was issued on sufficient cause, and he may, therefore, be required to introduce his evidence first. Wright v. Rambo, 21 Gratt. 158.

The burden of proving that an attachment was issued on sufficient cause rests on the plaintiff, and he should introduce his evidence first, when the defendant moves an abatement. Sublett v. Wood, 3 Va. 318.

Fraud.—Where an attachment is sued out on the ground that the plaintiff has executed a deed with intent to defraud creditors, the burden of proving such fraud rests on the attaching creditors. Burris v. Trant, 88 Va. 980, 14 S. E. Rep. 845.

Residence.—Residence once established is presumed to continue until proved to have been changed; and the burden of proving the change is on him that asserts it. Starke v. Scott, 78 Va. 180.

2. Plea in Abatement.

a. In General.—A plea that the sum for which an attachment issued was not due at the date of the affidavit on which it was based should not be received as a plea in abatement of the attachment. Anderson v. Kanawha Coal Co., 12 W. Va. 526.

Where the bill shows on its face proper matter for the jurisdiction of the court, no exceptions for want of such jurisdiction can be taken except by plea in abatement. Middleton v. White, 5 W. Va. 572.

The fact that an attachment bond is signed by the plaintiff's attorney, without authority, cannot be taken advantage of by a motion to quash. The proper remedy, if any, is by a plea in abatement. Tingle v. Brison, 14 W. Va. 295.

b. How Plea Should Conclude.—A plea in abatement to an attachment ought not to conclude with praying judgment if the plaintiff ought to have, and maintain his action, but only that the attachment be quashed. Mantz v. Hendley, 2 Hen. & M. 308.

3. Voluntary Dismissal of Attachment.—Where the plaintiff has sued out an attachment both at law and in equity, he may dismiss his attachment at law and proceed on his attachment in equity. Magill v. Manson, 20 Gratt. 527.

4. Effect of Dismissal.—Attachment in equity cannot be maintained on undue debts on the ground that the debtors are nonresidents unless they have disposed of their effects fraudulently, or are about to do so; and upon abatement the court cannot retain the suit and grant relief, but must dismiss the bill. Va. Code 1887, § 2964; Wingo v. Purdy, 6 Va. 472, 12 S. E. Rep. 970.

XVII. ACTIONS FOR WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT.

A. Grounds of Action.—Both malice and probable cause are necessary to sustain an action for wrongfully suing out a foreign attachment. Marshall v. Bussard, Gilmer 9.

In an action for damages for suing out a writ of attachment, it is necessary to allege in the declaration that it was sued out maliciously and without probable cause. Burkhart v. Jennings, 2 W. Va. 36.

Probable Cause.—Probable cause for suing out an attachment is a belief by the attaching creditor in the existence of the facts essential to the prosecution of his attachment, founded upon facts which might induce such a belief on the part of a man of ordinary caution, prudence and judgment. Burkhart v. Jennings, 2 W. Va. 242; Spengler v. Davy, 15 Gratt. 881. See also, Clafin v. Steenbock, 18 Gratt. 842.

B. Form of Action.—Trespass on the case is the proper action against a person who maliciously and without probable cause sues out an attachment and causes it to be levied on the property of another. Shaver v. White, 6 Munf. 110; Olinger v. McChesney, 7 Leigh 670.

C. Persons Liable.—A firm assigned its goods and two stores on premises of which they held leases in trust to pay certain debts, with authority to take possession, sell the goods, and collect the debts. W attached said goods. On the same day, two hours later, a bank sued out an attachment against the goods and leased premises. The same officer made both levies. F interpleaded and there was a judgment in his favor; and afterwards the suit of W was dismissed. F then sued the bank for the damages he had sustained by the levy of their attachment. Held, that F had a right to recover from the bank all the damages he had sustained by the levy of the bank upon the two storehouses held under lease and the withholding the possession from him. Fechheimer v. Nat. Exch. Bank, 31 Gratt. 651.

Several Liability.—Where attaching creditors wrongfully levy successive attachments on the same property, they are severally liable for the damages. Fechheimer v. Nat. Exch. Bank, 31 Gratt. 651.

D. Evidence.—Where several attachments have been wrongfully levied upon the same property, it is not admissible to introduce parol evidence, in an action for damages therefor, to show that the property was exclusively held under the first attachment levied. Fechheimer v. Nat. Exch. Bank, 31 Gratt. 651.

632 *Johnson v. Gibbons.*

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

1. Attorney and Client—Authority of Attorneys.—In 1860 attorneys at law receive two notes, and give a receipt, which says:—Received for collection, and after describing them says:—On the above notes we are to bring suit, and prosecute them to judgment, and to have a fee of five dollars in each case. Though the last clause of the receipt may be construed to relieve them from the obligation to collect, and from the corresponding compensation or commission for collecting, it cannot be construed to deny to them the authority to collect, or to limit them to the function of prosecuting the claims to judgment.

2. Same—Same—Laches of Client—Ratification.†—Judgments having been recovered in the cases and executions issued, which were stayed, the debtor in April 1862 pays to the attorneys $2,600 in part of these debts, the payment being in confederate money, neither the attorneys nor the debtor having any notice that the creditor was unwilling to receive confederate money, and the attorneys write immediately to the creditor that they have this money for him; and he, holding that the attorneys had no authority to collect the money, does not reply to their letter; and neither attorneys nor debtor hear of any objection to their receipt of the money until 1874. The creditor is concluded by his failure to give his attorneys notice of his objection to their receiving the money.

*For monographic note on Attorney and Client, see end of case.

†Authority of Attorneys—Laches of Client—Ratification.—In Higginbotham v. May, 90 Va. 239, 17 S. E. Rep. 941, the court said: "In Law v. Crop, 1 Black's R. 539, MR. JUSTICE GREEN, speaking for the whole court, said: 'When informed by his agent of what he had done, if the principal did not choose to affirm the act, it was his duty to give immediate information of his repudiation. He cannot, by holding his peace and apparent acquiescence, have the benefit of the contract if it should turn out to be profitable, and retain a right to repudiate it if otherwise. The principal must, therefore, when informed, reject within a reasonable time, or be deemed to adopt by acquiescence.' These remarks are applicable to this case as to that. Johnson v. Gibbons, 27 Gratt. 636; Coffman v. Miller, 26 Gratt. 608."

In January 1874, H. C. Gibbons gave notice to James M. Johnson that he would move the county court of Washington county to quash two executions, and also two writs of venditioni exponas, which had been issued from the clerk's office of said county court in the name of said Johnson against said Gibbons and others. By consent the cases were removed to the circuit court of Washington county, and came on to 633 *be heard in that court in February 1874. The material facts are as follows:

In 1860, Bekem & Campbell, attorneys at law, practising in the county of Washington, received from Johnson two notes, and gave him a receipt therefor, in which they say:—Received of James M. Johnson for collection a note drawn by A. F. Bradley and payable to H. G. Gibbons for $500, dated, &c.; another note drawn by same, payable to same, dated at the same time, and payable four months after date for $2,000, at, &c. On the above notes we are to bring suit, and prosecute them to judgment, and to have a fee of five dollars in each case.

Bekem & Campbell instituted suits on these notes in the county court of Washington, and recovered judgments against Bradley and Gibbons, and executions were issued upon them, and forthcoming bonds taken and forfeited; and executions were issued on the forfeited forthcoming bonds, returnable to May 1861. On these executions stay bonds were executed in July 1861 by Gibbons, with William King Heiskell, the sheriff, as his surety. About the same time, Gibbons, who had been the previous sheriff, put into the hands of Heiskell tax and other tickets, amounting to $3,197.94, which Heiskell was to collect and account for in paying the two executions of Johnson against Gibbons, &c. And on the 5th of April 1862 Heiskell paid to Bekem & Campbell $2,600 on the said two executions. This payment was in confederate money.

Johnson's statement, which was received as evidence, is—That after the executions had gone to the officer's hands, he had been pressing both Gibbons and Heiskell for the money. In 1861, about June of that year, when pressing Heiskell for the money, 634 *Heiskell said he had property levied on, I think he said cattle, and unless I would attend the sale and make the property bring something like it would have brought in the fall before, I could not get my money; stating that some law of that kind had been passed. I told him I would take nothing but coin. Heiskell then said, then you cannot get your money. I replied, I will wait until I can get such money. * * * In the spring of the year 1862 I received a letter from Mr. Bekem, in which he stated he had $2,000 in confederate money for me, and that I could get the rest of my money in that currency whenever I wanted it. To which letter I made no reply, as Mr. Bekem had no authority to collect this debt for me.

It was agreed that Heiskell was dead. Gibbons testified that he had no notice that Mr. Bekem was not authorized to collect these debts. And it was further agreed, that the original executions went into the hands of Gibbons, who was then deputy sheriff of Washington county, and who was fined $50 at March court 1861 for the failure to return the said executions upon the motion of Johnson; in which motion he was represented by Bekem & Campbell as his attorneys.

The cases were by consent heard together; and the court rendered a judgment by which the executions and the writs of venditioni exponas were quashed. And it was adjudged that the $2,600 paid to Bekem & Campbell should be applied to satisfy the judgment on the note for $2,000, and the balance should be entered as a credit on the other judgment. And Johnson thereupon applied to a judge of this court for a writ of error and supersedeas; which was awarded.

Gilmore and D. Trigg, for the appellant.

635 *J. A. Buchanan and R. M. Page, for the appellee.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion that there is no error in the judgment. Johnson was promptly informed by his attorney, Bekem, of the payment made to him on the 5th of April 1862, in confederate money, upon his executions against Gibbons. Johnson admits that he made no reply to the letter of Mr. Bekem informing him of the payment; for which he assigns the very insufficient reason, that he had no authority to collect the debt for him. Mr. Bekem was an attorney at law, engaged in the practice of his profession in connection with Mr. Campbell, in the firm name of Bekem & Campbell, when they receipted to Mr. Johnson for the notes upon which they obtained the judgments for which the executions in question were issued. In their receipt they say: "Received of James M. Johnson, for collection, a note"—which they describe—also "another note"—which they describe—and conclude, "on the above notes we are to bring suits, and prosecute them to judgment, and to have a fee of $5 in each case," &c. This last clause of the receipt seems to indicate that the undertaking of the attorneys was to prosecute the suits to judgment, for which their compensation is fixed; but it can hardly be construed as a revocation of the first clause, which authorizes them to collect, or of the general authority of an attorney to collect. Though it may be construed to relieve them from the obligation to collect, and from the corresponding compensation or commission for collecting, which it is probable was intended, it cannot be construed, we think, to deny to them the authority to collect, or to limit them 636 to the function *of prosecuting the claims to judgment. And this view is confirmed by the fact, that a motion was prosecuted by the same attorneys against the deputy sheriff, to a judgment for a fine of fifty dollars, for failing to return the executions.

If Johnson was really of opinion that Bekem had no authority to collect the money, he had reason to believe, from what has been narrated, and from his having actually received the money, that he considered he had authority to collect it; and so far from the fact of his belief that he had not, furnishing a reason or excuse for not replying to his letter, it made it the more incumbent on him to have promptly replied, and to have informed him that he did not acknowledge his authority to collect the money, and that he did not approve of his receiving confederate money, and would not receive it from him. Mr. Justice Greer, of the supreme court of the United States, in Law v. Crop, 1 Black's R. 539, says, speaking for the whole court: "When informed by his agent of what he had done, if the principal did not choose to affirm the act, it was his duty to give immediate information of his repudiation. He cannot, by holding his peace and apparent acquiescence have the benefit of the contract (in this case payment) if it should turn out to be profitable, and retain a right to repudiate it if otherwise. The principal must, therefore, when informed, reject within a reasonable time, or be deemed to adopt by acquiescence."

It does not appear that Bekem had ever received an intimation that his client did not wish him to collect the executions, or that he would not receive confederate money in payment. It was contended by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that Heiskell, the sheriff, was aware of it. If he was, it is not presumable 637 *that he would have communicated it to the attorney to whom he offered to pay it; nor can it be presumed that he communicated it to the debtor Gibbons, who swears that he had no notice that Mr. Bekem was not authorized to collect; and if Bekem had been thus restricted in the general powers of an attorney, the debtor's payment to him would not be invalidated unless he had notice of the restriction.

But was Heiskell, through whom the payment was made to Bekem, aware that Johnson was unwilling to receive confederate money at the time he made the payment in question? It seems that about a year before he informed Johnson that he had levied his executions upon cattle, and that unless he would attend the sale and bid on them, and make them bring about as much as they would have brought the fall before, under a law then in force, he could not make his money, when Johnson declined, and said he would take nothing but gold or coin for his debt. At that time confederate money was not in circulation, and he could not have made the declaration with reference to it. And will Heiskell be held to have had notice from that casual conversation, twelve months afterwards, when confederate money was freely paid out and received by the banks and in all business transactions, and had become the almost exclusive circulating medium of the country, that Johnson was unwilling to receive payment of his debt in that currency, which it is known to the court that many persons then regarded as equal to coin as a medium of exchange? We think not. And after silently acquiescing in the payment made to his attorney, without an intimation to the defendant in error, to the contrary, so far as this record shows, from the 5th of April 1862, 638 when it was *made, until the 19th of January 1874, when the executions in question were sued out, it would not be equitable nor reasonable, that he should be allowed to repudiate it now. Upon the whole, the court is of opinion to affirm the judgment of the circuit court.

Judgment affirmed.

I. DEFINITION.

An attorney is defined to be one who is set in the place of another, and he is either public, as an attorney at law, or private, as being delegated to act for another, in private contracts or agreements. In re Leigh, 1 Munf. 408.

II. ADMISSION.

A. Statutory Regulations for Obtaining License.

1. In General.—For the rules and regulations for licensing persons to practise law in Virginia, see Acts 1895-6, p. 49; Rules of Supreme Court, 95 Va. xv, 4 Va. Law Reg. 252. For form of application, recommendation and certificate, see 3 Va. Law Reg. 153. For questions propounded by the supreme court at recent bar examinations, see 2 Va. Law Reg. 774; 3 Va. Law Reg. 315, 405; 4 Va. Law Reg. 270, 405, 707; 5 Va. Law Reg. 273, 422, 723.

2. Practising Lawyer in Another State.—Under Va. Code 1887, § 3192, as amended by Acts 1897-8, p. 400, any duly licensed and practising lawyer of another state may practise in Virginia without further examination. See 4 Va. Law Reg. 326.

A Virginia license to an attorney, resident in West Virginia at the time of its formation, avails as fully as if granted in the latter state. Ex parte Quarrier, 2 W. Va. 509.

B. Eligibility.—A person, who had practised as an attorney before the Civil War, applied for admission to practise in the courts of West Virginia. He admitted that he had voted for the ordinance of secession, that he had voluntarily entered the military service of the Confederate States, and that he had borne arms against the United States of America. He also produced a copy of the amnesty oath which he had taken and subscribed under the proclamation of the chief executive of the United States. Held, that as the applicant had not been convicted of treason according to the course of the common law, and as no treason against the state to whose courts he applied for admission had been proved or confessed, he could not be refused permission to qualify and practise. Ex parte Quarrier, 2 W. Va. 509.

C. Oath.—An attorney is not bound, as a requisite to his admission to the bar of any court, to take the oath prescribed by the act to suppress duelling. In re Leigh, 1 Munf. 468.

An attorney is not an officer within the meaning of the act of November 16th, 1863, and is not required to take the oath therein prescribed for officers. Ex parte Faulkner, 1 W. Va. 269.

A licensed attorney has as unquestioned a right to qualify by taking the oaths required at the time of his application for admission as he has to practise after he has qualified. Ex parte Quarrier, 2 W. Va. 569.

A pardon granted to rebels from the federal government restores the parties to the rights and privileges derived from it only. It does not entitle an attorney, who was admitted to the practice of the law before the Civil War, to resume his practice without complying with the terms of the state statute requiring a certain oath to be taken by attorneys. Ex parte Hunter, 2 W. Va. 122. This case, however, was practically overruled by Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333.

A person, who had qualified as an attorney before the passage of the attorneys' test oath act of February 14, 1866, did not acquire such a vested right in the office of attorney as released him from being required to take the oath prescribed in that act. Nor is said test oath act unconstitutional. Ex parte Quarrier, 4 W. Va. 210.

D. License Tax.—A city ordinance imposing a specific license tax "on every attorney at law" includes nonresident attorneys who have offices and practise their profession in the city, as well as resident attorneys. Petersburg v. Cocke, 94 Va. 244, 26 S. E. Rep. 576.

The city of Richmond has authority to lay a tax on lawyers as such. Ould & Carrington v. Richmond, 23 Gratt. 464.

E. Effect of Acting as Attorney.—If a suit is brought by an attorney not qualified to practise, it should not be dismissed; but the attorney should himself suffer the punishment imposed by law. Rader v. Snyder, 3 W. Va. 413.

III. PRIVILEGES, DISABILITIES AND LIABILITIES.

A. General Nature of Office of Attorney.—While one person was holding the office of county judge under an unexpired commission, another was appointed thereto. Held, that the former did not abandon his title to the office by taking up the practice of the law, an attorney not being an officer. In re Bland & Giles County Judge Case, 33 Gratt. 443.

An attorney at law is not a public officer. Nor is the practice of the law an office or place within the meaning of the act to suppress duelling. In re Leigh, 1 Munf. 468.

The clerk of a court cannot be permitted to practise as an attorney in the court of which he is clerk, although he has a license to practise in all the courts of the commonwealth. Ex parte Collins, 2 Va. Cas. 222.

In a criminal trial, the prosecutor may employ counsel to aid the attorney for the commonwealth, and such counsel will be permitted to aid in the prosecution. Hopper v. Commonwealth, 6 Gratt. 684.

B. Exemption from Arrest.—Attorneys at law are exempt from arrest in civil suits during their attendance at court. Commonwealth v. Ronald, 4 Call 97.

C. Assignment as Counsel by Court.—Courts of equity, as well as the common law courts, have jurisdiction in suits of paupers for freedom; and, in a proper case, will appoint counsel to prosecute for the pauper. Dempsey v. Lawrence, Gilmer 333.

D. Liability for Costs.—Where an attorney knowingly brings ejectment in the name of a deceased demandant, he is liable for cost. Howard v. Rawson, 2 Leigh 733.

E. Liability for Contempt.—The failure of an attorney in a cause to attend court at the time of trial previously fixed with his consent is not a contempt of court where it appears that he subsequently accepted a retainer, and entered upon the trial of another cause with every reasonable expectation of being able to complete it before the time fixed for the hearing of the first cause, and, finding this impossible, notified the court of the fact and disclosed a courteous and respectful consideration for the court. Wise v. Commonwealth, 97 Va. 73, 34 S. E. Rep. 453.

Where a rule is made against a person to show cause why he shall not be punished for a contempt of the court in aiding to obstruct the execution of its decree, he purges himself of the contempt by answering under oath that in what he had done he acted as counsel in good faith with no intention of committing any contempt of the court. Wells v. Commonwealth, 21 Gratt. 509.

F. Influencing Legislation.—Section 6, chapter 5 of the Criminal Code, Acts 1877-78, p. 295, aims at the offense of paying money or other compensation to secure the passage or defeat of any measure, and was doubtless intended to apply to the use of money in buying votes, etc., and not to contracts with attorneys for purely professional services. Hence contracts for the latter purpose are valid. Yates v. Robertson, 80 Va. 475.

IV. SUSPENSION AND DISBARMENT.

A. Jurisdiction.—Circuit courts have jurisdiction and power, upon their own motion, without formal complaint or petition, in a proper case, to strike the name of an attorney from the roll, provided he had reasonable notice, and an opportunity to be heard. State v. McClaugherty, 33 W. Va. 252, 10 S. E. Rep. 407.

B. Grounds.—The circuit court may, by summary proceedings, according to the common law, strike from its roll the name of an attorney who is guilty of writing and publishing in a newspaper a false and libelous charge against the judge of such court in respect to his official conduct, and the disclaimer by the attorney of intentional wrong or disrespect to the judge or court will not excuse him, when the contrary appears upon a fair interpretation of the language employed. State v. McClaugherty, 33 W. Va. 250, 10 S. E. Rep. 407.

C. Proceedings.—Under the provisions of 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 76, § 6, a court cannot, for malpractice of an attorney, committed in its presence, suspend the license of the party offending, in a summary way, but must direct an information to be filed against him, and inflict the punishment on the verdict of guilty found on such information. Ex parte Fisher, 6 Leigh 619.

V. DEALINGS BETWEEN ATTORNEY AND CLIENT

A. Agreement for Additional Compensation.—Dealings between an attorney and his client for the former's benefit are presumptively invalid as constructively fraudulent, and the onus is on the attorney to show that the contract was perfectly fair, and was entered into by the client freely and with full understanding as to his rights and as to its effect. Thomas v. Turner, 87 Va. 1, 12 S. E. Rep. 140.

Va. Code 1873, ch. 160, § 2 (see Code 1887, § 8201), enacting that "any contract made with an attorney for other or higher fees shall be valid and may be enforced in like manner with other contracts" does not apply to an agreement made after the relation of attorney and client is established. Thomas v. Turner, 87 Va. 1, 12 S. E. Rep. 149.

An agreement in a note "to pay, in default of payment at maturity, ten per centum on the face of this note, for attorney's fees for collection" is a penalty, and not enforceable. Rixey v. Pearre, 89 Va. 113, 15 S. E. Rep. 498.

B. Purchase from Client.—Where an attorney at law undertakes the collection of a claim for his client and, while such relation exists, buys the claim from his client, whether under false representations or not, or even if the claim was sold for an adequate price, such sale is voidable at the option of the client. Lane v. Black, 21 W. Va. 617. But such sale cannot be avoided after it has been deliberately ratified or confirmed on full information. Lewis v. Broun, 86 W. Va. 1, 14 S. E. Rep. 444.

An attorney cannot, as a general rule, make a valid purchase of the property of his client in litigation, but the same is voidable at the option of the client. However, the suit to avoid such sale must be brought within a reasonable time. Nor can it be set aside as against subsequent purchasers for value without notice; the only remedy of the client in such case being against the attorney. Lewis v. Broun, 86 W. Va. 1, 14 S. E. Rep. 444.

C. Acquiring Property Adversely to Client's Interest.—In a suit by the beneficiaries against the trustee for an accounting, the court directed a sale of the trust estate and a partition of the proceeds. The attorney of the trustee bought in the property in the name of a third person, and the sale was confirmed in ignorance of this fact. Held, that the beneficiaries have a right to have the sale set aside without any inquiry as to the adequacy of the price. Newcomb v. Brooks, 16 W. Va. 82.

Conflicting Interests.—An attorney employed in a cause is not a competent commissioner to take an account ordered in the cause. Bowers v. Bowers, 29 Gratt. 697.

D. Privileged Communications.—There is no rule of law better settled than that a counsel, solicitor or attorney shall not be permitted to divulge any matter which has been communicated to him in professional confidence. Chahoon's Case, 21 Gratt. 822; Parker v. Carter, 4 Munf. 273.

An attorney, employed as such to draw a deed, must be considered as acting in the line of his profession, and bound to conceal the facts disclosed by the person who employs him. Parker v. Carter, 4 Munf. 273.

Communications by assignor to attorney of assignee are not privileged where the attorney was acting for his client. Hall v. Rixey, 84 Va. 790, 6 S. E. Rep. 215.

Under the particular circumstances of this case, a letter written by a mortgagee to his attorney, informing him that the mortgage debt had been paid, and requesting him to dismiss a suit then pending to foreclose the mortgage, was held to be proper evidence in a controversy with the executor of the mortgagee, who had revived the proceedings to foreclose. Lyle v. Higginbotham, 10 Leigh 63.

Waiver.—The rule of law which protects professional communications is for the benefit of the client, and there is no doubt he may waive this protection, but the waiver must be distinct and unequivocal. Tate v. Tate, 75 Va. 522.

VI. RETAINER AND AUTHORITY.

A. Presumption and Proof of Retainer.

1. In General.—Where an attorney institutes a suit, he is presumed to have authority to appear. Low v. Settle, 22 W. Va. 387; Fisher v. March, 26 Gratt. 765.

Where the petitioner in a petition suit died and the suit was revived in the name of his widow and infant son, the counsel employed by the deceased petitioner will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be continued as counsel in the cause. Wilson v. Smith, 22 Gratt. 497.

Where an execution is delivered to the sheriff of a county other than that in which the creditor resides, and the creditor employs an attorney, practising in the sheriff's county, to collect the money, without, however, giving the attorney a written order, and the attorney makes a demand of the money from the sheriff; such demand, if no objection be made at the time to the authority of the attorney to receive the money, is a sufficient demand to justify a judgment against the sheriff. Chapman v. Chevils, 9 Leigh 297.

Where an attorney makes an acknowledgment of service on the back of the summons, it will be presumed that he had authority for so doing. Marling v. Robrecht, 18 W. Va. 440.

2. Estoppel to Deny Authority.—Where a court, having jurisdiction of plaintiffs' ancestor's estate and person, orders sale of latter's property to satisfy his indebtedness, and the record shows that plaintiffs appeared and were made parties, and that they acquiesced in the sale and took no steps to avoid it for thirteen years, knowing that the purchasers had sold the property, such plaintiffs cannot annul the sale on the ground that they were never summoned or appeared in the cause; and where it appears that the attorney for plaintiffs' ancestor was authorized to represent him in such suit, and that plaintiffs were aware of such fact and did not, after their ancestor's death, revoke or question his authority pending said suit, such plaintiffs, after such sale has been made, are estopped from denying the said attorney's authority to represent them in said suit. Marrow v. Brinkley, 85 Va. 55, 6 S. E. Rep. 605.

B. Extent of Authority.

1. In General.—The attorney for a husband and wife, in whose favor a decree has been obtained, has authority to instruct the clerk to correct a palpable error therein, which resulted from a mistake in the calculation of interest. Hill v. Bowyer, 18 Gratt. 364.

The counsel in an action has authority to do such acts only as his client, if in court, might do himself. He has no authority to enter into private or executory contracts; nor can he bind a person not a party to the suit. Herbert v. Alexander, 2 Call 498.

An attorney who is counsel for parties having interests adverse to those of infant parties cannot be allowed to consent to a decree on behalf of such infants. Walker v. Grayson, 86 Va. 337, 10 S. E. Rep. 51.

2. Acting for Persons Other Than Clients.—In a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by a husband to his wife, where depositions are taken after notice given to the wife, the counsel of the wife has no right to appear for her husband, at her request, to object to the depositions for him, on the ground that he had no notice of the taking of such depositions. Silverman v. Greaser, 27 W. Va. 550.

3. Submission to Arbitration.—While an attorney at law, as such, has no authority, before or after the institution of a suit, to make an agreement in pais to submit his clients' cause to arbitrators, he may, if his clients are adults, consent in open court to submit their cause to arbitration. McGinnis v. Curry, 18 W. Va. 29.

4. Delegation of Authority.—Where an attorney at law has been employed to prosecute a suit, he cannot, in the absence of direction, from his client, delegate his authority as such to another attorney. Crotty v. Eagle, 35 W. Va. 143, 13 S. E. Rep. 59.

An attorney of record, or the original counsel employed by a party to collect a debt, or conduct a suit, may appoint another to act in his place, if so authorized by his client. Ellis v. Heptinstall, 8 W. Va. 388.

5. Ratification by Client.—An attorney at law, employed to collect a debt, takes in satisfaction thereof the debtor's assignment to the creditor of a bond of third persons held by the debtor, and institutes a suit on the assigned bond against the obligors. The creditor prosecutes the suit, which is long pending, and pays the costs therein incurred. Held, that the creditor does not thereby ratify the act of the attorney in commuting the original debt; and the recovery against the obligors in the assigned bond having proved unavailing, the debtor's original liability still continues. Wilkinson v. Holloway, 7 Leigh 277.

Where an attorney at law, employed to collect a debt, accepts notes, bonds, etc., of the debtor as collateral security for the debt, such agreement becomes binding when ratified by his client. But a recitation in a bill afterwards filed against the debtor that the attorney had made such an agreement is not necessarily a ratification. Wiley v. Mahood, 10 W. Va. 206.

C. Authority to Accept Payment.

1. In General.—In general, payment to an attorney is good, especially if he has possession of the evidence of the debt. Under particular circumstances, it may be otherwise; as if notice be given that no such power is vested in the attorney. Hudson v. Johnson, 1 Wash. 9.

Where a judgment or decree is paid to the attorney who obtained it, before his authority is revoked, and due notice of such revocation given to the defendant, such payment is valid and binding on the plaintiff, so far, at least, as the defendant is concerned. Yoakum v. Tilden, 8 W. Va. 167.

An attorney's receipt for claims for collection may be so far added to by parol testimony as to show a contemporaneous additional contract on the part of the attorney to receive the claims as collateral security for debts due him from the client. Tuley v. Barton, 79 Va. 387.

A receipt was given by attorneys for certain notes, received for collection, containing a description of the note followed by the clause, "On the above notes we are to bring suits, prosecute them to judgment, and to have a fee of five dollars in each case." Held, that while this clause may be construed to relieve them from the obligation to collect, and from the corresponding compensation for collecting, it cannot be construed to deny to them the authority to collect. Johnson v. Gibbons, 27 Gratt. 632.

2. Acceptance of Payment in Property Other Than Money.—Where an attorney is employed to collect a debt, he has no authority to accept anything else in satisfaction or as collateral security for the debt without express authority from his client. Kent v. Chapman, 18 W. Va. 485; Wilkinson v. Holloway, 7 Leigh 277.

An attorney has no right to receive a bond from the debtor in discharge of his client's claim, without the assent of his client. If he does, he is the agent, not of the plaintiff, but of the defendant, and the plaintiff may still proceed against the defendant. Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 639, 16 Am. Dec. 780.

Substituting Attorney's Personal Debt.—Where an attorney employed to collect a debt discounts from it a debt he himself owes the debtor, and takes for the balance the debtor's assignment of a bond of third persons, the creditor is not bound by such arrangement. Wilkinson v. Holloway, 7 Leigh 277; Wiley v. Mahood, 10 W. Va. 206.

3. Acceptance of Payment in Depreciated Currency.—An attorney has no authority to receive depreciated currency in satisfaction of his client's debt. Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 539.

4. Acceptance of Less Than Amount Due—Compromise.—An attorney at law, employed to collect a debt, merely as such, has no power to compromise after judgment, and accept a sum of money less than the full amount of the judgment as satisfaction. Wart v. Brookover, 35 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. Rep. 1007.

Where an attorney collects a portion of his client's debt and gives a fraudulent receipt for the whole amount, such receipt is not binding on his client. Chalfants v. Martin, 25 W. Va. 304.

In the absence of express authority, an attorney has no power to compromise or settle his client's claim. Crotty v. Eagle, 35 W. Va. 143, 13 S. E. Rep. 59.

5. Acceptance of Payment in Satisfaction of Judgment.—An attorney may receive the money due on a judgment and his receipt will discharge the judgment. Branch v. Burnley, 1 Call 147; Wilson v. Stokes, 4 Munf. 455.

6. Acting for Persons Having Different Interests.—Where an attorney employed to collect a debt, without the consent of his client, accepts bonds, etc., of the debtor, with the understanding that he is to collect and apply them as payment on the claim when collected, he is acting as attorney for the debtor, and not as attorney for his original client. But as soon as he receives any money on the claim, thus put in his hands for collection by the debtor, it is a payment, to that extent, less his fees for collecting, upon the claim of his original client. Wiley v. Mahood, 10 W. Va. 206.

An attorney receives a claim for collection, brings suit upon it and obtains judgment. The debtor then puts into his hands the bond of a third person for about the amount that is due on the judgment; and the attorney gives him a receipt by which he says he has received the bond on which he is to bring suit, and after paying himself his fee and commission, is to apply the balance to the credit of the judgment. The attorney receives the money on the bond but does not pay it over to the creditor. Held, that this is a valid payment by the judgment debtor. Smith v. Lamberts, 7 Gratt. 133.

VII. LIABILITY OF ATTORNEY TO CLIENT.

A. Liability for Negligence.

1. In General.—While an attorney is not bound to undertake to conduct a suit for another without compensation, yet if he voluntarily engages to do so, he is liable for the consequences of his improper management, and cannot allege a want of consideration for his services. Stephens v. White, 2 Wash. 331.

An attorney, acting in accordance with his best judgment, after consultation with other attorneys, cannot be considered negligent. Tanner v. Bennett, 33 Gratt. 251.

2. In the Collection of Demands.—An attorney accepted confederate currency in settlement of his client's claim. At the time this was the only currency, and very little depreciated. Held, that he was not liable to his client for receiving such money, he not having forbidden it. Pidgeon v. Williams, 21 Gratt. 251.

Where the client fails to show that claims put in the attorney's hands were solvent, or that the attorney was negligent in the discharge of his duty, or that he was injured by the attorney's conduct of the business, the attorney is not chargeable. Staples v. Staples, 85 Va. 76, 7 S. E. Rep. 190.

3. In the Conduct of the Action.—Where an attorney is charged with negligence in failing to file a declaration, the proof must show that he was employed at the time when it should have been filed. Stephens v. White, 2 Wash. 203.

B. Liability for Money Collected.—A purchaser at a judicial sale executed her bonds to S as receiver. To him, as her attorney, she also assigned certain claims to collect and pay on her bonds. Part of the collections he applied as directed; the balance he did not so apply. There was nothing to show that he had charged himself, as such receiver, with said balance. Held, that as S collected the money as the purchaser's attorney, she was not entitled to have it credited on her bonds until he had so applied it. Paxton v. Steele, 86 Va. 311, 10 S. E. Rep. 1.

A debt due from an attorney to his client for money collected on a judgment is only a debt by simple contract. Gathright v. Marshall, 1 H. & M. 427.

An attorney, having collected a debt, deducted his fees from the amount, and deposited the balance in a bank of good credit, not in his own name but to "collection account," an account in which he deposited all money collected by him for his clients. The name of the client, for whose benefit the deposit was made, was written in the bank book opposite the entry of the deposit. The client failed to call for the money for several years and in the meantime the bank had failed. Held, that the attorney was not liable for the money so lost. Pidgeon v. Williams, 21 Gratt. 251.

Where a decree is collected and the money paid to the plaintiff's attorneys and disposed of as the plaintiff directs, after reversal, an action will not lie against attorneys to recover the money paid by a defendant who did not appeal, because of want of privity between him and them. Green v. Brengle, 84 Va. 913, 6 S. E. Rep. 608.

The 15 per cent. damages allowed by act, Feb. 18, 1819, against sheriffs for failing to pay money received on executions, is not recoverable against an attorney, who receives the money of his client and fails to pay it to him. Taylor v. Armstead, 3 Call 200.

C. Liability for Interest.—Prior to statutory enactment, Va. Code 1887, § 2676, allowing interest in such case, where an attorney at law was employed to collect debts, and some of them were lost to his client through his negligence, he was chargeable for the principal of the debts so lost, but not with interest thereon. Rootes v. Stone, 2 Leigh 650. This case seems to be in conflict with Chapman v. Shepherd, 24 Gratt. 385.

D. Defense to Action—Statute of Limitations.—The statute of limitations is a good plea to a suit in equity brought to recover money collected by an attorney for his client and not accounted for by him. Kinney v. McClure, 1 Rand. 284.

VIII. COMPENSATION.

A. Right to Compensation.—A law firm was employed to assist in the prosecution of a suit in the state court upon a contingent fee, and when the cause was ready for trial, the plaintiff, without the consent of his counsel, dismissed his suit in the state court, and employed one of the said firm, after the dissolution of the partnership, to bring a suit in the circuit court of the United States for the same purpose, and filed substantially the same bill. Held, that this was a separate and distinct suit, that the former employment had nothing to do with it, and that the old firm was not entitled to any of the fees earned in the new suit. Tomlinson v. Polsley, 31 W. Va. 108, 5 S. E. Rep. 457.

A client cannot refuse to pay his attorney his fees, although he is practising without a license. Yates v. Robertson, 80 Va. 475.

Upon the final determination of a cause, the decree for costs must follow the recovery, and go to the party who substantially prevails. And upon no principle can the attorneys of the losing party be adjudged fees out of the amount recovered by the winning party. Allen v. Shriver, 81 Va. 174.

B. Amount.—In a contest between an attorney and his client about the amount charged for fees, where it appears that the client is old and ignorant, and wholly unacquainted with the conduct of business affairs, it is the duty of a court of equity to scrutinize with jealous care the transactions between them and to allow no advantage to be taken of the client's necessities and inexperience. It is incumbent upon the attorney to show that the transactions were fair, and that the fees charged were reasonable and just. Cullop v. Leonard, 97 Va. 256, 33 S. E. Rep. 611.

An agreement between attorneys and their client, whereby they should "have ten per cent. on whatever might be recovered in a certain chancery suit * * * * * for their services in the prosecution of it; and if nothing were recovered in it, then no compensation for their said services, in attending before the commissioners to take accounts, or in court, or in taking depositions," is not such an agreement as is forbidden by 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 76, § 14, for it comprehends services not embraced by that act, such as taking depositions, etc. Major v. Gibson, 1 Pat. & H. 48.

An agreement that an attorney shall receive ten per cent. on the amount which he may succeed in getting reduced on a certain decree against his client is not champertous. Nickels v. Kane, 82 Va. 309.

The clerk of the court cannot tax against the losing party in a suit any greater fees than those prescribed by statute. But contracts, express or implied, between attorney and client for fees, are not limited as to amount, and may be enforced as other contracts. Yates v. Robertson, 80 Va. 475.

C. Contingent Fees.—P. & Son, attorneys, contracted in writing with L. as follows: "It is agreed that P. & Son are to receive $100 certain and if the suit (referred to and mentioned in the agreement) is decided in favor of L. then P. & Son are to receive $200, making $300 in all." P. & Son brought an action of assumpsit, setting forth the agreement and alleging that L. dismissed said suit without their consent and thereby hindered P. & Son from prosecuting said suit to a final decision, although plaintiffs were ready and willing to do so. The declaration also contained the common counts for work and labor. Held, that P. & Son were not necessarily entitled, upon issue joined on a plea of nonassumpsit, to recover the whole amount of the contingent fee therein specified; but for breach of said contract, by defendant, might recover such damages, by way of compensation for their time, labor and attention, as these were reasonably worth, and for any loss or injury they might have sustained; provided the whole recovery did not exceed the amount stipulated in the contract. Polsley v. Anderson, 7 W. Va. 202, 23 Am. Rep. 613.

D. When Attorney's Fees Recoverable as Part of Damages.—As a general rule fees paid to counsel cannot be recovered as damages. If the injury complained of was not wanton or malicious, and exemplary damages are not recoverable, no greater attorney's fee can be recovered against the defendant than that prescribed by law to be taxed in favor of the winning party. Burruss v. Hines, 94 Va. 413, 26 S. E. Rep. 875, 3 Va. Law Reg. 180.

In an action on an injunction bond with condition "to pay all such costs as may be awarded against the plaintiff, and all such damages as shall be incurred in case the said injunction be dissolved," fees paid to counsel in the injunction suit cannot be recovered as damages, although the bill be a pure bill of injunction. Wisecarver v. Wisecarver, 97 Va. 452, 34 S. E. Rep. 56, 5 Va. Law Reg. 462, and notes, pp. 465, 578.

In a suit upon a breach of warranty of title to land, the grantee cannot recover his counsel fees for defending the title, where the grantor had employed competent counsel for that purpose. Conrad v. Effinger, 87 Va. 59, 12 S. E. Rep. 2.

E. Payment of Attorney's Fees Out of Trust Funds—Reimbursement.—Where trustees in good faith engage counsel to aid them in the execution of the trust, they are entitled to pay them out of the trust fund, or to be reimbursed out of that fund for all expenses which they have incurred, including reasonable attorney's fees. Cochran v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 91 Va. 839, 21 S. E. Rep. 664.

Creditors have no legal right to be reimbursed by their debtors for counsel fees contracted by them. Gurnee v. Bausemer, 80 Va. 867.

IX. LIEN OF ATTORNEY.

An attorney at law has a lien on the judgment or decree obtained by him for his client for services and disbursements in the case, whether the amount of his compensation is agreed upon or depends upon a quantum meruit. This lien, however, is subject to all the equitable liens of the defendant in such judgment or decree existing at the time of the rendition thereof. Renick v. Ludington, 16 W. Va. 378.

An attorney has no lien upon land for his fee or compensation for services in a suit wherein the land is recovered for his client. Hogg v. Dower, 35 W. Va. 200, 14 S. E. Rep. 995.

An attorney has no lien upon a fund arising from the sale of land of a person or estate, already owned by such person or estate, for services purely defensive, in resisting suits to establish demands against it. Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112, 14 S. E. Rep. 447.

An attorney has no lien against land for prosecuting a suit to recover it for his client, or for defending a suit to recover it from his client, or to subject it to a debt or claim. Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112, 14 S. E. Rep. 447; McCoy v. McCoy, 36 W. Va. 772, 15 S. E. Rep. 973.

Where an attorney is employed to institute proceedings in equity to subject land to the payment of debts and liens, and obtains a decree directing a sale for the satisfaction of the same, and the debtor compromises and pays off the claims asserted against him, the attorney for the plaintiff has no lien against the land of said defendant which would entitle him to a sale thereof. McCoy v. McCoy, 36 W. Va. 772, 15 S. E. Rep. 973.

639 *Colhoun & Cowan v. Wilson.

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

Leases—Written Contracts to Repair—Time of Performance.—In November 1868 the White Sulphur Springs company, by deed signed by both parties lease to W their springs property for five years beginning the 1st of January 1869, and W is to make repairs upon the property; but nothing is said in the lease as to the time when the repairs are to be made. On the 22d of April 1873 the parties agree in writing what repairs W is to make; but nothing is said as to the time of making them. On the same day W enters into a contract with C to lease C one equal moiety of all the property, furniture, &c., and nothing is said in this contract as to the time when W shall make the repairs. In June by a verbal contract made between W and C, C acquired the whole of W's lease, and purchased the furniture on the premises for $13,000; and nothing was said as to the repairs which W was to make under his contract with the springs company in April 1873. In October 1873 C executed his note to W for $5,379.75, part of the $13,000 he was to pay for the lease and furniture. W sues C on this note, and C files a special plea of part failure of consideration on the ground that W had contracted verbally with C to make repairs in time for the springs season of 1873, and had failed to do it, whereby C was injured to the amount of $3,000. Held:

1. Same—Same—Same.—No time having been specified in the contracts between the springs company and W as to the time when the repair should be made, W has to the end of his lease to make them.
2. Same—Same—Same—Parol Evidence.*—Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove a contract of W to make the repairs in time for the springs season of 1873; and this applies to such evidence intended as a foundation for proof of the parol contract.
3. Same—Same—Same—Inferences.—The fact that the note sued on was executed in October 1873 when the springs season was nearly over, is a strong circumstance, if not conclusive, to prove that the claim which grew out of the transactions in June were then waived or settled between the parties, and cannot be asserted by way of defence to an action on the note.
4. Same—Same—Same—Parol Evidence.—As W had by his written contract with the springs company until the end of his term to make the repairs, a verbal agreement to make them at an earlier period is inconsistent with his written contract, and therefore does not come within the exception to the general rule:—That parol evidence may be introduced when it establishes an agreement additional to but consistent with the written agreement.
5. Same—Same—Same—Fixed by Law.—The fact that the time allowed to W to make the repairs is fixed by the law governing his contract with the springs company, and not by the express terms of the contract, does not affect the general rule as to the admissibility of parol evidence to vary or contradict the written contract.

This was an action of debt in the circuit court of Montgomery county, brought by Thomas Wilson against Charles A. Colhoun and John T. Cowan, partners, upon a note for $5,379.75, executed by Colhoun & Cowan & Wilson. The defendants pleaded the general pleas of payment and set-off, and a special plea of failure of the consideration of the note in part, on which issues were tried. On the trial there was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs, and Colhoun & Cowan applied to a judge of this court for a writ of error and supersedeas; which was allowed. The case is stated by Judge Christian in his opinion.

Shelton and Walker, for the appellants.

Phlegar, for the appellee.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The action in this case was debt. It was founded on a promissory note drawn by the plaintiffs in error and payable to the defendant in error, for the sum of $5,379.75, payable on demand, and bearing date October 1st, 1873.

The pleas tendered by the plaintiffs in error (defendants in the court below) were payment, set off, and a special plea in writing, alleging, in effect, failure of consideration as to part of said note. That plea is set out in the record; and as the only question in controversy turns upon the admissibility of the evidence under that plea, it is here inserted as follows:

3rd. And the defendants for further plea say, that for and in consideration of the sum of $13,000, by the said defendants paid and agreed to be paid to the said plaintiff, the said plaintiff, who was the lessee of a certain watering place in the county of Montgomery, known as the "Montgomery White Sulphur Springs," for the term of five years, which term ended and expired on the 1st day of January 1874, agreed and contracted with the said defendants on the 1st day of June 1873, to sell to said defendants all the furniture belonging to said plaintiff and then in the use of the said plaintiff in and about the said watering place, and to assign, set over and transfer to the said defendants the unexpired term and lease of the said plaintiff in the said watering place; and the said defendants further say, that the said plaintiff, in consideration of the said sum of $13,000 above specified, further agreed and contracted with the said defendants, to make and cause to be made and to furnish the materials for making certain repairs and improvements to the cabins, buildings, grounds, lawn, fencing, baths, &c., of the said watering place, and to have the said repairs and improvements done, and to furnish the material in time to have the same complete, in time for the occupation and use of the same by the guests and *visitors at the said watering place during the ensuing season of 1873; and which said repairs, so contracted to be made by said plaintiff as aforesaid, were necessary and requisite to the complete and full enjoyment of the said watering place and to the comfort and accommodation of visitors, and are more particularly and specially set forth in the bill of particulars filed with this plea.

And the defendants say, that the plaintiff wholly failed, neglected and refused to make or cause to be made or to furnish the materials for making the said repairs and improvements so contracted and agreed by him to be made as aforesaid, in time for the use and occupation of the same by the guests and visitors of said watering place during the season of 1873; whereby the said defendants were greatly injured and damaged, and suffered great loss in their business as keepers of said watering place, and were unable to accommodate and entertain many persons who applied for and sought entertainment at said watering place, and were unable to provide in a proper manner for the comfort and convenience of the guests and visitors at said watering place during the said season of 1873, by reason whereof many became dissatisfied and left.

And the said defendants say, that the said note in the plaintiff's declaration sued on was executed by the said defendants to the said plaintiff as a portion of the $13,000 above specified and as a part of the consideration of the said repairs to said watering place agreed and contracted to be done by the said plaintiff as aforesaid; and by reason of the failure of the said plaintiff to make and cause to be made and to furnish the material for making the said repairs, as he agreed to do, there is a failure of the consideration for which said note in plaintiff's declaration mentioned was executed;

643 and that by reason of such failure of consideration the said defendants would be entitled to recover damages in an action against the plaintiff to the amount of $3,000, which sum of $3,000 they pray may be allowed as a set-off against the plaintiff's demand in this suit. And this they are ready to verify; wherefore they pray, &c.

Upon this plea issue was made up, as well as upon the plea of payment and set-off. The jury found for the plaintiff (the defendant in error) the amount of the said promissory note, subject only to the credits endorsed thereon. For this amount a judgment was entered; to which judgment a writ of error was allowed by this court.

Eight bills of exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court, which, in different forms, present the question as to the admissibility of the evidence under the special plea. It is proper, however, before noticing these questions, to refer to the admitted facts in the case. It seems that on the 25th November 1868, the "Montgomery White Sulphur Springs company" leased to the defendant in error, Thomas Wilson, and

Lorenzo D. Lorentz, for the term of five years, commencing 1st day of January 1869, all the property of said company, consisting of a tract of land containing 1,300 acres, including the hotel, cottages and cabins upon the same, known as the Montgomery White Sulphur Springs, a watering place and popular resort for summer visitors, situated in the county of Montgomery.

This contract of lease was in writing, and was signed and sealed by the lessees, and also signed by the president of the company. In this contract of lease there were certain stipulations on the part 644 of the lessees for *repairs to the railroad belonging to the company, and also for repairs to the buildings on said property. In this contract there was no stipulation as to the time when these repairs were to be completed. By a subsequent agreement (which is not in the record), it seems that Wilson became the sole proprietor and successor to Wilson & Lorentz. On the 22nd of April 1873, the White Sulphur Springs company and Wilson entered into an agreement, by which it was definitely determined what was the character and extent of the repairs which Wilson, as the successor of Wilson & Lorentz, was to make under the contract of November 25th, 1868, between the company and Wilson & Lorentz. This contract is in writing, and nowhere designates the time within which the repairs are to be completed.

On the 22nd April 1873, Wilson, having acquired the whole lease, made a contract with Cowan & Colhoun, by which he leased to them "one equal moiety of the buildings, furniture of every kind and description, with all the privileges and appliances necessary for opening and conducting a watering place for the entertainment of visitors at the Montgomery White Sulphur Springs, for the season of 1873. This contract was also in writing, and nothing stipulated with regard to repairs. In June 1873, by a verbal contract between the parties, Colhoun & Cowan acquired the whole of Wilson's lease, and purchased of him the furniture on the premises for the sum of $13,000; and it is admitted that the note upon which this suit is brought was part of the sum of $13,000 agreed to be paid for the unexpired lease and furniture.

It is also admitted that in this verbal agreement nothing was said in reference to the repairs which Wilson had stipulated to make in his contract of *April 645 22nd, 1873. I have thus stated, as concisely as I could, the undisputed and admitted facts disclosed by the record.

The plaintiff rested his case upon the note sued on, having proved its execution. The defendant admitting the due execution of the note, sets up as a bar to the plaintiffs' action a failure of consideration in this, that the repairs to the buildings, which were agreed to be made by Wilson in his contract with the Montgomery White Sulphur Springs company, were to be completed before the springs season of the year 1873 commenced, and that he had neglected, refused, and failed so to complete them, and, by reason of such failure, the defendants had sustained damage to the amount of $3,000.

The evidence upon which this defence is sought to be made good is that of an alleged parol agreement made by Wilson at the time of his written agreement with the springs company and with the defendants on 22nd April 1873; and the various bills of exception taken by the defendants raise in different forms, the question whether such parol evidence was admissible.

The circuit court ruled out all evidence tending to show any parol agreement, to the effect that the repairs referred to in the said written agreement were to be made before the commencement of the springs season of the year 1873.

The question we have to determine is, was evidence offered by the defendants tending to prove such parol agreement admissible? It will be observed, that in the several written agreements above referred to, no time is named within which the stipulated repairs are to be completed. That being the case, the law of such a contract is to give the tenant until the expiration of the lease to fulfil his contract for re- 646 pairs upon the *leased premises, unless there be something in the nature of the repairs which require them to be made before. Therefore, though no time is specified, the expiration of the lease is fixed by law as the time within which they may be completed, as certainly as if it was so written in the agreement. This being the contract of the parties reduced to writing, and signed by them, can a parol agreement of another and different period, than the expiration of the lease, be received in evidence? The rule of law on this subject is now too well established to be questioned. It is the familiar rule, that "parol contemporaneous evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a valid written instrument." 1 Greenl. Ev., § 275. It was announced as a rule of the common law at an early day, and down to the present moment has been uniformly adhered to by the courts of England and of this country. In the Countess of Rutland's case, 5 Coke's R. 25, it was said "that it would be inconvenient that matters in writing, made by advice and on consideration, and which finally import the certain truth and agreement of the parties, should be controlled by an averment of parties, to be proved by the uncertain testimony of slippery memory."

In Crawford v. Jarrett's adm'r, 2 Leigh 630, Judge Green thus states the rule: "Parol evidence cannot be admitted (unless in cases of fraud or mistake) to vary, contradict, add to, or explain the terms of a written agreement by proving that the agreement of the parties was different from what it appears by the writing to have been. In Watson v. Hurt, 6 Gratt. 634, Judge Baldwin announces the rule in the following terms: "It is perfectly well settled, that the terms of a written contract cannot be varied by parol evidence of what occurred between the parties previously thereto or contemporaneously *there-with." In Towner v. Lucas, 13 Gratt. 15, 715, Judge Allen, after an able review of the cases, supposed to infringe upon this rule, says: "I can find no case which determines that oral contemporaneous evidence is admissible to contradict the terms of a written agreement, or substantially vary the legal import thereof, provided the instrument was a valid instrument, and the party designed to execute it in its existing form."

In Woodward, Baldwin & Co. v. Foster, 3 Gratt. 200, Judge Joynes, after referring to Towner v. Lucas, (supra), says: "These general principles are of the utmost importance in the administration of justice. Without them there would be no certainty in written contracts, and no safety in the most formal transactions. They ought not to be frittered away by nice distinctions to meet the hardships, real or supposed, of particular cases."

It is insisted, however, by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs in error here, that they do not controvert the principles of the rule of law above stated; but that this case comes within some supposed exception to the general rule. It is urged that the parol agreement offered to be proved, was an independent collateral substantial agreement relating to the same subject matter, and forming part of the consideration thereof. It is said, that Cowan & Colhoun were induced to make the contract with Wilson for the unexpired lease and furniture, because of the independent verbal agreement of Wilson, at the time of the written agreement bearing date 22nd April 1873, that he would complete the repairs (which he had bound himself to make) by the time the springs season of that year commenced: to-wit, in June 1873. It is insisted that such an agreement was an additional, independent *agreement, and one consistent with the original written agreement. The cases relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellants, to which I have had access, seem to establish the following exceptions to the general rule, that "Parol contemporaneous evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a valid written instrument:" When the oral evidence establishes an agreement additional to, but consistent with the written agreement.

2. Where the evidence is offered to show fraud in the procurement of the written contract, or a breach of confidence in perverting what was delivered conditionally or inverso intuitu, and using it as a valid instrument.

3. Where the evidence is offered as proof of any mistake or omission, and a fraudulent attempt to take advantage thereof.

This case is not within any of these exceptions, nor can it be brought within any other well established exception (see Towner v. Lucas, supra); for the parol agreement attempted to be set up is entirely inconsistent with the terms of the written agreement; and indeed (if established), would in terms vary and contradict the written agreement. By the parol agreement (if indeed any such ever existed) the defendant in error bound himself to finish the repairs by the — day of June 1873. By the written agreement he bound himself to complete the repairs by the 1st day of January 1874. It is true that no particular time was designated within which to complete the repairs: but in the absence of any designated time, the law fixes the period at the termination of the lease. And when the legal import of a contract is clear and definite the intention of the parties is for all substantial purposes, as distinctly and fully expressed as if they had written *out in words what the law implies. Woodward, Baldwin & Co. v. Foster, 18 Gratt. 200, and cases there cited.

It is plain, therefore, that when by the written agreement the time fixed is the expiration of the lease, any parol agreement by which another and different period within which the repairs shall be completed, is established, does vary and contradict the written agreement; and the case is thus brought within the very terms of the rule.

I am therefore of opinion, that the circuit court did not err in excluding from the jury all evidence tending to set up such parol agreement, and all evidence offered for the purpose of laying a foundation for the introduction of such evidence. This disposes of all the bills of exceptions taken by the plaintiffs in error. For the eight bills of exceptions all present in different forms the question as to the admissibility of parol evidence inconsistent with the written agreement, or the admissibility of evidence upon which to lay the foundation for the proof of such parol agreement. The circuit court was right in excluding all the evidence of this character.

But there is still another ground upon which the circuit court was well warranted in excluding the evidence offered. It was this: The pretension of the plaintiffs in error is that the verbal agreement relied on was made in April 1873 with the Montgomery White Sulphur Springs company, and that in June of that year they took the lease with the understanding that this verbal stipulation was to be carried out. They admit that nothing was said on the subject of repairs then (June 1873), but that they were to have the benefit of the alleged verbal agreement made with the springs company. Now there are two pregnant facts to show that no such verbal agreement was ever *made. The first is, that the alleged verbal contract by which it was agreed that the repairs were to be made before the commencement of the springs season was in fact made after that season had actually commenced (28th June). So that when they bought the lease and furniture they knew that the repairs had not been made; and that they could not be made in time to affect in any degree the season of 1873.

But another fact, utterly inconsistent with the verbal contract relied upon, is that the note sued on bears date the 1st day of October 1873, when the springs season was pretty well over. Now it is unreasonable to the last degree, if not incredible, that Colhoun & Cowan should have executed their note to Wilson in October for $5,079.75, if they on that day claimed that Wilson was indebted to them in the sum of $3,000 for a failure to comply with his contract four months before. No such claim was then asserted, nor was any claim asserted under the alleged verbal contract of June until the institution of this suit.

The execution and delivery of the note in October is a powerful circumstance, if not conclusive proof, to show that the claim which grew out of the transactions in June, was then waived or settled between the parties, and could not be asserted by way of defence to an action on the note.

Upon the whole case, I am of opinion there is no error in the judgment of the circuit court, and that the same be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

651 *Sage & al. v. Hammonds.

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

1. Guardians—Duties—Liabilities.—It is the duty of a guardian, whose power as such is revoked, to account to his wards, or to his successor as guardian, if there be one, for their estate, including evidences of claim which may have come to his hands; and if after such revocation he collect any money on account of any such claim, he and his surety as guardians are accountable therefor to the parties entitled thereto; at least, provided such payment be made in good faith by a person who is not informed of such revocation, and who believes when he makes it that the party claiming to be guardian is so in fact, and has authority as such to receive the money.
2. Same—Bills against, by Wards—Receivers.—In a bill by infants against their guardian for an account and payment, it being shown in the cause that the guardian is wholly unfit for the office, the court may appoint a receiver to collect and receive the property of the wards, and require the guardian to pay over to him the money of his wards in his hands, and to transfer and deliver to him the property of the infants.
3. Same—Decree against, for Account.—Where the property of the infants consists of a single claim, and the amount received upon it by the guardian is ascertained, and there is no doubt as to the amount due from the guardian to the wards, the court may decree against him for the amount, though no account has been taken.

The case is fully stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

Burns, for the appellants.

Hogan, for the appellees.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

652 *This is an appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Lee county, rendered in a suit in which Mary Hammond and John P. Hammond, infants, suing by Andrew J. Litton, their next friend, were plaintiffs, and James W. Sage, their late guardian, and William W. Sage, his surety in his bond as guardian, were defendants. The material facts of the case, and proceedings therein, are as follows:

On the 18th day of March 1867, the said James W. Sage was appointed and qualified as guardian of the said infants in the county court of Lee county, where they resided, and he thereupon entered into bond as such, with his brother, the said William W. Sage, as his surety. The only estate to which the said infants were entitled was a claim to a pension, under an act of congress, in consideration of military services rendered by their father, Arnold P. Hammond, to the United States during their late war with the Confederate States, in the course of rendering which services he died. His widow, and the mother of the said infants, afterwards intermarried with their said guardian, at what precise time does not appear, though probably before he qualified as guardian. They seem to have separated not very long after such qualification; but at what precise time does not appear. The said guardian was a pension claim agent, and undertook as such the prosecution of the said claim of his wards. He succeeded in establishing their claim to a pension to the amount of twelve dollars per month, or one hundred and forty-four dollars per annum, during their minority, payable semi-annually. In little more than a year after the qualification of the said guardian, to wit: on the 18th day of May 1868, in a proceeding by motion in the county court of said county, in which the said surety, William W. Sage, was plaintiff, and 653 *the said guardian, James W. Sage, was defendant, the object of which motion was to require the defendant to show cause why he should not be required to give a new bond as guardian for Mary and John P. Hammond, an order was made by the said court in these words: "This day came the plaintiff, and it appearing to the court that the defendant has had legal notice of this motion, and he failing to show any cause why he should not give a new bond, it is ordered that the defendant be removed from his office of guardian aforesaid, and that the plaintiff be released from further liability as his security, and that the plaintiff recover against the defendant his costs."

The said James W. Sage, claiming to act as guardian of the said infants, and no doubt exhibiting to the proper authority an official copy of the order appointing him as such, obtained from the pension office in the department of the interior a certificate in due form, in his name as guardian of the said infants, showing their title to the said pension and his authority, as their guardian, to receive it for them. At what precise time this certificate was issued does not appear, though it was, no doubt, during the period between the date of the order of his appointment and the date of the said

r of revocation. It does not appear that there was any appointment of another guardian of the said infants, at least for more than a year after the date of said order of revocation; and in June 1869, more than a year thereafter, the said James W. Sage, being still to have authority to act as guardian, received from the proper public functionary at Washington six hundred and sixty-eight dollars and seventy-one cents on account of said pension, and under notice in virtue of the said certificate; no notice having been given by the said James W. Sage, or any other person, to the authorities at Washington of said order of revocation, or that there was any doubt or question as to the continued authority of said James W. Sage to receive the said pension, and the officer making such payment having received no information to the contrary, and acting in the matter under the belief that the said authority still existed.

Shortly thereafter, but how long does not appear, though probably not more than a month or two, Andrew J. Litton appears to have been appointed and to have qualified as guardian of the said infants, though there is in the record no copy of any order of court appointing him as such; and we do not, therefore, express any opinion as to the validity of his appointment. After his appointment he demanded of the said James W. Sage an account and payment of the money he had received on account of said pension, and a surrender of the certificate which had been issued to him in favor as aforesaid; but the said James W. Sage failing and refusing to render such account and make such payment or surrender said certificate, this suit was instituted to enforce his obligation and that of his surety in that respect. It was brought in November 1869.

The bill, which was filed by the said infants, by the said Andrew J. Litton as their next friend and guardian, they set out substantially the facts before stated, and set forth the object of the bill to be; to compel the said James W. Sage to deliver up said certificate of pension to the said guardian, the proper guardian of said infants, so that he might be enabled to collect whatever was due them; also to have an account rendered and ascertain what amount of money he drew from the United States government as guardian of said infants, and what he then owed them; and, on a hearing, to obtain a decree against the said James W. Sage and William W. Sage his surety, holding them to a strict accountability to said infants, who were of tender ages as to be incapable of managing their rights and enforcing them; they pray that the said James W. and William W. Sage be made defendants to the bill, and for special and general relief.

A copy of the guardianship bond was exhibited with the bill, and is in the usual form, the condition being that the guardian should faithfully perform the duties of his office of guardian according to law.

There was but one deposition taken in the case, and that was the deposition of the said A. J. Litton, which was taken by the defendant James W. Sage. The witness, in answer to questions propounded to him by the said defendant, testified, among other things, that the said defendant paid to the witness, wheat, flour, rent corn, bacon, &c. "in consideration of a settlement as mediator between Rebecca L. Sage the mother of said children, and defendant, which included all dealings between the plaintiffs and defendants at the separation, on or about May 1868. At the time these articles were paid, the defendant agreed to go on and prosecute a pension claim for the children of Mary and John P. Hammond, and when obtained he was to retain his fees and expenses, and pay over the balance to Rebecca L. Sage, or the children or their legal representative: that after or about the time A. J. Litton was appointed guardian of Mary and John P. Hammond, and after the certificate was obtained, the defendant James W. Sage agreed to take $110 in full out of the claim, and pay the balance over to witness as soon as he was appointed guardian and had given bond."

After he was appointed guardian he notified the commissioner of pensions of that fact, and not to pay any money to James W. Sage on the pension certificate aforesaid. The said defendant shewed to the witness a letter received by said defendant from the said commissioner, dated February 2nd, 1870, requiring the former guardian and claim agent to return immediately to the pension office the pension certificate payable to the said defendant. Witness received a letter from the said commissioner of pensions some time after the one shown by said defendant as aforesaid, stating that the said certificate had never been received at Washington city, and that payment could have been made to witness on the old certificate. Witness afterwards received another letter from said commissioner, stating that he despaired of getting the old certificate, and directing the witness to make application for a new one, which he did; and defendant filled a blank for witness. These letters here referred to, as having been received by the witness from the commissioner of pensions, are copied in the record, and were probably returned with the said deposition as part thereof.

The defendants filed their several answers. That of James W. Sage contains nothing of importance. That of William W. Sage, after admitting the said guardianship of his brother, for which respondent had become surety, contains this statement: "Your respondent has heard that James W. Sage applied to the proper pension authority of the United States for granting pensions, to have a pension allowed to the complainants, and to place them on the pension roll as pensioners. But before he ever drew one cent of pension for them, your respondent was by order released from his suretyship, and absolved from the obligation of his bond, and was released therefrom; and James W. Sage was released from his said guardianship. Your respondent has heard that after his release aforesaid, and the removal of said guardian from his office of guardian, James W. Sage drew a pension for the complainants. What he did with the money your respondent can't state, except that he has heard it said he loaned one Joshua Fields all or the greater part thereof. But if he ever drew and loaned or squandered or disposed of any money, treasury notes, or national bank notes that belonged to complainants, he did so after your respondent had been released by the order aforesaid from his said suretyship; and the said James W. Sage had been removed from his said office; and consequently no liability therefor fell on respondent. Your respondent knows nothing of what his co-defendant did with the pension certificate, and was and is not responsible to any one for his acts, whether legal or illegal, done after your respondent's release from his suretyship aforesaid." With the said answer was filed a copy of the order of revocation aforesaid.

On the 4th day of June 1870, a decree was made in the cause in these words: "This cause coming on this day to be heard upon the bill, the separate answers of the defendants, J. W. and W. W. Sage, with the replications thereto, was argued by counsel. And thereupon, upon inspection of the papers in the case by the court, it appears that neither the exhibits of the plaintiff nor defendants have been filed, and that there is not such evidence before the court as enables it to make any decree in the premises, further than to order the defendant J. W. Sage to deliver up to the legally constituted guardian of the plaintiffs any effects and evidences of debt which he may have belonging to said plaintiffs. And 658 *it appearing to the court, that the answer of the defendant J. W. Sage, though not excepted to by the plaintiffs, is too scandalous to be allowed to remain on file among the records of this court, it is therefore ordered that the said J. W. Sage do surrender to the legally appointed guardian of plaintiffs any evidences of debt or other claim and any effects in his possession belonging to the plaintiffs, and especially that he surrender to such guardian any certificate or other evidence of the allowance of a pension by the United States to them in his possession or under his control." An order was then made, that the answer of James W. Sage should be taken off the file and referred to a commissioner of the court, who was directed to expunge from the same all scandalous and impertinent matter, leaving nothing therein but what is responsive or relevant to the matters contained in the bill; and the parties, plaintiffs and defendants, were directed before the next term of the court to file their exhibits, and time was given till then to take testimony.

The commissioner having executed the said order in regard to the answer of said

James W. Sage, it was returned to the court and again filed.

The deposition of A. J. Litton, though it appears to have been filed on the 3d day of June 1870, was not noticed in the decree which was made on the next day, the 4th of June 1870, as aforesaid.

On the 12th day of October 1870 the case came on further to be heard upon the paper formerly read, the depositions of witnesses (though there does not appear in the record any other deposition than that of A. J. Litton aforesaid), and the report of the commissioner to whom was referred the answer of said James W. Sage for scandal and impertinence, to which report there

659 was no exception, and was argued by counsel; *on consideration whereof the court, after confirming said report and giving directions accordingly, decreed that the defendant James W. Sage received the check or draft of $668.71, in the month of June 1869, as the guardian of the plaintiffs, and that at the time he so received the same he was liable therefor as guardian of the plaintiffs, and the defendant William W. Sage, as security of the said guardian, is also liable therefor. And the court being of opinion that James W. Sage had never been legally removed as guardian by the county court of Lee county, it was ordered that the plaintiffs recover from the defendants the sum of $668.71, with interest from the 30th day of June 1869 till paid, subject to a credit of $110 for the services of James W. Sage as pension agent and guardian of his said wards. And the court being further of opinion that there was no proper person to receive the said fund for the said infants or to make further collections for them, to preserve the money and estate of the said infant plaintiffs until a guardian can be duly appointed and qualified, M. B. D. Lane was thereby appointed a receiver, whose duty it should be to collect of the defendants the aforesaid sum; and to enable him to do so, he was authorized to sue out process of execution therefor against the goods and chattels of the said defendants. He was also directed to demand of and receive from James W. Sage, guardian as aforesaid, all moneys, debts, property, or evidences of debt, then in the hands of James W. Sage: And he was also directed to require A. J. Litton to turn over to him all notes, bonds, money, or other property, if any, then in his possession, belonging to the plaintiffs. But before receiving any property or collecting any money as aforesaid, the said receiver was directed to execute a bond, as prescribed by said decree, conditional 660 for *the due performance of his duties as such receiver. And he was directed at once to transmit to the commissioner of pensions a certified copy of said decree. And the cause was continued.

From the said decree the said James W. and William W. Sage presented to a judge of this court a petition for an appeal; which was accordingly granted. And that is the case which we now have under consideration.

We deem it unnecessary to decide, and therefore do not decide in this case, whether the authority of James W. Sage, as guardian of the appellees, was ever legally revoked or not; or whether Andrew J. Litton was ever legally appointed as their guardian or not. We are of opinion that, in either view, there is no error in the decree appealed from, and the appellants are both liable for the amount decreed against them. If the order made for the revocation of the guardianship be a valid order, then, of course, the said James W. Sage ceased to be guardian from the date of the order, and he and his surety as such guardian, were liable to account to the wards, or to their surety guardian, or to the court, for the estate of the wards, which had come to his hands as their guardian. The only estate which the said wards ever had was a claim against the United States for a pension. The guardianship was instituted for the very purpose, and only for the purpose, of obtaining and collecting that pension. The surety of the guardian, who was his brother, doubtless knew that such was the condition of the wards, and such the object of the guardianship; and for the purpose of enabling the guardian to attain that object, he became surety of the guardian in the official bond. The guardian proceeded accordingly to prosecute and establish the pension claim, and obtained a certificate from the pension office in his name as guardian, allowing the pension money; but before any money was received on account of it by the guardian, the order of revocation aforesaid was made. Afterwards the said guardian received of the pension agent, on account of said claim, a sum of $668.71—having given no notice of the said order of revocation to the said agent, but claiming still to be such guardian—and the agent, believing that he was a guardian, and had full authority as such to receive the money, made payment to him accordingly. It was the duty of the defendant, James W. Sage, supposing his guardianship to have been revoked by the order aforesaid, to have so informed the pension agent, and not to have received from him the amount due to his wards on account of their pension, but to have returned to him the certificate which had been issued to him for the pension, or to have delivered it to the succeeding guardian. Never one should qualify, or to such person as a court of competent jurisdiction might appoint to receive it. This was his duty as guardian, which he was bound by his official bond to perform, and his surety and bond is liable as such for the breach of such duty. It is the duty of a guardian, in these powers as such are revoked to account to his wards, or to his successor as guardian, if there be one, for their estate, including evidences of claim which may have come to his hands; and if after such revocation he collect any money on account of such claim, he, and his surety as guardian, are accountable therefor to the wards entitled thereto; at least, provided such payment be made in good faith by a person who is not informed of such revocation, and who believes at the time of making it that the party claiming to be guardian is so in fact, and has authority as such to receive the money. In Armstrong's 662 **heirs v. Walkup &c.*, 12 Gratt. 608, which was cited by the counsel for the appellees, it was held by this court (as correctly stated by the reporter in the marginal abstract of the case) that "the estate of the ward having come into the possession of the guardian, his bond of office binds him in his lifetime, and his estate after his death, for the interest, hires and profits received by him, whether received before or after the expiration of his authority as guardian."

The principles just stated apply to this case. The guardian at the time of the revocation of his authority as such, supposing it to have been revoked, had in his hands as guardian a claim in favor of his wards against the United States for a pension; and, as evidence of that claim, held a certificate issued to him as such guardian by the commissioner of pensions. Instead of notifying the said commissioner of the said revocation, and returning the said certificate to him, or surrendering it to the succeeding guardian, if there was one, or to the court, he continues to hold it, and to claim to be entitled to receive under it the pension due to the said infants, and he actually receives under it, on account of said pension, $668.71, which sum is paid to him by the commissioner of pensions, under the belief that he continued to be guardian of said infants, with full authority to receive the said sum of money for the said infants. And even after the said sum had been paid to him by the said commissioner, and after the latter had been informed of the supposed revocation of such authority, and had demanded a return to him by the said guardian of the certificate aforesaid, he fails and refuses so to return it, or to surrender it to the person claiming to be the succeeding guardian, and continues to hold possession of it against all claims and demands to the contrary. Under these circumstances, 663 *there can be no doubt of the liability of the supposed late guardian and his surety to the said infants for the amount of their money so received by him.

But such liability in this case stands on even stronger ground than that. The infants we have seen had no estate but their claim to the said pension. To enable him to receive the amount of that claim, James W. Sage becomes their guardian, and his brother, William W. Sage, becomes his surety as such. By becoming such surety, William W. Sage enables his said brother to receive the amount of the said pension. And after enabling him to do so, the said surety seeks to avoid his liability as such by having the guardianship of his brother revoked. The proceeding instituted for that purpose takes place in little more than a year after the qualification of the guardian, and under such circumstances as tend to show that there was a fraudulent combination between the guardian and his surety to relieve the latter from liability, while the former might be able to receive the amount of the pension, and convert it to his own use, to the prejudice and injury of the infants, who would have no security to protect and indemnify them against loss. The conduct of the guardian, James W. Sage, in reference to said proceedings, is calculated to show that he connived at such a purpose, if it existed, on the part of his brother, William W. Sage, and participated therein. These two brothers were the only parties to that proceeding, and it does not appear that any friend of the infants had any knowledge or information about it, so as to be able, or have an opportunity, to guard their interest in the matter. They were too young to guard it themselves, and perhaps even to know of its existence. No opportunity was afforded to the guardian to give a new bond, nor does it appear 664 that he desired to have such *an opportunity. He was not even required to give such a bond. It is recited in the order that "this day came the plaintiff (the surety), and it appearing to the court that the defendant (the principal) has had legal notice of this motion, and he failing to show any cause why he should not give a new bond;" and then instead of ordering the defendant to give a new bond, and fixing a time for that purpose, it was "ordered that the defendant be removed from his office of guardian aforesaid, and that the plaintiff be released from further liability as his security, and that the plaintiff recover against the defendant his costs." In such a case the law requires the court to order the guardian to give a new bond in a reasonable time, to be prescribed by the court. Here no such order was made. Code, ch. 128, § 18, p. 949. Although the said surety no doubt knew that the principal had become guardian for the purpose of obtaining and receiving the said pension, and that the said principal would have it in his power to continue to receive the said pension if the commissioner of pensions should not be informed of the revocation of the authority of the principal as guardian, and that the infants were too young to know the importance of giving such information, or to be able to give it themselves, or have it given; yet the said surety did not himself give such information, nor have it given, but attempted to make his own escape from liability as such surety, while, as he supposed, he left the infants exposed to the danger of a loss, which, by his own act, he had enabled his brother to inflict upon them. Under these circumstances, it was certainly the duty of the surety, while using means to guard himself against the effect of illegal acts on the part of his brother, to use also the means necessary to guard these infants against the effect of such acts, 665 especially *as he had by becoming such surety enabled his brother to commit those acts.

We are therefore of opinion that if the order of revocation aforesaid be a valid order, the surety, William W. Sage, is liable for the amount decreed against him, and there is no error in the said decree. Let us now proceed to enquire, on the other hand, whether he be liable in the view taken of the case by the court below, that James W. Sage has never been, legally, removed as guardian by the county court of Lee county, and that he received the check or draft of $668.71 in the month of June 1869, as the guardian of the plaintiffs, and that, at the time he so received the same he was liable therefor as guardian, and the defendant W. W. Sage as the surety of the said guardian.

In that view of the case there can be no difficulty in maintaining the propriety of the decree appealed from. Whether the order of revocation be valid or not, the evidence in the record is conclusive to show the propriety of taking the estate of the infants out of the hands of the person who was appointed their guardian and qualified and has been acting as such, but who is shown to be wholly unfit for the trust. The interest of the infants plainly requires that their estate shall be taken out of his hands, or prevented from going into them, and shall be taken possession of by a court of chancery, the ultimate and paramount guardian of all infant orphans, and placed in the hands of a receiver, to be taken care of and managed for them, until they are capable of taking care of and managing it for themselves, or another guardian is duly appointed and qualified for that purpose.

Now this is what the court below intended to do and has done by the decree appealed from. By it a receiver is appointed, 666 who is directed to collect, by *execution if necessary, the said sum of $668.71, with interest from the 30th day of June 1869 till paid, subject to a credit of $110, for the services of James W. Sage as pension agent and guardian of his said wards, and to demand and receive from James W. Sage, guardian as aforesaid, all moneys, debts, property, or evidences of debt now in his hands; and to require Andrew J. Litton to turn over to him all notes, bonds, money, or other property, if any, now in his hands, belonging to the plaintiffs in this suit. But before receiving any property, or collecting any money as aforesaid, the receiver is required to give bond &c., conditioned for the due performance of his duties as such receiver. Certainly this decree will be most beneficial to the infants, while it cannot be justly or properly excepted to, either by James W. Sage or Wm. W. Sage. It seems to be the very decree called for by the exigencies of the case, looking to the relative rights and obligations of all parties concerned. There was no necessity for an account of the guardianship in order to the decree which was rendered for the sum of $668.71 with interest, subject to a credit of $110 as aforesaid. It appears from the record that about the time the order of revocation was made there was a settlement between the mother of the said infants and their guardian which embraced dealings between them, and that they then owed him nothing. When, after that, he received on account of their claim to a pension, the sum of $668.71, he became their debtor to that amount, subject only to credit for $110, his charge as pension agent for tending to the claim. It was therefore proper to render a decree in their favor against him and his surety for the sum so received, and interest, subject to the said credit. But the decree, it will be observed, is interlocutory *only, and not final. The fund and the whole subject are to be placed in the hands of the court, through its receiver, and can be disposed of by the court hereafter according to the right of all persons who may be interested therein. It cannot with propriety be said, that in the view last taken, the guardian's authority continues to exist, and that therefore he is entitled to continue to hold the fund. The guardian and his surety can set up no such claim against the authority and duty of a court of chancery in such a case to interpose and take charge of the estate of defendants thus palpably endangered by the acts and defaults of the guardian. We think that in any view which can properly be taken of the case there is no error in the decrees rendered therein, and that the same ought to be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

18 *Linkous for &c. v. Hale & al.

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

Practice—Demurrer to Evidence—Inferences.—In debt against the endorsers of a protested note discounted at a bank at C, the protest of the notary states that "he placed in the post office of this place four written notices, one directed to the payer, and one directed to H. & L. at B, Va., endorsers, informing them, &c." On demurrer to the evidence. HOLD: The jury would have been warranted to infer from this evidence that the residence of the defendants was in B; and upon a demurrer to the evidence, the court must make the same inference.

The case is fully stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

Jenkins, for the appellant.

Ronald, for the appellees.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a writ of error and supersedeas to judgment of the circuit court of Montgomery county, reversing a judgment of the county court of said county, rendered in an action of debt brought upon a protested negotiable note against the endorsers thereof. There was a demurrer to the declaration and joinder therein, and there were pleas of non debet and the statute of limitations, to which the plaintiff replied generally. A jury was sworn to try the issues, but the defendants demurred to the evidence, and the plaintiff *joined in the demurrer: whereupon the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the judgment of the court upon the demurrer to the evidence. The county court gave judgment for the plaintiff upon the said demurrer; but the circuit court reversed the judgment of the county court, and rendered judgment for the defendants upon the said demurrer; and the plaintiff has brought up the latter judgment for the review of this court.

The only question of controversy in the case is as to notice of the protest of the note, whether the evidence on that subject was sufficient to charge the defendants as endorsers?

The only evidence on that subject was contained in the certificate of protest of the notary. The note was a note for four hundred dollars for value received, drawn by William Hale, dated at Christiansburg, August 20th, 1860, payable ninety days after date to John Hale or order, without offset, negotiable and payable at the office of discount and deposit of the Bank of the Valley at Christiansburg, and endorsed by John Hale and Abraham Smith, the defendants, and by B. R. Linkous (who sues as plaintiff in this action for the use and benefit of Charles H. Miller). The certificate of the notary is in these words:

"Virginia: Christiansburg, county of Montgomery, to wit:

"Be it known to all whom it may concern, that on this the 21st day of November, in the year of our Lord 1860, I, Samuel W. Shields, a notary public in and for the county of Montgomery, duly commissioned and qualified, at the request of the president and directors of the office of discount and deposit of the *Bank of the Valley in Virginia at Christiansburg, holders of the original note, a true copy whereof is above written, demanded payment at the office of discount and deposit of the Bank of the Valley in Virginia at Christiansburg, which being refused, and payment not having been made by the payer of the said note, I, after 3 o'clock, P. M., of this day, placed in the post-office of this place four written notices, one directed to the payer, and one directed to John Hale, Abraham Smith, B. R. Linkous, at Blacksburg, Virginia, endorsers, informing them of the non-payment and protest of said note: Now, therefore I, the said notary, at the request aforesaid, have protested, and do hereby most solemnly protest, as well against the said maker as against the endorsers, and all others whom it doth or may concern, for all loss, damages, principal, interest, costs and charges sustained, or to be sustained by reason of the demand, &c., aforesaid.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my notarial seal at the town of Christiansburg aforesaid, the day and year aforesaid.

Saml. W. Shields, [Seal.]

Notary Public.

Protest, 50 cents; recording, 50 cents; tax, $1.50; notice, 20 cents; postage, 12 cents—$2.82."

Did this certificate afford sufficient evidence in regard to notice of protest to the endorsers to warrant the court in rendering judgment against them on a demurrer to evidence?

It is not expressly stated in the certificate that the post-office of the said endorsers at the time of the protest of the note was "at Blacksburg, Virginia," at which place the notice to them of the protest was directed 671 by the notary; nor that he was informed, on due enquiry, that such was their post-office; in either of which cases, notice to them, sent to the post-office was sufficient. But was it not properly inferred by the county court from the facts contained in the certificate, that such was the post-office of the endorsers, or at least, that the notary, upon due enquiry, was so informed?

We are decidedly of that opinion; and in support of that opinion, we need only to rely on a case which was referred to and much commented on in the argument of counsel in this court. We mean the case of the United States Bank v. Smith, 11 Wheaton R. 171. That case is so directly in point, and so much like this in all its features, that we deem it proper to quote largely from the judgment of the court therein delivered by Mr. Justice Thompson. Like this case, it was upon a demurrer to evidence. On that subject the court said: "By this demurrer, the defendant has taken the questions of fact from the jury, where they properly belonged, and has substituted the court in the place of the jury, and everything which the jury could reasonably infer from the evidence demurred to, is to be considered as admitted. The language of the adjudged cases on this subject is very strong to show that the court will be extremely liberal in their inferences, where the party, by demurring, will take the question from the proper tribunal. It is a course of practice, generally speaking, that is not calculated to promote the ends of justice. If the objection to the sufficiency of the evidence is made by way of motion for a non-suit, it might be removed by testimony within the immediate command of the plaintiff. The deficiency very often arises from mere inadvertence, and omission to make enquiries, which the witnesses examined could probably answer."

672 *These observations apply as strongly to this case as they did to the one in which they were made: and so do the following, which were made in that case after disposing of some preliminary questions: "And the remaining question is, whether due notice of the default of the maker was given to the defendant. The only objection to the sufficiency of the evidence on this point is, that the notice of non-payment was left at the post-office in the city of Washington, addressed to the defendant at Alexandria, without any evidence that that was his place of residence. The testimony on this point is that of Michael Nourse, a notary public, who swore that on the day the note fell due, he presented it at the store of the defendant, and demanded payment of his clerk, who replied that Mr.

Young was not within, and he would not pay it. And that on the same day he put in the post-office, notice of non-payment, and addressed to the defendant at Alexandria. If the defendant's place of residence was Alexandria, it is not denied, but that due and regular notice was given him. The notary was a sworn officer, officially employed to demand payment of this note, and it is no more than reasonable to presume that he was instructed to take all necessary steps to charge the endorsers. This must have been the object in view in demanding payment of the maker. And it is fair also to presume, that he made enquiry for the residence of the defendant, before he addressed a letter to him; for it is absurd to suppose he would direct to him at that place without some knowledge or information that he lived there, this being the usual and ordinary course of such transactions, and with which the notary was no doubt acquainted. The jury would, undoubtedly, have been warranted to infer from this evidence, that the defendant's residence 673 was Alexandria. *If that was not the fact, this case is a striking example of the abuse which may grow out of demurrers to evidence. For a single question to the witness, would have put at rest that point, one way or the other, if the least intimation had been given of the objection. It was manifestly taken for granted by all parties, that the defendant lived at Alexandria. And if a party will at the trial remain silent and not suggest an enquiry, which was obviously a mere omission on the part of the plaintiff, a jury would be authorized to draw all inferences from the testimony given that would not be against reason and probability; and the court, upon a demurrer to the evidence, will draw the same conclusions that the jury might have drawn."

That case, if it correctly expounds the law, is conclusive of this. It is sustained by the strongest reason, and is a unanimous decision of a court composed of the ablest judges, including in their number Chief Justice Marshall and Justice Story. It is upon a subject of pervading interest, involving a question of commercial law which ought to be uniform throughout the United States; and the decisions of the supreme court upon such a subject are of great weight, and are entitled to peculiar respect. There are, no doubt, to be found in some of the state reports decisions which may seem to conflict with the case in 11th Wheaton; and one or two of such cases were referred to in the argument. Perhaps about an equal number of such cases might be found on each side of the question. But we deem it unnecessary to examine those cases, as we are perfectly satisfied that the law on the subject is correctly expounded in the decision of the supreme court of the United States before referred to. There has been certainly no decision by this court to the contrary of that case. The case 674 of *Raine v. Rice &c., 2 Patton & Heath 529, was referred to in the argument, and has been considered as a decision of the former special court of appeals of the state to the contrary. Such, however, will be found on examination not to be the fact. It is true the reporters state, in the syllabus of the case, that "on a demurrer to evidence, the court will not infer, in the absence of any evidence on the subject, that the post-office of the endorser of a negotiable note was at the place to which the protest states notice of the dishonor of the note was sent." But the case itself shows that it decided no such question, and no such question was involved in it. It involved the question of the liability of the maker, under the circumstances of that case, and not of the endorser.

There is a great difference between a special verdict and a demurrer to evidence in the rule in regard to the decision of questions arising thereon. In the case of a special verdict, all facts which are necessary to enable the court to determine whether or no the plaintiff is entitled to recover must be found with certainty. It is an inflexible rule, that the court upon a special verdict cannot infer other facts from those found by the jury. There are cases in which the court may infer the intent of a party from the facts found in a special verdict, although the intent be not proved. But in such cases the inference is one of law from the facts, and not an inference of one of fact from other facts. 1 Rob. Pr., old ed., pp. 372-'3. Whereas, in the case of a demurrer to evidence, as we have seen, everything which the jury could reasonably infer from the evidence demurred to is to be considered as admitted. If this had been a case of a special verdict, and the facts had been found in the very words of the certificate of protest, the court could not, in 675 giving judgment *on the special verdict, have inferred from the facts thus found the further fact that the post-office to which the notices were sent was the post-office of the endorsers. Possibly in such a case, as it might appear probable from the circumstances disclosed in the special verdict that the jury might have found that the said post-office was the post-office of the endorsers, or at least that it appeared to the notary to be such after making due enquiry, it might be proper to award a venire de novo. Id. and the cases cited. But it is unnecessary to decide that question, as it does not arise in this case. But this is a case of a demurrer to evidence, in which it was the duty of the court to infer all that could reasonably have been inferred by a jury against a demurrant from the facts set out in the demurrer, had not those facts been taken by the demurrant away from the jury to which their decision properly belonged.

Upon the whole, we think the judgment of the circuit court is erroneous, and ought to be reversed and annulled, and that of the county court affirmed.

Judgment of the circuit court reversed, and judgment of the county court affirmed.

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

Absent, STAPLES, J.†

I. Mistake—Omission of Words.—A bond is given upon an injunction to a judgment for money, and in the penalty it is said "in the just and full sum of seven hundred and seventy-six, lawful money of Virginia." The word "dollars" is obviously left out by mistake, and the bond will be treated as if the word was in it.

II. Same—Same—Correction by Court.—Words omitted in an instrument, and also in a record or statute, which can be clearly ascertained by the context, will be supplied by the court, and the instrument, record or statute, will be read and treated as if the words were in it.

III. Clerks of Court.—The clerk states, at the foot of an injunction bond, that it was signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of the court, and it is dated and endorsed as filed, on the 23 October; on which day it appears from the records of the court that it was not then in session. HELD:

1. Same—Authority by Statute.—The statute does not require the bond to be executed in the presence of the court, but before the clerk of the court in which the judgment was. Code, p. 1128, § 10. Though its being given before the court, if it was, cannot vitiate it.

2. Same—Same—Certification of Bonds.—Even if it was not in fact taken before the court, though certified by the clerk at the foot of it, so to have been, the bond would not be thereby vitiated if in fact given before the clerk; as it was.

3. Same—Same—Same.—That the court did not sit on the day of the date of the bond, does not show that it was not executed in the presence of the court, especially when the clerk has certified that it was so *executed. It may have been misdated, or executed on a day different from that on which it bears date.

IV. Injunctions—Terms—Injunction Bond.—The judge granting an injunction to a judgment for money, endorses on the bill:—"Injunction granted on the usual terms," without stating on what terms it was to become operative. The injunction bond given is in a penalty about double the amount of the judgment, and is in other respects as directed by the statute.

1. Same—Same—Same—Penalty.—The penalty being about double the amount of the judgment, and that being the amount of the penalty generally prescribed in such cases, this would seem to be a compliance with the order, and the order a compliance with the law, which directs that the judge shall prescribe the amount of the penalty.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same—Obligors.†—But however that may be, the obligors to the bond are estopped from denying that the penalty of the bond conformed to the direction of the judge who awarded the injunction.

3. Same—Same—Same—Same.—In this case it appears that the bond was executed in the presence of the court, which thereby received and sanctioned the bond, including the penalty. And this ‡Injunction Bonds—Obligors Estopped to Set Up Irregularities.—In Wray v. Davenport, 79 Va. 28, the court cited the principal case for the proposition that the had at least as much effect in fixing the penalty of the bond as if the amount had been prescribed in the order awarding the injunction.

V. Motions for Continuance—Discretion of Court—Appellate Supervision.—A motion for a continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, under all the circumstances of the case; and although an appellate court will supervise the action of an inferior court on such a motion, it will not reverse a judgment on that ground, unless such action was plainly erroneous.

VI. Same—Same—When the Continuance Should Be Refused.—Where the circumstances satisfy the court that the real purpose in moving for a continuance is to delay or evade a trial, and not to prepare for it, then, though the witnesses have been summoned, and the party has sworn to their materiality, and that he cannot go safely to trial without them, the continuance should be refused.

VII. Same—Same—Conditions in Granting Continuance.—Where the circumstances are such as to induce the court to doubt the motives of the party in moving for a continuance, the court may require him to state what he expects to prove by the absent witness; and if the facts which he states he expects to prove by the witness would not affect the result, the motion should be overruled.

VIII. Injunction Bonds—Sureties—Estoppel.—An injunction bond is executed by the obligors before the clerk of the court, and in the presence of the court; and it having been accepted and acted on as their bond, the surety is estopped from setting up the defence, that by express agreement with his principal he signed said bond upon the express condition that another person named should sign it, and that this fact was announced to the clerk at the time the said surety signed it; but the obligee knew nothing of such agreement.

This was an action of debt in the circuit court of Giles county, brought in March 1872 by William H. Howe against James W. Harman and William N. Harman, but which was abated as to James W. Harman upon the return of the sheriff that he was not an inhabitant of the county. The action was founded upon a bond executed by the defendants, upon James W. Harman's obtaining an injunction to a judgment which Howe had recovered against him. The declaration contained three counts. At the May term of the court, 1872, the defendant demurred to the whole declaration and to each count thereof, in which the plaintiff obligors of an injunction bond "are estopped to deny that the bond was proper in form or substance; they took the injunction, and they cannot now disclaim their bond."

*Motions for a Continuance—Discretion of Court.—For the rules governing the court on motions for a continuance, see collection of cases, in Walton v. Com., 32 Gratt. 855, and note; also, Welch v. Com., 90 Va. 821, 18 S. E. Rep. 273, where the principal case is cited among numerous others; Phillips v. Com., 90 Va. 403, 18 S. E. Rep. 841; Myers v. Trice, 86 Va. 838, 11 S. E. Rep. 428, citing the principal case; State v. Betsall, 11 W. Va. 727, where the principal case is again cited; Davis v. Walker, 7 W. joined; and the court sustained the demurrer to the first count, but overruled it as to the second and third counts and the whole declaration. The grounds of the demurrer are not stated and do not appear, unless it is that the second and third counts, in describing the bond sued on, says, "the defendants acknowledged themselves to be held and firmly bound unto the said plaintiff in the just and full sum of seven hundred and seventy-six lawful money of Virginia (seven hundred and seventy-six dollars lawful money of Virginia being meant by the parties as well defendant as plaintiff avers)." And the condition of the bond shows that it was given upon an injunction to a judgment for $740.92, with interest from the 16th of August 1857, subject to a credit of $388, paid on the 10th of August 1858.

At the same term of the court the defendant William N. Harman craved over 679 of the bond and pleaded *non est factum. The cause seems then to have been continued generally until the May term 1873, when it was continued on the motion of the defendant; and a rule was made upon James W. Harman, who had been summoned as a witness for William N. Harman, to show cause at the next term why he should not be fined, &c.

The cause came on for trial in September, when, neither party demanding a jury, but agreeing to submit all matters of law and fact to the court, the plaintiff offered in evidence the bond declared on; when it was objected by the defendant by his counsel, because no evidence had been introduced to explain what was meant by the words "seven hundred and seventy-six" contained in the bond, also because said bond purports to have been taken, signed, sealed and acknowledged on the 23d of October 1860 in the presence of the court, when the records of the court show that there was no court in session on that day; and also because the taking of said bond was not authorized by the order of the court awarding the injunction in the case of James W. Harman against Howe, which said order is as follows: Injunction granted on the usual terms. And. S. Fulton, 4th August 1860. C. C. C. Giles.

The bond was in the usual form, with four seals to it; and seven hundred and seventy-six, if read as dollars, was about double the amount of the judgment enjoined. At the bottom of it was the following entry:

"Signed, sealed and acknowledged in the presence of the court.

J. W. English, Clerk."

And it was endorsed:

680 *"James W. Harman
v. Injunction bond.
Wm. H. Howe.
1860, Oct. 23, filed."

It was proved that English was the clerk of the court at the date of the bond, that the signature of James W. English was his genuine signature, and that he was dead.

The court overruled the objections and admitted the evidence; and the defendant excepted.

The court, having heard all the evidence offered, on the 18th of September rendered a judgment for the plaintiff for the $840.41 (that being the amount of the original judgment with interest and damages) and interest from the 17th of September 1873.

It appears by an entry at the foot of the judgment that it was rendered on the 17th of the month, in the absence of the defendant; and that he having arrived after the court adjourned on that day, but before the order of the day was entered by the clerk, it was directed by the judge not to be entered until the next day, to give the defendant an opportunity to be heard before the judgment should be entered.

On the 18th the defendant moved the court to set aside the judgment and to continue the trial of the cause until the next term, on account of the absence of James W. Harman, to whose materiality as a witness the defendant made oath, and that he could not safely go to trial without him; and his absence was reasonably accounted for. And thereupon the court required the defendant to disclose the facts he expected to prove by said James W. Harman.

The said William N. Harman then stated, that James W. Harman was a material 681 witness, because he *expected the said witness would prove that when the defendant, William N. Harman, signed the said injunction bond, it was understood between said William N. Harman and James W. Harman that John Henderson would also sign said bond as one of the securities; and that defendant, William N. Harman, signed said bond upon the express condition and understanding that said Henderson would sign it; and this fact was announced to the clerk, James W. English, at the time it was signed by the said William N. Harman, the defendant; but William H. Howe, the plaintiff, knew nothing of such agreement or understanding.

The court overruled the motion; and William N. Harman excepted. And he applied to a judge of this court for a writ of error and supersedeas; which was awarded.

Kent and Williams, for the appellant.

Crockett and Blair, for the appellee.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion that the circuit court did not err in overruling the demurrer to the second and third counts of the declaration. The court ought, also, to have overruled the demurrer to the whole declaration and the first count thereof. But the error of the court in that respect is not an error to the prejudice of the plaintiff in error; of which, therefore, he cannot complain. The supposed error in the second and third counts of the declaration consists, in treating the bond therein mentioned, in which no denomination of money is specifically mentioned, as being a bond for so many dollars; upon the ground that 682 the word **"dollars,"* was intended by the parties to be, and ought to have been, inserted in the bond, after the number "seven hundred and seventy-six," but was omitted therein; and that the true and proper legal construction of the bond is, that it is a bond for so many dollars. We think that the court was right in that construction, and it is a bond in the penal sum of $776. It was certainly intended to be, and was, a bond for so much money of some kind? Now, of what kind? Can there be a doubt on that subject? Does not the whole bond, including both the penal part and the condition, conclusively show that "dollars," and only "dollars" was the denomination of the money for which it was given? The bond was given for "lawful money of Virginia." What is the plain meaning of the description, even standing by itself? Certainly "dollars." The Code, ch. 137, §§ 1 and 2, p. 976, declares that: § 1. "The money of account of this state shall be, the dollar, cent, and mill; all accounts by public officers shall be so kept;" and, § 2. "No writing shall be invalid, nor the force of any account or entry be impaired, because a sum of money is expressed therein otherwise than in the said money of account." The condition is expressly for dollars, which conclusively shows, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the penal part is for dollars; the amount being, as is usual, about double the amount mentioned in the condition. Nothing is more common than the omission of words, and even most important words, in drawing written instruments; and yet those words can, generally, be as well understood from the context of the instrument as if they were expressed in it, and the instrument is construed accordingly. It would be a great defect in the law if this were not so.

683 It will *hardly be contended, and perhaps in the argument was not contended, that the law is not so in regard to the construction of ordinary contracts in writing between man and man. But it seemed to be supposed that a different rule of construction applies to records; in which it seemed to be contended that an omitted word, however plainly implied by the context of the instrument, cannot be supplied by construction. In this we think the learned counsel were plainly in error; and that a record, and even a statute, is governed by the same rule of construction in this respect as other written instruments. All are liable to mistakes; as well courts and legislatures as men of business; and in construing the written instruments of all, the business of a court of construction is, to ascertain from the instrument the intention of its framers. A court or a legislature is more deliberate in framing its acts than men engaged in business, and it is therefore supposed to make fewer mistakes in its language. But it sometimes makes them; and then its acts must be subjected to the legal rules of construction for the purpose of ascertaining the intention, if that can be done. It is not admitted that the bond in question in this case was a record, or anything more than a contract inter partes. We do not intend to decide that question, because we do not deem it material. For whether it be a record, or in the nature of a record, or not, the word dollars must be understood and applied as aforesaid, in its construction.

The court is further of opinion that the circuit court did not err in overruling the motion of the defendant to exclude the said bond from being read as evidence on the trial of the cause, because of the supposed variance between the bond offered in evidence and the bond described in the declaration.

684 *There was, in fact, no such variance. The bond offered in evidence was the same in legal construction and effect as the bond described in the declaration, as has already been fully shown. There was no necessity, even if it were competent, to offer testimony as to what was meant thereby. The meaning sufficiently, and indeed conclusively, appears from the bond itself. The bond was not required by law to be executed in the presence of the court, but to be given before the clerk of the court in which the judgment was. Code, p. 1128, § 10. Though its being given before the court, if it so was, cannot vitiate it. And even if it were not in fact taken before the court, though certified by the clerk at the foot of it so to have been, the bond would not thereby be vitiated, if in fact given before the clerk; as it was. But that the court did not sit on the day of the date of the bond, does not show that it was not executed in the presence of the court, especially when the clerk has certified that it was so executed. It may have been misdated; or executed on a day different from that on which it bears date.

The bond was not taken without authority of law. It was argued that it was, because the endorsement made by the judge, granting the injunction directed to the clerk, says: "Injunction granted on the usual terms," without stating upon what terms it was to become operative. The statute does not require that the terms upon which the injunction is granted shall be stated in the order directed to the clerk. It certainly does not require that all the terms shall be stated in the order; but only, if any, that the penalty of the bond shall be stated in the order. All the other terms and conditions of the bond are prescribed by the statute, and need not be, and rarely

685 ever are, repeated *in the order. To grant an injunction to a judgment "on the usual terms," is to grant it on the terms of giving a bond with condition as prescribed by law. The bond in this case is conditioned according to law, and so in that respect conforms to the usual terms. But the amount of the penalty was not fixed by the direction of the judge who awarded it, and it seems to be therefore supposed by the learned counsel that the bond is void. Now is that so? We think not. The penalty of an injunction bond, where the injunction is to a judgment, is generally about double the amount of the judgment; and independently of any direction to the court in the statute to fix the penalty, a grant of an injunction on the usual terms would be understood to contemplate a bond in a penalty about double the amount of the judgment. Formerly nothing was said in the statute about the amount of the penalty of the injunction bond. And probably nothing would ever have been said in the statute about the amount of such penalty if judgments alone had been the subject of an injunction. But as the statute embraces many other subjects of injunction, which, in themselves, afford no guide to the clerk in fixing the penalty of the bond, it therefore provides that the bond, in cases of injunction, all of which are embraced in the same section, shall be in such penalty as the court or judge awarding it may direct. In this case the injunction was to a judgment, and was granted on the usual terms, and a bond was taken in a penalty about double the amount of the judgment. Was not this a compliance with the order? and did not the order comply with the law? Without deciding that question, we are of opinion that the obligors to the bond are estopped from denying that the penalty of the bond conformed to the direction of the judge who awarded the injunction.

686 *But it appears that the bond was executed in the presence of the court, which thereby received and sanctioned the bond, including the penalty. And this had at least as much effect in fixing the penalty of the bond as if the amount of it had been prescribed in the order awarding the injunction.

The court is further of opinion, that the circuit court did not err "on the motion of the defendant," in the words of the third assignment of error, "to continue the cause, after having proved the absence of a material witness and his inability to go to trial in such absence. The court had no power to compel him to disclose what he expected to prove by such witness, and then to determine that what was proven was inadmissible and irrelevant, and the witness incompetent."

In Hewitt's case, 17 Gratt. 627, cited by the counsel for the defendant in error, it was held by this court that "a motion for a continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the court under all the circumstances of the case; and although an appellate court will supervise the action of an inferior court on such a motion, it will not reverse a judgment on that ground, unless such action was plainly erroneous;" and that "where the circumstances satisfy the court that the real purpose in moving for a continuance is to delay or evade a trial, and not to prepare for it, then though the witnesses have been summoned, and the party has sworn to their materiality, and that he cannot safely go to trial without them, the continuance should be refused."

On the principles above mentioned, we certainly cannot say that the action of the court in regard to the motion for a continuance was plainly erroneous. It was a case in which the court might very properly, as it did, require the defendant, William N. Harman, to *disclose the facts he expected to prove by James W. Harman. The witness, who was the principal debtor, had been summoned as a witness for the defendant at the previous term of the court, when the case was continued on the motion of the defendant on account of the absence of the said witness, against whom a rule was awarded, returnable to the next court, when he was again absent, though his absence was then accounted for by the testimony of a witness that there was a dangerous disease prevailing in his family a few days before. The defendant disclosed the following as the facts which he expected to prove by said witness, viz: "that when the defendant, Wm. N. Harman, signed the said injunction bond, it was understood between said Wm. N. Harman and James W. Harman that John Henderson would also sign the said bond as one of the securities, and that defendant, Wm. N. Harman, signed said bond upon the express condition and understanding that said Henderson would sign it, and this fact was announced to the clerk, James W. English, at the time it was signed by said Wm. N. Harman, the defendant; but William H. Howe, the plaintiff, knew nothing of such agreement or understanding." If James W. Harman would have been an inadmissible witness in the case to that transaction, being one of the parties to the bond, and said English, the clerk, before whom it was acknowledged being dead, then of course it would have been improper to continue the cause on account of the absence of said witness. But we deem it unnecessary to decide whether said witness would have been admissible or not for that purpose, as we are of opinion that even if the fact which the defendant stated he expected to prove by the witness had been before the court on the trial of the cause, it would not have affected the result. *The bond is an official bond, executed before the clerk of the court and in the presence of the court. The obligors having signed, sealed and acknowledged it in the presence of the court, and it having been accepted and acted on as their bond, they are now estopped from denying it. The mere fact that it has two blank seals annexed to it does not invalidate the bond. Nothing is more common in the execution of a bond of that kind that blank seals are left to it. They are generally put there in order that sufficient names may be gotten to them to satisfy the court or officer taking the bond that the security is sufficient; and when it is sufficient, the parties signing it acknowledge it before such court or officer by whom it is accepted, and the obligors are then estopped from denying it. Whatever understanding there may be between the obligors to the bond or any of them as to its being signed by others, that cannot affect the validity of the bond, if neither the obligee nor the court in which it was executed consents to such an understanding or has any notice of it. The obligors know, or are presumed to know, that the bond is intended to be acted on as their bond so soon as it is acknowledged and accepted as aforesaid, and that the court or officer before which it is executed and acknowledged cannot be expected or bound to become the agents of any of the persons who have executed or acknowledged it, in procuring it to be executed and acknowledged by other persons. It is not pretended that there was, in this case, any understanding with the plaintiff or the court, even if we can suppose that there could have been such an understanding under any circumstances, that the obligation of the surety to the bond was to be conditional only, and to depend upon another person's becoming surety. It is stated by the defendant that *"this fact was announced to the clerk, James W. English, at the time the bond was signed by William N. Harman, the defendant;" but it is further stated that "Wm. H. Howe, the plaintiff, knew nothing of such agreement or understanding." Without referring again to the authorities cited by the counsel for the plaintiff in error, to show that, according to the statement of what the said plaintiff expected to prove by the witness, he was not bound by the said bond, it is enough for us to say that we do not hold that any or all of them sustain that proposition.

We are therefore of opinion that there is no error in the judgment, at least to the prejudice of the plaintiff in error, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

I. IN GENERAL.

A. Continuance Is Usually a Matter for the Sound Discretion of the Court.—"A motion for a continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the court under all the circumstances of the case." Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. 676; Carter v. Wharton, 82 Va. 264-267; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Shott, 92 Va. 35-45, 22 S. E. Rep. 811; Clinch River Mineral Co. v. Harrison, 91 Va. 122-28, 21 S. E. Rep. 660; Goodell's Ex'ors v. Gibbons, 91 Va. 608, 22 S. E. Rep. 504; Hite v. Com., 96 Va. 489, 31 S. E. Rep. 895; Ross v. Norvell, 3 Munf. 170; Bledsoe v. Com., 6 Rand. 674; State v. Betsall, 11 W. Va. 703-27; Davis & Moore v. Walker, 7 W. Va. 447; Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 253-68; Smith & Atkinson v. Knight, 14 W. Va. 749-59; Marmet Co. v. Archibald, 37 W. Va. 773, 17 S. E. Rep. 301.

Where notices are given to any particular day in the district court, the practice has invariably been considered as requiring that the defendant should be called before any continuance is made. Wilkinson v. Hendrick, 5 Call 12. And this calling should appear by the record. Parker v. Pitts, 1 H. & M. 8.

On indictment for felony, if continuance is granted, it should appear by the record that the prisoner was present at the time of the granting of the continuance. Shelton v. Com., 89 Va. 450, 16 S. E. Rep. 855.

B. This Discretion Is Judicial and Subject to Review.

—But this discretion is judicial and a superior court will supervise the action of an inferior court on a motion for continuance, and will reverse its judgment when the allowance or refusal of the motion was plainly erroneous. Hewitt v. Com., 17 Gratt. 628-29; B. & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. 481-47; Palro v. Bethell, 75 Va. 825-28; Roussell v. Com., 28 Gratt. 930; The Bland & Giles Co. Judge Case, 33 Gratt. 443; Keese, Clark et als. v. Border Grange Bank, 77 Va. 129; Com. v. Mister, 79 Va. 5; Phillips v. Com., 90 Va. 401, 18 S. E. Rep. 841; Welsh v. Com., 90 Va. 321, 18 S. E. Rep. 273; Early v. Com., 86 Va. 921, 11 S. E. Rep. 795; Gaines v. Wilson et al. (Va.), 24 S. E. Rep. 828; Flott et als. v. Com., 12 Gratt. 564-76; Buster & Beard v. Holland et als., 27 W. Va. 510-34; State v. Maler, 36 W. Va. 757, 15 S. E. Rep. 991; Shelton v. Com., 89 Va. 450-53, 16 S. E. Rep. 855.

C. What Court Relieves against Refusal to Continue.

—The relief for a defendant at law, in case of improper refusal to continue the cause, is at law and not in chancery. Syme et als. v. Montague, 4 H. & M. 180.

D. Must Be Cause for Continuance.—In Com. v. Mister, 79 Va. 5-11, it was said: "In this case the action of the court in overruling the motion for a continuance was plainly right, as the motion was unsupported by any sufficient ground whatever."

In Clements v. Powell, 9 Leigh 1, it is said: "There being then no cause shewn for a continuance, the county court acted rightly, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to refuse it."

"It is not to be supposed that his counsel did not know that the plaintiff was entitled to have his case tried at that term, unless the defendant showed good cause for a continuance." Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 253-67.

"In the circumstances of this case, as disclosed in the certificate of facts, we can discover no reasonable ground for the application, and it was, therefore properly refused." Keese, Clark et als. v. Border Grange Bank, 77 Va. 129-32; Bledsoe v. Com., 6 Rand. 673.

This Is Especially True of Criminal Cases.—"When the accused is ready for and demands trial by a court wherein he stands indicted, and may be lawfully tried, he is entitled to trial without delay, unless the prosecution shall show good cause for a continuance." Benton v. Com., 90 Va. 328, 18 S. E. Rep. 32.

The continuance in this case was granted solely upon the ground suggested by the commonwealth's attorney, that he could not convict the prisoner without the testimony of a convict accomplice who would soon be released. The case was reversed for improper continuance. See Const. Va., art. 1 § 10; Code W. Va., ch. 131, § 6; Acts W. Va. 1882, ch. 129 § 4; Anderson v. Com., 84 Va. 77, 8 S. E. Rep. 808; Keese et als. v. Border Grange Bank, 77 Va. 129; State v. Maler, 36 W. Va. 757, 15 S. E. Rep. 991; Code of Va. 1887, § 904.

E. There Must Be a Motion for Continuance and Exception Taken.—There must be a motion for a continuance and an exception taken to the action of the court in refusing to allow it, or the higher court can take no cognizance of such refusal: and this is true though the party be entitled to continuance as a matter of right. The maxim omnia rite esse acta presumuntur applies in such case. Southall's Adm'r v. The Exchange Bank of Va., 12 Gratt. 312-16; Early v. Com., 86 Va. 925, 11 S. E. Rep. 795.

If there was any ground to believe that other testimony could have been procured, the plaintiff should have moved the district court for a continuance of the cause; and not have waited until verdict was rendered against him: and then bring it forward as a ground for a new trial, after having taken his chance with the jury. Gordon v. Harvey, 4 Call 439; Hook v. Nanny et als., 4 H. & M. 157.

In R. & M. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 90 Va. 425, 18 S. E. Rep. 901, it was held no ground of continuance could be taken advantage of in the higher court unless properly put on the record by a bill of exceptions.

Affidavit to Support Motion Not Part of Record unless Exception Taken.—In the case of Garland v. Bag, 1 H. & M. 374, JUDGE TUCKER said: "It would be a dangerous precedent to allow affidavits to be a part of the record; unless made so by an exception."

In Ross v. Norvell, 3 Munf. 170-182, the higher court refused to reverse the lower because the bill of exceptions did not show error.

In Early v. Com., 86 Va. 921-25, 11 S. E. Rep. 795, it is said: "The circumstances under which the motion was made are not set out in the bill of exceptions with sufficient fullness as to enable us to do otherwise than to disregard the exception. Certainly the error, if any was committed, is not apparent, and nothing is better settled than that everything is to be presumed in favor of the correctness of the rulings of a court of competent jurisdiction, when brought under review in an appellate tribunal, until the contrary is shown."

F. No Order of Continuance Is Necessary.—Omission to continue cause on record when there has been a verdict is no discontinuance of the prosecution for a misdemeanor. Hill v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 61. (1810.)

When there is a general order of continuance of cases an omission to direct venire facias, or capias to be issued is no discontinuance of prosecution for misdemeanor. Com. v. Gourd, 2 Va. Cas. 470. (1824.)

Adjournment of court after verdict without an order of continuance does not discontinue cause and prevent judgment on the verdict at the next term. Cleek v. Com., 21 Gratt. 777. (1871.)

In Amls v. Koger, 7 Leigh 221, the court without consent of defendant continued the case over a period of two terms. Held, this was a discontinuance of the cause. (1820.)

In Hale v. Burwell and Wife, 2 Pat. & H. 606, the cause was continued regularly from term to term except that at the April term it was continued to the June term, and at the November term to the March term and at the July term no notice was taken of it, either by continuance or otherwise. It was held, that the cause was not discontinued by reason of the failure to note on record its continuance, and this more especially as after the several miscontinuances or failure to continue, the cause was regularly continued subsequently by consent of the parties. See Va. Code 1850, § 16, p. 627; Va. Code 1887, §§ 3124 and 4013. But §§ 3123 and 3124, would not authorize the court to continue the cause for two terms passing over an intervening one without consent of accused. See Bolanz et al. v. Com., 24 Gratt. 39, which is decided under Va. Code 1860, ch. 161, §§ 15 and 16 which are identical with the sections supra.

In Bolanz et al. v. Com., 24 Gratt. 31, the case was continued from the August term to the October term passing over the September term. But the continuance was on motion of the accused. Held, no error. Harrison v. Com., 81 Va. 491, construes § 26, ch. 201 and § 16, ch. 161, of Va. Code 1873, which correspond to §§ 4013 and 3124 of Code 1887. Held, a failure to enter an order of continuance does not operate as a discontinuance of the prosecution.

N. B.—If the case is called for trial during the term, a party wishing a continuance must make a motion for it. Southall's Adm'r v. The Exchange Bank of Va., 12 Gratt. 312-316.

G. Where Several Continuances Have Been Granted the Rule Is Stricter.—Where several continuances have been granted to a party the rule as to allowing further continuance is more strict and much latitude is given to the discretion of the court. Logie v. Black, 24 W. Va. 1.

In Milstead v. Redman, 3 Munf. 219, one continuance was granted defendant, and after a new trial another continuance was allowed him. Held, not error to refuse a motion for third continuance though absent witness had been summoned and was material.

In Brooks v. Calloway, 12 Leigh 466, there had been three successive continuances granted to defendant and leave to take depositions. Held, not error to refuse another.

In Wilson v. Kochnein, 1 W. Va. 145, after three successive continuances no deposition having been taken and no summons returned, executed, the motion for a fourth continuance was denied properly.

In Holt v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 156, a motion for a second continuance was overruled, principally on the ground that due diligence had not been used by the prisoner in summoning his witness, particularly as a continuance had been already granted him.

In Spengler v. Davy, 15 Gratt. 381-5, it is said: "When we take into consideration the further fact that the plaintiff in error had already been indulged with two continuances of the cause, the fair conclusion is that if he has lost the benefit of any important fact on the trial of his case, such loss is due, not to any injustice or harshness in the ruling of the court, but to his own culpable negligence."

In Davis & Moore v. Walker, 7 W. Va. 447, after two continuances had been granted on motion of defendant, it was held no error to refuse a third, especially as no deposition had been taken though there was ample time.

In Schonberger v. Com., 86 Va. 489, 10 S. E. Rep. 713, it was held no error to refuse another continuance after several had been granted to accused and that the court exercised only a sound discretion in denying the motion for a further continuance when the accused had not brought himself within the rule of due diligence.

H. A Motion for Continuance May Be Made before Arraignment.—Joyce v. Com., 78 Va. 287, decides it competent for the prisoner to move for a continuance before his formal arraignment. See Va. Code, § 4016.

On indictment for capital felony it was held error not to entertain a motion for continuance before arraignment. The court says, "As well might it be contended that a motion for a continuance cannot be made until after trial, as that it cannot be entertained before arraignment." Such refusal in this case was held to deprive the prisoner of his statutory right to elect the forum in which he should be tried. Anderson v. Com., 84 Va. 77, 3 S. E. Rep. 803. See Va. Code, § 4016.

In Boswell v. Com., 20 Gratt. 860, the case was thrice continued before arraignment.

On indictment for a capital offence the prisoner in exercise of his statutory privileges, elected to be tried in the circuit court. Though it appeared by the certified record that the county court had erroneously refused to entertain a motion for continuance before arraignment yet it was held the circuit court had no power to correct this error. Howell v. Com., 86 Va. 817, 11 S. E. Rep. 238.

An amendment to Va. Code, § 4016 now provides that "a prisoner charged with a capital offence on trial in a county court shall make his election whether he will be tried in the said court or the circuit court before making a motion for a continuance." See Pollard's Supp. 1900, § 4016a.

I. Motion after Trial Begun Usually Denied.—In Gordon v. Harvey, 4 Call 450, it was said that the plaintiff should not have waited until verdict was rendered against him before making a motion for continuance.

In Thompson v. Com., 88 Va. 45-48, 13 S. E. Rep. 304, defendant made a motion to adjourn the court until the next day to secure the attendance of a material witness who was then ill. The motion was properly overruled partly because the trial had progressed so far.

In case of Barbour v. Melendy, 88 Va. 595, 14 S. E. Rep. 326, the motion for continuance was held properly overruled partly because the cause had been set for the argument by consent and also because the evidence was irrelevant. See also, Pollard's Supp. 1900, § 4016a.

After a case is set for trial by consent of defendant, he is not entitled to a continuance on the ground that the sheriff's return did not show, before amendment, a valid service of the writ. Atlantic & Danville R. R. Co. v. Peake, 87 Va. 130, 12 S. E. Rep. 348.

II. CONTINUANCE AS MATTER OF RIGHT.

In Stearns' Ex'or v. Richmond Paper Mfg. Co., 86 Va. 1084, 11 S. E. Rep. 1057, construing Va. Code, §§ 8308, and 8309, it was held that on motion for continuance it should be allowed as a matter of right when an order was entered during term reviving a proceeding on scire facias against a new party provided the continuance was asked at the term at which the order was entered. But this right was not allowed when the proceeding was revived at rules.

In Southall's Adm'r v. The Exchange Bank of Va., 12 Gratt. 812, it was held, that though the court had by statute the authority to correct errors at rules, the defendant in such case would have been entitled to a continuance as a matter of right provided he demanded it.

On an indictment, when accused asks a continuance on the ground that another case involving the same question is pending in the court of appeals on writ of error, it is error for the court to deny a continuance. White v. Com., 79 Va. 611.

When plaintiff, a nonresident, fails to give security for costs on suggestion by defendant, and as a consequence defendant does not prepare his case, it is error, costs being secured later, to rule defendant into trial without a continuance, if he demands it. Jacobs v. Sale, Gilmer 128. See Va. Code, 1887, § 8286, and 1 Bart. Law Pr. (2d Ed.) § 119.

In Mullinax v. Waybright, 33 W. Va. 84, 10 S. E. Rep. 25, construing W. Va. Code, ch. 50, § 58, it was held that defendant was entitled to a continuance as of right only when he makes oath that he has a just defense to the action.

In Chisholm v. Anthony, 1 H. & M. 27, it was held error for court to refuse to allow defendant to amend his plea of payment and put in plea of "fully administered." There was also a motion for continuance.

In Clements v. Powell, 9 Leigh 1, it was held no error to refuse a continuance on the ground "that the administrators desired to defend themselves by shewing there were no assets in their hands to which plaintiff was entitled in due course of administration," but the defendants tendered no such plea as was pleaded in Chisholm v. Anthony, 1 H. & M. 27, or any other defence; they did not file affidavit nor even suggest that there were no assets to satisfy the claim. There was, therefore, no good cause for continuance.

III. CONTINUANCE DISCRETIONARY.

A. Absent Witness.

1. Evidence Material.—On motion for continuance because of absence of a witness the affidavit should show that his evidence is material. Wilson v. Kochnein, 1 W. Va. 145; Williams v. Freeland, 2 W. Va. 306; Tompkins v. Burgess, 2 W. Va. 187; McDonald v. Peacemaker, 5 W. Va. 439; Williams v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 9 W. Va. 33; Deford v. Hayes, 6 Munf. 390; Bledsoe v. Com., 6 Rand. 673; Harris v. Harris, 2 Leigh 584; Moore v. Com., 9 Leigh 639-45; Clements v. Powell, 9 Leigh 1; Nash v. Upper Appomattox Co., 5 Gratt. 332; Myers v. Com., 90 Va. 705, 19 S. E. Rep. 881; Logie v. Black, 24 W. Va. 1.

2. Evidence Immaterial.—When the question is one of interest to the whole community, such as the right to hold the office of judge, the question should be speedily and promptly adjudicated and it is proper to refuse a continuance when the sole ground is that counsel had not time to consult the authorities and prepare his defense, especially when the precise question raised by the pleadings had been recently adjudicated by the supreme court of the state Bland & Giles Co. Judge Case, 33 Gratt. 442.

A continuance will not be granted to procure the evidence of an absent witness when the evidence to be shown by him is only cumulative, unless it be shown there will be a conflict of evidence. State v. Harrison, 36 W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. Rep. 982.

In the case of Mfg. & Farmers' Bank v. Mathews, 3 W. Va. 26, defendant filed an affidavit denying partnership and plaintiff moved for continuance to get proof of it. Defendant then withdrew his affidavit and court refused a continuance. The judgment was overruled for refusal to continue. Quere?

A commissioner's report usually lies over until the next term after that to which it is returned. But it was held there was no necessity for it to lie over when neither party intended to except to it. Chev v. Beverly et al., 4 H. & M. 409.

3. Witness Necessary.—Not only should the evidence be material but the affidavit should show that the party cannot safely go to trial in the absence of such witness, i. e., that he cannot prove the same facts by another witness. Wilson v. Kochnein, 1 W. Va. 145; Tompkins v. Burgess, 2 W. Va. 187; Mull's Case, 3 Gratt. 695; Gwatkin v. Com., 10 Leigh 690; Roussel v. Com., 28 Gratt. 930-937.

4. Due Diligence Exercised.

a. When Witness Is Resident of State.—As a general rule, where a witness for a party fails to appear at the time appointed for the trial, if such party show that a subpoena for the witness has been returned executed, or if not so returned, was delivered to the proper officer of the county or corporation in which the witness resides, a reasonable time before the trial, and shall swear that the witness is material, and that he cannot safely go to trial without his testimony, a continuance ought to be granted. The party thus shows, prima facie that he is not ready for trial though he used due diligence to be so; and in the absence of anything to the contrary the court should credit him with honesty of intention. Hewitt v. Com., 17 Gratt. 627; Carter v. Wharton, 82 Va. 25; Phillips v. Com., 90 Va. 401, 18 S. E. Rep. 841.

In Higginbotham v. Chamberlayne, 4 Munf. 56, it was held, that in absence of material witnesses for whom a summons had been delivered to sheriff at due time, a continuance should have been allowed though the cause had been continued before, and though an order for taking depositions de bene esse had not been complied with by taking the deposition of said witness.

It was held due diligence that parties had summoned witness who was material and was thought to be in attendance. Held, error to refuse continuance on account of his absence. Anthony v. Lawhorne, 1 Leigh 1.

Though one continuance had been granted, yet since a material witness was absent who had been duly summoned, the summons being returned executed, the cause of the absence of the witness being shown to be that he was sick in bed, it was held error to refuse another continuance. Gwatkin v. Com., 10 Leigh 687.

The absence of a material witness duly summoned is good ground for continuance especially, as in this case there was an agreement to allow her to remain away only in case she allow an agreement to be produced in evidence, which she refused to do. Taylor v. Peck, 21 Gratt. 11.

In Roussel v. Com., 28 Gratt. 937, it was held no error after two continuances to refuse another when the sole excuse for not properly summoning the witness was that it was the habit of clerks of other courts, when a subpoena for a witness had been ordered in a case, to continue to issue it afterwards from term to term until trial, without further directions. It appeared that summons had been sent but was twice returned with the endorsement, "not time to execute."

In the case of Walton v. Com., 32 Gratt. 855, it was held error to refuse a continuance when the officer instead of duly executing the process, improperly returns it, "not executed for want of fees," when the witness was material and there is apparent no intention to delay or evade the trial.

A delivery of a memorandum to the clerk to issue a subpoena for a material witness was held due diligence though there was no proof of receipt of the summons by the sheriff. The clerk deposed that he believed the summons was issued in the case according to the custom practised by him of leaving summons at a store for the sheriff as he had been requested to do. Deford v. Hayes, 6 Munf. 390.

In the absence of suspicion of a purpose to delay or evade the trial by any unfair play, a mistake in summoning a material witness is excusable and a continuance should be granted. Myers v. Trice, 86 Va. 840, 11 S. E. Rep. 428.

Where no lack of diligence is shown, a continuance should be granted to obtain the attendance of a material witness. Walker v. State, 4 W. Va. 749-52.

An honest mistake in summoning the wrong man, he being a brother of the witness wanted, does not show a want of due diligence, and in the absence of any suspicion of a purpose to delay or evade trial the court should grant a continuance if the absent witness is material. Myers v. Trice, 86 Va. 835-840, 11 S. E. Rep. 428.

In Flott v. Com., 12 Gratt. 564, it was held that though a mistake had been made in the taking of depositions, yet since it did not appear that the commonwealth could be subjected to any inconvenience by a delay of a term, a continuance should have been granted to obtain material evidence.

Sickness of Defendant—Due Diligence.—It was held error for the county court, at the term next after the cause had been transferred to that court, to rule the defendant into trial overruling his motion for continuance on the ground that he had been and was still too ill to prepare his case. M'Alexander v. Hairston's Ex'or, 10 Leigh 486; Radford v. Fowlkes, 85 Va. 826, 8 S. E. Rep. 817.

The absence of leading counsel on account of sickness is a good cause for continuance. Myers v. Trice, 86 Va. 840, 11 S. E. Rep. 428.

Sickness of Witness.—The absence of a material witness on account of sickness when the accused makes affidavit that he believes said witness will be able to attend at the term to which he moved the case to be continued, is a ground for continuance in the absence of any intention to delay or evade the trial. Phillips v. Com., 90 Va. 401, 18 S. E. Rep. 841; Gwatkin v. Com., 10 Leigh 687.

Absence of Counsel.—In Rossett v. Gardner, 3 W. Va. 581, it was held error to refuse a continuance since it appeared the defendant had used due diligence to prepare his case but one of his counsel was unavoidably absent and the other absent at the hearing though present on the preceding day of the term. MAXWELL, J., dissented.

The absence of counsel because of quarantine regulations is a sufficient cause for continuance. Radford v. Fowlkes, 85 Va. 820, 8 S. E. Rep. 817.

In Hook v. Nanny, 4 H. & M. 157, one of the grounds for continuance was that defendant stated on oath that one of his counsel, in whose assistance he materially relied, was absent. He also stated as a ground for continuance absence of a material witness to whom summons was sent but clerk failed to deliver letter. Held, continuance should have been allowed.

b. When Witness a Nonresident.—To entitle a party to a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness, it must be shown that the party has used due diligence to procure the attendance of the witness—that he is a material witness—that the same fact cannot be proved by any other witness in attendance—and that the party making the application cannot safely go to trial in the absence of such witness. Wilson v. City of Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323; Dimmey v. R. Co., 27 W. Va. 32-48; Marmet Co. v. Archibald, 37 W. Va. 778, 17 S. E. Rep. 299.

Where an absent witness is a nonresident, the affidavit should state, not only the party's belief that his attendance can be secured, but also the grounds of such belief. State v. Harrison, 36 W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. Rep. 982.

5. Due Diligence Not Exercised.

a. When Witness is Resident of State.—After several continuances it was held no error to refuse a continuance because of absence of an unsummoned witness when accused did not swear to the materiality of the witness. Schonberger v. Com., 86 Va. 489.

It was held no error to refuse a continuance to get material evidence when the witness though summoned and in attendance had not been informed what he was expected to prove and had not been instructed to bring the books without which he could not show the dates desired especially since two continuances had already been granted him. Spengler v. Davy, 15 Gratt. 381.

Mere failure to examine the papers in the cause when counsel, called in, had erroneously supposed the cause was removed from county to circuit court, is no cause for a continuance especially when the original counsel was in court and alleged no want of preparation. Hogshead et als. v. Baylor, 16 Gratt. 99.

In Trevelyan's Adm'r v. Lofft, 83 Va. 141, 1 S. E. Rep. 901, a motion for a continuance was held properly overruled, because ample time and opportunity had been given for a settlement of the accounts, and because to grant the motion would be to reward negligence, and to unreasonably delay the cause which was then ready for hearing.

In Mullinax v. Waybright, 83 W. Va. 84, 10 S. E. Rep. 25, a motion was made for a continuance on the grounds of being without counsel and the absence of a witness. It was held no error to refuse continuance since it appeared that no effort had been made to obtain counsel and no summons had been issued for the witness.

After two continuances had been granted to defendant on account of the absence of a witness, it was held no error to refuse further continuance when it appeared that the summons had been sent to the witness and not to an officer for service on him and when no deposition had been taken though the witness was more than one hundred miles distant and there had been ample time to take such deposition. The court says, "He must, generally, have exercised such diligence in the use of the process of the court, as will authorize the court, if the witness is not in attendance when the cause is called for trial, to take the legal course to compel the attendance of the witness. * * * He must not simply rely upon the witness as to his attendance, * * * but he can only safely rely upon the diligent and proper use of the process of the court in proper time." Davis v. Walker, 7 W. Va. 447, 451; Dimmey v. R. Co., 27 W. Va. 32-48. See Va. Code 1887, § 3365; R. & M. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 90 Va. 425-433, 18 S. E. Rep. 901.

In Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Shott, 92 Va. 34-45, 22 S. E. Rep. 811, though the absent witness was in the employ of the company and only lived eight or ten miles from the courthouse where the trial took place, yet no subpoena was put in the hands of an officer for him but the plaintiff in error undertook to have him present at the trial. Held, this was not due diligence, a continuance was properly refused.

In Mull's case, 8 Gratt. 605, it was held no error to refuse a continuance when the ground of motion was absence of a brother of the prisoner, alleged to be a material witness. No summons had been served though he had ample time and some delay had already been made to await the return of the witness.

In Moore v. Com., 9 Leigh 639, the motion for continuance was held to have been properly overruled because the evidence to be proved by the witness was immaterial and also because though summons had issued it did not appear what had become of it. See also, Wilson v. Kochnein, 1 W. Va. 145.

In Holt v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 156, the court was held to have properly overruled a motion for a continuance principally because due diligence had not been used in summoning the witness.

In Ross v. Norvell, 3 Munf. 182, there was newly discovered evidence a few days before trial and a motion was made for a continuance. It was held that since the bill of exceptions did not show that this evidence was recently discovered, it would be presumed that appellant knew of it when the trial began, and knowing of it, he was negligent in not bringing it forward sooner.

In Mendum v. Com., 6 Rand. 704, the motion for a continuance was overruled because there had been several continuances and though prisoner had had ample time to do so, he had not taken the depositions of the absent witness.

b. When Witness Is a Nonresident.—An affidavit by accused that he has four material witnesses whose testimony is necessary in order to his having a fair trial, is not sufficient to support a continuance. Where he also shows they are nonresidents and does not name them nor show that he has made any effort to procure their attendance or that he expected to be able to procure their attendance if a continuance should be granted him. Hurd v. Com., 5 Leigh 715.

In Deanes v. Scriba et als., 2 Call 415, it was held that since the commissioner had indulged the appellants from 1792 to 1797, and during that time they had taken no steps to secure the depositions of the absent witness who was a seafaring man, though they had ample opportunity by his return from time to time, the continuance was properly denied.

In Fire Association v. Hogwood, 82 Va. 342, the absence of a material witness who was in the employ of the company and was a nonresident of the state and therefore not subject to the process of the state court, was held to be no ground for continuances; especially as the court had continued the case a sufficient time to allow the plaintiff in error to procure his attendance.

The absence of a material nonresident witness who is in the service of defendant, is no ground for a continuance when the suit has been pending for a considerable time and no effort has been made to obtain his deposition, defendant relying merely on the promise of the witness to attend. B. & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. 431-47.

6. Motion Should State Name of Witness.—In Hurd v. Com., 5 Leigh 715, it was held that, though the affidavit stated the witnesses were material yet since it did not state their names or show any effort to procure attendance or that he would be able to procure their attendance, they being nonresidents, it was no error to refuse a continuance.

In Buster v. Holland, 27 W. Va. 510, 525, it was held proper to refuse a continuance since no due diligence had been shown and the names of the absent witnesses were not stated.

B. Amendments.—In Anderson v. Kanawha Coal Co., 12 W. Va. 526, in construing Code W. Va. ch. 5, § 12, p. 601, it was held the provision that, "if such amendment be made after appearance of the defendant, the court may impose such terms upon the plaintiff as to a continuance of the cause as it may deem just," did not give the defendant a continuance as a matter of right, but still left it to the discretion of the court, and since in this case it was obvious that the amendment operated no surprise to the defendant, a continuance was properly denied.

In Harvey v. Parkersburg Ins. Co., 37 W. Va. 272, 18 S. E. Rep. 580, it was held since the amendment allowed in that case operated as no surprise, the defendant was not injured by a refusal to continue the cause, and a continuance was properly refused.

In Atlantic & Danville R. Co. v. Peake, 87 Va. 13, 12 S. E. Rep. 348, it was held that the amendment of return on summons, though before such amendment there was nothing to show a valid service of the writ, was no ground for a continuance, especially in view of the fact that the case, by consent, had been previously set for trial on the same day on which the order permitting the amendment was made.

In Danville & Western R. Co. v. Brown, 90 Va. 361, 13 S. E. Rep. 278, it was held no error to refuse a continuance when the sole ground that the court had allowed defendant to make an amendment which was wholly immaterial and unnecessary.

C. Prejudice Not a Ground for Continuance.—In Smith v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 6, it was decided that a motion for continuance on the sole ground of prejudice against the prisoner, was properly refused. There did not appear any proof of undue means used to prejudice the public mind.

In Joyce v. Com., 78 Va. 287, it was held that though a motion for continuance could be made before arraignment, yet affidavit of general prejudice is not sufficient ground to sustain such motion.

D. When the Object of the Motion Is Delay, a Continuance Is Refused.—Though the affidavit state that the witness is material and that due diligence has been used to obtain his continuance, yet if it appear on examination that the continuance was moved for, not that he might have the benefit of the evidence of an absent witness, but merely to delay the trial the motion should be denied. Mendum v. Com., 6 Rand. 704-716.

In Wormeley v. Com., 10 Gratt. 658, it appeared that the absent witness alleged to be material was the plaintiff's daughter and absent with his connivance, and the motion for a continuance was accordingly held to have been properly refused. Wormeley v. Com., 10 Gratt. 658-662; Com. v. Wormeley, 8 Gratt. 712.

In Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. 676-686, citing Hewitt v. Com., 17 Gratt. 627, it was said: "Where the circumstances satisfy the court that the real purpose in moving for a continuance is to delay or evade a trial, and not to prepare for it, then though the witnesses have been summoned, and the party has sworn to their materiality, and that he cannot safely go to trial without them, the continuance should be refused." Marmet Co. v. Archibald, 37 W. Va. 778, 17 S. E. Rep. 301; Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 209; Buster v. Holland, 27 W. Va. 510-535. See Earley v. Com., 86 Va. 921-5, 11 S. E. Rep. 795.

In Dillard's Adm'r v. Dillard et als., 77 Va. 820-25, 21 S. E. Rep. 669, it was said: "At that time he, the appellant, was represented by counsel, and it does not appear that his rights were prejudiced on account of his absence, or, that if a continuance had been granted, he would have been able to attend before the commissioner within a reasonable time thereafter. The motion appears to have been prompted rather by a desire for unreasonable delay than for any other purpose, and was rightly overruled."

1. No Presumption That Delay Is the Object.—When there is no lack of diligence on the part of accused and the motion does not appear to be for the purpose of evading or unnecessarily delaying the trial, the court should give the prisoner credit for honesty of intention and continue the case in his motion because of the absence of a material witness. Welsh v. Com., 90 Va. 318, 18 S. E. Rep. 278; Phillips v. Com., 90 Va. 403, 18 S. E. Rep. 841.

2. If Delay Is the Object Court May Require Evidence to Be Stated.—After one continuance has been granted, and when there are many witnesses so that every probability is against a future attendance of many of said witnesses, the court may require the affidavit of the witness, on account of whose absence the motion was made, to be produced, that the court might judge of the materiality of the witness. Mendum v. Com., 6 Rand. 704.

In Rosset v. Greer et al., 3 W. Va. 1, it was held no error, in a chancery case, to refuse a continuance when the affidavit did not show that the newly discovered evidence which furnished the ground of the motion could not have been discovered before by due diligence and also because it did not disclose the nature of the evidence so that it might be seen whether it was material or not.

In Harris v. Harris, 2 Leigh 584, it was held that if the judge believes the party moving for a continuance on the ground of absence of a material witness is mistaken as to the materiality of the evidence he expects to prove by such witness, or that the motion was made to delay the trial, he may require the party making the motion to state what he expects to prove by such witness.

The fact that the absent witness, if material, who has been duly summoned to appear at the trial, is a party plaintiff or defendant in the suit, cannot prejudicially affect the motion for continuance, unless the court has good grounds to doubt the fairness of the motives of the party moving for the continuance, and to suspect that the object of the motion is mere delay. And in such event, the court may enquire further into the materiality of the witness, require the party to state what he expects to prove by the absent witness, and even send an officer with a rule, or an attachment, if a rule has been previously served, for the absent witness, whether he be a party, who has been summoned as a witness, or any other witness. Carter v. Wharton, 82 Va. 207.

E. Continuance of Motion to Dissolve an Injunction.

a. When Continuance Denied.—In Radford's Ex'ors v. Innes's Ex'x, 1 H. & M. 8, it is said: "The reasons assigned for a continuance are not sufficient to induce the court to depart from the general rule; and that is, never to continue a motion for the dissolution of an injunction, unless from some very great necessity, because the court is always open to grant, and, of course, to reinstate an injunction, whenever it shall appear proper to do so, and because too the plaintiff should always be ready to prove his bill."

In Johnson v. White's Ex'ors, 1 H. & M. 201, it was held that no continuance will be granted because of exceptions to a commissioner's report unless they be filed as required by a rule of court and good cause shown; but they will be received at any time provided they do not delay the hearing of the cause.

In Tiffany v. Kent et als., 2 Gratt. 231-36, on a motion to dissolve an injunction against a sale of real estate, it appearing that the bill without amendment did not disclose a ground for injunction, a motion for continuance was held properly refused.

In B. & O. R. R. Co. v. City of Wheeling, 13 Gratt. 40, 59, 77, a motion to dissolve an injunction was continued because a foreign corporation had not filed an answer, because the exceptions taken to appellant's answer were still pending, and because the appellant's answer was not verified by affidavit. It was held error to continue the motion because sufficient grounds had not be stated and because the bill of injunction had been improvidently granted.

In Ingles v. Straus, 91 Va. 209-224, 21 S. E. Rep. 490, it was said: "When a motion is made to dissolve an injunction, the court of chancery never continues it unless from some great necessity, because the court is always open to grant, and of course to reinstate an injunction wherever it shall appear proper to do so." And "where a motion to dissolve is heard upon the bill, answer, and depositions used as affidavits, and the evidence does not show probable cause from which it may reasonably be inferred that plaintiff will be able to make out his case upon final hearing, the injunction will be dissolved." No such probable cause was shown in this case and the motion for continuance was held properly refused.

In Taylor v. Com., 29 Gratt. 780, on an indictment for obstructing the street it was held, the fact that an injunction suit was pending in the same court was no ground for continuing the prosecution under the indictment, especially as the questions to be decided in the injunction suit must be decided in the trial under the indictment.

b. When Continuance Allowed.—In Nelson's Adm'r v. Armstrong, 5 Gratt. 354, on a motion to dissolve an injunction which had been granted against a judgment on drafts alleged to be for a gaming consideration, since the evidence did not disclose what the consideration of the debt was, and whether the debtor had not fraudulently induced the creditor to purchase, the injunction should have been continued until these questions were tried by a jury. See also, Beale v. Digges et als., 6 Gratt. 582-591.

In Jenkins & Cutchin v. Waller & Jordan, 80 Va. 668, it is held that, it rests in the sound discretion of the court to dissolve an interlocutory injunction upon the coming in of the answer denying the equities of the bill, or to continue it to a final hearing on the merits: especially is this true where fraud is the gravamen of the bill, or where it is apparent to the court that a dissolution of the injunction would result in greater injury and hardship than its continuance to the hearing. The continuance was held properly granted.

As a general rule when a motion to dissolve an injunction comes on to be heard upon the bill and answer and the answer denies all the equity of the bill, the injunction is dissolved: but when the injunction is against the sale of personal property alleged to be fraudulent, since the retention of the property by the vendor after an absolute sale is prima facie fraudulent and the burden of proof is on the vendee to show the sale fair and bona fide it is proper to continue the motion and to refuse to dissolve the injunction where only one of the several vendees answers the bill. RICHARDSON, J., dissenting. Kahn v. Kerngood, 80 Va. 342-346.

On motion to dissolve an injunction granted against the sale of land because of defective notice of sale and because the deed of trust was alleged to be tainted with usury, it appeared that there was no usury in the transaction. It was held error to refuse a continuance to allow complainant to obtain evidence of the defective sale, which evidence he could not have obtained before by use of due diligence. Vaught v. Rider, Trustee, 83 Va. 659, 3 S. E. Rep. 293.

Refusal to continue in the examining court is no ground for motion in arrest of judgment in the circuit court, for it suggests matter making no part of the record. If such error can be taken advantage of in the circuit court it is only by a motion to quash or a plea in abatement. Morris v. Com., 9 Leigh 686.

See, as to Continuances, Va. Code 1887, §§ 3124, 3384, 3308, 3312, 4013, and 4047.

690 *Brown, Adm'r &c. v. Dickenson.

June Term, 1876, Wytheville.

Bonds—Joint Obligees—Assignments by Each.—Three bonds are executed to A and G, and are left in the possession of G. A sold the bonds to E; but they being in the possession of G, were not delivered to E. G sold and delivered the bonds to D. In a suit by E against D to recover the bonds, the deposition of A was taken to prove that G owed him, and had agreed that he should have the bonds; but at the time of taking the deposition of A, G was dead. Held:

1. Same—Same—Same—Notice.—The bonds having been executed to A and G, their joint interest appeared upon the face of the bonds; and the possession of them by G could not mislead a purchaser from him.
2. Same—Same—Same—Rights of Obligees.—Though each might sell his own interest, neither could dispose of the interest of the other without his consent.
3. Same—Same—Same—Rights of Assignees.—Though the bonds were sold by G and assigned to D, D only acquired the interest of G in the bonds; and E is entitled to the interest of A in them.
4. Same—Same—Same—Liability of Assignors—Evidence.—A is liable to E, on his sale of the bonds to E, if he does not recover them; and as G is dead, A is not a competent witness, either at common law or under the statute, to prove that G had agreed with him that the bonds should belong to A, though A is not a party in the suit.

The case is sufficiently stated by Judge Staples in his opinion.

Kent, for the appellant.

Crockett and Richardson, for the appellee.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

691 *This is an appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Grayson county, in a cause wherein the administrator of Eli Davis was plaintiff, and John Dickenson and others were defendants. The record shows the following state of facts: Alexander S. Matthews and Granville H. Matthews, being the joint owners of a tract of land lying in Grayson county, executed a deed of trust thereon in the year 1858. A sale was afterwards made by the trustee; and the land having sold for more than was sufficient to satisfy the debts secured by the deed, the purchaser executed his three bonds for the surplus of the purchase money, to the said Alexander S. Matthews and Granville H. Matthews, jointly.

These bonds, it seems, were handed over by the trustee to Granville H. Matthews, who then lived in Grayson county; A. S. Matthews being at that time a resident of Wythe county. Shortly thereafter Granville H. Matthews assigned and delivered the bonds to the defendant Dickenson, for a valuable consideration, paid in money and in bonds and notes upon third persons. Before this assignment to Dickenson, however, A. S. Matthews had sold the bonds to Eli Davis. Being then in the possession of G. H. Matthews, they were of course not delivered to Davis. The controversy here is between Davis' administrator and Dickenson: each claiming title to the whole amount of the bonds under the respective assignments aforesaid. The question before us is as to the nature and extent of the interest acquired under these assignments. The learned judge of the circuit court was of opinion that if the deposition of A. S. Matthews is read, the implied authority in such case of each to act for the other, is strengthened by the repeated acts of G. H. Matthews in respect to the several 692 transaction which *gave rise to the bonds in controversy, which were approved by A. S. Matthews, and also by the fact of G. H. Matthews continuing in possession of the bonds. What were these repeated acts of G. H. Matthews approved by A. S. Matthews does not appear. A careful examination of the record wholly fails to disclose them. It is not proved that A. S. Matthews knew at the time of the execution of the bonds or of their delivery to G. H. Matthews. When he acquired this knowledge does not appear. If his deposition is competent evidence it would seem that the sale and assignment to Davis were made with the consent of G. H. Matthews, who promised to surrender the bonds to Davis, but in violation of that promise transferred them to Dickenson.

But if the bonds were put in the possession of G. H. Matthews with the consent of A. S. Matthews, that of itself would scarcely be sufficient to divest his interest even in favor of a bona fide purchaser. They must necessarily have remained in the possession of one or the other of the obligees; they could not be held by both. It is impossible that a purchaser could be misled, because the joint ownership, the joint interest, appeared on the face of the instruments for which he was negotiating. In the case of a joint tenancy of personal property, the parties have equal rights as between themselves during the joint ownership. If one of them sells his interest, the purchaser becomes tenant in common with the other. But neither has any authority by virtue of that relation to dispose of the common property, unless indeed there be something in the nature of the commodity creating a presumption of a complete power of sale, as, for example, is sometimes the case of an article manufactured expressly for sale.

These principles apply as well to 693 things in action as *in possession, to bonds and other evidences of debt, as well as to chattels. Bills of exchange and promissory notes, payable to two or more, are subject to a like rule, and cannot be transferred by any less number than the whole. In Story on Bills, sec. 197, it is said: If a note is made payable to several persons, not partners, there the transfer can only be by a joint indorsement of all of them. See also Freeman on Co-tenancy and Partition, sec. 183, 194-5. If this be the rule with respect to negotiable paper, the legal title to which passes by mere indorsement and delivery, with how much greater show of reason does the principle apply to ordinary obligations not negotiable?

The law merchant encourages the free circulation of negotiable instruments, unaffected by secret liens and equities. The common law, on the other hand, never recognized the assignment of choses in action. Our statute, it is true, now authorizes the assignee of a bond or note, for the payment of money, to bring suit in his own name; but the legal title still remains in the assignor, the assignee acquiring a mere equity standing in the shoes of the assignor, entitled to all his rights, remedies and securities, and, as a general rule, subject to all his duties and obligations. When, therefore, one of two obligees undertakes to transfer the bond, the extent of the transfer will depend upon the nature of his interest. Such interest, whatever it is, passes to the assignee; but nothing beyond that as against his co-obligee, unless, indeed, there be some other element in the transaction in the nature of fraud, agency, or other circumstance, modifying the rights of the parties.

The cases cited by the learned counsel for the appellee are cases of assignments or pledges made by one of several copart-
694 ners. The doctrine is well settled *that each partner occupies the position both of principal and agent. Each has the complete jus disponendi of the whole partnership interests, and is considered to be the authorized agent of the firm during the existence of the partnership. This distinction between partners, and mere part owners of goods and chattels, in respect to the power of disposing of the entire interest, is recognized by all the authorities, and controverted by none I have seen. See Story on Partnerships, sec. 89; Reid v. Hollingshead, 10 Eng. Com. L. R. 439; 2 Matthew's Digest—Partnerships.

Tried by these principles, the sale and assignment made by A. S. Matthews to Eli Davis carried with it his interest in the bonds, which was one moiety of the purchase money, and the assignment by G. H. Matthews to the defendant Dickenson operated as a transfer of the other moiety to the latter.

It is however claimed by the administrator of Davis that the bonds belonged solely to A. S. Matthews; that the latter having paid the whole amount of the purchase money for the land upon which the trust deed was given and on which these bonds originated, he has an equitable claim to the whole, as well against G. H. Matthews as against his assignee. The only evidence in support of this claim is the deposition of A. S. Matthews himself. At the time this deposition was taken, G. H. Matthews was dead; the only person who could throw any light upon the transaction. The question is therefore presented as to the competency of A. S. Matthews to testify as to the matters to which his deposition relates. He is certainly incompetent according to the rules of the common law. The effect of his evidence, if it is to be believed, is to vest in Davis' estate a valid title to the whole amount of the bonds. If the estate of 695 Davis fails to recover *the whole, it will have recourse direct and immediate upon A. S. Matthews. The latter is therefore directly interested in the result of this suit. Is he rendered competent by the statute? It is very true he is not a party to the contract between Dickenson and G. H. Matthews. But if Davis' estate succeeds, A. S. Matthews in effect establishes, as against G. H. Matthews, his claim to the subject matter of controversy. While the contest is nominally between the contending assignees, it involves directly the respective obligations and pretensions of the two assignors. They are the parties to the original transaction, and one of these being dead, both the spirit and the letter of the statute exclude the other as a witness.

The deposition of A. S. Matthews being out of the case, there is no evidence in support of the claim asserted by Davis' estate to the whole amount of the bonds under the assignment of A. S. Matthews.

It is therefore unnecessary to consider a question somewhat discussed by the counsel here, and that is, whether Alexander S. Matthews having remitted his co-obligee, G. H. Matthews, to retain possession of the bonds, he or his assignee will be permitted to assert an equitable right to the whole amount due as against Dickenson, an innocent purchaser. No such question is before us, because the record contains no proof of the claim to the whole. Our decision must be upon the case appearing upon the face of the bonds, and the facts conceded on both sides. Upon these, as already stated, the parties are each entitled to one moiety of the bonds as would their assignors if suing. The decree of the circuit court must therefore be reversed, and a decree entered in conformity with the views herein expressed.

696 *The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the said decree is erroneous. It is therefore decreed and ordered that the same be reversed and annulled, and that the appellee, John Dickenson, pay to the appellant his costs by him about the prosecution of his appeal here expended. And this court proceeding to render such decree in the premises as the said circuit court ought to have rendered, is of opinion, for the reasons aforesaid, that as to one-half of the three bonds in the proceedings mentioned, executed by Wright Wingate and Emanuel Long to Alexander S. Matthews and Granville H. Matthews, each for the sum of two hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-six and two thirds cents, with interest thereon from the 23rd day of August 1858, the assignment of said bonds in the proceedings mentioned made by Granville H. Matthews to John Dickenson was without effect to pass any title to the said John Dickenson; but that the title to the said half passed by the assignment of said bonds in the proceedings mentioned made by Alexander S. Matthews to Eli Davis, appellant's intestate, whilst, so far as duly appears, the title to the other half of said three bonds did pass by the assignment first mentioned to John Dickenson. It is, therefore, decreed and ordered that the injunction originally awarded in this cause be perpetuated, and that said John Dickenson credit to said Wingate & Long on the two bonds not yet sued on so much as together with the amount of the judgment enjoined as aforesaid will equal one-half of the money due by said three bonds, and, as to the amount so directed to be credited, be perpetually enjoined

697 *from collecting said bonds, and that the said John Dickenson pay to the appellant, Rufus Brown, administrator of Eli Davis, deceased, the costs by him expended, and by his said intestate expended, about the prosecution of this cause in said circuit court, &c.

Decree reversed.

698 *Maury v. Chesapeake & Ohio R. R. Co.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

Contracts for Services.—A railroad company, for the purpose of extending their road, determine to issue their bonds for $10,000,000, to be secured by a deed on all their property to three trustees, one to reside in Virginia and two in New York, and they agree to pay to the trustees each $5,000. M is selected in Virginia, informed of the terms, and consents to act. The company determine to issue bonds for $15,000,000, and to have a fourth trustee, and pay to the fourth the $15,000. The deed is prepared, and is executed by the trustees, M having been informed of the reduction of the compensation. The trustees execute about 2,000 of the bonds, and M performs all the service demanded of him, until the company, without the knowledge of M, makes another deed to two of the trustees, omitting M; and under this last deed the company proceeds to effect the loan on this last deed. Held:

1. Same—Breach by Employer—Compensation.—M having been appointed a trustee upon a specific compensation, and having been discharged by the company without his knowledge, he is entitled to have the compensation agreed upon.
2. Same—Same—Acquiescence of Employee.—M having executed the deed with the knowledge that the compensation was to be reduced by the payment to the fourth what was first agreed to be paid to the three, and having acted under the deed, he is entitled to recover from the company one-fourth of the $15,000; but not more.

Prior to the year 1868, the Virginia Central railroad company owned the railroad extending from Richmond to Covington in Alleghany county, except about sixteen miles extending from the eastern to western base of the Blue Ridge mountains, which had been constructed and was owned by the state of Virginia. Of this company 699 Colonel Edmund Fontaine *was the president. Before the late war the state of Virginia had commenced to construct a railroad from Covington to the Ohio river, and for this purpose had constituted a corporation under the name of the Covington & Ohio railroad company. On this work the state had expended between two and three millions of dollars.

Under acts passed by the legislatures of Virginia and West Virginia, the Virginia Central railroad company was authorized to purchase the Blue Ridge railroad and the Covington & Ohio railroad upon certain terms, among which were that the company should raise a certain additional amount of stock, and should complete the road to the Ohio river; and the company was authorized to change its name to that of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad company.

In August 1868 the Central railroad company appear to have raised the additional amount of stock required; and to enable the company to carry on the work it was determined to raise $10,000,000, to be secured by a mortgage on its whole road and all the property of the company, and a contract was made with McGinnis, Brothers & Smith, brokers, of the city of New York, who were to be the agents of the company to raise the money by a sale of the bonds. In carrying out this agreement a mortgage of the property was to be executed to three trustees, two in the city of New York to be selected by the said brokers, and one in Virginia to be selected by the company; and though the fact is not stated in the agreement, it was proved to the satisfaction of this court, that the compensation to these trustees was to be $5,000 to each of them.

To fill these offices, Philo C. Calhoun and William Butler Duncan, of New York, were selected by Messrs. McGinnis, Brothers & Smith, and *Matthew F. Maury, of Virginia, was selected by Col. Fontaine, the president of the company; and Mr. Maury was informed of his selection and of the compensation he was to receive, and he consented to act.

Before the bonds had been prepared under this agreement, the parties in New York determined to have four trustees, and the name of William Orton was suggested in addition to the three before selected.

On the 30th of September 1868 the directors of the company adopted a resolution which, among other things, provided that the president and treasurer of the company should execute to four trustees, three of whom should reside in the city of New York and one in Virginia to be chosen by the president, whose aggregate pay should be $15,000, that being the sum expected to be paid to three trustees. And by deed bearing date the 1st of October 1868, the whole property of the company was conveyed to the four persons named. This deed was executed by the trustees, of whom M. F. Maury was one, who acknowledged it on the 24th of October. It appears that Mr. Maury was informed of the resolution of the 30th of September before he executed the deed; but the only evidence of his acquiescence in the reduction of the compensation which had been before promised him, was his execution of the deed and his acting under it. And it should be stated that the deed provided for all expenses attending the execution of the trust and a sale of the property to be paid out of the profits or proceeds of sale.

The company, and its agents in New York, proceeded to have the bonds of the company prepared and put upon the market, and it appears that Mr. Maury performed all the duties of a trustee which he was called upon to perform, and as such he executed about *two thousand of the bonds which were proposed to be issued and secured by the mortgage. The effort to sell the bonds seems, however, to have failed to a great extent; and in January 1870 the company executed a deed by which they conveyed all their property to William Butler Duncan and Philo C. Calhoun, in trust to secure a loan of $15,000,000, to be raised by a sale of the bonds of the company. This deed is executed on behalf of the company, by C. P. Huntington as president, and James A. Tracy as treasurer.

Mr. Maury having been omitted in this last deed as trustee, the parties disagreed as to the compensation which should be made him; the company insisting that he should only receive compensation for the services actually performed by him, and that the trustee, Orton, had been content to receive $1,000, which they were willing to pay to Mr. Maury; and Mr. Maury insisting that he had consented to act, and had acted under an express agreement that he should receive a specific amount; and that he had rendered every service which he was called upon to perform, until the company had, of their own motion and without his knowledge, executed the second deed, in effect discharging him from the trust.

The parties being thus at issue, Mr. Maury instituted a suit in equity in the circuit court of the county of Rockbridge against the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad company; and upon the pleadings and evidence omitting what is irrelevant to the question, the case was as hereinbefore stated.

The cause came on to be finally heard on the 24th of April 1872, when the court held that the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant was only partly performed, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a fair and reasonable compensation for the services rendered, *and decreed to him the sum of $1,000, with interest from the 1st of October 1868. And Mr. Maury thereupon applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Governor Letcher, Wm. A. Maury, Tucker & Christian, for the appellant.

Thomas D. Ranson and H. T. Wickham, for the appellee.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion, that in August 1868 it was agreed between the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad company and M. F. Maury, that the latter, residing in Virginia, should be one of the trustees, Philo C. Calhoun, and William B. Duncan, of the city of New York, being the other two, in a deed of trust to be executed by the said company, conveying their road and its appurtenances to secure the payment of their bonds, which they contemplated executing to the amount of ten millions of dollars, payable at Richmond, New York or London, at the option of the respective holders on the 1st day of October 1898, and bearing interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, free of all government tax, payable semi-annually, either in Richmond, New York or London as aforesaid, on the first days of April and October in each year; the object of which arrangement was to obtain the necessary funds to complete the line of the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad from Covington, Virginia, to the Ohio river, in the state of West Virginia, as well as to straiten the line between Richmond and Charlottesville, in the state of Virginia; and that the said M. F. Maury should receive as his compensation, for acting as such trustee, *the sum of five thousand dollars, it being agreed that each of the other two trustees aforesaid should also receive a like sum of five thousand dollars for his compensation for so acting, making the aggregate sum of fifteen thousand dollars to be paid to the three trustees.

The court is further of opinion, that after the said agreement was made, to wit: on the 30th day of September 1868 a resolution was adopted by the board of directors of the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad company, that for the purpose of obtaining the necessary funds aforesaid, the president and treasurer of the said company be "directed to make and execute unto four trustees, three of whom shall reside in New York city, and one in Virginia (whose aggregate pay shall be fifteen thousand dollars, that being the sum expected to be paid to three trustees), to be chosen by the president of the company, a mortgage to bear date October 1st, 1868," conveying the property and franchises of the company to secure the payment of the said bonds; which mortgage was accordingly afterwards duly executed by all the parties and duly recorded; the same having been executed by the said company by their president and treasurer, and by the said four trustees, to wit: P. C. Calhoun, W. Butler Duncan, William Orton and M. F. Maury. And the said M. F. Maury, after the execution of the said mortgage, promptly proceeded to act as trustee under the same, and faithfully to discharge all his duties thereunder, until the further performance of his said duties was arrested and prevented by another deed of trust or mortgage bearing date the 15th day of January 1870, and duly recorded, which was executed as a substitute for the said mortgage of the 1st of October 1868. By the said

704 deed of the 15th day of January 1870, the said company *conveyed their said road and its appurtenances and franchises to two of the said four trustees only, to wit: William Butler Duncan and Philo C. Calhoun, in trust to secure a loan of fifteen millions of dollars, which the said company contemplated negotiating, for the purpose of completing the construction and equipment of their road as aforesaid.

The court is further of opinion, that although the said M. F. Maury might have been entitled under his first mentioned agreement with the said company to demand and have of them the sum of five thousand dollars, as his stipulated compensation for acting as trustee as aforesaid (though whether he would or not, is a question not necessary and not intended now to be decided), yet having accepted and executed the said deed of the 1st day of October 1868, he thereby, in effect, consented to accept one-fourth of the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, to wit: three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars in lieu and instead of the said sum of five thousand dollars as compensation for acting as trustee aforesaid, he having, prior to the execution of the said deed, been informed of the adoption by the board of the said resolution of the 30th day of September 1868, which expressly stated that the aggregate compensation to be paid to the four trustees in the deed should be fifteen thousand dollars, instead of the same sum being paid to three trustees, as was formerly expected; and he cannot therefore now claim the said sum of five thousand dollars, and cannot claim more than the said sum of three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars as such compensation.

The court is further of opinion: that the said M. F. Maury, or his personal representative, he being dead, is entitled to the said sum of three thousand seven and fifty dollars, with interest from the — day 705 of August *1870, the day on which this suit was commenced, as compensation aforesaid; and the circuit court erred in not rendering a decree for that sum and interest, instead of for the sum of one thousand dollars with interest from the 1st day of October 1868. No objection was made to the validity of the agreement, and no ground appears for any such objection. The occasion was a most important one. The purpose being to borrow ten millions of dollars for the completion of a railroad extending nearly through the center of the state, and to obtain the loan upon the security of a deed of trust on the road and its appurtenances. The loan was expected to be obtained partly in England and partly in the United States. It was all-important, therefore, that trustees should be selected for the execution of the trust of known good character in both countries. It was deemed advisable by the company that one of the trustees should reside in Virginia, where and in West Virginia, the road is located; and the rest in the city of New York, where it was supposed that the money, or most of it, might be obtained. Or at least it was no doubt supposed, that through the influence of commercial men residing in that city, the money, or most of it, could be obtained, there and elsewhere, at home and abroad. M. F. Maury was naturally selected by the company or its agents as the most suitable person to be selected as that one of the trustees who was to be a resident of Virginia. And he consented to act as such for the compensation which was offered him, to wit: five thousand dollars; which he afterwards, by implication as aforesaid, agreed to reduce to three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars. He did not seek the office, but was sought by those whose duty it was to make the selection. Nobody will doubt the 706 wisdom of the *selection under the circumstances. No person was more generally or more favorably known, at home or abroad, than M. F. Maury. And there was no person in existence residing in Virginia, if anywhere else, who was likely to be able to do more than he to further the object in view, which was to obtain a loan of ten millions of dollars on the security of the road. His fitness for the trust is not denied; nor his readiness at all times to perform its duties. He executed and acknowledged the deed, and thereby assumed its obligations. He promptly entered upon the duties of his office, and continued to perform them, and to do all that devolved upon him, or was required of him in that respect, until he was prevented from further action by the company; and he was superseded as trustee by the deed of the 15th day of January 1870, in which the said Duncan and Calhoun were alone named as trustees as aforesaid. This was done without the consent of M. F. Maury.

and so far as appears from the record, without even informing him of what was intended or desired by the company. They had a right to reduce the number of the trustees in the deed if they thought fit to do so; but they were bound to pay the stipulated compensation of the one who was removed if he was prompt and faithful in performing his duties, and capable of doing so—as he certainly was. What right had the company to discharge from the trust, without the stipulated compensation, the trustee residing in Virginia, any more than those residing in New York? The trustee residing in Virginia might, if he had been consulted on the subject, have consented to remit a portion of the stipulated compensation, and to retire from the trust. But he was not consulted on the subject. He was discharged from the trust, and then it

707 was proposed to compensate *him for what he had done upon the rule of a quantum meruit.

And it is argued that because Orton, whose name was first added to and then taken from the number of the trustees, accepted one thousand dollars in satisfaction of his claim to compensation, M. F. Maury should therefore accept a like amount in satisfaction of his. We cannot undertake in this case to say what were Orton's claims to compensation, nor whether he was reasonable or not in the settlement he made of them, nor to compare his claims with those of M. F. Maury. They may have been very different in merit and degree. We have now only to do with those of M. F. Maury. And the question is, had the company a right by their own ex parte act to discharge themselves from liability to him for his stipulated compensation as trustee, he being entirely without fault in the matter, and the occasion for the agency of trustees therein not having ceased? In other words, had the company a right, after having stipulated with three trustees for a certain compensation to each for their services, to relieve themselves from liability, in whole or in part, to one of them, by confining the residue of the trust to the other two, when there was no just cause of complaint against the third, and he had actually entered upon and discharged in part, and as far as he could, the duties of the trust? We know of no authority for any such right.

Beyond all question, the stipulated sum was not to be paid to the trustees for nothing, but as compensation for services; that is, for acting as trustees. Had they died without acting, or had all occasion for their acting ceased before any such action, then they would have had no claim to compensation; or had such death occurred, or such occasion ceased after partial and be-708 fore *complete action in the matter, then there would have been ground for claiming an apportionment of the compensation. But here the trustee, M. F. Maury, did not die without acting, or before complete action, and there was no just ground for an apportionment, at least without the consent of M. F. Maury, which was never given, nor indeed applied for, at least until after he was discharged from the trust as aforesaid.

The services for which the stipulated compensation was to be made to the trustees were services to be rendered in endeavoring to negotiate the desired loan of ten millions of dollars, and not services to be rendered in the event of a necessity for a sale of the trust subject to satisfy the loan in the event of its being made, and of default being made in the payment of the money and interest, or any part thereof. Compensation for any services which might be required of the trustees, in the event of any such default, was provided by law, and the terms of the deed, and was to consist of a commission upon the amount of any sales which might be made under the deed in case of any such default. No precise time was named in the agreement for the payment of the stipulated compensation. It was payable by implication, either at the date of the agreement, or in a reasonable time thereafter, or, at all events, so soon as the contemplated loan was obtained, or failed of being obtained without any default on the part of the trustees. If the contemplated loan was not obtained through the agency in part of M. F. Maury, the failure so to obtain it was not by means of any default on his part. He promptly executed the deed of trust, entered upon his duties as trustee, and performed them as far as he possibly could. Why then is he not entitled to the full amount which was stipulated to be paid to him? Upon 709 what principle can the just measure *of his compensation be reduced to less than one-third of the stipulated amount? Upon the principle of a quantum meruit? He did not contract to render his services upon that principle, but for a certain sum, as he had a right to do; and he has performed, and been ready, and offered to perform, his part of the contract fully. He did not warrant the success of his efforts, nor was his compensation to be conditional, or in proportion to such success, but it was to be an unconditional and certain sum. If that sum exceeds the actual value of his services to his employer, or appears to be a high compensation for the services actually rendered, or agreed to be rendered, still he is entitled to receive it, he being in no default in rendering them. His contract being unobjectionable, and he being in no default in regard to it, he is entitled to the full benefit of it according to its terms. It cannot be said that there was a failure of consideration in whole or in part. It does not appear, and is not probable, that M. F. Maury engaged, or could have engaged, in any other employment which afforded, or would have afforded, him any pecuniary benefit by reason of his not having to complete the execution of his duties as trustee, or, that if he had been permitted to complete the execution of those duties, he would thereby have been prevented from attending to any other business which he would have done if he had not been trustee. What reason then can there be for any abatement or apportionment of the stipulated compensation? and what rule can be adopted for such an apportionment? Who can value the character of the trustee and his peculiar qualifications which fitted him for the office, and recommended him to the choice of the parties who selected him for that office? How can we know to what extent his business and his plans of 710 life have been affected *by his acceptance of this office? He was willing to accept it for the consideration which was offered him. With what propriety can it be now said that one thousand dollars, instead of the sum offered, more than three times that amount, would be adequate compensation for the services engaged?

We deem it unnecessary to examine in detail the cases referred to in the argument of the learned counsel in the case, as the opinion we have delivered seems to be founded on well settled principles of law. There is nothing in conflict with it in the cases referred to in the notes to Cutter v. Powell, 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 6th American edition, p. 39 marg., 44 top, and 2 Rob. new Pr., p. 405; nor in any of the other cases referred to in the argument; as we think will appear by an examination of those cases.

We therefore think that the decree of the circuit court is erroneous, and ought to be reversed, and a decree rendered in conformity with the foregoing opinion.

The decree was as follows:

This day came again the parties by their counsel, and the court having maturely considered the transcript of the record of the decree aforesaid and the arguments of counsel, is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the appellant, M. F. Maury, is entitled to receive of the appellees, the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad company, the sum of three thousand, seven hundred and fifty dollars ($3,750.00), instead of the sum of one thousand dollars, as compensation for his services as trustee as mentioned in the bill; and that the circuit court erred in rendering

711 a decree for the latter sum and interest *as therein mentioned, instead of for the former sum with interest as hereinafter mentioned. Therefore, it is decreed and ordered that so much of the said decree of the said circuit court as is above declared to be erroneous, be reversed and annulled, and the residue thereof affirmed; and that the said appellant recover of the said appellees his costs by him expended in the prosecution of his appeal aforesaid here. And this court, proceeding to render such decree as ought to have been rendered by the said circuit court, in lieu of so much of the decree of said court as is reversed as aforesaid, it is further decreed and ordered, that the said appellant recover of the said appellees, the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad company, the said sum of three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per centum per annum from the first day of August 1870 (that being the day of the institution of this suit) till paid, and his costs by him about his suit in the said circuit court expended. And leave is given to sue out execution therefor; and if the said execution shall prove unavailing, then the court will proceed to enforce the payment of the sum of money and interest herein decreed, under the terms of the trust deed.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said circuit court of Rockbridge county.

And at another day, to wit: on the 2d day of October, 1876—The court is of opinion that the lien of the decree appealed from being the decree of the said court in this case, of the 24th day of April 1872, ought to be preserved by an affirmance of so much of the said decree as may be necessary for that purpose; and therefore it is decreed and ordered that the decree entered in this cause at the present term of the court, 712 to wit: on the 21st day of September 1876, be amended, *by making the following addition thereto, to have the same force and effect as if it had been inserted in the said last mentioned decree, viz: It is decreed and ordered that so much of the said decree appealed from as declares that it is "adjudged, ordered and decreed that the plaintiff receive of the said defendant, the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad company, the sum of one thousand dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per centum per annum from the first day of October 1868 till paid, and his costs about his suit in this behalf expended, and leave is given to sue out execution therefor; and if the said execution shall prove unavailing, then the court will proceed to enforce the payment of the sum herein decreed under the terms of the trust deed," be and the same is hereby affirmed; and that the amount of the said decree so affirmed, including interest to the first day of August 1870, and costs, be credited as of that day on the amount for which the said decree of this court was entered, which decree of this court is to remain and continue in full force for the recovery of the said amount, subject to the said credit; and leave is also given to sue out execution therefor; and if the said execution shall prove unavailing, then the court will also proceed to enforce the payment of the said amount subject to the said credit under the terms of the trust deed. But this court does not mean to decide in this cause that the amount due to the appellant, for which the said decree of the circuit court or this decree is rendered, is in fact provided for and secured by said deed of trust, that question not being before this court, and other persons than the parties to this suit being interested in the same. And it is decreed and ordered that the said former decree of this court be and the same is hereby so modified and altered as to 713 make it conform to and be *consistent with this decree, which is to be read and considered as a part thereof.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said circuit court of Rockbridge county, together with and as a part of the said decree of the 21st day of September 1876.

Decree reversed.

*Newman v. Newman.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

1. Joint Tenants—Share of Profits.—B and C are joint tenants of a furnace, forge, and a large quantity of land derived from their father, and B who had conducted the business for some years in the lifetime of his father, continues to carry it on with the assent of his sister C, without any contract with C. He must account to C for her share of the profits.
2. Same—Same—Accounts.—Though there were efforts between B and C to agree upon a rent which should be paid by B to C for her half of the property, and B seems to have thought that his proposition was acquiesced in, and did not keep such accounts as he should have kept to enable him to render the account of profits to her, yet C is entitled to have the account taken, and to have her share of the profits.
3. Same—Same—Compensation.—B having been allowed all his expenses in carrying on the business, including $1,500 a year for his services, and interest on his capital employed in it until it became self-sustaining, and then being allowed by the decree three-fifths of the net profits, he at least cannot complain of the decree.

Walter Newman, of Shenandoah county, died in November 1868. His will, which was made in June 1847, was admitted to probate in the county court of Shenandoah in March 1869, and his son, Benjamin P. Newman, qualified as his executor. By his will, after giving certain personal property and the income of one-third of his real estate to his wife for her life, he gave all the rest of his personal property, including all debts due to him, to his son Benjamin P. Newman, who was to pay his debts out of it, and he gave the third of his real estate to his said son, subject to his wife's interest for her life, and the other two-thirds to *his two daughters, Ann R. and Henrietta C. Newman; and he authorized his executor to sell all the real estate. At the time of his death his wife and his daughter Ann R. Newman were dead; so that his whole real estate became the property of his son Benjamin P. and his daughter Henrietta C. Newman.

The real estate of Walter Newman at his death consisted of a large quantity of land, on which were a furnace—called Liberty furnace, a forge, dwelling house and other buildings. For years before his death, his son Benjamin P. Newman had carried on the business of manufacturing iron at the furnace and forge; he being allowed all the profits after supporting the family. On the death of Walter Newman, Benjamin P. and Henrietta C. Newman appear to have wished to sell the property; but in order to keep the same in repair, it was agreed that Benjamin P. should carry on the business of manufacturing iron until a sale should be made; and he continued to carry it on until this suit was brought, in December 1873, by Henrietta C. Newman, for a settlement of his account and for a sale of the property. The only disputed question of importance in the cause, is whether Benjamin P. Newman carried on the business under a contract, by which he was to pay to Henrietta C. a certain agreed sum for the rent of her interest, or whether he should account for profits. In the bill the plaintiff claimed that Benjamin P. Newman had carried on the business without any express agreement, for the joint benefit of himself and the plaintiff, whilst in his answer he avers that he had rented her interest at the price of $200 a month whilst the furnace was in blast, and $100 a year for the other real estate. It is certain that the business was carried on at first upon his capital alone, and that Henrietta C. Newman did *not furnish any means for carrying it on; and it seems that his payments to her during the continuance of the business were upon the basis of the agreement stated in his answer. But it also appears, that he reduced the terms of this agreement, as he claimed it to be, to writing, which he presented to her to execute, and that she declined to execute it. And upon the whole evidence in the cause, this court is of opinion that no contract was proved. Such, too, was the opinion of the circuit court; and when the cause came on to be heard in that court, in April 1874, the following decree was made:

The court is of opinion that there was no contract of renting, express or implied by the complainant to the defendant of her undivided share of the iron property held by them jointly; and that the defendant has occupied and been engaged upon said property in the manufacture of iron through a period of near six years to the exclusion of his co-tenant, and received the rents, issues and profits thereof, and that he is liable to the complainant for receiving more than came to his joint share or proportion of said rents, issues and profits of said property.

And it appearing that whilst there was no contract of renting between these parties, there were negotiations between them with a view to such renting, which though not consummated, gave rise in the mind of the defendant, to the erroneous impression, that he was the tenant of his sister, the complainant, upon the terms stated by him in his answer and deposition, and that, in consequence of his misapprehension, the defendant kept no exact account of his receipts, disbursements or profits of said joint property, and that his failure to keep such accounts was in no sense willful; and it further *appearing that the complainant never offered or consented to become a partner in the manufacture of iron upon said property, the court is of opinion that a fair rent for said property is the best measure of the amount received by the defendant from said joint property over and above his just share thereof. It is therefore adjudged, ordered and decreed that this cause be referred to Phillip W. Magruder, a master commissioner of this court, who shall, after giving the parties to this suit ten days' notice by a personal service thereof, proceed to ascertain a fair rent for said property during the exclusive occupancy thereof by the defendant. And in ascertaining said rent the master commissioner shall act in the light of any and all competent evidence that may be produced before him, showing the character of said joint property and of the business of the manufacture of iron thereon, as to the profits or losses thereof up to the institution of this suit; and to this end the defendant may be recalled and re-examined at his own instance, or upon the summons of the complainant.

And inasmuch as the ore and wood taken from said property in the manufacture of iron are not of the annual products of said property, the master commissioner is directed to state an account of the quantities of wood and ore consumed during the occupancy of said property by the defendant, and the value thereof.

And the court being further of opinion from the evidence, that in the estimation and desire of the parties to this suit, from the date of their joint ownership, a sale of the property was the object of paramount importance, and that a working of said property to its utmost capacity might, and probably would, have been seriously detrimental to the prospects of a sale, and that the course of the defendant, in not 718 working said *property to its utmost extent, was judicious, directs that the commissioner shall limit any charge he may determine proper as rent to the time said furnace was actually in blast, and to such time as was necessary to prepare for said blast.

And the said commissioner is ordered to make report of his proceedings herein to this court.

And it appearing to the court that both parties desire a sale of the real estate in the bill mentioned, and partition of the proceeds of sale between them, it is adjudged, ordered and decreed that Giles Cook, Mark Bird, Moses Walton, and H. C. Allen, who are hereby appointed special commissioners for that purpose, do make sale of said real estate upon the following terms: one-fourth of the purchase money to be paid at the time of the confirmation of the sale by the court, and the residue in three equal instalments, at one, two and three years respectively, from the date of the confirmation of sale, and bearing interest from that date, and to be secured by a deed of trust or other lien upon the property, and such other additional security as the said special commissioners may deem judicious and proper, subject to the approval of the court. The said sale to be made at public auction after reasonable advertisement of the time and place of sale, or the said special commissioners may make a private sale of the said property if in their judgment it will be for the interest of both parties to do so;

and they shall make report of their proceedings to the court. But before collecting the purchase money, or any part thereof, the said special commissioners, or such of them as shall collect the same, shall execute a bond, and file it in the papers of this suit, with good security, in a penalty of double the sum to be received, with condition according to law.

719. *And it being alleged by the defendant, that since he and the plaintiff became the joint owners of the said real estate he has paid the taxes and made permanent improvements thereon at his own expense, it is ordered and decreed that said commissioner in chancery of this court do take an account of the taxes so paid, and of any permanent improvements on the said real estate made by the defendant, showing the nature and description of the said improvements, and the costs of making the same, and make a report thereof to the court, stating such matters as he may deem pertinent, or which either party may require to be specially stated.

The real estate was sold by the commissioners and purchased by Henrietta C. Newman, at the price of $64,800. But no question is made in relation to the said sale, and it will not be further mentioned.

The commissioner directed to take the accounts returned his report, in which he made various statements,—showing in No. 1, the number of blasts, the length of each blast, and the amount of metal made at Liberty furnace from September 1, 1868, to May 1874—forty-four months, fifteen days, twenty-two hours, 4,162 tons of metal: No. 2, showing the number of tons of metal sold, and also the amount unaccounted for from September 1868 to May 1874—whole amount made 4,162 tons, lost fifty-seven tons; No. 3, showing the amount received for metal sold between same dates—sales $209,002.40, at the average price of $52.58 per ton; No. 4, showing the number of cords of wood and tons of ore consumed from Liberty furnace lands in same time—of wood value $1,418.62½, of ore value $6,243.00; No. 5, taxes paid by Benjamin P. Newman in same time, $1,013.87; No. 6, permanent improvements made by B. P. Newman.

720 $7,006; *No. 7, showing expenses in running Liberty furnace, $179,579.75: No. 8, B. P. Newman in account with B. P. and H. C. Newman. This gives alternate statements: the first makes the half of the profits due H. C. Newman $33,722.44, and after deducting payments made to her of $8,506.49, and adding two years interest on balance, made the amount due to her $28,241.85. The second, deducting payments and adding interest, as before, made due to her $21,549.68. There were other statements which it is not necessary to give. Both plaintiff and defendant excepted to the report; and the defendant excepted especially because the commissioner had not, as directed by the decree, ascertained a fair rent for the property.

The cause came on to be heard on the 17th of December 1874, when the court made first a statement A of the metal sold, excluding so much as had been lost, fifty-six tons, and that still on hand four hundred and fifty-nine and a half tons, and charging B. P. Newman with the proceeds of three thousand six hundred and forty-six and a half tons, at $191,732.97, and crediting him with expenses, $145,451.66, and also bad debts, $3,230, made a balance to be divided between the two of $43,051.31. Of this sum H. C. Newman is allowed $17,220.45, or two-fifths thereof; and on this last sum is credited the amount of payments made by B. C. Newman to the plaintiff of $8,506.49, leaving due to her $8,714.03. By statement B, Benjamin P. Newman is charged with the three thousand six hundred and forty-six and a half tons of metal, at $4.73% rent per ton, and crediting him with the payments made to H. C. Newman at the end of each year, the balance due her is ascertained to be $8,714.03. And the court sustaining the exceptions to the report, so far as it was 721 consistent with the decree and the said statements, *and sustaining it so far as it was consistent with the same, decreed that Henrietta C. Newman recover from the defendant, Benjamin P. Newman, the said sum of $8,714.03, with interest on the balances due at the end of each year from that date. And it appearing there was still on hand unsold of pig iron four hundred and forty-seven and a half tons, and four hundred and seventy pounds in the county of Shenandoah, and that twenty thousand pounds of blooms had been sent to a firm in Baltimore, for which there had been no return, it was decreed that the defendant render an account of the sales of said blooms when made; and the pig iron was directed to be divided on the basis of the decree, giving to the defendant three-fifths, and to the complainants two-fifths of the same. And the costs were to be paid equally by the parties. From this decree Benjamin P. Newman applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Walton and Cook, for the appellant.

H. C. Allen, for the appellee.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion that the contract alleged in the answer of the appellant, Benjamin P. Newman, to have been made between him and his sister, the appellee, Henrietta C. Newman, that the former should use and occupy certain real estate in the county of Shenandoah, owned by them as joint tenants, derived by them as such from their father, Walter Newman, under his will, on which estate are located a furnace, called "Liberty Furnace," a forge, dwelling house, and other buildings, in consideration of a certain rent to be paid to her for her undivided interest in the 722 said estate and *its appurtenances until the same should be sold (as was intended to be done by the parties), was never in fact made by the parties; but the said Benjamin P. Newman, who had used and occupied the said property before and until the time of his father's death, under an arrangement with him, continued to use and occupy it after his death, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the said Henrietta C. Newman, and with an understanding between her and her brother, the said Benjamin P. Newman, that he would duly account to her for the use and occupation of her interest in the said property; and although it was expected and intended by them to agree together upon the terms of such accounting; and although efforts were used by and between them for that purpose, yet those efforts were wholly unsuccessful, and no such agreement ever was made.

The court is further of opinion that no such agreement having ever been made, the said Benjamin P. Newman was bound to account with his sister, the said Henrietta C. Newman, for her interest in the said property, while he occupied the same, after their father's death, on such terms as may be prescribed by law in the case of the absence of such an agreement. And the court is of opinion that the principle which applies to this case is that of the case of Graham &c. v. Pierce, 19 Gratt. 28, and not that of the case of Early & wife v. Friend &c., 16 Gratt. 21. In the latter case, it was held to be a general rule, that where a tenant in common uses the common property to the exclusion of his co-tenants, or occupies and uses more than his just share and proportion, the best measure of his accountability to his co-tenants is their shares of a fair rent of the property so occupied and used by him. And although it was said in that case "that there may be peculiar 723 *circumstances in a case making it proper to resort to an account of issues, profits, &c., as a mode of adjustment between the tenants in common," yet it was further said that such case would be an exception to the general rule; and it was held that Early & wife v. Friend &c., came within the general rule, and not within the exception. On the other hand, it was held in Graham &c. v. Pierce, supra, that that case came within the exception and not the general rule. "Under the circumstances of this case," said the court, "it was proper to resort to an account of issues, profits, &c., as a mode of adjustment between the tenants in common. It is not a case of land used for agricultural purposes only, in which there is no difficulty in ascertaining a fair rent for use and occupation; nor is it such a case as that of Early & wife v. Friend &c., where the property consisted of salt works, the yearly value of which might be ascertained with reasonable certainty, and where a money rent had been contracted for, and paid to some of the tenants in common, which furnished a standard for ascertaining the amount due to others; but it is the case of a lead mine, the yearly value of which, and more especially of an undivided and uncertain portion of which is incapable of ascertainment." "The best mode of settling such an account, and one which is perfectly just, supposing the tenant to have been capable and faithful, is to charge him with all his receipts, and credit him with all his expenses on account of the operation of the mine." Id., 19 Gratt. 28, 39. That was the case of a lead mine, while this is the case of an iron mine; and there seems to be no difference in principle between them on the subject we are now considering. A tenant of such property necessarily uses a part of the subject itself, and may by such uses render the 724 residue of the subject *of little or no value. It may be discovered by explorations and operations that the property is of great value, or the contrary. To rent it for a certain sum, is to make a bargain of speculation and hazard, which is always objectionable in such cases, as it is almost sure to operate unequally on the parties. Whereas to carry on operations upon it for the joint and equal benefit of all the owners in proportion to their respective interests in the subject, and by the agency of persons (whether they have an interest therein or not) who may be amply compensated for their trouble, complete justice will be done to all parties concerned. It may be said that to carry on the business required a capital, which one of the parties did not have. But that matter may be adjusted by allowing interest to the party who advances the capital. In this case the property was of known and established value, and there would probably have been no difficulty in finding a suitable agent and borrowing the necessary capital to carry on the operations, even if both had not been readily furnished by one of the parties. But that party had long and successfully conducted the business, and had become joint and equal owner of the property with the other party. It was his manifest interest to continue to use and occupy it, and carry on the business until a sale of the property could be effected to advantage, which was desired by both parties, he being of course entitled to ample compensation for his services as superintendent, and for the use of his capital employed in the business. Accordingly he did so continue, without having made any contract with his co-tenant as to the terms of such use and occupation. Those terms are therefore prescribed by law, and by the principle of the case of Graham &c. v. Pierce, before cited.

The court is further of opinion that 725 the said Benjamin *P. Newman being bound to account to the said Henrietta C. Newman for her share of the issues and profits of the said property while the same remained in his possession as joint tenant as aforesaid, and knowing that he would or might be so accountable, as he had made no contract with her for settling on any other terms, it was his duty to keep proper accounts, and to be at all times ready to make such a settlement; and whatever difficulty may have occurred in making such a settlement, has arisen from his neglect of his said duty to keep proper accounts as aforesaid.

The court is further of opinion that the appellee was entitled to have the said account of issues and profits settled as correctly as it might be under the circumstances of the case, and that such a settlement has been made accordingly by the decree of the court below; that in said settlement, every credit which seems to be just has been allowed to him, including an allowance of fifteen hundred dollars per annum for his services as superintendent of the said property during a period of six years and four and a half months, while the blasts in the furnace on the said property, while under the charge of said superintendent, were in operation during periods amounting in all to only about forty-four months and a half; and including also an allowance for the use of his capital for two years, and until it appears that the business had become self-sustaining; and that if he is really entitled to any more credits than have been allowed him, they are more than covered by the deduction of one-fifth of a moiety of the said issues and profits which was made from the same before a decree was rendered in her favor for the balance of said moiety by the court below.

The court is therefore of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the 726 court below, at least to the *prejudice of the appellant, and that the said decree ought to be affirmed.

In concluding our opinion in this controversy between a brother and sister, we deem it an act of justice to both parties to say—which we do with a great deal of pleasure—that after a full consideration of the long record in the case, we are satisfied that they have been perfectly conscientious in their dealings with and claims against each other, and desired to have and receive nothing more than they considered themselves to be justly entitled to. Whatever errors there may have been on either side have been errors of judgment and not of the heart.

Decree affirmed.

727 *Thurmond v. Woods' Ex'or.

September Term, 1876. Staunton.

Deeds of Trust.—In August 1858 B conveyed to T land and slaves, in trust to secure a debt due by two bonds to R. The land was the land of B's wife S, and he had but a life estate in it; and in September 1858 B and wife conveyed the land to T in trust that B and wife should hold the land until the personal property conveyed by the first deed was sold to satisfy the debt; and if the sale of that property should not raise a sufficient sum to pay the debt, then T, upon the request of R or his assigns, should sell, &c. R transferred the debt to M, and, on the request of M, T advertised the sale of the slaves and land to be made in February 1860. On the day of the sale, T, on the request of B and his wife S, induced W, the uncle of S, to pay the debt; and T gave him a receipt, in which he stated that on receipt of the money M would assign the debts and deeds of trust to W. B died in 1862, and W died in 1860, having the bonds and deeds of trust in his possession, but not having obtained the assignment from M. His executor, G, afterwards obtained it, and on his request T sold the land, the slaves having been freed by the results of the war. Held:

1. Same—Sale under.—By the assignment, G, the executor of W, had the right to require that the trust should be enforced by a sale of the property.
2. Same—Same.—The land is liable for the debt, though the slaves had been freed, and therefore could not be first sold.
3. Same—Same.—The failure to sell the slaves having been at the request and for the benefit of S, she cannot set up the loss of the slaves as security for the debt, to prevent the sale of the land.
4. Same—Sureties.—As against the creditor of B, S cannot be regarded as the surety of her husband, or as a mere guarantor for the payment of the debt; and as against the creditor she can claim none of the rights of mere surety or guarantor.
5. Same.—The proofs in the cause do not show that W paid the debt intending to secure the property for S and her child.

728 *By deed bearing date the 23rd day of August 1858, Maurice A. Brown conveyed to Thomas H. Tutwiler two tracts of land lying in the county of Nelson, and eight slaves, in trust, to secure the payment of $6,600, due by two bonds payable on demand to Robert Richardson. In September 1858, Brown, and Sarah, his wife, conveyed the same lands to Tutwiler to secure the same debt. These lands were in fact the property of the wife, and Brown had but a life estate in them; and the second deed was upon the trust that Brown and wife should hold the lands until all the personal property conveyed by the first deed was sold to satisfy the debt; and that if the sale of the personal property conveyed in the first deed should not raise a sufficient sum to pay the debt, then Tutwiler, upon the request of Richardson, or his assignee, in writing, should sell, &c.

Richardson transferred the two bonds secured by the said deeds to S. O. Moon; and Brown having sold three of the slaves, and paid $4,000 of the debt, by the direction of Moon, Tutwiler advertised the sale of the slaves and the land, to be sold on the 19th of December 1859, and at the request of the parties postponed the sale until the 20th of February 1860.

On the day fixed for the sale of the slaves and land, at the request of Brown and his wife, Tutwiler urged Mr. James Woods, the uncle of Mrs. Brown, a man of wealth, and without wife or children, to pay the debt, and take an assignment of the bonds and deeds of trust. This Woods refused at first to do; but upon the assurance of Tutwiler that Moon would make the assignment, he consented to do it, and gave to Tutwiler a draft for the amount, including the trustee's commission and expenses, and received from him a receipt for the draft, which

729 when paid was to be payment *in full for transfer and assignment of the two bonds executed by Brown to Richardson, and by him assigned to Moon; the balance due on them being $3,335.40; and as soon as said draft was paid Moon was to assign the said bonds, and the deeds to secure them, to the said James Woods, but without any recourse whatever against him.

Maurice Brown died insolvent in May 1862; and in February 1863 Mrs. Brown married Elisha G. Thurmond; and previous to the marriage she conveyed her property in trust for her separate use.

James Woods lived until 1869, and then died, having the bonds and deeds of trust in his possession; but not having obtained an assignment of them from Moon. In 1870 Garrett W. Martin, his executor, obtained from Moon the assignment of them to himself, as executor of Woods; and in October 1873, at his instance, the trustee, Tutwiler, sold the land conveyed by the deeds, for the purpose of discharging this debt.

In December 1873, Mrs. Thurmond, suing by her next friend, instituted her suit in equity in the circuit court of Nelson county against James Woods' executor, Tutwiler, Bryant, the purchaser of the land, Moon's executor and others, for the purpose of vacating the sale of the land, and having the assignment vacated and the debts declared satisfied. She insisted, first, that Woods paid the debt to Moon for the purpose of relieving her land for the benefit of herself and her children, and it was never his purpose to enforce the trust; second, that her land was by the terms of the second deed only to be sold after the slaves had been sold, and had proved insufficient to pay the debt; that she and her land stood only in the position of a surety or guarantor of the debt, and Woods having permitted the slaves to be lost to the trust by their 730 *emancipation, he had lost his remedy against her land.

Woods' executor answered, denying that Woods intended by paying the debt, to release it or settle it upon the plaintiff; and he insisted that he had postponed the enforcement of the trust upon the slaves for her benefit and with her concurrence.

A number of witnesses were examined by both the plaintiff and the defendants, and the evidence appears sufficiently from the opinion of the court. And the cause came on to be heard upon the 19th of December 1874, when the court held, that the land was subject to pay the debts to secure which it had been conveyed in trust; but not for the trustee's commissions on a sale which he did not make. The bill was therefore dismissed so far as it sought to cancel said deeds and set aside the sale to Bryant; but there was a decree against Bryant for the balance of the purchase money after satisfying Woods' estate the amount he had paid to Tutwiler, the trustee, after deducting the commissions, with interest from the date of payment. And thereupon Mrs. Thurmond applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Whitehead, for the appellant.

Wm. J. Robertson and Southall, for the appellees.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion that the contract of assignment made between Thomas H. Tutwiler, trustee, and James Woods in his lifetime, and the more formal assignment of O. S. Moon, after the death of James Woods, to Garrett W. Martin, his executor, transferring to him certain bonds executed by M. A. Brown *and his interest in two deeds of trust securing the payment of said bond, conferred upon the executor, Garrett W. Martin, the right to require of the trustee an execution of the trust, by making sale of the real estate conveyed by said deed of the — day of September 1858.

The court is further of opinion, that the loss of the slaves by the emancipation by the government of the United States, ought not to fall upon the estate of the said James Woods. The security for the said debt was both the land conveyed by said deed and the slaves conveyed by the deed of August 1858. The provisions of the deed of September 1858, requiring the personal estate conveyed by the deed of August 1858 to be sold, and the proceeds to be applied before the real estate should be offered for sale, was not a stipulation that the land should in no event be sold until the slaves had first been disposed of. Such a construction would be to hold that if the slaves had died or had run away, or been sold by the grantor in whose possession they were left, the real estate could never be sold and the trust never executed. The loss of the slaves by emancipation is precisely the same thing to the creditor as their loss by death. It must fall on the grantor, in whose possession they became free, and not on the creditor. They were in part, and in part only, security for the debt, and as such security they have perished. But the debt remains unextinguished, and the land remains as security for its payment. The provision of the deed relied upon is not a stipulation that binds the trustee at all events to sell the personal property before he could sell the land; but the plain meaning of the provision is that whenever the trust was executed (which by the terms of the deed was to be done on the written request of the creditor or his *assignee), then the trustee should sell the personal estate first, that is, the personal estate in existence at the time of the sale. If, when the trustee proceeded to execute the trust, he found the slaves were dead, or had run away, or had been sold by the grantor, or had been emancipated by the government, he could not of course execute the trust as to them; because it was simply impossible.

But this impossibility of selling the slaves certainly does not interpose any reason why the land should not be sold, because the deed required him to sell the slaves before he should sell the land. This would be to declare in effect that the slaves alone were pledged as security for the debt, when by the solemn deed of the parties the land is also dedicated to its payment. The very object of giving the second deed was to give a better security for the debt than the property conveyed in the first deed, which only conveyed the slaves and the life estate of Brown in the land. It is manifest that it was the dissatisfaction of the debtor with the security of the first deed that prompted the execution of the second. The construction insisted upon by the appellant's counsel would defeat the manifest intention of the parties.

The court is further of opinion that the loss of the slaves, as a part of the security, was not occasioned by the postponement of the sale by the trustee. The sale advertised to take place on the 20th February 1860 was not prevented by any action of the creditor or of his assignee, but was postponed on account of the action of the appellant herself. It was done at her earnest and persistent request. It was done in her interest and for her benefit.

The trustee was present to make the sale at the time duly advertised. A crowd was then present, drawn *to the sale by the advertisement. The slaves were then present, and they were then slaves. They would undoubtedly then have been sold but for the earnest and active interference of the appellant and friends interceding in her interest.

She was greatly and naturally distressed that the debt had not been paid, and that the property must be sold. She made earnest and tearful appeals to her uncle, the appellee's testator, to prevent the sale. He yielded to those appeals, and paid the debt secured by the deed, and thus the sale was prevented. The appellant ought not now to allege in a court of equity that the loss of the slaves was caused by a postponement of the sale, and that this loss should fall upon the estate of her uncle, who yielded to her earnest solicitation, and in her interest and for her benefit put an end to the sale. Nor should his failure to order an execution of the trust deed before his death, and before the emancipation of the slaves, now be urged as a reason why his estate should lose this debt so justly due him. Surely his benevolence to her, and his indulgence to her husband for many years, ought not to avail as a reason for casting the loss of the slaves upon his estate.

The court is further of opinion that there is no sufficient proof in the cause to show that James Woods, the uncle of the appellant, had ever made to her a gift of this debt due from her husband, or that he ever promised, with or without any consideration, that the trust created by the deeds, which were assigned to him with the debt, should never be executed. On the contrary, the court is of opinion that it is clearly proved that Woods did not voluntarily and without solicitation pay this debt, but that he hesitated long before he agreed to do so; at first positively refused, *and did not consent to do so until it was stipulated that the creditor should assign and transfer to him both the bond and the deed securing it. It was only upon this express condition, stated in writing in the body of the receipt for the money paid to the trustee, that he consented to take the place of the creditor and to stop the sale of the property. This paper was carefully filed away among his papers, and passed into the hands of his executor upon his death, who obtained from Moon, the creditor, a more formal assignment. Whatever may have been his intention at the time he paid the debt, with reference to settling this property upon his niece, that intention was never carried out. And at his death this debt with its securities was part of his estate, which, upon his death, passed to his executor; and it was the duty of that executor to collect the debt by enforcing the execution of the trust.

The court is further of opinion that in this controversy between her and the creditors of her husband the appellant cannot be regarded as the surety of her husband, or as a mere guarantor for the payment of the debt; and that as against them she can claim none of the rights of mere surety or guarantor. She united with her husband in conveying her land to a trustee for the payment of this debt. The deed was executed in the mode prescribed by the statute. There is no pretence that any fraud was practiced upon her, or that she did not know her rights, and fully understand the consequences of her act and deed.

The deed must now be held to be what it purports to be, and what the parties intended it to be, and the trust must be enforced as the terms of the deed and the law require.

Decree affirmed.

*Gage v. Crockett.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

Court of Appeals—Jurisdictional Amount.*—To give the court of appeals jurisdiction of a cause, except in certain cases specified, the judgment or decree must amount to $500, principal and interest, at the date of the judgment or decree, except where the claim of the plaintiff is more than that amount, and he applies for the appeal.

This case was argued at Wytheville, but was decided at Staunton. It was a case in which S. S. Crockett recovered a judgment in the circuit court of Wythe county against Aaron D. Gage, garnishee of Edward Shelley, on the 22d of September 1875, for an amount, principal and interest at the date of the judgment, a little less than $500; but when the supersedeas was applied for and obtained by Gage, it amounted to more than that sum. The appellee, Crockett, moved the court to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the matter in controversy was not sufficient to give this court jurisdiction.

Bolling, for the motion.

Gilmore, against the motion.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

At the time the judgment was recovered against the appellant in the court below it amounted to a fraction less than five hundred dollars. When, however, the appeal was applied for and obtained, the amount due, *including principal and interest, exceeded that sum.

The question is, whether this court has jurisdiction. In considering applications for appeals and writs of error, this court has uniformly acted upon the idea that the date of the judgment or decree is to be looked to in order to determine the amount in controversy. The learned counsel insists that this practice is erroneous, that in ascertaining the amount in controversy reference should be had to the date of the appeal, so that if the sum then due, including principal and interest, is five hundred dollars or upwards, this court has jurisdiction, although the judgment was in fact rendered for a less sum.

We have given the subject a careful consideration, and we see no reason for any change in the rule adopted by the court. The constitution declares that the supreme court shall not have jurisdiction in civil cases where the matter in controversy, exclusive of costs, is less in value or amount than five hundred dollars, except in certain enumerated cases not necessary now to mention. What then is the construction to be placed upon this provision? Does it refer to the matter in controversy in this court or in the lower court?

According to the decisions of the supreme court of the United States, in order to determine "the matter in controversy," recurrence must be had to the subject for which the suit is brought, and on which issue is joined. Where the plaintiff sues for money, and claims in his declaration more than two thousand dollars, but by the ruling of the court obtains a judgment for less, he is entitled to an appeal, because as to him the matter in controversy is the sum claimed, and upon a new trial he may obtain a recovery for that sum or more.

But if the plaintiff is satisfied with a judgment for *less than two thousand dollars, the defendant cannot appeal, because as to him the only matter in controversy is the judgment, and that being for a less sum than two thousand dollars, the jurisdiction of the court does not attach. While, therefore, the amount actually in controversy is the criterion of jurisdiction in all cases, so far as the defendant is concerned, the sum for which the judgment was rendered at its date is alone looked to in order to determine the amount or subject matter. This is the well settled doctrine of the supreme court of the United States. 1 Brightley's Digest, page 288, note.

This court has uniformly adopted substantially the same rule. It also looks to the amount actually in dispute between the parties. If the plaintiff claims in his declaration or bill money or property of greater value than five hundred dollars, he is entitled to his appeal or writ of error, although the judgment may be for less. On the other hand, the defendant in the very same case is denied an appeal for the reason already given, and that is, the plaintiff being satisfied, the only matter of controversy is the judgment, which being for less than five hundred dollars, there is no ground for the jurisdiction of this court.

The learned counsel argues that an affirmance by the supreme court of the United States does not change the judgment or decree appealed from, whereas an affirmance by this court has that effect; and he argues, the rule in regard to appeals ought therefore to be different. Upon an affirmance by the supreme court of the United States, interest is calculated from the date of the judgment below till paid, at the same rate that similar judgments bear interest in the courts of the state where the judgment is rendered.

When the writ of error is sued out merely for delay, damages at <sup>738</sup>the rate of ten per centum are awarded on the judgment from its date. Upon an affirmance by this court, interest is computed upon the whole amount of the recovery, including interest and costs. In both courts interest is given by way of compensation for the delay occasioned by the appeal. In neither court is any change effected by an affirmance of the judgment.

In the courts of this state judgments (as also decrees) usually bear interest from their date. But it has never been supposed that the defendant by his own default in paying the judgment could obtain for himself a right of appeal, which he did not possess, without such default. According to the rule insisted on by the learned counsel, the defendant has only to postpone his application for an appeal until the accumulation of interest is sufficient to give the jurisdiction. The plaintiff may do the same thing. If his claim is for less than five hundred dollars, and there is a judgment against him, he can also delay his appeal until the necessary amount is obtained, and thus by his delay confer upon this court cognizance of a case it did not have when the erroneous decision was made. The jurisdiction of this court ought to be governed by certain fixed rules and principles of law, and not made to depend upon the pleasure or caprice of parties. In ascertaining the amount in controversy therefore within the meaning of the constitution, recurrence must be had to the date of the judgment below, and not to the sum due at some subsequent period by the accumulation of interest. For these reasons the appeal must be dismissed, as improvidently allowed.

The judgment was as follows:

This cause, which is pending in this <sup>739</sup> court at its *place of session at Wytheville, having been partly heard but not determined at said place of session, this day came here the parties by their counsel, and the court having maturely considered the transcript of the record of the judgment aforesaid, and the arguments of counsel, is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the amount of the judgment at its date being under $500, this court has no jurisdiction. It is therefore considered that the supersedeas aforesaid be dismissed as improvidently awarded, and the defendant in error recover against the plaintiff in error his costs by him about his defense in this behalf expended. And it is further ordered that this judgment be entered on the order book here, and forthwith certified to the clerk of the court where the cause is pending, who shall enter the same on his order book, and certify it to the said circuit court of Wythe county.

Appeal dismissed.

740 *Clevinger & als. v. Miller.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

Subrogation—Officer Paying Execution in His Hands for Collection.*—A sheriff or other officer who pays an execution in his hands for collection, without an assignment at the time, of the judgment on which it is founded or the debt, is not entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the creditor whose debt he has paid, as against other creditors having liens by judgment or otherwise.

Quinn & Ritter filed their bill in the circuit court of Frederick county, claiming to be creditors by judgment of Harrison Bowers, and seeking to subject his estate real and personal to satisfy their debt. They stated that there were liens by deed upon the land and also judgments which were liens upon it. A commissioner was directed to take an account of the liens upon the land of Bowers; and he made a report in April 1873. The report showed that the debts exceeded the estimated value of the property; but it is only necessary to refer to one matter. It appears from the report, that of the executions against Bowers that went into the hands of L. A. Miller, either as sheriff or deputy sheriff, five, amounting principal and interest to upwards of $1,700, were paid by him to the plaintiffs or their attorney; he not returning the executions satisfied, but holding the judgments as his own, though without assignment, and without request from Bowers to pay them. One judgment in favor of Y. P. Watkins, was assigned by Watkins to J. G. Miller, who had paid the execution. The commissioner 741 reported these judgments as subsisting liens upon the lands of *Bowers; and A. Clevinger, J. F. Keckley and the National Bank of Martinsburg being creditors of Bowers by subsequent deeds of trust, excepted to the report in this respect.

The cause came on to be heard on the 13th of November 1874, when the court overruled this and all other exceptions to the report, and made a decree directing the debts reported by the commissioner to be paid according to their priorities. And thereupon Clevinger and Keckley applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Barton and Boyd, for the appellants.

Parker, for the appellee.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

At common law payment utterly extinguishes the debt and every security given for it. A surety who makes such payment becomes thereby only a simple contract creditor of the principal debtor. Courts of equity, however, interpose to keep alive the debt for the benefit of the surety. In these courts he is subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the creditor, and entitled to enforce all his liens, priorities and means of payment. The doctrine of subrogation does not stand upon contract, express or implied, but upon principles of natural justice. As it is purely a creature of equity it is only enforced in those cases where its application is just, and sanctioned by the obligations of good faith and sound policy. 1 Lead. Cases in Equity 88.

And further, it is only enforced in behalf of sureties and others who are required to pay in order to protect *their 742 own interests, and never in favor of mere volunteers. In the Bank of the United States v. Winston, 2 Brock. R. 254, Judge Marshall said, "there was no case in which the doctrine of subrogation has been enforced in favor of one not bound by the original contract who discharged it as a volunteer. He would not say it might not be done; but if it may, equity will consider all the circumstances and impose equitable terms."

We are now to consider whether consistently with these principles a sheriff having executions in his hands and paying them to the creditor is entitled, without an assignment of the debt, to be subrogated to the lien of such creditor upon the real estate of the debtor, as against other subsequent judgment creditors. The question is one of the first impression in this state. It has never been passed upon by this court, and the books show but few cases upon the subject in other states. It must therefore be determined exclusively upon principle.

In the first place, it is the duty of a sheriff having an execution in his hands, to collect the money, or to levy and sell, and pay the proceeds into court or to the plaintiff; and further, to make prompt return of the execution. If the defendant has no effects upon which a levy can be made, the officer should return the process with a statement of the facts. This is the precept of the writ, and the command of the law. If the sheriff fails to levy in a proper case, or having levied, fails to sell without a sufficient cause, he is liable to a fine, and to make good to the creditor the amount of the debt. This liability, however, does not arise out of any supposed relation of principal and surety between the sheriff and the debtor in the execution.

It is the mere consequence of official 743 misconduct. *It is the penalty imposed by the law for a plain breach of duty.

It has been held in a number of cases, that an officer charged with the collection of moneys due individuals or the government, who pays the taxes or debt of another person, cannot maintain an action to recover the same in the absence of a prior request or a subsequent promise. Kidder v. Townsend, 3 John. R. 430; Beach v. Vandenburg, 10 John. R. 369; Overseers of Wallkill v. Overseers of Manmakating, 14 John. R. 87.

In Lipscomb's adm'r v. Winston, adm'r of Littlepage, 1 Hen. & Mun. 453, this court held, that a sheriff having indulged a man for his taxes, on paying the same into the treasury in his behalf, might recover the amount with interest; but this was upon an express promise of indemnity. This decision was made by two judges in a court of three; and not without a vehement protest from Judge Tucker, who declared that a contract more flagrantly in maleficio never was brought to the view of the court.

It is very clear, that if the sheriff stands in the relation of surety to the delinquent debtor, it is perfectly competent for him to pay the money to the creditor, and without a prior request or subsequent promise, to maintain an action against the person for whom the payment is made. A surety may, at any time, voluntarily pay the debt after it is due; and he is at once entitled to his action. These considerations are sufficient to show the wide distinction between one who assumes a liability for another by contract, and him whose liability flows from a breach of official duty.

It has already been seen that the failure to levy and sell in a proper case is a violation of the official bond, as well as of the precept of writ. It is a wrong to the plaintiff in the execution, to other creditors of 744 *the debtor, and to the public who are interested in the just and proper discharge of official trusts. Such indulgence to the debtor is often not only an injury to him and his creditors, but its tendency is to involve the sureties of the sheriff in expensive and sometimes ruinous litigation. It leads to the diversion of funds in the hands of the officer from their proper destination, for the purpose of dispensing favors and indulgencies to those whom he desires to befriend or conciliate.

Whilst the debtor's property is ostensibly subject to the lien of the execution held by the sheriff, it is permitted to remain in the possession of the debtor, subject to his control, and thus effectually protected against the claims of other creditors. When the debtor's personal effects are properly applied to the satisfaction of the older judgments, the subsequent judgment creditor may successfully assert his lien upon the land. But if the debtor is permitted through the indulgence or the connivance of the sheriff, to consume or dispose of his goods and chattels, and the sheriff is then allowed to stand in the shoes of the prior creditor and enforce his liens upon the land, it is obvious that in a large majority of cases the junior creditor will be the sufferer.

When an execution is satisfied, it is the duty of the officer to make return according to the fact. Parties dealing with the debtor upon the faith of such return, may justly conclude that the lien of the judgment and execution has been fully discharged. To permit the sheriff at any future period to enforce such lien in the face of his own return, against other creditors, is to encourage official delinquency by according to it a superior equity.

Such are but a small part of the evils resulting from the doctrine of subrogation when applied to sheriffs and other officers charged with the collection of debts. So far as my investigation has extended, it has met with but little favor by the courts. In The People v. Onondaga, 19 Wend. R. 79, the sheriff levied upon personal property sufficient to satisfy the execution, but left it in the possession of the defendant. The latter having eluded the property, the sheriff was compelled to pay the debt. He thereupon procured an assignment of the judgment. The supreme court of New York was of opinion that the sheriff was entitled to be subrogated in the place of the creditor as against the debtor, but not as against purchasers of his real estate on subsequent judgments and executions. (It seems that these creditors were the purchasers at the sales made for their benefit.) The court says that although the debtor subtracted the property before the subsequent judgment creditors got their judgments, the levy by the sheriff might well have induced them to suppose the first judgment was satisfied, and led them on in their own suits to expense and trouble. All this was very likely in consequence of the neglect of Luther the sheriff."

It will be perceived that the supreme court of New York denied to the sheriff the right of subrogation as against creditors and purchasers, although he had obtained an assignment of the judgment. Without controverting the justice of this decision in the particular case, it would seem very clear that the sheriff by obtaining from the creditor an assignment of his judgment, would necessarily be entitled, as assignee, to all his liens and priorities. The sheriff has the same right of purchasing the debt that others have; and such purchase necessarily carries with it all the remedies for its enforcement to which the assignor was entitled. When, therefore, the officer becomes assignee of the judgment, and makes a true and perfect return of the execution, he is entitled to the lien, and no injustice is done to creditors or purchasers.

The learned counsel for the appellee concedes, that where the sheriff is compelled to satisfy the debt in consequence of his own default in levying and selling, he cannot maintain an action for the recovery of the money; nor is he entitled to a right of subrogation. He insists, however, that in this case there was no such default, because the debtor owned no personal property out of which the executions could have been made. If such was the fact—if the debtor had no effects upon which a levy could be made, it was the officer's duty to return the executions. He was certainly under no obligation to pay them. It is incredible that a sheriff under such circumstances, would voluntarily assume the payment of debts to the amount of a thousand dollars or more, for which he was in no manner liable. The just inference is, that he made the payments because he well knew he had by his default become responsible to the creditors. Both the sheriff and the execution debtor were examined in this case, and neither of them intimated that the executions could not have been made out of the debtor's property. On the contrary, it may be fairly inferred from the testimony, that the failure to do so proceeded either from negligence on the part of the sheriff, or an indisposition to levy and sell. We do not mean to intimate that the result would be different even if the facts were as stated by the learned counsel. It is sufficient to say, that his suggestions are not sustained by the evidence.

In considering this case we have not deemed it necessary to notice particularly the testimony adduced by the parties. There are but two witnesses, the appellee and the debtor. Their testimony is so conflicting that no safe conclusion can be drawn from it. We have thought it best to rest our decision upon certain well-defined principles, with a view to some general rule for the adjudication of future controversies of a like character. The result is that the decree of the circuit court must be reversed, and a decree entered in conformity with the views herein expressed.

The decree was as follows:

This day came again the parties by their counsel, and the court having maturely considered the transcript of the record of the decree aforesaid, and the arguments of counsel, is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that a sheriff or other officer who pays an execution in his hands for collection, without an assignment at the time of such judgment or the debt, is not entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the creditor whose debt he has paid, as against other creditors having liens by judgment or otherwise. The circuit court therefore erred in holding, that the appellee had a right of subrogation in this case to the lien of the judgment creditors whose executions had been paid by him without having obtained an assignment or transfer of the judgments or the debts secured thereby. It is therefore decreed and ordered that for this error the decree of the circuit court be reversed and annulled; and that the appellee pay to the appellants their costs by them expended in the prosecution of their appeal aforesaid here. And this court proceeding to pronounce such decree as the said circuit court ought to have pronounced, it is decreed and ordered, that 748 the first exception taken by the *creditors Clevinger, Keckley, and the National Bank of Martinsburg to the report of commissioner Huck, be sustained, except as to the judgment in favor of Y. P. Watkins, of which the appellee being an assignee, is entitled to subrogation to the judgment lien of said Watkins. It is further decreed and ordered that this cause be remanded to the circuit court to be proceeded with in conformity with the principles herein declared.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said circuit court of Frederick county.

Decree reversed.

749 *Richardson v. Insurance Company of Valley of Va.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

I. Pleading—Action of Debt—Plea of Setoff.*—R. borrowed in 1861, $1,650 from an Insurance Company, for which he gave his note under seal, payable on demand; and he deposited with the company sixty shares of its stock, as security for the debt; and by endorsement on the note he authorized a sale of the same by the company if the note was not paid when required by the company. The dividends on this stock were credited on the note up to July 1864, reducing the note to $1,050. To an action of debt on the note R. craves oyer of these endorsements and then says: "that the sixty shares of stock pledged by him to plaintiff, as set forth in the endorsement, remained in the exclusive management, custody and control of the plaintiff, from the date of said obligation hitherto, and that during this period, the plaintiff had so carelessly and improvidently managed and controlled said stock as that the same had become utterly worthless, unavailing and lost to defendant as property. And thereby defendant has sustained loss to the amount in value of $1,500; and this amount he now offers to set off against plaintiff's demand." Held:

*Special Plea of Setoff.—See Huff v. Broyles, 28 Gratt. 288, and note; Keckley v. Bank, 79 Va. 458; Burtners v. Keran, 24 Gratt. 42; Watkins v. Hopkins, 18 Gratt. 743; Barton's Law Pr. (2d Ed.) p. 514.

1. Same—Same—Same.—The plea is bad, because it does not set forth and show what acts the plaintiff had done, or omitted to do, in regard to the stock; which acts were intended to be complained of in the plea. It does not therefore sufficiently appear whether such acts or omissions constitute a good defence to the action.

2. Same—Same—Same.—If the plea had said, that the plaintiff did not sell the stock, or have it sold, but retained possession of it until it perished in consequence of the war, it would not have been a legal bar to the action. The stock being a mere pledge as collateral security for the debt, the plaintiff might have sold it, but was not bound to do so; at least without being required by the defendant.

This was an action of debt in the circuit court of Clarke county, brought in 750 May 1873, by The Insurance *Company of the Valley of Virginia, suing for the use of William Bird, receiver, against John D. Richardson, upon a note under seal for $1,650, bearing date June 1st, 1861 payable on demand, with interest from the 1st of July 1860. The defendant appeared and filed the pleas of "payment," "set-off," and "the statute of limitations," on which issues were joined: and he also filed a special plea to which the plaintiff demurred; and the court sustained the demurrer. The parties waived a jury, and the court rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the note, subject to credits which reduced it to $1,050, with interest from the 1st of July 1864. Richardson thereupon applied to a judge of this court for a writ of error and supersedeas; which was allowed. The only question in the case was upon the special plea, and that is given in the opinion of the court.

Holmes Conrad, for the appellant.

Parker, for the appellee.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a supersedeas to a judgment of the circuit court of Clarke county, recovered by, or in the name of The Insurance Company of the Valley of Virginia against John D. Richardson, on a single bill obligatory for sixteen hundred and fifty dollars, dated the first day of June 1861, payable on demand, with interest from the first day of July 1860, payable annually. The defendant plead payment, setoff, and the statute of limitations, to which the plaintiff replied 751 generally, and issues were thereupon joined. Afterwards a special *plea was filed by leave of the court, first craving oyer of the endorsements on the said obligation, which are set out in the plea, and consist of a pledge in these words: "I hereby pledge sixty shares of stock in 'The Insurance company of the Valley of Virginia,' and authorize sale of the same by the secretary, in the event of the non-payment of this note, whenever required by the board of directors.

J. D. Richardson."

Also of a statement showing that interest on the obligation to January 1st 1863, was cancelled, that the semi-annual dividends on the sixty shares of stock were regularly credited on the said obligation from January 1, 1863, to July 1, 1864, inclusive, each of said credits amounting to $150; that interest on said obligation at the same dates was regularly cancelled, and that the balance remaining due thereon was $1,050 with interest from July 1, 1864. The special plea then proceeded in these words: "Whereupon defendant says, that the sixty shares of stock pledged by him to plaintiff as set forth in the endorsement, remained under the exclusive management, custody and control of plaintiff from date of said obligation hitherto, and that during this period, the plaintiff had so carelessly and improvidently managed and controlled said stock, as that the same had, before the commencement of this suit, become utterly valueless, unavailing and lost to defendant as property. And thereby defendant has sustained loss to the amount of $1,500; and this amount he now offers to set-off against plaintiff's demand." The special plea was sworn to by the defendant. The plaintiff demurred to it, and the defendant joined in the demurrer; which upon argument was 752 *sustained by the court. Afterwards to-wit: on the 2nd day of March 1875; the case came on to be tried on the issues which had been made up on the other pleas as aforesaid, and neither party demanding a jury, it was considered by the court that the plaintiff recover against the defendant $1,650, the debt in the declaration mentioned, with six per centum per annum interest thereon from July 1, 1860, reduced by credits to $1,050 with six per centum per annum interest from July 1, 1864, until paid, and his costs by him about his suit in that behalf expended. To this judgment the defendant applied to a judge of this court for a writ of error and supersedeas; which were accordingly awarded. And that is the case we have now to dispose of.

The only question in the case is as to the sufficiency of the special plea. Does it present a bar to the action? We are decidedly of opinion that it does not. Every plea in bar to be a good defence to the action must aver with sufficient certainty such facts as amount to a legal bar. The facts must be set out with such particularity in the plea as to inform the plaintiff of the nature of the defence intended to be relied on, and thus to enable him to reply to it, to make up the issue thereon, and prepare for trial.

Now the special plea in this case certainly does not come up to the terms of this legal requisition. It avers that "the plaintiff had so carelessly and improvidently managed and controlled said stock, as that the same had, before the commencement of this suit, become utterly valueless and unavailing and lost to the defendant as property." But it does not set forth and show what acts the plaintiff had done or omitted to do in regard to the stock, which acts or omissions were intended to be complained of in the plea. It does not therefore sufficiently appear whether such acts or omissions constitute a good defence to the action. We may conjecture that what the defendant meant by the careless and improvident management and control of the stock referred to in the plea, was that the plaintiff did not sell the stock, or have it sold, but retained possession of it until it perished in consequence of the war. This can only be a conjecture and cannot be assumed as the real intention of the defendant in framing his special plea. But even if it could be, or even if the plea had expressly charged the fact, "that the plaintiff did not sell the stock, or have it sold, but retained possession of it until it perished in consequence of the war," yet that fact, assuming it to be a fact, would not constitute a legal bar to the action. The stock was a mere pledge as collateral security of the payment of the obligation. The plaintiff might have sold it, or had it sold for the payment of the obligation, but was not bound to do so; at least without being required by the defendant; and it is not averred in the plea nor is it pretended as matter of fact, that any such requisition ever was made, or that the defendant ever said anything to the plaintiff on the subject of such a sale. The defendant no doubt expected when he pledged the stock to the plaintiff, that there never would be any occasion for the sale of it, but that the plaintiff would hold possession of it and receive the dividends and apply them to the debt until it suited the defendant's convenience to pay the debt and thus redeem the stock; or until the plaintiff chose to demand payment of the debt, and it was not otherwise convenient for the defendant to make such payment than by a sale of the stock. It was competent for the defendant to pay the debt and redeem the stock, and he ought to have proceeded in that way, or at least have notified or requested the plaintiff 754 to sell the stock *if he wished to have it sold for the payment of the debt. And not having pursued this plain course which he had a right to pursue, he cannot justly complain of the plaintiff for not doing or having had done what he, the defendant might himself have done, and ought to have done if he desired it to be done.

It can hardly be necessary to refer to authority in support of the foregoing view. It can be found in abundance in the cases to the cases referred to in the petition for a writ of error—Pain v. Packard and King v. Baldwin, 2 American Leading Cases, 3d edition, pp. 362-418. As to the rights and duties of a creditor to whom property is pledged by his debtor in such cases, see Rosenbaums v. Weedon, Johnson & Co. v. Gratt. 785, and the cases cited therein. See also Burners v. Keran, 24 Gratt. 42 in which the opinion delivered by Staples, L. was concurred in by the other judges. It was there held that "where a deed is procured by fraudulent misrepresentations, the defence can only be made at law, in the mode provided by the statute; Code of 1860, ch. 172, § 5; and the defendant should file a special plea, averring the fraud or special circumstances which entitle him to relief in equity. And the facts should be set forth with sufficient precision and certainty to apprise the plaintiff of the character of the defence intended to be made; and to enable the court to decide whether the matter relied on constitutes a valid claim to equitable relief." Such is the statement contained in the syllabus, and it seems truly to report the decision of the point. The principle there announced directly applies to this case and is conclusive of it.

We are of opinion that there is no error in the judgment, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

755 *Perry & Co. v. Shenandoah National Bank & als.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

Deeds of Trust—When Fraudulent.*—In November 1873, N conveyed to C, certain real and personal estate, and "all his stock in trade with all accretions to and replenishments of said stock," in trust to secure and indemnify certain endorsers upon negotiable notes due by said N. And if the said notes were not paid on demand, C, upon the written request of either of the parties secured, should sell the said property according to law. But C was not to be responsible for any of said property until he was ordered to sell the same as aforesaid. N continued in possession and carried on his store for two years, and until all the goods in the store at the time of the deed were sold, and other goods bought with the proceeds. In November 1875, under an execution of P against N, the goods then in store were levied on. Held: The deed is fraudulent per se, and P is entitled to the proceeds of the sale of said goods under his execution.

This was a creditor's bill in the circuit court of Frederick county, brought by Joshua Persinger and others, creditors of Atkinson*, 78 Va. 9, the court said: "A deed of conveyance, professedly for the indemnity of creditors, in which the grantor expressly or impliedly retains a power inconsistent with, and adequate to the defeat of, the avowed object of the deed, is void as against creditors and purchasers. This is a well-settled principle repeatedly recognized by this court. Lang v. Lee, 3 Rand. 410; Sheppards v. Turpin, 3 Gratt. 373; Addington v. Etheridge, 12 Gratt. 436; *Perry & Co. v. Shen. James A. Nulton, to have the property mentioned in a number of deeds of trust disposed of under the direction of the court. The facts in relation to the only question involved in this appeal, are stated by Judge Christian in his opinion.

Barton & Boyd, for the appellants.

Williams & Williams and Holmes Conrad, for the appellees.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

756 *The controversy in this case arises between creditors secured by a trust deed, and execution creditors whose claims are not provided for in said deed. By a deed of trust executed the 1st November 1873, and recorded on the 4th November 1873, the debtor Nulton conveyed to Holmes Conrad, trustee, certain real estate and other property named therein, "and also all of his stock in trade, with all accretions to, and replenishments of said stock," in trust to secure and indemnify against loss certain endorsers upon negotiable notes drawn by Nulton, and payable at the Shenandoah Valley National Bank at Winchester, and also to secure the payment of certain debts to other creditors therein named. The deed contained the following provision: "Should said endorsers, or either of them, suffer any loss or damage by reason of said endorsement, or should either of the debts herein secured not be paid on demand, then it shall be the duty of the trustee upon the written directions of either of the parties secured, to sell the property herein conveyed as provided by law. But the trustee herein named shall not be held responsible for any of the property mentioned herein until he is ordered to sell the same as herein provided." This trust was never enforced; nor does it appear that any of the endorsers or creditors secured, ever directed the enforcement of the trust as prescribed by the deed. But the grantor remained in possession of this stock and carried on business as before, selling off the stock and replacing it as he chose with other like stock, purchased with the proceeds of that conveyed in the deed, and which was sold by him. No account of these sales was ever rendered to the trustee, nor does it appear that he exercised any supervision whatever over Nulton (the debtor) in these transactions.

This state of things continued until 757 the 17th November *1875, when Perry & Co., (the appellants) who had not been secured on the deed of trust, levied their execution upon the stock in trade, then in the possession of Nulton in his storehouse. By an agreement, of all the parties interested, which appears in the record, signed by their respective counsel, it was agreed that the property levied on under this execution should be sold by the sheriff, and the proceeds distributed as the court should determine, according to the rights of the parties. The sale was accordingly made by the sheriff, and the proceeds amounting to $548.95, returned by him to the court.

The sheriff returned also a list of the property sold by him. Of this property only four items, consisting of two wagons and two sets of harness, were in the possession or ownership of Nulton when the deed of trust of November 1st, 1873, was executed. All the rest were purchased after that date by Nulton, though as he says, by the proceeds of the sale of articles owned by him on that day.

The court below held that all the property levied on was liable first to pay the endorsers secured by the deed of trust, upon notes negotiated by the Shenandoah Valley National Bank; and accordingly so decreed. It was from this decree that an appeal was allowed by one of the judges of this court.

The court is of opinion that said decree is erroneous.

It was held by this court in Lang v. Lee, 3 Rand. 410, "that a deed of trust made by the debtor professedly for the indemnity of certain preferred creditors, reserving to the grantor a power over the property conveyed, inconsistent with the avowed purposes of the trust, and adequate to the defeat thereof, was, because of such reservation, void as to any creditor thereby postponed."

758 This case, and the doctrines it established was affirmed and approved in the cases of Sheppards v. Turpin, 3 Gratt. 357, 373; Addington v. Etheridge, 12 Gratt. 400; and Marks v. Hill, 15 Gratt. 430; and may now be held as the settled law of this state.

Now it is true, that in the deed under consideration, there is no express provision that the grantor should retain possession of the goods (the stock in trade) and carry on the business, selling and receiving the proceeds as before; but the power to do so, though not conferred in express terms, arises by clear and irresistible implication. The trustee by the terms of the deed can only sell "upon the written direction of either of the parties secured;" and it is provided that "the trustee shall not be held responsible for any of the property conveyed until he is ordered to sell the same." If the written direction is never given, the property is never to be sold by the trustee. The trustee has no control of it, and no accountability with respect to it. Where then does the possession remain? who alone has the control over and disposition of these goods? Plainly the grantor, until a sale is directed in writing by one of the parties secured. Under this deed the grantor might, for an unlimited time, go on and sell and buy and conduct his trade just as before, without accounting to the trustee or any one else, if the parties to the deed did not choose to give written directions to the trustee to sell. By clear implication from the face of the deed, this power is conferred upon the grantor. And the record shows that he acted under this implied authority for two years; and but for the action of the appellants in levying their execution, might have gone on for years longer. Up to the date of the levy of the execution the grantor carried on his business just as he did before the execution of the deed, selling the goods, receiving the money, buying other goods, rendering no account, but conducting his business as if no deed had been executed. Such a power as this, whether it arises from express provisions of the deed or from clear implication, is entirely inconsistent with the avowed purposes of the trust; and upon the authority of the cases above cited, must be declared fraudulent per se, and therefore null and void.

The court is, therefore, of opinion that the appellants, Perry & Co., by the levy of their execution on the 17th November 1875, acquired a lien which is superior to all the other creditors of said Nulton, and that the fund in the hands of the court so far as it arose from the sale of the stock in trade in the storehouse of said Nulton, made by the sheriff under the agreement aforesaid, ought to have been decreed to the said Perry & Co., instead of to any of the parties secured by said trust deed. The court is therefore of opinion that the decree of the said circuit court be reversed.

The decree was as follows:

This day came again the parties by their counsel, and the court having maturely considered the transcript of the record of the decree aforesaid and the arguments of the counsel, is of opinion for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the said decree is erroneous. It is therefore decreed and ordered that the same be reversed and annulled, and that the appellants recover of the appellees here, to-wit: The Shenandoah Valley National Bank, Joseph A. Nulton, T. Arthur Latham, and T. V. Purcell, their costs by them expended in the prosecution of their appeal and writ of supersedeas here. And this court 760 *proceeding to pronounce such decree as the said circuit court ought to have pronounced: It is decreed and ordered that the fund in the hands of the said circuit court, arising from a sale made by the sheriff of the personal estate of said Nulton (except the two wagons and two sets of harness proved to have been in the possession of the said Nulton at the time of the execution of the deed of trust to Holmes Conrad, trustee), be paid over to the said appellants, Perry & Company, or their counsel, together with their costs by them expended in said circuit court.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said circuit court of Frederick county.

Decree reversed.

761 *Young & Wife & als. v. Cabell's Ex'or & als.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

Decrees of Court of Appeals.—In a bill by H executor of C in 1863, to have a construction of the will of C, and direction of the court in his administration, an account was taken showing collections by the executor of ante-war debts in confederate money, and this invested under an order of the court in confederate bonds. The contest in the circuit court was between legatees, and legatees and next of kin. The court by its decree settled the questions between the legatees, and holding that C died intestate as to one moiety of the residuum, held that the amount invested in confederate bonds should be treated as a part of the residuum, and the loss borne equally by all the parties interested in the residuum. Upon appeal by the legatees of the moiety of the residuum, and of other legatees, the court of appeals reversed the decree as to some of the legacies, and affirmed it as to others, and affirmed the decree in all other respects. And on the motion of the next of kin it was added that this decree should not prevent the next of kin from asserting by proper proceedings, any claim they may be advised to assert against H, executor of C, on account of his transactions as such executor. HELD:

1. Same—Effect as to Future Enquiry into Fiduciaries' Transactions.—The decree of the court of appeals does not conclude enquiry as to the moneys collected and invested in confederate bonds; but under the reservation in the decree this may be done.

2. Same—Same—Mode of Raising the Question.—To make this enquiry the next of kin should file a cross-bill, raising the question of the executor's liability for the money so collected and invested by him.

3. Same—Same.—As to another claim of C which was lost, that having been passed upon by the court, cannot be enquired into again.

This is a sequel of the cases of Skipwith & als. v. Cabell's ex'or & als. and Lee & als. v. Cabell's ex'or & als., reported in 19 Grattan 758. When the cases went 762 *back to the circuit court, that court directed a commissioner to take an account of the transactions of the executor; and in March 1871 the commissioner returned his report. To this report the next of kin of Mrs. Cabell filed a number of exceptions, but it is only necessary to notice the fifth and twelfth, as these alone refer to the questions involved in the decision of this court. The twelfth exception, among other objections to the report, objects that certain debts mentioned, which were collected during the war in confederate money, were not charged to the executor. It appears that these were debts due before the war, and were secured by liens on real estate; and during the war they were paid to the executor in confederate money; and by an order in the cause the proceeds were invested in confederate bonds. The amount of these debts constitute the sum of $47,600 mentioned in the decree of the 10th of October 1867, which the circuit court then held should be embraced in the residuum of the estate, and all the parties interested in that residuum should bear the loss ratably.

The question under the fifth exception was as to the liability of the executor for the $34,600 of state stock lent by Mrs. Cabell to the Howardsville Bank. The facts in relation to this stock are stated in the former report, and referred to by Judge Staples in his opinion.

The cause came on to be heard on the 25th of March 1872, when the court held that the reservation in the decree of the court of appeals of the 24th of June 1870 to the next of kin of Mrs. Cabell, to proceed against D. J. Hartsook the executor, for any claim or demand that they might be advised to assert against him, on account of his transactions as executor, was not intended to permit them to re-open and to enquire into the accounts and trans-763 actions of said executor as *to any questions now raised by the exceptions, so far as the same were before raised, passed upon and decided by that decree, and the decrees of the circuit and district courts, to the extent that they were approved and affirmed by said decree, of the court of appeals. But that under said reservation only the accounts and transactions of the executor which were not passed upon and decided by the court of appeals, could be reopened and investigated. And the court being of opinion that the said bonds mentioned in the twelfth exception, and the investment of the said $47,600 in confederate bonds, were theretofore brought into consideration, and their propriety approved and sustained by the said decrees, and the loss of them was thereby decided to be the loss of the estate, the said twelfth exception was overruled so far as it seeks to charge the executor with the amount of said collections and investment.

The court was further of opinion that the question, whether the $34,600 in the Howardsville Bank should be regarded as state stock, and pass to the legatees of the state stock of the testatrix, or as a debt due from the bank to her estate, had been settled and determined by the decrees before made in the cause; but that the question as to the conduct and transactions of the said executor in respect to the collection of the said debt of $34,600 on the said bank, or the diligence used by him to secure or collect the same, had never before been raised, passed upon or settled by any decree in this cause; and therefore under the said reservation the parties had a right to enquire into the conduct and diligence of the executor in relation to said debt, and to hold him accountable for negligence or want of proper care and diligence in relation to the collection of the same; therefore the said fifth excep-

764 tion *in this respect was so far sustained as to allow this enquiry to be made, and proof to be taken by any party in relation thereto. And the report of the commissioner was re-committed with instructions &c.

The commissioner made his report, exonerating Hartsook, the executor, from liability for the debt of the bank; and to this report the next of kin of Mrs. Cabell excepted. The facts are sufficiently stated by Judge Staples in his opinion.

The cause came on again to be heard on the 7th of September 1872, when the court overruled the exception as to the debt of the bank, and confirmed the report. And thereupon John B. Young and wife, and the other next of kin of Mrs. Cabell, applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

James Alfred Jones, for the appellants.

Fitzpatrick and Whitehead, for the appellee.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court,

This case was before this court at the April term 1870. A decision was then made construing the will of Mrs. Mary W. Cabell, and settling the rights of her legatees and distributees. That was a controversy between legatees and next of kin. This is a controversy between the next of kin and the executor of Mrs. Cabell. It grows out of collections made by the executor in the years 1862, 1863 and 1864 of certain debts in confederate currency; and out of the alleged mismanagement by him, and consequent loss of a claim due the estate against the Howardsville Bank.

Upon the first point the defence of the executor is of a two-fold character. 765 He insists that "his transactions *in confederate funds" were recognized as valid by the decrees of the circuit court of Nelson pronounced in 1867 and 1868; and these decrees in this particular were affirmed by this court in its decree of April 1870; and the propriety of these collections is therefore no longer an open question. Second, if this ground is untenable, it is claimed that the collections were made in good faith, in the exercise of a large discretion vested in the executor by the will, and were fully justified by the circumstances surrounding him at the time. In the view we take it is only necessary now to examine the first ground of defence relied upon by the executor.

Whatever may have been done in the circuit court, it is very certain that in this court the executorial transactions were examined only so far as they were necessary to a settlement of the conflicting claims of the legatees and next of kin under the will of Mrs. Cabell. The opinion delivered by Judge Joynes, in which all the judges concurred, plainly shows this. It commences with the declaration that the bill was filed by the executor of Mrs. Cabell against her legatees and distributees, for the purpose of obtaining the advice and direction of the court in his administration of the estate; and especially in respect to the construction and effect of certain provisions of the will and codicils of the testatrix. It then proceeds to discuss and decide the various questions arising upon these provisions. Upon three of the points involved the decrees of the circuit court were reversed, and upon the other five they were affirmed. In no part of the opinion is any reference made to the collection of the debts now the subject of controversy, or indeed to the conduct of the executor in the administration of the assets, any further 766 *than it affected or was connected with the questions at issue between the next of kin and the legatees.

Mrs. Cabell had left a very large personal estate, and a very numerous kindred, widely dispersed throughout the country. Many of the provisions of her will presented serious difficulties in respect to a proper construction; and these difficulties were greatly increased by the disastrous results of the war. In the very protracted controversy before this court, conducted by counsel of great ability, a controversy involving points of a novel and perplexing character, it is not surprising that both counsel and the court lost sight of the executor and of every question affecting his liability. Indeed until the rights of the respective claimants under the will were adjudicated, until it was ascertained who was entitled to that portion of the estate passing under the residuary clause, there was no one especially interested to engage in a controversy with the executor respecting his administration of the assets. That the executor did not consider himself particularly interested in the decision, is shown by the fact that he was not even represented by counsel before this court.

It appears that the executor in the years 1862, 1863 and 1864, had collected in confederate currency a very large amount of debts due the estate, which it is alleged were secured by liens upon real estate. It is not intended here even to intimate that he was guilty of a devastavit in making these collections. But it is incredible that the counsel would have submitted without argument, and this court have decided without considering and without ever assigning a reason therefor, questions of so much importance and difficulty as arise out of the transactions of the executor with reference to these debts. It may be 767 assumed therefore, *with absolute confidence, that the court did not pass, and did not intend to pass, upon any question affecting the executor's liability in this particular.

It is impossible to look into the record as it was before the circuit court without a very strong impression that the question of the executor's liability, as it is now presented, received but little attention in that court. As has been seen, the bill was filed by the executor himself. Its main object was to obtain the direction of the court touching the distribution of the estate under the will. The answers of the defendants are almost exclusively devoted to that subject, and the testimony taken is given the same direction. It appears that the commissioner in settling the executor's accounts with the estate charges him with the debts collected in the years 1862, 1863 and 1864, and finds against him a large balance as of the 1st February 1866. There is no allusion in this account to confederate currency, nor is any credit claimed or allowed upon that ground. There was nothing in this account calling for any exception on the part of the next of kin. The first reference made by the commissioner to the confederate collections and investments by the executor is in a statement of the executorial accounts with the residuary legatee and "the unknown representatives of Mrs. Cabell." To these statements exceptions were filed by the next of kin, which, in the main, were overruled by the court. The court said, "that to the extent to which the executor proceeded to administer the estate in confederate funds, his transactions in these funds are to be recognized as valid." This does not very clearly indicate whether the court intended to sustain the executor in every respect in the collections made by him, or only to affirm the validity of his transactions in confederate funds, so 768 far as they *applied to payments made to legatees and next of kin. The whole manner of taking the accounts, and all the attending circumstances, lead to the conclusion that the latter supposition is probably the correct one. At the time the decrees of 1867 and 1868 were rendered, the perplexing questions growing out of the conduct of fiduciaries during the war had received but little attention from the courts in Virginia. The condition of the country then, under military domination, was far from favorable to the deliberate investigation of such questions. This condition of things had not materially changed down to the hearing of the cause before this court at the April term 1870. It is not surprising therefore, in view of all the circumstances, that the question of the executor's liability to the next of kin received so little consideration from this court and the circuit court.

The decree of this court affirmed the decrees of the circuit court in every particular except so far as they were expressly reversed on the three grounds mentioned. Now if, as is contended here, the decrees of the circuit court recognized the validity of the executor's transactions in confederate collections, this court by its decree of affirmance was placed in the attitude of having adjudicated questions of the greatest importance which it had not even considered; questions involving the interests of a party not even before the court by counsel; questions which ought properly to have been postponed until the main subject of controversy was finally disposed of.

It is very probable that the attention of the court was at the time called to the language of its decree, and its injurious effect upon the rights of the parties. And therefore it was this important reservation was inserted: "On motion of the counsel 769 of C. C. Lee and *others, next of kin of Mary W. Cabell, dec'd, it is ordered that nothing in this decree shall prevent the next of kin or any other party interested, from asserting by proper proceedings, any claim they may be advised to assert against D. J. Hartsook, executor of Mary W. Cabell, on account of his transactions as such executor." Can there be a reasonable doubt as to the purpose of the court in making this reservation. In view of all the circumstances mentioned, can there be a question as to the propriety and justice of some such provision.

It is very true that this court having decided all the questions between the legatees and next of kin, might have gone on to decide those between the next of kin and the executor. One objection to this course was, that the cause was not then in a condition for such a decision. No direct and proper issue had been raised upon these points; nor did the record contain sufficient material for their safe adjudication. If the court had been called on to pass upon the executor's conduct with reference to the debts in question, there is but little doubt it would have remanded the cause for further inquiry—as was done in Corbin and Mills the preceding year—or it would have required the parties complaining to proceed by cross-bill against the executor according to the present disposition of the case.

It has been said, and that is the view of the circuit court, that the true intent and meaning of the provision is, that the executorial accounts may be re-opened only as to such matters as were not raised at the previous hearings, or passed upon by the decrees of the circuit court and the court of appeals. If this is the only value of the reservation it was useless and unnecessary. Without such provision it is competent for the parties to assert their claims 770 against the executor *on account of any matter not adjudicated by the court. The language employed does not admit of any such qualification. If there is any limitation as to the character of the claim which may be asserted against the executor, it is not found in the reservation itself, it must be looked for elsewhere.

Accordingly it is argued that the decrees of 1867 and 1868 being neither affirmed nor reversed as to the executor, necessarily remain in full force as to him; and as the decree of 1868 is final, it can only be impeached by bill of review. If this be so, it is obvious that the reservation practically amounts to nothing. As there is no error on the face of the decree, and no pretence of after discovered evidence, there is, of course, no ground for a bill of review. This court might as well have affirmed the decrees of the circuit court without qualification. The result is precisely the same. This court, in entering the reservation, must have supposed there was some proceeding by which the parties could assert their claim against the executor, and must have intended they might resort to that proceeding if they had any just cause of complaint against the executor. The court renders such decree as the court below ought to have rendered, and the reservation must have precisely the same effect before the court. It seems to me the purposes of justice will be as well if not better subserved by a cross-bill, to be filed by the next of kin against the executor. In conformity with this view, so much of the decree of the circuit court as overrules the twelfth exception of the next of kin to commissioner

Stephen's report must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions that leave be given the parties interested, and they be required to file a cross-bill against the executor, touching the matters set forth in the said twelfth exception.

771 *It only remains to consider the question of the executor's liability for the amount of the claim against the Howardsville bank. The circuit court was of opinion that no liability attaches to him on that account. In this opinion we think the circuit court is unquestionably correct. It appears that as early as August 1863 the executor called the attention of the court below to this claim. One of the defendants also referred to it in his answer, and asked the court to make such decree in relation thereto as might be equitable and just. The matter being thus placed under the direct supervision of the court, it was entirely competent for either of the parties to make application to the court for any order touching the safety of the fund. Complaint is made that the executor did not correctly state the facts in his amended bill, facts with which he must have been perfectly familiar as an officer of the bank.

It is very true that he represented Mrs. Cabell's interest as being state stock; and there is no doubt he honestly believed it to be such. Very able counsel held the same opinion. One of the parties vigorously maintained that view, through all the stages of the controversy, and the question was never regarded as finally settled until the decision of this court in April 1870.

Even had the court below been placed in possession of all the facts, down to the minutest details, there is every reason to believe it would have taken no action in the matter. With the single exception of an order made in 1863, authorizing the executor to invest confederate currency in his hands, nothing was done in the cause, from the filing of the amended bill in 1863, until after the close of the war. This court cannot close its eyes to the fact, that from the beginning of the year 1863, to the termination of hostilities, the courts, even when in session, transacted but little business.

772 *Every part of the state was exposed to sudden incursions of the enemy. Counsel and suitors were in the army, or connected in some way with the public service. If ever there was a period in the history of mankind when the maxim "leges silent inter arma" applied, it was to the eventful years of 1863 and 1864 in the state of Virginia.

Does any one suppose that if the executor had called upon the court at such a crisis to adjudicate the character of this claim it would have done so, leaving all other questions in the cause undecided. If the circuit court had complied with the request, it is certain that neither of the parties would have acquiesced in the decision until affirmed by a court of the last resort.

The learned counsel for the appellants contends that a bill ought to have been filed by the executor against the bank for a specific execution of the contract to deliver the stock. Surely the learned counsel does not forget that this court has already decided that Mrs. Cabell's contract with the bank was nothing more than a loan of money, with a special agreement as to the manner in which the loan should be repaid; and for breach of this contract the remedy was in damages. And so the circuit court also held. It would seem therefore perfectly clear that in neither court would a bill for the stock have been maintained. This would seem to be so upon general principles, as compensation may be obtained in damages at law for a breach of contract to deliver stock.

We are told, however, that the executor was not only a leading stockholder but a cashier of the bank, and therefore in a position to exercise strong influence with the authorities of the bank: that he ought to have exerted this influence, to induce them to redeem the stock from the state.

773 or to go into the market and *purchase other stock in its place, or at least to secure the money in some safe way. This is the burden of the argument on the part of the appellants, presented in the exceptions taken in the circuit court, and reiterated in the petition and the printed brief of counsel.

There is not the slightest ground for believing that the bank would have made any arrangement of the kind. The executor states that the bank did not have and could not control the means either for redeeming or purchasing the stock: First, for the reason that nothing but countersigned notes of the bank could be used to withdraw the state stock from the treasury. The bank did not have and could not get the countersigned notes, as holders of these notes would not pay them in except for coin; and that the bank did not have, except a small sum: and besides, specie payments had been suspended. Second, in consequence of the stay law the debtors of the bank would not pay their notes, and could not be forced to do so. The correctness of this statement has not been impugned by any one. It effectually disposes of the theory so persistently urged, that the executor, if he had made the effort, could have induced the bank to furnish the stock for the benefit of the estate.

But rejecting this evidence as incompetent, we may think the executor might have succeeded with the bank; still it is a mere matter of conjecture. Surely he cannot be held guilty of a devastavit upon a mere conjecture as to the weight of his influence as an officer of the bank. To hold a fiduciary responsible, upon a mere supposition of what he might have done by the exercise of his official and personal influence at a particular juncture, is to embark in a field of the wildest speculation.

The injustice of such a pretension
774 is the more manifest *when it is remembered we are asked to hold the executor liable for not inducing the bank o do what this court has held the bank was under no obligation to do.

In many cases a fiduciary incurs liability in respect of losses by his failure to call in money of the testator already invested. And it has been held he ought not, without great reason, to permit funds to remain upon mere personal security longer than is absolutely necessary. But these rules are based upon the idea that the fiduciary may sue and may enforce collection by process of law. They have but little application to a time of war and invasion, such as prevailed here in 1863 and 1864, when trials by jury in civil cases were suspended, the collection of debts by process of law prohibited, and payments, if made at all, only made in a depreciated currency. The most that can be said is, that the executor ought to obtain the lien of a judgment when there is real estate of the debtor. But in this case the bank owned no real estate, and a judgment if obtained would have been wholly unavailing. Possibly the executor might have obtained payment in Confederate money; but it will scarce be now contended that this would have been advantageous to the estate. The present controversy is an indignant complaint of collections in that currency, which have proved entirely worthless to the parties interested.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that upon neither or any of the grounds suggested is the executor chargeable with the debt against the Howardsville bank. The decree of the circuit court in this particular is plainly right, and must be affirmed.

The decree was as follows:

775 *This day came again the parties by counsel, and the court having maturely considered the transcript of the record of the decrees aforesaid and the arguments of counsel, is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the circuit court did not err in holding that Daniel J. Hartsook, the executor of Mrs. Mary W. Cabell, dec'd, ought not to be charged with the sum of thirty-four thousand and six hundred dollars, or any part of it, on account of the claim against the Howardsville Bank, and the said decree of the 7th of September 1872, is in this respect affirmed.

The court is further of opinion that C. C. Lee and others, next of kin of Mrs. Mary W. Cabell, dec'd, are not concluded by the several decrees of the circuit court pronounced on the 11th of October 1867, and of May 8th, 1868, or by the decree of this court, from asserting any claim they may be advised to assert against said Daniel J. Hartsook on account of his transactions as executor as aforesaid; and the said circuit court therefore erred in overruling upon the ground stated, the twelfth exception taken by C. C. Lee and others to the report of commissioner Stephens.

It is therefore decreed and ordered that the decree of the 25th day of March, 1872, be, and the same is hereby reversed and annulled so far as the same is herein declared to be erroneous, and that it be affirmed in all other respects; and that the appellee Daniel J. Hartsook do pay to the appellants their costs by them expended in the prosecution of their appeal here. And it is further decreed and ordered that this cause be remanded to the said circuit court for further proceedings to be had therein in conformity with the foregoing opinion and decree, and with instructions that leave be given to the appellants and others the 776 next of *kin of Mary W. Cabell, or any of them, and that they be required to file their cross-bill against the said Daniel J. Hartsook, touching the matters set forth in the said twelfth exception.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said circuit court of Nelson county.

Decree reversed.

777 *The Winch. & Strasb. R. R. Co. & al. v. Colfelt & al.

September Term, 1876. Staunton.

1. Railroad Companies—Court of Appeals—Jurisdictional Amount.—On a creditor's bill against a railroad company, some of the debts proved are under $500, but there is one for $1,117.60, proved before the commissioner, and the decree of the circuit court is in favor of all of them against the company. An appeal by the company brings up all of them; and this court will pass upon all.
2. Same—Judgments against—Liability of Road and Franchises.—The road and franchises of the railroad company are liable for the payment of judgments recovered against the company.
3. Same—Same—Same—Lease of.—It appearing from the report of the commissioner that the annual rent of the railroad is $87,000, and the debts proved are but $1,286.91, the road should be leased out for the shortest period, for which a sufficient rent may be obtained to pay the debts and the costs of the suit. And if to accomplish this object it is necessary to lease the railroad for a term which will yield in rents a sum far exceeding the amount of the judgments, and cannot be leased at all for a shorter term, the creditors are entitled to have it leased for the longer term.
4. Same—Parties to Creditor's Bill.—It appearing that another railroad company is in possession of the road, it is proper to make that company a party to the suit, to ascertain her interest in it, and that company not responding or showing what its interest is, a decree for leasing the road may be made.

*Court of Appeals—Jurisdictional Amount.—Where several creditors, by creditor's bill, have obtained a decree against the common debtor, and some of the debts do not amount to $500, though they aggregate as much, those creditors whose claims are insufficient are not entitled to an appeal; the debtor, however, may appeal as against all of the creditors. See the following cases, citing the principal case: Craig v. Williams, 90 Va. 502; Williams v. Clark, 93 Va. 691, 25 S. E. Rep. 1018; Fleshman v. Fleshman, 84 W. Va. 351, 12 S. E. Rep. 716; Rymer v. Hawkins, 18 W. Va. 318. Further see, Gage v. Crockett, 27 Gratt. 735, and note; Devries v. Johnston, 27 Gratt. 805; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 1216.

This was a creditor's suit in the circuit court of Winchester, brought by Charles Colfelt against the Winchester and Strasburg railroad company, to subject the real estate of the company to satisfy judgments which he had recovered against the company. The bill was afterwards amended, and the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company, which was stated to be in possession of the real estate of the first-named company, under a lease was made a defendant. Both of the said companies coming on to be heard on the 24th of March 1875, the court overruled the demurrers, and recommitted the report, which had been previously made by a commissioner, with directions, after giving notice for four weeks in some newspaper, &c., to take an account of all debts which were liens upon the property of the Winchester and Strasburg railroad company. And leave was given to the railroad companies to file their answers within sixty days from the rising of the court: which they failed to do.

The commissioner returned his report, stating that but two debts, which were liens on the property, were produced before him. One of these was that of the plaintiff, made up of three judgments, one in the county court of Frederick, and the other two in the circuit court of that county, amounting together, at the date of the report, to $169.91, and a debt due to John Z. Jenkins' executrix upon a judgment recovered by him in his lifetime, which, at the date of the report, amounted, principal and interest, to $1,117.60. The real estate of the Winchester and Strasburg railroad company was reported at a valuation of $630,000, and its annual rental at $37,000.

The defendants excepted to the report on the ground that the debts reported were not sustained by sufficient evidence. The evidence as to all the judgments was the certificate of the clerk of the court in which it was rendered, stating the court and the term at which it was rendered, the names of the parties, the amount of the judgment, and the amount thereof which bore interest and the date of its commencement; and an execution of fieri facias which had been issued on one of Colfelt's judgments, had been returned no effects. All the judgments had been docketed.

779 *The cause came on to be heard on the 17th of November 1875, when the court overruled the exceptions to the report, and fixed the amount of the debts as reported by the commissioner, and decreed that unless the Winchester and Strasburg railroad company should, within sixty days from the rising of the court, pay to Jenkins' ex'x and Colfelt their debts—stating the amount &c., as reported by the commissioner—the sheriff of the county of Frederick should, after notice &c., offer the Winchester and Strasburg railroad and its franchises, at public rental to the highest bidder for one year from the 1st of April 1876, upon the terms &c. From this decree the defendants obtained an appeal to this court.

Andrew Hunter and Pendleton, for the appellants.

Barton & Boyd and Dandridge, for the appellees.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The constitution of Virginia provides that the supreme court of appeals shall not have jurisdiction in civil cases where the matter in controversy, exclusive of costs, is less in value or amount than $500, except in cases enumerated. In a case decided at the present term, the court held, Judge Staples delivering the opinion, that the value or amount in controversy in the court from whose decision the appeal is taken, at the date of the judgment or decree, determines the question of jurisdiction, and that there may be cases in which the appellate court would have jurisdiction to review the decision upon the petition of the plaintiff, when it would not have jurisdiction to review it upon the petition of the defendant; and vice versa. Umbarger 780 *& wife v. Watts & als., 25 Gratt. 167, was a creditor's bill to subject the life estate of Watts in real estate to the satisfaction of the plaintiffs' judgments. Neither of the plaintiffs' judgments amounted to $500, exclusive of costs. The circuit court dismissed the bill; from which decision the plaintiffs appealed to this court. It was held that the court had no jurisdiction of the case.

Judge Christian, in whose opinion the other judges concurred, says "it is clear that the claims of the appellants are several and independent of each other. They are founded upon different contracts, upon judgments at different times." * * * "If one of the creditors is aggrieved by the decree, it is to the extent that his claim is not paid, and not because other creditors are not paid."

The case in hand was also a creditor's bill to subject the real estate of the Winchester and Strasburg railroad company to lien creditors. The plaintiff Colfelt's judgments, aggregated only $169.91. John Z. Jenkins' judgment amounted to $1,117.60, which he was allowed to come in and prove before the commissioner. And the decree against the Winchester and Strasburg company was for the aggregate of all the judgments, amounting to $1,286.91; of which that company complains. If aggrieved, to what extent is it aggrieved by the decree? To the amount of Colfelt's judgments, or the aggregate of all the judgments? Clearly the latter. And the company being the party seeking the reversal of that decree, if it is erroneous, it is aggrieved to the extent of all the judgments; and this court is rightfully in possession of the case upon the petition of this appellant, and has jurisdiction to review the decision of the lower court and to reverse the decree, if found to be erroneous as to all the judgments, the aggregate *of which being the amount which the said appellant had in controversy in this suit. And this opinion is not at all in conflict, but perfectly consistent with Umbarger v. Utts, supra.

The court is further of opinion that the property of the Winchester and Strasburg road company, in the decree mentioned, is liable to satisfy the judgments of the plaintiffs, which it appearing could be satisfied in a reasonable time from rents, it is not error to decree that the same should be leased for that purpose.

But it is contended that it was error to lease the railroad, the property of said company, for so long a term as one year, to satisfy so small a debt. This objection was answered by the counsel for the appellees, by the declaration that it could not be leased at all for a shorter period than one year; and that such a decree for a short time would have been futile. To remove any difficulty on that score, the decree may be amended so as to test that matter. The appellees are certainly entitled to the satisfaction of their judgments out of this appellant's property. And if, in order to accomplish it, it is necessary to lease the railroad for a term which will yield in rents a sum far exceeding the amount of their judgments, and cannot be leased at all for a shorter term, the appellees are entitled to have it leased for the longer term. But it ought to be made to appear first, that it could not be leased for the shorter term. The court is of opinion therefore that the decree should be amended, so as to direct the commissioner to offer it for a term of three months; and if it cannot be leased for that term, or for an amount sufficient to satisfy the appellees' judgments and costs, including their costs in defending this appeal, that he then offer it for a term of six months; and if that is 12 *unavailing, then for a term of nine months; and if that is unavailing, then for a term of twelve months, as was required by the said decree.

The court is further of opinion that the appellees, plaintiffs below, having been informed that the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company had possession of the said road, upon what terms, or by what right, they were not informed, it was proper that they should have had leave to amend their bill, and to make the said last named company a party defendant, to enable it to assert and disclose any right it had, if compatible with the relief which the plaintiff sought against the Winchester and Strasburg railroad company, and that there was no error in the judgment of the circuit court overruling the demurrer of the said Baltimore and Ohio railroad company. And the said company, not having asserted any right in the Winchester and Strasburg railroad which could be prejudiced by the decree now under review, although if such right existed it had every opportunity of asserting it is too late now to assert any such right, and it cannot complain of said decree.

The court is of opinion therefore to amend as hereinbefore specified said decree, and to affirm the same, with costs.

Decree amended and affirmed.

*Mason & als. v. Wood.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

I. Evidence—Competency of Parties to Testify.—M, and four others, execute a bond to W, for the price of a jack, and W warrants him sound and a good foal-getter. F, one of the obligors, dies, and in suit on the bond by W, against the survivors, they set up a breach of the warranty as their defence. On the trial W introduces witnesses to prove what two of the defendants said to the witnesses, long subsequent to the purchase, to disprove by implication the breach of the warranty. And then the defendants offer these two to testify as to what those conversations were. HELD:

1. Same—Same.*—F being dead, W, the plaintiff, could not under the statute testify in the cause; and therefore the two defendants are incompetent to testify, though in relation to a matter which occurred after the death of F. See Code of 1873, ch. 172, §§ 21, 22, p. 1109, 1110.

This was an action of debt in the circuit court of Warren county, brought in May 1873 by Angus M. Wood against James W. Mason and others, surviving obligors with O. R. Funsten, deceased, upon a bond for $550, dated the 18th of March 1859, payable with interest one year from its date. The bond was given for the price of a jack, and Wood, at the time of the purchase, gave the purchasers a written warranty of soundness, and that he was a sure foal-getter. The defendants relied upon the breach of this warranty as their defense to the action.

On the trial of the cause there were eight exceptions taken by the defendants to rulings of the court, six of them upon questions of evidence, one as to certain instructions of the court, and one for 784 the refusal of the *court to grant a new trial; but, except one or two of them, they do not involve any question of interest; and on these the case is sufficiently stated in the opinion of Judge Anderson.

The jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $440, part of the debt in the declaration mentioned, with interest from the 18th of March 1859 until paid, less four years and two months war interest; and the court rendered a judgment according to the verdict. And thereupon the defendants applied to a judge of this court for a super-seedeas; which was awarded.

Williams & Williams and Cook & Son, for the appellants.

Walton and Turner, for the appellee.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The plaintiffs in error, James W. Mason, J. McK'. Kennerly, Alexander M. Earle and James F. Leach, were sued by the defendant in error in debt upon a bond, in which they were the surviving obligors of themselves, and O. R. Funsten, deceased. The consideration of the bond was the price of a jackass, called Royal John, which they purchased from the defendant in error. The bond was delivered to the agent of the defendant in error by Leach, one of the obligors, when the jack was delivered to him several days subsequent to the date of the bond, and at the same time the defendant in error by his said agent delivered to Leach a writing under seal, by which, among other things, he warranted the said jack to be "a prompt performer, a sure foal-getter, and perfectly sound." The defendants below pleaded a breach of the said warranty, by which they had sustained damages, which they offered to set off against the plaintiffs' demand.

785 *In the progress of the trial the plaintiff below introduced as witnesses B. J. Wood, Robert H. Long and McKay, who testified to conversations they had held long subsequent to the purchase of the jack with James F. Leach and A. M. Earle, two of the obligors and defendants, tending by implication to disprove the alleged breach of warranty. To rebut and countervail their testimony, the defendants introduced the said Leach and Earle, with whom the conversations were had, to testify as to what those conversations were. The plaintiff objected to their competency, on the ground that O. R. Funsten, one of the obligors to the bond, was dead. The court sustained the objection, and refused to admit them to give testimony, to which ruling of the court the defendants excepted.

By section 21, of chapter 172 of Code of 1873, no witness is incompetent to give testimony by reason of interest; and in all actions and suits, &c., the parties thereto, whether plaintiff or defendant, are made competent to testify on their own behalf, if otherwise competent, except as thereafter provided. The exception pertaining to this case is in these words: "When one of the original parties to the contract, or other transaction, which is the subject of the investigation, is dead or insane, or incompetent to testify by reason of infancy, or any other legal cause, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, or in favor of any other party having an interest adverse to the party so incapable of testifying."

By the express terms of the above recited clause of this section, Funsten, one of the parties to the contract, being dead, Wood, the adverse party, is made incompetent to testify in his own favor, or in favor of any other party having an interest adverse to Funsten. And Wood being incompe-

786 tent to testify, can either of *the parties adverse to him be admitted to testify? The language of the statute seems to be explicit. When one of the original parties to the contract is dead, "or incompetent to testify by reason of infancy, or any other legal cause, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor." &c. The legislature may have intended to limit the incompetency to testify to transactions between the living and deceased party, or to the acts and declarations of the deceased party, and not to have otherwise restricted his general competency, as given by the twenty-first section; but if so intended it is not so expressed. By the terms and express letter of the law, parties in such cases are declared to be incompetent to testify in their own favor, &c. There is no limitation of the incompetency as to the subject-matter of the testimony. It is general and unrestricted. They are declared to be incompetent to testify in the cause in their own favor. It might have been reasonable in the legislature to have restricted the incompetency to such matters as the other party, if not incapacitated, might be qualified to speak to, as acts and declarations imputed to him, or transactions in which he acted a part, and left untouched his competency as to other matters; and such restriction might comport with the spirit of the act; but the legislature has not so said, and the court is not disposed to extend the operation of the act beyond its terms and express provisions, and the incompetency of parties to testify in their favor, &c., in such cases, being declared by the act in express terms they must be held incompetent to testify to any matter bearing upon the issues in the cause.

This opinion may seem to conflict with the decision of this court in Field v. Brown & al., 24 Gratt. 74; but the cases are not analogous. In that case the general 787 *competency of the party to testify seemed not to be questioned; but was in fact recognized by the court below, and seems to have been acquiesced in by both parties; and the only point made before this court, was as to the admissibility of some of the questions and answers of the party, whose deposition had been given à bene esse. There was no objection made to his general competency, and the question was not raised in this court, nor seems to have been considered by it. In this case it is for the first time pointedly and squarely raised, and has to be met; and the court is of opinion, for the reasons given, that there is no error in the ruling of the circuit court, refusing to admit Leach and Earle, parties in the suit, to testify.

The court is also of opinion that upon the facts certified, the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial. The facts certified do not establish a breach of the warranty although the jury, by allowing some damages, impliedly have found that there was a breach. But the facts certified would not warrant the court to set aside the verdict, because of the inadequacy of damages. The fact that the defendants never offered to return the jack, and it not appearing that they ever demanded an abatement from the price, on account of defects in the jack, until after the institution of the suit, raises a strong presumption against the justice of their demand for such an abatement, and in favor of the verdict of the jury.

The court is further of opinion that there is no error in the other rulings of the court, as set out in the other bills of exceptions, for which the judgment should be reversed and the controversy reopened. In the 6th instruction, bill of exceptions No. 6, "That such breach of warranty should be clearly proved by those alleging it, that is, there should be a decided preponderance 788 *of evidence of the breach of the warranty," the word decided ought to have been omitted, but the qualification, which immediately follows, that such evidence as will include every reasonable doubt of such breach is not required, so explains the meaning of what preceded, that the word decided was not likely to mislead the jury. Upon the whole, the court is of opinion to affirm the judgment of the circuit court, with costs.

Judgment affirmed.

789 *Pugh & al. v. Russell & als.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

1. Decedent's Estates—Priority of Creditors Previous to 1849.*—Previous to the act in the Code of 1849, a judgment against a deceased person had priority over debts by simple contract, and was to be paid out of the personal assets, if these were sufficient for the purpose; and having been paid out of the personal assets, this did not give simple contract creditors a right to have the assets marshaled, and to have their debts paid pro tanto out of the real estate.

2. Same—Same—Marshaling.—The payment of taxes due to the state out of the personal assets does not give a simple contract creditor a right to have the assets marshaled.

3. Same—Same—Same.—Though simple contract creditors might before the act of 1850 be substituted to the rights of a creditor by bond binding the heirs, the doctrine of marshaling assets does not apply to a judgment.

4. Same—Subrogation.—Before the act in the Code of *Decedent's Estates—Priority of Creditors Previous to 1849.—The principal case is cited in Alexander v. Byrd, 85 Va. 700, 8 S. E. Rep. 577; Harper v. Vaughan, 87 Va. 431, 12 S. E. Rep. 785; Brewis v. Lawson, 76 Va. 44; Saddler v. Kennedy, 26 W. Va. 640. See Va. Code, § 2665.

1849, if a judgment recovered against an executor or administrator upon the bond of the deceased, binding his heirs, was paid out of the personal estate, simple contract creditors might be substituted to the right of such creditor against the heirs.

5. Same—Creditors—Marshaling.—A commissioner, settling an administration account before a court of probate, states in his report that two of the credits allowed the executor were for payments of judgments, which were liens on the real estate. This is not evidence against the devisees to prove that the judgments were recovered against the executor upon a bond of the testator binding his heirs, and to entitle a simple contract creditor to marshal the assets.

6. Same—Same—Statute of Limitations.—A judgment is recovered against an executor by a simple contract creditor of his testator; and the creditor then files a bill against the devisees to marshal the assets, and subject the land of the testator in the hands of the devisees. It must be presumed that his action was not barred by the statute of limitations when the judgment was recovered; and he is not therefore barred by the statute in his proceeding against the devisees to marshal the assets.

790 *7. Same—Same—Decree Separate.—There are two devisees, one of whom owns one-fourth of a tract of land, and the other three-fourths; and the land is held to be liable to pay a debt of their testator. The decree should be separate against each for the payment of his pro rata share of the debt, with a reservation to the plaintiff to proceed against him for so much of the share of the other as cannot be made out of that other's part of the land.

Louis Wolfe, of the town of Winchester, died on the 10th of June 1850. By his will, which was admitted to probate on the 1st of July 1850, he gave his estate except his library, to his sister Mary Wolfe for her life. He gave a tract of land to Sidney S. Richards, wife of H. W. Richards, for her life, and then to her children; to his niece Delia E. Pugh, wife of John R. Pugh, another tract of land for her life, and then to three of her children, naming them, and another tract to the said Delia E. Pugh for her life, and then to four of her children, naming them; and he gave another tract to Sidney S. Richards in fee. Mary Wolfe who was appointed executrix declined to act, and H. W. Richards qualified as administrator with the will annexed.

In January 1854 Richards settled his administration account before the court of probate, showing a balance due him of $99.79; and the commissioner reported that three of the debts with which the administrator was credited as having paid, were debts "binding upon the real estate, as well as upon the personalty." These were state taxes paid December 1850, and January 1851, $34.11, an execution of Wm. B. Baker for $235.58, and one of Robt. B. Wolfe, cashier, for $195.90, both paid in June 1852. Neither of these entries show the character of the claim upon which the judgments were founded.

In November 1853 Wm. G. Russell recovered a judgment against Richards as administrator de bonis *non &c. of Wolfe, for $776.70 damages, with interest from the 11th of September 1850; and $86.80 costs; and execution having been issued upon this judgment to be levied de bonis testatoris, the return of the sheriff upon it was, "No property found. The administrator states he has no assets."

In November 1860 Russell instituted his suit in equity in the county court of Frederick, which was afterwards removed to the circuit court of that county, against the administrator &c. and devisees of Louis Wolfe, deceased. In his bill he set out his judgment, the will of Louis Wolfe, the commissioner's report stating that debts amounting to $469.59, which bound the land, had been paid by the administrator; and he stated that John R. Pugh was indebted to Wolfe for money paid by Wolfe for him in his life time, which had not been collected by the administrator. The prayer of the bill is, that the assets may be marshaled; that any balance of the personal assets may be applied to the payment of his debt, and that the real estate devised may be subjected to pay the remainder; and for general relief.

John R. Pugh and Delia E., his wife, and Charles Ginn and Mary C., his wife, who was one of the devisees, answered the bill. They denied that Louis Wolfe was indebted to Russell. They insisted that at any rate the judgment recovered by him was for services rendered, and was not evidence against them, and did not bind the real estate; and they relied on the statute of limitations as a bar to his claim against them.

John R. Pugh admitted that he was indebted to Louis Wolfe, for money paid for him; but as a tract of land had been mortgaged to secure the said Wolfe, and had been sold since his death under a decree of the court, he was not able to say what was the balance of the debt he owed.

In March 1869 Rird & Carson were, upon their petition, made parties in the cause, as assignees of H. W. Richards, the administrator d. b. n. c. t. a., of the amount reported by the commissioner to be due to him.

The cause was referred to a commissioner to enquire, among other things, what was the balance of the debt due from John R. Pugh to Louis Wolfe; whether the debt set up in the complainant's bill for $776.70, with interest, &c., was a just debt and charge upon the estate of Louis Wolfe, deceased; and the present condition, amount, owners and annual value of the real estate of which said Wolfe was possessed at the time of his death.

The commissioner made his report. He refers to the report of the commissioner made to the court of probate; says it seems to be correct, and that it shows that the administrator paid $465.59 upon debts binding the realty. He reports the balance of the debt due from John R. Pugh to Louis

Wolfe at $515.48, with interest from January the 12th 1844 to October 31st 1859, $488.70—equal to $1,004.24. That a number of depositions were taken by him in relation to the plaintiff's debt, which sustain it; and after crediting upon it a balance due from the plaintiff on account of the purchase money of the land given to secure Wolfe, of $172.96, he makes the plaintiff's debt, principal and interest, on the 31st of October 1859, $1,116.43. He also reported as to the ownership and value of the lands of which Wolfe died possessed.

The defendants excepted to the report; on the following grounds, among others:

793 *1. In not allowing the statute of limitations; it being a new action against the devisees and subject to all defences.

2. In adopting the judgment of the court in the suit against the executor as the amount due against the devisees, without proof of the account.

3. In reporting a joint liability, and not a pro rata responsibility.

The commissioner returned with his report the depositions taken in relation to the plaintiffs' debt. These depositions showed that Russell had for years attended to the business of Louis Wolfe, who was old and feeble, and in the opinion of this court the evidence sustained the claim.

The cause came on to be heard in January 1872, when the court being of opinion that the unadministered personal assets of Wolfe's estate were sufficient to pay the plaintiffs' debt, without passing on the exceptions to the report, decreed that Charles B. Hancock, the present administrator of Louis Wolfe, deceased, do proceed as administrator to collect the amount due from John R. Pugh to the estate of Louis Wolfe, deceased, and any other debts due the estate, and as a special receiver of the said circuit court to hold the sum of money so collected subject to the future order of the court. And he was authorized to take all steps necessary for this purpose at the costs of said Wolfe's estate, and make report to the court.

The cause came on again to be heard on the 19th of March 1874, when Hancock having reported that an execution against the goods and chattels of John R. Pugh was returned "no property found," the court held that Russell was entitled to recover from the estate of Louis Wolfe, deceased the sum of $776.70, with interest from September 11th, 1850, and $86.80 *costs of the common law suit, subject to a credit of $172.96, as of October 31st, 1859, being in favor of Russell of $1,116.43, with interest on $776.70 from October 31st, 1859. And it appearing from the report of the commissioner that the administrator of Louis Wolfe, out of the personalty of said estate, paid debts binding the realty to the extent of $465.59, it is held by the court that to that extent, and with interest upon the same, from the time of payment, the real estate of Louis Wolfe, deceased, must contribute to the payment of the debt of

Russell. And the cause was referred to a commissioner to ascertain and report among other things—1. Whether John R. Pugh, or his assignee or vendee, is possessed of any realty which is liable for the payment of the debt against him reported in this cause. 2. The exact amount and interest of the debts binding the realty, to which the personalty has been applied. 3. What the realty, and in what proportion the same is liable to contribution as adjudged in this decree.

The commissioner reported—1. That Delia E. Pugh and three of her children were dead; that the children died unmarried, childless and intestate, and John R. Pugh inherited three-fourths of the tract of land devised by Louis Wolfe to said Delia E. and her children. 2. That from the report of the commissioner returned to the court of probate, it appeared that the following debts binding the realty were paid out of the personalty, viz:

Taxes on lands and lots $34.11; amount of execution of William H. Baker $235.58; amount of execution of R. B. Wolfe, cashier, $195.90=$465.59. This amount is of January 1st, 1854. Interest from January 1st, 1854, to December 1st, 1874, $558.70. Amount and interest to December 1st, 1874, $1,024.29. 3d. *The land devised to Delia S. Richards and her children, and that devised to Delia E. Pugh and her children, each to bear one-half of the burden; and of the last John R. Pugh holds three-fourths, and Susan C. Pugh the other fourth.

The cause came on again to be heard, when the court confirmed the report of the commissioner, and decreed that unless within thirty days from the rising of the court, Susan C. Pugh and John R. Pugh should pay to John J. Williams and R. T. Barton, who were appointed receivers to collect the same, the sum of $232.79, with interest from January 1st, 1854, commissioners named should proceed to sell the farm described in the commissioner's report at public auction, on terms stated in the decree; and unless John R. Pugh should in thirty days, &c., pay to the same receivers the sum of $1,004.24, with interest on $515.48 from October 31, 1859, the said commissioners should sell his interest in said farm. And a like decree was made against Charles L. Ginn and wife and Lewis Richards as to the same sum of $232.79 and like interest. And thereupon John R. Pugh and Susan C. Pugh applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Tucker, for the appellants.

Barton & Boyd and Williams & Williams, for the appellees.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The act of March 1st, 1842, was the first statute of this state making real estate assets for the payment of simple contract debts. That act, however, was subject *to a proviso, which declared that no debt which is not evidenced by writing, signed by the debtor or some person legally empowered by him, shall be charged on the real estate by virtue of this act. This proviso was omitted at the revision of 1849, so that as the law now stands, the real estate is subject to the payment of all the just debts of the decedent, without qualification.

In this case, the judgment of the appellee, Russell, against the administrator was upon a claim not evidenced by writing. That claim was therefore not a charge upon the real estate under the act of 1842, nor does it constitute such charge under the Code of 1850, because the debtor died before the revision took effect. This was not seriously controverted in the argument. The appellee claims that inasmuch as judgments which did constitute liens on the real estate of the debtor, were paid by the administrator of the latter out of the personalty, he is entitled, upon the principle of marshaling assets, to be subrogated to the lien of the judgments thus paid.

It is a well settled doctrine of equity, that if a specialty creditor, whose debt binds the heirs, receives satisfaction out of the personal assets of the decedent, a simple contract creditor will in equity stand in his place against the real assets, to the extent that the specialty creditor shall have exhausted the personal assets in the payment of the debts. The reason is that when there is both real and personal assets, creditors by specialty, in which the heirs are bound, are by the common law entitled to payment out of either of these funds. At law they may take their remedy against the heir, or against the executor. Having their election of remedies, if they exhaust the only fund to which the simple contract creditors can apply, equity places the latter in the position of the former, so far *as the specialty creditors have exhausted the personal estate. 2 Lomax on Executors, pp. 418, 419.

The question is whether this principle applies to a creditor having a judgment recovered in the life time of the debtor: under the law, as it stood previous to the Code of 1849, a judgment was a debt of superior dignity in the administration of the personal estate. It also constituted a lien upon the real estate, but it conferred no right of election, as in the case of a specialty binding the heirs. The creditor was bound to exhaust the personal estate before he could resort to the land in the possession of the heir. The judgment being a debt of higher dignity than bonds or simple contract debts, the executor was required to pay the former before the latter. If the personal estate was exhausted in paying the judgment, the simple contract creditor was utterly without remedy. And this was upon the very absurd principle that the right of subrogation only occurs where one of the creditors has two funds,

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

1. Suits in Equity—Attachments—Court of Appeals—Jurisdictional Amount.*—Three suits in equity are brought by the same plaintiffs against the same defendants to enforce payment of debts by attachment and sale of the same land. By order of the court these suits are directed to be consolidated and heard together, and then plaintiffs file an amended bill bringing in a third party. There being a decree dismissing the attachments, the plaintiffs may appeal to the court of appeals, though neither of the debts amount to $500, the sum of all of them being more than that amount.

2. Same—Same—Debts Not Due.†—Quære: If a creditor, whose debt is not yet due, may bring a suit in equity to attach the property of his absent debtor, or to set aside a deed as fraudulent.

This was a contest between the creditors of Johnston & Wolfe, of Baltimore. Devries & Co. filed three bills against Johnston & Wolfe, which are set out in the opinion of Judge Anderson. Francis White filed six bills against the same parties to attach the same tract of land. These suits were commenced on the 13th of May 1872, and were to recover debts then due.

In September 1872, Francis White filed his petition in the case of Devries & Co., in which he stated the institution of his suits and the amounts involved in each. He says that when Devries & Co. instituted their respective suits, and issued their attachments, the debts sued for by them were

BILLS QUIA TIMET.

Definition.—A bill quia timet, as the term implies, is a remedy for anticipatory mischief, in the form of a bill in equity, filed by a person fearing some future injury to his rights in property, real or personal, from the negligence, fault, or fraud of another. Enc. Pl. & Pr. 509; Stephenson v. Taverners, 9 Gratt. 398.

When Resorted to.—In Randolph v. Kinney, 8 Rand. 397, the court said: "When a person is apprehensive of being subjected to a future inconvenience, probable, or even possible, to happen, or be occasioned by the neglect, inadvertence or culpability of another, or where any property is bequeathed to one after the death of another, and which the former is desirous of having secured safely for his use; or where a surety is fearful of injury, from the neglect of his principal to pay the debt; in all these cases, and others of this kind, the bill quia timet may be resorted to."

Necessary Allegations.—In the case of Lane v. Eggleston, 2 Patt. & H. 231, it was held that a bill quia timet must allege that the complainant may be subjected to loss by the negligence, inadvertence or not due; and he charges that the said attachments sued out by Devries & Co. are null and void; and he prays that they may be quashed, and that the land may be sold, and the petitioners debts satisfied out of the proceeds of sale.

806 *In November 1872, the case came on upon the petition of Francis White, and the court being of opinion that the attachments sued out by Devries & Co. were improperly sued out, it was ordered that they be abated. And thereupon Devries & Co. applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Dandridge and Pendleton, for the appellants.

Barton & Boyd, for the appellees.

Anderson, J. The appellants are creditors of the appellees by three promissory notes, one bearing date December 2nd, 1871, payable at three months; another one bearing date November 22nd, 1871, payable at four months; and the other bearing date December 20, 1871, payable at four months. On the same day, the 20th of February 1872, they brought three several suits in equity, by suing out three several subpoenas and attachments in chancery, and on the 26th of the same month filed a bill in chancery in each case, the same in substance; and in each case upon affidavit of non-residence, and the return of the sheriff an order of publication was awarded against the defendants. The bill in the first case, culpability of the defendant. See also, Randolph v. Kinney, 8 Rand. 394; Randolph v. Randolph, 2 Leigh 544.

A bill in the nature of quia timet must show grounds for sustaining it. Fowler v. Saunders, 4 Call 261.

Sureties.—In Croughton v. Duval, 3 Call 69, where the obligee in a bond refused to sue, upon the request of the surety of the obligor, it was held that such surety might bring a bill quia timet to compel the principal to pay and the creditor to receive the money. This case also decided that the statutory provision, allowing a surety on a bond to compel the creditor, in a court of law, to institute suit against the principal, did not take away any remedy which the surety was entitled to before. For re-enactment of the statute, see Va. Code, §§ 2890, 2891. As sustaining the above proposition, see Norris v. Crumney, 2 Rand. 388.

A surety, whose principal is dead, may file a bill quia timet against the creditor and the executor of the debtor, to compel the latter to pay the debt so as to exonerate the surety from responsibility. Stephenson v. Taverners, 9 Gratt. 398.

Endorsers.—In Call v. Scott, 4 Call 402, the drawer of a bill of exchange gave a mortgage to indemnify an endorser against future liability, and the endorser was allowed to bring a bill quia timet against the representatives of the drawer to foreclose the mortgage, and pay the holder of the bill of exchange.

Remaindermen.—"Though it is a matter of course for one in remainder of chattels, to file a bill for an account, and an inventory of the property, that it may be certainly known; yet the court will not rake the tenant for life to give security, unless there appears to be some danger of wasting or putting the vers the indebtedness of the defendants to the plaintiffs on the 2nd day of December 1871, in the sum of $438.29 cents, which it is averred is evidenced by a note of that date, payable three months after date. It appears from the bill and exhibits that neither note was due at the time suits were brought.

The bill avers that the firm of Johnston & Wolfe, the defendants, since the giving of the note had become insolvent. But that the said Wolfe owned a tract of land in Frederick county, described in the bill, which was devised to him by the will of his father.

107 *It alleges that the defendants are non-residents of the state of Virginia, and were so at the commencement of this suit; and that the said Wolfe was in hopeless financial embarrassment.

It further charges, that by a deed dated the 16th of December 1871, shortly before the institution of this suit, and recorded in the clerk's office of Frederick county on the 17th of December 1871, the said Wolfe conveyed the aforesaid tract to said Johnston, which conveyance was made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors; by reason whereof the plaintiffs have just cause to apprehend that their said debts may not be paid, and are advised that by the equitable powers of the court, and by its attachment process, the said tract of land may be subject to its payment. The prayer is that the land may be sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of their debt.

At a subsequent term of the court, 24th of May 1872, the three suits by order of the court were to be consolidated, or proceeded in as one suit; and the plaintiffs were given leave to file their amended bill.

The amended bill adds to, and amends the allegation of the original bill, with regard to the conveyance of the land by Wolfe to Johnston, by alleging that the said Wolfe on or before the 16th of December 1871, executed to the said Johnston his writing obligatory for a large sum of money, which he secured to said Johnston by a mortgage upon the land in question, which was admitted to record in the clerk's office of the county court of Frederick on the 27th of December 1871. And it further charges that a deed purporting to be an assignment of the said mortgage to Miles White, bear-property out of the way." Per Curiam, in Mortimer v. Moffatt, 4 H. & M. 504. The power of a court of equity to require such security from a tenant for life, is to be exercised, not as a matter of course, but of sound discretion, according to circumstances. Holliday v. Coleman, 2 Munf. 162.

In Chisholm v. Starke, 3 Call 25, a testator devised slaves to his wife for life, remainder to his children. On the remarriage of the wife, her husband sold the slaves to bona fide purchasers. Held, that if the remaindermen bring a bill quia timet against the husband and the purchasers, a court of equity will decree that the husband must give security for the forthcoming of the slaves (with their increase) at the death of the wife, but that the purchasers need not give such security.

ing date the 10th of December 1871, which is the date of the mortgage, was recorded in the clerk's office of said county court 808 on the 5th of January 1872. *Copies of both deeds are in the record. The bill further charges that the said mortgage securing the bond aforesaid, was executed together with the bond, for the sole purpose of raising money thereon for the firm of Johnston & Wolfe. That White, who is a money dealer, agreed to advance the money to Johnston on said bond, and that the assignment was drawn up with a view to that end, and was left with White, who failed to comply with his agreement to advance the money; and the bond was never passed to him, but remains in the possession of Wolfe the obligor: which he was never to part with until the arrangements for raising the money were completed. And the bill charges that White fraudulently designing to make avail of said assignment without advancing the money, which was the condition on which it was placed in his hands, refused to deliver it to Johnston or Wolfe who demanded it, but fraudulently retained it. And to the detriment of Wolfe & Johnston, and to the plaintiffs their creditors, had the assignment recorded as aforesaid, to effectuate his iniquitous and fraudulent design. The prayer is that the said White may be made a party to this and the original bill, and be compelled to answer them; and that the said assignment may be set aside, and for general relief. On the 20th of February 1872 notice lis pendens of these suits, the plaintiffs by their counsel caused to be recorded in the clerk's office of the county court of Frederick.

The court is of opinion, upon the preliminary question raised by the appellees' counsel, as to the jurisdiction of this court to hear this cause upon the appeal, that inasmuch as the three causes were essentially one, and were very properly consolidated, or united in one, and proceeded in and heard as one cause by the court below, that the matter in controversy upon 809 this appeal *exceeds the amount necessary to invest this court with jurisdiction; and therefore that the objection raised to the jurisdiction of this court must be overruled.

Upon the merits, the case is presented in two aspects. First, as a proceeding by foreign attachment in equity, or second, as

Creditor.—A bill of quia timet is not applicable, on behalf of a creditor, whose debt is payable at a future time, to compel the debtor to give security for the prompt payment of the debt when it shall become due. See also, Devries v. Johnston, 27 Gratt. 805.

To Quiet Title.—On the principle of quia timet, a court of equity will entertain a suit by the owner in possession of land, to remove a cloud from his title, by annulling a deed that by mistake or fraud, conveys the land to another who makes adverse claim thereto, but brings no suit. Stearns v. Harman, 80 Va. 48; Carroll v. Brown, 28 Gratt. 791. These cases hold that when the owner is out of possession, ejectment is the proper remedy.

property out of the way." Per Curiam, in Mortimer v. Moffatt, 4 H. & M. 504. The power of a court of equity to require such security from a tenant for life, is to be exercised, not as a matter of course, but of sound discretion, according to circumstances. Holliday v. Coleman, 2 Munf. 162.

In Chisholm v. Starke, 3 Call 25, a testator devised slaves to his wife for life, remainder to his children. On the remarriage of the wife, her husband sold the slaves to bona fide purchasers. Held, that if the remaindermen bring a bill quia timet against the husband and the purchasers, a court of equity will decree that the husband must give security for the forthcoming of the slaves (with their increase) at the death of the wife, but that the purchasers need not give such security.

ing date the 10th of December 1871, which is the date of the mortgage, was recorded in the clerk's office of said county court 808 on the 5th of January 1872. *Copies of both deeds are in the record. The bill further charges that the said mortgage securing the bond aforesaid, was executed together with the bond, for the sole purpose of raising money thereon for the firm of Johnston & Wolfe. That White, who is a money dealer, agreed to advance the money to Johnston on said bond, and that the assignment was drawn up with a view to that end, and was left with White, who failed to comply with his agreement to advance the money; and the bond was never passed to him, but remains in the possession of Wolfe the obligor: which he was never to part with until the arrangements for raising the money were completed. And the bill charges that White fraudulently designing to make avail of said assignment without advancing the money, which was the condition on which it was placed in his hands, refused to deliver it to Johnston or Wolfe who demanded it, but fraudulently retained it. And to the detriment of Wolfe & Johnston, and to the plaintiffs their creditors, had the assignment recorded as aforesaid, to effectuate his iniquitous and fraudulent design. The prayer is that the said White may be made a party to this and the original bill, and be compelled to answer them; and that the said assignment may be set aside, and for general relief. On the 20th of February 1872 notice lis pendens of these suits, the plaintiffs by their counsel caused to be recorded in the clerk's office of the county court of Frederick.

The court is of opinion, upon the preliminary question raised by the appellees' counsel, as to the jurisdiction of this court to hear this cause upon the appeal, that inasmuch as the three causes were essentially one, and were very properly consolidated, or united in one, and proceeded in and heard as one cause by the court below, that the matter in controversy upon 809 this appeal *exceeds the amount necessary to invest this court with jurisdiction; and therefore that the objection raised to the jurisdiction of this court must be overruled.

Upon the merits, the case is presented in two aspects. First, as a proceeding by foreign attachment in equity, or second, as a proceeding upon the principles of original equity jurisdiction. As has been seen, "the equitable powers of the court," and "its attachment process," both are invoked in the bill as clothing the court with power to relieve.

Creditor.—A bill of quia timet is not applicable, on behalf of a creditor, whose debt is payable at a future time, to compel the debtor to give security for the prompt payment of the debt when it shall become due. See also, Devries v. Johnston, 27 Gratt. 805.

To Quiet Title.—On the principle of quia timet, a court of equity will entertain a suit by the owner in possession of land, to remove a cloud from his title, by annulling a deed that by mistake or fraud, conveys the land to another who makes adverse claim thereto, but brings no suit. Stearns v. Harman, 80 Va. 48; Carroll v. Brown, 28 Gratt. 791. These cases hold that when the owner is out of possession, ejectment is the proper remedy.

It would seem that the attachment process was relied on only as ancillary or auxiliary to the original equity jurisdiction, and not as a distinct primary ground of jurisdiction. Whether it is material to consider the distinction in this case I will not stop now to inquire, but will proceed with the more important inquiry, whether upon the case made by the original and amended bills, a court of equity has inherent original jurisdiction to afford relief.

By the statute Code of 1873, chap. 175, § 2, p. 1126, a creditor before obtaining a judgment or decree for his claim, may institute any suit to avoid a gift, conveyance, assignment, or transfer of, or charge upon the estate of his debtor, which he may institute, after obtaining such judgment or decree," &c. The plaintiffs were creditors at the time of instituting this suit. Their claim was debitum in præsentī, solvendum in futuro. They have present interest in their debtor's property on which alone they rely for the satisfaction of their debt at maturity, and the getting a conveyance or assignment of it by a third party surreptitiously and fraudulently, and the placing that conveyance or assignment on record, may be the means of enabling him to transfer the property to an innocent purchaser for value, and thereby consummate his fraud, and irretrievably 810 *prevent its application to the payment of the appellants just debt; an apprehension which is well justified, by the circumstances under which he procured the possession of the deed of assignment, and his unjustly and fraudulently withholding it from the debtor; and instead of returning it to him, causing it to be spread upon the record of the county court. It was a wrong to the debtor of the plaintiffs, and it was equally a wrong to them.

There can be no question that Johnston & Wolfe could maintain a suit against White to set aside said assignment, or to compel its surrender to them. If they could, why may not their creditors? Why may not their application to the interposition of a court of equity be made, before their debt is due, to prevent this wrong? They have a present interest which is threatened to be destroyed by the consummation of the fraudulent transaction to the same extent that it would be if their debt was due. The injury to them is the same that it would be, if their debt were due. They have a present interest which is brought into jeopardy by a fraudulent transaction, and which, if not at once arrested, by the interposition of a court of equity, will result in the total destruction of that interest.

It is a favorite doctrine of courts of equity, that they are invested with jurisdiction to prevent injury and wrong, as well as to compel the reparation of injuries already accomplished.

I am of opinion, therefore, that a court of equity had jurisdiction to relieve the plaintiffs against the injury by which they were menaced, and the notes all falling due before any decree was pronounced in the cause, the first one falling due a few days after the suit was brought, the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree to subject 811 *the land in question to the payment of their debt, they being entitled to priority over the subsequent attachment creditor. I am of opinion, therefore, to reverse the decree, and to remand the case to the circuit court for further proceedings to be had therein in conformity with this opinion.

Moncure, P., concurred in the opinion of Anderson, J.

Christian and Staples, J's, dissented.

Decree affirmed by a divided court.

*Brock v. Rice & als.

September Term, 1876, Staunton.

1. Commissioners' Sales—Confirmation by Court.—Whether the court will confirm a sale made by commissioners under its decree, must, in a great measure, depend upon the circumstances of each case. It is difficult to lay down any rule applicable to all cases; nor is it possible to specify all the grounds which will justify the court in withholding its approval.
2. Same—Same—When Withheld.—In such a case if there is reason to believe that fraud or mistake has been committed to the detriment of the owner or purchaser, or that the officer conducting the sale has been guilty of any wrong or breach of duty to the injury of the parties interested, the court will withhold a confirmation of the sale.
3. Same—Report—Who May Object.—In such a case either party may object to the report of the commissioner, and the purchaser himself, who becomes a party to the sale, may appear before the court and have any mistake corrected.
4. Same—Same—Discretion of Court.—The court in acting upon a report of sale, does not exercise an arbitrary but a sound legal discretion in the interests of fairness and prudence, and with a just regard to the rights of all concerned.
5. Same—Auctioneer Acting Partially.—An auctioneer or crier making a sale, cannot properly act for himself or any other person in bidding for the property.

*Commissioners' Sales—Confirmation.—For the principles by which the court determines whether a sale by a commissioner should be confirmed or set aside, see the following decisions, citing the principal case: Thomas v. Bank, 86 Va. 292, 9 S. E. Rep. 1122; Todd v. Gallego, etc., Co., 84 Va. 590, 591, 5 S. E. Rep. 651; Coles v. Coles, 83 Va. 527, 528, 5 S. E. Rep. 673; Terry v. Coles, 80 Va. 702, 703, 707; Effinger v. Kenney, 79 Va. 553; Hickson v. Rucker, 77 Va. 138; Langyber v. Patterson, 77 Va. 474; Hansucker v. Walker, 76 Va. 756; *Berlin v. Va. 18.

. Same—Same—Effect.—A case in which the court refused to enforce a sale against the purchaser, on account of the misconduct of the life tenant and the auctioneer, though the conduct of the commissioner was unexceptionable.

. Same—Setting Aside.—The sale being set aside as to the life-tenant, must be set aside in toto, though some of the remaindermen are infants.

Dr. John W. Rice, of the county of Shenandoah, died in 1862. He left a large estate in land, and a number of children. He gave to his sons each a tract of land; and among them to his son, John Harper Rice, a tract of about four hundred and seventy-five acres, of which, about two hundred and seventy-five acres, he describes as lying along Smith's creek, and two hundred acres of wood land on the west side of Massanutton mountain. This land he estimates at $13,000; and he charges the land with two sums each of $1,000. This land he gives to John Harper Rice for his life, and at his death it is to be sold, and the proceeds divided among his children.

In February 1872, John Harper Rice instituted his suit in equity in the circuit court of Shenandoah county, in which he set out the devise to him and his children, and the said charges thereon; and also that he owed about $1,000, as one of the executors of his father, which is directed by the will to be paid out of the land. He says that the sums directed by his testator, to be paid by him, cannot be paid without a sale of the said real estate, and that he believes it will be for the benefit of his infant children as well as his adult child that a sale of the same be made. And making the children parties defendants, he asks for a sale of the land.

The case was regularly proceeded in, and a decree was made appointing commissioners to sell the land. In August 1874 they returned their report, in which they say that they had advertised the land for sale at public auction, and at the sale John P. Brock, by his agent, C. P. Moore, became the purchaser of said land at the price of $34.50 per acre. That said Brock by said agent signed a memorandum of said sale and purchase, which was also on the same day, and immediately after it was signed by said agent (the said Brock not then being present), recognized and affirmed by said Brock in a writing signed by him. They further state, that about the 1st of June one of the commissioners received a letter from Brock, in which he denies the authority of Moore to bid for him in the manner the sale was made. At the August term of the court for 1874, a rule was made upon Brock returnable to the 27th of August, to show cause why he should not be required to comply with the terms and conditions of the said sale. In response to the rule Brock filed his affidavit; and a number of affidavits were filed by him and the plaintiff in the cause; and a number of depositions were afterwards taken and filed.

On the 14th of April 1875, the case came on to be finally heard upon the rule, when the court overruled Brock's objection to the confirmation of the sale, and decreed that he should comply with its terms by the payment of the sum of $4,071.87, that being one-fourth of the purchase money which was required to be paid on the 20th of August 1874, with interest from that day, and the execution of his bonds payable in four equal instalments of $3,053.90, at one, two, three and four years from said 20th of August 1874, with good personal security in the first two of said bonds. And thereupon Brock applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed. The evidence is sufficiently stated in the opinion delivered by Staples, J.

James M. Williams and Henry C. Allen, for the appellant.

Walton, for the appellees.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

In considering this case, it is important to bear in mind the rules of law governing judicial sales. All the authorities agree there is a wide distinction between 815 *an application to set aside a sale after it is approved by the court, and an application to withhold a confirmation. A decree of confirmation is a judgment of the court, which determines the rights of the parties. Such a decree possesses the same force and effect of any other adjudication by a court of competent jurisdiction. But before confirmation the whole proceeding is in fieri, and under the control of the court. Until then, the accepted bidder is not regarded as a purchaser. His contract is incomplete, and he acquires by his bid no independent right to have it perfected.

According to the English practice, the preferred bidder is never entitled to the benefit of his purchase till the master's report of the bidding is confirmed by the court. He is not liable to any loss by fire or otherwise, which may happen to the premises, nor is he entitled to the benefit of any appreciation of the estate by the accidental falling in of lives or other means. Until confirmation, the purchaser is not compelled to complete his purchase, nor is he entitled to the possession of the estate.

It is not material to inquire how far these rules of the English courts prevail in this state. It is very certain that with us the commissioner conducting a sale is regarded merely as the agent or servant of the court, and his proceedings are necessarily subject to its revision and control.

Whether the court will confirm the sale, must in great measure depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. It is difficult to lay down any rule applicable to all cases; nor is it possible to specify all the grounds which will justify the court in withholding its approval. If there is reason to believe that fraud or mistake has been committed to the detriment of the owner or the purchaser, or that the officer conducting *the sale has been guilty of any wrong or breach of duty to the injury of the parties interested, the court will withhold a confirmation. Either party may object to the report, and the purchaser himself, who becomes a party to the sale, may appear before the court and have any mistake corrected.

The court, however, in acting upon a report of sale, does not exercise an arbitrary but a sound legal discretion in view of all the circumstances. It is to be exercised in the interests of fairness, prudence, and with a just regard to the rights of all concerned. See Taylor v. Cooper, 10 Leigh 317; Daniel v. Leitch, 13 Gratt. 195, 211, 214; Blossom v. Railroad Company, 3 Wall. U. S. R. 205, 6, 7; Rover on Judicial Sales, and cases cited at pages 30, 55, 56.

There is another rule which may be noticed in this connection. No person employed or concerned in selling at a judicial sale is permitted to become a purchaser, or even to act as agent of a purchaser. It is impossible with good faith to combine the inconsistent capacities of seller and buyer, crier and bidder, in one and the same transaction. If the commissioner or auctioneer faithfully discharges his duties, he will, of course, honestly obtain the best price he can for the property. On the other hand, if he undertakes to become the purchaser for himself, or for another, his interest and his duty alike prompt him to obtain the property upon the most advantageous terms. There is an irreconcilable conflict between the two positions. And so the courts have always held. Rover on Judicial Sales, 30.

In the case before us the auctioneer (Moore) in acting as agent for the appellant, therefore clearly violated his duty. In doing so he was not influenced by anything said or done by the appellant. The latter not *being able to attend the sale, requested a friend to bid for him. The auctioneer then volunteered to act for the appellant. The appellant said he only desired to purchase a part of the tract; he was willing to pay forty-five dollars per acre for that part, and he did not care who made the bids. As this was a distinct specific offer for the part named, there would have been no great impropriety in the auctioneer in declaring and accepting it on the day of sale. But the auctioneer claims that he was clothed with an unlimited authority, if part could not be so purchased, to bid for the entire tract at such sum as he might in his discretion think proper to give. This is denied by the appellant; and in this denial I think he is sustained by the facts. This departure from the plain line of his duty throws suspicion, if not discredit, upon the conduct of the auctioneer throughout.

When the sale commenced there was a single bid of ten dollars per acre. The next bid was by the auctioneer for the appellant, of twenty-five dollars per acre, an advance of fifteen dollars per acre upon a single bid. At this point the bidding ceased; at least no one seemed inclined to offer more. The auctioneer then approached the appellee, John Harper Rice, and asked him why he did not bid, saying "mine is a bona fide bid, and I am not going to stop at this."

The object of this communication is plain enough. It was to induce the owner to run up the property upon the appellant, whom the auctioneer was professing to represent. It is my bid—and I shall continue to bid—you may therefore safely become a bidder. is the intimation to the appellee. This declaration was not made publicly, but privately to a party at whose instance and for whose exclusive benefit the sale was made;

who was a gainer by every dollar added to the *purchase money; and who is now insisting upon a confirmation of the sale. And what is more than all, it was made to one who if not insolvent at the time, was certainly in no condition to become a purchaser. Testimony has been adduced with a view to show that Rice might have raised the means to pay for the property. This testimony does not deserve serious consideration. The charges upon the property scarce exceeded three thousand dollars. This comparatively small sum Rice was unable to raise, and he was compelled to resort to a court of equity for a sale of the property to discharge his liabilities. We are now asked to believe he could have met a cash payment of more than four thousand dollars; and that he could have given personal security to the amount of the first two bonds, being more than six thousand dollars. I do not attach any importance to any advantage he could have derived from his life estate. His life interest in the land was subject to the charges already alluded to, and his life interest in the proceeds of sale was of course bound to the same extent. As to his giving personal security, such an idea is contradicted by the whole record. Looking to all the facts, it is difficult to believe that Rice could seriously have entertained the idea of becoming the purchaser. His conduct on the day of the sale tends strongly to show that he had but little thought of bidding until approached by the auctioneer. When the property was crying at the small sum of twenty-five dollars, he enquired of a friend, what he should do; and the latter being no doubt acquainted with his circumstances, told him "to do nothing." This advice he seems to have followed. But when the auctioneer informed him that the bid of twenty-five dollars was his, (the auctioneer's) and that he did not intend to stop at that, all difficulty on the *part of Rice seems at once to have been removed; he at once began to bid, and he and the auctioneer between them, in a short time run the price up to more than sixteen thousand dollars; three thousand dollars more than the former owner had estimated it, and more than two thousand dollars in excess of the estimate of any disinterested witness. Rice having id thirty-five dollars, no doubt at once perceived he had far exceeded every just and reasonable limit; he was permitted to withdraw his bid, and in a few moments the property was knocked down to the appellant at thirty-four dollars and fifty cents.

It is not extravagant to assert that Rice must have been satisfied that the auctioneer was not bidding for himself, but for some person not present; and the auctioneer must have been equally well satisfied, that Rice was not bidding with any view to an actual purchase of the property. The bystanders no doubt thoroughly comprehended the whole situation—the auctioneer and one of the parties chiefly interested, the only competitors.

It is not surprising that there was no bid for the property after the first, by any other person. It is very true that both Rice and the auctioneer deny there was any arrangement or understanding between them with respect to the bidding; and we are not disposed to impeach their testimony in this particular. But it is undeniable that each must have fully comprehended the entire situation: Res ipsa loquitur. Rice certainly well understood that acting under the auctioneer's invitation, and aided by his connivance, he was creating a factitious competition at the expense of the appellant. It is impossible that a sale thus made can receive the sanction of a court of equity. The conduct of Rice precludes him from insisting upon a confirmation.

820 *That is very clear. The other parties, the remaindermen, stand in no better situation. They cannot enforce a contract made by their agent, the auctioneer, and at the same time evade all responsibility for his conduct in making the contract. They are equally affected by the misconduct of Rice with whom they have certain interests in common. If the purchase is confirmed as to them it must necessarily be confirmed as to him also. A contract entire and indivisible, if vacated at all must of course be vacated in toto. More especially is this true when the rescission is owing to one of the parties through whose agency the contract was made.

It has been said, however, that the appellant ratified the sale after it was made. A satisfactory answer to this is, that at the time of the supposed ratification the appellant could not have known of the existence of the facts in respect to the conduct of Rice and the auctioneer at the sale. It is very probable that he was not apprized of them until they were brought out on the examination of the witnesses, or at least a short time before that testimony was taken. The ratification of course amounts to nothing unless made with an understanding of all the material facts and circumstances attending the sale.

Before concluding this opinion it is proper to advert very briefly to other matters having some connection with what has been said. In the first place it is very questionable whether the appellant ever authorized

Moore, the auctioneer, to bid for the whole tract of land. He certainly did empower him to purchase a part of the tract designated; but the appellant was very careful to limit the price, a price he was willing to give at a public or private sale. The appellant had not even looked at the other part of the tract. He had declared he would 821 not buy it on any terms. It is *almost incredible that he would under such circumstances, empower this auctioneer, the agent of the seller, to buy the entire tract at any price the latter might choose to give. The story is so absolutely improbable it ought to be supported by very clear and satisfactory evidence. If the decision rested alone upon this point, there would be no serious difficulty in declaring that the auctioneer had exceeded his authority, and the appellant is not bound by his action. But the appellees rely upon the fact that the appellant was informed of the purchase of the whole tract, and deliberately ratified the same. On the other hand the appellant affirms that at the time he signed the memorandum he was so deeply intoxicated he was not conscious of the character of the paper he was signing. He supposed he was simply ratifying the purchase of the part he had designated.

It must be premised that the courts always listen with suspicion and reluctance to any defence founded upon an alleged voluntary intoxication. Here, however, the question is not upon the avoidance of a contract made by the party himself; but upon the ratification of an unauthorized act of another, by which the supposed principal is involved in a very heavy liability. If the appellant honestly believed he had only authorized the purchase of a part of the tract, he would naturally believe that such part only had been purchased, and he might as reasonably conclude, when called on by the commissioner to sign the memorandum of sale, that it related only to that part. This would be peculiarly so if the appellant at the time, from any cause, was not in complete possession of his mental faculties.

Upon the question of the appellant's drunkenness the evidence is very conflicting. But it cannot be denied *that 822 the great preponderance of testimony strongly sustains the view that the appellant at the time of signing the paper was too deeply intoxicated to have a clear comprehension of the nature and effect of the act he was doing. Very great weight is certainly due to the testimony of the distinguished gentleman who acted as one of the commissioners of sale on that occasion. But it detracts somewhat from the force of that testimony, that the witness was, previous to that day, a total stranger to the appellant, and therefore not so well qualified to judge of his capacity as others who knew him more intimately. However that may be, there are numerous witnesses who testify with great minuteness to facts which outweigh any mere opinions formed from a few moments observation. But while the appellant was evidently much under the influence of liquor at the time, that of itself would not be sufficient to prevent a confirmation of the sale. But his condition at the time of the supposed confirmation, considered in connection with all the circumstances surrounding the sale, exhibit such a case of mistake, surprise, unconscionable advantage and injustice as calls for a rescission of the contract. In arriving at this conclusion we are not to be understood as impeaching in the slightest degree, the conduct of the commissioners conducting the sale. There is nothing in the record tending to throw even a shade of suspicion upon the perfect fairness and integrity of their conduct.

Upon the whole we are of opinion the decree of the circuit court must be reversed, the sale set aside, the rule awarded against the appellant discharged, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

The decree was as follows:

823 *This day came again the parties by counsel, and the court having maturely considered the transcript of the record of the decree aforesaid, and the arguments of counsel, is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the circuit court erred in confirming the sale made by commissioners Bird and Walton on the 23rd day of May 1874, to the appellant John P. Brock. It is therefore decreed and ordered, that the decree of the said circuit court confirming said sale, be reversed and annulled; and that the appellee, John Harper Rice, do pay to the appellant, John P. Brock, his costs by him expended in the prosecution of his appeal aforesaid here.

And this court proceeding to render such decree as the said circuit court ought to have rendered, it is decreed and ordered, that said sale be and the same is, hereby annulled; that the rule awarded against the said John P. Brock on the 25th day of August 1874, be discharged, and that the appellee, John Harper Rice, do pay to the said Brock his costs by him expended in his defence to said rule. And it is further ordered that this cause be remanded to the said circuit court for such further proceedings as the parties interested may be advised to take with reference to a sale of the property in the bill and proceedings mentioned.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said circuit court of Shenandoah county.

Decree reversed.

825 Richard Omohundro, the elder, of the county of *Fluvanna, died previous to April 1860, possessed, among other property, of a tract of land of nine hundred and ninety acres, and leaving eight children or their descendants. These children were scattered, some in Texas, and others in different parts of the country, and some of the descendants were infants. Among his children was his son Silas who lived in Richmond, and was extensively engaged in business in that city, and Richard who lived in Fluvanna.

In April 1860, Richard Omohundro instituted a suit in equity in the circuit court of Fluvanna county, against the other heirs of Richard Omohundro, the elder, to have a sale of the land, on the ground that it could not be divided among the heirs without injury to all of them; and this suit was so proceeded in, that on the 11th day of April 1860 the court made a decree appointing the plaintiff, Richard Omohundro, a commissioner to sell the land, in one or more parcels for cash as to one-fourth of the purchase money, and on a credit of one, two and three years for the residue, taking bonds with approved security for the deferred payments, and retaining the title as further security, till the whole was paid.

And he was directed to report to the next term of the court his proceedings under this decree, and file therewith the bonds taken for the deferred payments.

On the 17th of June 1860, the commissioner sold a part of the tract called Gale Hill, including five hundred and eighty-eight acres, when it was purchased by John H. Burgess, at $20 per acre; and Burgess paid the cash payment of $2,940, and executed his bonds with security for the three deferred payments, each for $2,940; but the commissioner did not report to the court, or file the bonds. The part of the land called Wills' tract was not then sold; but afterwards, about the 5th of March 826 *1863, he sold this tract to James M.

Thomas, at $22.50 per acre cash; and Thomas paid him in March and April $8,900. This sum was paid by Thomas in confederate money. And about the same time the commissioner received from Burgess the payment of his three bonds in the same currency. This sale of the Wills' tract, and receipt of the payment of the bonds of Burgess in confederate currency, was done at the urgent and repeated request of Silas Omohundro, that it should be done, and that Richard Omohundro would lend him the money; he saying he could use the money in payment of his debts, and for real estate which he was then purchasing extensively. And accordingly Richard Omohundro after paying to Silas his share of the fund, and a debt which one of the other heirs owed to him, lent to Silas Omohundro the remainder of it, and took from him the following obligation:

$12,800. Richmond, May 22d, 1863.

On demand I promise to pay R. Omohundro, Jr., the just and full sum of twelve thousand eight hundred dollars, for value received, borrowed money, this date, to be paid when called for in confederate money, or whatever money may be current of the state, or our banks pay out to depositors. As witness my hand and seal.

Silas Omohundro. [Seal.]

Silas Omohundro died in 1864; and in June 1866, Richard Omohundro brought an action of covenant upon this paper in the circuit court of the city of Richmond, against his executor Richard Cooper; and in November 1869, recovered a judgment for $12,800, with interest from the 2nd of June 1866. From this judgment the 827 executor applied for and *obtained a supersedeas from the court of appeals; and the case coming on to be heard in that court, in January 1872, that court reversed the judgment, on the ground that the bond being payable on demand, the obligor had a right to pay it at any time, and therefore to pay it in confederate treasury notes. And the cause was sent back to the circuit court for a new trial to be had therein; and the case for all that appears in this record, is still on the docket of that court. The case is reported in 21 Grattan 626.

In March 1872 the defendants in the suit in equity, instituted by Richard Omohundro, for the sale of the land, except Silas Omohundro's executor, filed a cross-bill in that suit against Richard Omohundro, Silas Omohundro's executor, and the purchasers of the land, in which they set out the foregoing facts, except as to the action at law, and charged that Richard Omohundro had violated his duty as commissioner in receiving from Burgess payment of his bonds for the purchase money of the land without authority from the court, and in a greatly depreciated currency, and also in selling the Wills' tract and receiving in payment the same depreciated currency. They charge that this was done by the said Richard upon the repeated request of Silas Omohundro, in order that he might get the money, and upon the promise to save Richard harmless, and pay the money after the war was ended, when it was required for distribution, in whatever fund should then constitute the currency of the country.

There were statements in the bill in relation to the timber used and sold from the land, by the purchasers, and a prayer for an account by them; but it is not involved in this appeal. There was also a prayer that all proper accounts be taken, and for general relief.

Richard Omohundro answered, admitting the facts *as to his action, 828 and the urgent request of Silas Omohundro, that he should sell the Wills' tract and collect the money from Burgess and let him have it, and that he had complied with his request, upon his promise to save him, the said Richard, and all the parties interested harmless; and that he would be responsible for the money and make it good when the heirs interested should demand it for distribution after the war, in whatever currency was then in use.

Cooper, the executor of Silas Omohundro, demurred to the bill. 1. Because of multifariousness; and 2. Because there is no ground of equitable relief against the said defendant set forth in said bill. He also, as to the bond of $12,800, pleaded in bar of the recovery sought by the bill, the judgment of the court of appeals in the common law case hereinbefore mentioned; setting out a copy of said judgment. And he also answered, saying that after the death of his testator he advertised in the newspapers for the creditors of said Silas Omohundro to come forward and present their demands against his estate. That Richard Omohundro presented a claim for $1200, which respondent paid him; that at that time respondent asked him if he had any other claim against the said Silas, telling him respondent was prepared to pay it if he had; and the said Richard then declared that he had no other demand. Some time afterwards the said Richard came forward with the claim for $12,800. The respondent did not then and does not now believe that the money was due, and he defended the suit. He relies upon the judgment of the court of appeals, and insists that that question cannot be again opened.

The cause came on to be heard on the 13th of September 1872, when the court overruled the demurrer, and held that the plea furnished no bar against the 829 *equitable grounds of relief stated in the bill. And it was decreed that Richard Cooper, executor of Silas Omohundro deceased, out of the assets of his testator's estate in his hands to be administered, do pay into the First National Bank of Virginia at Richmond, the State Bank of Virginia at Richmond, and the Richmond Banking and Insurance Company, in equal parts, one third into each, the sum of twelve thousand eight hundred dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per centum per annum from the 22d of May 1863 till paid, and the costs of the plaintiffs in the cross-bill, &c. &c. And thereupon Cooper applied to this court for an appeal from the decree; which was allowed.

Lyons, for the appellant.

Pettit, Guy & Gilliam, for the appellees.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

1. The court is of opinion, that Richard Omohundro, Jr., was guilty of a breach of trust, in collecting in confederate money, in March and April 1863, the bonds for the deferred installments of the purchase money of the Gale Hill tract of land; and also, in selling for confederate money, in March 1863, the Wills' tract of land in the proceedings mentioned. At those periods the actual value of confederate money was depreciated greatly below its nominal value. There was then no necessity, and could not for a long time be any, for converting the subject into money, as it could not be divided among the parties entitled thereto, some of whom were non-residents of the state. The subject was then in the best possible state in which it could be and remain during the war, which was then 830 flagrant; *a part of it consisting of good specie debts, perfectly well secured; and the residue consisting of valuable real estate.

2. The court is further of opinion, that it is proved by the evidence in the record, that Silas Omohundro persuaded his brother Richard, Jr., to make the collection and sale aforesaid; promising to receive his portion of the proceeds thereof in confederate money, and to borrow the balance of said proceeds in said money, (which would be as useful to him as good money,) and account for it after the war in money then current; and the said Richard, Jr., was induced by such persuasion and promise to make such collection and sale, and such disposition of the proceeds thereof as aforesaid.

3. The court is further of opinion that Silas Omohundro, by such persuasion and promise, and by receiving and borrowing the money of his brother Richard as aforesaid, became a particeps criminis in the said breach of trust, and became liable to indemnify his brother Richard and all the other heirs of their father who had not consented to receive confederate money in payment of their shares of the proceeds of sale of the real estate of their father, against loss arising from the said collection and sale.

4. The court is further of opinion, that the judgment of the supreme court of appeals in favor of the executor of Silas Omohundro against Richard Omohundro, Jr., in the case of Omohundro's ex'or v. Omohundro, 21 Gratt. 626, is not a bar to the liability of the said Silas for the indemnity of the said Richard and the other heirs of their father as aforesaid. Even if that judgment had been a final judgment in favor of the defendant in the action of covenant in which it was rendered, it would not have been conclusive, except between the parties thereto, to-wit: the plaintiff *Richard Omohundro, and the defendant, the personal representative of Silas Omohundro. The other heirs at law of Richard Omohundro, Sr., not being parties to the action at law in which the said judgment was rendered, were, of course, not concluded thereby. Richard Omohundro, Jr., had no authority to collect the deferred installments of the purchase money of Gale Hill, much less to collect them in confederate money. The bonds for those installments were directed by the court under whose decree the said property was sold, to be returned to the said court and filed among the papers of the suit in which the said decree was made, and there was no order of said court authorizing him to withdraw and collect the said bonds. Nor had he any authority to sell, as he did, the Wills' tract of land at private sale for cash, and much less for confederate money. Still less had he any authority to loan to his brother Silas the proceeds of said collection and sale, or any part thereof, and take his bond, without security, for the repayment of the same in confederate money. There is nothing, therefore, in the said judgment of this court, and would have been nothing in the said judgment if it had been final and conclusive between the parties thereto, to conclude or prevent the other heirs of Richard Omohundro, Sr., from claiming and recovering their respective portions of the real estate of their father or of the proceeds of the sale thereof, and for that purpose, from further prosecuting, as they have done and are now doing, the said suit in which the said decree was rendered, and in which also was rendered the decree appealed from in this case. But in fact the said judgment was not final and conclusive in its nature and effect, even as between the parties to the action, but merely decided the case as it then 832 stood *upon the record, reversed the judgment of the court below, set aside the verdict, awarded a new trial, and remanded the cause to the court below to be proceeded with in accordance with the principles announced in the judgment of this court. The court construed the covenant on which the action was brought without any light derived from the surrounding circumstances, of which there was no evidence in the record; and in so construing it, though of opinion that "what the parties intended by their written agreement is not very clear," yet the court held the contract to be one for the payment of confederate money; and that as the case was presented by the record, the plaintiff was entitled to the value of the currency advanced by him, scaled as of the date of the contract, with interest thereon from that period.

5. The court is further of opinion, that though the contract aforesaid, construed as it was by this court, looking alone to the written contract itself, and without the light of any of the surrounding circumstances, was properly construed to be a contract for the payment of confederate money, and therefore to be scalable; yet, in the light of all the surrounding circumstances as they appear in this record, it ought to be construed as a contract payable in current or good money on demand after the war, or in confederate money on demand during the war, at the election of the said Richard Omohundro, Jr., and it may in this cause be construed in the light of those circumstances, and effect given to it accordingly.

Looking alone to the written contract for its meaning, it appeared to be a case in which Richard Omohundro, Jr., having in his hands in March and April 1863, confederate money to loan out, loaned it to his brother Silas, taking for its repayment with interest, *the bond or covenant on which the action at law was brought; and though the terms of the bond were unusual, and it was not very clear "what the parties intended by their written agreement;" yet in that view of the case, this court had no difficulty in holding it to be a contract for the payment of confederate money.

But looking to the written contract in connection with, and by the light of the surrounding circumstances as they now appear to the court, the case is very different; and there is no difficulty in ascertaining the true intention of the parties, and the meaning of the words used by them in their contract to express that intention. It thus appears that Richard Omohundro, Jr., had no money to loan out in March and April 1863; but he had then in his hands, as a fiduciary, bonds payable in good money and well secured, which he had no occasion to collect, and could not collect in good money during the war, and a valuable tract of land belonging to the heirs of his father, and decreed to be sold for distribution among them by a decree made before the war; but which had not been sold before the war and could not be sold for good money during the war, but could only be sold during that period for confederate money, which was so depreciated in value as to render a sale of trust property for such a currency a breach of trust, and improper except under very peculiar circumstances. Richard Omohundro, Jr., acting under the advice of his counsel and under his own sense of duty and propriety, had made up his mind, in the state of things which then existed and were getting worse and worse, not to collect the said bonds and sell the said land; when his brother Silas persuaded him to do so, and pay him out of the proceeds of such collection and sale, his portion thereof; and loan him the balance, which he said he *could use to great advantage in the payment of debts due in good money, and in his business of a speculator in land and other property; he assuring his brother Richard that he would indemnify him and the other heirs of his father against all loss which might possibly arise from such collection and sale. Richard Omohundro, Jr., trusted to this assurance, and yielded to this persuasion of his brother Silas, who was a perfectly responsible man; and accordingly collected the said bonds, sold the said land, and disposed of the proceeds of such collection and sale, in pursuance of his brother's request; who thereupon executed the bond or covenant aforesaid for the repayment of the money loaned him with interest. These are the clearly proved facts of the case. And if we read the bond in the light of these surrounding circumstances, we can have no difficulty in understanding its meaning; which is as before stated.

That it is legal and admissible so to read the bond, is clear on general principles; and it is especially clear under the provisions of the Code, chapter 138, § 1, p. 979.

6. The court is further of opinion, that the objection made to the amended bill for multifariousness, is not a valid objection to the relief prayed for and given in this case.

7. The court is therefore of opinion that there is no error in the decree appealed from, and that the same ought to be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

835 *Gordon v. Fitzhugh & als.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

Absent, MONCURE, P.

Assignments of Bonds Secured by Deed of Trust—

Priority.*—K made a deed to F conveying a tract of land in trust to secure the purchase money of the land, evidenced by five bonds, payable at different periods to R, the vendor. R first assigned the bond payable second in date to M; next he assigned the bond payable first, to McG, and afterwards he assigned the last three to G. The land when sold did not produce sufficient to pay all the bonds.

*Assignments of Bonds Secured by Deed of Trust.—

Where several bonds, equally secured by a deed of trust are assigned, the assignees take in the regular order of their successive assignments. Grubbs v. Wysors, 32 Gratt. 131; Armentrout v. Gibbons, 30 Gratt. 651; Armstrong v. Poole, 30 W. Va. 670, 5 S. E. Rep. 250, in each of which the principal case is cited. See also, McClintic v. Wise, 25 Gratt. 448; Paxton v. Rich, 85 Va. 378, 7 S. E. Rep. 531; Jenkins v. Hawkins, 34 W. Va. 790, 12 S. E. Rep. 1090; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 1139.

Held: the bond assigned to M, the first assignee, is to be first paid; then the bond assigned to McG, the second assignee, and the balance, if any, is to be paid to G, the last assignee.

On the 11th of November 1867, H. S. Kepler conveyed to Wm. H. Fitzhugh, of Fredericksburg, a tract of land in the county of Chesterfield, "in trust to secure to A. P. Rowe, the payment by the said H. S. Kepler, of the purchase money of the said tract of land, which purchase money, amounting to $8,680, is evidenced by five bonds of the said Kepler to the said Rowe, payable as follows: The first for," &c. There were five of these bonds, and they were assigned by Rowe to different persons at successive periods. The land when sold by the trustee did not sell for enough to pay off all the bonds, and the assignees not agreeing as to the mode of applying the fund, Fitzhugh filed his bill of interpleader in the circuit court of Spotsylvania, against the assignees, to have the direction of the court in the disposition of the fund; and on the hearing of the cause the court held that the assignees were to be paid in 836 the order of the dates of *the assignments. From this decree H. S. Gordon, who was the last assignee, applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed. The facts are stated by Judge Christian in his opinion.

Jas. Pleasants, Braxton & Wallace, for the appellant.

Wm. H. Fitzhugh, for the appellees.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The question we have to decide arises upon the following facts: Kepler conveyed by deed to Fitzhugh, trustee, a certain tract of land, to secure to Rowe the payment of the purchase money of said land, amounting to the sum of eight thousand six hundred and eighty dollars, evidenced by five bonds payable by Kepler to Rowe as follows: the first for $1,540, payable on the 1st January 1871; the second for $1,000, payable on 1st January 1872; the third for $2,000, payable 1st January 1873; the fourth for $2,000, payable 1st January 1874; and the fifth for $2,140, payable on 1st January 1875.

None of these bonds being paid at maturity, the trustee sold the land in execution of his trust. The net proceeds of said sale amounted to the sum of $4,338.36, leaving a large deficiency in the trust fund for the payment of the bonds secured by the trust deed. All of these bonds were assigned by Rowe. He first assigned the bond for $1,000, payable the 1st January 1872 to Moncure. He afterwards assigned to McGee the bond of $1,540, payable on 1st January 1871; and afterwards the three remaining bonds were assigned to Gordon. The fund not being sufficient to pay all, the question arises whether these assignees are to be paid pro rata, or according to the priority of the several assignments. The circuit court to the assignees in the order of the assignment of the several bonds respectively; first, to the payment of the bond held by Moncure, that being the first assigned; second, to the bond held by McGee; and third, the balance, if any, to be paid to Gordon. From this decree, on petition of Gordon, an appeal was allowed by this court.

The court is of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court. An assignee is a purchaser for valuable consideration of all the securities of the assignor and of all his remedies. Martin v. Nowlin, 2 Burr. R. 978; Jackson v. Willard, 4 John. R. 41; 1 Mad. Ch. 435.

Both deeds of trust and mortgages are regarded in equity as mere securities for the debt, and whenever the debt is assigned, the deed of trust or mortgage is assigned or transferred with it. 2 Lead. Ca. in Eq., pt. 2, p. 236; 1 Lomax Dig. 220; McClintic v. Wise's adm'rs & als., 25 Gratt. 448. The assignee may use these securities and remedies of the assignor as freely and beneficially as could the assignor himself, to whom it was indisputably competent to hold the trust deed as security for the instalment due on a particular bond.

Judge Tucker lays down the rule as follows: "It is said, if several bonds be secured by mortgage, and the fund prove insufficient to pay all, and the bonds be assigned to different persons, who shall have priority? I should conceive he should have preference who was first assignee, for by the assignment he at once acquired preference over his assignor, who then remained the holder of the other bonds; and this preference would not be taken away by subsequent assignments."

In McClintic v. Wise's adm'rs, supra, p. 454, Judge Staples, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "It seems to me the assignment of the bond carries with 838 *it so much of the lien as is necessary to pay the bond. If the vendor means to restrict or qualify the effect of the assignment, he should do so by express reservation. In the absence of such reservation, or of some stipulation qualifying the rights of the parties, the assignee may justly regard the assignment as securing to him the benefit of the lien, so far as it is necessary to his protection or indemnity."

The case before us is a stronger case for asserting the lien in favor of the first assignee than that of McClintic v. Wise. In that case the assignor retained the bond first due, and assigned the bond which last matured. In that case priority was declared in favor of the assignee, although the bond retained by the vendor was first due. Here the appellees (Moncure and McGee) not only have priority in the date of the assignment, but the bonds assigned to them fell due before those assigned to Gordon.

If these latter bonds had been retained by the vendor, it is plain that he could not have successfully asserted his right in a court of equity to any part of the fund arising from a sale of the trust subject until

After the assignees of the bonds first due and assigned by him, had been satisfied. And why? Because he had certainly the right to order a sale of the trust property whenever any one of the bonds became due and there was default in payment. This was the security and the remedy of the vendor. This security and this remedy was transferred by him to the assignees. With the assignment went the lien for the payment of the bonds assigned. Having transferred the bonds first due, the vendor could only subject the fund to the payment of the remaining bonds after those assigned had been satisfied. The assignees having this preference by the assignment over the assignor, cannot be divested of their rights by any subsequent assignment. Gordon, the subsequent assignee of the bonds last due, can have no better rights or larger remedies than the vendor. He simply stands in his shoes, having all his rights and remedies, but no other, and cannot deprive the first assignees of the rights and remedies transferred by the same assignor to them before the assignment to him.

As between the assignees, the maxim prior in tempore portior in jure must apply; and the appellees having the first assignment of the debts first due must be paid first.

In some of our sister states, the question here considered has been the subject of judicial consideration, and the decisions have been somewhat conflicting.

In Alabama it was held, that where several notes taken for the purchase money of land are assigned at different times, the assignment of each note is pro tanto an assignment of the vendor's lien, unless expressly waived; and the liens of the several assignees are to be preferred according to the priority of their assignments without reference to the maturity of the notes. Briggsby v. Hair, 25 Alab. R. 327. See also 9 Alab. R. 645, and 4 Alab. 492.

In Pennsylvania, on the other hand, it was held that where a mortgage is given to secure a debt payable in instalments at various times, and five of the bonds were assigned, and the balance retained by the holder, and the fund arising from a sale of the mortgaged premises is insufficient to pay all, the respective assignees, and the mortgagee are entitled to a pro rata dividend of the proceeds. Donley, assignee of McKean v. Hays, 17 Serg. & Rawle 400. In his decision, however, Mr. Chief Justice Gibson dissented in an able and learned opinion; and I think the dissenting opinion is the better law. Mr. Minor, the distinguished and learned professor of law at the University of Virginia, in his valuable "Institutes," referring to a number of authorities, says:

"When there are several notes secured by one mortgage, assigned to successive assignees, and the mortgage is insufficient to pay all, it is the better opinion that they are to be paid in the order of priority of assignment: for upon the first assignment the assignee, upon a deficiency of the fund, would certainly be preferred to the assignor; and any subsequent assignee of any other of the notes could only take subject to all equities; and standing in the same position with the assignor, be excluded, like him, from coming in on the security until the claim of the first is satisfied. It will be observed that this principle is analogous to that which prevails when land, subject to a prior lien, is sold to successive purchasers." 2 Minor's Institutes, p. 347, and authorities there cited.

The counsel for the appellant, in the very able and elaborate note of argument submitted by them, lay much stress upon the provision of the Code, §§ 5 and 6, ch. 117 (Code 1860). These provisions, in my opinion, have no effect upon the question arising in this case, and do not apply to such a deed as the one under consideration. The fifth section simply prescribes what may be the form of a deed of trust "to secure debts or indemnify securities." The sixth section provides, that when sale is made under such a deed, the trustee "shall apply the proceeds of sale first to the payment of expenses attending the execution of the trust, including a commission of five per cent. on the first three hundred dollars, and two per cent. on the residue of the proceeds, and then pro rata (or in the order of priority, if any prescribed by the deed,) to the payment of the debts secured, and the indemnity of the sureties indemnified by the deed, and shall pay the surplus, if any, to the grantor, his heirs, personal representatives or assigns."

This provision manifestly applies to deeds of trust, securing different creditors and sureties; to cases where more than one debt is secured, and more than one surety indemnified. These sections certainly do not apply to a deed where a single debt is secured. It was never intended, and cannot be so construed, to fix the rights of assignees of an instalment of the same debt which has been assigned for value. The deed of Kepler is not a statutory deed "to secure debts or indemnify sureties," but is an ordinary deed of trust to secure a single debt, payable in instalments, to a single creditor, payable at different times prescribed in the deed, and assigned at different periods to different assignees. To such a case the pro rata distribution prescribed by the statute can have no application, but the assignees, upon a deficiency of the trust fund, must be paid according to the priorities of their respective assignments.

Upon the whole, I am of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the circuit court, and that the same must be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

842 *Routh & al. v. Nash's Adm'r & als.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

Wills—Construction.—Testator names three of his nieces whom he says he has taken care of from their infancy, and he wishes them still provided for, and for that purpose he wishes the whole of his estate, both real and personal, kept together, and so much of the proceeds thereof as might be essential to their genteel and comfortable support applied in that way, so long as they should continue unmarried; and then he gives his estate to certain persons and these nieces. But this postponement of distribution was only to secure his nieces during a state of dependence, such comfortable support as they needed, but not to deprive those interested from that share in the estate, when such provision shall be made for the nieces as shall ensure such support.

Same—Codicil Explaining.—By a codicil made the same day, testator says: In speaking of a comfortable and genteel support for my said nieces during the time they remain single, I think the sum of $800 each, provided my estate will afford it, ought to secure the end designed. Held: The testator has designated what he deems a proper provision, and it will be fixed at that.

In January 1855 John H. Nash, of the city of Norfolk, died, having made his will, which was duly admitted to probate in the circuit court of Norfolk, and Wm. W. Lamb qualified as administrator with the will annexed.

By his will he in the first place gave to his three nieces, Virginia N. Routh, Sarah A. Routh, and Martha R. O. Portlock, equally to be divided among them, any and all sums of money which might be due him at the time of his death, from the provident societies of Norfolk and Portsmouth, of which he was a member. He then says:

My nieces, Virginia N. and Sarah
843 *A. Routh, and Martha R. O. Portlock, I have taken care of from their infancy, and I wish them still provided for; and for that purpose, in addition to what I have given to them above, I wish the whole of my estate, both real and personal, kept together, and so much of the proceeds thereof as may be essential to their genteel and comfortable support, applied in that way, so long as they shall continue unmarried; and after the marriage of my said nieces, or their death, I wish the same to be divided among my brothers, naming several, and Emily Hedges and my said nieces, naming them. * * * * * Fearing that some difficulty may arise in having confined the distribution of my estate to the marriage of my said nieces, I hereby declare, that such was designed only to secure to them, and each of them, during a state of dependence, such comfortable support as they needed, but not to deprive those interested, from their share in the estate, when such provision shall be made for them as shall insure such support.

By a codicil to his will made on the same day, the testator says: In speaking of a comfortable and genteel support for my said nieces during the time they remain single, I think the sum of three hundred dollars each, provided my estate will afford it, ought to secure the end designed.

The administrator seems to have supposed that the will required him to keep the whole estate together, and to pay the debts out of the profits; and until this was done, the nieces of the testator were not to receive the annual provision made for them.

In March 1858 these nieces instituted their suit in equity against the administrator and the legatees, to recover the provision made for them. At this time Miss Portlock was married, and she of course 844 only *claimed hers up to the time of her marriage in 1856.

In June 1858 accounts were directed to be taken; and from the reports of the commissioner it appeared that the administrator had paid a considerable amount of debt, and there remained in October 1858 of indebtedness to be paid, to himself $114.01, and a legacy of $25 to a negro woman who had lived with the testator for several years; and fixing the bequest to the nieces at $300 a year from the testator's death, there was due to each of the Miss Rouths $1,308, and to Martha R. O. Portlock, who had married Rowland R. Doggett, $550. The net income of the real estate was $745.38, and of the personal estate $194.25—$939.63.

The decree having directed the commissioner to enquire and report whether the sum of $300 per annum specified in the codicil of the testator's will, was a reasonable and proper allowance for the comfortable support of the said annuitants, according to the true meaning of the will; and if not, what other sum, greater or less, would be a reasonable and proper allowance to that end; the commissioner reports that whilst he was of opinion that the said sum of $300 per annum was too small a sum for the comfortable and genteel support of the annuitants, yet, considering the capability of the testator's estate on which said annuities are charged, the sum was as large as the estate could afford.

To this report Virginia N. and Sarah A. Routh excepted, on the ground that the allowance made them by the report was wholly inadequate; and that a much larger sum ought to have been allowed for that purpose. That in making the allowance the commissioner ought to have acted with reference to the state and condition of the said plaintiffs, and the circumstances of the estate of the testator, and the annual rents and 845 profits *thereof; and in view of these the sum should have been larger.

The cause came on to be heard in January 1859 when the court held that the plaintiffs were entitled to their annuities from the death of the testator, with interest, to be paid out of the profits of the estate remaining after the payment of debts; that as the testator had made no provision for the payment of his debts, the administrator should have regarded the whole personal estate, including slaves, as the primary fund for the payment of debts; and as the amount of the profits of the real estate applied to their payment was more than the amount due to the annuitants, they were entitled to be paid by a sale of the personal property; and decreed that Lamb should sell three slaves named, and out of the proceeds of the sale, pay first the expenses of sale;

second, the debts, including the legacy of $25; and then apply the balance of the proceeds pro rata to the payment to the plaintiffs of the sums of money respectively due them, as ascertained by the commissioner's report. And Lamb was directed to continue to rent out the real estate of the testator until the further order of the court.

In May 1862 a commissioner's report of Lamb's transactions since the last report was filed. This included the proceeds of the sale of the slaves; and the payment to the plaintiffs of the amounts decreed to them. And this terminated the proceedings in the cause until 1870, when it was revived against representatives of several of the defendants who had died, and a further account was ordered. This account was returned in November 1872, showing that nothing was due to the plaintiffs Virginia N. and Sarah A. Routh, they having each received the sum of $300 per annum each year since the death of the testator, 846 or an amount equal thereto; *that the net income of the estate from rents was $937, and that there was a balance in the hands of the administrator of $1,185.38, which was apportioned among the legatees of Nash as directed in his will.

The cause came on to be heard on the 21st of December 1872, when the court confirmed the report, to which there was no exception, and made a decree distributing the amount reported to be in the hands of the administrator, among the legatees. And thereupon Virginia N. and Sarah A. Routh applied to a judge of this court for an appeal; which was allowed.

Scarburgh & Duffield, for the appellants.

Baker & Walke, for the appellees.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion that, whilst the testator directed his whole estate, real and personal, to be kept together so long as his three nieces, named in the will, continued unmarried, "and so much of the proceeds thereof as may be essential to their genteel and comfortable support," to be applied to that object, if the proceeds or income from his estate exceeded the sum essential for that purpose, the excess should be distributed without delay, amongst the other objects of his bounty, including also his said nieces. He expressly declares that the limitation on the distribution of his estate, until the marriage of his nieces, was not designed to deprive others, who were also objects of his bounty, of their share in his estate, when provision shall have been made, for "such comfortable support" of his nieces "as they needed."

But the terms "genteel and comfortable," 847 are very *indefinite. They have no exact and precise meaning; and would convey different ideas to different ears. What one would regard as genteel and comfortable, another might think was very uncomfortable and not at all genteel. The testator, probably to remove difficulty on this score, indicates in a codicil to his will, what he meant by a genteel and comfortable support, by saying that he thinks the sum of $300 each, ought to secure it. That was perhaps the best definition or description that he could have given, of what, according to his ideas, would constitute a genteel and comfortable support for his nieces. But, lest it might be construed that he intended his nieces to have the sum designated whether or not, he uses the precaution to insert the words, "provided my estate will afford it." And his deeming it necessary to make this qualification, implies that he himself when preparing his will, understood the language he was using to import a reduction of the legacies of support to a fixed sum, an annuity of $300 to each, and hence he inserts the above qualification, lest it might be too heavy a draft on his estate. Why should he have mentioned any sum unless he intended it as a restriction? He uses words to show that it might not reach that sum, but gives no intimation that in any event it should exceed that sum.

The court is strongly inclined to construe this clause in the codicil restricting the legacies of support so as not to exceed an annuity of $300 to each.

But if it should not be so construed, it is a clear indication by the testator himself, what sum he regarded as sufficient to satisfy the charge he made upon his estate for the genteel and comfortable support of his nieces, and the court would not be warranted in increasing the appropriation, unless it 848 clearly appeared from the evidence in the record, that the testator had *designated that amount under a misconception, and that to restrict the annuitants to it would defeat the testator's manifest intention and purpose of benefaction to them. But this is not shown by the record. Indeed there is no evidence in the cause to show that the annuity of $300 to each, is not sufficient for their support in the manner contemplated and desired by the testator. The court is of opinion therefore to affirm the decree of the circuit court.

Decree affirmed.

849 *Barton v. Bowen & Wife.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Confederate Transactions—Adjustment.—In the adjustment of confederate transactions, to lay down fixed, unbending rules of decision applicable to all cases, is not only unjust, but in the nature of things utterly impracticable. Every case must depend upon its particular circumstances. The measure of relief must vary according to the equities of the parties.
2. Same—Fiduciaries—Scaling.—The mother of G in her will expressed an earnest wish that her daughter G might be educated, so as to fit her for teaching, and this was the wish of G's family. Accordingly B, the guardian of G, kept her at school during the years 1860, 1861, 1862 and 1863, and paid the expenses of her board and tuition by moneys collected upon ante-bellum debts, a part of it his own, and a part of her estate. In settling the guardian's account, his payments are not to be scaled as of the dates of the payments; but he will be allowed what would have been a just charge in good money for the board and tuition. In this case he was allowed what he paid for the years 1860 and 1861, and $350 a year for 1862, 1863.

3. Guardian and Ward—Using Ward's Principal for Board and Education.*—In paying the ward's expenses for board and tuition, the guardian expended the principal of her personal estate. As a court of equity would have authorized the expenditure, if application had been made to the court for authority to do it before it was done, a court of equity will approve and confirm it after it is done.

This was a suit in equity in the circuit court of Fauquier county brought in June 1871, by Henry C. Bowen and Georgie C., his wife, who before her marriage was Georgie C. Rothrock, against her former guardian William S. Barton, for a settlement of his account as guardian. This guardianship commenced in 1859, and probably continued until some time after the war. The account was referred to a 850 commissioner, *who made his report. The only questions in this court were whether certain payments made by Mr. Barton for the board and tuition of his ward during the war, were to be scaled, and whether the principal of her personal estate was properly expended upon the ward. The commissioner reduced the charges to what he deemed a reasonable compensation for the board and tuition; and the plaintiffs excepted, insisting that the guardian should only be allowed for the scaled value of the money at the time of the payments.

The cause came on to be heard on the 23d of March 1872, when the court held that the payments of the guardian should be scaled to their true value, and that the guardian should be credited to the full value of the personal estate expended upon the ward; and recommitted the report.

The cause came on again to be heard on the 9th of September 1872 when the court made a decree in favor of the plaintiffs for $306.46 with interest on $277.41, part thereof, from the first of September 1872. And Barton thereupon applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed. The facts are sufficiently presented in the opinion of Staples, J.

Guy & Gilliam, for the appellant.

Johnston & Royall, for the appellees.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

*Guardian and Ward—Expenditure of Ward's Principal for Board and Education.—See the following cases, citing the principal case with approval: Sedgwick v. Taylor, 84 Va. 823, 6 S. E. Rep. 226; Cogbill v. Boyd, 77 Va. 455; Wallis v. Neale, 43 W. Va. 537, 27 S. E. Rep. 230. Further see, 1 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 472.

This case is easily distinguishable from that of Bird's committee v. Bird, 21 Gratt. 712. There the guardian had expended in the support and maintenance of his ward five hundred dollars in January 1865, and eight hundred dollars in March thereafter in confederate currency—thirteen hundred dollars in two months. Notwithstanding the enormous depreciation of the 851 *currency at that time, he claimed credit in his settlement for the full nominal amount of these expenditures. The guardian did not pretend that he had used the ward's money in making these disbursements, or that he had collected for that purpose debts due him individually in a sound currency. The fact was, that he had appropriated the money of the ward before the war, and he sought to discharge this liability with a worthless currency. The court was compelled to reduce that currency to its true value, or to allow a credit for the nominal amount expended. There was no middle ground, no materials for an adjustment of the guardian's claims upon any basis of a just compensation. But in adopting the true value of the currency in that case, the court did not mean that this measure of recovery must be inflexibly adhered to under all circumstances. In the adjustment of these confederate transactions, to lay down fixed, unbending rules of decision, applicable to all cases, is not only unjust, but, in the nature of things, utterly impracticable. Every case must depend upon its particular circumstances. The measure of relief must of course vary according to the equities of the parties.

In the case before us, the appellant states both in his answer and deposition, that the disbursements made by him as guardian for the support and education of the ward were derived partly from collections of ante-bellum debts due him individually, and partly from debts due the ward of the same character. He is unable to state the amount derived from each source in consequence of the loss of many of his books and papers by the great fire of Richmond in 1865. There is nothing in the record tending in the slightest degree to throw discredit upon these statements. They must therefore be taken as true.

852 *The circumstances under which the disbursements were made were of a peculiar character. It was understood that the appellee (female) would adopt teaching as her avocation. To that end it was the earnest wish of her friends she should receive a liberal education. Her mother was so strongly impressed with this idea, that in her will she made it the subject of a special provision. She declared it to be her wish that her executor shall hold all funds and property which might belong to her daughter, and apply the interest towards her support and education; and she authorized him to dispose of the principal of her estate for the same purpose according to his discretion. In accordance with the wishes of her family, and as it seems in pursuance of an arrangement made in the lifetime of her mother, the appellee, in the year 1860, was placed in the family of Mrs. W. K. Gordon, to be educated with the daughters of the latter. At the suggestion of the appellee's elder sister, she was afterwards sent to Miss Seaton's school in Charlottesville. It is but just to say, that in consideration of the increasing expenses incident to the war, the appellant was of opinion, and suggested that his ward should be boarded with her relatives in the country until the return of peace, and then resume her studies. Her friends objected, however, that by this course the appellee would lose the most important period of her life for study, and for a thorough preparation for the occupation to which she was destined. She was accordingly sent to Charlottesville in the spring of 1862, where she remained two years. There is no doubt but that the education she received under the supervision of her guardian was sufficient for the duties of a teacher, and would have enabled her successfully to maintain herself in life, but for her subsequent marriage.

853 *In 1860 and 1861, the appellee's expenses for tuition and board while at Mrs. Gordon's, amounted to two hundred and seven dollars; which was paid by the appellant as guardian. The payment was made by a check upon the bank in which the appellant kept his deposits. Although the check was probably paid in confederate notes, there is no doubt but the deposits were made in a sound currency, and the payee of the check might legally have demanded payment in the like medium. It is now insisted that this sum thus expended shall be scaled, so as to reduce the charge to the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars. In the year 1862 the appellant paid Miss Seaton about four hundred dollars for the board and tuition of the year; a sum perhaps less than is now required in any desirable female school in Virginia. It is insisted that this sum shall also be scaled to two hundred and fifty dollars. In the year 1863 the appellant expended in board and tuition about seven hundred and forty dollars; which it is insisted shall be reduced by the application of the scale to the sum of ninety dollars. According to this rule the appellee will have received a four years instruction at a cost of about five hundred dollars; and at a loss to her guardian of more than eight hundred dollars. And this loss the appellees are disposed to impose upon the guardian without the slightest scruple; notwithstanding the instruction she received was in accordance with the wishes of her mother and the rest of her family, and was regarded by all as absolutely essential to her future success as a teacher, and her position in society. I think the conduct of the guardian under all the circumstances was eminently proper and considerate. He cannot, it is true, be repaid the nominal amount (dollar for dollar) of his disbursements, because neither the interest nor the principal of the

854 personal estate *justified such an expenditure. He is certainly entitled to be repaid such sum as would constitute a reasonable outlay in the education and maintenance of the ward.

The commissioner to whom the accounts were referred for settlement, has adopted the true measure of the guardian's compensation. In his report he states:

It will be seen by comparing the account, as first stated, with the alternate statement made at request of plaintiff's counsel, that your commissioner did not scale the payment of $207, made by the guardian to Mrs. Gordon, for the ward's board, &c., in 1861, which charge was upon a specie basis; hence its payment ought not, in the opinion of your commissioner, to be scaled. But as to the payments to Miss Seaton for the board and tuition of the ward for the years 1862 and 1863, which were in excess of the ante-war charges, your commissioner thought it just to both parties to reduce these amounts to what was reasonable compensation, and hence fixed the amount at $350 for each year. But had your comm'r scaled the payments down to their greenback values, as is done in the alternate statement, the ward would have greatly profited by the loss and injury of the guardian. She would only have been charged $235 for the year 1862, and the small sum of $95 for 1863. As this balance in the hands of the guardian was held for the very purpose, as set forth in the will of Mrs. Mary R. Rothrock (the mother), of educating the ward, there is no impropriety in her being charged a reasonable amount for board and tuition, when she actually enjoyed the same and received the benefits. The guardian in his answer declares that the money paid by him cost him dollar for dollar; and from all the evidence in the case it does not appear

855 that it was the purpose of the guardian to take any advantage *of the ward, or that he profited by speculating upon the money in his hands. Under the above state of facts, your commissioner thinks he did right to charge the ward with a reasonable yearly board, and not to reduce the payments made by her guardian for such below that sum by scaling them to greenbacks or gold.

It may be that in allowing the credits claimed by the appellant the principal of the ward's personal estate will be absorbed. So far as the property derived from the mother is concerned, the appellant was authorized by the will to dispose of it at his discretion in educating the ward. But without this, if the disbursements of the guardian are such as the court would have authorized had the application been previously made, they will be allowed, although made without authority. Had the guardian in the year 1860 applied to a court of chancery for authority to expend $350 in the education of the ward, there is no doubt it would have been given. Such an expenditure would then have been regarded as eminently proper and judicious. The court is as competent to allow it now as then.

I think the appellant is entitled to a decree in conformity with the views of the commissioner already adverted to. There is the greater satisfaction in arriving at his conclusion, because it is shown by this record that the action of the guardian met with the unqualified approval of the husband of the ward. On two occasions the expenditures of the appellant were fully disclosed to him. He was informed of the circumstances under which they were made, and of the extent and nature of the credits claimed. He not only made no objection, but he expressed his entire satisfaction with the accounts. It was not until after the institution of the present suit that 856 the application of the *scale to all the disbursements in confederate currency was so strongly insisted upon by the appellee.

Upon the whole, I think the decree of the circuit court must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with the views herein expressed.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the appellant in the settlement of his accounts as guardian ought to be allowed such sum or sums as under the circumstances would constitute a just and proper expenditure for the education and maintenance of the female appellee; and to this end he is entitled to a credit for the sum of two hundred and seven dollars, paid in the year 1862, on account of the board of the said female appellee in the years 1860 and 1861; and he is entitled to a further credit of three hundred and fifty dollars for each of the years 1862 and 1863, on account of payments made during the same period for the education and board of the female appellee; and the circuit court therefore erred in holding that all confederate items of payments or receipts, in the account of the appellant as guardian, should be scaled to their true value. Therefore for the error aforesaid, it is decreed and ordered that the decree of the said circuit court be reversed and annulled, and that the appellant recover against the appellees his costs by him expended in the prosecution of his appeal aforesaid here; and the cause is remanded to the said circuit court for further proceedings to be had therein in accordance with the principles of this decree.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said circuit court of Fauquier county.

Decree reversed.

857 *Bedinger v. Wharton & als.

September Term, 1876, Richmond.

Equitable Separate Estate.—W died in 1858, and by his will, made a few days before his death, he devised and bequeathed the residuum of his estate, consisting of land, slaves, &c., to H, in trust "for the sole use and benefit" of his daughter G, his only child, then about fourteen years of age, to manage it for her, giving to her the rents during her life; with power in H and G, by their joint consent and act, to sell such portions of the estate for the convenience of management as may be desirable and beneficial to G, the proceeds of sale to be invested on the same trust; and at her death to her children then alive, and the descendants of such as were dead. If G shall die unmarried or without such children &c., she to have the power of disposing of the property by will; and if no will, then over to his brothers. G marries J in 1859, and in 1862, in a cause in which G is plaintiff, H is released from the trust, and J is appointed in his place to hold the property for her sole and separate use. In September 1864 J and G sell and convey the land to B for $56,800 cash in confederate money, when it was depreciated as twenty-five for one; G being then under the age of twenty-one years; though B did not know that. In August 1869 G and her two infant children file their bill against B to set aside the sale and conveyance of the land. Held:

1. Same—Words Creating.—That though the words "for the sole use and benefit" are not the most appropriate to vest in G a separate estate, yet looking to the whole provision it is obvious that such was the intention of the testator.
2. Fiduciaries—Breach of Trust—Confederate Money.—The sale of the land for confederate money, depreciated as it then was, and daily sinking in value, was a breach of his trust on the part of J.
3. Same—Same—Parties to.—B was a privy to and participated in the breach of trust by J; and though the evidence shows that he acted in good faith in the purchase, the sale and conveyance is void.
4. Infants—Voidable Contracts.—G having been under the age of twenty-one years, her deed is 858 *voidable; and by her bill in August 1869 to set aside the conveyance, she expressed her purpose to avoid it.
5. Same—Same—Laches.—G having only come of age in 1865, and being still a married woman, in the then condition of the country and the law, she had not by her laches lost her right to avoid the deed when she filed her bill in 1869.
6. Same—Same—Restoring Consideration.—Whether a contract is executed or executory, it cannot be avoided by an infant on the ground of his infancy, after attaining lawful age, without restor-

*Fiduciaries Receiving Confederate Money.—In the case of Patterson v. Bondurant, 30 Gratt. 95, the principal case is cited for the following proposition: "The doctrine has been well settled by several decisions of this court, that a fiduciary is not justified in receiving greatly depreciated currency in payment of a gold debt, unless it was necessary for the payment of debts or legacies, or unless other circumstances in relation to the safety of the debt or the condition of the estate make it expedient and proper." See also, Wayland v. Crank, 79 Va. 609, citing the principal case; Tosh v. Robertson, 27 Gratt. 270, and also Dickinson v. Helms, 29 Gratt. 462, and note.

Infants—Voidable Contracts—Restoration of Consideration.—In Abernethy v. Phillips, 82 Va. 773, 1 S. E. Rep. 118, the court said: "It is undeniably true that if infants enter into contracts, and after becoming of age repudiate their contracts, they must make restitution of the consideration remaining in kind in their hands. Mustard v. Wohlford, 15 Gratt. 29; Bedinger v. Wharton, 27 Gratt. 858." See further citations of the principal case in the following decisions: Birch v. Linton, 78 Va. 590; Gillespie v. Bailey, 12 W. Va. 92, 94; Ogle v. Adams, 12 W. Va. 237; 1 NEA Inst. (4th Ed.) 521 et seq.

ing anything which may have been received by him in consideration of the contract, and which may remain in his hands on his arrival at such age.

7. Same—Same—Same—Consumed.—When such contract is executory merely, it can be avoided by the infant after attaining lawful age, without restoring anything which may have been received by him in consideration of the contract, and which may have been consumed by him during infancy, or may not remain in his hands on his arrival at lawful age.

8. Same—Executed Contracts.—QUÆRE: If this last stated principle applies to the case of an executed contract.

9. Same—Same.—Though the purchase money received from B, or a large part of it, was consumed in the support of said infant and her family, she could not become liable on her arrival at age, to refund the consideration which had been received by J from B, or be prevented from disaffirming the said contract and recovering the land from B.

10. Same—Same.—QUÆRE: Whether to the extent that G derived her support from the consideration received from B, or actually received and enjoyed for her sole use and benefit, the said consideration, he should be accountable for rent of the land purchased by him.

11. Fiduciaries—Confederate Money—Burden of Proof.—Even if the power to sell vested in the trustee, and G authorized a sale of the land, the sale of the land in September 1864, for confederate money, when it was so much depreciated in value, and was daily and rapidly depreciating more and more, was a palpable breach of trust, in which B participated, unless there were very peculiar circumstances to warrant or excuse such a sale; and the burden of proving such circumstances devolved on the purchaser.

859 *William Wharton, of the county of Culpeper, died in July 1858, leaving a widow and one child, a daughter about fourteen years of age. He owned a tract of land in the county of about five hundred and sixty-eight acres, slaves and other personal property. His will was made but a few days before his death. By it, after making provision for his widow, and giving some other legacies to his brothers, he gave the residue of his estate to Joseph J. Halsey in trust for the sole use and benefit of his daughter, &c., as set out in the 7th clause of his will; which is given at length in the opinion of Moncure, P.

The widow of William Wharton died in 1859; and in July 1859 his daughter Gabriella intermarried with John S. Wharton.

Halsey, the trustee, assumed the trust, and acted until 1863; when in a suit instituted in the circuit court of Culpeper by Mrs. Wharton, by the decree of that court made in November of that year, Halsey was relieved of his trust, and John S. Wharton was appointed in his place. This decree is also given in the opinion of Judge Moncure.

In 1864 Wharton sold the tract of land embraced in the residuum of Wm. Wharton's estate, disposed of by the seventh clause of his will to a trustee for his daughter, to Everett W. Bedinger, for $56,860; which was paid in cash in confederate money; and he and his wife conveyed the land to Bedinger, by deed bearing date the 16th day of September 1864. In this deed, Wharton in his own right as husband, and also as trustee of his wife, conveys to Bedinger, and Mrs. Wharton joins with him. At this time Mrs. Wharton was still a minor under the age of twenty-one years. There was some question in the cause whether she did not tell the counsel of the purchaser 860 that she was of *full age; but this court was of opinion that she did not. Certainly neither she, nor her friends who were present, one of them actively promoting the sale, gave to the purchaser or his counsel any intimation that she was not twenty-one years old.

With $30,000 of the proceeds of said sale, Wharton purchased a house and lot in Richmond, where he was residing with his family, and took the conveyance to himself. This deed bears date the 13th September 1864. He afterwards sold it, and he and his wife united in a deed, dated January 5th, 1865, conveying it to the purchaser; Mrs. Wharton being still a minor. What further was done with the purchase money of the land in Culpeper does not appear, though it is probable that much of it was consumed in support of the family.

In August 1869, Mrs. Wharton and her two infant children, by their next friend John W. Ashby, instituted their suit in equity in the circuit court of Culpeper, against Everett W. Bedinger, and others, to set aside the sale and conveyance to Bedinger, on the ground that she was under the age of twenty-one years when she executed the deed, and that the trustee had violated the trust in selling the land, and Bedinger, the purchaser, had concurred with him in this breach of trust.

Bedinger answered the bill, denying on his part any intended injustice to the plaintiff, saying that he had, a very short time before his purchase, sold his own farm in Orange county for confederate money; that his attention was called to the plaintiffs' land by John W. Ashby, the next friend of the present plaintiffs in the suit, who never intimated to him any difficulty about the title; that he was informed by his attorney who was his agent in the purchase, 861 that both the plaintiff *and her husband informed him at the time of the execution of the deed, that she was of full age. And he further insists that the will of Wm. Wharton does not vest in his daughter a separate estate; and for that reason her husband joined in the deed in his own right, as well as trustee.

The cause came on to be heard on the 14th of June 1872, when the court made a decree, setting aside the sale and conveyance to the defendant Bedinger, directing him to deliver possession of the land to John S. Wharton, the trustee, who should hold it subject to the trusts of the decree of the 2nd of November 1863, and upon the further trusts of the will of William Wharton. Wharton and wife were directed to convey to Bedinger all their interest in the house and lot in Richmond, which had been purchased by Wharton as hereinbefore stated. And a commissioner was directed to take an account of rents and profits from the 16th of September 1864, making a rest in the account on the 12th of July 1869; and also an account of the value of permanent improvements put upon the land between the 16th of September 1864 and the 12th of July 1869. And thereupon Bedinger applied to this court for an appeal from the decree; which was allowed. The other material facts in the case are stated by Judge Moncure in his opinion.

Field & Gray, and Lucas, for the appellant.

Green & Williams, for the appellees.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion that by the seventh clause of the will of William Wharton, 862 deceased, the residuum of his estate is given to Joseph J. Halsey in trust for the separate use of his daughter, Gabriella D., during her life; and that John S. Wharton, with whom she afterwards intermarried, acquired by such intermarriage no beneficial interest in the said estate. Though an infant of tender years at the time of her father's death, and though when he made his will he had no particular marriage of his said daughter in contemplation, yet it was competent for him to give property to her for her separate use, in contemplation of her future marriage generally, the effect of which gift would be, that she would be entitled to a separate use in such property during the existence of any future married state into which she might enter. Whether he made such a gift to her of the residuum of his estate, by the seventh clause of his will, is a question of intention, depending upon the true construction of the will. The intention to create such an estate is generally plainly expressed by appropriate words. But frequently it must be ascertained by construction, especially where the instrument on which the question arises, as in this case, is a will. The seventh clause of the will in this case is in these words:

"Seventhly. All the residue of my estate, real and personal, I hereby devise and bequeath to Joseph J. Halsey, to hold the same in trust for the sole use and benefit of my daughter Gabriella, and to manage the same for her, giving to her the rents, hires, issues and profits thereof during the term of her natural life, with power in the said trustee and the said Gabriella, by their joint consent and act, to sell such portions of the estate for the convenience of management as may be desirable or beneficial to my said daughter; the proceeds arising from such sales to be invested as the said trustee and my daughter Gabriella 863 shall jointly determine, and be held in trust by my said trustee for the sole use and benefit of my said daughter Gabriella during the term of her natural life, and after her death to be divided equally amongst her children living at the date of her decease, and the representatives of such as may die leaving children; and in the event of my said daughter's dying unmarried, or having been married, without leaving children living at the time of her death, then my will is, that my estate, subject to the provisions and legacies hereinbefore made for my wife and others, shall pass and go to such persons, and in such proportions and manner as my said daughter Gabriella shall, by her will duly executed, appoint; and in the event of my said daughter's decease without children and without leaving a will, then that my estate shall be equally divided between the children of my brothers, share and share alike."

The testator died shortly after the date of his will, which was on 16th day of July 1858. The will was recorded August 16th, 1858. He had but one child, the said Gabriella D., who was born on the 20th day of May 1844, and was therefore only a few months over fourteen years of age when her father died. She was the chief object of his bounty, the other objects being his wife, mother, brother and sister, who were provided for by prior clauses of his will. By the 8th and last clause, he nominated William J. Wharton, Joseph J. Halsey, and John Wharton his executors, and they duly qualified as such. The widow of the testator died in 1859; and about a week thereafter, to-wit in July 1859, their daughter, the said Gabriella, intermarried with John S. Wharton. They were married in Washington city. Joseph J. Halsey, the trustee named in the residuary clause of the will aforesaid, accepted and undertook the trust thereby reposed in him, and 864

*continued to act as such trustee until the 2nd day of November 1863; when by a decree of the circuit court of Culpeper county, made in a suit brought by the said Gabriella D. Wharton against the said Joseph J. Halsey trustee, &c., and John S. Wharton, the said Halsey was released from the trusteeship aforesaid, and the said John S. Wharton was "appointed trustee in the place and stead of the said Joseph J. Halsey, to hold in trust for the sole and separate use and benefit of the plaintiff Gabriella D. Wharton, all of the estate bequeathed and devised for her benefit and use, with such rights and powers over, and subject to such responsibility concerning the same, as the said Joseph J. Halsey had, or was subject to, by virtue of the said will; but this decree," it was further declared, "shall be suspended and of no effect, unless and until the said John S. Wharton shall, before the court or before the clerk thereof in his office, execute bond with good security, in a penalty of $25,000, payable to the commonwealth of Virginia, and conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as such trustee."

John S. Wharton complied with the condition of the said decree by executing bond with security as thereby required; and afterwards, to-wit: on the 16th day of September 1864, acting as such substituted trustee, sold and conveyed a large and valuable portion of the trust subject to-wit: 568½ acres of land, to the appellant E. W. Bedinger, for $56,805 in confederate money. It is stated in the deed that it is, "between John S. Wharton in his own right, as husband of Gabriella D. Wharton, as trustee of his said wife, by virtue of an appointment by the circuit court of chancery of Culpeper county, Virginia, by decree entered on the 2nd day of November 1863, and Gabriella

D. Wharton his wife, both of Richmond city, Virginia, of the first part, *and 865 Everett W. Bedinger, of Orange county, Virginia, of the second part;" and that it "witnesseth, that in order that the estate of Wm. Wharton, dec'd, devised by him unto his daughter, the said Gabriella D. Wharton, may be more conveniently and profitably managed for the sole use and benefit of the said devisee, Gabriella D. Wharton, and in consideration of the sum of" money aforesaid to them in hand paid by the said purchaser, the said parties of the first part convey to him by the said deed, with general warranty, the tract of land aforesaid.

By the 7th clause of the testator's will, the residuum of his estate is given to a trustee "for the sole use and benefit" of his daughter. While these are not the most appropriate words for creating a separate estate, and while the word "separate" would have been more appropriate for that purpose, and would have left no room for doubt as to the intention of the testator, yet there are cases in which it has been held that the words "for the sole use and benefit," especially when used in connection with the appointment of a trustee to hold for that purpose, are sufficient to create a separate estate. 2 Story's Eq. § 1382; Nixon v. Rosel, 12 Gratt. 425, and cases there cited.

But it is unnecessary to decide in this case what would have been the effect if these words only had been used in connection with the appointment of a trustee, and whether they would have sufficiently indicated an intention to create a separate estate. It is very clear that we may look at the whole residuary clause to ascertain whether such an intention is thereby sufficiently indicated; and if so, effect will be given to the intention, just as much as if a separate estate had been expressly given, in the most direct and appropriate 866 *terms. Id.; and Prout v. Roby, 15 Wall. U. S. R., 471.

Now, looking at the whole clause together, it would seem that there can be no room for doubt as to the intention of the testator; and that he certainly intended to create a separate estate in his daughter, and to guard it effectually against the marital rights of any husband she might marry. Such rights would have been wholly inconsistent with some of the most important trusts created by the clause. It is true the daughter was not only unmarried when the will was made, but was then an infant, and quite young, and no particular marriage of said infant was then in contemplation. It was clearly in the contemplation of the testator, however, that his daughter might, and probably would, marry and have children. And though any future husband she might have is not provided for, nor even referred to in the clause, it expressly provides for any children she might leave, and also for the event of her dying without children: disposing of the estate, in either event, without reference to any right or interest of any husband she might have.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to suppose, that with the subject of the marriage of his daughter in his mind, and thus providing for the issue of such marriage, and the event of there being no such issue in existence at her death, there would have been no reference whatever in the clause to the existence or non-existence of her husband, if it had been intended that the estate left in trust "for the sole use and benefit" of his daughter should be subject to the marital rights of any husband she might have. These important words "for the sole use and benefit," twice occur in the clause, and in each instance to show the purpose for 867 which the trustee should hold and manage the *trust subject. In the former instance the trustee is directed "to manage the same for her, giving to her the rents, hires, issues and profits thereof during the term of her natural life; with power in the said trustee and the said Gabriella, by their joint consent and act, to sell such portions of the estate for the convenience of management as may be desirable or beneficial to my said daughter; the proceeds arising from such sales to be invested as the said trustee and my daughter shall jointly determine, and be held in trust by my said trustee for the sole use and benefit of my said daughter during the term of her natural life, and after her death to be" disposed of as further provided in the clause. It must be manifest how inconsistent with all, or nearly all, of the trusts of this clause, would be the idea of any marital rights of her husband in the trust subject.

This view of the case renders it unnecessary to decide what would be the effect of the decree, which substituted her husband as trustee in the place of the one appointed by the will, and which declares that the substituted trustee is to hold the trust subject, "for the sole and separate use and benefit of the said Gabriella D. Wharton." We need not, therefore, decide whether the question of separate estate be not in fact res adjudicata in this case, and between the parties thereto. Certainly her husband had a right, so far as he was concerned, to waive and relinquish his marital rights, if he had any, and to sanction any construction of the court as to the existence or non-existence of such rights, adopted in a suit to which he was a party. And any subsequent purchaser of the trust subject from the trustee, with full knowledge that such construction had been adopted and acted on, as was the case here, would seem to stand on the same ground with the husband in regard to any claim to marital rights in the *subject. But it is unnecessary, as before stated, to decide that question in this case.

The learned counsel for the appellant refers to the case of Gilbert v. Lewis as having been reported in 66 Eng. Ch. R. 38, and decided in 1862, upon which he places much reliance; and he expresses the hope that the court will attentively consider the case. We have accordingly examined and attentively considered it. But we do not think that it is at all in conflict with what we have said. We find the case reported in 1 DeGex, Jones & Smith's Reports, p. 38. It is a decision of Lord Chancellor Westbury, and only decides that a mere devise to a woman for her sole use and benefit does not sufficiently indicate an intention to limit the devised property to her separate use. There, no trustee was interposed, and there was nothing to indicate an intention to create a separate estate but the words, "for her sole use and benefit." The chancellor in delivering his opinion said: "There is no trust created by the will. There are no words indicative of exclusive enjoyment beyond those that I have mentioned. There is no such machinery, in short, provided by the will, as is requisite in effect for the creation, or at all events for the administration of the separate estate of a married woman. The devise is a legal devise, and the proposition is, that the words, 'for her sole use and benefit,' manifest a clear intention on the part of the testator, that in the event of subsequent coverture of his widow, she should be entitled to a separate interest in the property." He then proceeds to review the cases on the subject, and concludes thus: "There is no case of a will containing a disposition to a woman, either single or becoming discoverd immediately on the death of the testator, in which these simple words, unconnected with a gift to trustees, have been made the *foundation of a decision that the devisee takes a separate estate. I entirely concur in the observations of Lord Brougham in the case of Tyler v. Lake, (2 Russ. & Myl. 183), that the words, to exclude the operation of the legal rule transferring the estate to the husband upon subsequent coverture, must be clear, and afford no room for doubt as to the intention of the testator." Surely these remarks of his lordship do not apply to this case, which is wholly unlike the one in which they were made. Here, a trustee was appointed, the most careful trusts were created, and "such machinery, in short, provided by the will as is requisite, in effect, for the creation, or at all events for the administration of the separate estate of a married woman." The words of the clause are "clear, and afford no room for doubt as to the intention of the testator."

The court is further of opinion that the sale aforesaid, made on the 16th day of September 1864, by John S. Wharton as substituted trustee in the place of Joseph J. Halsey, to the appellant Everett W. Bedinger, of the tract of land lying in the county of Culpeper, constituting a part of the residuum and trust subject aforesaid, was a breach of trust in the said substituted trustee, to which the said purchaser was privy, and in which he participated. The sale was made for $56,805 dollars in confederate money, which, at the time of the sale, was so much depreciated in value, that twenty-five dollars of it were worth only one in gold. The gold value of the price at which the land was sold per acre was but four dollars, whereas the value of the land before the war was about twenty-five dollars. Nothing but the most extraordinary circumstances could have warranted such a sale, and the burden of proving the existence of such circumstances devolved on the purchaser, in order to sustain, even if it should *be sustained at all, the validity of the sale. There is certainly no such proof in this record; and the sale is therefore invalid. In saying that the purchaser was privy to, and participated in, the breach of trust aforesaid, we do not mean to impute to him any moral or intentional wrong; but our meaning is that such is the legal effect of the transaction; as will hereafter be more fully explained.

The court is further of opinion, that the said Gabriella D. Wharton, being an infant on the 16th day of September 1864, when the deed by which the said land was conveyed to the said purchaser was executed, the said deed was therefore voidable by the said infant after she arrived at the age of twenty-one years, which was on the 20th day of May 1865; and was actually avoided by her after that event by the institution of this suit to recover the said land and the possession thereof, notwithstanding the execution of the said deed. Mustard v. Wohlford's heirs, 15 Gratt. 329.

The court is further of opinion, that there was no such laches on the part of the said Gabriella D. Wharton in disaffirming her said deed as could prevent her from disaffirming it. Little more than four years elapsed after she arrived at the age of twenty-one years before the institution of this suit; she was a feme covert during all that period; and there were acts of assembly in force during the whole, or nearly the whole of it which prevented the running, even of the act of limitations, much less the operation of presumptions arising from laches and lapse of time.

The court is further of opinion, that there is no error in the decree appealed from is not dismissing the original and amended bills in this case, because neither of them contained any offer to restore the purchase money. Whether a contract of an infant be completely *executed or be executory merely, it is very clear that it cannot be avoided by the infant after attaining lawful age without restoring anything which may have been received by him in consideration of the contract, and may remain in his hands on his arrival at such age. And when such contract is executory merely, it is very clear that it can be avoided by the infant after attaining lawful age, without restoring anything which may have been received by him in consideration of the contract, and may have been consumed by him during infancy, or not remain in his hands on his arrival at lawful age. 1 Am. Leading Cases, edition of 1871, top page 318, marginal 258. Mustard v. Wohlford's heirs, 15 Gratt. 329, 340-342. Whether or not the same principle applies to the case of an executed contract, is a question which was left undecided in the last named case, and has never yet been decided by this court. Nor is it necessary now to decide it, and no opinion, therefore, is intended to be expressed in regard to it.

It does not appear, and is not probable; on the contrary it is extremely improbable, that any part of the consideration received from the appellant for the land sold and conveyed to him as aforesaid, or anything purchased or procured with such consideration or any part of it, remained in the hands of the infant on her arrival at lawful age; or even in the hands of her husband and trustee at that period. The consideration was received altogether in confederate money; which, if retained in the hands of the trustee until the end of the war, which happened not very long thereafter, would have wholly perished. Whether any, and if any, what, part of it was so retained, or what was done with it, does not appear; except that a part of it, to-wit: $30,000, (about one-half of it,) was expended in the purchase of a house and lot in the city of 872 Richmond, *which were conveyed to the husband in his own right, and was afterwards sold and conveyed by him to another person for confederate money; his wife joining him in the deed which was executed to the purchaser, and being still under age at the time of the execution of such deed. Whatever interest the said husband and wife or either of them may have had in the said house and lot at the date of the decree appealed from, was then, in pursuance of the said decree duly conveyed by them to the appellant. What was done with the purchase money received of such purchaser does not appear. No doubt a portion, and perhaps a large portion of the said purchase money, and of the remaining consideration received for the land sold and conveyed to the appellant as aforesaid, was applied to the support of the said infant. But certainly the said infant could not, on that account, have become liable on her arrival at age to refund the consideration which had been received by her husband from the appellant as aforesaid, or be then prevented from disaffirming the said contract and recovering the said land from the appellant. The most that he could justly claim against her, if even he could justly claim to that extent, would be, that while she derived her support, or any part of it, from the consideration received from the appellant as aforesaid, and to the extent to which she so derived such support, or actually received and enjoyed for her sole use and benefit the said consideration, he should not be accountable for rent of the said land. But that question does not now arise in the case, and it is not intended now to decide, nor express any opinion upon it. It may hereafter arise in the court below, when that court comes to act upon the account of rents and profits which remains yet 873 to be taken under the *decree appealed from. The only interest given to her by the will of her father in the residuum of his estate, is to have and enjoy for her sole use and benefit, "the rents, hires, issues and profits thereof during the term of her natural life." He expressly declared that the trustee should hold the trust subject during his daughter's life, and "manage the same for her, giving to her the rents, hires, issues and profits;" which he plainly intended she should receive and enjoy as they accrued, and not dispose of by anticipation; so that she might have the continual means of support during her life. Subject to that life estate, the residuum is given by the will on other and ulterior limitations in which she has no personal interest. In no manner and to no extent is she accountable for the principal of the said consideration, and no benefit which she may possibly have derived from that consideration can prevent her from avoiding the deed executed by her during her infancy as aforesaid and having the property thereby conveyed, retaken and held under the trusts created by the seventh clause of the will.

It is contended by the appellant, that he is entitled to the property now in controversy under that provision of the residuary clause of the will which empowered the trustee and the said Gabriella by their joint consent and act "to sell such portions of the estate for the convenience of management as may be desirable or beneficial to my said daughter; the proceeds arising from such sales to be invested as the said trustee and my daughter Gabriella shall jointly determine, and be held in trust as aforesaid, by my said trustee, for the sole use and benefit of my said daughter during the term of her natural life." It is contended that under this power a good 874 title was sold and conveyed *to the appellant, who was not bound to see to the application of the purchase money.

The testator does not empower the trustee to make a sale of any part of the trust subject, except in conjunction with the said Gabriella, and by their joint consent and act; and then, only such portions of the estate for the convenience of management, as may be desirable or beneficial to his said daughter. His daughter was but fourteen years old at the date of his will, and we cannot suppose that he intended to intrust to her so important a power to be exercised during her infancy, even conceding that he had the right to do so. We must suppose that he intended this power to be exercised, if at all, after her arrival at lawful age. If so, there was no power, even in the trustee, to sell the property at the time the deed was made, and of course the deed is void.

But even if the daughter was empowered to act in making a sale during her infancy; or, if the trustee was empowered to act alone in making it, did it come within the power to sell the whole of the trust subject? or so important a part of it as the tract of land in question, which was no doubt the chief part of the trust subject, and the whole of the real estate embraced therein? Or was it intended to empower the sale of any comparatively small portions of the estate, perhaps slaves or other personalty especially, and then only "for the convenience of management."

But however these questions may be, it is unnecessary now to decide them. Certainly the sale of the land under the power, even conceding its existence, for confederate money, when it was so much depreciated in value as it was at the time of the sale, and when it was daily and rapidly depreciating more and more, was a palpable breach 875 of trust in which the purchaser participated as aforesaid, unless there were very peculiar circumstances to warrant or excuse such a sale; the burden of proving which circumstances devolves on the purchaser, and there is no such proof in the record. The exposure of the land to the ravages of two contending armies, and the manner in which it had been wasted by them, may have made it desirable and proper, if possible, to exchange it for, or sell it and buy, other land not so much exposed, to be held in trust as aforesaid; and if that had been proved to have been done, it might have warranted or excused the act of the trustee in making such exchange, or sale and purchase. But certainly proof that other property of about the same value with the land sold by the trustee, was acquired by him with the proceeds of said sale, to be held on the same trusts, would be required to validate the said sale, either at law or in equity. If the trustee had sold the land in pursuance of the power in this case, and for good money, a question might well have been raised whether the purchaser was bound to see to the application of the purchase money, according to the rules of law on that subject. But such was not the case. The trustee sold the land, not for good money, but for confederate money, then current, at an enormous depreciation, and daily depreciating more and more. The purchaser paid to him the whole amount of this depreciated purchase money, and no part of it was invested as required by the will in the purchase of other property to be held in trust as aforesaid, but all appears to have been lost, as might well have been expected. And, in the meantime, it seems the trustee has become perfectly insolvent and nothing can be recovered of him.

It may be proper for us to say, in justice to the appellant, before we close our 876 opinion in this case, that *we consider it a very hard one on his part, and have, therefore, decided it against him with great reluctance. He acted in good faith in making the purchase in confederate money, and paying it to the trustee. He had sold his own land for confederate money, shortly before he made the purchase, and applied the money he received to the purchase of the land in controversy, which he was advised and believed his vendors had power to sell and convey. He and his counsel in making the purchase, no doubt believed as they said they did, that the female complainant was over twenty-one years of age when the deed was executed, as she had been for several years married. But though the said counsel was under the impression that he was informed both by Dr. J. S. Wharton and G. D. Wharton, his wife, before the deed was executed, that she was over age; yet we think it appears from the record that the said counsel was not really so informed, but inferred the fact from her appearance, and the length of time she had been married. But it is no doubt true, as he states, that neither Dr. Wharton nor his wife, nor Mr. and Mrs. Glass then living on the land, (the latter being her aunt), nor Dr. J. W. Ashby, a friend and connection of the family, and the next friend of the complainant in this suit, who was active in promoting the sale, ever intimated to him that she was under age, though it does not appear that any of the said parties was influenced by fraudulent motives in failing to give such information. But notwithstanding the hardships of the case on the part of the appellant, we think the law is against him, for the reasons before stated, and decide accordingly.

It is insisted by the appellees, that they are entitled to rents and profits from the 16th of September 1864, or at least from the close of the late war, instead of 877 *from the date of the institution of this suit whereby the contract was disaffirmed by Mrs. Wharton, to wit: the 12th day of July 1869; and they ask that the court will pass on this question for the guidance of the court below, that the case may not be brought back to this court on this point by either party. But as our jurisdiction in this case is appellate only, we do not consider it proper to decide, or express an opinion upon this question, until it shall have been first adjudicated by the court below; we therefore decline to do so.

The decree appealed from is therefore affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

878 *Ober v. Goodridge, Trustee.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

Negotiable Notes—Transfer "Without Recourse."—A case of the transfer of a number of negotiable notes "without recourse," in which it was held, looking to all the circumstances, that the words were to be construed in their liberal sense: and that the transferrer was not liable for the failure to recover from the endorser. If the transferee intended that they should be sued in this instance in their restricted and limited sense, he should have been careful to express his meaning, or have it expressed in plain and unmistakable terms.

This is an appeal from the decree of the circuit court of Westmoreland county, rendered on the 25th day of April 1871, in a foreign attachment suit, in which John Goodridge was plaintiff, and Gustavus Ober, Willoughby Newton, Willoughby Newton, Jr., and William R. Dozier, were defendants. The bill was filed on the 22nd day of October 1869. The plaintiff states, substantially, the following facts therein: that on the 20th day of September 1866, the said Dozier executed a deed of trust, which was duly recorded, and of which a copy was exhibited with the bill, whereby he conveyed to the plaintiff a tract of land lying in said county, in trust to secure the payment of the debts of said Dozier in certain classes; in which deed the plaintiff was empowered to sell the said land either publicly or privately, in his discretion, with the consent of the said Dozier. That in September 1867, the plaintiff with the assent of the said Dozier, sold the said land to the said Ober, a resident of the city of Baltimore in the state of Maryland, and received in payment for the same, the negotiable notes

879 of divers debtors of the *said Ober, of which notes he the said Ober was owner and holder, the amount of which was $4,040.42, and which were due by certain makers and endorsers as set out in a list filed with the bill. That the plaintiff "with the assent of the said Dozier, agreed to take the said paper without recourse to the said Ober, should the makers and endorsers prove insolvent, supposing and believing that the said notes had been all treated regularly as negotiable paper should be; and that the same were, at that time, legal and valid obligations, as well as to the endorsers as to the makers. That at the time of said sale, suits had been brought by said Ober upon the said notes, against the makers and endorsers, in the said court; and the said Ober directed his attorney in the cases—Robert M. Newton, Esq.—to pay over the same to the plaintiff; and the papers were endorsed for the benefit of the plaintiff, trustee as aforesaid. That among these notes was one against Wat H. Tyler, maker, dated 26 January 1861, payable four months after date, at the Bank of Baltimore, for $528.52, endorsed by Thomas S. Rice and S. B. Atwill, which last is now deceased. That in the case of this note, he (said plaintiff) especially looked to the endorser, T. S. Rice, well knowing, and he charges the fact so to be, that the maker, Wat H. Tyler, was at the time, and had been long before, utterly insolvent, and the circumstances of the other endorser Atwill, were doubtful. That at the March term 1868 of said court, the case of Ober, for the benefit of the plaintiff as aforesaid, against Wat H. Tyler, maker, and Thomas S. Rice, endorser of the said note of $528.52, was tried, and recovery was resisted by said Rice, endorser aforesaid, upon the ground

880 That on the *said trial the only protest and notice of protest which the said Ober offered in evidence was that made on the — day of July (ought to be the 29th of May) 1861, and filed in said suit. That the said Ober was present at said trial, aiding the counsel employed by him, and was himself examined as a witness in the case; and admitted on cross-examination by the counsel of said Rice, that at the date of said protest and notice, a state of hostilities existed between the United States of America, of which the state of Maryland was one, and the so-called confederate states, of which Virginia was a part; and further, that all intercourse by mail or otherwise between Maryland and Virginia had been prohibited by authority, and ceased until the year 1865. That the said Ober further admitted at the trial aforesaid, that after the cessation of said hostilities and the resumption of intercourse between Maryland and Virginia, no notice at all of the said non-payment and protest had ever been given by him, said Ober, or any other person interested, to the said T. S. Rice or said S. B. Atwill, endorser aforesaid, actually or otherwise. That the said Rice was also examined at said trial, on oath, and stated that he had never, at any time received notice of said non-payment and protest. That the judge who tried said case took time to consider of his judgment therein; and at the October term of the said court, 1868, gave judgment against the said Wat H. Tyler, maker of said note, for $528.52, with interest from 26th May, 1861, and cost of protest and of suit, and discharged said Rice as endorser, with his costs, upon the ground that no legal notice of said non-payment and protest had been given him by said Ober or any other, or received by said Rice;" all of which, so far as it is matter of record, will appear by reference to a transcript of the said suit of Ober v. Tyler & Rice, filed with the said bill.

881 *The plaintiff then further states in his bill that he is advised that by reason of the matters hereinbefore set forth, the said note was a nullity as to the said endorsers at the time the same was transferred by said Ober to plaintiff in part payment for said land; and that the said Wat H. Tyler being insolvent at said time, and still so, the said Ober is justly indebted to said plaintiff for the amount of said note, with interest and costs as aforesaid; that said plaintiff has, since said judgment was rendered, applied to said Ober to pay him said money; but the said Ober refuses so to do, pretending that the plaintiff, having received the assignment or transfer of said note without recourse to him, has no claim upon him as assignor or transferrer. And the plaintiff charges, that in agreeing to take the said notes without recourse, he looked solely to the solvency or insolvency of the makers and endorsers, and intended to take upon himself the risk of such solvency or insolvency only; and that such was the view and intention of said Ober at the time; and the plaintiff reiterates his charge, that he supposed and believed at the time of said transfer of said notes that they had been so treated by said Ober as to bind all parties, makers and endorsers.

The plaintiff then further states that said Ober is a non-resident of the state of Virginia; that he possesses property and debts due him in the said county, to wit: the land sold him as aforesaid by the plaintiff, a large sum of money due to him by Willoughby Newton, and other debts and effects in the hands of Willoughby Newton, jr., of said county.

The plaintiff therefore prays that the said Ober, said Newton and said Dozier may be made defendants to said bill, and answer the same on oath; that said plaintiff may recover against said Ober the said 882 sum of *$528.52, with interest and costs as aforesaid; that the said Newton may be compelled to disclose what debts they owe to said Ober, or what effects they may have in their hands belonging to him; that the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be attached to pay to the plaintiff in his demands; and in case the said debts and effects shall be insufficient to pay the same, then that the said land, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be sold to pay any deficiency or balance due to him; and that he may have such other and further relief in the premises as the case may require.

The exhibits referred to in the bill are copied in the record in this case, and form a part thereof. No. 2 is a list of the notes which were transferred by said Ober to the plaintiff as aforesaid, showing the names of the makers and endorsers, and amount of the said notes respectively. They are twelve in number, and amount in principal to $4,040.44. At the foot of the list is a writing in these words:

"Montross, September , 1867.

The above claims are this day transferred to John Goodridge, as trustee of William R. Dozier, in consideration of a bargain entered into, and concluded between said William Dozier & Gustavus Ober, to wit: William R. Dozier having sold to said Ober a farm of 225 acres in extent for the amount vested in the said claims, equal to $4,040.44.

Robert M. Newton,
Attorney for G. Ober."

The first note included in said list is the one involved in the present controversy, and is therein thus described:

883 *"W. H. Tyler, endorsed by Thomas S. Rice and S. B. Atwill, $528.52."

Opposite to each of four of the said notes in said list, amounting together to $1,723.05, is written the word "paid."

Exhibit No. 3, referred to in the bill, is a copy of the record in the action at law brought by said Ober against the said Tyler and Rice on the said note for $528.52. It was brought in the circuit court of said county, on the 23d day of July 1867, and was pending at the time of the sale of said land and transfer of said notes as aforesaid, which were made in the same county. The declaration in the action was filed on the first Monday in August 1867, about a month before the said sale and transfer. The note and protest referred to in the declaration were filed therewith and are copied in the record. The note is in the following words and figures, to wit:

"$528.52.

Hague Post-office,
Westmoreland County, Va.,
January 26, 1861.

Four months after date I promise to pay to Thomas S. Rice, or order, five hundred twenty-eight dollars and fifty-two cents payable and negotiable at the Bank of Baltimore, Maryland, without offset.

Wat H. Tyler."

[Endorsed.]—"Thomas S. Rice, pay to John Kettlewell, S. B. Atwill, John Kettlewell, G. Ober, John Kettlewell."

The note was duly presented for payment on the day on which it became payable, to wit: the 29th of May 1861, at the Bank of Baltimore, where it was payable, and being 884 dishonored was duly protested for non-payment. *The notarial certificate is in due form. After stating the demand of payment and protest of the note, the certificate concludes with these words: "Thus done and protested at the city of Baltimore aforesaid; and on the same day I addressed written notices to the endorsers of said promissory note, informing them that it had not been paid; payment thereof having been demanded and refused, and that they would be held responsible for the payment thereof. Notice for Thomas S. Rice I mailed to him: Rice's store, Westmoreland county, Virginia. Notice for S. B. Atwill I mailed to him: Montross, Westmoreland county, Virginia. Notices for the other endorsers I left at their respective places of business. In testimony whereof," &c.

On the 21st of October, 1867, the general issue was plead and joined in the action, and leave was given the defendants to give any special matter in evidence at the trial of the issue. And on the 19th day of October 1868, at a circuit court held for said county, came the parties by their attorneys; and neither party requiring a jury to try the issue joined in the cause, and agreeing to submit the same to the judgment of the court, and the court having heard the evidence adduced, as well by the plaintiff as the defendants, judgment was thereupon rendered by the court against the defendant, Wat H. Tyler, maker of the note, for the amount thereof, with interest and costs as aforesaid, and in favor of the defendant, Thomas S. Rice, endorser of the note, who recovered his costs against the plaintiff. The plaintiff excepted to the judgment, and prayed that the evidence in the case might be certified. No certificate of evidence is copied in the record, and no writ of error or supersedeas appears to have been obtained or applied for to the judgment.

885 *The answer of said Ober was filed at the same time with the filing of the bill, to wit: on the 22d of October 1869. The said defendant states the following facts therein: "That on the day of September 1867 he, at the special instance and earnest request, often repeated, of said William R. Dozier, transferred to the plaintiff, John Goodridge, trustee of said Dozier, certain negotiable notes, then long past due by parties as named in the bill of the plaintiff, in consideration of a tract of land as described in the bill of the plaintiff; that the land was of not more than half the value of the notes transferred, if their amount had been guaranteed; that no guaranty was asked or expected by the plaintiff, but the notes were taken entirely at the risk of the plaintiff for what they were worth, and expressly without recourse; that the plaintiff knew every fact and circumstance connected with the notes as well as the defendant; that the notes were all in the clerk's office as the foundation of suits then pending; and that the notices of protest were all in the clerk's office as the foundation of suits then pending; and that notices of protest and all the facts connected with the protest were filed with the declarations in said suit, and were open to the inspection of said Dozier and his trustee, and your respondent avers were fully examined by them; that if they were ignorant of the legal consequences of these facts, they were ignorant in common with the respondent, and they could not claim relief because of their ignorance of the law. This respondent avers that he was utterly ignorant of the principles of law relied on by the plaintiff as ground for relief; and is assured by counsel, learned in law, that no such principle exists, and that the decision on the law side of this court in the case of Dozier, trustee, v. Tyler & Rice, was entirely

886 *erroneous, and would be reversed on appeal, which appeal it was the duty of the complainant to institute. This respondent utterly denies all fraud or concealment, and affirms that the contract between himself and said Dozier was entirely fair and open on his part; and he is assured, even if the complainant should fail to realize the amount of Tyler's note, the bargain has been very profitable to the said Dozier; that it is true that this respondent was examined as a witness in the case of Dozier's trustee v. Tyler & Rice, and was anxious to give the plaintiff the benefit of any facts within his knowledge; but he knew nothing which was not a matter of public history, and certainly made no admission inconsistent with the facts of the answer and his entire freedom from all responsibility for the notes assigned to the trustee of said Dozier."

On the same day on which the said bill and answer were filed, on the motion of the complainant and by consent of parties, it was ordered that the cause be put upon the argument docket.

No other answer was filed in the cause, and no evidence was taken thereon. Indeed it appears that no process was issued against any of the defendants; and there was no replication to the answer of said Ober. But on the 25th day of April 1871 the cause came on to be heard upon the bill of complainant with the exhibits therewith filed and the said answer, and was argued by counsel: On consideration whereof the court was of opinion, and decided that the complainant on the one hand, and the defendant on the other, when the note of Wat H. Tyler and Thomas S. Rice was assigned by the defendant to the complainant "without recourse," contemplated only the risk of the solvency or insolvency of the maker and endorser of the said note; and the court therefore decreed that the defendant,

887 *Ober, pay to the complainant the sum of $528.52, with interest as aforesaid till paid, and costs. And the court further decreed, that unless the said Ober pay the complainant or his attorney the said sum of money, interest and costs within ninety days from the date of the decree, then a sale of the said land, or so much thereof as might be necessary for the purpose, was decreed to be made by a commissioner appointed by the decree for the purpose and in the manner and on the terms and conditions prescribed by the decree.

To the said decree the defendant, Ober, applied to this court for an appeal; which was accordingly allowed.

R. L. T. Beale and Holladay & White, for the appellant.

Ro. Mayo, for the appellee.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

After stating the case he proceeded as follows:

The court is of opinion that the circuit court erred in deciding that the complainant on the one hand, and the defendant on the other, when the note of Wat H. Tyler and Thomas S. Rice was assigned by the defendant to the complainant, "without recourse," contemplated only the risk of the solvency or insolvency of the maker and endorser of the said note; and in rendering a decree that the said defendant pay to the complainant the amount of said note with interest and costs, as mentioned in the said decree. The bill and answer were filed on the same day; whereupon, on motion of the complainant and by consent of parties, it was ordered that the cause be put 888 upon the argument *docket. And afterwards, the cause came on to be heard upon the bill and answer only, without any other evidence, and without any replication to the answer. In such a case, the facts stated in the answer in relation to the controversy, whether responsive to the bill or not, must be taken to be true. 2 Rob. Old Pr., p. 312, and the cases there cited.

But it is stated as a fact in the bill as well as in the answer, that the assignment aforesaid was "without recourse;" and the question is whether these words are to be construed in this case according to their literal sense, at least so far as to embrace the risk in regard to the sufficiency of proof of the dishonor of the note to charge the endorser; or in the restricted or limited sense in which they were construed by the circuit court?

This court is of opinion that they ought to be construed in their literal sense, at least so far as to embrace the said risk, and not in the restricted and limited sense aforesaid; and that such was the manifest intention of the parties.

The ground on which the circuit court held that the endorser of the said note was not liable, to wit: the supposed insufficiency of proof in regard to notice of the dishonor of the note to the said endorser; was as well known to William R. Dozier, and to John Goodridge, his trustee, the transferee of the note, as to Gustavus Ober the transferer. The former two lived in the county of Westmoreland, where lived also the maker and endorser of the note; and where, too, the note was made and endorsed; though it was payable and negotiable at the Bank of Baltimore. At the time of the transfer, an action had been brought by said Ober against the said maker and endorser of said

note in the circuit court of said county, 889 and *was then pending in said court, and the plaintiff in the action had filed his declaration therein; and with it, as evidence of the presentation and demand of payment and dishonor of the note, and notice thereof to the endorsers, the notarial certificate of protest, &c., which has ever since remained on file among the papers in the said action. This evidence was seen and known to the said Goodridge and Dozier at the time of the transfer of the said note to them by the said Ober; the said note being then on file among the papers of the said action, and remaining there after the transfer. The said transferees became thereafter the beneficiaries in the said action, and prosecuted the same in the name of the said Ober for their own use, upon the evidence which had been filed by him to establish his right to recover in the action, both against the maker and endorser. No doubt the same attorney who brought the action for Ober continued to prosecute it for Goodridge and Dozier after the transfer, and until it was determined. There is no affirmative evidence of this fact in the record, but it may well be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. The fact no doubt is, that the doubt or difficulty in regard to the sufficiency of proof as to the notice of dishonor to charge the endorser, was the cause of the resistance by the endorsers of the demand against them, upon this and other notes of the same kind held by Ober, and of the necessity for the actions which were brought upon them against the said endorsers. And the risk arising from that vexed question was, no doubt, the very risk which induced Ober to transfer the notes "without recourse," in consideration of the purchase of the land. For he expressly says in his answer, that the land was of not more than half the value of the bonds transferred; if their 890 amount had *been guaranteed. The amount of the notes was $4,040.41; and it seems that four of them, amounting to $1,723.05, had already been paid when the bill was filed in this case. Ober in his answer says, that "even if the complainant should fail to realize the amount of Tyler's note, the bargain has been very profitable to the said Dozier." That the question in regard to the sufficiency of the proof of notice to charge the endorser was a vexed one, is plainly evident from the record. The circuit court so considered it, and held the case under advisement until another term after it was submitted, and the judgment when rendered was excepted to, no doubt by the beneficiary plaintiff who then had charge of the action, and who seems by such exception to have then contemplated applying for a writ of error and supersedeas to the judgment. But he never did so.

It is plain that Ober intended by the transfer of the note "without recourse;" that those words should include the risk in question, and they sufficiently express his intention. If the transferee intended that they should be used in this instance in the restricted and limited sense now contended for by him, he should have taken care to express his meaning, or have it expressed in plain and unmistakable words. But he manifestly did not so intend.

We deem it unnecessary to comment on the cases referred to by the learned counsel in their notes of argument in this case. There is nothing in any of them in conflict with the views we have expressed; and both of the two cases mainly relied on by the said counsel respectively, to wit: Crawford v. McDonald, 2 Hen. & Mun. 189, by the counsel for the appellant; and Mays v. Callison, 6 Leigh 230, by the counsel for the appellees, sustain these views.

891 *The decision of the question we have just been considering is, in effect, a decision of this case; and we need not consider any of the other questions arising in it, although there are several others.

The court is therefore of opinion that the decree is erroneous for the reasons aforesaid, and that it ought to be reversed and the bill dismissed.

Decree reversed.

892 *Berkeley v. Smith & als.

November Term, 1876. Richmond.

Trespassers.—J by his will in 1845 gives to his son S a store-house and lot, together with the east side or half of the privy situate on the adjoining lot west; and by a codicil he gives to his son W the said adjoining lot; and in 1848 W sold his lot to B subject to the rights of the owner of the lot given to S, to the east side or half of the privy. The storehouse of S extended back 70 feet to his back line; that of W extended only about 55 feet, leaving a vacant space, on which the privy was located; and there was a door in the side of S's house entering into this vacant space with lights in the door. B being the tenant of S, and on the death of his children shut up the said door, extended his store-house to his back line, one story high, with a flat roof, and built a privy upon the roof. HOLD:

1. Same—Relief against in Equity.—The title of the children of S to the door in the wall of their store and to the east half of the privy being unquestionable, they may without proceeding at law to establish their right, go at once into equity to compel the removal of the obstructions.

2. Same—Compensation against.—If a just compensation may be made to the plaintiffs for the injury done to their property and rights, the court may ascertain and decree such compensation, instead of having the obstructions removed.

This was an appeal from the decree of the corporation court of Alexandria, in a suit in which Hesselius Smith and others, children and heirs at law of Sidney Smith, were plaintiffs, and William N. Berkeley was defendant. The object of the suit was to compel the defendant to remove an addition to his store-house which adjoined a store-house of the plaintiffs, and to repair other injuries he had done to their property. The cause came on to be heard 893 on the 13th of November *1872, when the court held that the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief they asked for, and made a decree that the defendant be perpetually restrained and enjoined from continuing the erections and obstructions set forth in the bill, and that he forthwith remove them, and restore the said premises to the condition in which they were before said erections and obstructions were made by him, &c. From this decree Berkeley applied to this court for an appeal; which was allowed. The case is stated by Judge Anderson in his opinion.

Beach, for the appellant.

Claughton, for the appellees.

Anderson, J. The appellees, who were plaintiffs in the court below, have title in fee to the store-house and lot at the intersection of King and Fairfax streets, in the city of Alexandria, which may be described as the south-west corner lot. Their store-house covers the entire area of the lot, extending back from King's street to its rear boundary line. The appellant owns the adjoining lot west, which is of the same depth, each extending back seventy feet; but the store-house upon the appellant's lot did not extend back from King's street the whole depth of the lot, so that there was an open space in the rear of his store-house of twelve by twenty feet, which was unoccupied, except by a privy. Both lots were formerly owned by Joseph Smith, and were as thus described, when by his will bearing date January 1st, 1845, he devised them as follows: the corner house and lot, together with the east side or half of the privy, situate on the adjoining lot west to his son

William, in trust for his son Sidney;
894 *and by a codicil to his will, the said adjoining lot to his son William, who afterwards, in the year 1848, sold and conveyed the same to the appellant subject to the rights of the owner of the corner lot to the east side or half of the privy. By the death of Sidney Smith, the appellees, who are his heirs at law, became invested with title to the corner lot by descent. The appellant, in the lifetime of Joseph Smith, held possession of the corner store-house and lot, and continued possession thereof as tenant to Sidney Smith; and after his death he continued to hold possession thereof as tenant to his heirs, the appellees, or their guardian, they being infants. And during his tenancy, and the infancy of the appellees, he removed the privy, blocked up the door on the west side of their store-house, which opened on the space in the rear of his store-house, and through which they had access to the privy, and which afforded light and air to their store-house, and extended the first story of his store-house to the rear line of his lot, so as to cover the entire space, which he covered with a flat roof, upon which he erected another privy, which could be approached from the second story of both store-houses, over the roof of his store extension. To give access to the privy, to the tenant of the corner store-house, though it is not alleged or directly proved, it would seem that he must necessarily have to cut a door through the wall of the appellee's store-house from the second story through which to enter upon the flat roof, as there does not appear from the diagram exhibited with the record, or by any evidence in the cause, that there was a door or any opening there before.

The plaintiffs allege in their bill, that they were wholly ignorant of the 895 changes which the appellant *had made in their property, and the invasion of their rights, until the year 1866, and that on the 2nd of April of that year they instituted an action on the case against him, to recover damages therefor, and obtained a verdict for one cent damages, and a judgment for costs—the court certifying that the object of this suit was to try a right, as well as to recover damages. This judgment was affirmed by the district court of appeals, upon a writ of error which was awarded to the defendant. The defendant continuing the nuisance afterwards, the plaintiffs instituted a second action of trespass on the case against him, which resulted in a verdict for one cent damages, and a judgment in their favor for costs, and damages.

The plaintiffs claim, that their rights herein alleged to have been violated by the appellant, and the fact of their violation, have been determined by the said action at law, and cannot now be questioned. The appellant insists that they have not been determined by those actions. The court is of opinion, that the verdict of the jury being general, and responsive to the issue upon all the counts, is a finding in favor of the plaintiffs on all of them, which is confirmed by the judgment of the court, and establishes the plaintiff's right to the east half of the privy, to the door in the west side of their store-house, and the right of egress and ingress through it, to and from the east side of the privy, over the appellant's yard, and to the communication of light and air through it to their store-room, which rights have been violated by the appellant, by his acts and doings aforesaid.

But if the appellee's rights were not clearly established by the judgments at law, they are clearly set out and proved in this chancery suit; and the court is of opinion that the appellees, their right 896 being clear, *might have pursued their remedy in a court of equity without first resorting to a court of law to establish their right. (2 Eden on Injunctions, p. 273; Law of Nuisance, Wood, § 777, and cases cited.)

It might be conceded, that the extension by the appellant of his store-house over the open space in the rear of it and raising the privy to a level with the second story of the appellees' store-house, would not be a substantial violation of the appellees' right to the east half of the privy, provided he had made the change, and given the appellees a commodious and convenient access to it, from their second story, without violating any other of their rights.

But this he has not done, and could not do. What right had the appellant to block up the appellees' door-way in their own building, and thereby exclude light and air from their store-room? What right had he to deprive them of egress and ingress through their door, as they had enjoyed it before he purchased his lot? What right had he to cut a door through the wall of their house, as he probably did, to give access from the second story to the flat roof of his store extension, without their consent?

Thus it appears that whilst the raising of the privy to a higher level by the appellant may not have been in itself a substantial violation of the plaintiffs' right, provided he gave them as convenient a way of access to it over the roof of the extension of his store-house from the second story of their store-house, the execution of the change involved him necessarily in the violation of other important unquestionable rights of the plaintiffs, which seems to be essential to the comfortable enjoyment of their property.

The appellant purchased his store-house and lot when subject to those rights 897 of the plaintiffs, which *must have diminished the value of the property he purchased, and consequently the price he had to pay for it. By the improvements he has made to his store-house he has added to its value. He has increased the annual rental of it, according to the proof in the cause, from $50 the first year to $100 or $150 subsequently. But he has done so at the expense of the plaintiffs, by a reduction of the annual rental value of their property, according to the proofs, from $50 to $25, and to their permanent damage of five or six hundred dollars. And those changes he made in violation of their manifest rights and without their consent, and whilst he was in possession of their property as tenant thereof, and they were in their minority and incapable of protecting their rights. He says they were made with the knowledge and approbation of their guardian. If that were proved it could not avail him, as the guardian had no authority to consent to such impairment of the value of his ward's property. The appellant had no right to enhance the value of his property by invading the rights of the plaintiffs, and detracting from the value of their property, as the record clearly shows he has done. He may have done it with no wilful design to injure the plaintiffs, or to trample on their rights, and without considering that he was doing them a wrong and injury, as is very probable; but, nevertheless, he has invaded their substantial rights, and done them serious permanent damage.

And now as to the remedy. Mr. Justice Story says, when a party builds so near the house of another as to darken his windows against the clear rights of the latter, either by contract or ancient possession (in this case the appellant did not build so near as to merely darken the plaintiffs' windows, but actually blocked up the door in which 898 were lights in the plaintiffs' house, *so as entirely to exclude the light and air), in such case the eminent jurist says courts of equity will interfere by injunction to prevent the nuisance, as well as to remedy it if already done, although an action for damages would lie at law, for the latter can in no just sense be deemed an adequate relief in such case. The injury is material, and operates daily to destroy or diminish the comfort and use of the neighboring house, and the remedy by multiplicity of actions, for the continuance of it, would furnish no substantial compensation. 2 Stor. Eq. Jur., § 926.

Where ancient lights have existed for upward of twenty years undisturbed, the owner of an adjoining lot has no right to obstruct them, and, particularly so, if the adjoining lot was owned by the person who built the house containing the ancient lights at the time of building, and was subsequently sold by him. Eden on Injunctions, p. 269, note 1, citing Robeson v. Pittenger, 1 Green's Ch. R. 57.

Injunction will be awarded in such cases where the windows are ancient lights, or where the act is in violation of some agreement express or implied. (2 Eden on Injunctions, p. 269, note (1), and cases cited.)

The court is well satisfied that in this case the remedy at law is wholly inadequate for the purposes of justice. They cannot but regard the injury to the appellees as of a serious character. But they are not satisfied, from all that is shown by the record, that ample pecuniary compensation might not be made to the appellees for the invasion of their rights, and the impairment to the value of their property. And as a mandatory injunction would subject the other party to serious inconvenience, it would seem to be proper for a court of chancery to direct an inquiry before itself, whether the injury is capable of being *fully and abundantly compensated by a pecuniary sum, and what sum would be reasonably adequate. In Kerr on Injunctions (page 231), it is said, "the court will not interfere by way of mandatory injunction without taking into consideration the comparative convenience and inconvenience which the granting or withholding the injunction would cause to the parties. If the injury done is capable of being fully and abundantly compensated by a pecuniary sum, while the inconvenience to the other party from granting an injunction would be serious, the court will not interpose by mandatory injunction; but will either direct an inquiry before itself, in order to ascertain the measure of damages that has been actually sustained, or will, on dismissing the bill, reserve to the plaintiff his right to proceed at law." An action at law could not afford an adequate remedy for the permanent and continuing injury. Whilst in the proceeding in equity, he may be awarded compensation, not only for past injuries, but also for the permanent and continued anticipated injury caused by the appellant's acts of aggression upon their rights, already accomplished, and thus avoid a multiplicity of suits at law to recover damages from time to time, for the continuing injury, after the damage has been actually sustained; the pecuniary compensation to be awarded in lieu of all damages actually incurred, or which may hereafter be incurred, by the appellee, from the acts and doings of the appellant complained of, and the appellees perpetually enjoined from the prosecution of other suits or actions against the appellant therefor. In a recent case of Isenberg v. The East India House Estate Co., decided in England, (The Jurist, 1864, part 1, page 221), the lord chancellor suspended the order of the master of the rolls, awarding a mandatory injunction, and directed an inquiry *before him for the purpose of ascertaining what damage had been sustained by the plaintiff, by reason of the buildings erected by the defendants, and what would be the proper amount of compensation to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff as satisfaction for such damages. The court, approving of the decision of the lord chancellor, are of opinion that it may be safely followed as a precedent. They are of opinion, therefore, to reverse the decree of the circuit court, and suspend the mandatory injunction, and to remand the cause for the purpose of directing the inquiries before indicated, and then to be proceeded with to a final hearing and decree, as may be right and proper on the case as it may be then presented. But the appellees being the parties substantially prevailing here, are entitled to their costs.

Moncure, P., concurred in the opinion of Anderson, J.

Staples, J., concurred in the results.

Christian, J., dissented.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that whilst the rights of the appellees are clear, the injury and damages which they have sustained are serious, and that the corporation court did not exceed its powers in awarding a mandatory injunction, yet as the exercise of that power is one which ought to be attended with great caution, and the court here is not satisfied that the appellees may not be abundantly compensated in damages by a pecuniary sum for the injury which they have sustained. It is therefore decreed and ordered that the decree of *the said corporation court be reversed and annulled, and that the cause be remanded to the said corporation court with instructions to direct an enquiry to be made by a jury, to be empanelled at its bar, to ascertain whether any and what pecuniary sum may adequately compensate the appellees for the permanent damages which they have sustained by the acts and doings of the appellant; and upon the return of the verdict of the jury to render such decree as will be right and proper in the case as then presented; and in the meantime to suspend the order awarding a mandatory injunction. And the appellees being the parties substantially prevailing, it is further decreed and ordered that they recover of the appellant their costs by them about their defence in this behalf expended.

Decree reversed.

902 *Cabells v. Puryear & als.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

Wills—Advancements—Interest on.—W, in his lifetime, made advancements to some of his children. By his will he gave his estate to his widow for her life, and authorized her to make advancements to their children; and he directed that at her death his estate, including these advancements, should be equally divided among his children. Mrs. W did make advancements to all of the children, but to one much less than to the others. She died in February 1868, but the estate was not ready for a division until October 1874. HOLD: Interest should be charged to each legatee on the excess of the advancements made to him or her from the death of Mrs. W in 1868 until the time of the division in 1874.

This is a sequel to the case of Puryear v. Cabell & als., 24 Gratt. 260, and all the facts upon which the only question in this appeal depends, are stated in that report of the case. That question relates to the time when interest shall be charged upon the advancements to the legatees by Colonel Wilson and his widow, in order to effect the equality directed by the testator among his children.

When the cause went back, the court referred it to a commissioner to take an account of the advancements, and of the proceeds of the sale of the estate made by commissioners in 1874. From the report of commissioner Mosely it appeared that the advancements made to all the children by Colonel Wilson and Mrs. Wilson, were $97,419.82, and that the estate yet to be divided amounted to $33,923.37 as cash on the 16th of October 1874; the two sums making $131,343.19; and giving to 903 each legatee $16,417.89. *From this sum the commissioner deducted the advancements made to each legatee, charging no interest on the advancement; and showing the advancement to be paid to each legatee out of the fund to be distributed. This statement was excepted to by the Cabells; and a special statement was made by the commissioner in accordance with their views. By this statement, charging Mrs. Puryear with the amount of her advancements and interest thereon from the death of Mrs. Wilson up to October 1874, she had received more than her share by $1,618.59; what she had received was therefore left out of the further statement of the account. The amount of advancements received by the other seven legatees was $81,059.82; six of them receiving sums ranging from $12,090 to $13,883; whilst the seventh, Mrs. Cabell, received but $3,458. In this statement each of these legatees was credited with one-seventh of $81,059.88, the amount of the advancements, and also one-seventh of the sum in hand, each of them $4,846.19, making $16,426.16, and then was charged with the amount of his or her advancements, with interest thereon from Mrs. Wilson's death, in February 1868, until October 16th, 1874, when the fund to be distributed was in the hands of the court; and thus showing the amount which was due to each legatee to be paid out of this fund.

The cause came on to be heard on the 30th of April 1875, when the court overruled the exception to the commissioner's report, disallowed interest on the advancements, and made a decree accordingly, distributing the fund among the eight legatees. And from this decree the children of Mrs. Cabell applied to this court for an appeal: which was allowed.

Ould & Carrington, for the appellants.

904 *E. E. Bouldin, for the appellees.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This case is for the second time before this court, and is reported under the name of Puryear & als. v. Cabell & als., 24 Gratt. 260.

In the record now before us, a single question is presented for our consideration. After the case was sent back to the circuit court, that court proceeded to convert the estate into money, and by its decree rendered on the 30th April 1875, directed a distribution thereof among the legatees. The only error now complained of is that in directing the several legatees to be charged with advancements made by the testator in his lifetime, and by his widow in her lifetime, no interest is charged on the amount of said advancements.

The appellants insist that the death of the widow was the period fixed by the testator for the division, that that was the date at which all these advancements were to be brought into hotch-pot and accounted for, and that if this division was postponed for any cause, equality could only be attained by charging each legatee with interest from the period fixed by the will for division, to wit: the date of the death of the widow of the testator.

The circuit court refused to allow interest upon any of the advancements made to the legatees either by the testator or by the widow, without respect to the excess or deficiency of the advancements made to the different legatees. The appeal was allowed to bring up for review here this single question.

In the consideration of this question we are first met by the objection of the appellees, that it is already res adjudicata.

905 *It is insisted that the same question was definitely settled by the opinion of this court in Puryear v. Cabell supra. To sustain this contention, an extract from the opinion of Judge Staples concurred in by the other judges, is relied on by the appellees' counsel, and which is as follows: "In regard to the charge of interest upon advancements, no exception was taken in the court below to the report of the commissioner for the failure to allow it; and it may be a question how far it is competent to urge the objection in this court. However this may be, the general rule is that the legatee or distributee is to be charged with the value of the advancement without interest. There is nothing in the will of Mr. Wilson or the circumstances of this case which requires the application of a different rule." 24 Gratt. 266-7.

This is the only declaration or allusion made in the opinion to the subject of interest. In the decree of this court nothing is declared on the subject.

But a reference to the record in the case of Puryear and Cabell (24 Gratt.) will make it perfectly apparent that neither Judge Staples' opinion nor the decree of the court in that case had the remotest reference to the question raised upon the record now before us. In that case the proposition of the counsel of the Cabells (the question not being raised by any exception to the commissioner's report) was that, on advancements made by the testator in his lifetime interest should be charged from his death.

and on advancements made by his widow (the life-tenant) interest should be charged from the time they were respectively received by the legatees. It was in reference to this proposition that Judge Staples expressed the opinion (undoubtedly correct) that "the general rule is that the leg-906 atee or distributee *is to be charged with the value of the advancement without interest."

The question now before us is a very different one. In the former case, the question was, if made at all by the pleadings, whether interest should be charged from the death of the testator on advancements made by him, and from the date of their receipt on advancements made by the widow. In the case before us the question is, if the death of the widow is the date of distribution, must not interest be charged from that date to the day of actual distribution among the legatees. This is wholly a different question, and it is one which not only did not arise but could not have arisen in the former case. At that time the fund for distribution was not in the hands of the court. That fund was made up of sales of real estate which had not been collected, if indeed it had been sold, and of rents and profits of the same for a very brief period. The death of Mrs. Wilson, the time fixed by the will for the distribution, and accounting for the respective advancements, had occurred only a few months before the filing of the bill in the former case; and therefore the question of charging interest as now raised could not and did not arise in that case.

The court is therefore of opinion that the question raised in this appeal is not res adjudicata, not having been before raised or passed upon in this case.

The court is further of opinion, that the decree of the circuit court is erroneous, so far as it fails to charge interest on any part of the advancements made to the legatees respectively, without respect to the excess or deficiency in such advancements, on the date when equal distribution was to be made.

The will of the testator, Nathaniel Wilson, contains the following clause:

907 *5th. "At the death of my said wife, Sarah, the whole of my estate, both real and personal, to be equally divided between my following named children, to wit:" (naming them) "to them and their heirs forever; such of them as have already received or who may hereafter receive a part of my estate to account for it upon a division." In a former clause of his will the testator had given to his wife for life, subject to certain bequests, all his real and personal estate, to be held, controlled and managed by her, at her entire discretion; and he authorized her, as her children became of age or married, to give them or either of them such part of her estate as she might think she could spare: she being the sole judge of it in every respect.

Advancements had been made by Mrs. Wilson in her lifetime of large amounts to all of the children, except to Mrs. Cabell. Mrs. Puryear had received her full share of the estate; and the other children had received—some over $12,000, others over $13,000, while Mrs. Cabell had received only $3,458. Now the testamentary scheme of Mr. Wilson was, that his whole estate should be equally distributed among the legatees at the death of Mrs. Wilson. That was the time fixed as the period of distribution, and at that time they were to account for the advancements which had been made prior to the death of Mrs. Wilson to each of the legatees respectively. If on that day the distribution could have been made, the mode of distribution would have been that adopted by the circuit court—that is, making each party equal by reducing the excess and making up the deficiency between the legatees without interest. But the distribution was not made until more than six years after Mrs. Wilson's death, and for that period six or seven of the legatees held in their hands large amounts 908 in excess of what *they were entitled to upon an equal distribution. This plainly was not their property, but belonged to the estate, and having enjoyed the use of it they ought to be charged with interest. The principle upon which the general rule stated by Judge Staples in Puryear v. Cabells (supra) rests is this, that the party advanced is not to be charged with interest, because the advancement in his hands is no part of the estate; it belongs to him, and he cannot be charged interest on his own, unless there be something in the will subjecting it to such a charge.

In the case before us, the excess held by the several legatees over and above the amount they were entitled to on the date fixed by the testator as the period of distribution was the property of the estate, in which all the distributees were equally interested, and upon this excess in their hands they must be charged with interest from the 5th February 1868, the date of Mrs. Wilson's death, to the 15th October 1874, the date on which the fund was in a condition to be distributed, as shown by the alternate statement made by the commissioner.

The court is therefore of opinion that the said decree of the said circuit court be reversed with costs, and the cause remanded to said circuit court for further proceedings to be had therein in accordance with the principles herein announced.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the said decree of the said circuit court is erroneous, so far as it omits to charge with interest those legatees whose advancements, made prior to the death of Mrs. Wilson, were in *excess of the amounts 909 they were respectively entitled to upon an equal distribution of the whole estate of the testator, if it could have been made on that day; this court being of opinion that the period of distribution fixed by the testator was the date of the death of Mrs. Wilson; and that all the legatees who on that day held an excess of the amounts advanced to them over what was an equal share of the advancements made prior to the death of Mrs. Wilson, should be charged with interest on such excess from the period of Mrs. Wilson's death, to wit: the 5th of February 1868, to the 15th October 1874, the period when the fund arising from the sale of the real estate may be considered as in the hands of the court for distribution, and that interest be allowed on the deficiency of advancements to Mrs. Cabell, according to the principles of the alternate statement made by commissioner.

It is therefore decreed and ordered that for this error the said decree of said circuit court be reversed and annulled, but be affirmed in all other respects, and that the appellants recover against the appellees their costs expended in the prosecution of their appeals here. And the cause is remanded to said circuit court, to be further proceeded in in accordance with the principles herein declared.

Decree reversed.

*Jeter v. Board & als.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

Commissioner's Report—Objections to.—Upon the petition of B and others for the establishment of a road, the county court, in February 1871, made an order that M, road commissioner, do view the route proposed for the road and report, &c. In July, T, the road commissioner of the township in which the road would lie, made a report, stating, that as to a part of the road there was no objection, and only J claimed damages. There was an order of court establishing that part of the road not objected to, and a summons to J, who appeared and asked for a writ of ad quod damnum; which was ordered and executed and returned. The case was then continued on motion of J. At a subsequent term J moved the court to quash the return of the commissioner, which was done; and then, at the same term, B and the other petitioners applied again for the road, and there was an order for a view, &c. And B, &c., appealed from the order quashing the report.—Held:

1. Same.—M having been the commissioner when the order directing the report was made, and he having been succeeded in that office by T, the name of M in the order was surplusage, and it was proper for T to make the report.
2. Same—Same—Waiver of Objections.—But if the objection would ever have been a good one, it was not made at the proper time, and was waived by J's applying for a writ of ad quod damnum, moving for a continuance of the case, and contesting it on other grounds.
3. Same—Same—Same.—The provisions of the statute in relation to yards, gardens, &c., and as to a map or diagram of the route, are merely directory, and if any of them are not complied with, objection to the report on that ground must be made in due time, or it will be considered as waived. In this case it was not made in due time, and was, in effect, waived.

4. Appeals—From Interlocutory Order—Roads.

There may be an appeal as of right from an interlocutory order of a county court in a controversy concerning the establishment of a road.

911 *5. Judgments—Finality.—The judgment of the county court was final. As to much the larger part of the road, it had been established by a previous order of the court, and the order quashing the report put an end to the cause in that court. The order for another view of the route was a new proceeding.

The case is fully stated in the opinion of the court.

J. F. Johnston, for the appellant.

Griffin, for the appellees.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a writ of error and supersedes to a judgment of the circuit court of Bedford county, reversing a judgment of the county court of said county in a controversy concerning a roadway. The following is a statement of the case:

On the 28th day of February 1871, James G. Board and fourteen others filed their petition in said county court for the establishment of a public road in said county (which petition is copied in the record); and on the same day, on their motion, it was ordered "that Michael T. Mattox, road commissioner, do view the route proposed for said road, and make report thereof to court, together with all matters required by law."

On the 25th day of July 1871, Thomas J. Thomasson, the road commissioner in the township of Chamblissburg, in which the proposed road was to run, he having qualified as such since the said order of February term was entered, made a report in pursuance of the said order (which report is also copied in the record). After setting out therein the route of the proposed road, and recommending that it be established accordingly, the commissioner makes *Appeals—From Interlocutory Order—Roads.—As to whether or not an appeal lies from an interlocutory order there is some conflict in the Virginia authorities. In Trevillian v. L. R. R. Co., 3 Gratt. 336 and in Hancock v. R. & P. R. R. Co., 3 Gratt. 338, an appeal was held not to lie from an interlocutory order. The principal case distinguishes from these, and in a dictum the court says that an appeal will lie from an interlocutory order. But again in the following cases, citing the principal case, the old rule was adhered to, and an appeal held not to lie from an interlocutory decree: Tucker v. Sandridge, 82 Va. 534; Ludlow v. City of Norfolk, 87 Va. 322, 12 S. E. Rep. 612; Postal Tel. C. Co. v. N. & W. R. R. Co., 87 Va. 331, 12 S. E. Rep. 618. In West Virginia, this latter doctrine is followed, and the principal case cited and distinguished in Wheeling B. & T. Ry. Co. v. Wheeling S. & I. Co., 41 W. Va. 752, 24 S. E. Rep. 562, and in Yates v. West Grafton, 33 W. Va. 516, 11 S. E. Rep. 11. See further, 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 245, 250; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 827.

912 the following statement: **"Clement L. Dickerson, Green B. Meador, John A. Watson, David S. Rininger and J. G. Board claim no damages. A. M. Jeter does claim damages. And William A. Wingfield, one of the parties owning the Kasey tract, being unable to attend, sent a note directing me to place the road on the best location, from which I infer that there is no claim for damages on their part; and there is none as to the mill tract belonging to Meador, Wingfield and Kasey. The road is nearly two-and-a-half miles long, and runs through the lands of Mr. Jeter, a little more than one-half mile. I think fifty dollars would be a sufficient allowance to him for damages."* The commissioner then proceeds to assign his reasons for thinking that "the road is a great public necessity." And he concludes his report by saying, that "at the request of the landholders on the route it is recommended that the route from the mill to the Carter's island road be immediately located, as there is no objection on that part, and it could thus be opened with the labor due on roads."

On the same day on which the report was made, it was "ordered that the road be established according to said report, from the mill of Meador, Wingfield and Kasey, to the Carter's island road, and that a summons be awarded against A. M. Jeter, proprietor of the residue of the land through which said road is proposed."

On the 28th day of November 1871, the summons theretofore awarded against A. M. Jeter having been returned, on his motion it was ordered that a writ of ad quod damnum be awarded him in this case, to be executed by the sheriff of this county on the 16th day of December next."

The writ was accordingly issued 913 and executed; and **on the 18th day of December 1871 the sheriff returned the writ with the inquisition thereto annexed, from which it appears to have been found that the road "will be of the damage of ninety-six dollars and twenty-five cents to the said A. M. Jeter."*

The next order in the case was made on the 26th day of November 1872, when on the motion of the defendant, A. M. Jeter, the case was continued until the next term of the court, but at his costs.

On the 24th day of December 1872, for reasons appearing to the court, it was ordered that the case be continued until the next term.

On the 28th day of January 1873, an order was made in the case in these words: "This day came again the parties by their attorneys, and the said defendant moved the court to quash the report of the road commissioner made on this petition, because he says the same does not report upon the matters and things required by law. On consideration of which motion the court doth quash the said report, and it is considered by the court that the defendant recover against the petitioners his costs by him about his defence in this behalf ex- pended since the report of commissioner was returned. And on motion of said petitioners, it is ordered that the commissioner of roads in the township of Chamblissburg, in this county, do make another view of the route for road proposed by said petitioners, and report to court the conveniences that will result as well to individuals as to the public, in case said road is established as proposed, and especially whether any yard, garden, orchard, or any part thereof will in such case have to be taken.

During the same term, and on the 7th day of February 1873, the petitioners moved the court to set aside its said judgment 914 *against them and grant them a *new hearing; which motion the court overruled. And on the motion of the petitioners, they were allowed an appeal from the said judgment upon their giving bond as required by law in the penalty of $100, with good security, conditioned according to law.*

On the 6th day of May 1873, the appeal came on to be heard in the circuit court of said county, when the said court was "of opinion that the appellees after having appeared to the said motion, and moved for and obtained a writ of ad quod damnum, and after having obtained a continuance of the cause upon the return of the inquisition, had no right to make a motion to quash for any defect in the report or proceedings before that time; but by his appearance to make defence, and asking for a writ of ad quod damnum, and again appearing and asking for a continuance after the inquisition was returned, he waived his right of objection to the report of the view of the road, or to the proceedings had on the case for any defect therein up to that time; and moreover, if it had been proper to quash at all in that state of the proceedings, the report ought not to have been quashed as to that part of the road which had already been established by the consent of the landholders, through whose lands it passed, and therefore the county court erred in quashing the said report." And therefore it was considered by the court that the said judgment of the county court be reversed and annulled, and that the appellants recover against the appellee their costs by them about their said appeal in that behalf expended. And the circuit court proceeding to render such judgment as the county court ought to have given, it was considered by the court that the said motion to quash the said report be overruled; and by consent of the parties, and for reasons appearing to the court, it was "ordered that the 915 **said cause be remanded to the said county court for further proceedings to be had therein in the case on the said inquisition; but this consent to remand the case to the county court is without prejudice to the right of either party to appeal from this decision if so advised."*

To the said judgment of the said circuit court the said A. M. Jeter applied to a judge of this court for a writ of error and supersedeas, which were accordingly awarded. And that is the case which this court has now to dispose of.

Three errors are assigned in the petition, which the court will consider in their order of assignment.

1. The first assignment of error is, that "on the motion of the petitioners for the road, Michael T. Mattox, road commissioner, was ordered to view the route proposed and report to court. No other person was directed or had any authority from the court to make such view or report. Upon this order Thomas J. Thomasson undertook to act, and made the report in this case, so that there was really no report upon which the county court could base any proceedings."

The court is of opinion that the judgment of the circuit court is not erroneous in that respect. It seems that Mattox was road commissioner in Chamblissburg township, where the route of the proposed road is situate, on the 28th of February 1871, when the order was made for the view of the route; and therefore he was directed to make the view and report. But he did not make them during his term of office, after the expiration of which, Thomas J. Thomasson, who was elected and qualified as his successor, made the said view and report, which it was proper for him to do under the order which had already been made; and there was no necessity for a new order, or an amendment of the order, substituting his name for that of Mattox. The name of Mattox was inserted in the order, because he happened to be road commissioner in the township when the order was made. Had his name not been mentioned, but the order had directed the road commissioner of the township to make the view and report, the meaning of the order would have been precisely the same—Mattox being then the road commissioner for that township. If the order had been in that form, it would not have been contended that it could only be executed by the road commissioner who happened to be in office at the date of the order, and not by one who came into office a month or two thereafter. The name of Mattox in the order was mere surplusage. He was named therein, not because of his peculiar fitness to perform the duty therein mentioned, but because he was road commissioner of the township. When he ceased to be such commissioner, he ceased to have power to perform the duty; and when Thomasson became his successor, it became proper for him to perform the duty as he did. But if the objection would ever have been a good one, it was not made at the proper time, and was waived by the appellant by applying for a writ of ad quod damnum, moving for a continuance of the case, and contesting it on other grounds.

The cases cited by the counsel for the appellees fully sustain this view, viz.: Carpenter & als. v. Sims, 3 Leigh 675; Lewis v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 265; and Mitchell v. Thorntons & als., 21 Gratt. 164.

2. The second assignment of error is, that "if the said Thomasson had the authority, the report made by him is fatally defective, and ought to have been quashed. The act makes it the duty of the commissioner to report especially whether any yard, garden, *orchard, or any part thereof will be taken if the road is established. The report is wholly silent as to this, and is therefore fatally defective. The act further provides that a map or diagram of the route shall be returned with the report. No map or diagram was returned with the report made in this case. This is another defect. The county court therefore could not have done otherwise than quash the report; and the circuit court erred in reversing that judgment."

The provisions of the law in regard to the matters referred to in that assignment of error are directory merely, and if any of them be not complied with, objection to the report on that ground must be made in due time, or it will be considered as having been waived. Id. In this case it was not made in due time, and was in effect waived. The report was returned on the 25th of July 1871, whereupon the appellant was ordered to be summoned to appear on the first day of the next term of the county court to show cause, if any he could, why the said road should not be opened as proposed. He was accordingly summoned, and appeared on the 28th day of November 1871. But he made no objection to the report. On the contrary a writ of ad quod damnum was on his motion, awarded him in the case, which was duly executed and returned. And the controversy seems to have thereafter proceeded solely on the matter of the inquisition, the case having been twice continued, and once on the motion of the appellant, until the 28th day of January 1873, when for the first time a motion was made by the appellant to quash the report, because, as he said, it did not report upon the matters and things required by law, and the report was accordingly quashed. No doubt the defects in the report now complained of by the appellant were unimportant to him, or he would have made the objection on that ground in due time. No part of his yard, garden or orchard may have been in any danger of being taken if the proposed road should be established. And the route of the proposed road may have been well defined and understood without the aid of a map or diagram. And therefore he may have made no objection on that ground, but moved at once for a writ of ad quod damnum.

3. The third and last assignment of error is, that "the order of the county court from which the appeal was taken was interlocutory and not final. The appeal was therefore prematurely taken, and ought to have been dismissed by the circuit court. See Trevilian v. Louisa Railroad Co., and Hancock v. Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Co., 3 Gratt., pp. 312, 313; and Bohn v. Sheppard, 4 Munf., p. 403."

The court is of opinion that the judgment of the circuit court is not erroneous on that ground, for two reasons: 1st, because there may be an appeal of right from an interlocutory order of a county court in a controversy concerning a roadway; and 2dly, the order appealed from in this case was in fact final and not interlocutory in its character.

1st. There may be an appeal of right from such an order. Neither in the first, nor in the second section of chapter 178 of the Code, page 1136, is it required that the order in a controversy concerning a roadway shall be "final," in order that a person may appeal therefrom; but in each section a right of appeal is given to any person who thinks himself aggrieved by any order in such a controversy; while the word "final" is in the second section expressly applied "to any civil case wherein there is a final judgment, decree or order," which words could not have been intended to embrace the case of an appeal of right 919 in a controversy concerning *a roadway, and which had been expressly and separately mentioned and provided for in the previous part of the section.

There would seem to be no room for doubt in regard to the correctness of this construction, unless the cases referred to and relied on by the counsel for the appellant in the petition for a writ of error and supersedeas in this case are to the contrary. The court is of opinion that those cases are not to the contrary. Two of them are—Trevilian v. Louisa Railroad Co., 3 Gratt. 312, and Hancock v. Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Co., Id. 313. The reporter's marginal abstract of the decision in the former case would seem to indicate that the decision was as contended for by the appellant. That abstract is in these words: "In controversies concerning roads, no appeal or supersedeas lies to an interlocutory order of the county court." But if we consider that case in connection with the latter, which immediately follows it in the report, we can have no difficulty in seeing that they do not apply to this case. In the case of Hancock v. Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Co., Baldwin, J., in delivering the opinion of the court (which he also did in the former case) said: "The court is of opinion that the law authorizing appeals, as of right from orders of the county courts in controversies concerning roads, is applicable only to a controversy concerning the establishment of a road, and not to a collateral controversy concerning the damages occasioned by a road already established; and that in such collateral controversy the order of the county court can be revised by the circuit court only by means of a writ of supersedeas; and that where the order of the county court is not final, but interlocutory only, it cannot be revised by the circuit court in any mode of proceeding." In neither of those cases

920 was the controversy *concerning the establishment of a road; but in each of them there was a collateral controversy concerning the damages occasioned by a road already established. And therefore an appeal of right did not exist in either of them. The only mode of reversing the judgment in either case was by a supersedeas, and that remedy did not exist in the then state of the case, because the judgment was not final. In the case under consideration, the controversy is concerning the establishment of a road, and the law authorizing appeals as of right unquestionably applies to it. The only other case relied on is that of Bohn v. Sheppard, 4 Munf. 403. In that case, it was held that an appeal from an order of court granting administration of an estate, being taken before the court has proceeded to direct bond and security to be given, or to prescribe the amount of the bond, is premature, and ought to be dismissed, as improvidently allowed. The only question was, whether the order appealed from (considered either as interlocutory or final) was sufficiently perfected for an appeal at the time it was taken. But, 2dly, the order appealed from in this case was, in effect, final, and not interlocutory in its character. Certainly it was final as to all of the proposed road, except that part of it which was to run through the land of the appellant, for all of it except that part, in other words, about four-fifths of the whole proposed road was established by the order of the county court made on the 25th day of July 1871. And though the controversy was continued thereafter as to the residue of the proposed road, it was ended in the said court by a final order made in the proceeding at January term 1873, from which order the appeal to the circuit court was taken. To be sure, an order for another view of the route of the road was at 921 the same time made on *the motion of the petitioners, but that was a new proceeding, and did not affect the finality of the order which had ended the former proceeding.

The court is therefore of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the circuit court, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

922 *Simmons v. Lyles & als.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

I. Vendor's Lien—Dower—Rights of Creditor's Vendee.*

—A vendor of land, who has retained the title, files a bill against the widow and infant children of the vendee, for a sale of the land to satisfy his debt. The widow answers, claiming dower in the land subject to the vendor's lien. Judgment cred-

*Suits in Equity—Parties.—To a suit in equity brought by a creditor to satisfy his debt, other creditors of the defendant may be admitted as parties. For this rule the principal case is cited in the following: Piedmont, etc., Ins. Co. v. Maury, 75 Va. 518; Preston v. Aston, 85 Va. 114, 7 S. E. Rep. 344; Karn v. Rorer, etc., Co., 86 Va. 760, 11 S. E. Rep. 431; Patterson v. Eakin, 87 Va. 53, 12 S. E. Rep. 144. See further, 4 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 1248; Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 187.

itors of the vendee may make themselves parties to the cause, and have the land, subject to the vendor's lien and the widow's dower, applied to the payment of their debts.

II. Same—Same—Same—Commissioner of Sale.—In such case the debt of the vendor is ascertained, and a commissioner is appointed to sell the land. He reports that a friend of the widow and children of the vendee has paid to the vendor his debt, and therefore he did not sell the land. The vendor then ceases to be interested in the case, and it becomes the suit of the creditors of the vendee.

III. Same—Same—Same—Same.—In such a case a commissioner is directed to settle the account of the administrator of the vendee, to take an account of the vendee's debts and their priorities, and also of the present value of the widow's dower in the land; and before the commissioner makes report the court decrees a sale of the land. HOLD:

1. Same—Same—Same—Same—Sales—Priorities.*—It was premature to decree a sale of land before the debts of the vendee and their priorities were ascertained, and a settlement of the administration account was made.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same—Same.—It was also error to decree a sale of the land until the widow's dower was assigned to her in kind, or it was ascertained that it could not be so assigned, and a moneyed compensation to her in lieu of her dower had been ascertained.

IV. Dower—Assignment of.†—A widow is entitled, as against creditors of her husband, by lien created since her marriage, to have her dower in his real estate assigned in kind, if it can be done, without regard to its effect upon the interest of his creditors. If from the nature of the property, or of the husband's interest in it, the dower cannot be assigned in kind, the *court may sell the whole property, and make to her a moneyed compensation.

923 not be assigned in kind, the *court may sell the whole property, and make to her a moneyed compensation.

V. Appeal—Parties.‡—In this case the vendor having acquiesced in the decree for the payment of the amount ascertained to be due to him, and received the money; upon appeal by the widow and children of the vendee from a subsequent decree for the sale of the land for the payment of creditors, the appeal does not bring up the first decree, so as to entitle him as an appellee to have that first decree reviewed and reversed for error against him.

In July 1868 James Jamieson filed his bill in the circuit court of Danville, alleging in substance that, in 1862, he had sold a lot of land, improved by valuable houses upon it, and situate in the said town of Danville, at public auction, for one-half cash, and the balance by bonds at one and two years, retaining the title as security for the payment of the purchase money; that William T. Simmons became the purchaser, and paid the half cash, and gave his bonds at one and two years for the residue of the purchase money, each bond being for $2,062.50, with J. M. Walker and H. W. Cole as his sureties; that Simmons was dead, and his estate insolvent; that said Walker was his administrator; that the said bonds were due, and had not been paid, except a small sum of $ ; that Mary A. Simmons was his widow, and she and her infant children were in possession of the said lot of land and houses. And making the said Walker, as administrator and also as surety, the said widow and infant children, and the other surety, Cole, parties defendant to the bill, prayed that unless the whole balance of purchase money, according to the face of the two bonds, with interest, were fully paid off before a day to be given by the court, the said lot of land and houses might be sold, and the proceeds subjected to the payment of the said bonds, and for general relief, &c.

924 *The cause was proceeded in against the said Walker as administrator, &c., as an absent defendant by publication, and the bill taken for confessed as to him and the other surety, Cole. The widow answered the bill sometime prior to the 13th March 1869, and admitted the allegations of the bill to be generally true, but said that one hundred dollars had been paid on said bonds; and she insisted that the purchase money of the house was, by the terms of the contract of sale, payable in confederate money, and ought to be scaled accordingly. She also claimed her dower in the land to be assigned to her before any sale of the property, and to be allowed the value of permanent improvements put upon the land, and submitted her rights to the protection of the court. Richard W. Lyles was her counsel, and signed this answer as such counsel, and he was also appointed guardian ad litem for the infant defendants, and filed their answer to the bill.

The only real question in controversy in this suit was, whether the purchase money was liable to be considered and scaled as confederate money. Accordingly at the March term, 1869, the court ordered an account to be taken of the real amount of purchase money remaining due to the complainant, with any special statements required by any of the parties, &c.

No report having been made in obedience to this order, at the March term 1870 the said Richard W. Lyles filed his petition in the cause, alleging that he was a creditor of the said William T. Simmons, deceased, by two judgments, and by virtue of his judgments had a lien on the land, the subject of the suit; and admitting that his judgment lien was subordinate to the vendor's lien of the complainant, Jamieson, and to the widow's dower, he claimed that the surplus, after satisfying the vendor's lien and the widow's dower,

925 *was liable to the payment of his judgments; that another suit was pending in the same court between the said Lyles and one Cheek, Tredway and other defendants, in which said Lyles was seeking to subject other lands of the said Simmons to the payment of his said judgments, and that the two suits ought to be heard together; and praying to be admitted a party to the suit of Jamieson in respect of his interest.

Upon the hearing of this petition, the court, March term 1870, admitted the said Lyles as a defendant in this suit, and displaced him as guardian ad litem for the infants aforesaid, and appointed J. T. Elam guardian ad litem in his stead; and said Lyles having filed his answer in this suit, in which he repeated in substance only the allegations of his petition aforesaid, the court, upon the hearing of the answer, ordered that in addition to the matters required to be reported by the previous order, the commissioner should also ascertain and report in what kind of money the purchase money was payable, and what lands belonging to said W. T. Simmons, the judgments of said Lyles constitute a lien on, if any, and in what order; and what was the actual value of the property at the time of the sale thereof by Jamieson to Simmons; and what is the present value hereof. No order was ever made for hearing this suit with the other suit, and they were not tried together.

At the August term, 1870, the cause was heard upon the report of the commissioner Blackwell and exceptions thereto, made in obedience to the orders of March 1869 and March 1870, and, without deciding any other question in the cause, the court ordered further accounts to be taken, viz: of all the transactions of Walker as administrator of Simmons; and of all the indebtedness of said Simmons at the time of his death, classifying said debts according to their respective priorities, and showing whether said debts were individual debts, or debts due by him as a partner with others, with any other matter required by any of the parties to be specially stated.

At the March term 1871, the court (without waiting for the report ordered at the August term 1870) heard the cause upon the above mentioned report of commissioner Blackwell (filed July 22, 1870), and overruled the exceptions taken thereto, and decided that the purchase money was payable in confederate money, and that the bonds ought to be scaled down to the sum of $106.08, with interest from the 29th of July 1870; and decreed that unless the heirs of said Simmons, or some one for them, paid that sum of $106.08, and interest, within sixty days, the property should be sold at auction by R. W. Peatross, who was appointed a special commissioner for that purpose. And the court further ordered that commissioner Moseley should take an account of the present value of the dower interest of Mary A. Simmons, after the payment of the said sum due to the complainant, Jamieson, and report at the next term. And the court further decreed that the defendant, Lyles, was entitled to have payment of his debt out of any surplus that may remain after the payment of the vendor's lien and the dower to said widow.

On the 15th day of September 1871, special commissioner Peatross made and returned his report, showing that Sydney M. Simmons, on behalf of the heirs of W. T. Simmons, deceased, had paid the debt decreed to be paid to the complainant, Jamieson, and that therefore he had not sold the property as required to do by the decree of March term 1871.

At a special term of the court held on the 18th day of November 1871, the cause was further heard "upon the papers formerly read," not including the said report of special commissioner Peatross made and returned September 15th, 1871, and the court expressing "the opinion that it will be necessary to sell the property in the bill and proceedings mentioned, to pay the debts of the estate of W. T. Simmons," ordered and decreed that R. W. Peatross, who was again appointed a special commissioner for the purpose, should advertise for four weeks and sell the property on the premises (requiring cash enough to pay the costs of suit and the expenses of sale, and for the residue taking bonds payable in one, two and three years). And the court again ordered that one of the commissioners of the court should take an account of the indebtedness of the estate of Wm. T. Simmons, deceased, stating the debts in the order of their priority, &c. And thereupon Mrs. Simmons, and the two infant children by their guardian ad litem, J. T. Elam, applied to this court for an appeal from the decree of the 18th of November 1871; which was allowed.

Jones & Bouldin, Robertson & Green, for the appellants.

Ould & Carrington and E. Barksdale, for the appellees.

Staples, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion that no error was committed by the circuit court in permitting the appellee, Lyles, to file his petition and make himself a party to the cause. Although the bill of Jamieson was merely to enforce the vendor's lien, and although it did not profess to be filed on behalf of the other creditors of Simmons, still it was competent for the creditors, or any of them, to make themselves parties to the suit, and claim the balance of the fund remaining after the satisfaction of the vendor's lien for the purchase money. Such a course of proceeding is proper and beneficial whenever the object of the suit is a sale of the decedent's real estate for the payment of his debts. All the parties interested in the property, or asserting liens thereon, being before the court, a multiplicity of suits is prevented, conflicting claims to priority adjusted, all difficulties in respect to the title cleared away, and the property placed in a position to command the most advantageous price. Without undertaking now to decide, whether in any case a decree can be made against the real estate of a deceased debtor unless an account is asked on behalf of all the creditors, it is sufficient to say, that such an account was ordered with the consent of the vendor, the only person who could have been heard to object. He has been paid the amount due him, and is no longer interested in the subject matter of controversy. So soon as a decree for a general account is entered it is to be deemed for the benefit of all the creditors who may come in and prove their demands.

It is not necessary that a creditor should formally be made a party plaintiff or defendant. It is not necessary he should even file a petition. After a decree for a general account, even at the suit of a single creditor, all the other creditors may come in under the decree and prove their debts before the master to whom the cause is referred, and obtain satisfaction of their demands; and under such circumstances they are all treated as parties to the suit.

It was therefore competent for Lyles 929 to come in by *petition, or to prove his debt before the commissioner, and Jamieson, the vendor, being no longer interested, the suit may be carried on in behalf of Lyles and other creditors of Simmons.

The court is further of opinion that the circuit court was premature in directing a sale of the house and lot in question by its decree of 18th November 1871. That decree contained a provision that one of the commissioners of the court should take an account of the indebtedness of the estate of William Simmons, stating the several debts in the order of their priority. This account ought to have been taken before the execution of the decree for the sale of the property. This court has repeatedly held that it is premature to decree a sale of the realty before adjudicating the claims of creditors and their respective priorities, in order to ascertain the precise amount chargeable upon such realty. Cralle v. Meem et als., 8 Gratt. 496; Buchanan v. Clarke, 10 Gratt. 164. There is nothing in the present case justifying a violation of this rule.

It is impossible to say whether there are other debts against the estate, or to what extent they constitute liens upon the realty. And although it is very probable there is no personal assets applicable to the payment of such debts, it cannot be positively affirmed that such is the fact. At all events, as the case is to go back to the circuit court upon other grounds, there can be no impropriety in directing also an account of the personal property if required by either of the parties.

The court is further of opinion, that dower is to be assigned of one-third of the real estate, whereof the husband was at any time seized during the coverture; that such assignment must be in kind by metes and bounds if required by the widow.

930 *When an assignment in kind is impracticable, from the nature of the husband's interest, or from the nature and quality of the property itself, it will of course be dispensed with, and some other mode adopted. But the court is not authorized to substitute a commutation or a compensation in money, merely because dower in kind may prove to be injurious to the interests of heirs or creditors. The right of the widow is a legal one, and is paramount to any and every claim or lien created by the husband after the marriage. In White v. White & als., 16 Gratt. 264, this court laid down the rule on this subject in the strongest possible manner. It was there held, that unless it was made to appear that it was impossible to assign dower in the real estate, it was not competent for a court of equity, in the exercise of its general jurisdiction, to decree a sale of the whole property, and to provide a compensation in money in lieu of dower against the consent of the widow, however much it might be to the interest of the heirs to have a sale of the whole, and a moneyed compensation to the widow."

It is very true that the appellant made no resistance to a sale of the property; but it is to be remembered such resistance would, in the then attitude of the case, have been unavailing, as at the time of her answer filed the suit was merely to enforce the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money. The petition of Lyles was filed at a subsequent period, asking for a sale of the property to satisfy his judgment. The lien of the vendor has been discharged, and he is no longer interested in the prosecution of the suit. The controversy is now between the judgment creditor and the appellant. She has never consented to a sale in his favor. She has never agreed, so far 931 as the record discloses, to *accept a moneyed compensation. There is nothing to show that an assignment of dower in kind is impracticable. We have no information on the subject, except that the property consists of a dwelling house and lot in the town of Danville. There may be outhouses for aught that we know, in which the dower may be assigned. The lot itself may be susceptible of a division; or as is not unfrequently done, where there is a single edifice, the dower may be assigned of so many rooms. 1 Roper on Husband & Wife; 1 Scribner on Dower 343.

This court is unable to say which of these modes, or whether either of them should be adopted. The case must be remanded to the circuit court for an inquiry upon these points. If an assignment in kind is found to be impracticable, the court may decree a sale of the whole property, and a moneyed compensation to the appellant in lieu of dower; or, it may adopt such other mode of adjustment as will produce the greatest equality with the least inconvenience. 1 Tucker's Com. 66; 1 Wash. on Real Prop. page 236.

This disposes of all the material questions between the appellant and Lyles, the judgment creditor. It remains only to consider the application of Jamieson, the vendor, who is also an appellee, to correct the decree of the 29th March 1871. His objections, that the amount due him was reduced by an improper application of the scale of depreciation. The court is of opinion, he cannot be heard to make that objection here in the present aspect of the case. So far from complaining of the decree in question, he accepted the amount directed to be paid him. This payment and acceptance were reported to the court by the commissioner, and the sale of the property abandoned so far as he, Jamieson, was concerned.

132 By the decree of *November 1871, the property was ordered to be sold for the benefit of Lyles, the judgment creditor. It is from that decree the appeal was taken by the widow to this court, and is now the subject of inquiry. In this latter decree Jamieson has no concern. He was no party to it, and he does not complain of it. The case comes directly within the operation of the rule laid down by this court in Walker's ex'or v. Page, 21 Gratt. 636, 652; in which it was held, that where the parties stand upon distinct and unconnected grounds; where their rights are separate and not equally affected by the same decree; then the appeal of one will not bring up for adjudication the rights or claims of the other." See also Burton v. Brown's ex'or, 2 Gratt. 1, 14.

The court is therefore of opinion, that the appellee, Jamieson, having failed to make any appeal in this case, but, on the contrary, having acquiesced in the decree adjudicating his rights, by accepting the amount awarded him thereunder, cannot, as such appellee, be heard to complain of the errors, if any, in that decree to his prejudice.

For the reasons stated, the decree of the circuit court pronounced on the 18th day of November 1871, must be reversed, and the cause remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings in conformity with the views herein expressed.

The decree was as follows:

The court is of opinion that the circuit court erred in decreeing a sale of the house and lot in the proceedings mentioned, without first taking an account of the indebtedness of the estate of William T. Simmons, as directed by the decree of the 18th 133 November 1871; *and said circuit court also erred in decreeing said sale, before it was ascertained whether dower in kind could be conveniently assigned to the appellant, the widow of said Simmons.

It is therefore ordered and decreed, that so much of the decree aforesaid of the 18th November 1871, and of the decree of the 1st of March 1871, as is in conflict with the foregoing, be reversed and annulled, and as to the residue thereof be, and the same is hereby affirmed, and that the appellee, R. W. Lyles, do pay, &c.

It is further ordered and decreed, that the cause be remanded to the said circuit court with directions to make the inquiry and take the account aforesaid; and also an account of the personal estate of which the said Simmons died possessed, if desired by either of the parties.

If upon such inquiry it shall be ascertained that an assignment of dower in kind is practicable, then such assignment is accordingly to be made if required by the appellant. If, on the other hand, it shall appear that an assignment in kind is impracticable, the entire property shall be sold on such terms as to the circuit court may seem proper, and a moneyed compensation awarded the appellant in lieu of dower.

Decree reversed.

934 *Burress v. Commonwealth.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

Absent, BOULDIN, J.

1. Forgery—Variance between Writing and Indictment.—In a commitment by a justice, of a person for forging an order, in setting out the order he writes out some words in full, which in the order as set out in the indictment are abbreviated, as Thomas for Thos., 23 cents for 23 c. Respectfully for Resp't'y. These are not such variances as require that the accused should be sent back to a justice for examination.
2. Same—Same—New Indictment.—To a plea of autrefois acquit, upon an indictment for forgery, the attorney for the commonwealth craves oyer of the former record, and demurs to the plea. The record shows that the indictment was for forging an order for forty-seven dollars and twenty-five cents, and that the order was for forty-seven dollars and twenty-three cents. This was a variance which entitled the accused to acquittal on that indictment; and therefore the acquittal on that indictment does not forbid the prosecution of the accused on another indictment for the same forgery, setting out the order correctly.
3. Same—Same—Second Prosecution after Acquittal.—By the Code of 1873, ch. 105, § 15, p. 1218, a person acquitted by the jury on the facts and merits, on a former trial, may plead such acquittal in bar to a second prosecution for the same offence, notwithstanding any defect in the form or substance of the indictment or accusation on which he was acquitted. But it must appear from the record of the first case, or be averred in the plea and proved, that his acquittal was on the merits.
4. Same—Same—Immaterial Variance—Presumption.—The act does not make a variance between the indictment and the forged paper immaterial. The accused must be acquitted on that ground, if no other. And if acquitted, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is, that he was acquitted on that ground.
5. Same—Same—Evidence.—The difference between "account" as set out in the indictment and 935 *"acct" as written in the order, is not a material variance, which will exclude the order as evidence.
6. Same—Evidence—Irrelevant Documents.—A genuine order by the same drawers upon the same party, which had been paid to the accused, as the order which the accused was charged with having forged, is not competent evidence for the accused.

7. Same—Same—Opinion as to Handwriting.*—A witness who states that he is perfectly familiar with the handwriting of the accused, and states the circumstances which made him so familiar with it, expresses the confident opinion from his knowledge of the accused's handwriting, that he was incapable of writing the order. This opinion is incompetent testimony, and properly excluded.

This was an indictment in the hustings court of the city of Richmond, against Roger D. Burress, for forgery. He was tried at the June term 1875, and was found guilty, and sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for two years. And he thereupon applied to this court for a writ of error; which was awarded. The case is fully stated by Moncure, P., in his opinion.

Cosby and Guy & Gilliam, for the prisoner.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a writ of error to a judgment of the hustings court of the city of Richmond, rendered on the 17th day of June 1875, convicting the plaintiff in error, Roger D. Burress, of the forgery of a certain order, and sentencing him therefor to confinement in the penitentiary for the term of two years; the period by the jurors in their verdict ascertained.

The said order is described in the indictment as being of the following purport and effect, to wit:

"Messrs. Parker & Co. will please
936 pay to Thomas *Moore, or order, the sum of forty-seven dollars and 23c., and charge to my account.

Resp't'y, Allen & Bro.
Feb. 24th, 1875."

There were two counts in the indictment, the first was for the forgery of the order, the second for uttering the forged order, knowing it to be forged. The conviction was of the offence charged in the first count.

Several questions arose and were decided in the progress of the case in the court below, to most of which decisions exceptions were taken, the bills of exceptions so taken being four in number. The plaintiff, in his petition for a writ of error, assigns six errors in the judgment; which assignments of error we will notice in their order.

1. The first is, that it was error not to have remanded the prisoner for examination for the felony charged in the indictment.

This assignment of error is founded on the first bill of exceptions; which states that upon the calling of the case, the prisoner "moved that he be sent back to be examined for the felony for which he is indicted; to which the attorney for the commonwealth objected by vouching the certificate of the police justice in the case, and claimed that the prisoner had been examined before a justice of the peace, which certificate is in the words and figures following to-wit:

"City of Richmond, to-wit:

To the clerk of the hustings court of said city:

I, J. J. White, police justice of the said city, do hereby certify, that I have this day committed to jail R. D. Burress, for his appearance before the hustings 937 *court of said city, on the first day of the June term thereof, to answer in the said court for a felony by him committed, in this, that he did, on or about the 24th day of February 1875, in the said city, feloniously forge, utter and attempt to employ as true, a certain forged order in writing for money, purporting to be the order of Allen & Bro. on Parker & Co., for the sum of forty-seven dollars and twenty-three cents, and of the following words and figures, to-wit:

'Messrs. Parker & Co. will please pay to Thomas Moore, or order, the sum of forty-seven dollars and twenty-three cents, and charge to my account.

Respectfully, Allen & Bro.
Feb'y 24th, 1875.'

with intent to defraud. Given under my hand, this 7th day of June 1875.

J. J. White, police justice."

"And the court thereupon sustained the objection of the commonwealth's attorney, and overruled the motion of the prisoner, to which ruling of the court" the prisoner excepted.

We are clearly of opinion that there was no error in the said ruling of the court. Even the record of an examining court when that court was in existence, was not required to be as special as an indictment. See 3 Rob. Old. Pr. pp. 121-124, and the cases cited, especially Halkem's case, 2 Va. Ca. 4; and Mabry's case, Id. 396; in which latter case R. E. Parker, J., delivering the opinion of the court, states the law on the subject very fully and clearly. Certainly the proceedings before an examining justice under the present law, cannot be required to be more special than were the proceedings before an examining court 938 *under the former law. The only variances between the forged order as set out in the certificate, and as set out in the indictment, if variances they can be called for any purpose, consist of the following: that "Thos." in the latter is written "Thomas" in the former; "23c." in the latter is written "twenty-three cents" in the former; and "Resp't'y" in the latter, is written "Respectfully" in the former." Now these are certainly immaterial variances in regard to the question whether the prisoner had been examined before a justice for the offence for which he was indicted, and it clearly appears that he had been so examined.

**Forgery—Evidence as to Handwriting.*—The principal case is cited in Hanriot v. Sherwood, 82 Va. 14, and in State v. Henderson, 29 W. Va. 158, 1 S. E. Rep. 233.

2. The second assignment is, that "it was error in the court to have sustained the commonwealth's demurrer to the prisoner's plea of a former acquittal, and to have rejected the plea."

This assignment of error is not founded on any bill of exceptions, but upon proceedings otherwise had in the case, which sufficiently appear in the record. After the court had overruled the motion of the prisoner to remand him as aforesaid, and also his motion to quash the indictment, and his demurrer to said indictment and each count thereof, (on the decisions of the court in regard to which two latter motions no errors are assigned or complained of), the prisoner tendered to the court a special plea in writing (verified by his affidavit) of former acquittal of the same offence; and the said plea being seen and inspected, the attorney for the commonwealth cravedoyer of the record in the said plea mentioned, and demurred to the said plea, which demurrer was sustained by the court; and the court rejected the said plea, which plea is set out in words and figures in the record of this case. From which it appears that, on the 12th day of May 1875, the prisoner was acquitted on another indictment 939 for felony, which *had been found against him, and which is set out in the said record as a part thereof. The plea, after setting out the record on the judgment of acquittal, which was on a verdict of not guilty, rendered on the plea of not guilty, states that the "said judgment still remains in full force and effect; and the said Roger D. Burress avers, and in fact says, that he, the said Roger D. Burress, and the Roger D. Burress, so indicted and acquitted as aforesaid, are one and the same person, and not other and different persons; and that the felony of which the said Roger D. Burress was indicted and acquitted as aforesaid, and the felony of which the said Roger D. Burress is now indicted, are one and the same, and not different felonies. And this the said Roger D. Burress is ready to verify," &c.

There can be no doubt but that the two indictments were intended to be for the same felony, and that the prisoner was acquitted on the first indictment, upon the ground of a variance between the order described and set out in that indictment, and the order exhibited on the trial as the subject of the forgery charged in the indictment. That variance consisted only in this: that in the order set out in the indictment, the amount is specified as "forty-seven dollars and 25 c.;" whereas in the order offered as evidence in support of the charge, the amount is specified as "forty-seven dollars 23 c." Now this appears to be, and in fact is, a very small difference; but it is a difference, and in contemplation of law, and as to the case under consideration, it stands on the same footing, and is governed by the same principles, as if the difference were ever so large in amount. An order for 25 c. is not an order for 23 c., and the prisoner was therefore entitled to his acquittal under the former indictment, upon the ground of a fatal variance between the allegata and the probata; 940 and *he was accordingly acquitted upon that ground. But the acquittal not being a bar to another indictment, correctly setting out the order, the prisoner, instead of being discharged from custody on his said acquittal, was, on the motion of the attorney for the commonwealth, who stated that he desired to prefer another bill of indictment for felony against him, before the grand jury to be in session at the next June term of the court, remanded to jail to answer the said indictment. And the witnesses were recognized accordingly.

The question of variance between the two indictments was properly raised by the commonwealth by cravingoyer of the record of the first indictment, and demurring to the plea of former acquittal. For although the plea avers that the felonies charged in the two indictments are one and the same, the record shows that they are, as charged and in contemplation of law, not one and the same, but different felonies. The verity of the record in this respect cannot be denied by plea, and a demurrer to a plea, containing such denial, is an admission of the plea only in subordination to the record, which is paramount and conclusive.

For the law on this subject of former acquittal, reference may be had to Archbold's Criminal Practice and Pleading, Waterman's notes, vol. 1, pp. 111-113 marg., and the cases there cited.

In Hite v. The State, 9 Yerger R. 357, a case very ably argued by counsel, and very well considered by the court, "it was held, that to entitle the prisoner to the benefit of the plea of autrefois acquit, it is necessary that the crime charged in the last bill of indictment be precisely the same with that charged in the first, and also that the first indictment is good in point of law; that the true test to ascertain whether a 941 plea of autrefois acquit is a good bar, is whether the evidence necessary to support the second indictment would have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction upon the first; and that where the offence charged in the first and second indictments are, upon the face of the pleadings, legally distinct, no averment that they are one and the same offence can make them so; therefore if the variance is in a thing material, the plea of autrefois acquit cannot be sustained. See also Price v. The State, 19 Ohio R. 423.

In Mortimer's case, 2 Va. Ca. 325, it was held that if a prisoner be acquitted of burning the barn of Josiah Thompson, he cannot plead this acquittal in bar of an indictment for burning the barn of Josias Thompson. That is a very strong case, and very much like the one under consideration. Indeed, they seem to be identical in principle as to the question we are now considering. See also Vaughan's case, Id. 273.

But it is contended that two recent provisions of our statute law create a difference in this respect. Those provisions are sections 15 and 16 of chapter 195 of the Code, page 1218, which are in these words:

"15. A person acquitted by the jury upon the facts and merits on a former trial may plead such acquittal in bar of a second prosecution for the same offence, notwithstanding any defect in the form or substance of the indictment or accusation on which he was acquitted.

"16. A person acquitted of an offence on the ground of a variance between the allegations and the proof of the indictment or other accusation, or upon an exception to the form or substance thereof, may be arraigned again upon a new indictment or other proper accusation, and tried and convicted for the same offence, notwithstanding such former acquittal."

942 *Those provisions were introduced into our statute law for the first time by the act of 1847-'8, called the criminal code, and constituted sections 10 and 11, on page 122, of the acts of that year. They were probably derived from the Massachusetts code, in which we find similar provisions. See General Statutes of Massachusetts, 1860, part iv, title 1, ch. 158, §§ 6 and 7; although there appear to be similar provisions in some of the other states. See Waterman's notes to Archbold, cited supra.

It is contended that under the first of those provisions of the Code, to wit: § 15, the prisoner may have been acquitted upon the facts and merits on the former trial, and that upon the demurrer to the plea of autrefois acquit in this case, it must be considered that he was so acquitted.

Conceding, at least, for the purposes of this case, that the prisoner might have been acquitted upon the facts and merits on the former trial; certainly he might have been acquitted, and was entitled to be acquitted, on the ground of a variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proofs, and as it does not appear in the record, and is not averred in the plea, that he was acquitted upon the facts and merits on the former trial, it must be inferred, in considering this demurrer to the plea, that he was acquitted on the ground of the variance. If he had been acquitted upon the facts and merits, the fact would, no doubt, have so appeared upon the record, and could easily have been made so to appear. And at all events, as it does not appear, it ought to have been averred in the plea. Section 15 gives a right to plead an acquittal on a former trial in bar of a second prosecution for the same offence, notwithstanding any defect in the form or substance of the 943 indictment on *which he was acquitted, provided, or on condition that, the acquittal was upon the facts and merits of the case. To show himself entitled to the right, he must, by the averments of his plea, if the fact do not otherwise appear in the record, bring his case within the terms of the section; that is, aver that his acquittal was upon the facts and merits.

The section does not make the variance immaterial. The accused must be acquitted upon that ground, if no other. And if acquitted, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is, that he was acquitted on that ground. But section 15 authorizes an acquittal in such case upon the merits, instead of upon the ground of variance; and if acquitted upon the merits, makes the acquittal a bar to a second prosecution for the same offence. The accused, however, to be entitled to the benefit of the bar, must affirmatively show that this case comes within the meaning of the section. Section 16 does not vary the case. It does not relate to pleading, but is merely declaratory of the common law, that an acquittal on the ground of variance is not a bar to a second prosecution for the same offence; and therefore declares that a person acquitted upon that ground may be arraigned upon a new indictment, &c.: that is, it merely declares that the common law on this subject remains in full force, except so far as section 15 creates an exception. And a person, to get the benefit of that exception, must show that his case comes within its terms.

We are therefore of opinion that the court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the plea of former acquittal and rejecting the plea.

3. The third assignment is that "the court erred in not excluding from the jury, on the ground of variance, the paper set forth in the second bill of exceptions."

944 *The paper here referred to is the same with the order set forth in each count of the indictment except that the last word in the body of said order is "account," and the last word in the body of said paper is "act," which is obviously a contraction for "account;" and except that at the foot of the said paper are written these words: "Richmond, March 5th, 1875, received of T. A. Parker & Co. forty-seven 23-100 dollars in full of this order.

Thomas Moore."

We think there was, clearly, no variance between the said paper and the said order. Certainly the difference between the word "account" and the contraction "act," aforesaid is no variance, or at least is wholly immaterial. And certainly the receipt at the foot of the said paper, and the absence of such a receipt at the foot of the said order, constitute no variance. The receipt is no part of the forged paper. The receipt is not charged to be forged. In fact it is a genuine instrument.

We therefore think the court did not err in not excluding from the jury the paper set forth in the second bill of exceptions.

4. The fourth assignment is, that "the court erred in excluding from the jury the alleged genuine order with the receipt upon it, mentioned in the third bill of exceptions, which the witness said had been presented to him on a former occasion by the prisoner."

The third bill of exceptions states, "that on the trial of the cause, after the commonwealth had introduced as a witness one Truman A. Parker, who gave evidence tending to prove that the prisoner 945 had presented *to Parker & Co. the order marked 'A' set forth in the said bill of exceptions, and which is made part hereof, and that the said order was false and forged, and that the prisoner had been paid the money thereon by Parker & Co.; and after the attorney for the commonwealth had turned the witness Parker over for cross-examination to the prisoner's counsel, he was asked by them whether he had ever seen the prisoner before the interview at which said forged order was presented, and the witness replied that he had; that on one occasion before, to-wit: in September 1874, the prisoner had presented an order on Parker & Co., drawn by Allen & Bro., in favor of R. D. James, which had been paid by witness; but that at the time of the presentation of the second draft, the witness did not remember prisoner as the person who received the money for the first draft; and being asked by prisoner's counsel, if the said James' order was a genuine one, said it was. Witness was then asked by prisoner's counsel to produce the said James' order, and they then tendered it in evidence, said order having upon it a receipt in prisoner's proper name for the amount thereof; but the attorney for the commonwealth objecting to the introduction of said draft in evidence before the jury, the court sustained the objection and ruled the draft out as evidence; to which opinion of the court, refusing to allow the said James' draft to be given in evidence, the prisoner by his counsel excepted."

The draft referred to seems to have been wholly irrelevant to the case before the court, and was therefore inadmissible. The draft had on it a receipt in prisoner's proper name for the amount thereof. There was no specific tender by the prisoner of 946 his said receipt *in evidence; but he may have supposed that if the draft was admitted as evidence the receipt endorsed thereon would necessarily be in evidence also, and he may have intended to use the receipt for the purpose of comparison of handwriting. Even if the receipt can be considered as having been offered in evidence and excluded, was it properly excluded? We are of opinion that it was. As a general rule, certainly, documents irrelevant to the issues on the record cannot be received in evidence at the trial to enable the jury to institute a comparison of hands, or to enable a witness so to do. This is clearly the rule in England, especially according to the modern cases, and although it is said that the American decisions on the subject are far from being uniform, yet it cannot be said that in this state the correctness of the rule has ever been questioned by any decision of this court. It has been uniformly received and acted on with us as a settled general rule. If there be any exceptions to it this case is not one of them. For the cases on this subject reference may be had to 1 Greenleaf on Ev., §§ 579-581,

5. The fifth assignment is, that "the court erred in excluding from the jury the testimony referred to in the fourth bill of exceptions, as to the incompetency or inability of the prisoner to have written the paper with the forgery of which he was charged."

The fourth bill of exceptions states, "that upon the trial of this cause the prisoner offered a witness, Dr. Otho W. Kean, who proved that he was a resident of Goochland county, and had lived in the same neighborhood with the prisoner for many years; that he was a practising physician of 947 many years standing, and *also superintendent of public schools of the county; that the prisoner was a teacher of public schools in his employment; that, as superintendent of the schools, it was his duty to inspect all the reports of the said Roger D. Burress as teacher for about four years; and that he had had other correspondence with him; that in this way his opportunities for acquiring a knowledge of his handwriting were very superior; that, in addition to this, he had inspected the reports of the said Roger D. Burress, and his correspondence with him, running through a period of four years, and terminating about a year ago, since this charge was brought against him, with the view of determining whether he could detect any variation in his writing, done at different times, or want of uniformity in his handwriting during the whole of this period, or any resemblance to the paper purporting to be an order drawn by Allen & Bro., which the witness had carefully examined before that time; and that, in his opinion, the order and signature is not the handwriting of this prisoner; that he wrote a good, plain, round hand, remarkably uniform, and fixed and well defined; and that from his knowledge of the prisoner and his handwriting, he did not believe that he could have written the order or the signature to the receipt, or either of them, if he had tried to do so. The attorney for the commonwealth objected to the introduction of that portion of the evidence of the said witness which states that "he did not believe that the prisoner could have written the order and the signature, or either of them, if he had tried to do so," and moved the court to exclude the same; and the court sustained this objection, and ruled out the evidence." To which action of the court the prisoner excepted.

948 *We know of no principle of the law of evidence which would make the statement of the witness, excluded in this case, admissible evidence. It is a statement, not of facts, to which a witness generally testifies, but of mere matter of opinion, to which he rarely testifies, and only in special cases and for peculiar reasons. This is not such a case, and such reasons do not apply to it. An expert is sometimes called upon to give his opinion, which is evidence in a court of justice; but certainly the witness in this case was no expert. He had no peculiar knowledge of handwriting, or of the capacity of men to write. He seems to have had a very good opportunity of becoming acquainted with the prisoner's handwriting, and to have been very well acquainted with it. But certainly his opinion that the prisoner could not have written the order or the signature, if he had tried to do so, would be very unsafe and improper evidence to go before a jury. He proves that the prisoner "wrote a good, plain, round hand, remarkably uniform, and fixed and well defined;" in other words, that he wrote an excellent hand. And how the witness could form an opinion from these facts, that the prisoner could not have written the order or signature if he had tried to do so, we cannot perceive. Why could he not have done so as well as any other man, skilled as he was in the use of the pen? Almost every good writer writes a uniform hand, ordinarily. But that does not show that he cannot write a feigned hand. Of course he would write a feigned hand if he attempted to commit a forgery. From the facts stated by the witness, others would no doubt form a different opinion from the one expressed by him as to the capacity of the prisoner. But the law in its wisdom excludes all such opinions from the jury, as calculated not to enlighten, but to mislead them. 1 Greenleaf on Ev., § 440 and seq. and notes; Roscoe's Crim. Ev., p. 135 and seq. and notes.

The only remaining assignment of error was waived and abandoned by the learned counsel for the prisoner, and therefore will not be further noticed by us.

We think there is no error in the judgment, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

950 *Smart & McKinsey v. The Commonwealth.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

Toll-Gates—Destruction of—Misdemeanor.—The county court authorizes W to erect a toll-gate on a turnpike road in the county, and take toll thereon at a rate fixed, he being bound to keep the road in order. S & M came with their teams to the gate, which they found shut and fastened. They demanded that the gate should be opened, and the gate-keeper demanded the usual tolls before opening the gate. S & M refused to pay the tolls, and the gate-keeper refused to open the gate. Thereupon S & M broke down and destroyed the gate, and passed through without paying tolls. Held:

1. Same—Same—Same.—W having erected the gate under the authority of the county court, whether or not the court had authority to make the order, S & M were guilty of a misdemeanor under the statute. Code of 1873, ch. 188, § 28.

2. Same—Same—Same.—If the toll-gate was such an obstruction on the highway as could be regarded as a nuisance, S & M could only be justified in removing it peaceably, and not in destroying it, and having destroyed it they were guilty of misdemeanor.

This was an information for a misdemeanor in the county court of Floyd against James M. Smart and Allen McKinsey. The case is fully stated by Judge Christian in his opinion.

Penn, for the appellants.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The plaintiffs in error were indicted under the 28th section, chapter 188,

Code of 1873, which declares that "if a person unlawfully, but not feloniously, take and carry away, or destroy, deface or injure, any property, real or personal, not his own. * * * he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor."

The plaintiffs in error having waived their right to a trial by jury, demurred to the evidence offered by the commonwealth; which demurrer was overruled by the court; and judgment entered against each of the defendants for a fine of five dollars in each case.

The commonwealth's evidence to which the demurrer was tendered was as follows:

At a county court held for Floyd, on the 10th day of February, 1868:

On motion of R. W. Whitlow, he is authorized to take charge of that portion of the Floyd and Patrick turnpike lying between Floyd courthouse and the Patrick county line, and put the same in order, and receive for his services and labor done on the same in making repairs, the tolls collected on said road for the next five [years], he putting the said road in good order before he is authorized to receive tolls on the same.

At a county court held for the county of Floyd, on the 11th day of December, 1872:

On motion of R. W. Whitlow, it is ordered that the turnpike leading from Floyd courthouse, to Patrick county be let to the said Whitlow for the term of five years, F. C. House to the Patrick line, to be kept up by the tolls arising therefrom, which said Whitlow is authorized to collect at one gate, that he may erect on said road at such place as suits his convenience, said tolls to remain at present rates charged on said — by A. Booth; but before the said Whitlow shall be entitled to any benefit from said tolls—this order he shall enter bond in the sum of $1,500, with good security, to be approved by the court, payable to Jacksonville township, to keep said road in the condition required by law for turnpike roads, for the term of five years.

And it is further ordered and expressly understood, that this court reserves to itself the right to annul and discontinue this contract at any time, upon ten days' notice to said Whitlow, or his assigns, in case he fails to keep said road in the order required by law.

And it is further ordered, that the said Whitlow shall not take any toll on said road until William Campbell, S. Dobyns, Thomas L. Nixon, Eden Epperly and Mason Jenkins, or any three of them, who are hereby appointed to act as commissioners for that purpose, shall certify that said road is in the condition required by law. And the court reserves the right to alter the tariff of tolls at any time he may deem proper upon ten days' notice to the said Whitlow or his assigns.

Robert W. Whitlow had erected a toll-gate on that part of the Jacksonville and Christiansburg turnpike lying in the county of Floyd, between Floyd courthouse and the Patrick line, and was keeping the road in repair for tolls received at the gate under the last order. He had never taken or received tolls under first order, said road being kept in repair by surveyor and hands assigned to work same until Whitlow's last contract was made with county court. Toll-gate was the personal property of the said R. W. Whitlow. At the date set out in the information, defendants, with their teams, drove up to the toll-gate in the county of Floyd, and found the same closed and fastened. They demanded that the gate-keeper should open the gate; the gate-keeper demanded the usual tolls before opening 953 *the gate; the defendants refused to pay tolls, said they did not intend, and would not pay tolls, and the gate-keeper refused to open gate. Thereupon, then and there, the defendants by force broke down, removed, injured and destroyed the gate, and passed over said road without paying tolls.

The court is of opinion, that there was no error in the judgment of the court in overruling the demurrer and assessing a fine against the plaintiffs in error. They were certainly guilty of the offence which the statute defines. They unlawfully injured and destroyed personal property not their own. The toll-gate was the personal property of Whitlow. It was not only injured but destroyed by the plaintiffs in error. The toll-gate was erected by Whitlow under an order of the county court of Floyd. It may be that such order was without authority, (on that question we express no opinion,) and that being without authority it was a nuisance to erect a toll-gate across a public highway. But that question the plaintiffs in error had no right to decide for themselves, except at their own peril.

But if the toll-gate was such an obstruction on the highway as could be regarded as a nuisance, the plaintiffs in error could only be justified in removing it peaceably, not in destroying it. The evidence shows that they not only removed the gate, but destroyed it. This was an unlawful act which was indictable under the statute. The court is therefore of opinion, that there is no error in the judgment of said circuit court, and that the same be affirmed.

*Page v. The Commonwealth.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Trial for Felony.—A person examined by a justice for a felony, may be sent on for trial to the circuit court of the county then in session, and may be arraigned and tried at that term of the court.
2. Same — Pleading — Replication — Rejoinder.—On the arraignment of a prisoner on a charge of felony, he files a special plea, to which the attorney for the commonwealth files a special replication; and to this replication the prisoner demurs. The demurrer being overruled, the prisoner cannot rejoin to the replication without withdrawing his demurrer.
3. Same—Same — Autrefois Acquit—Replication to.—A prisoner indicted for felony files a plea of autrefois acquit, and makes the record of his former trial a part of his plea; and he avers that the offence for which he had been before tried is the same offence for which he is then on trial; and the evidence necessary to convict him on the present indictment, if introduced, would have convicted him on the first trial. The attorney for the commonwealth replies that there is no record of the trial of the prisoner for the same identical felony and offence charged in the indictment on which the prisoner is then arraigned. The replication denies one of the essential averments of the plea, viz: that the offence was the same as that for which the prisoner had been before tried; and is therefore a good replication to the plea.
4. Same—Same—Same.—In such a case it would not have been proper to traverse the allegation that the evidence necessary to convict him, &c. The two indictments being for similar offences, and in the same words, except as to time, which is immaterial, of course the same facts which sustain the one would, standing by themselves, sustain the other. But when it is averred and shown that the two offences, though similar, are not in fact the same, but different offences, all foundation for the plea is taken away.
5. Same—Same—Same—Instructions.—Upon the trial of the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, an instruction to the jury, that if they believe, &c., that the house named in the indictment for the burning of which the prisoner was arraigned
- 955 and *tried at a previous term of the court, is not the same house, nor the same burning charged in the indictment upon which he now stands arraigned, then they must find against the prisoner on the issue joined is correct. And it makes no difference that the offences charged in the two indictments are described as the burnings of the dwelling house of R, if the jury believe that in reality distinct houses and distinct burnings are referred to in the two indictments.
6. Same—Same—Same—Evidence.—On the trial of the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, R, whose dwelling house was in both indictments alleged to have been burned, and who was the principal witness for the commonwealth as to the burnings on both trials, may be asked, and may state whether or not the verdict of the jury on the first trial had relation to the house charged to have been burned in the indictment on which the prisoner was then arraigned. The enquiry is as to fact, not an opinion.
7. Same—Summoning Jurors from Another County.—Under the act, Code of 1873, ch. 202, § 10, the court may direct jurors to be summoned from another county or corporation for the trial of a prisoner upon the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, as well as on the general issue.

8. Same—Same—Discretion of Court.*—Whether it is a case in which a jury should be summoned from abroad, is for the court of trial to determine; and the appellate court will presume that the court of trial acted rightly in the matter unless the contrary plainly appears.

9. Same—Confessions—Competency of Jurors.†—The issue on the plea of autrefois acquit having been found against the prisoner, and he being on his trial on the plea of "not guilty," eight of the jurors who had tried the first issue were called and examined on their voir dire, when they stated that, during that trial, they had heard R. in his testimony while speaking of the burning of the house, say that the prisoner had confessed; but as he used the last word he was interrupted, and told to say nothing about the confession; but that they believed they could give the prisoner a fair and impartial trial on the evidence, notwithstanding anything they had heard, having no impression on their minds on the question as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, which it would require evidence to remove. They are competent jurors.

10. Same—Same.‡—That admissions and confessions of a prisoner may be given in evidence against him. The rule in Smith's case, 10 Gratt. 784, and Shinn's case, 14 Id. 652, reaffirmed.

This was an indictment in the circuit court of Chesterfield, against Hillary Page, 956 for burning the dwelling *house of Frank G. Ruffin in the night time. The prisoner was tried, convicted and sentenced to be hung at the May term of the court for 1875. And he thereupon applied to this court for a writ of error; which was allowed. The case is stated in the opinion of Judge Moncure.

S. Page and E. C. Cabell, for the prisoner.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

In March, April, May and July 1874, and January 1875, many houses on the land of Francis G. Ruffin, in the county of Chesterfield, were at different times, burned or set fire to, generally in the night time, by some person then unknown; and it being afterwards discovered, or supposed to be discovered, that a colored boy named Hillary Page, living with his mother on the said land, was the author of all these fires, he was accordingly charged therewith and arrested therefor, and indictments were, at different times, found and tried against him for some of these offences, in the circuit court of said county; on three of which indictments he was, at different times, convicted and condemned to death. The first conviction took place in February 1875, and was on an indictment containing three counts, charging the offence in different forms. In the first count, the house was described as "a certain dwelling house of one Francis G. Ruffin." In the second, it was described as a certain dwelling house of "Phillip Epps" and four other persons therein named. And in the third, it was described as a certain other house called a barn and stable of one F. G. Ruffin.

957 *—"the same being an outhouse, not adjoining the dwelling house nor under the same roof, but some persons usually lodging therein at night, to-wit: Phillip Epps," and four other persons therein named, as aforesaid. The prisoner was found guilty under the third count, the jury saying nothing in their verdict about the first or second counts. And sentence of death was pronounced against him on that conviction. This court awarded a writ of error to the judgment; and upon argument and consideration of the case, being of opinion that the finding by the jury of a verdict of "guilty as charged in the third count of the indictment," was, in effect, a finding of not guilty, as charged in the first and second counts of the indictment, on which two counts the prisoner was therefore entitled to a judgment of acquittal; and being further of opinion that he was not charged in the third count with any offence punishable with death; but at most only with an offence under the fifth section of chapter 188 of the Code, which section concerns the burning of "any barn, stable," &c., and makes the offences therein mentioned punishable by confinement in the penitentiary; it was considered that the said judgment was erroneous, and should be reversed and annulled. And this court proceeding to enter such judgment as the said circuit court ought to have entered, it was further considered that the prisoner should be acquitted of the charges contained in the first and second counts of the indictment. And it was ordered that the verdict of the jury against him on the third count should be set aside, and the cause remanded to the said circuit court for a new trial to be had therein on the said third count, for the offence of feloniously and maliciously burning a barn and stable, as therein charged and as described in the said fifth section of chapter 188 of the

958 *Code. But it was declared in the judgment of this court, that it would be competent for the court below, if deemed best to do so, to have a nolle prosequi entered as to the said third count, and to proceed to the trial of the prisoner on one or more of the other indictments for felony which appear to have been found against him, in the same court and at the same time with the indictment on which he had been tried as aforesaid, or any other indictment which might have been, or might be found against him for felony in the same court. Accordingly it appears that after *Summoning Jurors—Discretion of Court.—See citation of principal case in State v. Hudkins, 35 W. Va. 251, 18 S. E. Rep. 668.

†Competency of Jurors.—This subject is exhausted in Shinn v. Com., 32 Gratt. 900, and note.

‡Confessions.—See monographic note on "Confessions Generally" to Swartz v. Com., 27 Gratt. 1025.

the said cause was remanded to the circuit court as aforesaid, it was not further prosecuted therein, but the prisoner was tried, convicted and sentenced to death on each of two other indictments found against him in the same court on the 12th day of May 1875, in each of which he was charged with a like offence to that charged in the first count of the indictment on the third count of which he had previously been convicted as aforesaid; the said offence being described in all of the said indictments as the felonious and malicious burning of a certain dwelling house of one Francis G. Ruffin, in the said county, in the night, and being charged in one of the said two indictments last found, which one was marked by the clerk when presented No. 5, as having been committed on the 26th day of April 1874, about the hour of one o'clock in the night of that day, and in the other of the said two indictments last found, which was marked by the clerk when presented No. 7, as having been committed on the 31st day of March 1874, about the hour of three o'clock in the night of that day. It appears that the indictment on which the prisoner had previously been convicted as aforesaid was marked No. 1, and in it the offence is charged as having been 959 committed on the 29th day of *July, about the hour of two o'clock in the night of that day. The prisoner was convicted on one of the said two indictments last found, to-wit: the one marked No. 5, on the 21st day of May 1875; and on the other, to-wit: the one marked No. 7, on the 1st day of June 1875; and he was sentenced to death in each case on the 2nd day of June 1875. To each of the judgments in these two cases a writ of error was awarded by this court.

A great many errors were assigned in the petition for a writ of error in each case. The two cases were argued together, but we will consider them separately as a decision of one of them may render it unnecessary to decide or consider the other. We will, therefore, proceed now to consider the case in which the indictment is marked No. 7.

All, or nearly all, of the questions arising in this case are presented by the bills of exceptions which were taken during the progress of the trial, and which are fifteen in number, including No. 2, which is not in the record and was not filed, as appears by a note of the clerk of the court below, at the foot of the record. We will consider and dispose of these questions in the order in which they are presented by the bills of exceptions; some of which will require very brief notice, and seem not to be relied on, and are not noticed in the assignment of errors, unless it be under the general head at the end of the petition, of "numerous other errors which are apparent in the record."

1. Bill of exceptions No. 1 was taken to the ruling of the court in refusing the petition of the prisoner to grant him a mandamus nisi to the justice of the peace of the county by whom the prisoner was examined and remanded to answer for the felony 960 for which *he was indicted, to appear before the court forthwith and show cause why a peremptory mandamus should not issue, commanding him to remand the said Hillary Page to the next term of the circuit court to answer for a felony for which he was indicted and arrested, instead of remanding him to the present term of the said court.

The question, no doubt, intended to be presented by this bill of exceptions was, whether a person remanded by an examining justice for trial for felony in the circuit court, could be arraigned and tried at a term of the court then in session, or only at a term of the court commencing after such examination. Conceding, for the purposes of this case, that the question was presented in a proper way, we are of opinion that it was properly solved by the court below, and that a person remanded for trial as aforesaid could be tried at any time after he was so remanded, even though at a term of the court which was in session at the time of his examination before a justice. The Code, it is true, provides that the commitment for trial, &c., "shall be in the next term of the circuit court for such county;" but that does not prevent a trial from being had at an existing term of the court, if one be then in existence. The object of the law is to have a speedy trial of a felony, and it therefore provides that the accused shall, unless good cause be shown for a continuance, be arraigned and tried at the first term of the court to which he is remanded or sent on for trial. Code, ch. 202, §§ 1 and 2. It might be very inconvenient and injurious, as well to the accused as to the commonwealth, to delay a trial necessarily to a future term of the circuit court, when there was one in existence at which it might just as well be had.

961 *2. Bill of exceptions No. 2 is not in the record, as before stated.

3. Bill of exceptions No. 3 states that the prisoner tendered to the court his plea of autrefois acquit, and sets out the plea, in which the arraignment, trial, and judgment had on indictment marked No. 1, as aforesaid, are relied on as an acquittal of the offence charged in the indictment in this case, marked No. 7, as aforesaid. To which plea the attorney for the commonwealth filed his replication, which is also set out in the bill; the said replication being, "that the offence charged in the indictment for which he is now arraigned, is another and distinct offence from that for which the said Hillary Page was tried and acquitted, as stated in said plea." To this replication the prisoner, by his counsel demurred generally; and the court overruling his demurrer, the prisoner asked leave to join issue on the replication; which leave the court refused to grant, unless he would withdraw his demurrer to the replication; but offered to permit him to join issue on the replication if he would withdraw his demurrer thereto; which he refused to do;

whereupon the court refused again his motion to join issue. And to this opinion and ruling of the court the prisoner excepted.

The court is of opinion that there is no error in the said opinion and ruling of the court below. The prisoner had no right to demur and rejoin to the same replication at the same time. He had his election to do either. He elected to demur; when his demurrer was decided against him, all he could then ask was to withdraw his demurrer and rejoin, and this the court offered to permit him to do; but he refused. He has therefore no just cause of complaint in this respect. He says in his petition, 962 that "the demurrer being *overruled by the court, the judgment should have been respondeat ouster." He did answer over, by pleading not guilty, after his special plea of autrefois acquit was disposed of. The right of respondeat ouster does not authorize a party whose demurrer to a replication has been decided against him to put in a rejoinder without withdrawing his demurrer. That would be a case of palpable duplicity; and would be the same thing as if he had offered to demur and rejoin at the same time to the replication. He may plead double in the first step in a line of pleading. For example, he may plead autrefois acquit and not guilty. But he cannot plead double in any subsequent step in that line.

But in this case there was a second plea of autrefois acquit, founded on the same ground of acquittal, in the line of which pleading the prisoner rejoined, instead of demurring to the replication; and thus had all the benefit he could have derived from being allowed to rejoin without withdrawing his demurrer to the first replication. In no view, therefore, can he have been injured by the action of the court below in this respect.

The first assignment of error may here properly be noticed. For though it does not present the same question presented by the third bill of exceptions, it is founded on what is set forth in that bill. That assignment is, that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the replication to the plea of autrefois acquit tendered by the prisoner. That plea was clearly demurrable in not showing by the record an acquittal of any offence, but on the contrary a conviction. The prisoner, however, was not injured by the action of the court in this respect, even if it had been erroneous, for he put in a second plea of former acquittal, under *which he would have 963 had the full benefit of his former acquittal if it had in fact been for the same offence.

4. The third assignment of error is founded on bill of exceptions No. 4, and in that the court erred in refusing to reject the replication to the second plea of autrefois acquit, on the ground that it was not responsive to every part of the plea.

The plea and replication are set out in the bill of exceptions, and are in substance as follows:

The prisoner for plea says, that he has been heretofore, to wit: in the circuit court, &c., in February 1875 indicted, for that he on the 29th day of July, in the year 1874 about the hour of 2 o'clock in the night of that day, in the county aforesaid, a certain dwelling house of one Francis G. Rufin there situate, feloniously and maliciously did burn against the peace, &c., as will be seen from the first count of an indictment herewith filed, and prayed to be taken as a part of this plea; that on this indictment he was, at the said term, arraigned and tried for the said offence by a jury of his country, and by said jury acquitted of said charge, as may be seen from the record and judgment of said court, entered at its February term 1875. And the said Hillary Page further says, that the said offence of which he was thus acquitted, is the same offence of which he is now indicted, and that he is the same Hillary Page mentioned in the said record and judgment, and that the evidence necessary to convict him on the present indictment would have convicted him if properly introduced on the previous trial and indictment when he was by the jury acquitted; and this he is ready to verify. Wherefore he prays, &c.

To which plea the attorney for the commonwealth filed his replication in substance as follows: that by reason of anything 964 in the said last plea alleged, the *commonwealth ought not to be precluded, &c., because the said attorney says, that while admitting that the prisoner is the same Hillary Page who was tried, as is alleged in said plea, &c., there is no such record in the said court referred to in the said plea of the said acquittal in due manner of law of the said Hillary Page, of and from the same identical felony and offence charged in the said indictment upon which he, the said Page, is now arraigned, as is by the said Page in his said plea in that behalf alleged; and this the said attorney for the commonwealth prays may be enquired of by the country.

This replication the prisoner moved the court to reject, as not being responsive to the plea; but the court overruled the motion; and to this opinion and ruling of the court, the prisoner excepted.

We think there is no error in this opinion and ruling of the court. The replication is responsive to the plea. It traverses a vitally important allegation of the plea, that the offences charged in the two indictments were one and the same offence. The prisoner may have been acquitted a thousand times of offences precisely like the offence charged in this indictment, and yet if none of them was this identical offence, such acquittals would be no bar to a prosecution under this indictment. The plea rests upon two grounds: 1st, that there was a former acquittal of an offence—that is matter of record; and, 2dly, that such offence was the same which is charged in the present indictment. That is matter of fact to be proved. The prosecutor need not take issue on both of these grounds. He may admit the former, and traverse the latter; and that is what in effect he did in this case.

The counsel for the prisoner seem to suppose that the replication should have 965 traversed the allegation in *the plea, "that the evidence necessary to convict him on the present indictment, would have convicted him if properly introduced on the previous trial and indictment when he was by the jury acquitted."

Now certainly such a traverse was not necessary, and would have been very improper. The two indictments being for similar offences, and in the very same words, except as to time, which is immaterial, it follows, as a matter of course, that the same facts which sustain the one, would, standing by themselves, sustain the other. But when it is averred and shown that the two offences, though similar, are not in fact the same, but very different offences, all foundation for the plea is thus completely taken away. Surely it cannot be necessary to cite authority, or say anything more in support of this view.

The next questions presented by the bills of exceptions in this case are in regard to instructions asked for by the prisoner and the commonwealth respectively, on the trial of the issue joined on the second plea of autrefois acquit. These instructions are the subjects of bills Nos. 5, 6 and 7, which will be considered together.

5. Bill of exceptions, No. 5, states that the prisoner tendered to the court the following instructions numbered from one to four, which are to the following effect:

1. If the jury believe that the evidence necessary to support a conviction on the present indictment would also have supported a conviction on the previous indictment, then they must find that he has been heretofore acquitted of the same offence.

2. The issue before them is, not whether or not the offences charged in the two 966 indictments are one and *the same, but whether an acquittal under one is an acquittal of the other.

3. On the trial of an indictment for a felony, the day and year are not material; and on the trial of a felony, on an indictment charging an offence to have been committed on the 28th day of July 1874, a prisoner may be legally convicted if the evidence shows that the offence was committed on the 31st day of March 1874.

4. If the jury believe from the evidence before them, that the prisoner was tried and acquitted of burning the dwelling house of Francis G. Ruffin on the 29th day of July 1874, and that the present indictment charges him with burning the dwelling house of Francis G. Ruffin on the 31st day of March 1874, then they must find that he has been acquitted of the offence charged in the present indictment, unless they believe from the evidence that there was also a dwelling house burned on the 29th day of July 1874, and that he was tried for that burning on his previous trial.

Which instructions the court refused to give, to which ruling the prisoner excepted.

6. Bill of exceptions No. 6 states that the commonwealth tendered to the court the following instructions to the jury:

"That if the jury believe from the evidence that the offence for which the prisoner is now arraigned is another and distinct, and not the same offence for which he has been heretofore tried and acquitted, then they must find against the prisoner upon the issue joined.

"And if they believe from the evidence that the house named in the first count of the indictment, for the burning of which the prisoner was arraigned and tried at the February term of the court, is not the same house nor the same burning charged 967 in the indictment *upon which he now stands arraigned, then they must find against the prisoner on the issue joined. And it makes no difference that the offences charged in the indictments are described as the burnings of the dwelling house of Francis G. Ruffin, if the jury believe that in reality distinct houses and distinct burnings are referred to in the two indictments."

Which instructions the court gave; to which ruling the prisoner excepted.

7. Bill of exceptions No. 7 states that the prisoner tendered to the court the following instruction to the jury:

"That if they believe that the evidence necessary to support a conviction on the present indictment would also have supported a conviction on the previous trial, then they must find that he has been heretofore acquitted of the same offence.

Which said instruction, as it was tendered, the court refused to give; but gave it with the following addendum made thereto by the court.

"But if the jury, from the evidence, believe that the prisoner, on the former trial, was tried for a separate and distinct offence, occurring at a separate and distinct time, involving a separate and distinct act, then the jury may find for the commonwealth on the issue joined."

To which ruling of the court, in refusing to give the said instruction as asked for, and in giving it with the addendum aforesaid, the prisoner excepted.

We think that the circuit court did not err, at least to the prejudice of the prisoner, in regard to the said instructions. Certainly the court did not err in refusing to give the instructions numbered 1 and 2 in bill of exceptions No. 5; nor in giving the instructions named in bill of exceptions 968 No. 6; nor, (to the prejudice *of the prisoner) in refusing to give the instruction asked for, but giving it with an addition as mentioned in bill of exceptions No. 7. The instructions numbered 3 and 4 in bill of exceptions No. 5, would have been true enough, standing by themselves, and as abstract propositions. But standing as they were, and without any evidence to support them, they would have misled the jury, or were calculated to do so; and the court was warranted in refusing to give them. No evidence is set out in either of the three bills of exceptions which relate to the instructions. And if we look to the facts certified in a subsequent bill of exceptions, No. 11, we find that there was not a particle of evidence in the case tending to prove that the offences charged in the two indictments were the same; but on the contrary there was ample evidence that they were totally distinct, committed at different times and places, and upon different buildings. Taking all the instructions given by the court to the jury together, the law was thereby correctly and fully laid down on the subject, and if there was any error therein, it was certainly not to the prejudice of the prisoner.

8. Bill of exceptions No. 8, states that on the trial of the issue, on the plea of autrefois acquit, Francis G. Ruffin, a witness for the commonwealth, was asked to "state whether or not the verdict rendered by the jury sworn for the trial of Hillary Page at the February term of the said circuit court, had relation to the house charged in the indictment upon which he is now arraigned, as having been burnt on the 31st day of March 1874;" to which question the prisoner objected as illegal. But the court overruled the objection, and permitted the question to be asked and answered: when the witness answered that it did not. To this question and answer the prisoner excepted.

969 *The ground of this exception, as stated in the assignment of error is, that the testimony objected to, is "simply the opinion of a witness on a question of law and record evidence."

The only meaning and effect of this evidence was, that the two indictments were for different offences. The witness was the owner of both houses, the burning of which was the subject of the two prosecutions respectively. He was the principal, if not the only witness in regard to the burning in each case. He knew perfectly well that the former trial was for burning his barn and stable on the 29th day of July 1874, and the latter trial was for burning his dwelling house on the 31st of March 1874; and he could and did therefore state as a fact, that the verdict rendered at the February term of the court in 1875, for burning a house on the 29th day of July 1874, did not have relation to the house charged in the indictment on which he was then arraigned as having been burnt on the 31st day of March 1874.

9. Bill of exceptions, No. 9, seems to have been waived by the prisoner's counsel.

10. Bill of exceptions, No. 10, states that the jury on the trial of the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, after hearing the evidence, were about retiring to their room to consider of their verdict, when the court gave them, to carry with them to their room, the plea of the prisoner, with the replication thereto, the instructions of the court in writing, and the indictments No. 1 and No. 7, but failed to give the jury the written opinion of the court of appeals defining and declaring the legal force and effect of the verdict of the jury, who formerly tried the prisoner on indictment No. 1. all of these papers having been offered in evidence and read to the jury. After their retirement the jury returned into 970 *court and rendered their verdict; and the prisoner thereupon moved the court to set aside the verdict, because the jury had been permitted to carry the said indictments, Nos. 1 and 7, with them to their room without taking with them the opinion of the court of appeals aforesaid: which motion the court overruled; and to this ruling of the court the prisoner excepts.

It was no doubt well understood by the jury, and not denied by the commonwealth that the prisoner was acquitted of the offence charged in indictment No. 1, and that was all that the opinion of the court of appeals could show in favor of the prisoner. The circuit court, if it had been asked, would have instructed the jury as to the meaning and effect of the said opinion, and would no doubt have handed it to the jury, to take into their room with the other papers aforesaid on their retirement, but it was not asked to do so. And after their return into court with their verdict, it was too late to make the objection, if it ever could have been properly made; and the court did not err in overruling the motion to set aside the verdict on the ground aforesaid.

11. Bill of exceptions, No. 11, states that the jury, having heard the evidence on the issue joined on the plea of autrefois acquit, retired to their room, and after some time returned into court with their verdict in these words: "We, the jury, find that the said Hillary Page had not been tried and acquitted for the offence charged in the indictment. Thomas Woodfin, Foreman." Whereupon the prisoner moved the court to set aside the verdict, because of its being contrary to law and the evidence; which motion the court overruled; and to this ruling of the court the prisoner excepts, and the court certifies the facts proved on the trial of the said issue to be as follows:

971 *Then follows the certificate of facts, including the warrant of arrest dated the 15th, and mittimus dated the 16th day of February 1875, in which Hillary Page is charged with feloniously burning in the night time, on different days, sundry houses, the property of F. G. Ruffin, Sr., in the county of Chesterfield, among which was one barn and stable charged to have been burnt on the 29th of July 1874, and one dwelling house on the 31st of March 1874; also including indictment No. 1, and copy of the record of the trial thereon at February term 1875, and of the record of the case in this court, including the opinion of the court in the case as aforesaid. After which follows a certificate in these words:

"And for the commonwealth it was proved by a witness that the two houses described in the two indictments, numbered 1 and 7, were totally distinct houses, situated one mile apart; that the house burned in July was just one mile from the house burned on the 31st of March; that there had not been only one burning, but several; that the house burned on the 29th day of July 1874, was really his barn;" being charged in the first count of indictment No. 1 to be his dwelling house, in the second count to be the dwelling of Philip Epps and others, and in the third to be his barn, in which Philip Epps and others named therein usually lodged at night; that the house Hillary Page is charged in the present indictment, No. 7, to have burned "on the 31st of March is his mansion house, in which himself and family then resided, and the house burnt on the 29th day of July was his barn, in which some of his laborers usually lodged at night. He had the following fires as given in his evidence on the other trial: March 13th 1874, the first fire occurred; it was his son Frank's house:

On the 23rd of March, his, the witness's, *stable and carriage house, including three horses; 31st March his dwelling house was set on fire in the night; 26th of April (four weeks lacking one day) same dwelling house was set fire to at the same place; on the 2d of May, Lucy's house (the mother of the boy,) was set fire to in the night time; on the 8th of May the same house was set fire to; on the 8th of May the smoke house was set fire to; on the 14th of May, Lucy's house was set fire to in roof in the day time (at 11 o'clock). At that time he commenced guarding the premises at night, and continued to guard the premises, himself and his sons, up to the 12th of January 1875; on the 29th of July the barn, stable and contents were burned; on the 13th of January 1875, a new stable and new carriage, three valuable horses, &c., were burned, between 7½ and 8 o'clock at night; they were all at supper at the time. That he had been examined at every trial of Hillary Page, and has never been examined on the charge against Hillary Page for burning his dwelling house on the 31st of March, the offence for which he is now arraigned. No one has been examined against him as a witness on that charge. The verdict of the jury on the trial at February term, had no reference to the burning of the house charged in this indictment. And on cross-examination, this witness proved that at the trial of the prisoner in February, on indictment No. 1, he gave the same evidence as regards the different fires, that he has given to-day; that he read the dates and different fires from the report of the evidence on that trial as published in the Richmond Dispatch, and that the report of his evidence was correct as given in on that trial. And the court certifies that no other fact was proven on the issue on the prisoner's plea of autrefois acquit."

We are clearly of opinion that the circuit court did *not err in overruling the motion to set aside the verdict on the issue on the plea of former acquittal. It is perfectly clear from the evidence, that the offence, and the only offence tried, or intended to be tried at the first trial, in February 1875, was the burning of the barn and stable on the 29th day of July 1874. That is the offence, and the only offence described, or intended to be described, in indictment No. 1, and in each count thereof, though described in the first count as the dwelling house of F. G. Ruffin, in the second as the dwelling house of Philip Epps and others, and in the third by its true name, of barn and stable, and as "an out-house, not adjoining the dwelling house, nor under the same roof, but some persons usually lodging therein at night, to wit: Philip Epps," &c. We know very well that in practice but one felony can be charged in one indictment, though it can be charged in different forms, in different counts of the same indictment, which is upon the theory that they are different offences. The pleader supposed, and perhaps correctly, that the house, though a barn and stable, was in law the dwelling house of the owner, Colonel Ruffin, as part of his family, to wit: some of his servants lodged therein at night, or the dwelling house of Philip Epps and others, as they lodged therein at night; and he also supposed, but in that he was mistaken, that the offence of burning a barn and stable, as described in the third count of the indictment, was a felony punishable with death, as was the offence described in each of the first and second counts of the indictment. The jury being thus misled, found the prisoner guilty under the third count, which truly described the house in point of fact, saying nothing in their verdict about the first and second count; and thus the prisoner was, by construction of law, acquitted *under the first and second counts. And this constructive acquittal of an offence, of which the prisoner was in fact convicted under the third count, he has endeavored to convert into an actual acquittal of another and totally distinct felony, committed at a different time and place. We cannot read the facts certified in bill of exceptions No. 11, without seeing plainly that the only offence intended to be charged in indictment No. 1, and tried in February 1875, was the burning of the barn and stable; and no body better understood that fact than the prisoner himself. In the warrants of arrest and commitment, which bear date on the 15th and 16th of February 1875, just before the first trial, which was had in the same month, the most important of the different burnings of the property of Colonel Ruffin, charged to have been perpetrated at different times by the prisoner, were enumerated and described, one of them being described as the burning of "one barn and stable on the 29th July 1874," and another being described as the burning of a dwelling house on the 31st of March 1874. At the February term of the circuit court, which seems to have been in session at the date of the warrant of commitment, indictment No. 1 was found against the prisoner for the offence charged to have been committed on the 29th of July 1874. There was no indictment then found for any of the other offences charged to have been committed by the same offender on other days named in the warrants. At subsequent terms of the court other indictments were found for other offences named in the warrants, and among them the indictment in this case, No. 7, for burning the dwelling house of Colonel Ruffin on the 31st of March 1874. It is true, as said by the counsel for the prisoner, that a mistake in the day, in the description of an offence in an indictment, is *immaterial; but here there was no mistake. The different offences were in fact committed on the different days named in the warrants, and were truly described by those dates in the different indictments. We have said so much on this branch of the case, because it seems to be the most important; but we will now leave it.

12. Bill of exceptions, No. 12, states that a venire of thirty-six persons having been summoned from the city of Petersburg, the prisoner by his counsel moved the court to quash the venire facias, by and on which the said jury were summoned, for errors apparent on the face of said writ, and because there is no authority for summoning such jury at this time; which motion the court overruled;" and the prisoner excepted.

The writ is not embodied in the bill of exceptions, nor elsewhere in the record, and we cannot therefore see whether there be any errors apparent on the face of it. None are pointed out by the prisoner, unless it be by the ninth assignment of errors, which is that "the court erred in sending out of the county for jurors to try his plea of autrefois acquit, there being no provision for such action. The common law provides, that the plea may be tried by the jury summoned to try the general issue, or by a jury made up of bystanders."

The Code, chapter 202, section 10, provides, that "in a criminal case in a circuit court, if qualified jurors, not exempt from serving, cannot conveniently be found in the county or corporation in which the trial is to be, the court may cause so many as may be necessary of such jurors to be summoned from any other county or corporation by the sheriff or sergeant thereof, or by its own officer."

We are of opinion that the venire facias in question was issued by authority of the provision just quoted *from the Code. That provision does not discriminate between jurors for the trial of the general issue and jurors for the trial of an issue or special plea, and there seems to be the same necessity or propriety for sending out of the county for jurors in the one case as the other. The letter and the spirit of the law therefore equally apply to both. The same jury, we are told, may try both issues, though not at the same time. The right to send out of the county for a jury to try one, seems to involve a right to send out for a jury to try the other, in the absence of anything in the law to the contrary. The law gives to the court of trial a very large discretion in this matter, mainly, if not entirely, for the protection and security of the prisoner. "If qualified jurors, not exempt from serving, cannot be conveniently found in the county," &c., is the language of the law which prescribes the condition on which this authority is to be exercised. But who is to judge in this matter? Of course, the court of trial, which knows all the circumstances of each case before it, and knows what convenience requires in regard to sending out of the county for jurors. This court will presume that the circuit court acted rightly in any such matter, unless the contrary plainly appears; as it certainly does not in this case. Looking to the extraordinary number of similar felonies charged about the same time, against the prisoner, it is not strange or unreasonable that the circuit court should have considered it proper to send out of the county for jurors to try him, or any issue in his cause.

13. Bill of exceptions No. 13 states that the prisoner challenged the whole array of thirty-six jurors summoned from Petersburg for the trial of the issue on his special plea, because he says there appears no evidence in this case, except the opinion of the judge, to show *that a jury cannot be conveniently found in the county of Chesterfield, and because the law does not authorize such jury from another county wherein he stands indicted for the trial of this issue; but the court overruled the challenge and the prisoner excepted.

We think there was no error in this ruling of the court, for reasons assigned in regard to the thirteenth bill of exceptions.

14. Bill of exceptions No. 14 states that the prisoner being on his trial (on the plea of not guilty), the following named jurors (eight in number, whose names are given in the bill) were called and examined on their voir dire, when they stated that they had tried the last issue joined between the prisoner and the commonwealth (being the issue on the plea of former acquittal), and that during that trial, they had heard Mr. Ruffin in his testimony, while speaking of the burning of the house, say that the prisoner had confessed, but that as he used the last word he was interrupted and told to say nothing about the confession; but that they believed they could give him a fair and impartial trial on the evidence, notwithstanding anything they had heard having no impression on their minds as to the question of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner which it would require evidence to remove. Whereupon the prisoner challenged the said jurors as being incompetent, and moved the court to exclude them; but the court overruled the motion; and the prisoner excepted.

We are of opinion that the said jurors were not incompetent, and therefore the court did not err in overruling the said motion.

15. Bill of exceptions No. 15, which is the last in the case, states "that on the trial of the cause, the commonwealth called as a witness one C. H. Flour-978 noy, *who testified that he was the sheriff of the county of Chesterfield; that one day during the previous trial of the prisoner he went to prisoner and asked him, 'Where did you get the rope used in the burning of Mr. Ruffin's house?' That the prisoner made a statement to him then about the rope; that the next day being the day of his sentence, and after his sentence, while he was on his way to jail with prisoner, the prisoner called him and said that 'he wanted to tell him that the statement he had made the day before about the rope was false, and he wanted to tell him all about it; and he then proceeded to make another statement to him.' On cross-examination Mr. Flournoy said, 'that he had heard of another confession, said to have been made by the prisoner before he asked him about the rope; he had heard such a confession testified to in court by a Mr.

 Wren and Mr. Lampson, and others.' He was then asked by the commonwealth to state the admissions made to him by the prisoner; to which the prisoner by counsel objected, because they were obtained illegally and improperly, and because the commonwealth has not yet shown that the first or former confession of prisoner was legally and properly obtained. The commonwealth then called Mr. John Wren, who testified that when he obtained a confession from the prisoner, he was a suspended policeman, but drawing his pay as a policeman, and acting as a private detective; that he had a colored boy following the prisoner about for two weeks, who brought him to a detective's office, up stairs, corner Main and Eleventh streets; that he told him, the prisoner, that he and his partner were commission merchants, and had a house they wanted burnt, for which they would give $150; that he agreed to do it; that he told him this was a job that required 979 *secrecy, and no blab-mouth would do for it; that the prisoner then told him that he need have no fear of him, for he had burned twelve or thirteen houses on one farm; that he then told him to tell Mr.
 Lampson, his partner, all about it, which he did; that he offered him no inducement or reward; that he was not dressed in police clothes, nor had on any badge or insignia of office; the prisoner had no acquaintance with me, and did not know me. Mr Lampson stated that at the time of the confession made to Mr. Wren he held no office whatever; that he went to Mr. Wren's office; when he went in he heard Mr. Wren say nothing about being a partner of his, but Wren said to the prisoner, 'I want you to tell this gentleman all about those burnings or fires;' knew nothing about money being offered to the prisoner. And thereupon the prisoner moved the court to exclude the admissions made to Flournoy; but the court overruled the motion, and permitted the admissions to Mr. Flournoy to be given as evidence to the jury; and to this opinion and ruling of the court the prisoner excepted."

We think there is no error in this opinion and ruling of the circuit court. The evidence of Flournoy, which was excluded, is not set out in the bill of exceptions, and we do not therefore know what it was, or whether it related to any confession by the prisoner of the offence with which he was charged, much less any inducement held out to the prisoner to make such a confession. We suppose the ground of the objection was, that the admissions made to Flournoy had some connection with the confession made to Wren and Lampson, referred to and set out in whole or in part in the bill of exceptions. It does not appear what interval of time there was between the said confession and the admissions made to Flournoy, or whether 980 there *was any connection between them, or any such connection as to make the admissions liable to any objection which might have been made to the confession as evidence against the prisoner. But conceding that there was such a connection between them, and that if the confession was inadmissible, so also were the admissions, then was the confession, as proved by Wren and Lampson, inadmissible?

There is perhaps no branch of the law of evidence which has given rise to more controversy than that concerning the admissibility of confessions of a person charged with a criminal offence as evidence against him on such charge. The cases on this subject are collected in 2 Russell on Crimes, chapter the 4th, page 824; and Roscoe's
 Criminal Evidence, title Confessions, pp.
 37-50. But it will not be necessary to comment upon or state any of these cases, since the law, as it now stands, is laid down in two cases lately decided by this court, viz: Smith v. The Commonwealth, 10 Gratt.
 734; and Shifflet v. The Commonwealth, 14 Id. 652, 658. In the former case the court came to the following conclusion: "The rule that may be fairly deduced from authoritative decisions upon the subject is, that a confession may be given in evidence, unless it appear that it was obtained from the party by some inducement of a worldly or temporal character, in the nature of a threat or promise of benefit, held out to him in respect of his escape from the consequences of the offence or the mitigation of the punishment by a person in authority, or with the apparent sanction of such a person." The same conclusion was reaffirmed in the latter of the said two cases, in an opinion in which the whole court of five judges concurred. We may therefore regard it as well settled law in this state.

Applying that conclusion of law to 981 the case, there *cannot be a doubt as to the admissibility of the admissions and confession in question, whatever may have been the weight of the evidence, which is another question, and of which the jury were to judge. Certainly whatever promise of benefit, if any, was held out to the prisoner to obtain the confession in this case, it was not "held out to him in respect of his escape from the consequences of the offence or the mitigation of the punishment by a person in authority, or with the apparent sanction of such a person.

We have now considered and disposed of all the questions arising in this case, and are of opinion that there is no error in the judgment, and that it must be affirmed. And this disposes of the case of indictment No. 7. The other case, indictment No. 5, will not be disposed of for the present.

Judgment affirmed.

982 *McCready v. The Commonwealth.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

Statutes—Planting Oysters—By Nonresidents.*—The act of March 14, 1872, in relation to oysters, was repealed by the act of April, 1873, on the same subject. And by this last act nonresidents of the state were not prohibited from planting oysters in the waters of Virginia.

At the March term 1874 of the county court of Gloucester, J. W. McCready was indicted, for that he did on the 1st of June 1873, and from that day forward until the 1st of March 1874, in the said county, he being then and there other than a resident of this state, unlawfully plant oysters in the waters thereof, against the statute, &c.

The defendant appeared and moved the court to quash the indictment; but the motion was overruled. He then demurred; but the court overruled the demurrer. And he then, with the leave of the court, withdrew his demurrer, and pleaded not guilty; on which issue was joined.

On the trial the jury found the defendant guilty, and assessed his fine at five hundred dollars; and the court rendered a judgment thereon. He then obtained a writ of error to the circuit court, where the judgment was affirmed; and he thereupon applied to this court for a writ of error which was awarded.

983 *Anderson J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an indictment against the plaintiff in error, being other than a resident of this state, for unlawfully planting oysters in the waters thereof against the statute, on the 1st day of June 1873, and on divers other days, from that day forward, until the 1st day of March 1874.

By section 2, of the act approved March 14, 1872, no person, other than a resident citizen of this state, shall catch, take, or plant oysters in the waters thereof, &c. And if any person other than such citizen of this state, shall catch, take or plant oysters in the waters thereof, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $500, &c.

By the 22nd section of the act in force April 1st, 1873, it is enacted that it shall not be lawful for any non-resident of this state to take or catch oysters or other shell fish: and penalties are denounced against the offender. But it is not made unlawful by this statute for a non-resident of the state to plant oysters in the waters thereof: nor is any penalty imposed on a non-resident for planting them in the waters of the state. And it is provided that this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of May 1873. The offence charged in the indictment is charged to have been committed on the 1st of June 1873, and days subsequent: consequently while the act aforesaid was in force. And by virtue of this act, as we have seen, the planting of oysters by a non-resident of the state is not an offence. And unless the previous act of 1872 was in force, the indictment could not lie.

The court is of opinion that the act of 1873 was evidently designed to cover 984 the whole oyster subject, *as is shown by the title, and by the 1st section thereof; and that the act of 1872 comes within the purview of the act of 1873, and is therefore expressly repealed by the 5th section of the latter act. Especially is this so with regard to so much of the 2nd section of the act of 1872 as has been referred to—which declares what shall be an offence with regard to oysters by a non-resident to wit: catching, taking and planting. The 22nd section of the subsequent act relates to the same subject, but drops planting, and only makes taking and catching a public offence.

The court is of opinion, therefore, to reverse the judgment of the circuit court. And proceeding to enter such judgment as ought to have been rendered by the circuit court, it is considered that the judgment of the county court in this cause against the plaintiff in error be reversed and annulled, and that he go thereof without day.

Christian, J. did not concur in the opinion that the act of March 14th, 1872 was repealed by the act of April 1st, 1873.

Judgment reversed.

985 *McCready v. The Commonwealth.

January Term, 1876, Richmond.

1. Statute—Constitutionality.—The act of April 1, 1874, Sess. Acts of 1874, ch. 214, s. 22, p. 361, which forbids the planting of oysters in the waters of the state by any person not a resident of the state, is a constitutional act; not in conflict with either article 1, section 8, or article 4, section 2, of the constitution of the United States.

2. Navigable Waters—State Control.—The navigable waters and the soil under them within the territorial limits of the state are the property of the state, to be controlled by the state at its own discretion for the benefit of the people of the state; only as not to interfere with the authority of the government of the United States in regulating commerce and navigation.

3. Constitutional Privileges.—The immunities and privileges secured to all citizens of the United States by the constitution, are the right to protection by the government; the enjoyment of life and liberty; to acquire and possess property of every kind; and to pursue happiness and safety. But they do not include the right to share the property belonging to the people of the state.

At the November term, 1874, of the county court of Gloucester, the grand jury indicted J. W. McCready, for that on the 1st of September 1874, in the said county, the said J. W. McCready, being then and there other than a citizen of this state, did unlawfully plant oysters in the waters thereof, to wit: in Ware river.

Though McCready was regularly served with process, he did not appear; and after several continuances of the case, the court, at its July term 1875, directed the plea of not guilty to be entered for him; and on the trial the jury found him guilty, 986 and assessed his *fine at five hundred dollars; and the court rendered a judgment thereon. McCready thereupon applied to the circuit court of the county for a supersedeas to the judgment; which was allowed; but when the case came on to be heard in that court, the judgment of the county court was affirmed. He then applied to this court for a writ of error; which was awarded.

Ould & Carrington, for the appellant.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

By an act of assembly approved April 18, 1874 (§ 22, chap. 214, p. 243, Sess. Acts 1874), "If any person (other than a citizen of this state) shall take or catch oysters, or other shell fish, in any manner, or plant oysters in the waters thereof," &c., "he shall forfeit $500 and the vessel, tackle and appurtenances." This is an indictment against the plaintiff in error, who is other than a citizen of this state, for planting oysters in the waters thereof, to wit: in Ware river, in violation of said 22nd section.

The prosecution is resisted upon the ground that the above section is an infringement of the constitution of the United States; because it is contrary, first, to article 4, section 2, "The citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states;" and second, to article 1, section 8, "The congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states," &c.

It seems to be well settled, that the states respectively, are entitled to the navigable waters within their *several 987 territorial limits, including both the water and the land under the water. In Martin v. Waddell, 16 Peters R. 367, 407, Ch. J. Taney, speaking for a majority of the court, says, "We do not propose to meddle with the point, as to the power of the king since Magna Charta, to grant to a subject a portion of the soil covered by the navigable waters of the kingdom; for when the revolution took place the people of each state became themselves sovereign, and in that character hold the absolute right to all their navigable waters and the soils under them, for their own common use;" as expressed by Ch. J. Kirkpatrick, of the supreme court of New Jersey, "The people of the state since the revolution being invested with the regal rights as sovereign, and having themselves both the legal estate and the usufruct, may make such disposition of them, and such regulations concerning them, as they may think fit;" "subject only," Ch. J. Taney adds, "to the rights since surrendered by the constitution to the general government." We will after a while consider what they are.

In Smith v. State of Maryland, 18 How. U. S. R. 71, it was held by the supreme court of the United States, Mr. Justice Curtis delivering the opinion, that whatever soil below low-water mark is the subject of exclusive property and ownership, belongs to the state on whose maritime border and within whose territory it lies, subject to any lawful grants of that soil by the state, or the sovereign power which governed its territory before the declaration of independence." He goes on further to say: "The state holds the property of the soil in some sense in trust for the enjoyment of the public rights, among which is the common liberty of taking fish, as well shell fish as floating fish, and may regulate the modes of enjoyment, so that they may 988 not *render the public property less valuable, or destroy it altogether."

"And this power (he says) results from the ownership of the soil, the legislative jurisdiction of the state over it, and from its duty to preserve those public uses for which the soil is held." Among those public uses is the right of the people of the state to take and plant oysters subject to the regulations of law. Chief Justice Marshall says, speaking for the court, in Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. R. 543, 584: By the treaty which concluded the war of our revolution, the powers of government and the right to soil, which had previously been in Great Britain, passed definitely to these states. Great Britain by that treaty relinquished all claim, not only to the government, but to the proprietary and territorial rights of the United States.

Chief Justice Taney, 16 Peters, supra, p. 416, says: "When the people of New Jersey took possession of the reins of government, and took in their own hands the powers of sovereignty, the prerogatives and regalities which before belonged either to the crown or the parliament became immediately and rightfully vested in the state." In the City of Mobile v. Eslava, 16 Peters R. 234, 254, Mr. Justice Catron said: "That the original states acquired by the revolution the entire rights of soil and of sovereignty in the navigable waters within their territory is most certain." And "that each and all of the states have sovereign power over their navigable waters above and below the tide no one doubts." (P. 259.)

Mr. Justice Washington said, in Corfield v. Coryell, 5 Wash. C. C. R. 381, a several fishery, either as the right to it respects running fish, or such as are stationary, such as oysters, clams, and the like, is as much the property of the individual to whom it belongs, as dry *land or land covered by water, and is equally protected by the laws of the state against the aggressions of others, whether citizens or strangers. Where those private rights do not exist to the exclusion of the common right, that of fishing belongs to all the citizens or subjects of the state. It is the property of all, to be enjoyed by them in subordination to the laws which regulate its use. They may be considered as tenants in common of this property, and they are so exclusively entitled to the use of it, that it cannot be enjoyed by others without the tacit consent or the express permission of the sovereign, who has the power to regulate its use. Grotius says (b. 2, ch. 2, sec. 5), the sovereign who has dominion over the land or waters in which the fish are, may prohibit foreigners from taking them.

It is the right to the use of land covered with water that is in question here, rather than the water which covers it—of land which may be applied to the planting and growing of oysters, and which may be used for that purpose, just as other lands are used for the purposes for which they are peculiarly adapted. The lands which may be used for the purpose of growing and cultivating oysters, as well as those upon which are her natural oyster beds, which underlie her navigable waters, Virginia claims not only sovereignty over, but also an ownership in the soil. If the state has the ownership in the soil, and the sovereign dominion over it, unquestionably she had the right to prohibit the deposit or planting of oysters upon it, or the use of it for any purpose, by non-residents or others than citizens of the state.

There seems to have been some diversity of opinion amongst learned judges upon the question, whether the title to the soil, covered by the navigable waters of *the state, became absolutely vested

by the revolution in the state, or only in trust for the benefit of the people of the state. It is a question of no importance, as far as this case is concerned, whether the people of Virginia were clothed with the legal title to the lands and waters in question, or only had a beneficial interest in them or right to their enjoyment. Have the people of Virginia a proprietary right in common in the soil flowed or covered by the navigable waters of the state? It matters not whether the soil under the navigable waters of Virginia, on which any person other than a citizen of Virginia is prohibited from planting oysters by the act of assembly in question, is the absolute property of the state of Virginia, or whether it is held by the government in trust for the people of the state, who, in common, have an exclusive right to its enjoyment. It is a property in the enjoyment of which the people of other states have not a right to participate, unless the people of Virginia have conceded to them the right in the federal constitution.

From what has been said, it will appear that the people of each state had title to their navigable waters and to the soil under them, which was exclusive of the people of the other states and all others. Have the states parted with their sovereignty over, and their property in these waters and the soils under them? Or have the people of each state covenanted and agreed by that solemn compact that the people of other states shall participate with them or become tenants in common with them in the ownership and enjoyment of their navigable waters and the soils under them? It is true, as claimed by the learned counsel in argument, that Virginia subscribed that solemn instrument, and that she ought to be willing to abide her solemn act. There is nothing in her past history that can cause *distrust in her devotion to the principles of that sacred instrument, and never through our instrumentality can those solemn pledges be falsified. The states cannot be benefited by withholding from the central government any part of the power fairly delegated to it by the states in the federal constitution. Nor will it promote the welfare of the United States for the government thereof to encroach upon and to absorb the reserved rights of the states. Nothing would more surely in our opinion overthrow the republic and be destructive of the public liberty.

It is denied that Virginia has by any provision in the constitution, expressly or impliedly, surrendered her sovereign dominion over, or her ownership in her navigable waters and the soil under them, except only to the extent that it may be necessary to enable congress to execute the power and discharge the duty created or delegated by article 1, section 8, of the constitution, "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states." This clause has been construed to invest congress with a controlling power over the subject of navigation. And hence it follows that the states are so far restricted in the exercise of their reserved powers over their navigable waters, and in the use and enjoyment of their property in them, and in the soil under them, so as not to impede, obstruct, or interfere with navigation.

As was said by Mr. Justice Thompson in Martin v. Waddell, supra, "For the purpose of navigation, the water is considered a public highway to all; like a public highway on land. If land over which a public highway passes is conveyed, the soil passes subject to that use. So with respect to the land under water; the public use for passing and repassing, and all the purposes for which a public way may be used are 992 open *to the public; the owner retaining nevertheless all the rights and benefits of the soil that may not impede or interfere with the use as a public highway. Should a coal mine, for instance, be found under the highway, it would belong to the owner of the soil, and might be used for his benefit, preserving unimpaired the public highway. So with respect to an oyster bed, which is local and attached to the soil. But the use of the soil by the owner, which is consistent with the use of the water by the public, is reserved to the owner." The power to control or regulate navigation is not given as an express or substantive power; it is only incidental to, or resulting from the express power "to regulate commerce;" and can only be used and exerted so far as it is necessary and proper to enable congress "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states." And the sovereignty of the several states over, and ownership in their respective navigable waters and the soil under them is restricted only by the power which congress may exercise on the subject of navigation. And consequently their property in the oyster beds, and the soil under their navigable waters respectively, and their power to regulate and control the taking and catching oysters, and the planting of them on the soil which belongs to them respectively, is plenary and perfect, inasmuch as the full enjoyment of the right, and the exercise of the power, cannot interfere with the subject of navigation, nor with the power of congress to regulate commerce. The conclusion is therefore necessary that the act of assembly in question, is not incompatible with, and in violation of section 8, art. 1, of the federal constitution.

Is it incompatible with art. 4, and section 2? Did the people of Virginia in adopting the constitution, agree that the people of the other states should be-993 come *joint owners with them of their oyster beds, and their navigable waters, and of the soil covered by them? And is this title conferred on the citizens of other states by the declaration, that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states?" We think not. We have shown that this is a right of property, and we do not think that the clause in question was intended to transfer the rights of property of the citizens of one state to the citizens of the other states. In Corfield v. Coryell, Mr. Justice Washington says, (4 Wash. C. C. R. p. 382,) "That this exclusive right of taking oysters in the waters of New Jersey has never been ceded by that state, in express terms, to the United States, is admitted by the counsel for the plaintiff; (and we have, we think, shown that it has not been ceded by any of the states;) and (Judge Washington proceeds) having shown as we think we have, that this right is a right of property, vested either in certain individuals, or in the state, for the use of the citizens thereof; it would, in our opinion, be going quite too far (and we are of the same opinion) to construe the grant of privileges and immunities of citizens, as amounting to a grant of a cotenancy in the common property of the state, to the citizens of all the other states."

What is meant by the privileges and immunities of citizens? Does it mean rights of property? An estate in the lands of the country—whether dry lands or those covered with water? The same eminent judge says, "We feel no hesitation in confining these expressions to those privileges and immunities which are in their nature fundamental." He proceeds then to explain what he means by fundamental privileges and immunities. He says such as "belong of right to the citizens of all free govern-994 ments, and which have, *at all times, been enjoyed by the citizens of the several states which compose this union, from the time of their becoming free, independent and sovereign." And he says, they may "be all comprehended under the following general heads: protection by the government; the enjoyment of life and liberty; the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue happiness and safety." These are fundamental rights, and the citizens of any one of the states, by this clause of the constitution, are guaranteed the same privileges and immunities for their enjoyment in any other state that the citizens of that state enjoy. Whilst it guarantees to the citizen of one state the right to acquire and possess property of any kind in any other state, it does not give him the right to seize and hold the property belonging to the citizens of that other state, or to share with them in the enjoyment of property which belonged exclusively to them. Therefore, this eminent jurist justly says, "we cannot accede to the proposition which was insisted on by the counsel, that, under this provision of the constitution, the citizens of the several states are permitted to participate in all the rights which belong exclusively to the citizens of any other particular state, merely upon the ground that they are enjoyed by those citizens; much less, that in regulating the use of the common property of the citizens of such state, the legislature is bound to extend to the citizens of all the other states the same advantages as are secured to their own citizens." Again he says, "we hold that the power to regulate the fisheries belonged to the several states, and to punish those who should transgress those regulations was exclusively vested in those states respectively, at the time when the present constitution was adopted." And he 995 adds that that power *"was not surrendered to the United States, by the mere grant of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, to the judicial branch of the government." And in the course of his opinion he holds, it was not surrendered at all.

If this opinion can be relied on as settling the law of the subject we think it is decisive of this case. It is true that it is not binding authority upon this court. But when we consider by whom the opinion was delivered, an eminent judge of the supreme court of the United States, who was cotemporary and intimately associated with those who framed the constitution, and its contemporaneous expounders who were familiar with the prerogatives and powers of the states before the adoption of the federal constitution, and when we consider the time when the opinion was pronounced, so soon after the constitution was adopted, in connection with the surrounding circumstances, it may be regarded as itself a cotemporaneous exposition of the constitution. And when we consider the intrinsic merit of the opinion, the support which its positions derive from reason and authority, and the reasonableness of its deductions, its repeated recognition as authority by the courts, state and federal, nisi prius and supreme, and the acquiescence of the country now for more than half a century in its doctrines, and the legislation of the states being in conformity thereto, we are disposed to regard it as authoritative, and as settling the law of the subject, especially as its exposition of the law is in conformity with our own views of what the law is.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the act of assembly, under which this indictment was found, is not an infringement of the constitution of the United States or of any of its provisions.

996 *The errors assigned, of a formal and technical character, in the petition to the circuit court for a writ of error, do not seem to have been relied on here, and are considered by the court as not showing ground for reversal. The judgment of the circuit court, affirming the judgment of the county court, must therefore be affirmed with costs.

Judgment affirmed.

997 *Williams v. The Commonwealth.

March Term, 1876, Richmond.

Absent, STAPLES, J.

Larceny—Evidence.—W was indicted for stealing $150, the money of S. On the trial it was proved that J, a detective, arrested W, who made a confession, which was made under a promise, and was excluded as evidence. In this confession he directed J to go to certain gamblers and get the money back from them. J sent for the gamblers named, told them what W had said, and they paid over to J for S $104, though one of them protested that W had not been at his house, and the others denied that he had lost the money claimed with them; the balance of the money, $46, was paid over by the father of W. HELD: It not being proved that the money paid to J was the same lost by S, the statement of W to J, and of what passed between J and the gamblers and the father of W, is not competent evidence.

At the January term 1876 of the hustings court of the city of Richmond, Reuben Williams was indicted for the stealing of $150 of United States currency, the property of Peter Shields. He was tried at the same term of the court, was found guilty, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

On the trial the prisoner took two bills of exception to the rulings of the court. The first was to the admission of certain testimony offered by the commonwealth; and the other was the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict and grant him a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence.

On the trial, after evidence had been introduced as to the loss of the money 998 by Shields, and his employment of John Wren as a detective, and Wren had stated that the prisoner had made a confession, which the court had excluded, the attorney for the commonwealth asked the witness Wren, whether in consequence of the statement of the prisoner, and in pursuance of his direction, he took any action about the lost money and obtained it? To this question the prisoner by his counsel objected; but the court overruled the objection and allowed the question to be asked. The witness then stated, that in pursuance of the direction and statement of the prisoner, he sent for four gamblers, who came to his office, where they paid him the sum of $104; but that this was not the identical money that Shields lost; and that the other $46, making the sum of $150 which was stolen, were paid to Shields by prisoner's father. To this question and answer the prisoner excepted.

Upon the second exception the court certified the facts, which, it will be seen, includes the facts spoken of by the witness Wren and objected to by the prisoner.

That on or about the 12th day of December 1875, the prisoner and one Peter Shields and another occupied the same bed room in the city of Richmond, all being stone cutters, and working at the same yard; that there were other persons living in the house; that on the night of that day, the said Shields having received his pay, one hundred and fifty dollars in United States currency, deposited it in his trunk, in an unoccupied room adjoining the bed room, which room had two doors, one opening into the bed room, and another into a rear porch; that he locked his trunk; that about two weeks afterwards Shields went to his trunk, and found that his money had been stolen, the trunk being still locked.

999 having been opened with a false key; that on the day after Shields deposited his money in the trunk, prisoner remained in their room after Shields and the other occupant had gone to their work; that prisoner did not go to his work or the yard that day; that on the evening of that day, prisoner purchased a new suit of clothes, costing sixty-five dollars, and for some time was spending money very freely, and neglecting his work; that upon ascertaining his loss, Shields took out a warrant for the arrest of prisoner, and placed it in the hands of John Wren, who was appointed a special constable by the justice for the purpose of making the arrest of the prisoner on the warrant; that John Wren arrested the prisoner, and having offered him inducements, the prisoner made a confession, in which confession he directed Wren to go to certain gamblers and get back the money from them; that in pursuance of such instruction John Wren sent for the gamblers named, told them what prisoner had said, and they paid over to him for Shields the sum of one hundred and four dollars, though one of them protested that the prisoner had not been in his house, and the others denied that he had lost the money claimed with them; that the balance of the money, forty-six dollars, making the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars stolen, was paid over by the prisoner's father; that the prisoner also made a confession to Shields; that Shields was present at the interview between John Wren and the gamblers and said he meant to prosecute them; that prisoner was paid off at the same time Shields was, and he received three dollars and fifty cents per diem.

Upon the application of the prisoner, a writ of error was awarded by this court.

G. D. Wise and S. Page, for the prisoner.

1000 *The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

Moncure, P., delivered the opinion of the court.

The court is of opinion, that the hustings court erred in overruling the motion of the prisoner to set aside the verdict upon the ground that the same was contrary to the law and evidence. The confessions made by the prisoner to the prosecutor Shields, and to the constable Wren, having been illegally obtained, were properly excluded by the court, as being inadmissible evidence. But the transactions which occurred between Wren and the gamblers, and the father of the prisoner, as set out in the second bill of exceptions, were admitted as evidence against the prisoner; no doubt upon the ground which is thus stated in 1 Arch. Crim. Prac. & Pl. p. 424 top, 134 marg., that "even in cases where the confession of a prisoner is not receivable in evidence, on account of it having been obtained by means of some threat or promise, any discovery made in consequence of it may be proved; and in such a case the counsel for the prosecution is merely allowed to ask the witness, whether, in consequence of something he heard from the prisoner, he found anything, and where, &c.; and the witness in answer can only give evidence of the fact of the discovery."

But the thing found, or the discovery made, in consequence of the confession, must be material in itself, and appear to have some connection with the crime or the charge, independently of the confession. The rule and the reason of it is thus laid down in 1 Greenleaf on Ev.

"§ 231. The object of all the care, which, as we have now seen, is taken to exclude confessions which are *not voluntary, is to exclude testimony not probably true. But where, in consequence of the information obtained from the prisoner, the property stolen, or the instrument of the crime, or the bloody clothes of the person murdered, or any other material fact is discovered, it is competent to show that such discovery was made conformably to the information given by the prisoner. The statement as to his knowledge of the place where the property or other evidence was to be found, being thus confirmed by the fact, is proved to be true, and not to have been fabricated in consequence of any inducement. It is competent, therefore, to enquire, whether the prisoner stated that the thing would be found by searching a particular place, and to prove that it was accordingly so found; but it would not be competent to enquire, whether he confessed that he had concealed it there."

"§ 232. If, in consequence of the confession of the prisoner, thus improperly induced, and of the information by him given, the search for the property or person in question, proves wholly ineffectual, no proof of either will be received. The confession is excluded, because being made under the influence of a promise, it cannot be relied upon; and the acts and information of the prisoner, under the same influence, not being confirmed by the finding of the property or person, are open to the same objection. The influence which may produce a groundless confession, may also produce groundless conduct."

The notes of Waterman to 1 Arch., supra, refer to many cases having an important bearing on this subject. And so have the following cases, some or all of which were cited by the counsel for the prisoner in this case. Griffin's case, 1 Russell and Ryan 151; Jones's case, Id. 152; and Jenkins's case, Id. 492. Also *the State v. Due, 7 Foster's R. 256. The first two of these cases seem to have been decided on the same day by the same judges, and yet they seem to be somewhat in conflict with each other. They were decided at the Winchester Lent assizes in 1809. In Griffin's case, a prisoner was charged with stealing a guinea and two promissory notes. The prosecutor told him that it would be better for him to confess. Held: That after this admonition the prosecutor might prove that the prisoner brought him a guinea and a five pound note, which he gave up to the prosecutor, as the guinea and one of the notes that had been stolen from him. The judge, Chambre, told the jury that notwithstanding the previous inducement to confess, they might receive the prisoner's description of the note accompanying the act of delivering it up, as evidence that it was the stolen note; and they found the prisoner guilty. A majority of the judges, to wit: seven of them, held the conviction right; two of them were of a contrary opinion.

In Jones's case, which was for the larceny of money to the amount of one pound eight shillings, the prosecutor asked the prisoner on finding him, for the money he, the prisoner, had taken out of the prosecutor's pack, but before the money was produced said, "he only wanted his money, and if the prisoner gave him that, he might go to the devil if he pleased." Upon which prisoner took 11s. 6½d. out of his pocket, and said it was all he had left of it. Held: That the confession ought not to have been received. The same judge, Chambre, left the whole of this evidence for the consideration of the jury, and they found the prisoner guilty. A majority of the judges present, to wit: five of them, held that 1003 the evidence was not admissible, *and the conviction wrong. Three of them contra. Lord Ellenborough dubitante.

In Jenkins's case, which was decided in 1822, the charge was stealing several gowns and other articles. The prisoner was induced by a promise from the prosecutor to confess his guilt, and after that confession he carried the officer to a particular house, as and for the house where he had disposed of the property, and pointed out the person to whom he had delivered it. That person denied knowing anything about it, and the property was never found. The evidence of the confession was not received; the evidence of his carrying the officer to the house as above mentioned was; but as Mr. Justice Bayley, before whom the prisoner was convicted, thought it questionable whether that evidence was rightly received, he stated the point for the consideration of the judges. They accordingly considered it, and were (it seems unanimously) of opinion that the evidence was not admissible, and that the conviction was therefore wrong. "The confession was excluded, because being made under the influence of a promise, it could not be relied upon, and the acts of the prisoner, under the same influence, not being confirmed by the finding of the property, were open to the same objection. The influence which might produce a groundless confession might also produce groundless conduct." This case is in direct accordance with Jones's case, and if they are in conflict with Griffin's case, they overrule it, as they were subsequent thereto; at least Jenkins's case. But Griffin's case seems to rest upon the ground (whether right or wrong) that the note delivered up was of the same denomination and of the same bank with one of the notes stolen, and that the act of delivering it up was accompanied by the declaration of the 1004 prisoner, that it was one of the stolen

*notes. In Jones's case it does not appear that the money delivered up by the prisoner was admitted, or intended to be admitted by him, to be a part of the identical money he had stolen, though we do not mean to say that even such an admission would have varied the case. In the State v. Due, which was much relied upon by the counsel for the prisoner in the argument of this case, and in which most of the authorities on this subject are reviewed, it was held that on a charge of larceny, the production of property by a prisoner, made in consequence of inducements held out to confess, will not be competent evidence against him, unless the property be identified by other evidence as that which has been stolen. The prisoner was charged with stealing two one hundred dollar bills and a wallet. On inducements held out to him to confess, he produced a hundred dollar bill, saying to the complainant "this is yours;" or, as another witness understood him, "this is one of the bills which I took with the wallet." It was held that the evidence was incompetent, unless the bill should be identified by other evidence as one of those which had been stolen. This case, as well as Jones's and Jenkins's, supra, seems to expound the law correctly. And now let us apply it as so expounded to this case.

Now if the money delivered up by the gamblers and the father of the prisoner to the constable, Wren, had been proved by independent evidence, other than the confession of the prisoner, to have been the identical money confessed to have been stolen by him, then the fact that the stolen property was thus discovered, and that the prisoner's confession led to such discovery, would have been admissible evidence in the case according to the law as just expounded.

But, so far from there being any 1005 independent evidence *of identity of the money delivered up to the constable, it is not pretended that it was the same money that was stolen, as it almost certainly was not. And the gamblers denied that the prisoner had lost the money claimed with them; and one of them protested that the prisoner had not been in his house. The prosecutor was present at the interview between the constable and the gamblers, and said he meant to prosecute them. It does not certainly appear what for. Though it is probable he meant, and they understood that he meant, for gambling; for they had been guilty of gambling, but do not appear to have been in any way implicated in the larceny. That such a menace to prosecute them for gambling, a highly penal offence, made at a time when there was a great effort to enforce the law against that offence, should have induced these gamblers to purchase an exemption from prosecution for it by paying up among them the sum of $104, which they did under protest, is not at all strange, even supposing that they never won a dollar from the prisoner. In regard to the balance of forty-six dollars paid to the constable by the prisoner's father, there is no evidence whatever that that was a part of the money stolen, or that any part of the money stolen went into the hands of the father, who may have paid that sum out of his own money to save his son from a criminal prosecution.

Then all this evidence in regard to money received from the gamblers, and from the father of the prisoner, together with the confession which led to its discovery, is illegal and inadmissible evidence, and must be excluded from the case, and being so excluded there is, certainly, not enough in the case to warrant the verdict of the jury. For all the evidence then remaining in the case is, that the prisoner and 1006 another *were room mates of the prosecutor; that the prosecutor received $150 for his work, and locked it up in his trunk, which he kept in an adjoining unlocked room, with two doors, one opening into their bed room, the other into a porch; that about two weeks afterwards, the prosecutor went to his trunk and found that his money had been stolen, the trunk being still locked, having been opened with a false key; that on the day after the prosecutor deposited his money in his trunk, the prisoner remained in his room after the prosecutor and the third occupant had gone to their work (all the said occupants being stone cutters and working at the same yard), that prisoner did not go to his work or the yard that day; that on the evening of that day, prisoner purchased a new suit of clothes, costing $65, and for some time was spending money very freely, and neglecting his work; and that upon ascertaining his loss the prosecutor took out a warrant for the arrest of the prisoner and placed it in the hands of John Wren, who was appointed a special constable by the justice for the purpose of making the arrest of the prisoner on the warrant; that John Wren arrested the prisoner, and having offered him inducements, the prisoner made the confession which led to the transaction as aforesaid with the gamblers and the father of the prisoner.

Certainly this evidence, separate and apart from the said transactions and the said confession, which, as we have seen, are illegal and inadmissible evidence, can create no more than a mere suspicion of guilt in the prisoner, is altogether inconclusive, and is wholly insufficient to warrant the verdict of guilty against him, especially when considered in connection with evidence in the cause in behalf of the prisoner, that he received three dollars 1007 and fifty cents per diem for his *wages, and was paid off on the same day with the prosecutor. Why may we not presume, in favor of innocence, that the $65 he laid out in clothes, and the other money he was spending very freely, was his own money? Certainly it was not the prosecutor's, according to the theory of the prosecution, which is that his money, some of it, went to the gamblers, and the balance was deposited in the hands of the prisoner's father.

We therefore think the court erred in not setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial, as mentioned in the second bill of exceptions.

We also think, for reasons already assigned, the court erred in not excluding from the jury the question and answer mentioned in the first bill of exceptions.

Therefore, the judgment of the hustings court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial to be had therein in conformity with the foregoing opinion.

The judgment was as follows:

The court is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the question and answer referred to in the first bill of exceptions were illegal and inadmissible evidence, and the court below erred in not excluding the same.

The court is further of opinion, that the confessions made by the prisoner to Shields and Wren, and the transactions of Wren with the gamblers, and with the prisoner's father, mentioned in the second bill of exceptions, were illegal and inadmissible evidence, and ought not to have been admitted; that the other facts proved in the case and certified in the said second bill 1008 *of exceptions, were insufficient to warrant the conviction of the prisoner, and that the court below erred in overruling the motion of the prisoner to set aside the verdict of the jury.

Therefore it is considered that the said judgment is erroneous, and be reversed and annulled; and that the verdict of the jury be set aside; and the cause remanded to the said hustings court for a new trial to be had therein in conformity with the foregoing opinion.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said hustings court.

Judgment reversed.

The case is stated by Judge Christian, in his opinion.

Fitzgerald, for the prisoner.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

1010 *Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

James Pryor was convicted of arson in the county court of Nelson, upon an indictment charging him with burning a barn, the property of Thomas H. Farrar. A motion for a new trial was made, and refused by the county court; and upon application to the judge of the circuit court of Nelson a writ of error to the judgment of the county court was refused. To this refusal by the judge of the circuit court a writ of error was awarded by one of the judges of this court.

This court has always acted with great caution in granting new trials in cases where the new trial is asked solely upon the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence; and great weight is always given, and justly so, to the verdict of the jury and judgment of the court in which the case is tried. The cases are very rare where this court interferes; and it is only in a case where the evidence is plainly insufficient to warrant the finding of the jury.

This court has laid down certain rules, affirmed in several cases, from which it has never departed, and which prove a safe guide in determining such questions.

In Blosser v. Harshbarger, 21 Gratt. 214, the rules established by the general court in Grayson's case, 6 Gratt. 712, are adopted and reaffirmed by this court. They are as follows:

A new trial will be granted:

1. Where the verdict is against law. This occurs where the issue involves both law and fact, and the verdict is against the law of the case upon the facts proved.

2. Where the verdict is contrary to the evidence. This occurs where the issue involves matter of fact *only, and the fact proved required a different verdict from that found by the jury.

3. Where the verdict is without evidence to support it. This occurs where there has been no proof whatever of a material fact, or not sufficient evidence of the fact or facts in issue. Where some evidence has been given which tends to prove the fact in issue, or the evidence consists of circumstances and presumptions, a new trial will not be granted merely because the court if upon the jury would have given a different verdict. To warrant a new trial in such cases the evidence should be plainly insufficient to warrant the finding of the jury.

The case before us must be determined by these rules.

The certificate of facts certified by the county court is in these words:

"The following are the facts proven upon the trial of the prisoner upon the indictment aforesaid: That on the night of the 12th of December, 1874, being Saturday night, the barn of Mr. Thos. H. Farrar, in this county, was consumed by fire, together with one hundred and twenty-five barrels of corn, all his shucks and some fodder then therein, several stacks of wheat straw, and a threshing machine estimated in value at from $700 to $750 (seven hundred and fifty dollars)—that the fire was discovered by Mr. Farrar between ten and eleven o'clock; that the barn was of very light and dry material, and was very speedily consumed, at least by eleven o'clock, that being the time when Mr. Farrar returned to his house, by his clock. The next morning Mr. Farrar, in looking about the premises, discovered tracks leading to and from the barn.

through a small piece of ground 1012 around the barn, *which had been cultivated in tobacco; that the land was light, and the footprints very plainly and perfectly made; as soon as he saw these, and there were no others either near the barn or going to or from it, to the public road, he recognized them as the tracks of Jas. Pryor, the prisoner at the bar.

That the prisoner was living with him on his farm up to the last of September or first of October theretofore; had a difficulty with his wife about that time, and had attempted to whip her, which was prevented by Mr. Farrar; he was told by Mr. Farrar that no such conduct would be permitted upon his farm, and that he must leave, which was done by the prisoner moving to a neighbor's, Mr. Wm. Currier's; that Mr. Currier's team removed his plunder from Farrar's farm; that while the wagon was being loaded the prisoner said to Mr. Farrar that he would have his revenge in spite of "Lize," meaning his wife, and all her protectors; that a few days thereafter he besought a justice and requested of him such process as would compel Mr. Farrar to deliver his wife—the justice took no steps in the premises, having no jurisdiction; that the shoes were quite noted on account of their peculiar shape, wrought in their wearing by the prisoner; that they were gaiters. No. 8 or 9's, and the heels had turned back, making them unusually long between the heel and ball of the foot, so that the instep had given away and the hollow of the foot or shoe coming down upon the ground like any other portion of the foot; that these shoes had been worn by the prisoner while on his, Farrar's farm.

That he had the same shoes on the Friday evening before the barn was burnt; that on said Friday evening he asked Geo. Brown, a negro who had worked with him on Mr. Farrar's farm, to give him a 1013 pair of *shoes, described by witness as worn to a hull, "they looked like Sunday shoes—he thought they were the same shoes." The tracks were traced in the direction of prisoner's house for more than half a mile, going and coming through the farm to the public road and across the road up a bank into the woods, going in the direction of the prisoner's house, a mile or mile and a half from the road. The distance from prisoner's house to the barn being from two to two and a half miles; that it was nearer to the barn from where these tracks came into the public ( ) by Mr. Farrar's house by about one hundred and fifty or two hundred yards, but he had a very bad dog which the prisoner knew, hence the digression around his house—his house being between the house of the prisoner and the barn. The barn did not belong to Mr. Farrar," but to one ———, from whom Farrar had rented the premises.

The court then inserts into the bill of exceptions certain facts tending to prove an alibi, which were proved by witnesses introduced by the accused. But in considering the question of a new trial we can only look to the evidence offered by the commonwealth, and must reject that offered by the accused. The question we have to determine is, whether the facts certified as facts proved by the commonwealth are sufficient to warrant the finding of the jury. If they are plainly insufficient to warrant the verdict, then under the rules above cited the prisoner was entitled to a new trial. The bill of exceptions signed by the judge of the county court, shows that the evidence was wholly circumstantial, and that there are but two circumstances which can in any way connect the accused with the offence charged in the indictment, as to produce more than a strong suspicion of guilt. One is, that months before the burning, 1014 (with his *wife) of Farrar, had a difficulty with his wife and attempted to whip her; which was prevented by Mr. Farrar, who told him that no such conduct would be permitted on his farm, and that he must leave. He did leave, but his wife refused to go with him. Upon leaving he said he would have his revenge in spite of Lize (meaning his wife) and all her protectors; and that a few days afterwards he applied to a justice of the peace, and requested of him such process as would compel Mr. Farrar to deliver his wife—which the justice refused, because he was of opinion that he had no jurisdiction in the case. Six months afterwards, (this declaration having been made in September, and the burning of the barn having been done in March,) this statement of the accused is regarded as a threat of revenge against Mr. Farrar, and as the motive which influenced the accused in burning the barn of Farrar. This must be all mere presumption, and is not even a reasonable presumption.

In this declaration of the accused (which is construed to be a threat against Mr. Farrar) he might have referred to his purpose to get possession of his wife. His declaration was, "he would have his revenge in spite of Lize and all her protectors." In furtherance of this purpose, he did apply to a justice of the peace to compel his wife to go with him. This conduct following immediately after the refusal of his wife to go with him, tends to show that he was, or might have been, excited and exasperated because of his wife's refusal to accompany him, and the threat he made might have been directed against his wife's refusal to go with him, and not of any purpose of revenge against Mr. Farrar. This hypothesis is certainly not inconsistent with his conduct. His declaration "that he would have his revenge in spite of Lize and 1015 her *protectors," does not necessarily, mean a threat of vengeance against Mr. Farrar; but may have meant that he would regain the possession of his wife; and that the threat was against her, and not against Mr. Farrar. At least it cannot be said upon the facts certified, that this threat was directed against Farrar, and that this constituted the motive of the accused to burn the barn of Farrar, with which he is charged.

The only other circumstance in the case which tends to raise a suspicion against the accused, is that a track was found on the morning after the barn was burned, which Farrar says he recognized as the tracks of the prisoner. This was only the opinion of the witness, that the tracks he saw were the tracks of the prisoner. I say it is only the opinion of the witness, and is not proof that the tracks seen by him were the tracks of the accused, because the witness goes on to give his reasons for that opinion; and they are, that when the accused left his farm in September he wore gaiter shoes, No. 8 or 9, and the heels had turned back, making them unusually long between the heel and ball of the foot; so that the instep had given way, and the hollow of the foot or shoe coming down upon the ground like any other portion of the foot. Now this is the description of the shoes worn by the prisoner three months before the track was made.

George Brown, another, and only other, witness for the commonwealth, says he saw the accused on Friday evening, the day before the barn was burnt, and the shoes he had on were worn to a hull, and he thought they were the same shoes described by Farrar as worn by the prisoner in September. All this evidence is mere matter of opinion. No witness proved that the track discovered was the track of the prisoner. There is this noteworthy fact, 1016 that the track discovered near *the barn was not traced to the house of the prisoner, but to a point which was only within at least a mile and a half of the prisoner's house. Nor was, as is usual in such case, the track measured and compared with the prisoner's track; but the track seen in the tobacco lot of Farrar is declared by him as the track of the prisoner simply because the prisoner in September before had a pair of gaiter shoes, the heels of which projected behind. All this is a mere matter of opinion, and in that respect is not sustained by the commonwealth's evidence; for it is certainly very doubtful, if not impossible, that the gaiter shoes worn by the prisoner in September would have made the same track in December when the shoes were worn to a hull. The shoes spoken of by Brown are not identified as the same shoes of which Farrar speaks as worn by the prisoner in September. The shoes are not produced, the foot of the prisoner is not measured, and there is no proof that the prisoner had in March, when he was indicted, or in December, when the barn was burnt, a pair of shoes corresponding with those described by Farrar as being worn by him in September. Such evidence as this is too conjectural and too uncertain upon which to convict a man of felony.

It is a fact too, worthy of note, that the prisoner was not arrested for several months after the burning, though he was in the immediate neighborhood. As was well said by the counsel for the accused: "If the liberty of the citizen, however humble, is to be taken away upon such evidence as this, and an infamous offence fastened upon him, the tenure by which the citizen holds his liberty and good name is slender indeed."

The court is of opinion that the facts proved by the commonwealth are plainly insufficient to warrant the 1017 *verdict of the jury, and that the judgment of the county court refusing to grant a new trial must be reversed.

The judgment was as follows:

This day came again as well the plaintiff in error by counsel, as the attorney general on behalf of the commonwealth, and the court having maturely considered the transcript of the record of the judgment aforesaid, and the arguments of counsel, is of opinion, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the record, that the judgment of the county court of Nelson county, "that the said James Pryor be imprisoned in the public jail and penitentiary house of this commonwealth for the term of nine years, the period by the jurors in their verdict ascertained to hard labor" is erroneous, and that the same be reversed and annulled; this court being of opinion that the facts proved by the commonwealth, as certified by the said county court, are plainly insufficient to warrant the finding of the jury, and that the said county court ought to have set aside the verdict of the jury, and awarded to the prisoner a new trial. And this court now proceeding to enter such judgment as the said county court ought to have rendered, it is therefore adjudged and ordered that the said verdict of the jury be set aside, and a new trial be awarded to the plaintiff in error.

Which is ordered to be certified to the said county court of Nelson county.

Judgment reversed.

1018 *Morgenstern v. Commonwealth.

Jackson v. Same.

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

Indictments—Evidence Sustaining.—On an indictment under the statute for selling liquor to minors without the consent of their parents or guardian, the indictment is for selling to minors whose names are unknown to the grand jury. If it appears from the evidence that in fact the name of the minor to whom the liquor was sold, was known to the grand jury, the evidence does not sustain the indictment.

These cases were heard together in this court. They are the same in their character, and the questions involved in them. They were indictments in the hustings court of the city of Richmond, found in March 1876, one against Otto Morgenstern, for that, on the within twelve months last past, in the years eighteen hundred and seventy-five and seventy-six, at, &c., he then and there being a licensed keeper of an ordinary, did unlawfully sell and barter, and cause to be sold and bartered, and did unlawfully permit his clerks, agents and salesmen to furnish and dispose of wine, ardent spirits and mixtures thereof to certain minors, the names of whom are to the grand jurors unknown, without the consent of their parents and guardians, he, the said Morgenstern, and his said clerks, agents and salesmen, well knowing the said minors to be minors, against the peace, &c. The indictment in the case of Jackson was, in all respects, like this, except the name of the person indicted.

The parties appeared and moved the 1019 court to quash the indictments; but the court overruled the motion; and they excepted. They also demurred to the indictments; but the court overruled the demurrer.

On the trials the jury found verdicts in both cases against the defendants; in the first case for a fine of ten dollars, and in the second case for a fine of twenty dollars: and the court rendered judgments against them upon the verdicts.

In each of the cases there was a motion for a new trial; which was overruled, and an exception; and the court certified upon the record the facts proved; from which it appeared that the defendants were licensed keepers of ordinaries in the city of Richmond; and each of them had within the twelve months sold ardent spirits to the witness, upon whose testimony the indictment was found, and that the witness was a minor; and the grand jury in fact knew the name of the witness.

Upon the applications of the defendants, writs of error to the judgments were awarded.

Young and George Wise, for the appellants.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

Christian, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

These two cases were heard together in this court. The questions we have to determine are the same in both cases.

They are prosecutions against the plaintiffs in error respectively, for a violation of the statute making it a penal offence, "if any person shall sell or barter or cause to be sold or bartered, or being a merchant or tradesman, or keeper of an eating house or ordinary, *shall directly or indirectly give or furnish or dispose of, or shall permit to be sold or bartered or given or disposed of, by his clerk or agent or salesman, to any minor knowing him to be a minor, without the consent of his parent or guardian, any wine or ardent spirits or mixture thereof," &c.

Under this statute the plaintiffs in error were indicted in the hustings court of the city of Richmond for selling ardent spirits "to certain minors the names of whom are to the grand jurors unknown." The plaintiffs in error we found guilty, and a fine assessed by the jury at $10 in the one case and $20 the other. Whereupon it was ordered and adjudged by said hustings court that the plaintiffs in error be confined in jail until the fines are paid, and that each enter into bond with good security "to be of good behavior towards all the citizens of this commonwealth for the space of one year." To this judgment writs of error were awarded by one of the judges of this court.

The court is of opinion, that there is no error in the judgment of the said hustings court in overruling the motions to quash the indictments, this court being of opinion, that the said indictments set forth with sufficient distinctness the offence punished by the statute; and that said indictments do not contain charges of two distinct offences. See Young's case, 15 Gratt. 664.

But the court is further of opinion, that the record shows that there was a variance between the charges made in the indictments and the proof upon the trial, as certified by the court, for which the verdicts ought to have been set aside and new trials ordered, upon other indictments to be found against the plaintiffs in error.

The variance consisted in this, that while the indictments charged the defendants 1021 (plaintiffs in error here) *with having sold and furnished ardent spirits to certain minors, "the names of whom are to the grand jurors unknown," the proof is clear that in both cases the names of these minors were known to the grand jury. It is a well settled rule of criminal law, that in that class of offences, where the act constituting the offence is an injury to the person, the name of the injured party must be stated, when known. If the name of the party injured be unknown, he should be described as "a person to the jurors aforesaid unknown." But this is a material allegation, and if it turns out in the trial that the name of the person so described in the indictment was known to the grand jury, the variance will be fatal, and the accused must be discharged from that indictment and tried upon another charging the name of the person injured. 1 Arch. Cr. Pl. 80-81 (marg.), and cases there cited; 1 Whar. Am. Cr. Law, § 251; 1 Bishop Cr. Pro. (2nd edi.) § 541-552; 1 Chitty Cr. Law 213-214 (marg.).

The case before us comes within the rules above stated. The offence punished by the statute is the selling or furnishing ardent spirits to minors without the consent of the parent or guardian. The offence denounced by the statute is a direct injury to third persons.

It is very manifest that the object and aim of the statute was to protect the young against the evils of the bar room and the grog shop. It was enacted to guard and defend the minor against an injury to him, an injury it may be as fatal and deadly as the hand of the robber or the knife of the assassin.

In these cases it may be further said, that the offence punished by the statute is an offence against the person in a double sense.

It is not only an offence against the minor, but an injury against the 1022 "parent or guardian." *Surely no more grievous injury can be perpetrated against a parent or guardian than that which entices the son or the ward at the early age of minority to become the frequenter of a bar room, and to contract in early life the habit of indulgence in strong drink. The statute was enacted not only for the good of society in general, and the maintenance of order and good morals, but for the protection of both the minor and the parent or guardian.

The cases before us are therefore brought within that class of cases where the act constituting the offence is an injury to third persons. In such cases, it is well settled that the name of the person if known must be stated, and if described as "a person to the jury unknown," and it turns out upon the proof that the names were known, this will be a fatal variance.

The cases relied on by the attorney general are not in conflict with the authorities above cited, or the views herein stated.

The case of Commonwealth v. Smith & Burwell, 1 Gratt. 553 (of which we have a very meagre report, no opinion being given, but simply a resolution of the general court), was a prosecution for selling ardent spirits to slaves without the consent of their masters, &c. The indictment in that case charged the defendants with selling ardent spirits "to slaves whose names or whose owners' names were to the jurors unknown." The case came up on a demurrer to the indictment. The indictment was held good. This was the only question made by the record. If it had been proved in that case that the names of the owner and of the slaves were known to the grand jury, the question would have been a very different one. Then the question raised would have been, was there a variance between the allegations and the proof? But no 1023 such *question was raised, and the decision must be taken to be confined to the demurrer, as the only question raised on the record.

The other case relied on by the attorney general is Hulstead's case, 5 Leigh 724. That was a prosecution for selling ardent spirits without license. The indictment charged the sale without license "to persons to the jurors unknown." Evidence was offered at the trial tending to prove that the persons to whom the sale was made was known to the grand jury. The defendant moved the court to instruct the jury, that if they should find that the person to whom he sold the spirits in the indictment mentioned was in fact known to the grand jury at the time the indictment was found, the commonwealth could not sustain this indictment. The court refused to give this instruction. The general court affirmed the decision of the county court, and held that this was not a material variance between the proof and the charge in the indictment; that it was not necessary in indictments for such offences (i. e., for selling ardent spirits without license), to name the person to whom the liquor was sold, and that the words in that indictment "to persons to the jurors unknown," are surplusage.

But in that case the court said: "The offence of retailing spirits is distinguishable from that class of offences where the act constituting the offence is an injury to a third person, such as murder, larceny, &c., in which the name of the injured party ought to be stated when known. The reason of that rule does not apply to that class of offences to which retailing ardent spirits without license belongs,—offences in which the act constituting the offence is not an injury to third persons."

This case is entirely consistent with 1024 the rules of *Criminal Law above stated, and is not at all in conflict with the authorities above cited.

The offence of selling ardent spirits without license, is not an offence against third persons; but an offence against the revenue laws, and it may be against social order and public morals. The offence is the selling without license. It matters not to whom or to what person it is sold; and therefore the name of the person is immaterial to be stated. But under the statute upon which the indictments before us are found, the offence is not the mere selling of ardent spirits; but selling or furnishing the same to a minor without the consent of the parent or guardian.

In such a case the act constituting the offence, is an injury to third persons, and therefore the person, if known, must be named in the indictment; and if charged as "a person to the jurors unknown," when in fact he is known, this will be a fatal variance.

The court is therefore of opinion, that the judgment of the said hustings court in both cases be reversed, and the defendants be discharged from further prosecution under said indictments: subject, however, to be tried under other indictments, (if any be so found against them,) setting forth the names (if such names be known), of the minors to whom ardent spirits were sold or furnished.

Judgments reversed.

1025 *Schwartz v. Commonwealth.*

November Term, 1876, Richmond.

[21 Am. Rep. 365.]

Rape—Confessions.—S is examined as a witness against T charged with the crime of rape. He is asked if he and T had not agreed to commit the rape, and if he did not hear the cries of the girl whilst T had her in the bushes; and he denies both. The examination is interrupted for a few minutes, and the witness is retired into another room, when he states to two of the officers and another person, that to help T he had sworn falsely; and when his examination is resumed he says that he and T had agreed to commit the rape, and that he did hear the cries of the girl. S is then indicted for perjury in making his first statement. There is no evidence against him but his own statements. Held: His statements are not sufficient to convict him.

This was an indictment for perjury in the hustings court of the city of Manchester. On the trial the jury found the prisoner guilty, and assessed his fine at one dollar, and the court sentenced him to imprisonment in the jail of the city for one year. There were a number of exceptions taken by the prisoner to rulings of the court; but this court only considered the question on the motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence. The facts are set out in the opinion of Judge Staples. On the application of the prisoner this court awarded him a writ of error.

G. Wise, for the prisoner.

The Attorney General, for the commonwealth.

1026 *Staples, J. The prisoner was indicted for perjury in the hustings court of the city of Manchester, and was convicted and sentenced to confinement in the jail of the city for one year. After the verdict was rendered, he moved the court to grant him a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict of the jury was contrary to the law and the evidence. His motion was overruled, and the prisoner excepted. His bill of exceptions contains all the facts proved on the trial, from which it appears that the prisoner was examined as a witness upon the trial of Joseph Turner, before the mayor of Manchester, upon the charge of rape, and upon the examination the prisoner testified that he had no conversation or plot with the said Joseph Turner, before they left Manchester, to commit a rape upon Pallas Boyd; that he and Turner went to the locality of the alleged offence for the purpose of getting flowers, and that he heard no screams from the girl, Pallas Boyd, whilst Turner had her in the bushes; that the commonwealth's attorney asked that his testimony be written down; that a pause in his examination of two or three minutes ensued, during which time the prisoner was retired from the witness stand; that the prisoner during this interruption stated to Mr. Fitzgerald, a police officer, to Mr. Redford, a bystander, and to the commonwealth's attorney, that he had sworn falsely in his testimony just given; that he had done so to screen Turner, and that when he went back on the stand he would tell the truth; that the prisoner was then put on the stand again as a witness, no other witness intervening, and testified that he and Turner had had a bargain and conversation about the girl before they left Manchester, and that he did hear screams from the girl while Turner had her in the bushes; and thereupon the said mayor refused to

*For monographic note on Confessions, see end of case.

1027 hear him further. *It was further proved that the prisoner was not warned by said mayor that he had a right to refuse to answer questions put to him; that he had no counsel; that he appeared somewhat confused, but not more so than is usual with witnesses; and that he is in the fifteenth year of his age. And these were all the facts proved on the trial.

The charge in the indictment is of perjury in the first statement before the mayor; and the evidence relied on to establish the perjury is the contradictory statement before the same officer at a subsequent period of the same examination. As will be seen from the bill of exception, this contradictory statement was the sole and only proof adduced by the commonwealth in support of the indictment.

The question we are to determine is, was he properly convicted upon that evidence?

No rule is perhaps better settled than that to authorize a conviction of perjury there must be two witnesses testifying to the falsity of the statement, or one witness with strong corroborating circumstances of such a character as clearly to turn the scale and overcome the oath of the party and the legal presumption of his innocence. This rule is founded upon the idea that it is unsafe to convict in any case where the oath of one man merely is to be weighed against that of another. Lord Tenterden is reported to have said that corroborating circumstances are not sufficient, but that the contradiction must be given by two witnesses. But the rule is now settled otherwise; the confirmatory evidence however must be of a strong character, and not merely corroborative in slight particulars.

It was at one time held that when the same person has by opposite oaths asserted and denied the same fact, he may be convicted on either; for whichever of the other, the defendant cannot be heard to deny the truth of that evidence, inasmuch as it came from him. But this doctrine has been long since exploded, and it is now held that the prosecuting attorney must elect which of the two oaths he means to rely upon as false, and he must prove the perjury in that particular statement. Two early English cases are sometimes cited as holding that the perjury may be established by proof of the contradictory oath merely, without other evidence. One of these is an anonymous case decided by Yates, J., at the Lancaster assizes in 1764, and the ruling approved by Lord Mansfield. The other is the case of Rex v. Knill, a short report of which is found in a note in Barnwell & Alderson R., page 929. It is shown, however, in 2 Russell on Crimes, 652, that in each of these cases there were corroborating circumstances in addition to the contradictory oath. But if these cases even go to the extent which is claimed for them, they are overruled by the later English decisions. And it is now held by those courts that the defendant's own evidence upon oath is not sufficient of itself to disprove the evidence on which the perjury is assigned.

In Regina v. Wheatland, 8 Car. & Payne R. 238, Mr. Baron Gurney held that it was not sufficient to prove that the defendant had on two different occasions given directly contradictory evidence, although he might have wilfully done so; but that the jury must be satisfied affirmatively, that what he swore at the trial was false, and that would not be sufficiently shown to be false by the mere fact that the defendant had sworn contrary at another time; it might be that his evidence at the trial was true, and his deposition before the magistrate false. There must be such confirmatory evidence of the defendant's deposition 1029 before the magistrate *as proved that the evidence given by the defendant at the trial was false.

In Regina v. Hughes, 1 Car. & Kerwan, 519, Tindall, C. J., said: If you merely prove the two contradictory statements on oath, and leave it there, non constat which statement is the true one. See also Mary Jackson's case, 1 Lewin 270; 2 Russell on Crimes 651-652; Roscoe Crim. Evidence, 767-768.

In the United States there are but few decisions bearing upon the question. The writers on criminal law, however, lay down the rule in conformity with the English cases. 3 Wharton, sec. 2275; 2 Bishop Cr. Law, sec. 1005; 1 Greenl. Ev. 259.

The only opposing case is that of the People v. Burden, 9 Barb. R. 469. There Johnson, J., delivering the opinion of the court, enters into an elaborate discussion of the whole subject, and arrives at the following conclusions: That where a defendant by a subsequent deposition expressly contradicts and falsifies a former one made by him, and in such subsequent deposition expressly admits and alleges that such former one was intentionally false at the time it was made, he may be properly arrested upon an indictment charging the first deposition to be false, without any other proof than that of the two depositions." To maintain his position, the learned judge relies upon the two English cases already mentioned, not advertent, however, to the fact that there were corroborating circumstances in each of them. The distinction he seeks to establish is not recognized by any adjudicated case, or by any writer on criminal law. This proposition is, that the first oath of the prisoner must be held to be false because in the second he admitted it to be so. In other words, when the prisoner has made two contradictory statements under 1030 oath, and in the second he *has acknowledged the intentional falsity of the first, that acknowledgment is sufficient to establish the perjury of the first without further evidence. And it is asked why may not the prisoner be convicted of perjury upon his mere confession, as in other cases.

It is not denied that a full judicial confession is perhaps sufficient to found a conviction upon in any case. It is substantially the same as a plea of guilty to the indictment. But it is denied that a mere admission, not judicial, of having sworn falsely, dispenses with all further proof of the fact. As before stated, when there are two conflicting statements under oath the prisoner cannot be convicted upon either, for the reason, say the judges, it is not possible to tell which is the true and which is the false. In such case, it is agreed on all hands, that strong confirmatory evidence is essential. It is gravely insisted that this confirmatory evidence is fully supplied by the prisoner's acknowledgment of the falsity of the first statement. Why may not the acknowledgment itself be false.

If the second oath, deliberately taken, is insufficient to overcome the first, why should a mere admission have that effect? When a witness deliberately asserts a fact to be true as within his knowledge, and in a few minutes thereafter deliberately and intentionally asserts the very reverse as within his knowledge, all ground of innocent mistake being excluded, he thereby indirectly but unequivocally affirms the falsity of the first. Do we discredit the first any sooner, or believe the second the more readily, because the witness tells us that one was intentionally false and the other true? We believe neither of them. We place no confidence in either statement, from an absolute inability to determine which is true, or whether either is true. If the witness is afterwards put on his trial for per- 1031 jury, our *difficulties are in no wise removed. We are still in doubt which is the true and which is the false. It is very true that a witness making two palpably conflicting statements may sometimes by his demeanor satisfy the hearer that one is to be credited rather than the other. But when those statements are repeated to a third person, it is very difficult, if not impossible, to detect the false without some aid from surrounding circumstances. And no mere asseveration of the witness will assist the mind in arriving at a just and accurate conclusion. If the witness is to be convicted of perjury upon his bare declaration that the first statement is false, it is not because we believe his declaration is necessarily true, but upon some idea that it is in the nature of a confession, and therefore to be believed. A deliberate confession of guilt is generally credited, because it is presumed to flow from the highest sense of guilt? It must be remembered, however, that there are two statements upon oath, and if the prisoner is to be concluded from denying one to be true, the same reason would conclude him from denying the other, and the prosecutor might select either as the ground of his proceeding. In this very case the commonwealth might have elected to proceed upon the second statement made by the prisoner. In that event all will concede he must have produced other testimony in addition to the contradictory statement first made. Is it possible that the principle is so reserved and is of so little value that the prisoner may be convicted of perjury upon the first, merely because upon his second examination he admitted the first did not contain the truth.

If this be so, the rule laid down that in case of two conflicting statements there can be no conviction unless there is corroborative evidence is not of the *slightest value. When we speak of corroborative evidence, we do not mean such as emanates from the mouth of the prisoner himself, but evidence aliunde, evidence which tends to show the perjury independently of his own declarations. The whole law in reference to perjury is based upon the idea that when there is witness against witness, oath against oath, there must be other evidence to satisfy the mind.

The rule is thus laid down in 1 Greenleaf, sec. 265: If the evidence in proof of the crime of perjury consists of two opposing statements of the prisoner, and nothing more, he cannot be convicted. * * * If both the contradictory statements were delivered under oath there is nothing to show which of them is false, where no evidence of the falsity is given." See also Dodge v. State, 4 Zabriskie 455. This is a sound rule, and ought not to be departed from to meet particular cases. In this connection it may be mentioned that the decision in the New York case was made by two judges in a court of three—Judge Selden dissenting.

The case now in hand is a strong illustration of the value of the rule in question. The prisoner was a youth of fifteen, charged before the same magistrate with being implicated in the crime of rape, and acquitted but a few minutes before. Upon his examination he was without counsel or advice, and was not cautioned that he was not bound to criminate himself. His examination had not been completed, but merely suspended; and during this interval he is said to have made to officers of the government the statements upon which his conviction is founded. Before he had concluded he was stopped by the mayor, in the midst of his narrative, and forbade to say more.

What he would have further said we 1033 cannot even conjecture. *So great is the abhorrence of the crime of rape, that the passions and suspicions of men are more easily excited than by any other accusation. When, therefore, the prisoner confessed his complicity in the crime, ready credence was given to the statement. If in his first statement he had made the same confession, and in his subsequent examination denied it, it is easy to see that the perjury would have been charged in the last and not in the first. And yet without the aid of other evidence the one statement was entitled to no greater consideration than the other. Upon the whole, I think the prisoner was improperly convicted upon the facts as presented to the jury.

With respect to the instructions, my opinion is, that no error was committed by the court either in refusing those asked for, or in giving those that were given. Upon the points presented by the second bill of exception, it is unnecessary to express any opinion, as the question will probably not again arise.

Judgment reversed.

A. ADMISSIBILITY OF CONFESSIONS.

The general rule is that a confession of a prisoner may be given in evidence against him. Smith's Case, 10 Gratt. 739; Shifflet's Case, 14 Gratt. 652; Thompson's Case, 20 Gratt. 724; Page's Case, 27 Gratt. 954; Wolf's Case, 30 Gratt. 833; State v. Morgan, 35 W. Va. 260, 13 S. E. Rep. 385; Hite's Case, 96 Va. 494, 31 S. E. Rep. 895.

1. What Will Exclude a Confession.—But when it appears that the confession was obtained from the prisoner by some inducement of a worldly or temporal character in the nature of a threat, or promise of benefit, held out to him in respect of his escape from the consequences of the offence, or the mitigation of the punishment, by a person in authority, or with the apparent sanction of such person, then such confession is inadmissible. Smith's Case, 10 Gratt. 739, cited and approved in Shifflet's Case, 14 Gratt. 652; Thompson's Case, 20 Gratt. 724; Page's Case, 27 Gratt. 954; Wolf's Case, 30 Gratt. 833; State v. Morgan, 35 W. Va. 260, 13 S. E. Rep. 385; Hite's Case, 96 Va. 494, 31 S. E. Rep. 895.

a. West Virginia.—To exclude a confession, it must not only be made under inducements of favour or fear, but such inducements must come from one in authority. State v. Morgan, 35 W. Va. 260, 13 S. E. Rep. 385.

b. Exception to the Rule.—The confessions of the accused, made under inducements, to officers in whose custody he was at the time, are not to be excluded on the trial when the confession is accompanied with the surrender and restoration of the stolen property. Fredrick v. State, 3 W. Va. 695.

B. ALARM OR AGITATION ALONE WILL NOT RENDER CONFESSION INADMISSIBLE.

"No degree of alarm or agitation will, of itself, render confessions made during its existence inadmissible." The court, in Venable's Case, 24 Gratt. 643, citing Smith's Case, 10 Gratt. 734, as a striking instance of this fact.

C. PERSONS IN AUTHORITY—DEFINED.

Persons in authority, within the meaning of the rule, are such as are engaged or concerned in the apprehension, prosecution or examination of the accused. Smith's Case, 10 Gratt. 743, approved in Thompson's Case, 20 Gratt. 730; Early's Case, 86 Va. 928, 11 S. E. Rep. 795.

1. Instances.—A person committed on a charge of larceny by a justice, is sent in charge of a special constable and the prosecutor to jail, and on the way this constable says to him, "you had as well tell all about it." After they had rode about a mile after this remark, without any other remark being addressed to the prisoner, he voluntarily says to the prosecutor, "I will tell you all about it;" and proceeds to tell how and by whom the breaking and larceny was committed. The constable was one in authority over him; and the statement is not admissible in evidence. Vaughan v. The Commonwealth, 17 Gratt. 576.

A young man living in the jailor's family, and who occasionally, in the absence of the jailor, attended the prisoners and kept the keys of the jail, is not a person in authority, whose threat or promise will exclude a confession made in jail by the prisoner awaiting trial. Shifflet's Case, 14 Gratt. 652.

A person to whom a free negro is bound as apprentice, though a justice of the peace, if not acting as such, and no way affected by the offence, is not a person in authority in the sense of the rule which excludes confessions made to persons in authority. Smith's Case, 10 Gratt. 734.

2. Master or Mistress Such Person—When.—It is only where the offence concerns the master or mistress that their holding out threats or promises to the prisoner, will render his confession inadmissible. Otherwise the confession will be admitted. Smith's Case, 10 Gratt. 746.

3. Private Detective Not Such Person.—A private detective, employed to work up the case, is not such a person as comes under the rule of persons in authority. Early's Case, 86 Va. 921, 11 S. E. Rep. 795.

D. WHOLE CONFESSION MUST BE GIVEN.

If the commonwealth uses the accused's statement against him, they must give such statement as a whole, and not select parts for the jury and omit the rest. Parrish v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 1.

1. Jury May Disregard Part.—Where the confession of a prisoner is given in evidence, the whole must go to the jury; but the whole is not necessarily to be taken as true; on the contrary, if, from opposing evidence or the confession itself, facts appear which are sufficient to satisfy a rational mind that a part is not true, it ought to be disregarded. Brown v. Commonwealth, 9 Leigh 633.

E. THE GENERAL RULE AS TO REPEATED CONFESSIONS—ALTHOUGH FIRST INADMISSIBLE, SECOND MAY BE ADMISSIBLE.

"The court is further of opinion, that though a confession may be inadmissible because not voluntary, it may become admissible by being subsequently repeated by the accused, when his mind is perfectly free from the undue influence which induced the original confession, Prima facie, the undue influence will be considered as continuing; though the presumption may be repelled by evidence, which, however, must be strong and clear. The rule on this subject has been well stated to be, 'that, although an original confession may have been obtained by improper means, yet subsequent confessions of the same or like facts may be admitted, if the court believes, from the length of time intervening, or from proper warning of the consequences of confession, or from other circumstances, that the delusive hopes or fears, under the influence of which the original confession was obtained, were entirely dispelled. In the absence of any such circumstances, the influence of the motives proved to have been offered, will be presumed to continue, and to have produced the confession, unless the contrary is shown by clear evidence, and the confession will therefore be rejected.' 2 Russ. on Crimes 888; Greenl. Ev. 257; and cases cited. It follows that the burden of showing the contrary devolves on the commonwealth, as the condition on which the confession will be admissible." The court, in Thompson's Case, 20 Gratt. 731, approved in Venable's Case, 24 Gratt. 639. See also, Mitchell's Case, 83 Gratt. 845.

1. Instances.—If a threat be made or a promise held out, to a person in custody on a charge of felony, to induce him to make confession, and he denies his guilt at the time, but afterwards makes a confession, which appears, from the time and circumstances, not to have been induced by such previous threat or promise, this confession, so afterwards made, is a voluntary one, and proper evidence against him on his trial. Moore v. Commonwealth, 2 Leigh 701.

Prisoner charged with murder, makes a confession to a police officer on the morning of the day he is examined by the police justice. Before that examination he has employed counsel, and he is warned, both by his counsel and the police justice, against making any statement or confession. Being committed by the justice, on getting to the jail he appears to be very much frightened and agitated; and upon getting there he makes a confession, and again on the same day confesses the deed to a woman of his acquaintance who is in the jail. Though the confession to the police officer was properly excluded, the confessions made after the warning given him are proper evidence. Venable v. Commonwealth, 24 Gratt. 639.

F. COMMONWEALTH MUST SHOW CONFESSION TO BE VOLUNTARY—CONDITION PRECEDENT.

Says the court, in Thompson's Case, 20 Gratt. 731. "That the confession is voluntary, being therefore a condition precedent of its admissibility, and the duty of deciding on its admissibility being a duty which devolves on the court, it follows, necessarily, that the court must be satisfied that the confession was voluntary, before it can be permitted to go before the jury; in other words, that the burden of proof that it was voluntary, devolves on the commonwealth."

G. CONFESSION INADMISSIBLE UNTIL CORPUS DELICTI PROVEN.

Until there is clear proof of the death of the person for whose murder the prisoner is accused, the admissions of the prisoner as to his having committed the act must be clear and explicit. If there is any doubt as to his meaning, he ought not to be convicted. Smith v. Commonwealth, 21 Gratt. 809.

H. CONFESSIONS OF ACCOMPLICE INADMISSIBLE.

Confessions or admissions of an accomplice in a felony, made after the commission and completion of the offence, are not competent evidence against the prisoner, even though a previous conspiracy and combination between the prisoner and the accomplice to commit the felony has been proved. Hunter v. Commonwealth, 7 Gratt. 641.

I. CONFESSIONS OBTAINED BY FRAUD.

For an instance of a confession procured by a fraud being practiced on accused, see Page's Case, 27 Gratt. 954.

K. ACCUSED NOT ALLOWED TO PROVE HIS OWN DECLARATIONS.

The accused is not allowed to prove his own declarations to the end of his own exculpation. Sprouse v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 374.

1. Instances.—On the trial of a criminal cause, a witness for the commonwealth proves, that having, in a conversation with the accused, expressed his entire conviction of a particular fact, the accused admitted the fact (which, in its nature, strongly tends to establish his guilt) but made an explanatory statement (which, if taken as true, will exculpate him). The accused then offers to prove, that he had previously, and under different circumstances, made the same declaration to another person. Held, such evidence is inadmissible. Earhart v. Commonwealth, 9 Leigh 671.

If a prisoner, in speaking of the testimony of a witness who had testified against him, says "that what W. said was true as far as he went, but that he did not say all or enough"; this is not admissible as a confession of the prisoner; nor does it lay any foundation for proving to the jury what W. did swear to. Finn v. Commonwealth, 5 Rand. 761.

At the examination of the prisoner by the mayor, the prisoner reluctantly at the mayor's request, wrote the name he was suspected of having forged; in doing so he made the same mistake in spelling the name, as appeared on the forged instrument. Held, this fact was properly admitted to the jury. Sprouse v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 374.

L. WEIGHT AND DEGREE OF CREDIT TO BE GIVEN CONFESSIONS.

Perhaps no general proposition can be predicated concerning the weight and degree of credit to be given to a confession; because this must depend in every case upon the age, character and mental capacity of the party, and the share of education which he has enjoyed, and all surrounding circumstances which attended it. And this seems to be the opinion of a learned writer on the law of evidence. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 215; Smith's Case, 10 Gratt. 787.

M. ALTHOUGH CONFESSION INADMISSIBLE FACTS DISCLOSED BY IT MAY BE PROVED.

Facts disclosed or discoveries made in consequence of statements made by accused, may be given in evidence, although the confession, by which such facts were disclosed, or discoveries made, is inadmissible, on account of being improperly extorted from the prisoner. State v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 770.

N. ADMISSIBILITY OF CONFESSIONS A QUESTION FOR THE COURT.

It is therefore declared as the condition of the admissibility of a confession, that it be free and voluntary, and not made under the influence of such a bias upon the mind of the party as will in the judgment of the law, disturb the free exercise of volition, and destroy the presumption that the confession so made is true; and this, the judge and not the jury, is to determine. Smith's Case, 10 Gratt. 787.

O. CREDIT TO BE GIVEN CONFESSIONS A QUESTION FOR THE JURY.

The weight and degree of credit to be given a confession is a question for the jury. Smith's Case, 10 Gratt. 789; Brown's Case, 9 Leigh 683.

ABATEMENT.

1. W sues S in assumpsit, in the county of J, and sends the process to the city of R, where S resides, and it is served upon S by the sheriff of R. S files a plea in abatement stating these facts, but does not say where the cause of action arose. HOLD: The plea is sufficient in this case, though it does not give the plaintiff a better writ.

Warren v. Saunders, 259

2. W having demurred to the plea, and the court having sustained the demurrer, when the cause is called for trial S moves to dismiss the cause from the docket. HOLD: The motion should have been sustained and the suit dismissed; the statute expressly providing that where the suit is brought where the cause of action arose, process shall not be directed to an officer of any other county or corporation than that wherein the action is brought.

ADVANCEMENTS.

1. W, in his lifetime, made advancements to some of his children. By his will he gave his estate to his widow for her life, and authorized her to make advancements to their children; and he directed that at her death his estate, including these advancements, should be equally divided among his children. Mrs. W did make advancements to all the children, but to one much less than the others. She died in February 1868, but the estate was not ready for a division until October 1874. HOLD: Interest should be charged to each legatee on the excess of advancements made to him or her from the death of Mrs. W, in 1868 until the time of the division in 1874.

Silliman & als. v. Fred., Or. & Char. R. R. Co., 119

APPEALS.

1. The § 7, of the act of March 2, 1866, known as the stay law, and the acts amendatory thereof, do not apply to appeals, writs of error or supersedeas; and therefore an appeal from a final decree made on the 1st of November 1867 cannot be allowed on the 12th of June 1871.

Rogers v. Strother & als., 417

2. A decree giving all the relief asked for in the case is a final decree, and though it may afterwards be modified directing the amount decreed to be paid to S to be paid to a creditor of S, this does not change its character.

Idem, 417

3. To give the court of appeals jurisdiction of a cause, except in certain cases specified, the judgment or decree must amount to $500, principal and interest, at the date of the judgment or decree, except where the claim of the plaintiff is more than that amount, and he applies for the appeal.

Gage v. Crockett, 735

4. On a creditor's bill against a railroad company, some of the debts proved are under $500, but there is one for $1,117.60 proved before the commissioner, and the decree of the circuit court is in favor of all of them against the company. An appeal by the company brings up all of them; and this court will pass upon all.

The Winch. & Stras. R. R. Co. & al. v. Colfert & al., 777

5. Three suits in equity are brought by the same plaintiffs against the same defendants to enforce payment of debts by attachment and sale of the same land. By order of the court these suits are directed to be consolidated and heard together, and then plaintiffs file an amended bill bringing in a third party. There being a decree dismissing the attachments, the plaintiffs may appeal to the court of appeals, though neither of the debts amount to $500, the sum of all of them being more than that amount.

Devries & Co. v. Johnston & Wolfe & al., 805

6. There may be an appeal as of right, from an interlocutory order of a county court in a controversy concerning the establishment of a road.

Jeter v. Board & als., 910

7. In a suit by a vendor of land to enforce payment of the purchase money his debt is scaled, and a decree for the scaled amount which is paid to him. Creditors come into the case, and there is a decree for a sale of the land to pay them; and widow and heirs of vendee appeal from the last decree. The appeal does not bring up the first decree, so as to entitle the vendee to have it reviewed.

Simmons v. Lyles & als., 922

APPELLATE COURT.

1. If upon a trial at law instructions are given to the jury, to which no exception is taken, and after verdict a motion is made for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection as well as that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, it is the duty of the court of trial to consider the correctness of the instructions; and if of opinion that they are not correct, and were calculated to mislead the jury, to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial; and the appellate court will supervise his action in this respect.

Stevenson v. Wallace, 77

2. In an action of assumpsit there is a plea of payment, and of the statute of limitations. On the trial the plaintiff asks the court to instruct the jury, that in passing upon a plea of the statute they must leave out of the computation of time all the period extending from the 2nd of March 1866 to January 1st 1869. The court refuses to give the instruction; and plaintiff excepts. The jury find a general verdict for the defendant, and there is a general judgment accordingly. HELD:

1. That the appellate court will reverse the judgment for the error in refusing the instruction, and send the cause back for a new trial.

Danville Bank v. Waddill, 448

2. This will always be done unless the appellate court can see from the whole record, that even under correct instructions a different verdict could not have been rightfully found, or unless it is able to see that the erroneous ruling of the trying court could not have influenced the verdict. The onus is upon the appellee to show this, and where there are distinct issues, a general verdict is not sufficient in general to show it. Idem, 448

3. When the appellate court will not reverse a decree against purchasers of land for failure to allow them for improvements. See Vendor and Purchaser, No. 4, and

Tosh & als. v. Robertson & als., 270

4. Where there is an appeal on the ground of the refusal of the court to continue the cause, the appellate court will not reverse the judgment unless the action of the court below is plainly erroneous.

Harman v. Howe, 676

5. When the appellate court should or should not reverse the action of the court which appointed a fiduciary, in removing him from his office. See County Courts, No. 5, and Reynolds v. Zink, 29

6. For the principles upon which new trials will be awarded. See New Trials, No. 3, 4, 5, 6, and Pryor's case, 1009

*ASSIGNMENTS.

1. A case of the transfer of a number of negotiable notes "without recourse," in which it was held, looking to all the circumstances, that the words were to be construed in their literal sense; and that the transferrer was not liable for the failure to recover from the endorser. If the transferee intended that they should be used in this instance in their restricted sense, he should have been careful to express his meaning, or have it expressed in plain and unmistakable terms.

Ober v. Goodridge, trustee, 878

2. After a decree for an account in a creditors' suit against an insolvent bank, a debtor of the bank obtaining assignments of debts of the bank, will only be allowed to stand in the shoes of his assignor, and have a credit on his debt for the pro rata share of the debts assigned to him.

Finney & als. v. Bennett, 365

3. See Bonds, No. 14, and

Brown, adm'r, v. Dickerson, 690

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

1. In 1860 attorneys at law receive two notes, and give a receipt which says: Received for collection, &c., and after describing them says: On the above notes we are to bring suit, and prosecute them to judgment, and have a fee of five dollars in each case. Though the last clause of the receipt may be construed to relieve them from the obligation to collect, and from the corresponding compensation for collecting, it cannot be construed to deny to them the authority to collect, or to limit them to the function of prosecuting the claims to judgment.

Johnson v. Gibbons, 632

2. Judgments having been recovered and executions issued, which were stayed, the debtor in April 1862, pays to the attorneys $2,600, in part of these debts, the payment being in confederate money; neither the attorneys nor the debtors having any notice that the creditor was unwilling to receive confederate money; and the attorneys write immediately to the creditor, that they have this money for him. He holding that the attorneys had no authority to collect the money, does not reply to the letter; and neither attorneys nor debtor hear of any objection to their receipt of the money until 1874. The creditor is concluded by his failure to give his attorneys notice of his objection to their receiving the money.

his lien. See Equitable Jurisdiction and Relief, No. 6, 7, 8, and

BANKS.

1. How insolvent banks may be wound up. See Creditor's Bill, No. 4, and

Finney & als. v. Bennett, 365

BONDS.

1. When a bond given for the loan of money, lent out by an executor under the decree of a court may be sued upon by the executor without a decree authorizing him to do so. See Actions, No. 3, and

Cabell & als. v. Cox, 182

2. A blank paper is signed and sealed by a principal and three others who intend to be his sureties, and it is left with the principal to be filled up and delivered by him. He does fill it up and deliver it to the obligee named therein. It is not the bond of the three, and does not bind them. But the principal having filled it up, and delivered it when thus complete, it is his bond, and binds him.

Penn assignee v. Hamlett & als., 337

3. A state cannot tax the bonds of a railroad company held by persons living out of the state.

Commonwealth v. Ches. & Ohio R. Co., 344

4. If a bond, perfect on its face, is delivered to the obligee as an escrow, to be valid upon another person's executing it, it is valid though the condition is not complied with.

Miller v. Fletcher & als., 403

5. A deed, perfect on its face, cannot be delivered as an escrow to the grantee or obligee, upon a condition upon which it is to be a valid deed. In all such cases 1038 *the condition is void, and the deed is at once operative. Idem, 403

6. Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a deed perfect on its face, was delivered to the grantee on a condition.

7. It is not necessary that the sureties of a sheriff in his official bond should acknowledge the same in court. The bond may be acknowledged by them in court, or its execution out of court proved by witnesses. And there is no statute or rule of law requiring such proof to be adduced at the time the bond is received by the court. With or without such proof the parties who had actually signed would be bound by it.

Supervisors of Washington Co. v. Dunn & als., 608

8. A person who signs, seals and delivers an instrument as his deed, will never be heard to question its validity, upon the ground that it was not acknowledged by him, nor proved at the time of delivery. It is the sealing and delivery that gives efficacy to the deed; not proof of its execution. And this principle applies to all bonds, whether executed by public officers or private persons, unless there is a statute making the acknowledgment or proof in court essential to the validity of the instrument. Idem, 608

9. In an action on an official bond, if there is no record evidence, the execution of it may be established by the testimony of attesting witnesses, or if there be none, by proof of handwriting, or by discovery from the adverse party. Idem, 608

10. The fact that the names of two of the parties who executed and acknowledged the bond, were not in the body of it, does not invalidate it as to them. Idem, 608

11. A bond is given upon an injunction to a judgment for money, and in the penalty it is said "in the just and full sum of seven hundred and sixty lawful money of Virginia." The word "dollars" is obviously left out by mistake, and the bond will be treated as if the word was in it.

Harman v. Howe, 676

12. Words omitted in an instrument, and also in a record or statute, which can be clearly ascertained by the context, will be supplied by the court, and the instrument, record or statute will be read and treated as if the words were in it. Idem, 676

13. For bonds executed on obtaining an injunction, and especially an injunction to a judgment for money. See Injunctions, No. 3, 4, 5, and Idem, 676

14. Three bonds are executed to A and G, and are left in the possession of G. A sold the bonds to E, but did not deliver them, they being in the possession of G. G sold the bonds to D, and delivered them to him. HELD:

1. The bonds having been executed to A and G, their joint interests appeared on the face of the bonds; and the possession of them by G could not mislead a purchaser from him.

Brown, adm'r &c., v. Dickenson, 690

2. Though each might sell his own interest, neither could dispose of the interest of the other without his consent.

Idem, 690

3. Though the bonds were sold by G and assigned to D, he only acquired G's interest in the bonds; and E is entitled to the interest of A. Idem, 690

4. In a contest between E and D, each claiming the bonds, G being dead, A is not a competent witness to prove that G owed him, and had agreed that he should have the bonds. Idem, 690

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

1. Though the statute exempts from taxation the property of orphan asylums and other charitable institutions, the exemption does not include a tax on a devise or bequest of property to such institutions.

Miller's ex'or v. The Commonwealth, 110

Barrett's adm'rs v. The Same, 110

COLLATERAL SECURITIES.

1. Where stock is delivered as a pledge or collateral security for a debt, the creditor may sell it, but he is not bound to do so, at least without being required by the debtor; and if it perishes the creditor is not liable for it.

Richardson v. Ins. Co. of Valley of Va., 749

1039 *CONFEDERATE TRANSACTIONS.

1. In November 1857 H, an executor, lent money to G secured on real estate. In 1861 G wished to pay. H, who declined to receive it, saying it was well secured, and it was not needed. But in December 1861, being urged by G, he agreed that if G would find any person who would take it he might do so. In January 1862 G proposed to C to take it, and in February C did take it, and gave his bond to H for the amount secured by deed of trust. The whole arrangement was made through G, C not having seen H, and G paid C in confederate money. It is not a confederate contract, liable to be scaled.

Cabell & als. v. Cox, 182

2. In the adjustment of confederate transactions, to lay down fixed, unbending rules of decision applicable to all cases, is not only unjust, but in the nature of things utterly impracticable. Every case must depend upon its particular circumstances. The measure of relief must vary according to the equities of the parties.

Barton v. Bowen & wife, 849

3. See Judicial Sales, No. 9, 11, 12, 13, and Omohundro's ex'or v. Omohundro & als., 824

CONFESSIONS AND ADMISSIONS.

1. What admission and confessions of a prisoner may be given in evidence against him. The rule in Smith's case, 10 Gratt. 734, and Shifflet's case, 14 Id. 652, reaffirmed.

Page's case, 954

2. What statements of a prisoner is not competent evidence. See Evidence, No. 15, and Williams' case, 997

3. On a trial for perjury; when prisoner's own statements are not sufficient to convict him. See Perjury, No. 1, and

Schurtz's case, 1025

CONSTITUTION AND CONSTITUTIONALITY OF LAWS.

1. The act of April 18, 1874, Sess. Acts, ch. 214, § 22, p. 243, which forbids the planting of oysters in the waters of the state by any person not a resident of the state, is a constitutional act; not in conflict with either article 1, § 8, or article 4, § 2, of the constitution of the United States.

McCready's case, 985

2. The immunities and privileges secured to all the citizens of the United States by the constitution, are the right to protection by the government, to the enjoyment of life and liberty; to acquire and possess property of every kind; and to pursue happiness and safety. But they do not include the right to share the property belonging to the people of the state. Idem, 985

CONTINUANCE OF A CAUSE.

1. A motion for a continuance of a cause is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, under all the circumstances of the case; and although an appellate court will supervise the action of an inferior court on such a motion, it will not reverse a judgment on that ground unless such action was plainly erroneous.

Harman v. Howe, 676

2. Where the circumstances satisfy the court that the real purpose in moving for a continuance is to delay or evade a trial, and not to prepare for it, then though the witnesses have been summoned, and the party has sworn to their materiality, and that he cannot go safely to trial without them, the continuance should be refused.

Idem, 676

3. Where the circumstances are such as to induce the court to doubt the motives of the party in moving for a continuance, the court may require him to state what he expects to prove by the absent witness; and if the facts which he states he expects to prove by the witness would not affect the result, the motion should be overruled.

CONVEYANCES—FRAUDULENT.

1. Husband and wife agree in consideration that the husband conveys a house and lot to a trustee for her and her children, she will unite in the conveyance of his other real estate when he shall sell it; and this she does. HELD:

1. To the extent of her dower interest in the husband's real estate, the husband's conveyance to the trustee is on valuable consideration; and to that extent the wife is entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds of the sale of the house and lot, as against creditors of the husband, for debts contracted at the time of the deed.

Johnston & als. v. Gill & als., 587

2. For debts contracted before the execution of the deed, the proceeds of the sale of the house and lot, above the value of the widow's dower interest in the husband's real estate in the conveyance of which she joined, are liable; but not to debts contracted after the conveyance by the husband to the trustee. Code of 1860, ch. 118, § 2. Idem, 587

2. The 7th section of the act of March 3rd, 1866, known as the stay law, suspended the statute of limitations as to suits to set aside fraudulent conveyances. Idem, 587

3. In a suit by legatees against an executor for an account of his administration, there are several reports by a commissioner, and at length a decree against the executor for a large amount. In a suit by these legatees against the executor and his grantees in a deed executed after his qualification, to set aside the deed on the ground of fraud, the decree against the executor and the report on which it was founded are prima facie evidence against said grantees, of the indebtedness of the executor; but are liable to be surcharged and falsified by them. Idem, 587

4. In November 1873, N conveyed to C, certain real and personal estate, and "all his stock in trade with all accretions and replenishments of said stock," in trust to secure and indemnify certain endorsers upon negotiable notes made by said N. And if the said notes were not paid on demand, C, upon the written request of either of the parties secured, should sell the property according to law. But C was not to be responsible for any of said property until he was ordered to sell the same as aforesaid. N continued in possession and carried on his store for two years, and until all the goods in the store at the time of the deed were sold, and other goods bought with the proceeds. In November 1875, under an execution of P against N, the goods then in store were levied on. Held: The deed is fraudulent per se, and P is entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the said goods under his execution.

Perry & Co. v. Shenandoah Nat. Bank & als., 755

CORPORATIONS.

1. Corporations are included under the term "persons," in a statute, unless they are exempted by its terms, or by the nature of the subject to which it relates.

Miller's ex'or v. The Commonwealth, 110

Barrett's adm'rs v. Same, 110

2. Corporations are included in the act of 1867, ch. 64, § 3, Sess. Acts 1866-'67, imposing a tax on collateral inheritances.

Idem, 110

3. Though the statute exempts from taxation the property of orphan asylums, and other charitable institutions, the exemption does not include a tax on a devise or bequest of property to such institutions.

Idem, 110

4. See Forfeiture, No. 1, and

Silliman & als. v. Fred., Or. & Char.

R. R. Co., 119

5. Persons dealing with a corporation must take notice of what is contained in the law of its organization; and they must be presumed to be informed as to the restrictions annexed to the grant of power by the law by which the corporation is authorized to act.

Idem, 119

6. In all cases, even in cases of negotiable instruments, a party contracting with an agent must enquire into his authority; and either a state or a corporation is bound only when its agents keep within the limit of their authority.

7. The Eastern Lunatic Asylum is a corporation having charge of the asylum at Williamsburg. During the late war the United States forces took possession of Williamsburg, and held it until the end of the war.

Upon their approach to the city the directors and principal officers of the asylum left it, and did not return. In January 1865, Colonel W, who was in command there, sent out a party some miles into the country, and took by force from the farm of G, who had left his home, corn and bacon, which was sent to the asylum, and used for the support of the inmates. After the war G brought trover against the corporation to recover the value of the articles so taken and used. Held:

1. By the laws of war such property could not be taken without compensation 1041 *for the purpose of feeding the inmates of the prison.

Eastern Lunatic Asylum v. Garrett, 163

2. The property having been taken without lawful authority, G's title was not divested, and it having been applied to the use of the asylum, he may recover its value from that corporation. Idem, 163

3. Trover is a proper remedy in the case. Idem, 163

COTERMINOUS OWNERS OF BUILDINGS.

1. As to the rights, duties and liabilities of coterminous owners of buildings. See Easements, Passim, and

Stevenson v. Wallace, 77

2. When and how relief will be afforded in equity. See Equitable Jurisdiction & Relief, No. 4, and

Berkeley v. Smith & als., 892

COUNTY COURTS.

1. The county and corporation courts have authority to remove a judge of elections for malfeasance in office or gross neglect of duty, though he has not been convicted by the verdict of a jury of any offence.

McDougal v. Guigon, judge, 133

2. For the power of county courts in removing officers who were ineligible to the office. See Officers, No. 4, and

Bunting v. Willis, judge, 144

3. J and C brought an action at law against W, in the county court of W, and sued out an attachment, which was served on certain real estate of W. Plaintiffs having recovered a judgment, the court made an order directing the sheriff to sell the real estate attached, and the sheriff having sold to L, the court made an order appointing a commissioner to convey the real estate to L; which was done. In ejectment by W against L to recover said real estate. Held: The county court being a court of general jurisdiction, no irregularities or errors in its proceedings can be enquired into in this case; but they are conclusive upon the rights of the parties to the property. Lancaster v. Wilson, 624

4. Under the facts of this case, the county court, in which an executor qualified as such, was warranted, in the exercise of the power vested in it by statute, in removing him from his office. See Code of 1860, ch. 132, § 11; Code of 1873, ch. 128, § 18, p. 949.

Reynolds v. Zink, 29

5. There must, of necessity, be vested in the court a very large discretion; and while it is a legal discretion, to be exercised in a proper case, an appellate court ought not to interfere, except in a case where manifest injustice has been done, or where it is plain that a proper case has not been made for the exercise of the powers which the law has specially conferred on the court from which the fiduciary derives his authority.

CREDITOR'S BILL.

1. Though a creditor files a bill to subject the personal and real estate of his deceased debtor to the payment of his debt, saying nothing of other creditors, yet if he prays that the administration account may be settled, that an account of all debts and liabilities of the estate may be taken, and their priorities fixed, that the amount and value of the real estate may be ascertained, and all other accounts and orders which are proper may be taken and made, this is a creditor's bill.

Duerson's adm'r v. Alsop & als., 229

2. Under such a prayer a decree for a general account may be made; all of the creditors permitted to come in and prove their debts, and an order staying all other suits; and all the assets administered in the one suit.

Idem, 229

3. Although a bill is in behalf of all creditors, it is yet under the control of the party bringing the suit, at least until there is a decree for an account. And if his claim is proved or admitted, and the executor confesses assets, the plaintiff may at the hearing have a decree for payment; and he is not compelled to take a decree for an account.

Idem, 229

4. The bank of P was ruined by the late war; and no officers of the bank have been elected, nor has there been a meeting of the board since April 1865, and it has done no business since; and in fact it had been abandoned and ceased to exist. In April 1866, H and M, suing as well for themselves as for all other stockholders, creditors, depositors, &c., filed their bill against the bank and the president, for a settlement of 1042 its affairs and a distribution of its assets. The court appointed a receiver in the case, and in June 1866 there was a decree for an account. Held:

1. It is a proper case for a creditors' suit.

Finney & als. v. Bennett, 365

2. A debtor of the bank purchasing debts due from the bank, after the decree for an account, is only entitled to stand in the shoes of his assignor, and receive his proportion of the assets realized.

Idem, 365

3. In an action by the receiver against a debtor of the bank, the record in the chancery cause is evidence for the plaintiff.

Idem, 365

5. On a creditor's bill against a railroad company, some of the debts proved are under $500, but there is one for $1,117.40 proved before the commissioner; and the decree of the circuit court is in favor of all of them against the company. An appeal by the company brings up all of them; and this court will pass upon all.

The Winch. & Strasb. R. R. Co. v. Colfert & al., 777

6. See Practice in Chancery, No. 16, 17, 18, and Simmons v. Lyles & als., 921

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION AND PROCEEDINGS.

1. In a commitment by a justice, of a person for forging an order, in setting out the order he writes out some words in full, which in the order as set out in the indictment are abbreviated, as Thomas for Thos., 23 cents for 23c., Respectfully for Resp't'y. These are not such variances as require that the accused should be sent back to a justice for examination. Burress' case, 934

2. To a plea of autrefois acquit, upon an indictment for forgery, the attorney for the commonwealth craves oyer of the former record, and demurs to the plea. The record shows that the indictment was for forging an order for forty-seven dollars and twenty-five cents, and that the order was for forty-seven dollars and twenty-three cents. This was a variance which entitled the prisoner to acquittal on that indictment; and therefore the acquittal on that indictment does not forbid the prosecution of the accused on another indictment for the same forgery, setting out the order correctly. Idem, 934

3. By the Code of 1873, ch. 195, § 15, p. 1218, a person acquitted by the jury on the facts and merits, on a former trial, may plead such acquittal in bar to a second prosecution for the same offence, notwithstanding any defect in the form or substance of the indictment or accusation on which he was acquitted. But it must appear from the record of the first case, or be averred in the plea and proved, that his acquittal was on the merits.

4. The act does not make a variance between the indictment and the forged paper immaterial. The accused must be acquitted on that ground, if no other. And if acquitted, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is, that he was acquitted on that ground. Idem, 934

5. The difference between "account" as set out in the indictment and "act" as written in the order, is not a material variance, which will exclude the order as evidence.

6. A person examined by a justice for a felony, may be sent on for trial to the circuit court of the county then in session, and may be arraigned and tried at that term of the court. Page's case, 954

7. On the arraignment of a prisoner on a charge of felony, he files a special plea, to which the attorney for the commonwealth files a special replication; and to this replication the prisoner demurs. The demurrer being overruled, the prisoner cannot rejoin to the replication without withdrawing his demurrer. Idem, 954

8. Upon the trial of the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, an instruction to the jury, that if they believe, &c., that the house named in the indictment for the burning of which the prisoner was arraigned and tried at a previous term of the court, is not the same house, nor the same burning charged in the indictment on which he now stands arraigned, then they must find against the prisoner on the issue joined, is correct. And it makes no difference that the offences charged in the two indictments are described as the burning of the dwelling house of R, if the jury believe that in reality distinct houses and distinct burnings are referred to in the two indictments. Idem, 954

1043 *9. On the trial of the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, R, whose dwelling house was in both indictments alleged to have been burned, and who was the principal witness for the commonwealth as to the burnings on both trials, may be asked, and may state whether or not the verdict of the jury on the first trial had relation to the house charged to have been burned in the indictment on which the prisoner was then arraigned. The enquiry is as to a fact, not an opinion. Idem, 954

10. Under the act, Code of 1873, ch. 202, § 10, the court may direct jurors to be summoned from another county or corporation for the trial of a prisoner on the plea of autrefois acquit, as well as on the general issue. Idem, 954

11. Whether it is a case in which a jury should be summoned from abroad, is for the court of trial to determine; and the appellate court will presume that the court of trial acted rightly in the matter unless the contrary plainly appears. Idem, 954

12 The issue on the plea of autrefois acquit having been found against the prisoner, and he being on his trial on the plea of "not guilty," eight of the jurors who had tried the first issue say on their voir dire, that they believed they could give the prisoner a fair and impartial trial on the evidence, notwithstanding anything that they had heard, having no impression on their minds on the question as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, which it would require evidence to remove. They are competent jurors. Idem, 954

13. On an indictment under the statute for selling liquor to minors without the consent of their parents or guardians, the indictment is for selling to minors whose names are unknown to the grand jury. If it appears from the evidence on the trial that in fact the name of the minor, to whom the liquor was sold, was known to the grand jury, the evidence does not sustain the indictment.

DECREES.

1. A decree which appointed a commissioner to convey land of L, deceased, to the plaintiff K, who was the executor of L, and trustee under his will of married women and infant children, which land K had sold to W, but there was no conveyance by the commissioner, decreed in a suit by the cestuis que trust against K and W, to be void and of no effect as to these cestuis que trust.

Walters v. Hill & als., 388

2. A decree giving all the relief asked for in the case, is a final decree and though it may afterwards be modified, directing the amount decreed to be paid to S to be paid to a creditor of S, this does not change its character.

Rogers v. Strother & als., 417

3. What decree of the court of appeals does and does not conclude further enquiry as to the action of an executor, a party in the cause. See Practice in Chancery, No. 11, and

DEEDS.

1. The deed of a deaf and dumb man acknowledged before a justice and recorded; sustained upon the proof that the deed was explained to him, and that he was believed to understand it; and there being no evidence of any fraud on the part of the grantee.

Morrison v. Morrison & als., 190

2. A deed, perfect on its face, cannot be delivered as an escrow to the grantee or obligee, upon a condition upon which it is to be a valid deed. In all such cases the condition is void, and the deed is at once operative.

Miller v. Fletcher & als., 403

3. Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a deed perfect on its face, was delivered on a condition. Idem, 403

4. As to the validity and proof of deeds, see Bonds, No. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and

DESCENTS.

1. B died intestate, leaving as her heirs five children of her deceased son S, six children of her deceased son W, and a grandchild of W, the only child of a deceased daughter of W. B's real estate is to be divided into twelve equal parts, of which the five children of her son S, the six children of 1044 her son W, and the grandchild *of W, representing her deceased mother, are each to take one part.

DOWER.

1. H by his will gave certain lands, which he describes, to his sons J and D; and by another clause, he says if his son J should die without issue, he gives certain part of the land given to him to D; and if both of his sons should die without issue, then all his aforesaid lands should go to his daughters, naming them. J died without children, and the lands went into the possession of D; and D afterwards died without children, leaving a widow, to whom by his will he left all his estate, and appointed her his executrix. He owned, however, only personal estate. More than a year after D's will was admitted to probate, his widow filed her bill against the executory devisees of H, to recover dower in the land which had come to D under the will. HELD:

1. The widow of D is entitled to dower in the said lands.

Jones & wife v. Hughes & als., 560

2. The Code of 1873, ch. 106, § 4, does not apply to the case, and her right to dower is not barred. Idem, 560

2. M devised his lands to his son G; and if G should die without having had lawful issue of his body, the said lands were to be divided among testator's four daughters. G died leaving a widow; but without having had lawful issue of his body. G's widow is entitled to dower in the lands so devised to him.

Medley & als. v. Medley, 568

3. A widow is entitled as against creditors of her husband by lien created since the marriage, to have her dower in real estate assigned in kind, if it can be done, without regard to its effects upon the interest of his creditors. If from the nature of the property, or of the husband's interest in it, the dower cannot be assigned in kind, the court may sell the whole property, and make her a moneyed compensation.

Simmons v. Lyles & als., 922

4. It is error to decree a sale of land at the suit of creditors, until the widow's dower is assigned to her in kind, or it is ascertained that it cannot be so assigned, and a moneyed compensation to her in lieu of her dower has been ascertained. Idem, 922

EASEMENTS.

1. Every person has a natural right, ex jure naturæ, to support to his land from the adjacent and subjacent soil.

Stevenson v. Wallace, 77

2. This natural right to support exists in respect of land only, and not in respect of buildings; but the former right remains though houses are built on the land.

Idem, 77

3. But a right to support for buildings may be acquired; and when so acquired it is an easement. Idem, 77

4. An easement for support of a building is acquired by grant, which may be express, implied or presumed. And when acquired, it gives the same right of support in respect of the buildings that there was ex jure naturæ in respect of land. Idem, 77

5. The grant of such an easement will be presumed from twenty years enjoyment; and will be implied, in the absence of express stipulations, in every case where the owner of adjoining houses, or of houses and lands, severs the property by sale. Rights of support in such cases are mutually granted and reserved between the original owner and first grantee, and the second grantee succeeds to the owner's reserved rights. Idem, 77

6 M owns two adjoining lots in R. He conveys one, with a house on it, to R, and reserves in the deed the right to join the two end walls of the house free of costs. M retained the right, which passed with the land to those who derive title under him, to join his building to that conveyed to R by an independent wall along side of it, or to make it a part of his building by joining only the end walls; and the privilege of joining R's building in the mode indicated in the reservation, did not extinguish or impair his implied reservation of support. Idem, 77

7. If S, holding title to the second lot, had a building upon it which was supported by the land and building conveyed to R for twenty years or more, with the knowledge of the owner thereof, prior to a fire which destroyed both buildings, a grant of the easement of support will be presumed; and said easement was not lost or extinguished 1045 by the destruction of S's building, but adhered to the building S erected on its ruins; and any right of support which S derived from the reservation in the deed to R, express or implied, was not extinguished by the destruction of the old building, but survived and adhered to the new one. Idem, 77

8. The mere fact of contiguity of buildings imposes an obligation upon the owners to use due care and skill in removing the one building not to damage the other, even though no right to support has been acquired. Idem, 77

9. But if in such a case S is entitled to the support of her building by the foundation wall and land of W, claiming under R, W cannot withdraw the support without being liable in damages for the injury which occurs to S thereby. Idem, 77

10. In such a case S is not bound to protect her building by providing other supports, in place of the supports which W was removing, though she may have had notice that W was removing the supports. Idem, 77

11. If the house of S was badly constructed, and its foundation and materials were so defective that the fall could not have been arrested by timely precautions when W was excavating upon his lot in order to build upon it, these facts would not constitute a bar to the action of S against W, so as to defeat it; but they would be proper to be considered by the jury upon the question of damages. Idem, 77

12. Though W contracted with an experienced and competent excavator, of good standing in his business, to make the excavations upon his lot, and gave notice thereof to S in time to enable her to adopt precautions for the protection of her adjoining building, W is still liable for any damage that may have resulted to S's building in consequence of negligence or unskillfulness in the making of said excavation by reason of leaving insufficient support to S's premises. Idem, 77

13. See Equitable Jurisdiction & Relief, No. 4, and

Berkeley v. Smith & als., 892

ELECTIONS.

1. The county or corporation courts have authority to remove a judge of elections for malfeasance in office, or gross neglect of duty, though he has not been convicted by the verdict of a jury of any offence.

McDougal v. Guigon, judge, 133

EQUITABLE JURISDICTION AND RELIEF.

1. When legatees may have a decree against the sureties of a deceased executor, before proceeding against his heirs. See Executors & Administrators, No. 1, and

Lacy v. Stamper & als., 42

2. QUÆRE: If a creditor, whose debt is not yet due, may bring a suit in equity to attach the property of an absent debtor, or to set aside a deed as fraudulent.

Devries & Co. v. Johnston & Wolfe & al., 805

3. In paying his ward's expenses for board and tuition, the guardian expended the principal of her personal estate. If a court of equity would have authorized the expenditure, if application had been made to the court for authority to do it before it was done, a court of equity may approve and confirm it after it is done.

Barton v. Bowen & wife, 846

4. J by his will in 1845 gives to his son S a storehouse and lot, together with the east side or half of the privy situate on the adjoining lot west; and by a codicil he gives to his son W the said adjoining lot; and in 1848 W sold his lot to B to subject to the rights of the owner of the lot given to S, to the east side or half of the privy. The storehouse of S extended back 70 feet to his back line; that of W extended only about 55 feet, leaving a vacant space, on which the privy was located; and there was a door in the side of S's house entering into this vacant space with lights in the door. B being the tenant of S, and on his death, of his children, shut up the said door, extended his storehouse to his back line, one story high, with a flat roof, and built a privy upon the roof. HELD:

1. The title of the children of S to the door in the wall of their store and to the east half of the privy being unquestionable, they may without proceeding at law to establish their right, go at once into equity to compel the removal of the obstructions.

Berkeley v. Smith & als., 892

2. If a just compensation may be made to the plaintiffs for the injury done to their property and rights, the court may ascertain and decree such compensation, instead of having the obstruction removed. Idem, 892

5. When a court of equity may appoint a receiver to take possession of an infant's estate, from the hands of the guardian, and may make a decree against the guardian for money of his ward in his hands without an account. See Guardian & Ward, No. 2, 3, and Sage & al. v. Hammonds, 651

6. A creditor by judgment of a bankrupt, who proves his debt in the bankruptcy proceedings, and takes an active part in these proceedings, cannot afterwards go into a state court to subject property sold by the assignee of the bankrupt, and the proceeds distributed in that proceeding, to satisfy his judgment, on any ground of error which might have been corrected in the bankrupt court, or by appeal from the order or decree of that court.

Spilman v. Johnson, 33

7. A creditor of a bankrupt having a lien on his real estate, has two courses open to him, either of which he may adopt. He may decline to appear in the bankrupt court; and he will be unaffected by any proceeding of that court; unless, indeed, the proper steps are taken to sell the estate clear of all incumbrances; or he may elect to proceed in the bankrupt court, prove his debt there, and rely upon his security. Idem, 33

8. If the creditor elects to proceed in the bankrupt court, this is a waiver of his right to institute any suit or proceeding in law or in equity, which is in any way inconsistent with his election to obtain satisfaction of his debt under the bankruptcy proceedings.

ESCHEATS.

1. H, of foreign birth, died in 1867, seized and possessed of real estate in R, intestate and without any known heirs. The real estate of which he died seized vested in possession in the state without office found, or other proceeding at law.

Sands v. Lynham, escheator, 291

2. After the death of H, G sued his curator, S, for a large debt, alleged to be due from H, and there was a judgment by default. G then sued S, the curator, in equity, to subject the real estate of which H died seized, for the payment of the judgment. There was a decree for a sale and a sale in pursuance of the decree, when J became the purchaser of a part of the property. HELD:

1. The state not having been a party to the suit, the decree and sale are a nullity as to her, and gave J no title to the property. Idem, 291

2. If J was a bona fide purchaser, he is entitled to be substituted to the rights of the creditor G; and upon showing that the claim of G is just, to have the real estate subjected to its payment. Idem, 291

3. After the death of H, an inquisition of escheat was executed in 1868; and the jury, after finding the death of H without known heirs, seized of the real estate, stated that certain parties were in possession claiming under said sale. The escheator returned the inquisition in June 1869, when the property was advertised as escheated. J then filed his petition in the proper court, stating he held the property under his purchase, and asking for an injunction. The escheator and register were made parties; but before the escheator answered, the court made a decree perpetuating the injunction. The escheator then filed a bill to review the decree. HELD:

1. It was error to make a decree passing upon the rights of the purchaser of the property and perpetuating the injunction, without the answer of the escheator.

2. As the title of the state does not depend upon the inquisition, it cannot be affected by any irregularities in the proceedings of the escheator. Idem, 291

3. The decree of the court was a decree by default; and the bill of review by the escheator may be treated as a petition for a rehearing of the decree. Idem, 291

4. But it was a proper case for a bill of review. Idem, 291

ESTATES.

1. H, of foreign birth, died in 1867, seized and possessed of real estate in R, intestate and without any known heirs. The real estate of which he died seized vested in possession in the state without office found or other proceeding at law.

Sands v. Lynham, escheator, 291

1047 *2. The real estate of which H died seized is liable for his debts, and a purchaser under a decree not binding the state, is entitled to be substituted to the rights of the creditor, upon his showing that the debt for which the real estate was sold was a valid debt against H. Idem, 291

3. See Escheats, No. 3, and

Idem, 291

ESTOPPELS.

1. When sureties in a bond are estopped from contesting their liability under it. See Injunctions, No. 4 and 5, and

Harman v. Howe, 676

See Bonds, No. 8, and

Supervisors of Washington Co. v. Dunn & als., 608

EVIDENCE.

1. In controversies touching testamentary capacity, as a general rule the evidence of witnesses, unless founded on fact, except in the case of experts, is entitled to but little weight.

Young, by &c. v. Barner & als., 96

2. The evidence of the attesting witnesses is an exception to this rule. But if an attesting witness to a will attempts to impeach its validity, though his evidence will not be positively rejected, it is to be received with the most scrupulous jealousy. Idem, 96

3. A witness as to the handwriting of C, states that some thirteen years previous, C dug a well for him, and drew several orders on him for money, which he paid, and which C recognized afterwards. He never saw C write, but from his recollection of these orders, he believes the paper to be in the handwriting of C. This is competent testimony.

Cody v. Conly & als., 313

4. In a creditor's suit against a bank, a receiver has been appointed, and there has been a decree for an account. In an action by the receiver against a debtor of the bank, the record of the chancery cause is evidence for the plaintiff.

Finney & als. v. Bennett, 365

5. Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a deed, perfect on its face, was delivered to the grantee on a condition.

Miller v. Fletcher & als., 403

6. In an action for injuries involving the loss of an arm, plaintiff may introduce evidence to show what must be the effect of his injuries in disqualifying him from pursuits requiring two hands.

Norfolk & Pet. R. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 455

7. In a suit by legatees against the executor, for an account of his administration, there are several reports by a commissioner, and at length a decree against the executor for a large amount. In a suit by these legatees against the executor and his grantees in a deed executed after his qualification, to set aside the deed on the ground of fraud, the decree against the executor and the report on which it is founded are prima facie evidence against said grantees of the indebtedness of the executor; but are liable to be surcharged and falsified.

Johnston & als. v. Gill & als., 587

8. On a motion against a sheriff and his sureties for the county levies he had failed to account for, the report of the clerk, who had been directed by an order of the county court to settle the sheriff's account, though made with the sheriff without notice to the sureties, is competent evidence against them to show the amount for which the sheriff is indebted. If they had notice, as the statute provides, the report would be conclusive upon them; without notice it is prima facie evidence of the amount of the sheriff's indebtedness.

Board of Supervisors of Washington Co. v. Dunn & als., 608

9. There is a lease under seal to W of certain property for five years, in which he contracts to make repairs upon it. At a subsequent period the lessor and W agree in writing what repairs W shall make upon the property; but in neither of these papers is anything said as to the time when the repairs shall be made. W, by verbal contract, sells his lease to C. In a contest between W and C, parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that W contracted verbally to make the repairs at a time before the end of his lease.

Colhoun & Cowan v. Wilson, 639

10. When the report of a commissioner settling an executor's account is not evidence against devisees. See Marshaling Assets, No. 5, and

Pugh & al. v. Russell & als., 789

11. On an indictment for forging an order, the difference between "account" as set out in the indictment, and "act" as written 1048 in the order, is not a material *variance which will exclude the order as evidence. Burress' case, 934

12. In such a case, a genuine order by the same drawers upon the same party, which had been paid to the accused, as the order which the accused was charged with having forged, is not competent evidence for the accused. Idem, 934

13. A person who states that he is perfectly familiar with the handwriting of the accused, and states the circumstances which made him so familiar with it, expresses the confident opinion from his knowledge of the accused's handwriting, that he was incapable of writing the order. This opinion is incompetent testimony, and properly excluded. Idem, 934

14. What admissions and confessions of a prisoner may be given in evidence against him. The rule in Smith's case, 10 Gratt. 734, and Shifflet's case, 14 Id. 652, reaffirmed.

Page's case, 954

15. W was indicted for stealing $150, the money of S. On the trial it was proved that J, a detective, arrested W, who made a confession, which was made under a promise, and was excluded. In this confession he directed J to go to certain gamblers and get the money back from them. J sent for the gamblers named, told them what W had said, and they paid over to J for S $104; though one of them protested that W had not been at his house, and the others denied that he had lost the money claimed with them; the balance of the money, $46, was paid over by the father of W. HELD: It not being proved that the money paid to J was the same lost by S, the statement of W to J, and of what passed between J and the gamblers and the father of W, is not competent evidence.

Williams' case, 997

EXCEPTIONS—BILL OF.

1. In an action at law which is submitted to the judgment of the court without a jury, the court renders a judgment, to which one party excepts; and it being near the end of the term, the court gives the counsel time until the first day of the next term to prepare the bill of exceptions; but the judgment is entered. The court cannot give such leave, and the bill of exception cannot be made a part of the record.

Winston v. Giles, 530

2. Even if the court had authority to give the time until a day certain in the next term to prepare the bill of exception, if the bill of exception is not tendered to the court on that day it cannot afterwards be received.

Idem, 530

3. In cases where it may be important to give time until the next term to prepare the bill of exception, the case should be kept open, and the judgment should not be entered until the next term. Idem, 530

EXECUTIONS.

1. An execution went into the hands of J, when he was deputy sheriff of F. He became sheriff, and afterwards he received a sum of money in part payment of the execution from the debtor, but he did not return the execution. Neither J nor the debtor can say positively whether the execution was or was not levied, or whether J received the money as deputy or as sheriff. After the great lapse of time, the court will presume that the execution was levied by J before the return day, and that he received the money as deputy, so as to entitle the debtor to a credit for the amount paid.

Paine, surv. &c. v. Tutwiler & als., 440

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. S, of New Kent county, died in 1856, and H qualified as his executor and received as a part of his estate bonds executed without security to S, the obligors being then solvent. H did not collect the money due on these bonds; and on his death in 1862, they were turned over by his administrator to C, who had qualified as administrator de bonis non of S, the obligors still being solvent. C sued on the bonds, but owing to the state of things in the county during the war judgments could not be recovered upon them, and by the results of the war the obligors became insolvent. HELD:

1. Where there are several successive administrations on the same estate, and debts due the estate might have been collected by each of the personal representatives of said estate, by the use of due diligence, but was collected by none of them, and was lost by the negligence

1049 of each and all of them; whilst *all of them are liable for said debts, their liability is in the inverse order of their qualifications as such personal representatives. Lacy v. Stamper & als., 42

Crump v. Stamper & als., 42

2. H might have collected these debts, and his estate and his sureties are responsible for the loss of them. Idem, 42

3. C having used due diligence to collect them after they came into his hands, and having failed to collect them owing to the condition of the county, is not responsible for them. Idem, 42

4. Though where an estate is to be invested to await a distribution at a distant day, a bond executed to the testator well secured on real estate, or even secured by undoubted personal security, may be continued as an investment by the personal representative, this cannot be done with a bond without security either real or personal; especially where there is a large amount of interest due upon it at the death of the testator. Idem, 42

5. Under the circumstances of this case the legatees of S were not bound to proceed against the heirs of H before they could have a decree against his sureties; and one decree against the administrator of H and his sureties that they should pay the amount found due from H to S's estate, into bank to the credit of the cause is not erroneous. Idem, 42

6. Under the circumstances interest disallowed from the 17th of April 1861 to April 10th, 1865. Idem, 42

7. An administrator who qualified as such in New Kent county in 1862, not held liable for failing to sue in that county during the war, in cases in which he knew there would be defences; there having been but one court held in the county during the war, and the enemy either encamping or passing through it constantly.

Idem, 42

2. Testator dies in 1859, and directs all his estate to be sold as soon as convenient. The executor has the personal property appraised on the 21st of November, and sells it the next day. Four slaves, appraised at $3,700, are sold for $4,955, and bought by one of the legatees living in Missouri. The legatee was not present, but the executor on his request bought them for him. The purchaser executed his bond for the price, but without security; and the executor retained possession of the slaves until they were freed by the results of the war. The executor and his securities must account for the slaves at the price for which they were sold.

Boaz's adm'r v. Hamner & als., 382

3. It is always the duty of a personal representative to demand and take good security of every purchaser on credit of property of the decedent, wherever the purchaser may reside, and whatever may be his pecuniary circumstances.

Idem, 382

4. R dies in 1860, and by his will directs his executor to sell his land in three parcels at public auction, upon such terms as he deems best for the interest of testator's legatees. These legatees are infants. In November 1860 the executor sells the lands on a credit of six and twelve months, taking bonds from the purchasers, and retaining the title. The executor being in the army during the war, the purchasers paid the purchase money to his agent during the years 1863 and 1864, in confederate currency. Held: The executor was guilty of a devastavit in receiving the purchase money in the then depreciated currency; and the purchasers were parties to the devastavit; and they will be required to take the lands at their value at the time of the decree, or the lands will be again sold.

Reynolds v. Zink, 29

EXECUTORY DEVISES.

See Limitation of Estates, No. 1, and

FORFEITURES.

1. By statute the charter of a railroad company is extended to enable it to complete its road; and it is authorized to issue its bonds for $1,200,000, and sell them, and secure them by deed of trust upon all the property and franchises of the company. And the 1050 act provides that unless the road is completed to a certain point by a certain day, the company shall forfeit to the state their corporate franchises and rights, together with their road track and road bed, and all works and materials thereon, or other property; the state to hold the same as trustee for certain parties named. The company accepted the charter, issued $480,000 of bonds, and executed a deed of trust upon its property and franchises to secure them. The company failed to complete the road to the point fixed by the time prescribed, or to expend any money on its construction; and the state proceeded to declare the charter forfeited, and to take possession of the road and the other property and franchises of the company, and to turn it all over to the cestui que trust; who organized another company. Persons, one of whom was the president of the company and all were principals in the company when the said act was passed, or were connected with them, claimed that they were the holders of $323,500 of the bonds issued, and filed their bill to enforce the deed of trust. Held:

1. Under the provision for the forfeiture of the charter, the state took the property and franchises of the company free from the trust.

Silliman & als. v. Fred., Or. & Char. R. R. Co., 119

2. Upon the failure of the company to complete the road to the point fixed by the day prescribed, the forfeiture became absolute and complete; and the state having entered and elected to hold under the forfeiture, no inquisition or judicial proceeding or inquest or finding of any kind was required to consummate the forfeiture.

3. From the relation of these plaintiffs to the company and each other, they must be held to have had notice of the terms of the act, which authorized the execution of the deed of trust under which they claim; and as no money was expended on the road, or, as they claim, paid for interest, the strong presumption is that the company received no money for the bonds. The plaintiffs are not, therefore, innocent purchasers for value, and holders of said bonds without notice of the provisions of said act.

Idem, 119

2. What does not constitute a forfeiture of land sold to a turnpike company upon a condition that it should forever be kept open and unobstructed as a public highway, and for no other purpose. See

Alex. & Wash. R. R. Co. v. Chew & wife & als., 547

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

1. It is the duty of a guardian, whose powers as such have been revoked, to account to his wards, or to his successor as guardian, if there be one, for their estate, including evidence or claim which may have come to his hands; and if after such revocation he collects any money on account of any such claim, he and his surety as guardian are accountable therefor to the parties entitled thereto; at least provided such payment be made in good faith by a person who is not informed of such revocation, and who believes when he makes it, that the party claiming to be guardian is so in fact, and has authority as such to receive the money.

Sage & al. v. Hammonds, 651

2. In a bill by infants against their guardian for an account and payment, it being shown in the cause that the guardian is wholly unfit for the office, the court may appoint a receiver to collect and receive the property of the wards, and require the guardian to pay over to him the money of his wards in his hands, and to transfer and deliver to him the property of the infants. Idem, 651

3. Where the property of the infants consists of a single claim, and the amount received upon it by the guardian is ascertained, and there is no doubt as to the amount due from the guardian to the wards, the court may decree against him for the amount, though no account has been taken.

4. The mother of G in her will expressed an earnest wish that her daughter G might be educated so as to fit her for teaching; and this was the wish of G's family. Accordingly B, the guardian of G, kept her at school during the years 1860, 1861, 1862 and 1863, and paid the expenses of her board and tuition by moneys collected upon ante-bellum debts, a part of it his own, and a part of her estate. In settling the guardian's account, his payments are not to be scaled as of the dates of the payments; but he will be allowed what would have been a just charge in good money for the board and tuition. In this case 1051 he was allowed what he paid for the years 1860 and 1861, and $350 a year for the years 1862, 1863.

Barton v. Bowen & wife, 849

5. In paying the ward's expenses for board and tuition, the guardian expended the principal of the ward's personal estate. As a court of equity would have authorized the expenditure if application had been made to the court for authority to do it before it was done, a court of equity will approve and confirm it after it is done. Idem, 849

HOMESTEADS.

1. A householder dying, leaving a widow, without having had a homestead assigned to him in his lifetime, his widow remaining unmarried, is entitled to claim the same and have it assigned to her.

Hatorff v. Welford, judge, 356

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

1. What is not such a reduction of the wife's estate into possession by the husband as will entitle his creditors to subject it to the payment of his debts, to the exclusion of the wife's right to a settlement out of it.

White by & c., v. Gouldin's ex'ors & als., 491

2. The husband is insolvent, and has a wife and seven children. She is entitled to have the whole of her estate not reduced into possession by the husband, or a part of it, as may be deemed reasonable, settled to her separate use. Idem, 491

3. Husband and wife agree, in consideration that the husband convey a house and lot to a trustee for her and her children, she will unite in the conveyance of his other real estate when he shall sell it: and this she does. Held:

1. To the extent of her dower interest in the husband's real estate, the husband's conveyance to the trustee is on valuable consideration, and to that extent the wife is entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds of the sale of the house and lot, as against the creditors of the husband for debts contracted at the time of the deed.

Johnston & als. v. Gill & als., 587

2. For debts contracted before the execution of the deed, the proceeds of the sale of the house and lot, above the value of the wife's dower interest in the husband's real estate in the conveyance of which she joined, are liable; but not to debts contracted after the conveyance by the husband to the trustee. Code of 1860, ch. 118, § 2. Idem, 587

3. The agreement between the husband and wife may be proved by parol evidence. Idem, 587

4. E is possessed of an estate in fee in land, and marries P, and they have two children born of the marriage. Upon a bill by P, the marriage is dissolved for the adultery and desertion of E; but the decree directs nothing as to the property of the parties. Upon the dissolution of the marriage, all the husband's claims to the wife's land, which depended on the marriage, were extinguished, and she is entitled to the possession of her land. Porter v. Porter, 599

5. See Trusts & Trustees, No. 5, and Thurmond v. Wood's ex'ors, 727

INFANTS.

1. When the deed of infant, married woman, may be set aside by her; and whether she is liable to refund so much as consumed by her. See Trusts & Trustees, No. 11, and

Bedinger v. Wharton & als., 857

2. Whether a contract is executed or executory, it cannot be avoided by an infant on the ground of his infancy, after attaining lawful age, without restoring anything which may have been received by him in consideration of the contract, and which may remain in his hands on his arriving at such age.

Idem, 857

3. When a contract is executory merely, it can be avoided by the infant after attaining lawful age, without restoring anything which may have been received by him in consideration of the contract, and which may have been consumed by him during infancy, or may not remain in his hands on his arrival at lawful age. Idem, 857

4. QUÆRE: If this last stated principle applies to the case of an executed contract.

Idem, 857

5. See Guardian & Ward, passim, and
Gage & al. v. Hammonds, 651
Barton v. Bowen & wife, 849

INJUNCTIONS.

1. T files a bill to enjoin V from cutting timber on a piece of land which T 1052 *claims to be his, and of which he claims to be in possession, and which was adjudged to be his by the award of an arbitrator to whom the question of title was submitted by T and V. V answers denying T's title and possession, and insisting that the award was invalid, because the arbitrator was induced by T to receive evidence and decide the case in V's absence: and this is sustained by the arbitrator. HELD:

1. The award is invalid; and T showing no other evidence of title, the injunction must be dissolved. Tate v. Vance, 571

2. V not claiming any relief in the case but a dissolution of the injunction and a dismissal of the bill, may rely upon the invalidity of the award in his answer; and it is unnecessary to file a cross bill for the purpose of avoiding it. Idem, 571

2. A bond is given upon an injunction to a judgment for money, and in the penalty it is said "in the just and full sum of seven hundred and seventy-six lawful money of Virginia." The word "dollars" is obviously left out by mistake, and the bond will be treated as if the word was in it.

3. The clerk states at the foot of an injunction bond, that it was signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of the court, and it is dated and endorsed as filed on the 23rd October, on which day it appears from the records of the court, that it was not then in session. HELD:

1. The statute does not require the bond to be executed in the presence of the court, but before the clerk of the court in which the judgment was. Code, p. 1128, s. 20. Though its being given before the court, if it was, cannot vitiate it.

2. Even if it was not in fact taken before the court, though certified by the clerk at the foot of it so to have been, the bond would not thereby be vitiated, if in fact given before the clerk, as it was.

Idem, 676

3. That the court did not sit on the day of the date of the bond, does not show that it was not executed in the presence of the court; especially when the clerk has certified that it was so executed. It may have been misdated, or executed on a day different from that on which it bears date.

Idem, 676

4. The judge granting an injunction to a judgment for money, endorses on the bill: "Injunction granted on the usual terms," without stating on what terms it was to become operative. The injunction bond is given in a penalty about double the amount of the judgment, and is in other respects as directed by the statute. HELD:

1. The penalty being about double the amount of the judgment, and that being the amount of the penalty generally prescribed in such cases, this would seem to be a compliance with the order, and the order a compliance with the law, which directs that the judge shall prescribe the amount of the penalty. Idem, 676

2. But however that may be, the obligors in the bond are estopped from denying that the penalty of the bond conformed to the direction of the judge who awarded the injunction. Idem, 676

3. In this case it appears that the bond was executed in the presence of the court, which thereby received and sanctioned the bond, including the penalty. And this had at least as much effect in fixing the penalty of the bond as if the amount had been prescribed in the order awarding the injunction. Idem, 676

5. An injunction bond is executed by the obligors before the clerk of the court, and in the presence of the court; and it having been accepted and acted on as their bond, the surety is estopped from setting up the defence, that by express agreement with his principal he signed said bond upon the express condition that another person named should sign it, and that this fact was announced to the clerk at the time the said surety signed it; but the obligee knew nothing of such agreement. Idem, 676

INSURANCE COMPANIES.

1. Insurance companies doing business in this state, how far to be considered as domiciled here. See Removal of Causes, No. 1, and

Continental Ins. Co. v. Kasey, 216
 1053 *INTEREST.

1. Under the circumstances interest disallowed from the 17th of April 1861 to the 10th of April 1865.

Lacy v. Stamper & als., 42

2. A creditor living within the union lines and the debtor within the confederate lines, the debt is not to bear interest during the war.

Walker v. Beauchler, 511

3. A person residing in Virginia contracted debts here, and on the breaking out of the late war he went north, and there remained until his death in 1865. His creditors who remained in Virginia, are not entitled to interest upon their debts during the war.

Fred & al. v. Dixon & als., 541

4. In such a case, the fact that the debtor had conveyed land in Virginia in trust, 1st, to pay all his debts, and 2d, to the separate use of his wife, does not entitle his creditors to interest on their debts during the war.

Idem, 541

5. When and how interest is to be charged upon advancements. See Advancements, No. 1, and

Cabells v. Puryear & als., 902

JOINT TENANTS.

1. B and C are joint tenants of a furnace, forge, and a large quantity of land derived from their father, and B, who had conducted the business for some years in the lifetime of his father, continues to carry it on with the assent of his sister C, without any contract with C. He must account to C for her share of the profits.

Newman v. Newman, 714

2. Though there were efforts between B and C to agree upon a rent which should be paid by B to C for her half of the property, and B seems to have thought that his proposition was acquiesced in, and did not keep such accounts as he should have kept to enable him to render the account of profits to her, yet C is entitled to have an account taken, and to have her share of the profits.

Idem, 714

3. B having been allowed all his expenses in carrying on the business, including $1,500 a year for his services, and interest on his capital employed in it until it became self-sustaining, and then being allowed by the decree three-fifths of the net profits, he at least cannot complain of the decree.

JUDGMENTS.

1. B brings an action of debt against F and M as late partners and makers of a negotiable note, and C and G as endorsers. The case stands on the office judgment docket at the next term of the court, when F files his plea of nil debet, which is sworn to; and on the motion of B, by his counsel, the cause is discontinued as to F. The other parties not appearing, there is a judgment by default against them. HELD:

1. The judgment is a valid judgment against M, C and G. See Code of 1860, ch. 177, § 19.

Muse & als. v. Farmers Bank of Va., 252

2. The discontinuance is not a retraxit. A retraxit can only be entered by the plaintiff in person, and in open court.

Idem, 252

2. A summons in debt is served on a defendant on the 3d of February, and the judgment by default becomes final on the 3d of March. Under the statute the day of the service of the process may be counted, and therefore thirty days had elapsed between the service of the process and the judgment, and it is a valid judgment.

Turnbull, for &c. v. Thompson & als., 306

3. In debt against four obligors, one of whom is the high sheriff, the process goes into the hands of his deputy, who serves it upon him as well as the other three, to which he makes no objection; and there is a judgment by default against all of them. The process is properly served, and the judgment is valid.

Idem, 306

4. There is a judgment in debt by default against four defendants in March 1862. In August 1872 one of the defendants moves the court to set it aside, on the ground that at the time of the judgment he was in the military service of the country. It appears, however, that at the time of the service of the process, and at the time the judgment became final, he was at home on furlough. The exemption of the defendant was a personal privilege, of which the court could not ex officio take notice; and the objection should have been taken during the pendency of the proceedings.

Idem, 306

5. A judgment of a court of record cannot be impeached in another action, 1054 *except for want of jurisdiction in the court, or fraud in the parties or actors in it.

Lancaster v. Wilson, 624

6. See Marshaling Assets, No. 1, 3, 4, 6, and

Pugh & al. v. Russell & als., 789

7. See Judicial Sales, No. 13, and

Omohundro's ex'or v. Omohundro & als., 824

8. What a final judgment in a controversy concerning the establishment of a road. See Roads, No. 1, and

Jeter v. Board & als., 910

JUDICIAL SALES.

1. In a bill by creditors to set aside a deed as fraudulent, which is done, there was a decree for the sale of the land and a sale before an account of the debts was taken. The sale of the land will not be set aside upon the objection of some of the creditors who came in after the decree, made years after the sale, when it is obvious that the land would not sell for as much as it had sold for before, and which was more than some of these creditors had expressed their willingness to take for it.

Wallace's adm'r & als. v. Treagle & als., 479

2. Whether the court will confirm a sale made by commissioners under its decree, must, in a great measure, depend upon the circumstances of each case. It is difficult to lay down any rule applicable to all cases; nor is it possible to specify all the grounds which will justify the court in withholding its approval.

Brock v. Rice & als., 812

3. In such a case, if there is reason to believe that fraud or mistake has been committed to the detriment of the owner or purchaser, or that the officer conducting the sale has been guilty of any wrong or breach of duty to the injury of the parties interested, the court will withhold a confirmation of the sale.

Idem, 812

4. In such a case either party may object to the report of the commissioner, and the purchaser himself, who becomes a party to the sale, may appear before the court and have any mistake corrected.

Idem, 812

5. The court in acting upon a report of sale, does not exercise an arbitrary discretion, but a sound legal discretion in the interests of fairness and prudence, and with a just regard to the rights of all concerned.

Idem, 812

6. An auctioneer or crier making a sale, cannot properly act for himself or any other person in bidding for the property.

Idem, 812

7. A case in which the court refused to enforce a sale against a purchaser, on account of the misconduct of the life tenant and auctioneer, though the conduct of the commissioners was unexceptionable. Idem, 812

8. The sale being set aside as to the life tenant must be set aside in toto, though some of the remaindermen are infants.

9. R, a commissioner selling lands in 1860, under a decree, is guilty of a breach of trust in receiving confederate currency from the purchaser in payment of his bonds in 1863.

Omohundro's ex'or v. Omohundro & als., 824

10. Such a commissioner, who is directed to file the bonds with his report, has no authority to collect them. Idem, 824

11. A commissioner who, in April 1860, is appointed to sell lands, is guilty of a breach of trust in selling them in 1863 for confederate currency. Idem, 824

12. S, a brother of the commissioner, who is one of the parties entitled to the land and its proceeds, induces R to collect the purchase money of the land sold, and to sell the balance, both to be received in confederate currency, and to lend it to him. S is a party to the breach of trust by R, the commissioner, and is responsible for it. Idem, 824

13. Upon a writing under seal given by S for the return of the money, R, in 1866, brings an action against the executor of S, and recovers a judgment, which, upon appeal, is reversed, and it is held that the debt should be scaled, and the cause is sent back for a new trial. On a bill by the other parties interested in the land sold. Held:

1. If the judgment of the court of appeals was final, these plaintiffs, not having been parties to the cause, would not be concluded by it. Idem, 824

2. The cause having been sent back, the judgment was not final. Idem, 824

1055 *3. Though upon the face of the paper the court might correctly hold that the contract was a confederate contract, and should be scaled, the facts connected with the transaction may, and do show, that it should not be so treated: and these facts may be received in evidence, and the bond construed by the light of them.

Idem, 824

JURISDICTION OF COURTS.

See County Courts, passim.

JURORS.

1. Under the act, Code of 1873, ch. 202, s. 10, the court may direct jurors to be summoned from another county or corporation for the trial of a prisoner upon the issue of autrefois acquit, as well as on the general issue. Page's case, 954

2. As to the competency of jurors, see Criminal Jurisdiction and Proceedings, No. 12, and Idem, 954

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. N leased of D a house for one year commencing January 1st and ending December 31st, 1871. In March M, without the assent of D, took N's lease, and purchased his furniture on the leased premises, and having borrowed the money to pay for it from C, conveyed it in trust to secure his debt to C. M paid the rent to D, and at the end of the year held over; and in March 1872 he, without D's assent, turned over the house and furniture to P, who paid the rent to D until July or August. In the latter part of the year P failed to pay the rent; whereupon D sued out a warrant of distress, which was levied upon the property conveyed to secure C. Held: The holding over by M in 1872, was under a new lease; and the lien in favor of C having been upon it when the lease commenced, C's lien is valid against D's lien for the rent of 1872. See Code of 1860, ch. 138, ss. 11 and 12.

City of Richmond, for &c. v. Duesberry & als., 210

2. In November 1868 the W. S. Springs Co. by deed signed by both parties, lease to W their springs property for five years, beginning the 1st of January 1869; and W is to make repairs upon the property. On the 22nd of April 1873, the parties agree in writing what repairs W is to make. On the same day W enters into a contract with C to lease C one moiety of the property, furniture, &c. In June by a verbal contract made between W and C, C acquired the whole of W's lease, and purchased the furniture on the premises for $13,000. In none of these written contracts was anything said as to when W should make the repairs. In October 1873, C executed his note to W for $5,379.75, part of the $13,000 he was to pay for the lease and furniture. W sues C on this note, and C files a special plea of failure of consideration, on the ground that W had contracted verbally with C to make the repairs in time for the springs season of 1873, and had failed to do it; whereby C was injured to the amount of $3,000. Held:

1. No time having been specified in the contracts between the springs company and W, as to when the repairs should be made, W has to the end of his lease to make them.

Colhoun & Cowan v. Wilson, 639

2. Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove a contract of W to make the repairs in time for the springs season of 1873; and this applies to such evidence intended as foundation for proof of a parol contract.

Idem, 639

3. The fact that the note sued on was executed in October 1873, when the springs season was nearly over, is a strong circumstance, if not conclusive, to prove that the claims which grew out of the transactions in June were then waived or settled between the parties, and cannot be asserted by way of defense to an action on the note.

Idem, 639

4. As W had by his written contract with the springs company until the end of his term to make the repairs, a verbal agreement to make them at an earlier period is inconsistent with his written contract, and therefore does not come within the exception to the general rule: That parol evidence may be introduced when it establishes an agreement additional to, but consistent with, the written agreement.

Idem, 639

5. The fact that the time allowed to W to make the repairs is fixed by the law governing his contract, does not affect the general rule as to the admissibility
1056 *of parol evidence to vary or contradict the written contract. Idem, 639

LEGACIES AND LEGATEES.

1. I by her will gives to her niece B, for her life, the interest of a debt of £500. She then says: After the death of B, I gave the said sum of money to L, in trust for C, daughter of E; and I request that it be invested in bank stock, and applied by L for the benefit of C, as he shall think proper. Item: In case the said C shall die under the age of twenty one years or marries, I direct that the stock before given to L for her benefit, be vested in E her mother and M my great nieces, to be advanced to them in equal portions, as said L may think proper, free from the control of their husbands. At the death of B, C was married, and E and M were dead, leaving children. Held: The bequest to C is not on a condition in restraint of marriage, but is a conditional limitation; and the bequest over to E and M on the marriage of C is valid.

Selden & wife v. Keen & als., 576

2. A testator having in terms provided for an equal division of his personal estate among his three children, held, upon a consideration of the whole will, that he did not intend that certain land he gives to one of his children should be charged to him in the division of the personal estate.

Erwin & wife v. Nichols & al., 281

3. Testator directs that three of his nieces, whom he names, shall have a comfortable and genteel support out of his estate until they marry. By a codicil of same date he says: I think the sum of $300 each, provided my estate will afford it, ought to secure the end designed. Held: The testator has designated what he deems a proper provision, and it will be fixed at that.

Routh & al. v. Nash's adm'r & als., 842

LIMITATION OF ESTATES.

1. Testator, by his will made in January 1807, lends to his daughter Sallie, who is one of eleven, one female slave named Phoebe, to be possessed by her during her natural life or widowhood of her present or future husband, and at her death and the death or after marriage of her husband, then to be equally divided among her children; and if she has none, then to be equally divided among all testator's children. Testator died in 1810, Sallie being then about fourteen years old. She lived until 1857 unmarried and without children, the descendants of Phoebe then numbering twenty-five. Held:

1. The executory devise over to testator's children is too remote, and void.

Stone's ex'or v. Nicholson & als., 1

2. If the executory devise is not void, then it includes all the testator's children alive at his death, and Sallie as one of them. Idem, 1

3. An executory devise over to testator's children will always be held to refer to children living at his death, unless there is a clear indication in the will that some other period is intended. Idem, 1

2. A bequest in trust for C, and in case C shall die under the age of twenty-one years, or marries, then in trust for E and M. The bequest to C is not a condition in restraint of marriage; but is a conditional limitation; and the bequest over to E and M on the marriage of C is valid.

Selden & wife v. Keen & als., 576

LIMITATIONS—STATUTES OF.

1. In an action of assumpsit on the plea of the statute of limitations, the time from the 2d of March 1866 to the 1st of January 1869, is to be left out of the computation.

Danville Bank v. Waddill, 448

2. The § 7, of the act of March 2d, 1866, known as the stay law, suspended the statute of limitations as to suits to set aside fraudulent conveyances.

Johnston & als. v. Gill & als., 587

3. A deed is made in January 1859, and a bill is filed in January 1871 by creditors of the grantor to set aside the deed, on the ground that it was fraudulent as to them. The several acts of the de facto government of Virginia, passed during the war, suspending the statutes of limitation, were valid to prevent the running of these statutes; and therefore the suit by the creditors was not barred by the statute on the 3d of March 1866, when the 7th section of the stay law of March 2d, 1866, was passed. Idem, 587

1057 *4. See Marshaling Assets, No. 6, and Pugh & al. v. Russell & als., 789

5. The § 7 of the act of March 2d, 1866, known as the stay law, and the acts amendatory thereof, do not apply to appeals, writs of error or supersedeas, and therefore an appeal from a final decree made on the 1st of November 1867 cannot be allowed on the 12th of June 1871.

MARSHALING ASSETS.

1. Previous to the act in the Code of 1849, a judgment against a deceased person had priority over debts by simple contract, and was to be paid out of the personal assets, if these were sufficient for the purpose; and having been paid out of the personal assets this did not give simple contract creditors a right to have the assets marshaled, and to have their debts paid pro tanto out of the real estate.

Pugh & al. v. Russell & als., 789

2. The payment of taxes due to the state out of the personal assets does not give a simple contract creditor a right to have the assets marshaled. Idem, 789

3. Though simple contract creditors might before the act of 1850 be substituted to the rights of a creditor by bond binding the heirs, the doctrine of marshaling assets does not apply to a judgment. Idem, 789

4. Before the act in the Code of 1849, if a judgment against an executor or administrator upon the bond of the deceased binding the heirs, was paid out of the personal estate, simple contract creditors may be substituted to the right of such creditor against the heirs. Idem, 789

5. A commissioner settling an administration account before a court of probate, states in his report that two of the credits allowed the executor were for payments of judgments, which were liens on the real estate. This is not evidence against the devisees to prove that the judgments were recovered against the executor upon a bond of the testator binding the heirs, and to entitle a simple contract creditor to marshal the assets. Idem, 789

6. A judgment is recovered against an executor by a simple contract creditor of his testator; and the creditor then files a bill against the devisees to marshal the assets, and subject the land of the testator in the hands of the devisees. It must be presumed that his action was not barred by the statute of limitations when the judgment was recovered; and he is not, therefore, barred by the statute in his proceeding against the devisees to marshal the assets. Idem, 789

MISDEMEANORS.

1. The county court authorizes W to erect a tollgate on a turnpike road in the county, and take toll thereon at a rate fixed, he being bound to keep the road in order. S & M came with their teams to the gate, which they found shut and fastened. They demanded that the gate should be opened, and the gatekeeper demanded the usual tolls before opening the gate. Thereupon S & M broke down and destroyed the gate, and passed through without paying tolls. HELD:

1. W having erected the gate under the authority of the county court, whether or not the court had authority to make the order, S & M were guilty of a misdemeanor under the statute. Code of 1873, ch. 188, § 28.

Smart & McKinsey's case, 950

2. If the tollgate was such an obstruction on the highway as could be regarded as a nuisance, S & M could only be justified in removing it peaceably, not in destroying it; and having destroyed it they were guilty of a misdemeanor. Idem, 950

MISTAKE.

1. A bond is given upon an injunction to a judgment for money, and in the penalty it is said, "in the just and full sum of seven hundred and seventy-six, lawful money of Virginia." The word "dollars" is obviously left out by mistake, and the bond will be treated as if the word was in it.

Harman v. Howe, 676

2. Words omitted in an instrument, and also in a statute or record, which can be clearly ascertained by the context, will be supplied by the court, and the instrument, record or statute, will be read and treated as if the words were in it. Idem, 676

3. For mistake of date by a clerk of a court. See Injunctions, No. 3, and

1058 *NAVIGABLE WATERS.

1. A patent for land, constituting a part of the bed of a navigable river, conveys no title.

Norfolk City v. Cooke, 430

2. The navigable waters, and the soil under them within the territorial limits of the state, are the property of the state, to be controlled by the state at its own discretion, for the benefit of the people of the state; only so as not to interfere with the authority of the government of the United States in regulating commerce and navigation.

McCready's case, 985

NEGLIGENCE.

1. Negligence as between coterminous owners of buildings. See Easements, No. 8, 9, 10, 11, and

Stevenson v. Wallace, 77

2. The terms negligence and ordinary care are correlative terms. Ordinary care depends on the circumstances of the particular case, and is such care as a person of ordinary prudence under the circumstances would have exercised.

Norfolk & Pet. R. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 455

3. A railroad company running cars through a populous street of a city, on which many children live, must omit nothing which can be done by the company and its agents to prevent injury to children on the street.

Idem, 455

4. A child, of two years and ten months old, cannot be capable of contributory negligence, so as to relieve a railroad company from liability for its own negligence.

Idem, 455

5. Negligence of a parent or guardian of an infant child injured by a railroad car cannot constitute contributory negligence on the part of the child, so as to exonerate the company. Lynch v. Nurden, 41 Eng. C. L. R. 422, approved; Hatfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. R. 615, disapproved. Idem, 455

NEW TRIALS.

1. A verdict should not be set aside on the ground of after discovered evidence, where it is only cumulative or corroborative, and which ought not to be productive on another trial of a different result.

Cody v. Conly & als., 313

2. When an appellate court will reverse a judgment and order a new trial. See Appellate Court, No. 1, 2, and

Stevenson v. Wallace, 77

Bank of Danville v. Waddill, 448

3. The rules in relation to new trials, stated in Grayson's case, 6 Gratt. 712, and Blosser v. Haishbarger, 21 Gratt. 214, approved and reaffirmed.

Pryor's case, 1009

4. A new trial will be granted.

1. Where the verdict is against law. This occurs where the issue involves both law and fact, and the verdict is against the law of the case upon the facts proved.

2. Where the verdict is contrary to the evidence. This occurs where the issue involves matter of fact only, and the facts proved required a different verdict from that found by the jury.

3. Where the verdict is without evidence to support it. This occurs where there has been no proof whatever of a material fact, or not sufficient evidence of the fact or facts in issue. Idem, 1009

5. Where some evidence has been given which tends to prove the fact in issue, or the evidence consists of circumstances or presumptions, a new trial will not be granted merely because the court, if upon the jury, would have given a different verdict. To warrant a new trial in such cases, the evidence should be plainly insufficient to warrant the finding of the jury. Idem, 1009

6. A case in which the evidence being wholly circumstantial, it was held in the appellate court to be plainly insufficient to warrant the finding of the prisoner guilty of the offence charged in the indictment.

NORFOLK CITY.

1. The city of Norfolk is the owner of the ground which she has not disposed of, covered by water, lying between Parker street and the port warden's line, both as riparian proprietor and as having had long possession thereof; and the city may maintain an action of unlawful entry and detainer against any intruder upon said water lots.

Norfolk City v. Cooke, 430

*NOTICES.

1. A notice by the supervisors of a county to D late sheriff, and his sureties, that they will move the county court at its November term, to render a judgment against them for the sum of $4,840.03, the same being the amount of said D's deficiency and default for county levies for the year 1869, that went into D's hands as sheriff as aforesaid, and which he had failed to account for &c., is sufficiently specific and definite to warrant a judgment thereon.

Board of Supervisors of Washington Co. v. Dunn & als., 608

2. The rule governing notices is, that they are presumed to be the acts of parties, and not of lawyers. They are viewed with great indulgence by the courts, and if the terms of the notice be general, the court will construe it favorably, and will apply it according to the truth of the case, as far as the notice will admit of such application. Idem, 608

3. Where a notice is directed by the notary to endorsers at B, it may be inferred that the endorsers lived at B.

Linkous for &c., v. Hale & als., 668

OFFICERS.

1. QUÆRE: Whether a person holding an office of profit, &c., under the United States government, is eligible to an office of profit, &c., under the state government.

Bunting v. Willis, judge, 144

2. The office of sheriff commences on the 1st of July. If a person holding an office of profit under the government of the United States, is elected to the office of sheriff, which is an office of profit under the state government, and holds his office under the former government until any time during the 1st of July, he thereby vacates his election as sheriff, and is not entitled to qualify as such.

Idem, 144

3. In May 1875 B, a deputy collector of customs at Fortress Monroe, was elected sheriff of E county. On the 19th of June he sent in his resignation of his office of deputy collector to his principal at Norfolk, to take effect on the 30th June. It does not appear that his resignation was accepted, or that official action was taken upon it until the 2nd of July, when he was relieved by another officer of customs from Norfolk. On the 28th of June the papers of the American brig K were placed in B's hands for clearance; and nearly all the papers were completed on the 29th, and on the morning of the 1st of July he completed the said clearing before he attempted to do any act as sheriff. HELD:

1. B had the absolute right to resign his office of deputy collector. After such resignation becomes complete it cannot be withdrawn even with the consent of the government; though he may receive a new appointment, which may, perhaps, be given to him in the form of withdrawal by consent of his resignation of the office.

2. But a prospective resignation may be withdrawn at any time before it is accepted; and after it is accepted, it may be withdrawn by the consent of the authority accepting, where no new rights have intervened.

Idem, 144

3. The act of B, in clearing the brig K on the 1st of July, could only have been done by withdrawing his resignation, so long as it was necessary for that purpose; and he in fact was not relieved until July 2d. He was therefore disqualified from holding the office of sheriff under his election in the month of May. Idem, 144

4. On the 25th of June B qualified as sheriff of E, by taking the oath of office, and entering into bond with sureties before the county court. At the same term of the court, T claiming to be sheriff of E, moved the court to set aside the order qualifying B as

have the assets marshaled, and to have their debts paid pro tanto out of the real estate.

Pugh & al. v. Russell & als., 789

2. The payment of taxes due to the state out of the personal assets does not give a simple contract creditor a right to have the assets marshaled. Idem, 789

3. Though simple contract creditors might before the act of 1850 be substituted to the rights of a creditor by bond binding the heirs, the doctrine of marshaling assets does not apply to a judgment. Idem, 789

4. Before the act in the Code of 1849, if a judgment against an executor or administrator upon the bond of the deceased binding the heirs, was paid out of the personal estate, simple contract creditors may be substituted to the right of such creditor against the heirs. Idem, 789

5. A commissioner settling an administration account before a court of probate, states in his report that two of the credits allowed the executor were for payments of judgments, which were liens on the real estate. This is not evidence against the devisees to prove that the judgments were recovered against the executor upon a bond of the testator binding the heirs, and to entitle a simple contract creditor to marshal the assets. Idem, 789

6. A judgment is recovered against an executor by a simple contract creditor of his testator; and the creditor then files a bill against the devisees to marshal the assets, and subject the land of the testator in the hands of the devisees. It must be presumed that his action was not barred by the statute of limitations when the judgment was recovered; and he is not, therefore, barred by the statute in his proceeding against the devisees to marshal the assets. Idem, 789

MISDEMEANORS.

1. The county court authorizes W to erect a tollgate on a turnpike road in the county, and take toll thereon at a rate fixed, he being bound to keep the road in order. S & M came with their teams to the gate, which they found shut and fastened. They demanded that the gate should be opened, and the gatekeeper demanded the usual tolls before opening the gate. Thereupon S & M broke down and destroyed the gate, and passed through without paying tolls. HELD:

1. W having erected the gate under the authority of the county court, whether or not the court had authority to make the order, S & M were guilty of a misdemeanor under the statute. Code of 1873, ch. 188, § 28.

Smart & McKinsey's case, 950

2. If the tollgate was such an obstruction on the highway as could be regarded as a nuisance, S & M could only be justified in removing it peaceably, not in destroying it; and having destroyed it they were guilty of a misdemeanor. Idem, 950

MISTAKE.

1. A bond is given upon an injunction to a judgment for money, and in the penalty it is said, "in the just and full sum of seven hundred and seventy-six, lawful money of Virginia." The word "dollars" is obviously left out by mistake, and the bond will be treated as if the word was in it.

Harman v. Howe, 676

2. Words omitted in an instrument, and also in a statute or record, which can be clearly ascertained by the context, will be supplied by the court, and the instrument, record or statute, will be read and treated as if the words were in it. Idem, 676

3. For mistake of date by a clerk of a court. See Injunctions, No. 3, and

1058 *NAVIGABLE WATERS.

1. A patent for land, constituting a part of the bed of a navigable river, conveys no title.

Norfolk City v. Cooke, 430

2. The navigable waters, and the soil under them within the territorial limits of the state, are the property of the state, to be controlled by the state at its own discretion, for the benefit of the people of the state; only so as not to interfere with the authority of the government of the United States in regulating commerce and navigation.

NEGLIGENCE.

1. Negligence as between coterminous owners of buildings. See Easements, No. 8, 9, 10, 11, and

4. On the 25th of June B qualified as sheriff of E, by taking the oath of office, and entering into bond with sureties before the county court. At the same term of the court, T claiming to be sheriff of E, moved the court to set aside the order qualifying B as sheriff; and B appearing, after hearing, the court set aside the order and the bond of B, and admitted T, who was sheriff the previous year, to qualify as sheriff. B thereupon applied to the judge of the circuit court for a mandamus to the judge of the county court to restore him to the office. Held:

1. It was competent for the county court of E, at the same term, to set aside the order admitting B to qualify as sheriff and his bond. Idem, 144

2. It was competent for the county court to refuse to admit B to qualify as sheriff when he held a lucrative office under the government of the United States. Idem, 144

*3. If B is not, and was not when he obtained the rule for a writ of mandamus, entitled to the office of sheriff, he cannot be admitted or restored to it on such writ, even though the county court had no authority to annul the order admitting him to qualify as sheriff, or to have refused originally to admit him. Idem, 144

OYSTERS.

1. The act of March 14th, 1872, in relation to oysters, was repealed by the act of April 1873, on the same subject. And by this last act non-residents of the state were not prohibited from planting oysters in the waters of Virginia.

McCready's case, 982

2. The act of April 18th, 1874, Sess. Acts of 1874, ch. 214, § 22, p. 243, which forbids the planting of oysters in the waters of the state, by any person not a resident of the state, is a constitutional act, not in conflict with either article 1, § 8, or article 4, § 2, of the constitution of the United States.

McCready's case, 985

PAROL EVIDENCE.

1. When parol evidence inadmissible. See Evidence, No. 5, 9, and

Miller v. Fletcher & als., 403

Colhoun & Cowan v. Wilson, 639

PARTIES.

1. In a suit by a holder of a negotiable note to subject the estate of a deceased endorser to satisfy it, under the circumstances of the case, the representatives of the deceased maker and of a deceased endorser should be parties, though both of them died insolvent.

Duerson's adm'r v. Alsop & als., 229

2. See Railroad Company, No. 8, and The Winch. & Stras. R. R. Co. & al. v. Colfert & al., 777

PARTNERS.

1. R, J & G form a partnership for the manufacture of tobacco, and by their articles G is to contribute money which is to be placed to his credit and to bear interest at six per cent. per annum. And to protect G against any losses which may arise from the business, "they hereby pledge and assign to him all the present and future interest in the stock, machinery, fixtures and claims of the concern." G put in $4,200. About the commencement of the partnership they bought machinery, &c. giving notes of the firm, secured by deed of trust upon the machinery, &c. The firm failed, and the trustee sold the machinery, &c., and after satisfying the trust there was a balance left. On a contest between the creditors of the firm and G—Held:

1. The property never having passed to the separate possession of G, but remaining in the possession of the partnership, the unrecorded executory agreement aforesaid is fraudulent as to the creditors of the firm without notice.

Grasswilt's assignee v. Connally & als., 19

2. About the time the firm failed, to secure G for his advances, they made a note, payable to their own order, for $4,500, secured by deed of trust on the machinery, &c.; but the note was not endorsed or delivered to G. The note not having been endorsed or delivered to him by the other partners, though he took possession of it after the dissolution, G is not entitled to it. It creates no liability without negotiation, and neither G nor either of his partners could afterwards negotiate it; and consequently the deed made to secure it is a nullity. Idem, 19

PATENTS.

1. A patent for land constituting a part of the bed of a navigable river, conveys no title to it. Norfolk City v. Cooke, 430

PAYMENTS—PRIORITY OF.

1. Creditors at large who file a bill to set aside a conveyance of land as fraudulent, and succeed, have a lien on the land for their debts from the filing of their bill.

Wallace's adm'r & als. v. Treakle & als., 479

2. The deed of H for land is set aside as fraudulent at the suit of some of his creditors, and there is a decree after the death of H, for the sale of the land, and for account of the debts of H and their priorities. The report shows that there was one judgment against H before the deed was made. Some 1061 of the plaintiffs *in the bill were creditors by judgment, one a creditor at large; a number came in by petition before the decree; and a number came in before the commissioner and by petition after the decree. In distributing the fund it is to be applied: 1st, to pay the judgment recovered before the deed was made; 2nd, to the judgments recovered before the bill was filed; 3d, to the creditors at large who joined in the bill; 4th, to the creditors by petition before the death of H, in the order in which their petitions were filed; 5th, to the other creditors, pro rata. Idem, 479

3. K made a deed to F conveying a tract of land in trust to secure the purchase money of the land, evidenced by five bonds, payable at different periods to R, the vendor. R first assigned the bond payable second in date to M; next he assigned the bond payable first, to McG, and afterwards he assigned the last three to G. The land when sold did not produce sufficient to pay all the bonds. Held: The bond assigned to M, the first assignee, is to be first paid; then the bond assigned to McG, the second assignee, and the balance, if any, is to be paid to G, the last assignee.

PERJURY.

1. S is examined as a witness against T charged with the crime of rape. He is asked if he and T had not agreed to commit the rape, and if he did not hear the cries of the girl whilst T had her in the bushes; and he denies both. The examination is interrupted for a few minutes, and the witness is retired into another room, when he states to two of the officers and another person that to help T he had sworn falsely; and when his examination is resumed he says, that he and T had agreed to commit the rape, and that he did hear the cries of the girl. S is then indicted for perjury in making his first statement. There is no evidence against him but his own statements. Held: His own statements are not sufficient to convict him.

Schwartz's case, 1025

PLEADINGS.

1. C executes a bond to H, executor of E, and commissioner under a decree of the circuit court of H, in the case of H and R, with condition reciting that C has borrowed of H, executor and commissioner as aforesaid, the sum of, &c., of the money of his testator's estate, which, by the decree aforesaid, he is authorized to put out at interest, &c. In an action on this bond by H against C, not averring any order of the court authorizing H to collect the money, upon demurrer held the declaration is sufficient.

Cabell & als. v. Cox, 182

2. What a good plea in abatement. See Abatement, No. 1, and

Warren v. Saunders, 259

3. In debt upon a note, defendant pleads that stock had been pledged to plaintiff as security for the debt, and remainder in the exclusive management, custody and control of the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff had so carelessly and improvidently managed and controlled said stock that it had become utterly worthless. The plea is bad, because it does not set forth and show what acts the plaintiff had done, or omitted to do, in regard to the stock; which acts were intended to be complained of in the plea. It does not therefore sufficiently appear whether such acts or omissions constitute a good defense to the action.

Richardson v. Ins. Co. of Valley of Va., 749

4. If the plea had said that the plaintiff did not sell the stock, or have it sold, but retained possession of it until it perished in consequence of the war, it would not have been a legal bar to the action. The stock being a mere pledge or collateral security for the debt, the plaintiff might have sold it, but was not bound to do so; at least without being required by the defendant.

PLEADING—IN CRIMINAL CASES.

1. On the arraignment of a prisoner on a charge of felony, he files a special plea, to which the attorney for the commonwealth files a special replication; and to this replication the prisoner demurs. The demurrer being overruled, the prisoner cannot rejoin to the replication without withdrawing his demurrer.

Page's case, 954

2. A prisoner indicted for felony files a plea of autrefois acquit, and makes the record of his former trial part of his plea; 1062 and he avers that the offence for which he is then on trial, and the evidence necessary to convict him on the present indictment, if introduced, would have convicted him on the first trial. The attorney for the commonwealth replies that there is no records of the trial of the prisoner for the same identical felony and offence charged in the indictment on which the prisoner is then arraigned. The replication denies one of the essential averments of the plea, viz.: that the offence was the same as that for which the prisoner had been before tried; and is therefore a good replication to the plea.

3. In such a case it would not have been proper to traverse the allegation that the evidence necessary to convict him, &c. The two indictments being for similar offences, and in the same words, except as to time, which is immaterial, of course the same facts which sustain the one would, standing by themselves, sustain the other. But when it is averred and shown that the two offences, though similar, are not in fact the same, but different offences, all foundation for the plea is taken away.

Idem, 954

POWERS.

1. See Forfeitures, No. 1, and

Silliman & als. v. Fred., Or. & Char. R. R. Co., 119

2. Persons dealing with corporations must take notice of what is contained in the law of their organization; and they must be presumed to be informed as to the restrictions annexed to the grant of power by the law by which the corporation is authorized to act.

Idem, 119

3. In all cases, even in cases of negotiable instruments, a party contracting with an agent must enquire into his authority; and either a state or a corporation is bound only when its agents keep within the limit of their authority.

PRACTICE—AT COMMON LAW.

1. If upon a trial, instructions are given to the jury, to which no exception is taken, and after a verdict a motion is made for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, as well as that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, it is the duty of the court of trial to consider the correctness of the instructions; and if of opinion that they are not correct, and were calculated to mislead the jury, to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial; and an appellate court will supervise its action in this respect.

Stevenson v. Wallace, 77

2. A discontinuance of the cause as to one of the defendants, by the counsel of the plaintiff, is not a retraxit. A retraxit can only be entered by the plaintiff in person, and in open court.

Muse & als. v. Farmers' Bank of Virginia, 252

3. A summons in debt is served on the defendant on the 3d of February, and there is a final judgment by default on 3d of March. Under the statute the day of the service of the process may be counted, and therefore thirty days had elapsed between the service of the process and the judgment, and it is a valid judgment.

Turnbull, for &c. v. Thompson & als., 306

4. Process against a high sheriff may be served upon him by his deputy, and if he makes no objection to it at the time, a judgment by default against him is valid.

Idem, 306

5. A personal privilege of a defendant in debt of which the court cannot ex officio take notice, must be set up during the pendency of the proceedings.

Idem, 306

6. A verdict should not be set aside on the ground of after-discovered evidence, where it is merely cumulative and corroborative, and which ought not to be productive on another trial of a different result.

Cody v. Conly & als., 313

7. In an action at law, which is submitted to the judgment of the court without a jury, the court renders a judgment, to which one party excepts; and it being near the end of the term, the court gives the council time until the first day of the next term to prepare the bill of exception; but the judgment is entered. The court cannot give such leave, and the bill of exception cannot be made a part of the record.

Winston v. Giles, 530

8. Even if the court had authority to give the time until a day certain in the next term, to prepare the bill of exception, if it is not tendered to the court on that day, it cannot afterwards be received.

Idem, 530

9. In cases when it may be important to give time until the next term to prepare the bill of exception, the case should be kept open, and the judgment should not be entered until the next term.

Idem, 530

10. An action is brought in a county in which the defendant does not reside, and process is sent to the county of his residence and served by the sheriff of that county. The action should be dismissed from the docket on motion of the defendant, the statute providing that when an action is brought where the cause of action arose, process shall not be directed to an officer of another county or corporation, than that wherein the action was brought.

2. When there may be a joint decree against the administrator or a deceased executor and his sureties. See Idem, 42

3. Though a creditor files a bill to subject the personal and real estate of his deceased debtor to the payment of his debt, saying nothing of other creditors, yet if he prays that the administration account may be settled, that an account of all debts and liabilities of the estate may be taken, and their priorities fixed, that the amount and value of the real estate may be ascertained, and all other accounts and orders which are proper may be taken and made, this is a creditor's bill.

Duerson's adm'r v. Alsop & als., 229

4. Under such a prayer a decree for a general account may be made; all of the creditors permitted to come in and prove their debts, and an order entered staying all other suits; and all the assets administered in the one suit.

3. Although a bill is in behalf of all creditors, it is yet under the control of the party bringing the suit, at least until there is a decree for an account. And if his claim is proved or admitted, and the executor confesses assets, the plaintiff may at the hearing have a decree for payment; and he is not compelled to take a decree for an account.

6. Upon a decree by default, there may be a petition for a rehearing or a bill of review; and if necessary a bill of review may be treated as a petition for a rehearing.

Sands v. Lynham, escheator, 291

7. Under the circumstances the court refused to set aside a sale of land under a decree, though the sale was made before the account of debts was taken.

Wallace's adm'r & als. v. Treacle & als., 479

8. When the invalidity of an award, which is relied upon in the bill, may be set up in the answer, and a cross bill is unnecessary for the purpose of avoiding it. See Injunctions, No. 1, and

Tate v. Vance, 571

9. When the court may appoint a receiver of ward's estate, though there is a guardian, who is wholly unfit for the office. See Guardian & Ward, No. 2, and

Sage & als. v. Hammonds, 651

10. When the court may make a decree against a guardian without an account. See Guardian & Ward, No. 3, and

Idem, 651

11. Under a decree in a pending cause an executor invests a large amount of assets in confederate bonds. There is an appeal from subsequent decrees in the cause by legatees and next of kin, and the court of appeals settles various questions between legatees and next of kin, and affirms the decrees in all other respects. And on motion of the next of kin it was added that this decree should not prevent the next of kin from asserting by proper proceedings any claim they may be advised to assert against the executor on account of his transactions as such executor. Held:

1. The decree of the court of appeals does not conclude enquiry as to the moneys invested in confederate bonds; but under the reservation in the decree this may be done.

Young & wife & als. v. Cabell's ex'or & als., 761

2. To make the enquiry the next of kin should file a cross bill, raising the question of the executor's liability for the money so collected and invested by him.

Idem, 761

3. As to another claim of the testatrix which was lost, that having been 1064 *passed upon by the court, cannot be enquired into again. Idem, 761

12. How creditors of a railroad company may subject the road, &c., to the payment of their debts. See Railroad Companies, Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, and

The Winch. & Strasb. R. R. Co. & al. v. Colfert & al. 777

13. There are two devisees, one of whom owns one-fourth of a tract of land, and the other three-fourths; and the land is held liable to pay a debt of their testator. The decree should be separate against each for the payment of his pro rata share of the debt, with a reservation to the plaintiff to proceed against him for so much of the share of the other as cannot be made out of that other's land.

Pugh & al. v. Russell & als., 789

14. For the grounds on which a judicial sale of real estate will be set aside or confirmed. See Judicial Sales, passim, and

Wallace's adm'r & als. v. Treagle & als., 479

Brock v. Rice & als., 812

15. In an injunction case, the defendant only asking a dissolution of the injunction, and dismissal of the bill, may rely in his answer upon the invalidity of an award on which plaintiff rests his case, and it is not necessary to file a cross bill for the purpose of avoiding it. Tate v. Vance, 571

16. A vendor of land, who has retained the title, files a bill against the widow and infant children of the vendee, for a sale of the land to satisfy his debt. The widow answers, claiming dower in the land subject to the vendor's lien. Judgment creditors of the vendee may make themselves parties to the cause, and have the land, subject to the vendor's lien and the widow's dower, applied to the payment of their debts.

Simmons v. Lyles & als., 922

17. In such case the debt of the vendor is ascertained, and a commissioner is appointed to sell the land. He reports that a friend of the widow and children of the vendee has paid to the vendor his debt, and therefore he did not sell the land. The vendor then ceases to be interested in the case, and it becomes the suit of the creditors of the vendee.

18. In such a case a commissioner is directed to settle the account of the administrator of the vendee, to take an account of the vendee's debts and their priorities, and also of the present value of the widow's dower in the land; and before the commissioner makes report the court decrees a sale of the land; Held:

1. It was premature to decree a sale of the land before the debts of the vendee and their priorities were ascertained, and a settlement of the administration account was made. Idem, 922

2. It was also error to decree a sale of the land until the widow's dower was assigned to her in kind, or it was ascertained that it could not be so assigned, and a moneyed compensation to her in lieu of her dower had been ascertained. Idem, 922

PROHIBITION.

1. For the purposes for which, and the principles upon which, writs of prohibition will be awarded, see opinion of Christian, J., in

Supervisors of Bedford v. Wingfield, J., 329

2. The board of supervisors of a county order that one of the jury rooms attached to the courthouse shall be prepared to be used as a part of the clerk's office of the county court; and this order is approved by the county court. The judge of the circuit court thereupon makes a rule upon the board of supervisors to show cause why they shall not be restrained from making the changes in the room. This court will not restrain him by prohibition from proceeding under the rule; but the board should make their defence in the circuit court: and any error of the judge in that proceeding may be corrected by writ of error to this court. Idem, 329

1065 *PROMISSORY NOTES.

1. In relation to negotiable paper, the rights and obligations of the parties are governed by the law as it was when the contract was made, and not by the law as it was when the paper becomes payable.

Duerson's adm'r v. Alsop & als., 229

2. The ordinance of the Virginia convention of the 24th of June 1861 dispensed with demand, protest and notice upon all checks, bills, and notes payable at a bank located in any city or town, if, at the time of the maturity of such instruments, the town or city was occupied, invested or access thereto interrupted, by the public enemy. By an act of the legislature, passed on the 10th of May 1862, the ordinance was amended so as to require notice of the dishonor of the bill or note to be given within ten days after the removal of the obstruction created by the presence of the enemy. A note was made and endorsed on the 11th of December 1861, payable &c., at a bank in Fredericksburg, in six months. When it fell due the town of Fredericksburg was in possession of the United States forces; but they left a few months afterwards; but no notice was given at any time to the endorsers. The rights and obligations of the parties are governed by the ordinance, which was in operation when the note was made and endorsed, and notice of non-payment was not necessary to bind the endorsers. Idem, 229

3. The holder of a note endorsed for the accommodation of the maker which fell due in June 1862, gives no notice that he holds it to one of the endorsers, who died in 1863, or to his representative until 1870, makes no effort to collect it of the maker, though down to 1868 he was able to pay it, and died insolvent in 1870; and waits until the other endorser is dead insolvent. Under these circumstances the presumption that the holder of a note is a holder for value fails, and he must show he gave value for it. Idem, 229

4. In such a case, in a suit by the holder of a note to subject the estate of a deceased endorser to satisfy it, the representatives of the deceased maker and of another endorser should be made parties. Idem, 229

5. In debt against the endorsers of a protested note discounted at a bank at C, the protest of the notary states that "he placed in the post office of this place, four written notices, one directed to the payer, and one directed to H and L at B, Va., endorsers, informing them, &c. On demurrer to the evidence. HELD: The jury would have been warranted to infer from the evidence, that the residence of the defendants was in B; and upon demurrer to evidence the court must make the same inference.

Linkous for &c. v. Hale & al., 668

PROPERTY OF THE STATE OF VIRGINIA.

1. The navigable waters and the soil under them within the territorial limits of the state are the property of the state, to be controlled by the state at its own discretion, for the benefit of the people of the state; only so as not to interfere with the authority of the government of the United States in regulating commerce and navigation.

McCready's case, 985

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

1. A judge of a circuit court has authority to control the courthouse in which he administers justice, to the extent, at least, of preventing any interference with the discharge of the public business, and of having necessary jury rooms and other conveniences for the purpose.

Supervisors of Bedford v. Wingfield, judge, 329

2. When there is any such interference by the board of supervisors of a county, or any one else, the judge certainly has the right to enquire into it. If in doing so he violates the law, or infringes upon the rights of others, his action may be corrected by a writ of error. But it is not a case in which prohibition will lie. Idem, 329

1066 *RAILROAD COMPANIES.

1. What property of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad company is subject to taxation by the state. See Taxes & Taxation, No. 3, and

Commonwealth v. Ches. & Ohio R. Co., 344

2. A railroad company running its cars through a populous street of a city, on which many children live, must omit nothing which can be done by the company and its agents to prevent injury to children on the street.

Norfolk & Pet. R. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 455

3. A child, two years and ten months old, cannot be capable of contributory negligence, so as to relieve a railroad company from liability for its own negligence.

Idem, 455

4. Negligence of a parent or guardian of an infant child, injured by a railroad car, cannot constitute contributory negligence on the part of the child so as to exonerate the company. Idem, 455

5. On the creditor's bill against a railroad company, some of the debts proved are under $500, but there is one for $1,117.60 proved before the commissioner, and the decree of the circuit court is in favor of all of them against the company. An appeal by the company brings up all of them; and this court will pass upon all.

The Winch. & Strasb. R. R. Co. & al. v. Colfert & al., 777

6. The road and franchises of the company are liable for the payment of judgments recovered against the company.

Idem, 777

7. It appearing from the report of the commissioner that the annual rent of the railroad is $37,000, and the debts proved are but $1,286.91, the road should be leased out for the shortest period for which a sufficient rent may be obtained to pay the debts and costs of the suit. And if to accomplish this object it is necessary to lease the road for a term which will yield in rents a sum far exceeding the amount of the judgments, and cannot be leased at all for a shorter term, the creditors are entitled to have it leased for the longer term. Idem, 777

8. It appearing that another railroad company is in possession of the road, it is proper to make said company a party to the suit, to ascertain her interest in it; and that the company not responding or showing what its interest is, a decree for leasing the road may be made. Idem, 777

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

1. In an action upon a policy of insurance by a citizen of the state of Virginia, against a foreign insurance company doing business in this state, the foreign corporation is quod hoc domiciled in the state by virtue of the statutes authorizing the company to do business here, and is not entitled under the act of congress of 1867, to have the cause removed.

Continental Ins. Co. v. Kasey, 216

2. After a trial of an action at law, and a new trial directed by the appellate court, a party is not entitled, under the act of congress of 1867, to have the cause removed to the United States court, upon the ground that he is a non-resident of the state.

Idem, 216

3. If a party in an action at law would have the cause removed from the state court to the United States court, on the ground that he is a non-resident of the state, he must present his application for it before there has been a trial of the cause. Idem, 216

RETRAXIT.

1. A discontinuance as to one defendant, by the counsel of the plaintiff, is not a retraxit. A retraxit can only be entered by the plaintiff in person and in open court.

Muse & als. v. Farmers Bank of Va., 252

ROADS.

1. Upon the petition of B and others for the establishment of a road, the county court, in February 1871, made an order that M, road commissioner, do view the route proposed for the road and report, &c. In July T, the road commissioner of the township in which the road would lie, made a report, stating, that as to a part of the road there was no objection, and only J claimed damages. There was an order of court establishing that part of the road not objected to, and a summons to J, who appeared and asked for a writ of ad quod damnum; which was ordered, and executed and returned. The case 1067 was then continued on motion of J.

At a subsequent term J moved the court to quash the return of the commissioner, which was done; and then, at the same term, the petitioners applied again for the road, and there was an order for a view, &c. And B, &c., appealed from the order quashing the report.—HELD:

1. M having been the commissioner when the order directing the report was made, and he having been succeeded in that office by T, the name of M in the order was surplusage, and it was proper for T to make the report.

Jeter v. Board & als., 910

2. But if the objection would ever have been a good one, it was not made at the proper time, and was waived by J's applying for a writ of ad quod damnum, moving for a continuance of the case, and contesting it on other grounds. Idem, 910

3. The provisions of the statute in relation to yards, gardens, &c., and as to a map or diagram of the route, are merely directory, and if any of them are not complied with, objection to the report on that ground must be made in due time, or it will be considered as waived. In this case it was not made in due time, and was, in effect, waived. Idem, 910

4. There may be an appeal as of right from an interlocutory order of a county court in a controversy concerning the establishment of a road. Idem, 910

5. The judgment of the county court was final. As to much the larger part of the road, it had been established by a previous order of the court, and the order quashing the report put an end to the cause in that court. The order for another view of the route was a new proceeding. Idem, 910

SET-OFF.

1. After a decree for an account in a creditor's suit against a broken bank, a debtor of the bank buying up debts of the bank, is only entitled to stand in the shoes of his assignor, and receive his proportion of the assets realized.

SHERIFFS.

1. What is a sufficient notice to a late sheriff and his sureties, by the supervisors of a county of motion for a judgment against them. See Notices, No. 1, and Board of Supervisors of Washington Co. v. Dunn & als., 608

2. Upon a notice to a sheriff and his sureties of a motion against them for his failure to account for taxes, they appear and move for a rule upon the attorney for the commonwealth to show cause why the record of the bond of the sheriff should not be amended, corrected or vacated; and several of the sureties file affidavits, in which each states the grounds on which he relies, to show he is not bound by the bond. In fact, however, the defendants had either acknowledged the bond before the court or a justice; and none of the conditions they mention appeared on the record or bond, or were made known to the court. These affidavits present no ground for the release of the parties or the rule.

3. It is not necessary that the sureties of a sheriff in his official bond should acknowledge the same in court. The bond may be acknowledged by them in court, or its execution out of court may be proved by witness. And there is no statute or rule of law requiring such proof to be adduced at the time the bond is received by the court. With or without such proof the parties who had actually signed would be bound by the deed.

Idem, 608

4. How official bonds may be proved. See Bonds, No. 8, 9, and

Idem, 608

5. On a notice of a motion against a sheriff and his sureties on his official bond, the pleas of non damnificatus and nil debet are not proper pleas.

Idem, 608

6. On a motion against a sheriff and his sureties for the county levies he had failed to account for, the report of the clerk who had been directed by an order of the county court to settle the sheriff's account, though made with the sheriff without notice to the sureties, is competent evidence against them to show the amount for which the sheriff is indebted. If they had notice, as the statute provides, the report would be conclusive upon them; without notice it is prima facie evidence of the amount of the sheriff's indebtedness.

Idem, 608

7. A sheriff or other officer who pays an execution in his hands for collection, without an assignment at the time, of the judgment on which it is founded, or the debt, is not entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the creditor, whose debt he has paid as against other creditors having liens by judgment or otherwise.

SUBSTITUTION.

1. The real estate of which H died seized, intestate and without heirs, was sold under a decree in a suit in which the state was not a party, brought by a party claiming to be a creditor of H. This decree and sale having been set aside, the purchaser of the land is entitled to be substituted to the rights of the creditor; and upon showing that the debt was a valid debt of H, to subject the said real estate to its payment.

Sands v. Lynham, escheator, 291

2. A sheriff or other officer who pays an execution in his hands for collection, without an assignment at the time, of the judgment on which it is founded, or the debt, is not entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the creditor whose debt he has paid, as against other creditors having liens by judgment or otherwise.

Clevinger & als. v. Miller, 740

2. See Marshaling Assets, No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, and Pough & al. v. Russell & als., 789

SURETIES.

1. A and B are sureties for W in a bond to L for $3,000, executed in 1858. In May 1862 L lent to W $7,500 of Confederate money, and took his bond payable in two years with interest; and W executed a deed by which he conveyed to S real and personal estate, in trust to secure both debts; and it provided that upon the prompt payment annually of the interest upon the two bonds, W should keep quiet possession of the property for two years. W did not pay the interest. HELD:

1. W not having paid the interest, the parties were left in the same situation, and with the same rights and obligations, as if the agreement to extend the time had not been made.

Adams & al. v. Logan & als., 201

2. The agreement only operated to postpone a sale of the property under the deed of trust. It did not tie up the hands of L from pursuing the debtor at law.

3. If L had sued W at law and recovered judgment and levied execution on the personal property embraced in the deed, he might thereby have forfeited the benefit of that security, or subjected himself to an action for damages; but a court of equity would not interfere to prevent a sale of the property under the execution, upon the mere contract to pay the interest upon debt.

Idem, 201

4. But if the agreement operated as an extension of the time of payment of the debt, as the act of the 29th of March 1862, known as the stay law, forbade the issue of execution upon a judgment, and L was under no obligation to the sureties to raise the question of its constitutionality, the agreement did not have the slightest effect upon the rights and remedies or obligations of any of the parties.

Idem, 201

5. The principle upon which an agreement for an extension of time discharges a surety is, that the creditor thereby deprives the surety of the means of relieving himself, by paying the debt and proceeding immediately against the principal; or by his filing his bill quia timet to compel the debtor to pay the debt; or by notice to the creditor under the statute. The sureties cannot be discharged by an act which in no manner affect their rights, or impaired the remedies of the creditor.

Idem, 201

2. W having been declared a bankrupt in the United States court, L and the assignee, by compromise, agreed that the debt of L for $7,500 should be scaled to $3,500, with interest from date, and L should retain the benefit of the deed of trust; and that L should not object to the exemption in favor of W, or to the allowance of 200 acres of land to his wife in commutation of her contingent right of dower; and this agreement was confirmed by the bankrupt court. S sold the balance of the trust fund, and apportioned the net proceeds between the two debts of W to L. HELD:

1. A and B cannot complain of the scale applied to the debt of $7,500, which seems reasonable in itself, and was agreed to by L and the assignee of W, and approved and confirmed by the court.

2. If there was error in the decree of the bankrupt court in allowing W the exemption claimed by him, or in assigning to his wife 200 acres of land, they are acts of a court of competent jurisdiction, and cannot be questioned elsewhere. Idem, 201

3. A judgment had been rendered in favor of L against W, for two years interest on the bond of $3,000, upon an insufficient notice, and execution levied on his property. W gives L notice that he will move to have it set aside; and L, being aware of the insufficiency of the notice, releases the property. The sureties are not entitled to a credit for the amount of the judgment.

3. What is a sufficient notice to a late sheriff and his sureties by the supervisors of a county of a motion for a judgment against them. See Notices, No. 1, and

Board of Supervisors of Washington Co. v. Dunn & als., 608

4. What is a sufficient execution and proof of the official bond of a sheriff by his sureties. See Sheriffs, No. 2, 3, and Bonds, No. 8, 9, and

5. On a notice of motion against a sheriff and his sureties on his official bond, the pleas of non damnificatus and nil debet are not proper pleas.

Idem, 608

6. On a motion against a sheriff and his sureties for the county levies he had failed to account for, the report of the clerk, who had been directed by an order of the county court to settle the sheriff's account, though made with the sheriff without notice to the sureties, is competent evidence against them to show the amount for which the sheriff is indebted. If they had notice, as the statute provides, the report would be conclusive upon them; without notice it is prima facie evidence of the amount of the sheriff's indebtedness.

Idem, 608

1070 *8. For sureties on injunction bonds. See Injunctions, No. 3, 4 and 5, and Harman v. Howe, 676

TAXES AND TAXATION.

1. Corporations are included in the act of 1867, ch. 64, s. 3, Sess. Acts 1866-'67, imposing a tax on collateral inheritances.

Miller's ex'or v. The Commonwealth, 110
Barrett's adm'r v. The Same, 110

2. Though the statute exempts from taxation the property of orphan asylums and other charitable institutions, this exemption does not include a devise or bequest of property to such institutions.

Idem, 110

3. The state has not, either by statute or contract, relinquished her right to tax that portion of the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad which lies between the city of Richmond and the town of Covington, and all the property of the company, real and personal belonging to that part of the road, and a fair proportion of its rolling stock, and of the earnings of the company, to be ascertained and apportioned in such mode as may be prescribed by law. But she has relinquished the right to tax the property of the company lying west of Covington.

Commonwealth v. Ches. & Ohio R. Co., 344

4. A state cannot tax the bonds of a railroad company held by persons living out of the state. Idem, 344

Walters v. Hill & als., 388

3. B owns a tract of land in A county, Virginia, on which he lives, and in 1859 he conveys it to J., in trust, to secure a debt of $300 he owes P, who lives in Georgetown, payable in two years. In 1861, the Union forces having taken possession of the part of the country in which B lived, he removed with his family to Fairfax Courthouse, and remained there until the close of the war. In October 1864 J advertises the land for sale and sells it at public auction in Georgetown, when Mrs. B, the wife of B, and niece of P, buys it; W being present at the sale. Mr. and Mrs. B afterwards sell the land to W and S at the same price, and afterwards W bought of S, and made permanent improvements upon the land. In 1870 B filed his bill against W, &c., to set aside the sale and conveyance. HELD:

1. B being within the Confederate lines, and P being in the Union lines, during the war, B could not legally pay or P receive his debt, and therefore the deed of trust could not be enforced; and the sale was invalid.

Walker v. Beauchler, 511

2. W having been present at the sale, and knowing the circumstances, can stand in no better condition than the purchaser at the sale; and his title is therefore invalid. Idem, 511

3. B is entitled to have his land, he paying to W the amount of the debt he owed R.

Idem, 511

4. R's debt is not to bear interest during the war. Idem, 511

5. B having delayed for four year after the war had closed, to assert his right to the property, and permitted W to put valuable and permanent improvements upon it, believing that he had an undisputed title to it, W is to be charged for the rents and profits of the land, exclusive of the improvements, whilst he held it, and to be allowed a reasonable compensation for the permanent improvements he has made upon it, though this shall be in excess of the rents and profits. Idem, 511

4. A railroad company, for the purpose of extending their road, determine to issue their bonds for $10,000,000, to be secured by a deed of trust on all their property, to three trustees, one to reside in Virginia and two in New York, and they agree to pay to the trustees each $5,000. Misselected in Virginia, informed of the terms and consents to act. The company determine to issue bonds for $15,000,000, and to have a fourth trustee, and pay the four the $15,000. The deed is 1071 prepared and it is executed *by the trustees, M having been informed of the reduction of the compensation. The trustees execute about 2000 of the bonds, and M performs all the services demanded of him, until the company, without the knowledge of M, makes another deed to two of the trustees, omitting M; and under this last deed the company proceeds to effect the loan. HELD:

1. M having been appointed a trustee for a specific compensation, and having been discharged by the company without his knowledge, he is entitled to have the compensation agreed upon.

Maury v. Ches. & Ohio R. R. Co., 698

2. M having executed the deed with the knowledge that the compensation was reduced by the payment to the four what was first agreed to be paid to the three, and having acted under the deed, he is entitled to recover from the company one fourth of the $15,000; but no more. Idem, 698

5. In August 1858 B conveyed to T land and slaves, in trust to secure a debt due by two bonds to R. The land was the land of B's wife S, and he had but a life estate in it; and in September 1858 B and wife conveyed the land to T in trust, that B and wife should hold the land until the personal property conveyed by the first deed was sold to satisfy the debt; and if the sale of that property should not raise a sum sufficient to pay the debt, then T, upon the request of R or his assigns should sell, &c. R transferred the debt to M, and on the request of M, T advertised the sale of the slaves and land to be made in February 1860. On the day of sale, T on the request of B and his wife S, induced W the uncle of S, to pay the debt; and T gave him a receipt, in which he stated that on the receipt of the money M would assign the debts and deeds of trust to W. B died in 1862, and W died in 1869, having the bonds and deeds of trust in his possession, but not having obtained the assignment from M. His executor G afterwards obtained it, and on his request T sold the land, the slaves having been freed by the results of the war. HELD:

1. By the assignments, G, the executor of W, had the right to require that the trusts should be enforced by a sale of the property.

Thurmond v. Wood's ex'or, 72

2. The land is liable for the debt though the slaves had been freed, and therefore could not be first sold. Idem, 72

3. The failure to sell the slaves having been at the request and for the benefit of

S, she cannot set up the loss of the slaves as a security for the debt, to prevent the sale of the land. Idem, 727

4. As against the creditor of B, S cannot be regarded as to the surety of her husband, or as a mere guarantor for the payment of the debt; and as against the creditor she can claim none of the rights of mere surety or guarantor. Idem, 727

5. The proofs do not show that W paid the debt intending to secure the property for S and her child. Idem, 727

6. R, a commissioner, selling land in 1860 under a decree, is guilty of a breach of trust in receiving confederate currency from the purchaser in payment of his bonds in 1863.

Omohundro's ex'or v. Omohundro & als., 824

7. A commissioner who in April 1860 is appointed to sell lands is guilty of a breach of trust in selling them in 1863 for confederate currency. Idem, 824

8. S, a brother of the commissioner, who is one of the parties entitled to the land and its proceeds, induces R to collect the purchase money of the land sold, and to sell the balance, both to be received in confederate currency, and to lend it to him. S is a party to the breach of trust by R, the commissioner, and is responsible for it. Idem, 824

9. Though S gives to R a bond for the money received by him, which in an action upon it by R, against the executor of S, the court holds should be scaled, this will not protect him in a suit by the other parties interested, showing the circumstances under which S received the money. Idem, 824

10. K made a deed to F conveying a tract of land in trust to secure the purchase money of the land evidenced by five bonds, payable at different periods to R, the vendor. R first assigned the bond payable second in date to M; next, he assigned the bond payable first to McG, and afterwards he assigned the last three to G. The land, when sold, did not produce sufficient to pay all the bonds.

Held:

1072 *The bond assigned to M, the first assignee, is to be first paid; then the bond assigned to McG, the second assignee; and the balance, if any, is to be paid to G, the last assignee.

Gordon v. Fitzhugh, 835

11. W died in 1858, and by his will, made a few days before his death, he devised and bequeathed the residuum of his estate, consisting of land, slaves, &c., to H, in trust "for the sole use and benefit" of his daughter C, his only child, then about fourteen years of age, to manage it for her, giving to her the rents during her life; with power in H and C by their joint consent and act, to sell such portions of the estate for the convenience of management as may be desirable and beneficial to G, the proceeds of sale to be invested on the same trusts; and at her death to her children then alive, and the descendants of such as were dead. If G should die unmarried or without such children &c., she to have the power of disposing of the property by will; and if no will, then over to his brothers. G marries J in 1859, and in 1863, in a cause in which G is plaintiff, H is released from the trust, and J is appointed in his place, to hold the property for her sole and separate use. In September 1864 J and G sell and convey the land to B for $56,860 cash in confederate money, when it was depreciated as twenty-five for one; G being then under the age of twenty-one years; though B did not know that. In August 1869 G and her two infant children file their bill against B, to set aside the sale and conveyance of the land. Held:

1. That though the words "for the sole use and benefit" are not the most appropriate to vest in G a separate estate, yet, looking to the whole provision, it is obvious that such was the intention of the testator.

Bedinger v. Wharton & als., 857

2. The sale of the land for Confederate money, depreciated as it then was, and daily sinking in value, was a breach of his trust on the part of J. Idem, 857

3. B was privy to and participated in the breach of trust by J; and though the evidence shows that he acted in good faith in the purchase, the sale and conveyance is void. Idem, 857

4. G having been under the age of twenty-one years, her deed is voidable; and by her bill, in August 1869, to set aside the conveyance, she expressed her purpose to avoid it. Idem, 857

5. G having only come of age in 1865, and being still a married woman, in the then condition of the country and the law she had not by her laches lost her right to avoid the deed when she filed her bill in 1869. Idem, 857

6. Though the purchase money received from B, or a large part of it, was consumed in the support of said infant and her family, she could not become liable, on her arrival at age, to refund the consideration which had been received by J from B, or be prevented from disaffirming the said contract and recovering the land from B. Idem, 857

7. QUÆRE: Whether to the extent that G derived her support from the consideration received from B, or actually received or enjoyed for her sole use and benefit the said consideration, he should be accountable for rent of the land purchased by him. Idem, 857

8. Even if the power to sell vested in the trustee and G, authorized a sale of the land, the sale of the land in September 1864, for confederate money, when it was so much depreciated in value, and was daily and rapidly depreciating more and more, was a palpable breach of trust, in which B participated, unless there were very peculiar circumstances to warrant or excuse the sale; and the burden of proving such circumstances devolved on the purchaser. Idem, 857

12. A deed of trust is executed to secure a note made by partners, but not endorsed or delivered by them during the partnership. The deed is a nullity.

Grasswitt's ass'nee v. Connally & als., 19

UNLAWFUL DETAINER.

1. The city of Norfolk being the owner of lots covered by water within the port warden's line, may maintain an action of unlawful entry and detainer against any intruder upon said water lots.

*VARIANCE.

1. In a commitment by a justice of a person for forging an order, in setting out the order he writes some words in full which in the order as set out in the indictment are abbreviated—as Thomas for Thos., 23 cents for 23 c., Respectfully for Resp'ly. These are not such variances as require that the accused should be sent back to a justice for examination. Burress' case, 934

2. An indictment for forging an order sets it out as for forty-seven dollars and 25 c., and the order was for forty-seven dollars and 23 c. This is a variance, and entitles the accused to acquittal on that indictment.

Idem, 934

3. The act, Code of 1873, ch. 195, s. 15, p. 1218, does not make a variance between the indictment and the forged paper immaterial. The accused must be acquitted on that ground, if no other. Idem, 934

4. The difference between "account," as set out in the indictment, and "act," as written in the order, is not a material variance, which will exclude the order as evidence.

VENDOR AND PURCHASERS.

1. When a purchaser of land will be affected by the defect of his vendor's title, though he is a purchaser for value and has received a conveyance. See Trusts & Trustees, No. 3, and Walker v. Beauchler, 511

2. When a purchaser of land, from whom it is recovered, will be entitled to be allowed for permanent improvements put upon it by him, in excess of his liability for rents and profits. Idem, 511

3. Executor sells land in November 1860 on a credit of six and twelve months, taking bonds and retaining the title. The executor being absent in the army during the war, the purchasers pay the purchase money to his agent in 1863 and 1864 in confederate currency. The executor was guilty of a devastavit in receiving the purchase money in the then depreciated currency; and the purchasers were parties to the devastavit; and they will be required to take the lands at their value at the time of the decree, or the lands will be again sold.

Tosh & als. v. Robertson & als., 270

4. Though the decree makes no allowance for improvements which the purchasers allege they have made upon the lands, yet as the rents and profits of the lands, or the interest on the purchase money, with neither of which they are charged, would amount to more than these improvements which they claim, there is no error in the decree.

WILLS.

1. In controversies touching testamentary capacity, as a general rule the evidence of witness, unless founded on fact, except in the case of experts, is entitled to but little weight.

Young, by &c. v. Barner & als., 96

2. The evidence of the attesting witnesses is an exception to this rule. But if an attesting witness to a will attempts to impeach its validity, though his evidence will not be positively rejected, it is to be received with the most scrupulous jealousy. Idem, 96

3. In all questions of testamentary capacity, particularly where the evidence is conflicting, the courts are much inclined to consider the dispositions contained in it. If these be in themselves consistent with the situation of the testator, in conformity with his affections and previous declarations—if they be such as might justly have been expected, this is said to be of itself persuasive evidence of testamentary capacity.

4. The jury are the proper judges of the weight and credit due to the testimony of the witnesses, and their verdict, when sanctioned, as in this case, by the county and circuit judges who heard the evidence, is entitled to the highest respect in the appellate court. In such a case the deviation from the proof must be very plain and palpable to warrant the interference of the appellate court.

5. If the witnesses to a will are dead, or if there is a failure of recollection on their part, the court will often presume (the will in other respects being regular,) that the requirements of the statute have been complied with in the formal execution of the instrument.

Idem, 96

6. A paper writing purporting to be a will commences: Lewinsville, August 1862. Dear wife—I am going away; I may never return. I leave my property, &c. Held in view of the language and the circumstances surrounding the writer at the time, not to be conditional on his going away and not returning.

Cody v. Conly & als., 313

7. A witness as to the handwriting of C. states that some thirteen years previous, C dug a well for him, and drew several orders on him for money, which he paid, and which C recognized afterwards. He never saw C write, but from his recollection of these orders, he believes the paper to be in the handwriting of C. This is competent testimony. Idem, 313

8. A testator having in terms provided for an equal division of his personal estate among his three children, held upon a consideration of the whole will, that he did not intend that certain land he gives to one of his children should be charged to him in the division of his personal estate.

WITNESSES.

1. Bonds are executed to A and G, and are left with G. A sells the bonds to E, but does not deliver them. G sells them to D, and delivers them to him. In a contest between E and G, both claiming the bonds, G being dead, A is not a competent witness under the statute to prove that G owed him and had agreed that he should have the bonds.

Brown, adm'r &c. v. Dickenson, 690

2. See Wills, No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 7, and Young, by &c. v. Barner & als., 96

Cody v. Conly & als., 313

3. M and four others execute a bond to W for the price of a jack, and W warrants sound, and a good foal-getter. F, one of the obligors, dies, and in a suit on the bond by W against the survivors, they set up a breach of the warranty as their defence. On the trial W introduces witnesses to prove what two of the defendants said to the witnesses long subsequent to the purchase, to disprove by implication the breach of the warranty. And then the defendants offer these two to testify as to what those conversations were. Held: F being dead, W, the plaintiff, could not under the statute testify in the cause; and therefore the two defendants are incompetent to testify, though in relation to a matter which occurred after the death of F.

Mason & als. v. Wood, 783
